[illegible] ...ing the third utterly untouched—that is to say, he does not call out the witnesses to say whether Mr. Adams or his friends made any sort of propositions to Mr. Clay or his friends. That testimony elicited before the Senate of Kentucky throws additional suspicion upon the matter. Mr. Blair, in particular, will not reveal what he knows, and seems unable to contradict what is inferred from his silence to the prejudice of Mr. Clay—Why does not Mr. C. call him out—or publish his own letter to Mr. Blair? But passing these things over, it still remains to be seen, how far our sympathy for men unjustly accused should prompt a free people to prefer those persons, and clothe them with the highest public trust—and if the rule should be a right one, how far the unjust persecutions extended to Gen. Jackson might not equally entitle him to the betefit of the rule.

NEWS.

Easton, Md. April 12.

The Execution of Jim Truxton, sentenced to death for the murder of Jim Mackey, took place yesterday at 12 o'clock. About 10 o'clok he was brought out of jail, dressed in his Shroud and seated in a cart accompanied by the Rev. Mr Scull and followed by a large concourse of citizens of this and the adjacent counties to the place prepared for his execution—when after the usual ceremonies performed on these occasions, being asked by the Sheriff if he had any thing to say, he arose and in a firm voice addressed the surrounding multitude for about 10 minutes, warning them against giving way to their passions and against the voice of drunkenness, &c. &c. after which he was launched into eternity.

A coroner's inquest was held on Wednesday last, at the Chappel, in this county by P. Horney, Esq. over the body of John Allen. Verdict of the jury "death by a fall from a horse."

A coroner's inquest was held yesterday, at the Poor-House, in this county by P. Horney, Esq. over the body of Anna Stocker, Verdict of the jury "death by cutting her own throat."

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

The ship Fama, at Boston on Friday last, sailed on the 2d March, from the Cove of Cork, furnishing London dates to Tuesday, Feb. 26. The Cork Chronicle contains the Turkish manifesto, which was published at length in Paris Moniteur of the 21st February. It appears from the various foreign journals, that though it leaves nothing for negotiation, it is not considered a declaration of war, but only a bold appeal to the Ottomans to prepare for war. "It distinctly avows, that from the first overture made by the allies to the Porte, to consent to the independence of Greece, the Porte was determined to resist such demand, and to risk the last extremity."

Russia is the great object of the Turkish indignation. It is declared to have been her constant system to make war on the slightest pretexts, while England and France are spoken of as her dupes. The battle of Navarino, was viewed by the Turks as an infraction of treaties, and a virtual declaration of war. It is spoken of in the following terms:

"The Ottoman and Egyptian squadrons, having entered the port of Navarino, were there tranquilly waiting the orders of the Sublime Porte, when the English, Russian & French fleets, which unexpectedly entered the same port, as friends, began to fire, all three together; and all the world knows the catastrophe which resulted therefrom to the Imperial squadron. The three Powers having thus openly broken the treaties and declared war, &c."

The Sun says, a cabinet council met last night, at half past ten, and, sat in deliberation till near one.

Mr. Peel was twice sent for to the House of Commons to attend it. The Morning Chronicle states that there was a good deal of conjecture as to the object of the cabinet council to which Mr. Peel was called, at a late hour. We have heard rumours on the subject to which we dare not advert"

Despatches had been received from the British Charge d' Affaires at St. Petersburgh, immediately after which a cabinet council has been convened.

"There are rumours of a desire expressed by the Russian government to advance with an army into Turkey, that the French government is willing to consent to this step, but the English government opposes it.

It was reported in London, February 26, that Prince Polignac, the French Ambassador, had arrived in that city, and that the order for his departure from Paris was so sudden, that instead of attending an evening party, as he was preparing to do, he ordered his carriage, and proceeded at ten o'clock for London.

Among the speculations in London respecting the course that ministers would be likely to adopt in the affairs of Turkey, the favorite one was, that they neither would, nor could, in the spirit of the Greek treaty, countenance the advance of the Russian troops, and that they would take a firm position respecting it, relying on the want of means for Russia to act unsupported.

TERRIBLE EARTHQUAKE.

Madras papers give an account of the destruction of the fort of Kolitaran, where a thousand persons were buried beneath its ruins. The same convulsion had "shivered a mountain in pieces," which falling into the river Rowee, caused the country to be inundated to a distance of 100 coss round. Three thousand workmen were employed in cutting a channel thro' the mountain; and great apprehension was entertained of the injury likely to be sustained by Lahore, whenever the river should force its way through the channel.

It is also computed, that no less than 30,000 victims had perished from cholera, in Amritser, Lahore and the Camp.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, APRIL 15, 1828.

PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

THE TARIFF.

The House of Representatives, on Friday the 4th inst. after a late sitting, discharged the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of the Tariff Bill. The Bill now goes into the House with various amendments. What will be its fate, it is impossible to tell. It is probable, we think, that the New England members, sooner than give a protection to the growers of Hemp and Grain, and the manufacturers of Iron, founded on principles of fairness and reciprocity, will defeat the Bill. The New England members are for monopoly—they wish none to be protected but themselves. The Woollen Manufacturers of the Eastern States are to be protected at the expense of all other interests. Their policy is ruinous to Maryland and the other grain-growing states.—Balt. Rep.

A Letter to the Editors, dated Fredericksburg, Va. April 8.

Gentlemen: I hasten to apprise you of the result of our County election. Although there were four Jackson candidates, the Adams candidate was left far behind; in our town alone, about thirty Jackson men, did not turn out. The Adams men now admit that we have three to one; we claim 5 to one, about four to one is no doubt the correct proportion.

Garret Minor	223	Jackson
Robert Powell	153	"
Wm. F. White	108	"
Wm.H Flutcher	107	"
Philip Harrison	83	Adams,
For Convention,	135
No Convention	208.

On the Convention about 20 or 30 did not vote. The Adams men had out nearly their whole strength; they cannot poll 100 votes in this county; although this is their principal fortress, and they have a most active Committee to aid them.—W. Tel.

THE BARGAIN.—David Trimble, a member of Congress from Kentucky, who voted on the Election in the House of Representatives, for Mr. Adams, and whom the people of his district turned out last summer to make way for a good and true Jacksonian, denied, that he had ever said he voted for Adams because he had ascertained that he would make Clay Secretary of State. The fact however, that he did say so, was established before the Kentucky Senate, and is put beyond all question by the statements of thirteen respectable men of his district, [which shall appear in the next Herald.]

Let Mr. Clay authorize Mr. BLAIR to publish the letter which he wrote to him a short time previous to the Election, and the proof of the Bargain will be complete. We challenge him to authorize the publication of the letter. He dare n't do it. It contains positive proof of his having had an understanding with Adams. If not,—let him produce it.—Balt. Rep.

From the Philadelphia Mercury.

TO THE ADAMS MEN.

The Reign of Terror in old Berks County, Pa.—now composing the counties of Berks & Schuylkill.

As some of the Administration party, mislead by the falsehoods of Binns, really entertain some hope of change in that staunch republican county, compassion for their weakness has induced me to hastily throw together a few of the memorable scenes enacted in that county by the troops and adherents of John Adams, during the Reign of Terror, from which they will at once perceive the utter hopelessness of any change occurring there in favour of any of the Adams Family.—Old John Adams soon discovered the repugnance of the Germans of Pennsylvania to him and his measures.—Determined to overawe them, he directed a regiment to be quartered near Reading, then the county town of Berks county. These valiant soldiers were not slow in carrying into operation the desires of the Adams' Dynasty. They wantonly insulted the most respectable and influential inhabitants, and upon the slightest pretext inflicted the most cruel and bitter punishment upon them—incarcerating them in guard-houses, beating them, and offering them every indignity.—This kind of oppression only served to inflame the flames of discontent, and the people resolved in self defence, to raise their volunteers and militia associations, which in turn, might check the rapacity and insolence of the reign of terror soldiers. Adams appeared to them as a second George the Third, determined to "drive the people to desperation,*" and in that way to overturn the Constitution of the country. The old tories of '76 then in the country, readily took commissions from old Adams, and by their conduct proved themselves the champions of mischief and of civil war. It sometimes happened that the volunteers from the country in their rough uniform, in groups of two or three, would be called by business to Reading. Their presence was the immediate signal for the Adams troops commencing an attack upon them, and thereby creating a tumult. A number of scenes of this description occurred, but the narration of one will exhibit the character of the rest. Two volunteers, from Bern township, were in town on business. The officer of the Adams regiment immediately despatched a large squad of their men to insult these peaceable citizens, and beat them out of the town. The men from Bern were unarmed—the whole regiment just outside of the town, and they concluded the people of Reading would not dare to interfere. The Bern men were near the store of Mr. John Hiester, (son of Gov. Hiester,) when the Adams soldiery came up and attacked them; they defended themselves like men, but were nearly overpowered, when Mr. John S. Hiester, hearing the noise, and seeing the soldiery, seized the iron bar of his store door, and rushed out upon them, beat them off the Burn men, and compelled them, like cowards, to retire. This produced a spirited controversy between the commander of the regiment and Mr. Hiester, which ended in a challenge from Mr. Hiester; from which, I believe, no duel took place—at least neither of the parties were killed. The regiment, however, found their situation so embarrassing, that a removal was necessary; and old Adams, much to his sorrow, had to order them to another station. Their departure soon showed the feelings of the people. †Liberty poles, like those of the Revolution, were every where dispalyed, and liberty once more walked in majesty amongst them. A long duration of her presence, was not, however, to be expected under the administration of Adams. A troop of horse from Lancaster, ready to do the utmost violence to the persons of the republicans were quickly ordered over to Reading to punish them. These men attacked the German printer, Mr. Jacob Schneider, in his office; they dragged him, with drawn swords, into the market house, and threatened to cut to pieces any of the republicans who would dare to come to his rescue. They were not, however, to be thus daunted; go they would, at every hazard—and when the troopers had torn his coat off his back, and were preparing to beat him, a strong, stern German republican seized him in his arms and bore him off from their assault. The liberty poles were cut down, by their orders, at the point of the sword. Understanding that one was raised about 9 miles from Reading, on the Philadelphia road, opposite the dwelling of a soldier of '76,* the troop was put in motion, and galloped down;—as they drew nigh, the old veteran came to the door—they dismounted a few seized the old man, endeavoured to frighten him into obedience to their orders, by flourishing their swords over his head, but he was used to men in array, and they carried no fear to his mind. They formed a ring round him, beating him with the flat sides of their swords, and thrusting an axe into his hands to make him cut down the pole, but all in vain. Exasperated at their cruelty, the gallant whig opened his breast to their weapons, and said, "I have bared my bosom to the bayonets of king George—I do the same to the swords of John Adams. I have lived to see that king forced to allow our rights, and I am prepared as I was then to die in their defence." This enraged the myrmidons of power, and a villain of the rank of serjeant thrust the point of his sword into the bare bosom of the gallant soldier, until the blood ran out at its wounds,† and stained for ever this base outrage upon a glorious defender of our liberty!!! Reader, think not that the best blood of the German veteran, gushed in vain! nor conceive that the Germans of Pennsylvania will ever wipe from off the name of Adams the indelible coloring in which lay crimsoned in their memories, the days of the Reign of Terror!!! Such I hope can only exist in the minds of deluded and besotted partisans, who have little or no acquaintance with the German character. To tell the people of our German counties, that any of the name and kin of old John Adams would ever receive their votes for office, would be the highest insult that a generous people could receive. As one, who has received from them many evidences of good will and kindness. I spurn, in their name, this dishonorable imputation, and pronounce it a libel upon their integrity and inflexibility. Indeed, but a few days since I have received from the most influential and respectable Germans of that county, assurance "that John Quincy Adams, had nothing to hope from that or the neighboring counties, and that his only friends were a 'few and far between,' whithout influence." And only yesterday, a German store-keeper, from Rockland township, informed me that in that township there were but two Adams men!!

A Berks County Man.

*Reign of Terror.—In order to show the people with what hasty strides the Coalition are progressing towards establishing the doctrines of the terrible days of '98, we shall pass over the proscriptive course lately resorted to at this place, to crush the liberty of the press, and cite one recently transacted in Philadelphia—We mean that most daring outrage of honor and decorum—the attempt to assassinate Mr. Simpson, Editor of the P. Mercury. That gentleman was sitting in his office, when E. C. Pinkney, editor of the Marylander, entered without ceremony and insisted on taking his life immediately, or else obtaining from him a promise to fight a duel.—The astonished gentleman, in order to free himself from a ruffian who had entered his office with a bludgeon in his hand, and a brace of pistols in his pocket, promised to receive the challenge. But with this Mr. Pinkney was not satisfied. He demanded a pledge from Mr. Simpson that he would not resort to the civil authority, which the gentleman wrote while the muzzle of the pistol was immediately at his head. What was the reason of all this?—Merely because Mr. Simpson a few weeks before published a delineation of the public character of the paper edited by Pinkney. There was a daring attempt to crush the liberty of the press—A measure made up of desperation and despair, which were increased by the existence of an able editor, and would be lessened by his death. We cannot believe that the people will contemplate such proceedings with carelessness and unconcern. They precisely resemble the conduct of the followers of the elder Adams, in the same city during the reign of terror. One printer alone there dared to assert free principles, viz: Wm. Duane, Esq. he was prosecuted, pistolled, his life attempted by individual assassins,—and at last a posse of government minions attempted to accomplish what individuals could not effect; they left him apparently lifeless on his own premises—but not dead. No; thank heaven he yet lives, and is on the side of Jackson and the People, against terror, proscription, and aristocracy. But hark! What say the Coalition editors? Pinkney says, "We have the POWER [the contingent fund?] in our hands, and it should be firmly & efficiently used.—And Binns says, "It is a hopeless undertaking to propitiate the Jackson party—but they may be INTIMIDATED!!". Will the people calmly submit to these things and take no note of these sayings? No never.

†We have no doubt of the correctness, or truth, of this narration—for we have been on the spot where those liberty poles were put up, and heard the same related by those who assisted in erecting them.

* Old Colonel Lutz.

† Some of the men who approved of the proceedings of these days are yet living, and it is a fact that should be sounded with trumpet voice throughout our land, that they and their children are among the supporters of the present corrupt administration—Yet some of the "by authority" organs of these men assume an unbecoming feminineness—revolt at the idea of shooting mutinous deserters in time of war to ensure the public weal—and audaciously enquire—"Is it not singular that the greater part of the Jackson men are of the violent and brutal cast?" Surely it would be wiser in them to convince (tho' it is impossible while their eyes are open) the people that they are not labouring to crush the liberty of the press—that they are not extremely anxious to re-establish the Alien & Sedition Laws;* and that they are not in perfect verity bringing about another Reign of Terror!!!

* In the reign of terror, under the elder Adams, a law was introduced, entitled the Sedition Law, (which was a violation of the Constitution, wherein it is declared that no law "shall be enacted abridging the freedom of the press;") and under this law the press was, in almost every state of the Union, muzzled; printers and public writers were seized and incarcerated, to the ruin of their health, family, comfort and fortunes.

Another law was enacted, usually called the Alien Law. The young men of the present generation consist, in an immense measure, of the sons of those who were then intended to be proscribed, or transported out of the U. States. The Irish emigrants were the aliens most obnoxious to the ruling powers.—Del. Pat.

AN EXTRACT.

The following is an extract of one of a series of essays entitled, The Contrast, or Military Chieftains and Political Chieftains, to which we invite the special notice of our readers:

It would be unpardonable in this discussion, not to allude to one transaction during the last war, and that is the defence of New Orleans, by the western militia. Between the city, and the invincibles of Wellington, twelve thousand in number, was a ditch, an embankment; four thousand militia and a few regulars. It was filled with wealth. The entire property of many anxious and despairing men, throughout the nation was deposited at that place. It was almost in a state of mutiny. The intercourse of some of its inhabitants with the enemy was in the face of day; that intercourse had for its object the surrender of the city. The commander of the Americans was a hero. He saw the extent of the danger; he estimated his means, and he resolved on defence. He proclaimed martial law, and compelled the mutinous, who in this hour of peril had forgotten their country, to assist in their own defence. The trumpets sounded; the banner of St. George was unfurled. On came the embattled host of England: On they came, the conquerors of the conqueror of Europe. Little did they think that their countless laurels were to be torn from their veteran brows by American militia. On they came in the proud anticipation of a bloodless victory. The cannon were unmasked. The battle raged. Solid columns of the enemy fell like grass before the scythe of the mower. Fresh columns succeeded: the death dealing rifle soon laid them in the dust. Again they advanced. Again they were repelled. "A republican militia man speeded a bullet to the heart" of the British commander. He fell, full of honour, gallantly fighting "in the fore front of the battle." The enemy retreated. The stars and stripes waved in triumph over this field of blood.

An honourable foe may be permitted to lament the fall of an honourable adversary. This feeling may be tolerated in military chieftains, whose patriotism is not of that exalted character which exults for years in the fall of an individual, and sneers at the posthumous honours with which a grateful country solaces the grief of the mourning family of a gallant soldier!*—The deep and bitter sorrow which filled the bosom of Colonel Hamilton for the fate of Andre, the spy, was not charged upon him, even in revolutionary times, as a fault. But Hamilton was a military chieftain, and of course his patriotism was not of that stern and vindictive character, which was required in the statesman. There are some whose petulance is excited by the augmentation of a coat of arms; but who can view the "innocent ribband," the badge of aristocratic distinction, with complacency.—There are some whose warfare is confined to the dead, who run no tilts with the living, but whose vampyre tracks are on the graves of honorable men.

What honours were offered, what rewards were bestowed upon him who had wrought this great work for his country? Did the bounty and the gratitude of the nation come to him in the shape of a magnificent pension? Did a superb monument arise to perpetuate the remembrance of this unparalleled victory? The man who had preserved the law, the constitution, and the American dominion over this opulent region, was accused of violating the law and the constitution, at a time, when all men were put on the elementary principles of society, the paramount law of nature, self preservation. He was arrested on the process of a wretched judge, brought to his bar, and sentenced to an ignominious fine. In the pride and flush of his victory, with his triumphant army about him, he submitted to the sentence, obeyed the law, and paid the fine. This has not been a sufficient expiation. Neither the sanctity of the senate chamber, nor the lonely retirement of his farm, can shield him from calumny. Wherever he is, he is pursued with every tale which falsehood can devise, and credulity believe.

It is a question deserving examination how far Gen. Jackson is liable to the charge of military ambition, in the offensive sense in which the term has been applied by the secretary of state, He first appeared in military employment as the commander of the Tennessee militia, in the Creek war, when of mature age, and after he had holden the highest civil offices which his state could give him. His conduct in that war received the unqualified approbation of the government, and of president Madison. Did his success in that war excite any feelings of lawless ambition? Did he devise any scheme to possess himself of any part of the national funds, to further the purposes of ambition? Did he not undertake to defend the southwestern region of the confederacy, when the invader was on its soil; when an enemy, disciplined in twenty campaigns was in his front, outnumbering his raw and undisciplined militia in the proportion of three to one: when so far from having at his disposal the resources of government, the government was literally without credit, and his means were created on his own responsibility, and his whole fortune staked on the issue: when in the face of the foe, he was compelled to "create his defence:" when the wisest heads were confounded, and the stoutest hearts desponded? What object could he have had but to save the south-western states, which the enemy must have conquered, had not this gallant attempt succeeded? But say his enemies, he proclaimed martial law.—Did he proclaim martial law for his own benefit? No, he intended to use the means of the country in defence of the country. He intended that every man should be compelled to fight, not for his aggrandizement, but for his "hearths and his altars," his friends, his wife, his parents and his children. He intended to compel those who were interested, to defend that interest.—He intended to prevent that horrible desolation, which must have fallen on the city of New Orleans, when beauty and booty were the watchwords to a licentious soldiery. And when the coward was skulking from the danger, or devising plans for its surrender, his was that morale alchymy which transformed treachery into patriotism, and cowardice into heroism. Had he been a "military chieftain," of deep and dark designs, cherishing an unholy ambition in his heart, would he have engaged in this desperate enterprize? No, he would instantly, have made his terms with the enemy, declared a dismemberment of the south western states, formed a new confederacy, and at the head of an armed force, and aided by Great Britain, controlled all the regions on the upper Mississippi, secured his fortune, and established his power. Never was there a more hopeful opportunity for self aggrandizement, than that period presented, when Jackson, Decius like, devoted himself for his country.

And where, at this terrible period, were our worthy President and his prime minister, Mr. Secretary Clay? Enjoying the gala days of Europe, after the overthrow of Napoleon;—Mingling with kings and nobles, parading at courts with laced coats and feathers, and intermingling [illegible] ings with the "military chieftains" of Europe, (as no military chieftains are hateful to these gentlemen, excepting such as have found favour with the people of America for their services to America!). The President was writing letters to Leavitt Harris, denying the ability of self-defence to his country, complaining of her penurious government, fattening on the public calamities, and drawing from the exhausted coffers of a suffering people, in less than two years, more than $60,000.

JUNIUS BRUTUS.

*Vide the president's speech at a wine table at Baltimore.

☞ To the sons of Erin, and all adopted citizens of the United States.

John Adams was the royal father of the Alien and Sedition Laws. He banished you the country—forbid you to enter it—and was the means, through Rufus King, of many of the best patriots of Hibernia being brought to the block.

John Quincy Adams, his son, is of the same creed, the same breed and the same royal family. His first appointment to office was Rufus King. Since his election, his persecution of the Irish, and all foreigners, has been bitter and unremitting. The New York American, under the pay of Adams, denouncing you as Vermine, Scum, and all that is vile in nature. The other papers of the Ebony party have done the same—and the Renegade Binns, a traitor to the land that gave him birth, gives aid to those wretched libellers. It is marvellous that your burning indignation does not consume that profligate Apostate.

This system is still in force. On the 29th of January, the following infamous paragraph appeared under the editorial head of the "Rahway Advocate," a tory little paper, in the pay of the Ebony men, printed in New Jersey. Read it, and restrain your imprecations on Adams if you can.

☞ "The success of the friends of Gen. Jackson in the city of New-York, in November, 1827, obtained as it was by the aid of the SCUM, DREGS, and FILTH of all countries—by bribery and corruption—through scenes of revelry and drunkenness—and by the votes of many vagabonds who had no legal right to vote any where."—[Rahway Advocate, 26 of Jan. 1828.

We are authorized to announce

Littleton Dennis Teackle,

as a candidate to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

PROPOSALS BY BENJ. EDES,

FOR PUBLISHING IN BALTIMORE,

THE EMERALD,

And Baltimore Literary Gazette.

The Emerald and Baltimore Literary Gazette will be published every Saturday, in quarto form, super-royal sheet, with new long primer type, and in superior style—the editorial department to be under the direction of several gentlemen of acknowledged talents.

The want of a paper of the nature proposed, will be allowed by every citizen of this metropolis; nor has the proprietor, in his efforts, been so much prompted by a desire of gain, as by a hope of encouraging literature throughout this section of the Union. Confident of the approbation of all persons of taste, he therefore proposes the publication of the Argus, and pledges himself that no effort shall be wanting on his part to please the public in general.

The Emerald shall contain the choicest selections of miscellaneous literature, from the most esteemed periodicals of this country and Europe; and the strictest attention shall be observed as to their moral tendency. Its contents shall be—Tales, original and selected; moral, humorous and scientific Essays; original and selected Poetry; Biographical Sketches of distinguished worthies; Anecdotes; &c.—The original matter will be furnished by individuals who have through the medium of our best literary productions, established themselves in public favor. Also, interesting items of foreign and domestic intelligence; critical notices of passing events; the drama, new publications, and a correct description of the prevailing fashions, both abroad and at home.

TERMS.—Price of subscription four dollars per annum, one half to be paid on delivery of the first number, and the balance at the expiration of six months. Postmasters and other persons of the inland towns, procuring six subscribers and becoming responsible for the payment, will be entitled to one copy gratis. When 400 Subscribers are obtained the Emerald will be issued.

☞ Subscribers will be received at the Office of the Village Herald.

March 25 eow

Gen. Jackson, Dr. Ely, &c.

Dr. Ely having vindicated himself from the aspersions cast on him in the debates in the Legislature, we insert the following quotation from his Sermon, or pamphlet, as an act of justice. The Doctor has been grossly traduced, and the least attonement the public can make him, is to hear and record his triumphant vindication.

"To the honorable gentlemen who have introduced my sermon to considerable distinction, I tender my thanks, because their strictures, whether just or unjust will have a tendency to promote the consideration of the truth, and the more extended influence of Christian principle in our future elections.

Some of the errors, however, into which these learned commentators have fallen, ought to be corrected.

It is not true, that I have ever advocated the union of Church and State in any publication from the pulpit or press: but on the contrary, in my discourse on the 4th of July last, the very discourse which is adduced as proof of a disposition friendly to such a union, it is distinctly stated:

"I would guard, however, against misunderstanding and misrepresentation, when I state, that all our rulers ought, in their official stations, to serve the Lord Jesus Christ. I do not wish any religious test to be prescribed by constitution, and proposed to a man on his acceptance of any public trust. Neither can any intelligent friend of his country, and of true religion, desire the establishment of any one religious sect by civil law. Let the religion of the Bible rest on that everlasting rock, and on those spiritual laws, on which Jehovah has founded his kingdom: let Christianity, by the Spirit of Christ in her members, support herself: LET CHURCH AND STATE BE FOREVER DISTINCT; but still, let the doctrines and precepts of Christ govern all men, in their relations and employments."

It did not suit the convenience of persons who furnished the Senate with extracts from my sermon, to give them a sight of these lines, which originally stood as they now stand, in immediate connexion with some of the extracts published.

For twenty years past I have publicly returned thanks, on almost every Lord's Day, for our civil and religious liberties, and for our freedom in this happy country from an unhallowed union of Church and State; and I can confidently assure my fellow-citizens, that there is, to the best of my knowledge and belief, neither Minister nor Elder in the Presbyterian Church in the United States, who is an advocate for any establishment of any religious sect by any civil government. Our whole system of Presbyterian Church government coincides with the civil liberty, and the representative governments of our country. All our pastors are chosen by their congregations, and all our ruling Elders in our Sessions and Presbyteries are the representatives of the people.

It was an error in the honourable Mr. Duncan, to speak of my discourse as having been delivered at Norristown. He was probably led into this mistake by some representations in the newspapers of a sermon which I preached in that place on the 2d of September last.

In illustration of the assertion, that we can form correct notions of the moral character of a being whom we have never seen, I reminded my hearers, that they had all formed some conceptions of the moral character of Washington; and latterly of General Jackson. My notions of his character might be correct, or incorrect; but I would tell them an anecdote which I thought conveyed a just idea of him. I then stated what I now reiterate:

"That between three and four years prior to the General's being first nominated as a candidate for the Presidency, Mr. Somerville, then an accomplished young officer in the Navy, but since deceased, informed some of my family connexions, that he had lately spent a week in the General's company, at his own House; that the General appeared to him to be greatly changed in several respects; and that the General had said to him, in a very serious and impressive manner, "You may depend upon it, Somerville, that without true religion, there is no happiness in the present life, and none to be expected in the next." I told my hearers, that this is a true saying; and I was aware that coming from a distinguished fellow citizen it might have some influence with some men who more regard the word of their deservedly favourite Hero than the word of God.

This statement has been shamefully distorted, but I think the anecdote worthy of any pulpit, and calculated to do good. Would to God that many admirers of Gen. Jackson would record this among many of his patriotic and excellent sentiments, on the tablets of their hearts! They would then cease to think him likely to prove a patron of their exterminating party zeal, and licentious lives. I have repeated the same anecdote, years ago, in Flemington, N. J., and in August last in Huntingdon, in this state. My numerous hearers will recollect the anecdote. If ever the General should be President, as I freely acknowledge it, is my hope that he may be, I may predict, from my knowledge of him, without the spirit of prophecy, that he will disappoint many of his friends and foes, by being the impartial, temperate, prudent, and exemplary Chief Magistrate of the whole nation.

Mr. Duncan has intimated that my discourse on the 4th of July, "was preached in favor of the election of General Jackson." How far this is true, every person who will read, may judge for himself. Those who represent Gen. Jackson as one of the worst of men; must think my sermon a point blank shot into his heart.

Since, however, I have been called in question, about my politics, before the Senate, I will here state, for I fear nothing from candour, that Mrs. Jackson (for the politics of the day include her) is an eminently pious woman; and has sustained this character for about a quarter of a century. On the subject of baptism, I believe she is a Baptist, and has been immersed. I have heard no evil said of her, by those who know her, unless it be this, that she prefers a prayer meeting to a palace; and this will not sink her in the estimation of any who do not forget their religion in their politics.

Of the General, I shall say, that he is as far from hypocrisy as any man living, and shall give a few extracts from some of his letters, which I think will show him in his private character, in a true light. I must beg his pardon for making, without the opportunity of asking his consent, the present use of his friendly communications to me.

Under date of Nashville, April 21, 1823, he thus writes me on the subject of a clergyman who had been suspended for many years on account of some imputed errors in doctrine:

"SIR,—Being informed by my friend, the Rev. Mr. C. of this place, that the case of the aged, pious, and reverend Thomas B. Craighead, is to be discussed before the General Assembly at Philadelphia, at its approaching session, I feel it my duty to address you on that subject.

Having known Mr. Craighead, from my boyhood, having been raised in the neighbourhood in which he commenced his ministry; having been wafted by fortune to this western country, in which he had settled himself and presided over a congregation large and respectable; and having for the last thirty four years of my life lived within five miles of his house, I am authorized in saying that I have a full knowledge of him both in his private walks and public ministry. And if we are justified in judging the tree by its fruits, I can with great truth testify, that no man has laboured with more zeal in the ministry, and that none have been more respected for piety, or more revered as Christians, and as men. He has done much good, and would have done still more, but for the unhappy difference which arose between him and some of the clergy in Kentucky on some doctrinal points. This, originating warmth of discussion, was carried, perhaps, too far; and enlisting advocates nearly poised on both sides, limited the extent of his services, and has ended in his suspension for some years:—a circumstance which has been much regretted by a great proportion of the good citizens, and Christian professors here; and has injuriously affected, as I believe, the Presbyterian cause.

To see a venerable man, whose hairs have grown gray in the service of his God; a man whose walks have been those of piety, morality, and the benevolence of true religion; respected by all—but deprived of the benefit of communication, and for that which many, very many of the most pious Presbyterians, cannot regard as inconsistent with the Holy Scriptures, which are the guide of all Christians, has filled us here with much regret: and it may be truly said, that nothing would give more general satisfaction, or tend more to the prosperity of this church, than his restoration.

Disunion is evil in both Church and State; and the present is a period, when every means, consistent with the principles of true religion, ought to be employed to restore harmony and union to the Christian cause.

'Tis religion to inculcate charity, and if a brother err, to forgive him. And in the sincere reliance upon those principles, while I shall be acquitted of any view to dictate to the calm deliberation of the Assembly, I hope that this address will be excused from my desire to represent fairly the character of the aged and pious Mr. Craighead. This alone has been my motive; and to have done less would have been injustice to my own feeling, as well as to the interests of the Church."

Under date of Washington, January 1st, 1824, on the same subject, the General writes to me, "Before I close this letter, will you again permit me to bring to your recollection the case of my aged and pious friend, the Rev. Mr. Craighead, and request that you will endeavour to have his case finally considered before your next General Assembly? My prayer is, that he may be restored to his Church, and fellowship with the Christian brethren. This, and this alone, can bring his hoary head in peace to the grave."

Suffice it here to say, that soon after this, the case of Mr. Craighead was finally reviewed, he was restored to the ministry and the Presbytery within whose bounds he resided, with the full approbation of the assembly, and has since retired to his everlasting rest.

One short extract more, is from a letter dated at his Hermitage, July 12th, 1827, in which the General says, "Having been educated and bro't up under the discipline of the Presbyterian rule (my mother being a member of that Church) I have always had a preference for it. Amongst the greatest blessings secured to us under our Constitution, is the liberty of worshipping God as our conscience dictates. All true Christians love each other; and while here below ought to harmonize; for all must unite in the realms above. I have thought one evidence of true religion is, when all those who believe in the ample atonement of our crucified Saviour are found in harmony and friendship together.

My enemies have charged me with every crime but hopocriy. I believe they never alleged this against me, and I can assure you no change of circumstances, no exalted office can work a change upon me. I will remain uniformly the same, whether in the chair of state, or at the Hermitage. My habits are too well fixed now to be altered."

Such as these extracts from his letters, written without any conception of their ever being made public, indicate him to be what I believe General Jackson is. I have never affirmed that he is a 'renewed man,' by the power of divine grace. That question must be left with himself and his Maker.

I have declared my knowledge of the fact, that he is the avowed friend of Christianity; and I claim the liberty of thinking and speaking as freely on this subject as those numerous Editors of papers, who for the sake of abusing the candidate for the Presidency whom they oppose, have been very abundant in their vituperations of myself.

No office, no worldly emolument do I seek. I feel no conviction of having prostituted the pulpit, for the promotion of sinister, party purposes. My desire is, that correct religious principles may govern myself, and all of my fellow citizens, in all the transactions of private and public life. I freely confess that I esteem General Jackson much; and I love my country much; but I love Christ more.

Villanous and Disgraceful!

From the Philadelphia Nat. Palladium.

Hundreds of the copies of an indecent and filthy pamphlet, entitled "A View of Gen. Jackson's Domestic Relations," have been circulated in this and the neighboring counties, within the last three days. One franked by "John Sloane," (a member of congress, from Ohio, and directed to a gentleman in this city, who was erroneously supposed for Mr. Adams, is now lying in our desk. We have perused it with sensations which cannot well be defined, but which may be imagined by any one who has gratitude or honesty, or honor or delicacy. So infamous a thing has never met our eyes, always saving and excepting the daily outpourings of the man who edits the Democratic Press. The hallowed privacy of exemplary domestic life is again invaded—an unoffending female, whose life has been spent in the practice of every virtue, who daily gives evidence of a heart filled with the tenderest charities of our nature, is again dragged forth to be made a mark for the low ribaldry of the political gamesters in pay of the coalition. "Vengeance is mine, and I will repay, saith the Lord." Hence we may look for some more signal vengeance than loss of place, inflicted upon the worthless libellers who now administer the laws of the land.

From the U. S. Telegraph Extra.

The editors of the United States' Telegraph, feel that they almost owe an apology to the public for calling its attention to the strong and irresistible refutation which the foregoing testimony furnishes at once of the innocence of a much injured and most amiable woman, and the inhuman and infamous Vandalism by which her reputation has been assailed.

These are subjects so sacred in their character, (and what can be more so than a woman's honor?) that even the effort to defend and sustain them involves, however successfully this office may be performed, a seeming and revolting delicacy. Nothing, therefore would have induced us to have invaded, even in the spirit of friendship and a militant vindication, those domestic recesses which are chosen sanctuaries, but for a recent reprint in this city, of Charles Hammond's most infamous and most memorable slander against Mrs. Jackson.

The public will bear in mind that this new edition of a foul and refuted calumny, made its appearance very shortly after the late visit of this wretch to this city. Shall we apologize to the second officer in the executive for the employment of this appropriate epithet towards his bosom, confidential, and inestimable friend? No, Mr. Clay, if you take this miscreant to your heart, you must, with the benefits resulting from his attacks upon a woman! share a portion of the honor of such an association. It will not do for you, after degrading yourself by voluntary companionship with a coward, whose versatility in infamy fits him at once to be the scavinger of the filthy, and the hired assassin, of his party, to repudiate his friendship. You must be content to go down to posterity, (if the poor reptile can live beyond the Summer sun that warms him into existence,) as the fidus Achates of him who was publicly and ignominously chastised for his treasonable toryism during our recent war, and has since added a higher claim to baseness by calumniating—widely, falsely calumniating, a virtuous and venerable woman!! And for what? To make her husband odious, by catering for your ambition and lust of power.

When we apprize the public that of this atrocious pamphlet at least twenty thousand copies have probably issued from the press in this city, the expenses of which has in all likelihood, been defrayed from some one of the contingent funds of the Departments, by undue profits allowed on public printing, it will be possible to estimate the indefatigable malice of the master spirits of the coalition and their humble tools.

But what will the gallant, chivalrous and high-minded freemen of our country think, when they are informed that the largest portion of this work has been enveloped at the Capitol, by the messengers of congress, in the public stationery, and distributed under the franks of some of its members! We state and avouch this fact on the highest authority, and challenge contradiction. The member who has been the most willing and industrious in this loathsome drudgery, is the Honorable Mr. John Sloane, of Ohio, whose chief occupation at this place, is to be the privileged amanuensis of calumny. This patriot in the operation of franking, is a machine of vast power and efficiency, and it is believed that the daily falsehoods which Messrs. Gales & Seaton strike off by steam, is not evolved with the celerity and effect with which this gentleman writes "Free—John Sloane," on the calumnies he distributes, not alone in Ohio, but as it will be seen by the subjoined letter, to other parts of the Union. This poor hound, taken off of the scent of the six militiamen, by the lash of public opinion, is now opening on another track, for which the instincts of the animal amply qualify him. In real life there has, perhaps, never been exhibited an instance of such vulgar, indomitable malice. Shakspeare has given us but a glimpse of what Mr. Sloane must be, in the mild and decent virtues of Caliban.

From the fangs of such monsters we have done little else than to rescue Mrs. Jackson. This is to be found in the triumphant vindication which we have just presented to the reader. Desperate, indeed, must be the fortunes of that faction, which, having exhausted every stratagem which cunning or malice could supply, against a Soldier of two wars and a cherished Patriot, defeated, convicted, and punished as it has been, now turns upon an inoffensive and unoffending woman, the partner of his bosom, the venerable companion of his declining years—her whose influence is felt, in the circle where he lives, by the practice of every virtue which belongs to the tenderness, the dignity, the sensibility of her sex. Men of America! will you endure this? No!. The impulse of public gratitude will be nerved by a sense of justice—and the villifiers of their country's honor, the poor, trafficking hucksters for her offices, and the base calumniators of a Woman defenceless by the public manacles by which her husband is bound, will be consigned to a common and unmitigated infamy, in which they will live in the detestation, but survived by the scorn of their countrymen.

Battletown, Va. March 22, 1828.

Gentlemen: This day's mail bro't to this office a pamphlet (addressed to Geo. H. Norris, Esq. and franked by J. Sloane,) called A View of General Jackson's Domestic Relations, in reference to his fitness for the Presidency. It would be well for you to take especial notice of this book—and of Mr. Sloane who franks it.

Yours in haste,

GEO. S. LANE.

Messrs. Green & Jarvis.

Baltimore Prices Current.

BALTIMORE, FRIDAY, APRIL 11.

FLOUR, best family,	$6a6 25
Susquehanna,	4 50
WHEAT, best white, p. bu.	95a1 00
red do	80a85
CORN,	37a39
RYE,	42a44
OATS,	21a23
BARLEY,	60a62
WHITE BEANS,	80a100
PEAS,	55a60
CLOVER SEED,	3 75a4 00
TIMOTHY SEED,	2 50a3
FLAXSEED,	75a80
FEATHERS, do	26a28
BEES-WAX, per pound	26a27

FELIX JENKINS,

Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk Maker,

No. 10, South Street, BALTIMORE,

Respectfully informs his friends, customers, and the public generally, that he continues to carry on the Saddlery, Harness, and Trunk Making Business, in all its variety, and on the most extensive scale. He has lately received from England, per the ship Philip Tabb, an assortment of articles in his line. Country merchants will find it to their interest to call at No. 10 South street, and to examine the qualities and prices of his goods, as he is determined to sell as low as they can be purchased in Philadelphia.

☞ A liberal discount will be made for cash or town acceptances.

April 15 jdm

This is to give Notice,

THAT the Subscriber of the city of Baltimore, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Baltimore county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of MARY WARD late of said county deceased.

All persons having claims against said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof, on or before the 5th day of November next, to JAMES M. BUCHANNAN, Esq. my attorney, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate; and all persons indebted to the said estate, are requested to make immediate payment to my attorney as aforesaid. Given under my hand, this 7th day of April, 1828.

HOWES GOLDSBOROUGH.

April 15 jdm

Timbered Land For Sale.

I am requested by John H. Bayly, Esq. to offer for sale a tract of land commonly called "Pine Pole," situated about two miles from Princess-Anne. This tract of land is valuable for the excellent timber now standing on it, and its contiguity to navigation. For terms apply to

GEO. HANDY.

April 8, 1828. §

TRUSTEE'S SALE.

BY virtue of a decree of Somerset County Court in this case, the subscriber will offer at public sale, to the highest and best bidder, on the premises, on Thursday the 8th of May next, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. on the premises, all of the following parts of two tracts of land subject to the widow's dower, to wit: part of a tract of land called Shadwell's Chance and part of Shadwell, containing 224¼ acres of land, more or less, situated in the county aforesaid, on the south east side of Nanticoke river, with the improvements and appurtenances thereto belonging.—

The terms of sale will be, a credit of twelve months, with interest from the day of sale, to be secured by a bond or bonds given to the Trustee, with good security, upon the payment of which and ratification of the sale, the Trustee is directed by the said decree to execute to the purchaser or purchasers, his, her or their heirs, a deed for the aforesaid property, conveying the title of the complainants and defendant in the premises.

THOS. JONES, (of John,) Trustee.

April 15 ts

FOR SALE,

A GIG, made by Ogle of Philadelphia; she is but little defaced, and the harness is in good order. The above Gig will be sold low for cash or good paper. Apply to

SEVERN TEACKLE.

Princess-Anne, April 15.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Zadock Long, use of William Roach, against Levin W. Ballard, James Wilson and James Polk, one at the suit of Jeremiah Y. Dashiell against Levin W. Ballard I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—Part of a tract of land called 'Dashiell's Lot,' containing 382 acres, more or less; part of Sandy Ridge & Fitzwaters containing 156 acres more or less, seized as the property of Levin W. Ballard, which will be sold to the highest and best bidder for cash, at the Court-House door, in Princess-Anne, on the 6th day of May next, between the hours of 1 and 4 o'clock, P. M. to satisfy the above writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

April 15, 1828. ws

MARSHAL'S SALE.

BY virtue of two writs of Fieri Facias issued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for Maryland District, and to me directed at the suit of John H. Bayly against George Jones of Robt. and Robert Jones, executor of Charles Jones, I have seized and taken in execution the following property to wit—One tract of land called Old Berry, containing 387 acres, more or less, and shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, the above mentioned property, on Tuesday the 29th of April, at the Court-House door, in Princess-Anne, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

HUMPHREY HUMPHREYS, Dep. Marshal for Som. county.

April 5th—8j

EASTMAN'S MANUFACTORY OF

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,

At No. 36 Pratt street, opposite the United Hotel, Baltimore.

THE subscriber would inform the public, that he has on hand a large assortment of Gideon Davis' Improved Patent PLOUGHS of cast & wrought Shares, with & without Coulters; Hillside, Substratum and Shovel Ploughs; a large stock of Cultivators of superior quality; Harrows; Swingletrees, double & single; Cornshellers and Washing Machines. Also on hand as usual, his Patent Cylindrical Straw Cutters, which have given universal satisfaction, and Brown's Vertical Wool Spinners; Cast-steel Axes; Grubbing Hoes; Picks and Mattocks, which he warrants of superior quality; very superior Oil Stones, saturated with oil—all of which will be sold at reasonable prices for cash or acceptances in this city.

His very extensive sales of the above articles for the last 3 years is an evidence of the general satisfaction he has given to his numerous customers, and he flatters himself that with the increased pains he has taken in selecting his timber and other materials this season, and also to improve as much as possible on the workmanship of his implements, that he will continue to merit the public patronage which has been so liberally bestowed and for which he takes this opportunity to express his grateful thanks.

Orders by mail (post paid) will receive prompt attention.

JONATHAN S. EASTMAN.

N. B. On hand, 9 bushels good MILLET SEED, which will be sold low. FRUIT TREES will be furnished to orders. Implements ordered by any customers which I do not keep on hand will be carefully selected and furnished to the orders. March 11. tx

JUST RECEIVED

AND FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE, a number of

Methodist Hymn Books;

Wesley's Sermons, in 2 volumes.

Also, Scriptural Catechisms, intended for the use of the Methodist Societies. March 11—m

JOB PRINTING

Neatly executed at this office.

Consumptions, Coughs, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for, and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of the proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER, Princess-Anne, Md.

Nov. 20, 1827.

BANK NOTE EXCHANGE,

Corrected agreeably to the latest Baltimore papers.

Bank of the U. S. and Branches	par
MARYLAND.
Baltimore Banks	par
Annapolis ($5 and upwards)	par
Easton ($5 and upwards)	par
Frederick ($5 and upwards)	par
Frederick County Bank ($5 and upwards)	par
Bank Westminster ($5 and upwards)	par
Hager's Town ($5 and upwards)	par
Planters' Bk. P. G. Co ($5 and upwards)	par
Elkton	1
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA
Bank of Columbia	20
Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Georgetown	par
Union Bank Georgetown	par
Bank of Washington	par
Bank of the metropolis	par
Patriotic Bank	par
Bank of Alexandria	par
Farmers' Bank of Alexandria	par
Bank of Potomack	par
Mechanics Bank of Alexandria	par
VIRGINIA.
Bank of Virginia & Branches	par
Farmers Bank of Virginia and Branches	par
Bank of the Valley Winchester at	par
Do at Charlestown	par
Do at Leesburg	par
Do at Romney	[illegible]
Lynchburg Branches	[illegible]
Western Bank of Virginia at Wheeling	3[illegible]
DELAWARE
Bank of Delaware	[illegible]
Farmers' Bank	[illegible]
Wilmington & Brandywine	[illegible]
Commercial Bank of Smyrna	[illegible]
Branch Bank of Milford	[illegible]
PENNSYLVANIA
Philadelphia City Banks	par
York Bank	par
Carlisle Bank	par
Chambersburg Bank	par
Gettysburg Bank	par
Lancaster Bank	[illegible]
Harrisburg Bank	[illegible]
Chester County Bank	[illegible]
Germantown Bank	[illegible]
Farmers' Bank of Lancaster	[illegible]
NEW-YORK
City Banks	par
Albany Banks	1
NORTH-CAROLINA
Newbern Bank	5
Cape Fear Bank	5
State Bank and Branches	5
SOUTH-CAROLINA
Charleston Banks	2
GEORGIA
Bank of Savannah	2[illegible]
Bank of Augusta	2[illegible]
Bank of Darien	50
NEW JERSEY
New Brunswick Bank	1[illegible]
Trenton Banking Company	1[illegible]
Newark Bank	1[illegible]
State Bank at Camden	1[illegible]
Do Elizabethtown	1[illegible]
Do Trenton	no sale
Do Morristown	1[illegible]
Do New Brunswick	1[illegible]

THE PARTERRE.

VARIETY instils into the mind a relish for the useful and the sweet.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Mr. Editor,

If you think the following imitation of one of Moore's sacred Songs, merits occupying a space in your paper, you are at liberty to publish it.

"There is nothing true but Heaven."

This world is but a shifting stage,
A various colored curtain;
The book of life, from youth to age,
Has this inscription on each page,
"There's nought but Death that's certain."

Friendship's as rare as happiness,
The path through life's uneven;
And those who search this world for bliss,
Will search in vain, 'tis not in this,
But only found in Heaven.

Poor man surveys the chequer'd streaks
Of life's delusive curtain;
And thus with Reason's voice he speaks
While tears of wo descends his cheeks,
"There's nought but Death that's certain."

The glow of wealth, the wreath of fame
To man is often given;
Tho' soon he's left with but a name,
For dust returns to dust again;
"There's nothing true but heaven."

The Dirge of Happier Days.

I sing the dirge of happier days,
Of days forever fled;
When hope was young, and beauty's blaze
Shone brighter round my head.

Oh, there have been—they come no more—
Fair, tranquil, sunny hours,
In which the bard to bliss could soar,
And pluck unfading flowers.

Where are they now? Gone down the tide
That knows not a return;
Gone to that ocean—dark and wide,
Whose strength no man may spurn.

Why should I mourn? Is there no hope?
No anchor to life's barque?
Must spirit—soul, forever grope
Thro' regions drear and dark?

No: There's a compact and a light—
An anchor to despair;
A lamp that burns forever bright
Upon the sea of care.

The lamp's Religion, and the Word
Of God, the compass true;
The anchor, Hope—& Faith the cord
That holds the lamp in view.

The "ship of heaven" awhile may be
Tossed on the high-wrought wave;
But never—through eternity—
Shall find a mortal grave!

BOSTON BARD.

DANCING IN THE W. INDIES.

[From Coleridge's Six Months in the West Indies.]

Every Creole female loves dancing as she loves herself. From the quadrille of the lady down to the John-John of the negro, to dance is to be happy. The intense delight they take in it is the natural consequence of that suppression of animal vivacity which the climate and habits of the West Indies never fail to produce. The day is passed within the doors in langour and silence; there are no public amusements or occupations to engage their attention, and their domestic cares are few. A ball is therefore to them more than a ball, it is an awakener from insensibility, a summoner to society, a liberator of locked up affections, an inspirer of motion and tho't. Accordingly there is more artlessness, more passion than is usual with us in England; the soft dark eyes of a Creole girl seem to speak such devotion and earnestness of spirit that you cannot choose but make your partner your sweetheart of an hour; there is an attachment between you which is delightful, and you cannot resign it without regret. She is pale, it is true, but there is a beauty, as South said, in this very paleness, and her full yet delicate shape, is at once the shrine and censer of love, whence breathe

"The melting thought,
The kiss ambrosial, and the yielding smile."

Their dancing is an andante movement, but they never tire. Upborne with indefatigable toes, they will hold you seven or eight hours right on end, and think the minutes all two short. At four in the morning my last partner went; she had started at half past seven; she could no longer resist the cavernous yawns of her papa and mama, but it was reluctantly that she went;

"necdum satiata recessit."

I like a ball in the West Indies better than in England. True it is that you perspire, but then you have not to undergo the triumph of superior frigidity in your partner; she perspires in precise analogy with yourself. Windows, doors and jealousies are all thrown open to the breezes of night; flowers and ever-greens give life and verdancy to the walls, and the golden moon or diamond stars gleam thro' the many openings with that rich and sleepy splendour which good men will see hereafter in Paradise. It is my advice not to drink much; restrain yourself till twelve o'clock or so, and then eat some cold meat and absorb a pint of porter up, which is perfectly innoxious to the system, and more restorative to the animal spirit than punch, wine or sangaree. Above all do not be persuaded to swallow any wash tea; it gives neither strength or vivacity, but rather impairs both, [illegible] comfortably and comfortable. It is important to remark that your shirt collars should be loose round the neck, and the gills low; a mere white stock of thick Holland well starched with arrow roots is the best cravat: otherwise with the ordinary apparatus your cloth in an hour becomes a rope, and the entire focal sinks into a state of utter dissolution.

La philosophy est quelque chose, mais la Danse! said the French lady. Dear maids of the Antilles, windward and leeward, it is even so with you!—Sweet are ye at your breakfast of yams and plantains, sweet at your dinner of squash and guinea fowls, when ye perpetrate political economy, and urge humanity towards the slaves; but sweeter than your father's sugars are ye, dear heirs of the Caribbs, when ye come brilliant and happy to shine, like Houris, in the dance.

Profitable Horticulture.

Wyoming, Va., March 24.

A letter has been recently placed in our hands, written by Col. Adlum, near Georgetown, to a friend of mine, resident of Petersburg, from which I learn the following facts, developed under his management of the vine.

1st. That upon an average of ten years, after the three first, the vine produces 400 gallons per acre.

2d. That from two and a half acres in 1826, he realized from 11 to 1200 dollars, after deducting all expenses.

3d. That he considers its cultivation far more profitable than a crop of either tobacco, cotton or sugar, and not more expensive or troublesome to get it to market.—Am. Far.

Apricot—Plum—Peach.

The Apricot came originally from Armenia, whence it takes its name of Armeniaca, and was introduced into England in 1562.

The Plum is generally supposed to be a native of Asia; & the Damascene takes its name from Damascus, a city of Syria.

The Peach (Persica,) is a native of Persia, and was introduced from thence into Europe.—Forsyth.

HARVESTING GRAIN.

Professor Schoen, of Germany, says, every description of bread-corn, when intended for seed, should attain complete maturity before it is reaped; but on the contrary, when corn is to be converted into flour, it should be cut eight or nine days before it is fully ripe. Experience, says he, has proved, that such grains as from maturity detach themselves from the ears, always produce the finest plants, from being larger and more perfect in their conformation. The proper time for reaping corn, destined for the mill, is when the grains being pressed between the fingers, yield to it, and become a viscous mass. In some parts of Bohemia and Hungary, this practice has been kept a profound secret, because the flour so obtained was very much sought after and brought a higher price than the best flour from ripe corn.

POTATOES FOR SEED.

It seems to be a received opinion among the horticulturists of Great Britain, that professor Schoen's rule as to grain, should be reversed in regard to this root—that these must be gathered in an unripe state for seed, and fully matured for the table. It also appears from numerous experiments, that the upper or seed end of the tuber, will produce roots a fortnight earlier than the lower end, connected with the runner. From the same variety of seed, four successive crops may be obtained, at intervals of two weeks the seed being planted at the same time and on similar soil, viz: the first from the upper set of the unripe seed; the second from the bottom set of the same; the third from the top end of the ripe seed; and the fourth from the bottom set of the same.

From the American Farmer.

SILK, from the Worm fed on the common country Mulberry.

Fancy Grove, Illinois,
Mr. Skinner, Feb. 29, 1828.

Sir—Knowing your friendly disposition towards encouraging domestic economy and home manufacture, I have ventured to enclose to you a specimen of raw silk made from the black mulberry, which grows in great abundance in this state. We have manufactured a quantity of it into sewing silk of different colors, which has been tried by a number of tailors, and pronounced to be of the best quality. There are no persons here acquainted with silk raising sufficiently to judge of the difference between this and such as is made from the white mulberry.

We can make any quantity of this kind, and I am fully of opinion, that a family, where there are a number of young boys and girls, with some one to manage the business properly, can clothe themselves with silk, and with less labor than with cotton or flax.

Yours, very respectfully,
S. STILLMAN.

[This sample, like all the others we have seen of silk from worms fed on our country mulberry, is superior to imported silk.]

Contents of the American Farmer, of April 4th.

On Sheep Husbandry, with an Estimate for a Farm devoted exclusively to Sheep—On Agricultural Schools, by Professor Eaton, of the Rensselaer School at Troy—Duties on Wool, with a Table—Calculations on the proposed duties on Wool and Woollens—Maple Sugar—Manufacture of Cotton in the Southern States, No. XX—Early Vegetation on the E. S. of Md.—Cotton Spinning Machine inquired for—Philadelphia Society for Promoting Agriculture—Harvesting Grain—Seed Potatoes—Silk from Worms fed on the Common Mulberry—Apricot, Plum and Peach—Preventing against Birds taking Seeds out of the ground—Benefits of Greater Cider Mill—Medical Remarks on Marriage—Hunting—Quack Medicines—Report on Swaim's Panacea—Migration of Butterflies—On Expense—China Paper—Scraps—&c. &c. &c.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞ Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will hereafter be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞ Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞ Advertisements, if handed in by Monday night at 10 o'clock, shall appear in the paper next morning.

☞ Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞ All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court,
March 25th, 1828.

§§SEAL.§§ ON application of William Stewart, Admin'r. of Robert Hitch, late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of Robert Hitch, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 25th day of March, 1828.

WILLIAM STEWART, Adm'r. of R. Hitch, dec'd.

April 1, 1828. k

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court,
March 25th, 1828.

§§SEAL.§§ ON application of Michael B. Carroll, Adm'r. c. w. a. of Betsey Bayly, late of Somerset county, dec'd., it is ordered, that he give the notice required by law for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week, for the space of three successive weeks, in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans' court of said county in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of Betsey Bayly—late of Somerset county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 7th day of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under my hand this 25th day of March, 1828.

MICHAEL B. CARROLL, Adm'r. of B. Bayly, dec'd.

April 1. k

SHERIFF's SALE.

By virtue of a writ of venditioni exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Thomas Goddard against Elijah Culver, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit:—A part of a tract of land called Morris's Lot, containing 120 acres, more or less, and I hereby give notice that on Tuesday the 8th April next, at the Court-House door, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. I shall proceed to sell the life estate of said Culver, in and to the above mentioned land, to the highest and best bidder for ready cash.

ROBERT STEWART,
March 18 late Shff. S. C.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of 2 writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suits of John Horsey use of Eleanor Collier against Francis D. Nelson, and John J. Davis use of Marcellus Jones against Francis D. Nelson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: One schooner Remedy, burden about 58 tons, which I shall proceed to sell on the premises of said Nelson, on Friday the 2nd of May, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above writs and costs. Sale to commence at the hour of 11 o'clock A. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

April 8

MARSHAL's SALE.

By virtue of two writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for Maryland District, and to me directed, at the suit of John H. Bayly against George Jones of Robt. I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: One tract of land called Dashiell's Lot, containing 600 acres, more or less—Also one other tract of land called Workington, containing 500 acres, more or less, and I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, the above mentioned property, on Tuesday the 29th of April, (inst.) at the Court House door in Princess-Anne, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

HUMPHREY HUMPHREYS, Dep. Marshal for Som. county.

April 5, 1828—8j

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of John Turner against Priscilla Travers, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—One hundred acres of land called Stausway, which I shall proceed to sell on the premises, on Wednesday the 30th of April next, at the hour of 11 A. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

March 31—ap 8

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Elijah Christopher, Trustee for the sale of the real estate of William Stanford against Tubman Nelson, Cyrus Nelson and Francis D. Nelson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: Part of a tract of land called Newberry, being the land that said Nelson bought of Stanfords heirs—also, part of Chance, part of Monmouth, containing 215 acres, more or less, one negro man Levin, 1 do. Joe, 1 do. Clement, 1 do. Joshua, 1 do. Jack, 1 do. George 1 do. Charles, 1 do. David, 1 do. Jim, 1 woman Nancy, 1 do. Lucy, 1 do. Esther, 1 do. Leah, and 1 do. Ann, the property of Francis D. Nelson—also, 1 negro man Jim, 1 do. Henry and 1 girl Matilda, the property of Cyrus Nelson, which I shall proceed to sell on the premises on Friday the 25th of April, at Tubman Nelson's, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. at Francis D. Nelson's the same day at 1 o'clock P. M. and at Cyrus Nelson's the same day at 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidders for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

March 27th—Ap. 1 2

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Waters & Howard against John Crockett, I have taken in execution the following property, viz: Two horses, one colt, two yoke oxen, one wain cart, 10 head of sheep, 10 head of cattle, 8 stacks fodder, 2 ploughs, 2 harrows, and 2 beds and furniture, which will be sold to the highest and best bidder for cash, at the Court-House door, in Princess-Anne, on the 15th day of April next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock, P. M. to satisfy the above writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

April 1, 1828.

District of Maryland, to wit:

[L. S.] Be It Remembered, That on the 17th day of October, in the 51st year of the Independence of the U. States of America, LITTLETON AIRES, of the said district, hath deposited in this office the title of a Book, the right whereof he claims as author in the words following, to wit:

"TABLES OF DISCOUNT OR INTEREST, ON EVERY CENT,

From 1 to 100, from 1 month to 10 years; AND ON EVERY DOLLAR, From One to One Thousand, and ON Every Hundred from 1 to 6 Thousand, INCLUSIVE From 1 Day to 10 Years.

The whole computed at Six per Cent.

Together with examples shewing in what manner, by means of the tables, to ascertain the interest at Five, Seven and Eight per Cent."

In conformity to the act of the Congress of the United States, entitled "An Act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of maps, charts, and books, to the authors and proprietors of such works during the times therein mentioned." And also to the act, entitled 'An act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of maps, charts, and books, to the authors and proprietors of such copies, during the times therein mentioned,' and extending the benefits to the arts of designing, engraving, and etching historical and other prints.

PHILIP MOORE.
Clerk of the District of Maryland.

☞ The above work is for sale at the stores of Mr. G. M. Willing, Mr. Wm. Done, and Messrs. Johnston & Sudler, Princess-Anne. Also at the Village Herald office.

March 4. Price $1.

JOB PRINTING,
SUCH AS
Handbills, Cards, Blanks,
PAMPHLETS, &c.
Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms,
At the Office of the Village Herald.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court, and to me directed, at the suit of Charles Jones, use of Greenbury Toole, use of William Done against Matthias Wingate, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit:—Four head of cattle, 9 head of hogs, 3 beds and furniture, 1 corner cupboard, 1 bureau, 1 pine table, one walnut table, 1 horse, bridle and saddle, and 9¾ acres of land called 'Hazzard,' which I shall proceed to sell at public sale, on Saturday the 3d day of May next, between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 3 o'clock P. M. on the premises, to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the aforesaid writ.

GEO. DASHIELL, late Sff.

April 8. fjk

LIST OF LETTERS,

Remaining in the Post-Office at Princess-Anne, Md. on the 1st day of April, 1828.

A—Johnston Allen, Mrs Elizabeth Adams
B—Mrs Ann Beauchamp, Washington Bennet, Miss Margaret Boston, Capt Joseph Barkley, William Birkhead, Nany Seven Babed.
C—Henry R K Coston
D—Thomas E Dashiell, James W Dashiell, Littleton Dennis, sen.
E—Miss Sarah Elzey
F—John Fountain, Horatio Fishburn
G—Salathiel Griffith
H—Stephen Hersey, Adam Horsey, Littleton Harris, Rev. John Henry
J—Tabitha Jones, Doct Matthias Jones 2, Robert Jones of Robt. Alexander Jones, Mrs Louisa James, Mr Johnson
K—Henry R I H King, Planner King Mrs Sarah & Jane King
L—Levin K Leatherbury 2, Littleton Lankford
M—Mrs Mary Miles 2
O—Benjn Ogle
P—Mary Ann Powell, Stephen Parks
S—Secretary Somerset Lodge 6, Thomas Sudler
T—Mrs Gatty Turner, Littleton D. Teackle 2
W—George W. Wintz, John Watson, Rev Alward White

SAM'L. BROWN, Post Master.

April 8 jk

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court,
April 1st, 1828.

§§SEAL.§§ ON application of Esther Ballard, Adm'x. of William Ballard, late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that she give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of William Ballard, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 1st day of April 1828

ESTHER BALLARD, Adm'x. of W. Ballard, dec'd.

April 8. k

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court.
April 1th 1828.

§§SEAL.§§ ON application of Esther Ballard, Adm'x. of James Ballard, late of Somerset county dec'd, it is ordered, that she give the notice required by law for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week, for the space of three successive weeks, in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans court of said county in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of James Ballard late of Somerset county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th day of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under my hand this 1st day of April, 1828.

ESTHER BALLARD, Adm'x. of J. Ballard dec'd.

April 1828. k

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued by the Clerk of Somerset county court, and to me directed, Elijah Christopher, trustee for the sale of the real estate of Wm. Standford, against Tubman Nelson, will be sold at public sale on Friday the 25th of April next, the following property, to wit: Part of a tract of land called Newberry, being the land the said Tubman bought of Sandford's heirs, two head of horse, two yoke of oxen, 6 head of cattle, 15 head of hogs, 2 beds and furniture, 1 still cap and worm, which will be sold to the highest and best bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the above mentioned writs of Venditioni Exponas. Sale to commence at 10 o'clock A. M. on the premises of said T. Nelson.

ROBERT STEWART, Late Shff. of Som. C'y

March 27th, 1828. k

TRUSTEE's SALE.

BY virtue of a decree of the honorable the Chancellor of Maryland, the subscriber as Trustee will sell on Saturday the fifth day of April next, on the premises, all that house and lot of ground in the village of White-Haven, which belonged to William Waters late of Somerset county, deceased.

The terms of sale are, that the purchaser shall pay to the Trustee, on the day of sale, one tenth part of the purchase money, and the balance at the end of twelve months from said day, giving bond with approved security for the same—and upon the payment of the whole of the purchase money, the trustee will in virtue of said decree execute to the purchaser, or his or her heirs or assigns, a good and sufficient deed in fee simple, free and clear of all incumbrances from any person or persons claiming under or through the deceased. The sale to be held between the hours of one and five o'clock in the afternoon.

MARCELLUS JONES.

Feb. 29—M4 tt Trustee.

☞ The above sale is postponed until Saturday the 26th instant.

April 1, 1828. wkw

PUBLIC VENDUE.

BY virtue of an order from the honorable the Orphans Court of Somerset county, will be exposed to public sale, on Wednesday the 16th instant, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. at the late residence of WM. BOUNDS, (of Jas.) deceased, all the PERSONAL PROPERTY of said deceased, (negroes excepted;) consisting of a great variety of household and kitchen furniture; horses, oxen, cows, sheep and swine, with a lot of farming utensils.

Among the above property is one half of the SCHOONER Mary-Anne, lately built, of good materials, and well rigged—Burden about 70 tons.

Terms of sale—A credit of 6 months will be allowed upon all sums of, or over, five dollars, upon the purchasers giving notes with approved security, bearing interest from the day of sale. For sums under that amount the cash will be required.

ZIPPORAH BOUNDS, Ex'x.
JOHN BOUNDS, Ex'tor.

March 25—ap1

SHERIFF's SALE.

By virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Handy H. Irving (Trustee,) against George Waller, Jonathan Waller, and James Weatherly, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: Part of a tract of land called Gillis's Lot, containing 237 acres more or less, 1 negro man Charles, 1 do. Charles, 1 woman Sarah, 5 head of horses, 1 yoke of oxen and 6 head of cattle, seized and taken as the property of George Waller. Also, part of a tract of land called Waile's Retreat, containing 198½ acres more or less, 1 negro man Elias, 3 head of horses and 7 head of cattle seized and taken as the property of James Weatherly, which I shall proceed to sell at the Court-House door, on Tuesday the 29th day of April next, between the hours of 1 and 4 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

March 26—Ap. 1 14C

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Executrix of Thos. Byrd, against Moses C. Smith, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called Pembleton's Goodwill, containing 14 acres, more or less, with all the improvements thereto belonging, lying and being in the town of Salisbury, and occupied by Elijah Christopher, which I shall proceed to sell, on the premises, on Saturday the 26th of April next at the hour of 3 o'clock P.M. to the highest and best bidder to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

March 28—Ap. 1 1C

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court,
March 25th, 1828.

§§SEAL.§§ ON application of Sarah Walter, Executrix of James Walter, late of Somerset county, dec'd. it is ordered by the Court, that she give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the estate of said deceased, and that the same be published once a week for three weeks in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy. Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

THAT the subscriber of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of said county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of James Walter—late of Somerset county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof to the subscriber on or before the 7th of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under my hand this 25th of March, 1828.

SARAH WALTER, Ex'trix. of J. Walter, dec'd.

April 1. yy

BLANK BILLS OF SALE,
Printed on fine Paper,
FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD. TUESDAY MORNING, APRIL 22, 1828. NO. 4.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞ Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will hereafter be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞ Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞ Advertisements, if handed in by Monday night at 10 o'clock, shall appear in the paper next morning.

☞ Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞ All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court,
March 25th, 1828.

§§SEAL.§§ ON application of William Stewart, Admin'r. of Robert Hitch, late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of Robert Hitch, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 25th day of March, 1828.

WILLIAM STEWART, Adm'r. of R. Hitch, dec'd.

April 1, 1828. k

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued by the Clerk of Somerset county court, and to me directed, Elijah Christopher, trustee for the sale of the real estate of Wm. Standford, against Tubman Nelson, will be sold at public sale on Friday the 25th of April next, the following property, to wit: Part of a tract of land called Newberry, being the land the said Tubman bought of Sandford's heirs, two head of horse, two yoke of oxen, 6 head of cattle, 15 head of hogs, 2 beds and furniture, 1 still cap and worm, which will be sold to the highest and best bidder for cash, to pay and satisfy the above mentioned writs of Venditioni Exponas. Sale to commence at 10 o'clock A. M. on the premises of said T. Nelson.

ROBERT STEWART, Late Shff. of Som. C'y

March 27th, 1828. k

TRUSTEE's SALE.

BY virtue of a decree of the honorable the Chancellor of Maryland, the subscriber as Trustee will sell on Saturday the fifth day of April next, on the premises, all that house and lot of ground in the village of White-Haven, which belonged to William Waters late of Somerset county, deceased.

The terms of sale are, that the purchaser shall pay to the Trustee, on the day of sale, one tenth part of the purchase money, and the balance at the end of twelve months from said day, giving bond with approved security for the same—and upon the payment of the whole of the purchase money, the trustee will in virtue of said decree execute to the purchaser, or his or her heirs or assigns, a good and sufficient deed in fee simple, free and clear of all incumbrances from any person or persons claiming under or through the deceased. The sale to be held between the hours of one and five o'clock in the afternoon.

MARCELLUS JONES.

Feb. 29—M4 tt Trustee.

☞ The above sale is postponed until Saturday the 26th instant.

April 1, 1828. wkw

SHERIFF's SALE.

By virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Handy H. Irving (Trustee,) against George Waller, Jonathan Waller, and James Weatherly, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: Part of a tract of land called Gillis's Lot, containing 237 acres more or less, 1 negro man Charles, 1 do. Charles, 1 woman Sarah, 5 head of horses, 1 yoke of oxen and 6 head of cattle, seized and taken as the property of George Waller. Also, part of a tract of land called Waile's Retreat, containing 198½ acres more or less, 1 negro man Elias, 3 head of horses and 7 head of cattle seized and taken as the property of James Weatherly, which I shall proceed to sell at the Court-House door, on Tuesday the 29th day of April next, between the hours of 1 and 4 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

March 26—Ap. 1 14C

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Executrix of Thos. Byrd, against Moses C. Smith, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called Pembleton's Goodwill, containing 14 acres, more or less, with all the improvements thereto belonging, lying and being in the town of Salisbury, and occupied by Elijah Christopher, which I shall proceed to sell, on the premises, on Saturday the 26th of April next at the hour of 3 o'clock P.M. to the highest and best bidder to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

March 28—Ap. 1 1C

District of Maryland, to wit:

[L. S.] Be It Remembered, That on the 17th day of October, in the 51st year of the Independence of the U. States of America, LITTLETON AIRES, of the said district, hath deposited in this office the title of a Book, the right whereof he claims as author in the words following, to wit:

"TABLES OF DISCOUNT OR INTEREST, ON EVERY CENT,

From 1 to 100, from 1 month to 10 years; AND ON EVERY DOLLAR, From One to One Thousand, and ON Every Hundred from 1 to 6 Thousand, INCLUSIVE From 1 Day to 10 Years.

The whole computed at Six per Cent.

Together with examples shewing in what manner, by means of the tables, to ascertain the interest at Five, Seven and Eight per Cent."

In conformity to the act of the Congress of the United States, entitled "An Act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of maps, charts, and books, to the authors and proprietors of such works during the times therein mentioned." And also to the act, entitled 'An act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of maps, charts, and books, to the authors and proprietors of such copies, during the times therein mentioned,' and extending the benefits to the arts of designing, engraving, and etching historical and other prints.

PHILIP MOORE.
Clerk of the District of Maryland.

☞ The above work is for sale at the stores of Mr. G. M. Willing, Mr. Wm. Done, and Messrs. Johnston & Sudler, Princess-Anne. Also at the Village Herald office.

March 4. Price $1.

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court,
March 25th, 1828.

§§SEAL.§§ ON application of Michael B. Carroll, Adm'r. c. w. a. of Betsey Bayly, late of Somerset county, dec'd., it is ordered, that he give the notice required by law for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week, for the space of three successive weeks, in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans' court of said county in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of Betsey Bayly—late of Somerset county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 7th day of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under my hand this 25th day of March, 1828.

MICHAEL B. CARROLL, Adm'r. of B. Bayly, dec'd.

April 1. k

MARSHAL's SALE.

By virtue of two writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for Maryland District, and to me directed, at the suit of John H. Bayly against George Jones of Robt. I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: One tract of land called Dashiell's Lot, containing 600 acres, more or less—Also one other tract of land called Workington, containing 500 acres, more or less, and I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, the above mentioned property, on Tuesday the 29th of April, (inst.) at the Court House door in Princess-Anne, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

HUMPHREY HUMPHREYS, Dep. Marshal for Som. county.

April 5, 1828—8j

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of John Turner against Priscilla Travers, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—One hundred acres of land called Stausway, which I shall proceed to sell on the premises, on Wednesday the 30th of April next, at the hour of 11 A. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

March 31—ap 8

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Elijah Christopher, Trustee for the sale of the real estate of William Stanford against Tubman Nelson, Cyrus Nelson and Francis D. Nelson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: Part of a tract of land called Newberry, being the land that said Nelson bought of Stanfords heirs—also, part of Chance, part of Monmouth, containing 215 acres, more or less, one negro man Levin, 1 do. Joe, 1 do. Clement, 1 do. Joshua, 1 do. Jack, 1 do. George 1 do. Charles, 1 do. David, 1 do. Jim, 1 woman Nancy, 1 do. Lucy, 1 do. Esther, 1 do. Leah, and 1 do. Ann, the property of Francis D. Nelson—also, 1 negro man Jim, 1 do. Henry and 1 girl Matilda, the property of Cyrus Nelson, which I shall proceed to sell on the premises on Friday the 25th of April, at Tubman Nelson's, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. at Francis D. Nelson's the same day at 1 o'clock P. M. and at Cyrus Nelson's the same day at 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidders for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

March 27th—Ap. 1 2

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of 2 writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed; at the suits of John Horsey use of Eleanor Collier against Francis D. Nelson, and John J. Davis use of Marcellus Jones against Francis D. Nelson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: One schooner Remedy, burden about 58 tons, which I shall proceed to sell on the premises of said Nelson, on Friday the 2nd of May, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above writ, and costs. Sale to commence at the hour of 11 o'clock A. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

April 8

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court,
March 25th, 1828.

§§SEAL.§§ ON application of Sarah Walter, Executrix of James Walter, late of Somerset county, dec'd. it is ordered by the Court, that she give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the estate of said deceased, and that the same be published once a week for three weeks in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy. Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

THAT the subscriber of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of said county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of James Walter—late of Somerset county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof to the subscriber on or before the 7th of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under my hand this 25th of March, 1828.

SARAH WALTER, Ex'trix. of J. Walter, dec'd.

April 1. yy

BLANK BILLS OF SALE,
Printed on fine Paper,
FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court, and to me directed, at the suit of Charles Jones, use of Greenbury Toole, use of William Done against Matthias Wingate, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit:—Four head of cattle, 9 head of hogs, 3 beds and furniture, 1 corner cupboard, 1 bureau, 1 pine table, one walnut table, 1 horse, bridle and saddle, and 9¾ acres of land called 'Hazzard,' which I shall proceed to sell at public sale, on Saturday the 3d day of May next, between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 3 o'clock P. M. on the premises, to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the aforesaid writ.

GEO. DASHIELL, late Sff.

April 8. fjk

LIST OF LETTERS,

Remaining in the Post-Office at Princess-Anne, Md. on the 1st day of April, 1828.

A—Johnston Allen, Mrs Elizabeth Adams
B—Mrs Ann Beauchamp, Washington Bennet, Miss Margaret Boston, Capt Joseph Barkley, William Birkhead, Nany Seven Babed.
C—Henry R K Coston
D—Thomas E Dashiell, James W Dashiell, Littleton Dennis, sen.
E—Miss Sarah Elzey
F—John Fountain, Horatio Fishburn
G—Salathiel Griffith
H—Stephen Hersey, Adam Horsey, Littleton Harris, Rev. John Henry
J—Tabitha Jones, Doct Matthias Jones 2, Robert Jones of Robt. Alexander Jones, Mrs Louisa James, M Johnson
K—Henry R I H King, Planner King Mrs Sarah & Jane King
L—Levin K Leatherbury 2, Littleton Lankford
M—Mrs Mary Miles 2
O—Benjn Ogle
P—Mary Ann Powell, Stephen Parks
S—Secretary Somerset Lodge 6, Thomas Sudler
T—Mrs Gatty Turner, Littleton D. Teackle 2
W—George W. Wintz, John Watson, Rev Alward White

SAM'L. BROWN, Post Master.

April 8 jk

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court,
April 1st, 1828.

§§SEAL.§§ ON application of Esther Ballard, Adm'x. of William Ballard, late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that she give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of William Ballard, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 1st day of April 1828

ESTHER BALLARD, Adm'x. of W. Ballard, dec'd.

April 8. k

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court.
April 1th 1828.

§§SEAL.§§ ON application of Esther Ballard, Adm'x. of James Ballard, late of Somerset county dec'd, it is ordered, that she give the notice required by law for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week, for the space of three successive weeks, in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans court of said county in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of James Ballard late of Somerset county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th day of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under my hand this 1st day of April, 1828.

ESTHER BALLARD, Adm'x. of J. Ballard dec'd.

April 1828. k

JOB PRINTING,
SUCH AS
Handbills, Cards, Blanks,
PAMPHLETS, &c.
Thankfully received and neatly printed on moderate terms,
At the Office of the Village Herald.

BANK NOTE EXCHANGE;

Corrected agreeably to the latest Baltimore papers.

Bank of the U. S. and Branches	par
MARYLAND.
Baltimore Banks	par
Annapolis	par
Easton	par
Frederick	par
Frederick County Bank	par
Bank Westminster	par
Hager's Town	par
Planters' Bk. P. G. Co	par
($5 and upwards.)
Elkton	1
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA
Bank of Columbia	20
Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Georgetown	par
Union Bank Georgetown	par
Bank of Washington	par
Bank of the metropolis	par
Patriotic Bank	par
Bank of Alexandria	par
Farmers' Bank of Alexandria	par
Bank of Potomack	par
Mechanics Bank of Alexandria	par
VIRGINIA.
Bank of Virginia & Branches	par
Farmers' Bank of Virginia and Branches	par
Bank of the Valley Winchester at	par
Do at Charlestown	par
Do at Leesburg	par
Do at Romney	½
Lynchburg Branches	½
Western Bank of Virginia at Wheeling	3½
DELAWARE
Bank of Delaware	½
Farmers' Bank	½
Wilmington & Brandywine	½
Commercial Bank of Smyrna	½
Branch Bank of Milford	½
PENNSYLVANIA
Philadelphia City Banks	par
York Bank	par
Carlisle Bank	par
Chambersburg Bank	par
Gettysburg Bank	par
Lancaster Bank	½
Harrisburg Bank	½
Chester County Bank	½
Germantown Bank	½
Farmers' Bank of Lancaster	½
NEW-YORK
City Banks	par
Albany Banks	1
NORTH-CAROLINA
Newbern Bank	5
Cape Fear Bank	5
State Bank and Branches	5
SOUTH-CAROLINA
Charleston Banks	2
GEORGIA
Bank of Savannah	2½
Bank of Augusta	2½
Bank of Darien	30
NEW JERSEY
New Brunswick Bank	1½
Trenton Banking Company	1½
Newark Bank	1½
State Bank at Camden	1½
Do Elizabethtown	1½
Do Trenton	no sale
Do Morristown	1½
Do New Brunswick	1½

TRUSTEE's SALE.

BY virtue of a decree of Somerset County Court, in this case, the subscriber will offer at public sale, to the highest and best bidder, on the premises, on Thursday the 8th of May next, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. on the premises, all of the following parts of two tracts of land subject to the widow's dower, to wit: part of a tract of land called Shadwell's Chance and part of Shadwell, containing 224½ acres of land, more or less, situated in the county aforesaid, on the south east side of Nanticoke river, with the improvements and appurtenances thereto belonging.—

The terms of sale will be, a credit of twelve months, with interest from the day of sale, to be secured by a bond or bonds given to the Trustee, with good security, upon the payment of which and ratification of the sale, the Trustee is directed by the said decree to execute to the purchaser or purchasers, his, her or their heirs, a deed for the aforesaid property, conveying the title of the complainants and defendant in the premises.

THOS. JONES, (of John,)

April 15 at Trustee.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Zadock Long, use of William Roach, against Levin W. Ballard, James Wilson and James Polk, one at the suit of Jeremiah Y. Dashiell against Levin W. Ballard I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—Part of a tract of land called 'Dashiell's Lot,' containing 332 acres, more or less; part of Sandy Ridge & Fitzwaters containing 150 acres more or less, seized as the property of Levin W. Ballard, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest bidder for cash, at the Court-House door, in Princess-Anne, on the 6th day of May next, between the hours of 1 and 4 o'clock, P. M. to satisfy the above writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

April 15, 1828. ws

PROPOSALS BY BENJ. EDES,
FOR PUBLISHING IN BALTIMORE,

THE EMERALD,

And Baltimore Literary Gazette.

The Emerald and Baltimore Literary Gazette will be published every Saturday, in quarto form, super-royal sheet, with new long primer type, and in superior style—the editorial department to be under the direction of several gentlemen of acknowledged talents.

The want of a paper of the nature proposed, will be allowed by every citizen of this metropolis; nor has the proprietor, in his efforts, been so much prompted by a desire of gain, as by a hope of encouraging literature throughout this section of the Union. Confident of the approbation of all persons of taste, he therefore proposes the publication of the Emerald & pledges himself that no effort shall be wanting on his part to please the pulibc in general.

The Emerald shall contain the choicest selections of miscellaneous literature, from the most esteemed periodicals of this country and Europe; and the strictest attention shall be observed as to their moral tendency. Its contents shall be—Tales, original and selected; moral, humorous and scientific Essays; original and selected Poetry; Biographical Sketches of distinguished worthies; Anecdotes, &c.—The original matter will be furnished by individuals who have through the medium of our best literary productions, established themselves in public favor. Also, interesting items of foreign and domestic intelligence: critical notices of passing events; the drama, new publications, and a correct description of the prevailing fashions, both abroad and at home.

It may be worthy of notice, that the Emerald shall be in no way whatever connected with either of the great political parties; and that no communication that has a tendency, either directly or indirectly, to invade the sanctuary of domestic retirement, shall find admission into its columns; though they will always be open to an honest discussion of any question that does not tend to inflame personal or party animosity.

TERMS.—Price of subscription four dollars per annum, one half to be paid on delivery of the first number, and the balance at the expiration of six months. Postmasters and other persons of the inland towns, procuring six subscribers and becoming responsible for the payment, will be entitled to one copy gratis. When 400 Subscribers are obtained the Emerald will be issued.

☞ Subscribers will be received at the Office of the Village Herald.

March 25 eos

EASTMAN'S MANUFACTORY OF

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,

At No. 36 Pratt street, opposite the United Hotel, Baltimore.

THE subscriber would inform the public, that he has on hand a large assortment of Gideon Davis' Improved Patent PLOUGHS of cast & wrought Shares, with & without Coulters; Hill-side, Substratum and Shovel Ploughs; a large stock of Cultivators of superior quality; Harrows; Swingletrees, double & single; Cornshellers and Washing Machines. Also on hand as usual, his Patent Cylindrical Straw Cutters, which have given universal satisfaction, and Brown's Vertical Wool Spinners; Cast-steel Axes; Grubbing Hoes, Picks and Mattocks, which he warrants of superior quality; very superior Oil Stones, saturated with oil—all of which will be sold at reasonable prices for cash or acceptances in this city.

His very extensive sales of the above articles for the last 3 years is an evidence of the general satisfaction he has given to his numerous customers, and he flatters himself that with the increased pains he has taken in selecting his timber and other materials this season, and also to improve as much as possible on the workmanship of his implements, that he will continue to merit the public patronage which has been so liberally bestowed and for which he takes this opportunity to express his grateful thanks.

Orders by mail (post-paid) will receive prompt attention.

JONATHAN S. EASTMAN.

N. B. On hand, 9 bushels good MILLET SEED, which will be sold low. FRUIT TREES will be furnished to orders. Implements ordered by any customers which I do not keep on hand will be carefully selected and furnished to the orders. March 11. tx

JUST RECEIVED

AND FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE, a number of

Methodist Hymn Books,
Wesley's Sermons, in 2 volumes.
Also, Scriptural Catechisms, intended for the use of the Methodist Societies. March 11—eo

PRO PATRIA ET HERITATE.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 1828.

PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.
ANDREW JACKSON.
For Vice President.
JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties
Thomas R. Carroll.

THE BARGAIN.

If you desire to see an important account of the contract, bargain and sale, between Messrs. Adams and Clay, read the following extract from the British Annual Register. The gentleman who first sent it to the American press says:

"We have lately seen that Mr. Clay has published a book of 60 pages to disprove what, the extract I enclose, from the Annual Register of England, for the year '25, will show, has become already a matter of history. I hope it will give pleasure to the patriots concerned to find, that their infamy will go down to posterity in American story."

"It is not impossible that Mr. Canning may have been reading the account of this bargain and sale the day before Mr. Gallatin presented himself to negotiate on American affairs, under the authority of these men. If so, it is not to be wondered at, that he should reason jestingly upon American pretensions. But I hope your battle for the Presidency is already over, and that your victory may be as complete in public, as the victory of the 8th of January was in war."

From the Annual Register of 1825.

HISTORY OF EUROPE,

Chapt. 14, pages 195—196.

U. STATES' ELECTION OF A PRESIDENT.

In the United States the public attention was occupied, by the election of a President, more than by any other event. The candidates were: John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State; Mr. Clay, Speaker of the House of Representatives; Mr. Crawford, Secretary of the Treasury; and General Jackson, distinguished by the cheap renown of being the only American General, who in the last war, had been engaged with British troops, and yet had escaped the disgrace of total defeat. The first was supported strenuously, by the New England States; the second, by the western States; the third, by Virginia; and the fourth, by the States of the South. Electors being chosen, by the different States, their votes were returned to Congress, when the numbers were found to be as follows:

For General Jackson, 101: Mr. Adams, 82; Mr. Crawford, 41; Mr. Clay, 37. As no candidate had obtained the requisite majority of the whole number of votes, the election, for the second time in American History, devolved upon the House of Representatives; who, in this case, vote by ballot, the delegation of each State having one vote. Mr. Clay it was understood, transferred his votes to Mr. Adams, upon an agreement, that, if Mr. Adams obtained the Presidency, Mr. Clay should be Secretary of State, and by this union of strength, Mr. Adams was enabled to triumph.

The 9th of February was the day appointed for the determination of the contest: and contrary to all previous expectation, the election was decided by the first balloting; Mr. Adams having received the votes of thirteen States; General Jackson, the votes of seven; and Mr. Crawford the votes of four. The states who voted for Mr. Adams, were: Maine, New-Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, New-York, Maryland, Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri, Louisiana; for General Jackson: New Jersey, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Indiana; for Mr. Crawford: Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia.

The division in the different colleges, was very equal: in the New-York college, for example, Mr. Adams received 18 votes, Mr. Crawford, 1, and General Jackson, 5.—In first Kentucky college, Mr. Adams received 8 votes, General Jackson 4. In Ohio, Mr. Adams had 10, General Jackson 2, Mr. Crawford 2, in the Maryland college, Mr. Adams received 5 out of 9 votes. In the North Carolina college, Mr. Crawford received 10, General Jackson 2, and Mr. Adams 1 vote.

As Jackson counted among his partisans, the whole rabble* of the country, their rage at their defeat was extreme; and it was the more violent, because their candidate had unquestionably, a Civil majority of the people on his side, and must have succeeded, if the choice had been by the direct votes of the Electors.

*For rabble read people, it will then be correct. However, the intelligent reader will bear in mind that in a country where the government is manarchical it is customary to call the people the rabble, filthy, &c. while they who hold the power claim the appellation of nobility—which is smartly imitated by the Coalition in this country.

Adams' native place.

THE THING IS SETTLED.

The editors of the Boston Commercial Gazette, who have heretofore pursued pretty much the same course on the subject of the Presidential election as our friend of the Baltimore Gazette—publishing, with impartiality, articles on both sides of the question—finding that they have given satisfaction, to neither side, have resolved to publish nothing hereafter, on the subject. It will be seen however, from the following extract, which we make from their Address to the public, that altho' they are perfectly indifferent as to the result of the election, they have very little doubt of its resulting in favor of General Jackson.

Balt. Rep.

"It is well known, (say they) that we have no partiality or affection for John Quincy Adams. We would not lift a finger to elevate him, or his opponent, Gen. Jackson, to the Presidency. But notwithstanding we severe a dislike for both these distinguished individuals, we cannot, nor do we wish to, disguise the fact, that we are deeply impressed with the opinion, that the next President of the United States will be Andrew Jackson. We do not say that his election will be either a curse or a blessing to the country; but that we can perceive in current events, as some of the political magicians say, we firmly and sincerely believe. And we think the people of New England ought to be prepared for so important a change: we say important, for they will most assuredly so consider it."

THE TARIFF.

Without going into the question of the Tariff generally, we will say, that we are opposed, most decidedly opposed, to the Tariff proposed by the Eastern members of Congress. We hold, that the grain-growing states have rights as well as the manufacturing states, and that those rights should not be sacrificed, in order to create a hotbed for Eastern manufactures.—The eastern members of Congress say—"Give us more protection for our woollen manufactures." The members from other states, where the woollen manufactures don't exist, say—" We think you have protection enough already, but we will give you something more, provided you will allow us some protection for our interests. You want protection for Woollens—we want protection for iron, Hemp and Whiskey—give us the one, and we will give you the other." Old not this the Yankees want agree to—they want monopoly—they want protection for all their interests, but are unwilling to give us protection for any of ours. Now, if the prohibitory system is to be adopted in this country, we say, let it be general, fair, and impartial—let the interests of the Southern and Middle States be protected as well as those of the Eastern States—let not the agricultural interests of Maryland be sacrificed to the manufacturing interest of Massachusetts.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

Who is there that has not heard Gen. Jackson and his friends denounced as the enemies of internal improvements? They have a majority in both houses of the present Congress, and what has been the result? An act, making appropriations for internal improvements, being the first ever passed under that title, has received the sanction of the House of Representatives, by a vote of 124 to 57: Yes, more than two thirds of this Jackson House are in favor of this part of the American system. There has never been so much unanimity on the subject since the origin of the government.

What will Mr. Clay and his friends do for hobbies when the Jackson men prove by their votes, the falsehood of all the imputations cast upon them relative to the tariff and internal improvements? They will have no hobby left in the carte of my mulatto servant, named Billy, who, it is pretended, was taken prisoner at Fort Lee in 1776.

The period when these letters were first printed will be recollected, and what were the impressions they were intended to produce on the public mind. It was then supposed to be of some consequence to strike at the integrity of the Commander of the American army, and to paint his inclinations as at variance with his representations. And at the period of crisis in the affairs of America having occurred, the same weapon has been resorted to, to impeach my character and deceive the people.

The letters in question have the dates, addresses, and signatures here following:

"New-York, June 12th 1776, To Mr. Lund Washington, at Mount Vernon, Fairfax county, Virginia." "G. W."

"Jan 14th 1776, Cooke, Esq. at the Hon. Benedict Calvert's Esq. Mount Airy, Maryland," June 18th, 1776."

"George Washington."

"New-York, July 8th, 1776. To Mr. Lund Washington, at Mount Vernon, Fairfax county, Virginia." "G. W."

"New-York, July 15th 1776. To Mr. Lund Washington Esq. Sc." "G. W."

"New-York, July 22nd, 1776. To Mr. Lund Washington, &c." "G. W."

"New-York, July 29nd, 1776. To Mr. Lund Washington, &c." "G. W."

"June 24th, 1776. To Mr. Washington." "G. W."

At the time when these letters first appeared, it was notorious to the army immediately under my command, and particularly to the gentlemen attached to my person, that my mulatto man Billy had never been out of Jersey, or in the Jerseys, at any time, since the war. These well known facts made it necessary, during the war, to place the public opinion to the proper key, by an expl a declaration of mine, and a firm reliance on my fellow-citizens, and the assurance of those, who gave to their confidence in me, rendered it alike unnecessary to take any formal notice of the revival of the imposition during my civil administration. But as I cannot know how soon a more serious event may occur, in that which will this day take place, I have thought it a duty that I owe to myself, to my country, and to truth, now to detail the circumstances above recited, and to add my solemn declaration, that the letters herein described are a base forgery, and that I never saw or heard of them until they appeared in print.

The present letter I commit to your care, and leave it may be deposited in the office of the Department of State, as a testimony of the truth to the present generation and to posterity.

Accept, I pray you, the sincere esteem and affectionate regard of,

Dear Sir,

Your obedient,

GEO. WASHINGTON.

Timothy Pickering, Sec'y of State.

From the Philadelphia Mercury.

Memoranda for Republicans against the election of John Q. Adams.

He was born an aristocrat by his father, John Adams, the king of the Reign of Terror, who for his violence and tyranny was obliged to leave the Presidency by an indignant people.

He has spent all his life among Kings, Queens, Emperors and Princes, and has no sympathies for a republican people; and thinks his family was created for sovereigns power, according to a caste of government adopted by his father.

He wrote a book on Court Etiquette and Ceremonies, and recommended it to the people as the proper mode of conducting

THE PARTERRE.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

FRIENDSHIP.

The pleasures which from mutual Friendship flow—
Friendship, great source of happiness below:
Its soothing pow'rs, its emanations kind,
That cheer the griev'd, and bless the exulting mind,
That add new pleasures to prosperity,
And ease the yoke of rugged penury,
Give all true joys that individuals find,—
I sing. If  but approve my lays,
I ask no more—my labour 's crown'd with bays.
Of Friendship, then, sweet power! O let me sing,
Of every pleasure, every bliss the spring.
Youth, sanguine youth, by love of honour fir'd,
And with keen sensibility inspir'd,
With noble zeal, ignoble means condemn,
And vice and fraud with brave disgust contemn;
But, ah! how oft when those familiar grow,
These noble indignations cease to glow.
Things grown conversant cease, at length, t' offend,
Things that give no offence to pardon tend:
The pardon'd crime the mind no longer spurns,
And pardon, oft, to commendation turns.
If they commend, then imitate succeeds:
They imitate—surpass the blackest deeds,
If next propos'd. Thus youth are hurried on,
Till ev'ry hope of reformation's gone.—
See Friendship's value here! To search the mind:
To what averse it is, to what inclin'd;
What nature works, what art has yet subdu'd,
How far on reason passion may intrude,
How inclination prompts to things denied,
And how necessity can yield to pride,
To mark: The docile heart to warm, t' advise,
To strengthen virtue and t' enervate vice,
To find an antidote for every bane,
To point the way to Virtue's blissful fane,
To show the snare, the cruel snare that 's laid,
Ere they be irretrievably betray'd:—
These, and such acts as these, a friend might find
T' abolish vice and save the sinking mind.
Hence Virtue may by Friendship be sustain'd,
And vice and fell depravity restrain'd.
And since man 's fallible while he is here;
Since life 's a sea where rocks and gulfs appear,
In which deluded mortals often sail,
With Hope's intrepid sheet and Passion's gale;
Since oft by these in whirling eddies tost,
The inexperienc'd mariner is lost;
Through all his life, in every hour and age,
In ev'ry circumstance and ev'ry stage,
He stands in need of friendly admonition;
A friend is still a precious acquisition.
When Phœbus' rays oblique and weak descend,
And naked groves in frozen ether bend,
When rain and sleet and dire indignant snows
Drift o'er the plain, and blust'ring Boreas blows,
When the distress'd, with pain and hunger wan,
His fuel consum'd, his whole provision gone,
His tender wife, his babe upon her breast,
Shiv'ring with cold, with haggard want oppress'd,
Desponds in speechless agony and grief,
And sends his half-clad child to beg relief,
How may a friend diffuse sweet blessings round,
And pour the balm that heals each bleeding wound,
His smile to ev'ry aching heart give ease,
And, grateful, seem to warm th' indignant breeze:
His sighs, like healing medicine, do good;
His words are balm and solitary food.
Here mutual pleasures, mutual joys attend,
Both him who finds, and him who is a friend;
Who kindly is reliev'd, and who relieves,
Finds each his pleasure, each his joy receives.
If Spring had clad the plain with fragrant flow'rs,
And early warblers cheer'd the vernal bow'rs;
If op'ning greens made sweet the sighing breeze,
And all were pleasure, harmony and ease;
Without a friend a solitary wild
Were ev'ry scene with gloomy sadness fill'd.
The breeze would cease its redolence t' impart,
The day were dark and desolate the heart;
The greens would wither, flow'rs in lustre fade;
Musick were dead, and void the breezy shade.
But with a Friend—sweet effluence breathe around;
Pleasing is ev'ry sight, and every sound;
The clear, blue sky above, the vale below,
And silver streaming rills in lucid lustre glow.
The cottage see, where dwells the devious pair,
Whose penury exacts their stinted fare:
Though solitude stretch forth her brooding wings,
And every day incessant labour brings,
If Friendship dwell beneath their humble shed,
And sympathy its soothing cordials spread,
Felicity is theirs. The tender dame,
Stinting herself of what her senses claim
To feed her mate, finds more consummate joys,
Than those which from a Crœsus' riches rise.
Adversity with all her Gorgon train,
Pale, haggard want, and grief and tort'ring pain,
While Friendship last will ineffectual prove;
(But this is Friendship soften'd into Love.)
The hapless wretch, sick languishing in bed,
Though poverty stand hov'ring o'er his head,
Though dumb with grief, if he but find a friend,
Pleasure is his and all his miseries end.
Or see the dome where wealth and grandeur reign,
Where gaudy affluence spreads her rich domain:
Though on the board superfluous dainties shine,
Though goblets glow replete with sparkling wine,
Though princely guests the lordly tenant own,
Though pond'rous chests with hoarded treasures groan,
Though fretted gold adorn the splendid walls,
And melting musick tremble through the halls,
Most wretched still of wretches is the lord,
For all his wealth will not one Friend afford.
For what avail his dainties, stores and pelf,
When none enjoys their pleasure but himself?
Abandon'd by the world with all his store,
Will not his riches make his miseries more?
If sickness come, will all his wealth give ease?
If grief assail his mind, will it appease?
No:—when compar'd with those soft soothing smiles,
(Those of a Friend) which grief and pain beguiles,
As when the sun obscures the lunar sphere,
His comforts low contemptible appear.
If dire assassins, bent on plunder, join,
To shed his blood, to share his wealth combine,
No Friend to interpose or to inform,
He meets the vengeance of the gath'ring storm.
To Friendship, hence, our very lives we owe;
A Friend may ward us from the threat'ning blow.
The peasant see, to Pallas quite unknown,
In nature's genuine state to manhood grown;
Blest with his Friends, he careless strolls along,
With uncouth whistle and discordant song,
Supremely bless'd; and talks of farms and folds,
Of splendid crops of different soils and moulds:
Not more unsullied blessings could he find,
Were he possessed of Plato's mighty mind.
Or see the Philomath by arts refin'd,
With noble, deep, and comprehensive mind,
By Newton's eagle eye he 's taught to rise,
And measure orbs that flit around the skies,
By Addison's divine intelligence,
To weigh the mighty schemes of Providence:
While through his mind in purest order runs
The glow of Egypt's philosophick sons:
When Pythagoras speaks, the God of light
Beams from the mind of the great Stagerite.
Though knowledge, deed, and science thus, combin'd,
Purge his great soul and elevate his mind,
What would his mental stores avail, if he
Had not a Friend these mental stores to see?
If he were left all friendless and alone,
His pow'rs of mind unheeded or unknown,
As flow'rets sweet that only scent the wood,
He 'd lose the happiness of doing good.
And would his heaps of intellectual store,
Could Zeno's maxims, Epicurus' lore,
The soft philanthropy of Socrates,
Or all the Christian world's philosophies
Alleviate his loss, or make amends
For this great want, the want of having friends?
Behold the land by gracious Heav'n design'd
A safe asylum for oppress'd mankind,
Columbia see, where peace and freedom reign,
Where health and plenty bless the cheerful swain;
Where different climes to different fruits give rise,
From hyperborean, to th' antarctick skies;
Where vallies smile with meads of fragrant flow'rs,
And breezy hills with cool salubrious bow'rs,
Where affluent cities sons of science yield,
And sons of industry the fertile field,
Here cleansing currents glide the hills beneath;
There spicy groves their sweet effluvia breathe;
Here from the vale the lofty turret tow'rs;
There groan with gold the wealth-commanding shores,
And liberty like bright Apollo's ray,
Gives beauty to the land, and lustre to the day;
Yet what but private Friendship's silken chains,
This publick good and harmony maintains?
Should Friendship fly and fell discords arise,
Each would his neighbour hate, contemn, despise;
From private scenes the dire effects would steal,
Till it would reach and blast the publick weal;
The publick weal depends on private mood;
For private harmony is publick good.
From Friendship, then, from Friendship's silken ties
Our nation's peace and happiness arise:
If each should cease to have or be a Friend,
Our nation sinks; Columbia's glories end.
That, Friendship, hail thou pow'r divinely bright,
Replete with bliss and glowing with delight!
At thy approach, see, pain and trouble fly,
And rising pleasures fill the beaming eye.
The bliss-creating smile, propitious pow'r!
Illumes pale melancholy's ebon bow'r;
Thou bid'st affliction's social bosom rise,
And wip'st all tears from drooping sorrow's eyes,
Where'er thou mov'st, where'er thy footsteps stay,
Around thy head the Loves ecstatick play;
Pity attends with soft endearing wiles,
And Charity with soul-enliv'ning smiles;
While far aloof, dread grief and tort'ring care,
Despondency and pain, and fell despair
To their abodes precipitately fly,
Nor daring to disturb thy general joy.
Thy pow'r, sweet nymph! can all our ills assuage,
Can gladen youth and bless declining age;
Can ease our wants, and cheer our latest breath,
Can mitigate disease and smooth the bed of death.

Z.

RECONCILIATION.

A few days since, a Mr. Twibill was brought into the New York Police Court on the complaint of Miss Matilda his daughter, a young lady of 17, attached to the Chatham Theatre. It appeared that Mr. T. was much dissatisfied with the profession chosen by his daughter, and, in the course of a dispute on the subject, had inflicted a severe blow upon her face He was ordered to find bail in the sum of $250. Mr. Flynn of the Theatre, then entered a complaint against Mr. T. and wished to have him bound to keep the peace, for threatening to cut off his nose. By New York papers received this morning, we learn that a marriage took place on Saturday evening between "Thomas Flynn Esq. manager of the Chatham Theatre, and Miss Matilda Twibill of the same Theatre." This we should hope might settle the difficulty and place the manager's nose out of danger.

Evening Bulletin.

IMPROMTU,—On reading the above.

To save his peak from Twibill's tweak,
Tom Flynn, the Chatham Ranger,
To police hies, and testifies
His snuffers are in danger.

"My child!" "my life!" "my nose!" "my wife!"
In turns they loudly cry;—
By Hopson's voice—'twas Hopson's choice—
Both lose their liberty.

Hymen and Law! what knots you draw—
And now are in hot water;
For Twibill's bound to keep the peace,
And Flynn to keep—his daughter!

THE SUPREME BEING.

The exuberant and overflowing goodness of the Supreme Being, whose mercy extends to all his works is plainly seen from his having made so little matter that does not swarm with life—nor is his goodness less seen in the diversity than in the multitude of living creatures—had he only made one species of animals, none of the rest would have enjoyed the happiness of existence, he has therefore specified in his creation every degree of life, every capacity of being—the whole chasm in nature, from a plant to a man, is filled up with various kinds of creatures rising one over another by such a gentle easy ascent, that the transition from one species to another, is almost insensible—the intermediate space is so well managed, that there is scarce a degree of perception, which does not appear in some one part of the world of life. Is the goodness of the Divine Being more manifested in any other than in this his proceeding? If the scale of being rises by such a regular process, so high as man, we may by a parity of reasoning, suppose that it proceeds gradually through these beings, which are of a superior nature to him!—since there is an infinitely greater space and room for different degrees and perfection, between the Supreme Being, and man, than between man and the most despicable insect.—Addison.

Daily Resolution of Lavater of Durich.

I will never, either in the morning or evening proceed to any business, until I have first retired, at least for a few moments to implore God for his assistance and blessing.

I will neither do nor undertake, any thing which I would abstain from doing if Jesus Christ was standing visibly before me; nor any thing of which I think it is possible that I shall repeat, in the uncertain hour of my [illegible] death.

[illegible] will, with the divine aid, accustom myself to do every[illegible]ng, without exception, in the name of Jesus Christ, and as his disciple; to sigh continually for the Holy Ghost, and to preserve myself in a constant disposition for prayer.

Every day shall be distinguished by at least one particular wish of love.

Wherever I go, I will first pray to God that I may commit no sin there, but be the cause of some good.

I will never lay down to sleep without prayer, nor, when I am in health, sleep longer than at most eight hours.

I will every evening examine my conduct through the day by these rules, and faithfully note down in my journal how often I have offended against them.

O God! thou seest what I have here written. May I be able to read these my resolutions every morning with sincerity, and every evening with joy, and the clear approbation of my conscience.

ROYAL PALACE OF ISPAHAN.

The palaces of the king are inclosed in a fort of lofty walls, which is estimated to have a circumference of three miles The palace of the chehel sitoon, or "forty pillars," is situated in the middle of an immense square, which is intersected by various canals, and planted in different directions by the beautiful chenar tree. In front is an extensive square basin of water, from the farthest extremity of which the palace is beautiful beyond either the power of language or the correctness of the pencil to delineate. The first saloon is open towards the garden, and is supported by eighteen pillars, all inlaid with mirrors; and the glass being in a much greater proportion than the wood, appears at a distance to be formed of glass only. Each pillar has a marble base, which is carved into the figures of four lions placed in such attitudes, that the shaft seems to rest on their four united backs. The walls which form its termination behind, are also covered with mirrors, placed in such a variety of symmetrical positions, that the mass of the structure appears to be of glass, and when new must have glittered with most magnificent splendour. The ceiling is painted in gold flowers, which are still fresh and brilliant. Large curtains are suspended on the outside, which are occasionally lowered to lessen the heat of the sun.

VITZIPUTZLI—the chief deity of the Mexican. The Mexicans ascribed their settlement in that country to the direction of Vitziputzli. The first inhabitants were a set of savages, and were subdued by the Mexicans under the conduct of Mexi, their captain and law-giver. These latter were a northern people, and undertook this expedition at the command of their God, who promised them success. Mexi marched at the head of those adventurers, and four priests carried Vitziputzli in a trunk or chest made of reeds. Whenever they encamped they entered a tabernacle in the midst of the camp, and placed the little chest or ark upon an altar. They never moved nor encamped without first consulting the idol, and implicitly receiving his orders. Being at last arrived at the promised land, the God appeared to the priest in a dream, and commanded him to settle in that part of the lake where an eagle should be found sitting on a fig tree growing out of a rock. The place being found by the signs pre-appointed, they there laid the foundations of Mexico. This celebrated city was divided into four quarters or districts, and in the middle was placed the tabernacle of Vitziputzli, till a proper temple should be built to receive him. This story of the first coming of the Mexicans into Mexico agrees in many circumstances, with that of the entrance of the Israelites into the land of Canaan: whence this should happen is not easy to conjecture.

From the American Farmer.

SHEEP HUSBANDRY.

Ravensworth, March 25, 1828.

Dear Sir—I have thought it not impossible, that in the present depressed state of agriculture, the following estimate of the profits of a farm devoted exclusively to sheep, might be of service to some of your numerous readers. I am not, I think, mistaken, in supposing, that at the price at which corn and wheat now sell, they cannot be advantageously cultivated on lands yielding less than fifteen bushels of the former, and eight bushels of the latter per acre. And yet how many thousands of acres, both in Virginia and Maryland, are either thus employed at an expense very far exceeding their production, or are abandoned as wholly unfit for any agricultural purpose whatever!

My own experience has satisfied me that lands of this description, even of the poorest quality, may (if broken and tolerably well watered,) be advantageously converted into sheep-walks; and by a judicious course of husbandry, be made not only to produce a fair interest on the capital invested, but to furnish within themselves ample resources for their own renovation. To point out the means of accomplishing this desirable change is the object of the following estimate.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.
WM. H. FITZHUGH.

J. S. Skinner, Esq.

Estimate for a farm devoted exclusively to Sheep.

A farm, containing 1000 acres of land, under a good fence having a dwelling house and all necessary out houses. together with two milch cows, two work horses, (or four oxen,) two breeding sows, one thousand sheep, a light wagon, cart, gear, ploughs, harrows, hoes, spades, axes, and all other necessary utensils, may very readily be purchased in convenient locations, either in Maryland or Virginia, for $12,000; which if it yields only six per cent. on the purchase money, or $170 nett per annum, would be a more profitable and safe investment than can be made in any stock in the U. States. But it is susceptible of demonstration, that with tolerably judicious management, it may be made to yield nearly double that amount, and be itself annually improved in value.

The following is the system of management, which, after long experience, I have no hesitation in recommending.

The farm and every thing appertaining to it, except the sheep, being secured at the beginning of the year, the first operation should be to throw it into three divisions, viz: two fields for grazing, of 350 acres each, and one of 300 acres, comprising the woodland, garden, house lots, and about 100 acres of open land for cultivation and improvement. This arrangement and the necessary fences may be completed during the freezing and wet weather of January, February and March; while the dry and open weather of these months should be devoted to ploughing and harrowing about 40 acres of arable land; one half of which may be sown in oats, for a crop, by the end of March, and the other half planted in corn between the 1st and 15th of April.

These operations being completed, there will be time enough before the corn requires cultivation, to plough, harrow, and sow down in oats, ten acres more of the arable land for the purpose of improvement by folding the sheep and cattle in them during the summer and fall; after which, the chief occupation of the hands till harvest, will be the cultivation of the corn and attention to the sheep; which ought to be purchased and brought on the farm as early in May as possible, and together with the cattle be folded every night on the oat grounds prepared for them, in a pen containing about half an acre of land.

As this business of folding is to be the great source of improvement and profit on a sheep farm, it ought to be managed with the greatest care. No danger need be apprehended to the sheep either from dogs or disease, provided cattle be always folded in the same pen with them, and care be taken never to put them up till after sun-set, and always to turn them out before sun-rise. With a view to the rapid and permanent improvement of the soil, I consider the following the best possible mode of conducting this part of the system.

When the first fold is sufficiently manured, (which will be in eight or ten days,) the pen should be removed, the ground ploughed, harrowed, and sowed down in oats, and ruta baga turnips; and the same process be pursued with each succeeding fold, till the first of August; care being taken in the mean time to turn in all that portion of land prepared for folding, on which the oats have ripened before the folds have reached them.

On the 1st of August, the sheep should be divided into two flocks—one containing the breeding ewes and stock wethers; the other consisting of the lambs and such old ewes and wethers as it may be desirable to prepare for market. At this time too, the folds should be brought back to the ground first penned and sowed in oats and turnips, which will now be covered with a fine growth, and be ready for a second penning. In performing this operation two pens must be employed for the two divisions of sheep; the lambs and the muttons being permitted to occupy each pen, in advance, about four days, and the main flock following for about the same time.

Land thus prepared will be brought to the highest possible state of fertility. Such as are penned before the first of September, may be sowed down in turnips, for the use of the sheep during the winter and spring; and the subsequent pennings of September, October, November and December, may be put in rye, wheat, kale, Hanover turnips, or any thing that vegetates grazing quickly, for spring. A piece of the poorest land on my farm, treated in this way, (except that wheat, as a crop, was substituted for turnips, oats, &c.) fattened me fifty of the best muttons I ever saw; yielded 22½ bushels of wheat to the acre, and is at the end of three years, still covered with a fine coat of orchard grass.

We have now arrived at that period of the year in which the sheep are to be put into winter quarters. For this purpose, the fatted sheep ought to be sold off as soon as possible, the breeding ewes put to themselves in one of the grazing fields, and the rest of the flock in the other. Each parcel should be brought up at night into a small lot near the house, provided with uniform shelters, and there fed, both night and morning, on hay, corn tops, blades, or turnips. As the ewes begin to yean, which ought to be in March, they should be separated, or permitted to run on the ground prepared for them during the preceding fall; and their condition will be very much improved at this time by feeding them night and morning with oats in the straw, cut up to a proper degree of fineness.

The operations of the next and every subsequent year, will differ from the first only in this, that instead of breaking up new ground for an oat crop, oats may always be put in the twenty acres of corn land and the ten acres of manured land of the preceding year; and the last should always be sowed down at the same time in orchard grass and clover. Ten acres of highly improved grass land would thus be added every year to the resources of the farm, until at length its quantity would probably justify the introduction of a few choice brood mares, as another source of profit, on the farm.

When the hundred acres first reserved for cultivation, shall by this process, be converted into grass land, a farther encroachment, to the extent of fifty acres, may be made on each of the grazing fields, and the same course of husbandry be pursued on them as on the first division.

The only permanent labourers requisite for such a farm as this, would be a man, his wife, and a boy old enough to plough. In shearing time and harvest, it might be necessary, perhaps, to employ additional labourers.

The above system is adapted to the poorest description of high and broken lands in our country, and may be applied to a farm of any size, from two hundred to some thousand acres. I have now five farms, stocked with from two to five hundred sheep each, undergoing this process; and after an experience of many years, and even at the present low price of wool, I have no disposition to change my system.

The following I consider a fair estimate of the product, expenditure and profits of a farm of 1000 acres, thus cultivated.

PRODUCT.

To be used on the Farm.

20 acres of corn manured in the hill, at 3 barrels per acre, 60 bbls.
20 acres of improved land in oats, at 5 bushels per acre, 100 bush.
10 acres of manured land in oats, at 20 bushels per acre, 200 bush.
5 acres of turnips, at 200 bushels per acre, 1000 bush.
Hay, veal, hogs, &c. &c.

FOR SALE.

The wool of 1000 sheep, estimated at 4 lbs. (in the dirt,) per head, 4000 lbs.
An increase of 400 head of sheep, after making allowance for casualties, the use of the farm, &c. 400 head.

Supposing every thing made on the farm except the wool and the increase of the sheep, to be consumed, we shall have for sale—

4000 pounds of wool in the dirt, at 25 cents per lb.—equal to	$1000
400 lambs and muttons, at $1 50 per head,	600
Gross sales,	$1600
From which deduct—
For permanent and occasional labor, $200
For contingencies, 200—	400
Nett profit,	$1200

Being ten per cent. on the original investment. I will only add that this amount might, of course, be very much increased, by improving the quality of the wool.

W. H. F.

To Destroy Weevil Among Grain.

Lay fleeces of wool, which have not been scoured, on the grain: the oily matter attracts insects among the wool, where they soon die—from what cause is not exactly known. Mr. Payandeau related to the Philomathic society, that his father made the discovery in 1811, and had practised it on a large scale since.—Bull. des Science Agricoles, Juill. 26, 1826, p. 24.

SHEEP AND WOOL.

(Further translations from the "Bulletin des Science.")

Dry pastures, fallow fields, and lands covered with stubble, afford the best nourishment for sheep. The plants and grasses that grow on marshy, boggy soils, commonly contain acid, deleterious substances which occasion diseases. Disorders are also produced by the grass being too often wet by the dew, or by frequent rains. Many sheep farmers believe that their flocks have no need of drink when they are in pastures. This opinion is erroneous. It is seldom that plants contain juice enough to quench their thirst. [There are different opinions on this subject here as well as in Germany. We have known sheep kept in a pasture, where there was no water, for six or eight weeks in succession, in a dry season; they appeared to thrive, and when put into another pasture where there was water, manifested no desire to drink.]

Acorns and the leaves of the elm and poplar are excellent food in the winter, to correct the disposition which sheep may have to the scab and other diseases. Many people give their sheep grain, in order to increase their gain in wool. They are in error; grain increases the greasiness and quantity of the wool, but makes it coarser, and thereby diminishes the value of the fleece. Sheep require cleanliness and air; in dry weather they do not need to be shut up, for they fear the cold less than any other animal. The practice of keeping sheep confined among heaps of manure, deprived of air and exercise, is a fatal one.

The greatest market for wool is that of Breslau, in Prussian Silesia. The quantity brought to the fairs in that city, in June and October, 1820, was 160,000 bales. There are annual fairs for the sale of wool, &c. at Berlin, Dantzig, Magdeburg, Leipsig, Bautzen, Vienna, Pest. &c. Much of the wool of Germany is exported to England.

COTTON SEED WHISKEY.

This modern discovery, like many others, was accidental. The gentleman, a Mr. John Gray, of Georgia, in a careless moment, suffered his cotton seed and corn to be thrown together, and corn being scarce, he threw the cotton seed with the corn into the brewery. The result, viz: the quantity of whiskey, arrested his attention. He then mixed half and half, and finally sold without any detection in the taste. He then went on to try all cotton seed, throwing a peck of meal in to each hogshead, to cause fermentation. This produced a vigorous extrication of gas; and a large quantity of oil, bland and of drying quality well suited for painting, was produced; and the quantity of whiskey was extraordinary from the cotton seed.—Alabama Journal.

Tide Mills of Easton, Md.—A Mr. Robert Spedden has obtained a patent for a tide mill, which is represented as adequate to the ordinary purpose of grinding and propelling machinery in factories. It is intended to be used in small creeks or inlets, and cannot fail to be of great utility in level countries, or in those sections where running streams are not abundant.

We recommend the following to our learned cotemporary, His Excellency Joseph Gales Esq. lord mayor of Washington, and professor of sign extraordinary to the Coalition.

W. Tel.

"One moonlight night as Jack was leading his father home from the tavern, where his potations had been too deep and strong for his head, the old tippler raised his foot to step over the shadow of the sign post "What—what is that?" quoth the old man. "Nothing but the sign," replied the dutiful son. "Sign—sign of what?" demanded the votary of Bacchus. "Why, a sign that you are drunk father," replied Jack.

Human Nature.—While some one was talking before Dr. Cheyne, the acute Scotsman, of the excellence of human nature, "Hoot, hoot, man," says he, "human nature is a rogue and a scoundrel; or why would it perpetually stand in need of laws and religion.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., APRIL 29, 1828. NO. 5.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

[Two] Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six [mont]hs; or $3 if not paid within six [mont]hs.

Subscriptions paid within 30 [days] after delivering the first number, [for the] year subscribed for,) will be [consi]dered in advance.

[No] subscription will hereafter be [taken] for less than one year.

[No] paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until [all ar]rearages are paid off, and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

[AD]VERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a [squar]e, will be inserted three times for [one dollar,] and 25 cents for every subsequent [inserti]on: those exceeding a square in [the sa]me proportion.

Advertisements, if handed in by [Mon]day night at 10 o'clock, shall appear in the paper next morning.

Persons advertising, must limit [the ti]me of insertion, otherwise their [adver]tisements will be continued and [charge]d accordingly.

All communications addressed to [the ed]itor must come POST PAID.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of John J. Davis use of James H. Handy against John Taylor, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—Part of a tract of land called 'Warwick,' and part of a tract of land called 'Medfield,' containing 219½ acres, more or less; also part of 'James's Debate,' 89 acres, more or less, part of 'Ralph's Venture,' 9½ acres, more or less, part of 'Cannon's Good Luck,' 10 acres; also part of 'Chance' and 'Addition to Chance,' containing 12 acres, more or less, one negro Ely, 1 do. George, 1 do. Major, 1 do. Adam, 1 do. Leah, 1 do. Polly, 1 do. Leah, 1 do. Nancy and 1do. Nancy, 1 do. Lucretia, 1 do. Sarah, and 1 do. Amelia, which I shall proceed to sell at the court house door in Princess-Anne, on Tuesday the 13th of May next, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
April 20—22. 2 LDC

SHERIFF's SALE.

By virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Handy H. Irving (Trustee,) against George Waller, Jonathan Waller, and James Weatherly, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, viz: Part of a tract of land called Gilliss's Lot, containing 237 acres more or less, 1 negro man Charles, 1 do. Charles, 1 woman Sarah, 5 head of horses, 1 yoke of oxen and 6 head of cattle, seized and taken as the property of George Waller. Also, part of a tract of land called Waile's Retreat, containing 198½ acres more or less, 1 negro man Elias, 3 head of horses and 7 head of cattle seized and taken as the property of James Weatherly, which I shall proceed to sell at the Court-House door, on Tuesday the 29th day of April next, between the hours of 1 and 4 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
March 26—Ap. 1 14C

District of Maryland, to wit:

[L. S.] Be It Remembered, That on the 17th day of October, in the 51st year of the Independence of the U. States of America, LITTLETON AIRES, of the said district, hath deposited in this office the title of a Book, the right whereof he claims as author in the words following, to wit:

"TABLES OF DISCOUNT OR INTEREST, ON EVERY CENT, From 1 to 100, from 1 month to 10 years; AND ON EVERY DOLLAR, From One to One Thousand, and ON Every Hundred from 1 to 6 Thousand, INCLUSIVE, From 1 Day to 10 Years. The whole computed at Six per Cent. Together with examples shewing in what manner, by means of the tables, to ascertain the interest at Five, Seven and Eight per Cent."

In conformity to the act of the Congress of the United States, entitled "An Act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of maps, charts, and books, to the authors and proprietors of such works during the times therein mentioned." And also to the act, entitled 'An act for the encouragement of learning, by securing the copies of maps, charts, and books, to the authors and proprietors of such copies, during the times therein mentioned,' and extending the benefits to the arts of designing, engraving, and etching historical and other prints.

PHILIP MOORE.
Clerk of the District of Maryland.

☞ The above work is for sale at the stores of Mr. G. M. Willing, Mr. Wm. Done, and Messrs. Johnston & Sudler, Princess-Anne. Also at the Village Herald office.

March 4. Price $1.

State of Maryland, sc.

[Som]erset County Orphans Court,
March 25th, 1828.

§§§§ ON application of William [S]EAL.§§ Stewart, Admin'r. of Robert Hitch, late of Somerset county, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

[In com]pliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

[Th]at the subscriber, of Somerset [coun]ty, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of Robert Hitch, [late o]f said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th [day of Oc]tober next, they may otherwise [by law] be excluded from all benefit of [the said] estate. Given under my hand [this 2]5th day of March, 1828.

WILLIAM STEWART, Adm'r. of R. Hitch, dec'd.
[Apri]l 1, 1828. k

State of Maryland, sc.

[Som]erset County Orphans Court,
March 25th, 1828.

§§§ ON application of Michael [S]EAL.§§ B. Carroll, Adm'r. c. w. a. §§§ of Betsey Bayly, late of [Somers]et county, dec'd., it is ordered, [that he] give the notice required by law [for cred]itors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the [same be] published once in each week, [for the sp]ace of three successive weeks, [in the p]aper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

[In co]mpliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

[Tha]t the subscriber of Somerset [county,] hath obtained from the Orphans Court of said county in Maryland, letters of administration on the [person]al estate of Betsey Bayly—[late of] Somerset county, deceased. [All per]sons having claims against the [said d]eceased are hereby warned to [exhibit] the same, with the vouchers [thereof] to the subscriber, on or before [the 25th] day of October next, they [may oth]erwise by law be excluded from [all bene]fit of said estate. Given under [my han]d this 25th day of March, [1828.]

MICHAEL B. CARROLL, Adm'r. of B. Bayly, dec'd.
k

Late Sheriff's Sale.

[By] virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of James Anderson use of Joshua Robert Twilley use of James [Lan]dy against Francis D. Nelson, [will be] sold at public sale on Wednesday the 7th of May next, the following property, to wit—part of a tract called Stephenton, containing [acres] more or less, part of Gale's [ ] 90 acres, one negro man George, one do. David, three horses and one yoke of oxen, [which I] shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned [writs. Sale] to commence at 10 o'clock [at] the premises of said Nelson.

ROBT. STEWART,
[April] 22 late Shff.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court, and to me directed, at the suit of John Turner against Priscilla Travers, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—One hundred acres of land called Stansway, which I shall proceed to sell on the premises, on Wednesday the 30th of April next, at the hour of 11 A. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
March 31—ap 8

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of 2 writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suits of John Horsey use of Eleanor Collier against Francis D. Nelson, and John J. Davis use of Marcellus Jones against Francis D. Nelson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: One schooner Remedy, burden about 53 tons, which I shall proceed to sell on the premises of said Nelson, on Friday the 2nd of May, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above writ, and costs. Sale to commence at the hour of 11 o'clock A. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
April 8

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court,
March 25th, 1828.

§§§§§§§§§ ON application of Sarah §§SEAL.§§ Walter, Executrix of James §§§§§§§§§ Walter, late of Somerset county, dec'd. it is ordered by the Court, that she give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the estate of said deceased, and that the same be published once a week for three weeks in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy. Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county

In compliance with the above Order.

Notice is hereby given,

THAT the subscriber of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of said county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of James Walter—late of Somerset county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof to the subscriber on or before the 7th of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under my hand this 25th of March, 1828.

SARAH WALTER, Ex'trix. of J. Walter, dec'd.
April 1. YY

TRUSTEE's SALE.

BY virtue of a decree of Somerset County Court, in this case, the subscriber will offer at public sale, to the highest and best bidder, on the premises, on Thursday the 8th of May next, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. on the premises, all of the following parts of two tracts of land subject to the widow's dower, to wit: part of a tract of land called Shadwell's Chance and part of Shadwell, containing 224½ acres of land, more or less, situated in the county aforesaid, on the south east side of Nanticoke river, with the improvements and appurtenances thereto belonging.—

The terms of sale will be, a credit of twelve months, with interest from the day of sale, to be secured by a bond or bonds given to the Trustee, with good security, upon the payment of which and ratification of the sale, the Trustee is directed by the said decree to execute to the purchaser or purchasers, his, her or their heirs, a deed for the aforesaid property, conveying the title of the complainants and defendant in the premises.

THOS. JONES, (of John,)
April 15 m Trustee.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Zadock Long, use of William Roach, against Levin W. Ballard, James Wilson and James Polk, one at the suit of Jeremiah Y. Dashiell against Levin W. Ballard I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—Part of a tract of land called 'Dashiell's Lot,' containing 332 acres, more or less; part of Sandy Ridge & Fitzwaters containing 156 acres more or less, seized as the property of Levin W. Ballard, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest bidder for cash, at the Court-House door, in Princess-Anne, on the 6th day of May next, between the hours of 1 and 4 o'clock, P. M. to satisfy the above writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
April 15, 1828. ws

MARSHAL's SALE.

By virtue of two writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for Maryland District, and to me directed, at the suit of John H. Bayly against George Jones of Robt. I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: One tract of land called Dashiell's Lot, containing 600 acres, more or less—Also one other tract of land called Worrington, containing 500 acres, more or less, and I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, the above mentioned property, on Tuesday the 29th of April, (inst.) at the Court House door in Princess-Anne, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

HUMPHREY HUMPHREYS,
Dep. Marshal for Som. county
April 5, 1828—8j

BLANK BILLS OF SALE,
Printed on fine Paper,
FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

PROPOSALS BY BENJ. EDES
FOR PUBLISHING IN BALTIMORE,

THE EMERALD,

And Baltimore Literary Gazette.

The Emerald and Baltimore Literary Gazette will be published every Saturday, in quarto form, super-royal sheet, with new long primer type, and in superior style—the editorial department to be under the direction of several gentlemen of acknowledged talents.

The want of a paper of the nature proposed, will be allowed by every citizen of this metropolis; nor has the proprietor, in his efforts, been so much prompted by a desire of gain, as by a hope of encouraging literature throughout this section of the Union. Confident of the approbation of all persons of taste, he therefore proposes the publication of the Emerald & pledges himself that no effort shall be wanting on his part to please the pulibc in general.

The Emerald shall contain the choicest selections of miscellaneous literature, from the most esteemed periodicals of this country and Europe; and the strictest attention shall be observed as to their moral tendency. Its contents shall be—Tales, original and selected; moral, humorous and scientific Essays; original and selected Poetry; Biographical Sketches of distinguished worthies; Anecdotes, &c.—The original matter will be furnished by individuals who have through the medium of our best literary productions, established themselves in public favor. Also, interesting items of foreign and domestic intelligence; critical notices of passing events; the drama, new publications, and a correct description of the prevailing fashions, both abroad and at home.

It may be worthy of notice, that the Emerald shall be in no way whatever connected with either of the great political parties; and that no communication that has a tendency, either directly or indirectly, to invade the sanctuary of domestic retirement, shall find admission into its columns; though they will always be open to an honest discussion of any question that does not tend to inflame personal or party animosity.

TERMS.—Price of subscription four dollars per annum, one half to be paid on delivery of the first number, and the balance at the expiration of six months. Postmasters and other persons of the inland towns, procuring six subscribers and becoming responsible for the payment, will be entitled to one copy gratis. When 400 Subscribers are obtained the Emerald will be issued.

☞ Subscribers will be received at the Office of the Village Herald.

March 25 ææ

EASTMAN'S MANUFACTORY
OF AGRICULTURAL

IMPLEMENTS,

At No. 36 Pratt street, opposite the United Hotel, Baltimore.

THE subscriber would inform the public, that he has on hand a large assortment of Gideon Davis' Improved Patent PLOUGHS of cast & wrought Shares, with & without Coulters; Hillside, Substratum and Shovel Ploughs; a large stock of Cultivators of superior quality; Harrows; Swingletrees, double & single; Cornshellers and Washing Machines. Also on hand as usual; his Patent Cylindrical Straw Cutters, which have given universal satisfaction, and Brown's Vertical Wool Spinners; Cast-steel Axes; Grubbing Hoes, Picks and Mattocks, which he warrants of superior quality; very superior Oil Stones, saturated with oil—all of which will be sold at reasonable prices for cash or acceptances in this city.

His very extensive sales of the above articles for the last 3 years is an evidence of the general satisfaction he has given to his numerous customers, and he flatters himself that with the increased pains he has taken in selecting his timber and other materials this season, and also to improve as much as possible on the workmanship of his implements, that he will continue to merit the public patronage which has been so liberally bestowed and for which he takes this opportunity to express his grateful thanks.

Orders by mail (post paid) will receive prompt attention.

JONATHAN S. EASTMAN.

N. B. On hand, 9 bushels good MILLET SEED, which will be sold low. FRUIT TREES will be furnished to orders. Implements ordered by any customers which I do not keep on hand will be carefully selected and furnished to the orders. March 11. tx

JUST RECEIVED
AND FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE, a number of
Methodist Hymn Books,
Wesley's Sermons, in 2 volumes.
Also, Scriptural Catechisms, intended for the use of the Methodist Societies.
March 11—m

LIST OF LETTERS,

Remaining in the Post-Office at Princess-Anne, Md. on the 1st day of April, 1828.

A—Johnston Allen, Mrs Elizabeth Adams
B—Mrs Ann Beauchamp, Washington Bennet, Miss Margaret Boston, Capt Joseph Barkley, William Birkhead, Nany Seven Babed.
C—Henry R K Coston
D—Thomas E Dashiell, James W Dashiell, Littleton Dennis, sen.
E—Miss Sarah Elzey
F—John Fountain, Horatio Fishburn
G—Salathiel Griffith
H—Stephen Hersey, Adam Horsey, Littleton Harris, Rev. John Henry
J—Tabitha Jones, Doct Matthias Jones 2, Robert Jones of Robt. Alexander Jones, Mrs Louisa James, Mr Johnson
K—Henry R I H King, Planner King Mrs Sarah & Jane King
L—Levin K Leatherbury 2, Littleton Lankford
M—Mrs Mary Miles 2
O—Benja Ogle
P—Mary Ann Powell, Stephen Parks
S—Secretary Somerset Lodge 6, Thomas Sudler
T—Mrs Gatty Turner, Littleton D. Teackle 2
W—George W. Wintz, John Watson, Rev Alward White

SAM'L. BROWN, Post Master.
April 8 jk

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court,
April 1st, 1828.

§§§§§§§§§§ ON application of Esther §§SEAL.§§ Ballard, Adm'x. of William §§§§§§§§§§ Ballard, late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that she give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of William Ballard, late of said county; deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 1st day of April 1828

ESTHER BALLARD, Adm'x. of W. Ballard, dec'd.
April 8. k

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court.
April 1th 1828.

§§§§§§§§§§ ON application of Esther §§SEAL.§§ Ballard, Adm'x. of James §§§§§§§§§§ Ballard, late of Somerset county dec'd, it is ordered, that she give the notice required by law for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week, for the space of three successive weeks, in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans court of said county in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of James Ballard late of Somerset county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th day of October next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under my hand this 1st day of April, 1828.

ESTHER BALLARD, Adm'x. of J. Ballard dec'd.
April 1828. k

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, the State of Maryland, use of William Hearn, against John Jones, Dames Quarter, will be sold at the court-house door in the town of Princess-Anne, on Thursday the 13th day of May next, between the hours of 2 and 4 o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called Prospect containing 273 acres, more or less, being in my bailiwick, to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above writ.

GEORGE DASHIELL,
April 22, 1828. late Shff.

FOR SALE,

A GIG, made by Ogle of Philadelphia; it is but little defaced, and the harness is in good order. The above Gig will be sold low for cash or good paper. Apply to

SEVERN TEACKLE.
Princess-Anne, April 15. ‖

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, the State of Maryland, use of William Hearn, against William Crockett, will be sold at the court-house door, on Thursday the 13th day of May next, between the hours of 2 and 4 o'clock, the following property, to wit—A house and lot in the town of Princess-Anne, at present occupied by Hetty Crockett, being a lot of ground adjoining the water and lying on the main street contiguous to the town bridge, to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above writ.

GEORGE DASHIELL,
April 22 late Shff.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court, and to me directed, at the suit of Charles Jones, use of Greenbury Toole, use of William Done against Matthias Wingate, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit:—Four head of cattle, 9 head of hogs, 3 beds and furniture, 1 corner cupboard, 1 bureau, 1 pine table, one walnut table, 1 horse, bridle and saddle, and 93 acres of land called 'Hazzard,' which I shall proceed to sell at public sale, on Saturday the 16th of May next, between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 3 o'clock P. M. on the premises, to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the aforesaid writ.

GEO. DASHIELL, late Sff.
April 22. fjk

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Executors of Thomas Byrd, against Moses C. Smith, I have seized & taken in execution the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called Pemberton's Goodwill, containing one and a half acres, more or less, being in the town of Salisbury, in Somerset county, described as number two on a platt made out by John Landrith, esq. and filed in the Clerk's office of said county, being the same lands and lot which was conveyed to a certain Belitha Christopher by a certain John Gould by deed bearing date the 9th of August A. D. 1814, and which said house and lot is at present occupied by a certain Elijah Christopher, which said property I shall proceed to sell, on the premises, on Saturday the 17th day of May next between the hours of 2 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
April 22. 2wwh.

Constable's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by Levin Tyler, a Justice of the Peace, and to me directed, a constable for Somerset county, to wit: 2 at the suit of Samuel Milbourn, use of David Long, one at the suit of Caroline Tull, executrix of Samuel Tull, deceased, 1 at the suit of John N. Whittington, administrator of John Milbourn, deceased, and 1 at the suit of Samuel Milbourn, use of Jeremiah Mezick, use of J. B. Brinkley, all against William Cox, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one tract or parcel of land called Long Meadow, containing 109 acres, more or less; 1 yoke of oxen, 4 cows and calves, 2 heifers, 2 sows and pigs, 6 shoats, 1 pine table, 1 desk, 2 beds and furniture, 1 lot casks, 6 flag chairs, 1 canoe, 1 cart, 1 plough, 1 harrow, 1 ox yoke, 3 hoes, 1 axe, 4 spades, 1 chain, 1 lot carpenter's tools, lot bacon, 1500 feet pine plank, 1 lot white gum plank, and sundry other articles too tedious to mention, which I shall sell as the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of said Cox, at his late residence, on Monday the 12th day of May next, between the hours of 9 o'clock A. M. and 12 o'clock, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

DANIEL BOSTON,
April 16—22 j Constable.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of two writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Matthias Dashiell use of Charles Rider against Benjamin Gravenor and James Graham, will be sold at public sale on Tuesday the 13th of May next, at the court-house door in Princess-Anne, part of a tract of land called 'Wilson's Discovery,' containing 85 acres, more or less, two beds, one horse, one yoke of oxen and two cows, the property of Benjamin Gravenor, also one negro man Jacob, one bed, part of a tract of land called 'Wilson's Discovery,' part of 'Neighbour's Vexation,' containing ninety acres, to the highest and best bidder for cash to pay and satisfy the above mentioned writs. Sale to commence at 11 o'clock A. M.

ROBT. STEWART,
April 14—22 late Shff.

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATIS.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, APRIL 29, 1828.

PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties.

Thomas K. Carroll.

We have now in our possession documents from which we collect the following facts: John Quincy Adams is now in his 62nd year. In his 14th year he went to Russia as private Secretary to Judge Dana. Since that time until the present, being 48 years, he has continued in one public office or another, without hardly a year of intermission. During this period he has drawn from the Treasury of the U. States, in the shape of salaries, outfits, contingent expenses, and for constructive journies, &c. the enormous sum of about THREE HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS. So that he has received upon an average the sum of upwards of Five Thousand Six Hundred and Forty Dollars for every year of his life—or, about Fifteen Dollars & Forty Six Cents for every day since first his eyes beheld the light of this world!!! This is unparalleled in American history—Yet the POWER-LOVING gentry would cram this political apostate down the throats of the people for another term of four years, at the rate of $100,000, and, judging from the present aspect of affairs, an extra sum of like amount for contingent expenses during that period. But has John Q. Adams never performed any services for those enormous sums drawn from the People's purse? Oh, yes! He, at Ghent, offered to barter away the navigation of the Mississippi—He voted against the purchase of Louisiana, against Mr. Jefferson and the republican party when in the Senate of the U. States; He wrote a book on Court Etiquette only calculated for kings and nobility, but which was designed to keep up his family at Washington.—He also wrote a blackguard song in ridicule of Mr. Jefferson. He likewise wrote a work denying the right of the people to alter constitutions, and denouncing the Equal Rights of Man. On the 10th of February, 1807, he voted for a law requiring a property qualification of voters. And while at Ghent in Nov. 1814, he, in his insatiable thirst for gold, denounced our government as WEAK and PENURIOUS, because Congress was unwilling to allow his exorbitant charges. Such were the services of John Q. Adams! Ask an Adams man what constitutes J. Q. Adams' competency to preside at the head of our Nation, and he will tell you Adams is a skilful diplomatist. Then enquire, where has he given us any great and beneficial evidences of his skill in diplomacy? The answer will be Mum! If diplomacy means arranging matters, or making bargains, we suppose the late barter for the Presidency will stand most conspicuous in the catalogue of Adams great doings.

Ominous to the Adams men!!

The Citizen, an able paper printed in Frederick, in this state, after giving some uncontrovertible proofs of the Bargain between Messrs. Adams and Clay, concludes with the following paragraph:

"Although we press upon the attention of the reader what we to-day submit, there is further proof forthcoming, which will make the blush of shame and the ghastly look of terror, alternate in the countenances of some of the faithless servants of the public—some who, now, wrapped up in fancied security, are puffing up the coalition, little suspecting the terrible storm that is gathering over their heads."

This, to us, appears rather inauspicious to the desperate cause of the Administration. We shall apprize our readers of the explosion predicted in the above quotation immediately on its coming to our knowledge.

A SIGN.

The editors of the Washington Telegraph say they now issue Forty thousand papers every week! Any person doubting the fact is invited to call at the office and satisfy himself by [illegible] subscription books.—At the last presidential election there was no paper in Washington that supported the cause of Jackson.

Read, Pause and Reflect.

In the Senate of the United States.

"Friday, Feb. [illegible], 1807—on the second reading of the bill to erect Louisiana into two territores, an amendment was offered containing the following provisions;

1st. That no person shall be eligible to a seat in the territorial legislature, unless he owned ONE HUNDRED ACRES OF LAND, or a house and lot in the city of New Orleans.

2. That no person should be qualified to vote for a representative unless he owned FIFTY ACRES of land.

3d. That the governor of the territory should have power to prorogue the legislature.

4th. That he should have power to dissolve it.

5th. That he should have power to negative all the bills passed by the legislature.

For these amendments JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, the now president of the United States, voted with FIVE OTHERS! Mark ye, but five members of the Senate, besides Mr. Adams were antirepublican enough to vote for the high handed aristocratic measures, proposed by these amendments!!! Will any poor man, any upright, honest republican, who does not happen to be so fortunate in worldly affairs, as to own one hundred acres of land, vote for JOHN Q. ADAMS? No—they all answer emphatically—NO.—Pa. Reporter.

BRITISH COLONIAL TRADE.

Our trade with the British West India Islands was the largest and most valuable branch of our whole trade.—It was worth to us, in exports alone, A HALF A MILLION OF DOLLARS. It kept up our marine; gave employment to our shipping, and afforded a convenient market for an immense quantity of the produce of our country. Hundreds of thousands of barrels of FLOUR went from the ports of the United States to the British Islands. Large quantities also, of Beef, Bacon, and Pork were shipped from the United States to those ports. Lumber too, was a great and valuable article of our trade to the British West Indies. Corn, beans, peas, and potatoes, too, from our ports found a market there. Various other articles, the product or manufacture of the United States had the same vent.—Balt. Rep

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

We recommend to the notice of the admirers of the principles of the Coalition the following paragraphs, which were said of John Quincy Adams in 1824, by the Hon. JOHN HOLMES, then U. S. Senator from Maine; and now the political friend and supporter of the said John Quincy and his father; and what the editors of the Salem (Mass.) Gazette, and Essex (Mass.) Register, have recently said. Speaking of old Mr. Adams, Mr. Holmes said—

"The old gentleman possessed very aristocratic feelings. He was in favour of taking all Executive power from the Senate, and vesting it in the President of the United States. The son was born and nurtured in these feelings, received his early impressions of men and things at the courts of European monarchs, at an age when his mind and heart, naturally conscious of high descent, were easily captivated with the splendour of royality. He brought home these feelings, and he has carried them so far through life with him, he cannot divest himself of them; and he appears awkard when he attempts it. He is naturally and habitually an aristocrat. Mr. Adams was the advocate of his father's alien and sedition laws; his direct taxes, his standing army in time of peace, his extravagant expenditures his useless multiplication of officers, his sixteen midnight judges. He was the reliver of Jefferson, the father of the republican party, and of all his worthy and venerable compeers. He made a scandalous song about him, at a time when he was doing more for the nation than any other man. He acted with the federal party, until he found, in the language of his father, that they were "at the bottom of the hill." The whole family, then simultaneously put round or pretended to put round, and act with the republican party."

Again he says of Mr. Adams:

"He has courted the federal party too much. His own friends and his father's friends are to be found among them. There is the first love, there are his warm attachments. Rufus King heads the catalogue of his friends, and H. G. Otis, and other authors of the Hartford Convention are on the list. The Editor of the Boston Centinel is made a printer of the laws of the United States, by his influence, against the remonstrances of the republican members of Congress from Massachusets." * * *

"He has taken an important portion of the printing of the U. States from the National Intelligencer, a paper which has the most extensive circulation of any one in the Union, be-[illegible] supports Mr. Crawford for the Presidency, and has given it to the National Journal of very limited circulation, because it supports him."

What says the same gentleman upon the subject of the persecution of Mr. Crawford.

"He (Mr. Adams) has attempted to sustain the infamous ——* in his dastardly attack upon Mr. Crawford, in defiance of the moral sense of the people of the nation; and by some it is believed, that ——* was only the puppet of the puppet show, who spoke as he was prompted by the chief juggler behind the scene."

"It is believed [says the Gazette,] that every Hartford Conventionist, now living, is a friend to the re-election of Mr. Adams. At the time of his election one of them (Hon. Mr. Longfellow,) was a member of Congress, and gave his vote for Mr. Adams.—The Hon Mr. Olcott, another member, voted in the New Hampshire Legislative caucus, in favour of Mr. Adams; the Hon. Mr. Hall, another member, lately distinguished himself in the Vermont Legislature, in support of the administration; and Mr. Hall and Mr. Goddard were chosen members of the Harrisburg Convention. If all the Hartford Convention men should withdraw their support from Mr. Adams, his re-election would be desperate. The country was in danger of being overrun by the enemy, till the Hartford Convention men came forward to its defence; and if the Hartford Convention men withhold their support, the cause of Mr. Adams is lost."

The Essex Register, a kindred print says:

"We would sooner trust any member of the Hartford Convention in office, than Levi Woodbury, or Isaac Hill, of New Hampshire, and the three leading patriots of Maine, who are fulminating their anathemas against the Hartford Convention."

Again: "We ask the aid of no man who we are not willing to consider our equal, and on as fair ground as ourselves."

"This yielding to the current prejudice, and raising the hue and cry against those whose aid we need is miserable policy. The Hartford Conventionists are said to be in favour of Mr. Adams; and so are all the leading federalists of New England, except some few, who never forgive an offence."

*Ninian Edwards.

Mr. Clay, in his defence of the Administration's conduct in regard to the Colonial trade, says—

☞ "Happily His Britanic Majesty and his principal Secretary of Foreign Affairs were restored to health. The British Cabinet did not re-assemble until the Autumn of 1825, and Mr. King unfortunately remained feeble and unwell up to the period of his return to the United States, in consequence of his indisposition."

Mr. King continued unwell in consequence of his indisposition! The rankest forgery that the Adams party have put forth against General Jackson does not make him commit a grosser blunder than this.—Bal. Rep.

The Boston Statesman has published a letter from a gentleman of the highest respectability, who has lately been in Washington, from which we make the following extract:

The late development of Mr. Adams' declarations and accusations of the federlists of 1807 and '8 has produced a great excitement in all places I have visited. It was before supposed, that Mr Giles had given a colouring to the affair; and that the worst of the case was, that Mr. Adams had deserted his former friends for the sake of joining the dominant party. It was not believed that he had really accused the federalists of Massachusetts, of a wish to dissolve the Union and of joining in traitorous plans with British Agents against our country—But now it is certain that he made such high charges against the federal republicans. This conduct of Mr. Adams, now so clearly proved, has excited great disgust and indignation in the minds of honorable federalists, and even in the breasts of honest Democratic Republicans. The latter are now convinced, that Mr. Adams in joining Mr. Jefferson and Madison, was actuated by selfish views entirely, and therefore they withdrew from him the regard once awarded to him. In his recent conduct, in courting the federalists, whom before he slandered for his own ends, they say they see the same ambition and regard of self, which dictated his former change, they believe that in all these changes there is manifested a want of political firmness and honesty, a want of sincerity and a love of power, such as no vulgar democrat ever or rarely exhibited, and that his adhesion to Mr. Jefferson, and coalition with Mr. Clay, are two instances of tergiversation and obliquity which have scarcely a parallel in the lives of Talleyrand and Woolsey. The very men, say his late democratic friends whom he accused as traitors, as monarchists and as friends of Great Britain, he now takes to his confidence and his embrace.—Was he honest and sincere in his charges against them? If he was, why court and join them again? If he accused them unjustly, then no censure is too severe for him.

As to Mr. Clay, it is evident to every man, who has been at Washington, that he has not the esteem or confidence of either party, or of many individuals. Those, who have long known him say, he is a very dangerous man; of unbounded ambition, and ready to adopt any measures to promote his object. And yet the moral people of New England support and eulogize him. He was one of the most bitter and severe opposers of Mr. Adams' election in 1823 and 1824, till near the close of the latter, when he found it must be Mr. Adams or General Jackson. The latter he well knew he could not flatter nor intrigue with, and as Gen. Jackson was from the West, he himself could have no chance after him. He supposed also, that Gen. Jackson would make Mr. Adams Secretary of State. Mr. Clay first opposed Mr. Adams as an "apostate federalist," as an "enemy to the West," as an "obstinate, visionary politician," and because it was a bad and dangerous precedent to have the Secretary of State come in as President. Up to November, 1824, these objections and charges against Mr. Adams, were made by Mr. Clay, openly, expressly, and repeatedly. About this time indeed, he began to waver, "he was not committed," that he was "deliberating and consulting his conscience." But he would have no instruction to vote for Gen. Jackson. He must be free and act as occasion might require, although he had always before insisted that a representative was bound to obey the instructions of his constituents, and though Mr. Adams' friends in other places said an elector or Representative was bound to fulfil the wishes of the people.

After all this opposition, severity, and if you will, calumny, against Mr. Adams, Mr. Clay gave him his vote and influence, in direct and known opposition to the will of the people of Kentucky. And by his means Mr. Adams was made President. Mr. Clay's friends also voted for Mr. Adams merely, solely, because they expected and believed he would make Mr. Clay Secretary, and put him in the way to be President. And I find all the supporters of Mr. Adams are pledged to support Mr. Clay for the President after Mr. Adams' term expires. But more yet of Mr. Secretary Clay. It is the opinion of the knowing ones in Washington, that he has adopted the policy of Walpole. In his opinion, every man has his price. "Give me the command of the Treasury, and I will make friends." This, he has said; and on this maxim he acts.—He flatters and attempts to entice by fair promises, if nothing more. And the firm and independent who will not be bought, he threatens, calumniates and attempts to run down.

From the Cincinnati Advertiser.

Washington City, March 1, 1828.

Dear Sir—In my last I informed you that I had received two public documents, recently communicated to congress, one of which related to the economy of the State Department, and the other developed the means whereby the compensation of a public man may be increased far beyond the nominal amount of his salary.—In fulfilment of my promise I will now give you the substance of those documents.

And first, as to the economy of the State Department. It may be proper to premise, that in the year 1824, when our foreign relations were quite as extensive as they are at present, and when, indeed, the correspondence of the Department must have been much greater than it is now, owing to the unsettled state of our affairs with the new American governments, the whole number of clerks employed in the State Department was ten, and their united salaries amounted to thirteen thousand, four hundred dollars. In 1826, when the hue and cry was raised by the coalition against the freedom of debate in the senate, and shortly after Mr. Clay attempted to gag Mr. Randolph by shooting him, a certain gentleman of this district, the putative author of several essays signed "Patrick Henry," was taken as a clerk into the State Department, as a reward, for his attack upon Mr. Calhoun and the senate, and paid out of the contingent fund.—He has since been regularly quartered on the people, at a fixed salary of $1300 per annum.

Last year Mr. Clay required of congress five additional clerks for the State Department, (one of whom, at a salary of $800, was placed in the patent office,) by which the number of his bureaux, as they are now called in the language of monarchal governments, was increased to fourteen; whose united salaries amount to eighteen thousand four hundred dollars, and augmenting the expenses of Mr. Clay's own office five thousand dollars per annum, without the least increase, as I said before, in the Public Duties of that office!!

Besides the gentleman who has been so handsomely rewarded for political services as a writer, there are two other persons in the State Department, who, although ordinary $800 clerks, have been signalized as politicians, and as battencrs on "treasury pap." I will copy from the document, which is under the SIGNATURE of Mr. CLAY HIMSELF, the mode in which the public money has been squandered. The people will require no stronger evidence of a necessity for retrenchment and reform.

"Wm. Browne, from the 1st Jan. to 2d March a $800	$135 55
From 3d March to 7th May, inc. a $1000,	182 17
From 8th May to the end of the year, a $1100,	745 60
	$1,063 32"

"Wm. Slade, from 1st Jan. to 2d March, a $800,	135 55
From 3d March to 7th May, inc. a $1000	182 17
From 8th May to the end of the year, a $1400,	907 60
	$1225 41"

Mr. Slade is one of the persons who was detailed for extra service in 1826, under pretence of delivering documents to the Governors of the Northern states, which latter trust he executed, in part, at least, pretty much in the manner that the editor of the Richmond Whig delivered himself of the despatches which he was paid for carrying to South America, that is, abandoning them to a proxy. It appeared afterwards that Mr. Slade received, in addition to his salary, six dollars per day, whilst absent on this mission, and that in Vermont he assisted in defeating Mr. Vanness's election to the Senate of the United States, because it was suspected here that he would not be the advocate of all Mr. Adams' measures, right or wrong, and because it had already been ascertained that his competitor would. In fact, to "manage" the election of the present incumbent seems to have been the secret object of Mr. S's embassy, whilst his having the charge of the public documents gave a colorable excuse for his opportune visit to Vermont, and a claim to a reward for all his labors.

I have understood that this same political Mercury was in Vermont last fall, quite "accidentally," when resolutions approving Mr. Adams' whole career, and nominating him for re-election, were hurried and driven through the Legislature of that state, by Mr. Hall, of Hartford Convention memory. It is believed that those resolutions were dictated here. Mr. Slade, whilst on this visit, was receiving his salary, at the rate of fourteen hundred dollars a year, as appears from Mr. Clay's statement, quoted above. Whether or not he drew extra compensation for the time he was absent from his desk on the last excursion, has not yet been disclosed. If he did, I hope the committee on retrenchment will ferret it out.

As further evidence of the economy of the State Department, take the following items from Mr. Secretary Clay's Report. A clerk, whose stated salary was $1400 a year, but whose duty is not stated, was paid, in addition to his salary, for his "services as translator of foreign languages," from Jan. 1 to May 7, when he died, "one hundred and fifty two dollars and fifty two cents," being at the rate of 350 dollars a year," and notwithstanding the host of clerks that now surround Mr. Clay, who have abundance of leisure to visit and dash about, "ONE HUNDRED and fifty dollars has been paid for making an alphabetical index to the laws of the last session of congress,"—ONE THOUSAND NINE HUNDRED and ninety five dollars and fifty one cents, was paid to other persons, not belonging to the office, for assistance rendered this department, including the patent office, in translating and for transcribing numerous documents during the past year,"—and "the further sum of TWO THOUSAND FIVE HUNDRED and nineteen dollars and ninety three cents, has been paid out of the contingent fund for foreign intercourse, to persons not attached to the department, for services performed by them in transcribing and copying," &c. &c. The above facts need no comment. Nearly $5000! for extra copying! Why Mr. Clay must have paid two or three dollars a page! !

The second document to which I have referred, seems to me almost as strikingly indicative as the first, of the "strictest eye to economy" which regulates the disbursements of the coalition." Perhaps a "precedent" may be found for this disbursement; yet it cannot be "safe." But to the document, which purports to be a statement of "Miscellaneous Claims, not otherwise provided for," looks very much like Mr. Adams' claim for an outfit of 9000 dollars for going from Petersburgh to Ghent, and which, although decided by Congress to be improper and in positive violation of the law which authorizes an allowance for outfit, was decided by Mr. Wirt to be correct; and his simple ipse dixit was more potent with the accounting officers of government, than the voice of the people, as expressed by their constituents.

"To William Wirt, for professional services rendered at Philadelphia in the circuit court, including his TRAVELLING EXPENSES."

Warrant.	Date.	Am't.
9059	April 6,	$500 00
9157	May 3,	334 12
9246	June 2,	440 00
9799	Oct. 10,	500 00
9875	Nov. 12,	614 00
		$2,388 12

The dates given above, include a period little over four months, and show that Mr. Wirt, even if he had been engaged in "professional" duties all that time, was receiving an extra compensation greater than the salary of either of the heads of Departments. Mr. Wirt is the Attorney General of the United States, for which office he receives a fixed salary of three thousand five hundred dollars. Why, then was this extra pay and these "travelling expenses" allowed him for "professional services?" I hope the committee of Retrenchment will give to this question its appropriate answer.

WESTERN.

A letter to the editors of the New York Courier dated, at Rio de Janeiro on the 14th ult. says:—"Privateers are now very numerous on the coast, and many Brazilian vessels have been captured during the last month. All are now anxiously waiting the result of this season's campaign in the army, in the Province of Rio Grande—accounts by private letters are to 7th ult. from which we make the following extract. "We have been much alarmed of late about the enemy, and property of every description that is movable has been sent from the country and this side of the river of the North Town, nor will the custom house receive goods at this side for the present. A good deal of intrigue was going on in the army against General Brown, but General Lecor on his arrival at the camp, removed five of the principal officers, including a marshal, in order to retain General Brown, who had insisted on leaving the army. We are now daily expecting an engagement will take place between the armies, both being stated to amount to 6,500 strong, and we are sorry to add that there is every reason to believe that the Buenos Ayres army will be successful, in which even there is nothing to hinder them from taking possession of the South town—both [illegible] are near each other and about [illegible] miles distant from this place. In [illegible] the belief is so strong that this pl[illegible] will fall, the inhabitants are remov[illegible] their effects to the north towns. Se[illegible] al vessels have sailed lately, and [illegible] loading for the Havana with beef, [illegible] in all within the last few days 50,0[illegible] arropas."

Deserters!—The outcry which [illegible] making against the Execution of [illegible] serters is peculiarly unfortunate [illegible] this moment. We have before us [illegible] Extract from Col. Jones's Report [illegible] Dec. 31st last, exhibiting the "ma[illegible] tude of this growing evil" of de[illegible] tions. In 1823, '4, '5 and '6, th[illegible] were 2123 desertions out of 8024 m[illegible] who were enlisted—and the loss [illegible] money by desertion is estimated [illegible] the Adjutant General at $230,958. [Richmond Enq.

Morgan has at last been disco[illegible] ed in Asia. The Evening Post sa[illegible] we have seen and conversed with [illegible] Captain of a ship recently arri[illegible] from Smyrna, who has informe[illegible] that there is now living at Smyrna, [illegible] American, who is undoubtedly [illegible] much-talked of, mysterious, Mr. M[illegible] gan. He arrived at Smyrna abo[illegible] year and a half ago, in a brig from B[illegible] ton, and immediately on his arri[illegible] placed himself under the protectio[illegible] the Hadgi Bey, was circumcised, [illegible] dued himself with a monstrous tur[illegible] and a pair of wide trowsers—had [illegible] head shaved, and so became an acc[illegible] plished and undoubted Mussulm[illegible] He frequently spoke of the U[illegible] States, and manifested a very inti[illegible] acquaintance with the western par[illegible] this state, and the Canadas. He [illegible] when he arrived at Smyrna a [illegible] siderable sum of money, with [illegible] he commenced business; but [illegible] Turks took an opportunity of rob[illegible] him; in spite of his turban; and [illegible] our informant left, Mr. Morgan [illegible] very anxious to return to the Un[illegible] States. His real name could not be [illegible] certained; because, when asked [illegible] gave himself different appellati[illegible] but it was the general opinion am[illegible] the American merchants and capt[illegible] at Smyrna, that he was no other t[illegible] the unhappy, murdered Morgan. [illegible] was commonly known by the nam[illegible] the American Turk. Our inform[illegible] describes him as being a man of ab[illegible] 50—about 5 feet 8 or 9 inches [illegible] and rather stout built.

☞We learn that Col. Stone, [illegible] he has finished his collections for [illegible] Greeks, will depart for Smyrna in [illegible] suit of Morgan. Should there be [illegible] it is supposed that the Colonel [illegible] for personal safety, mount the tu[illegible] and trowsaloons, and undergo [illegible] usual rite. If he succeeds in bring[illegible] back Morgan, who no doubt esca[illegible] from Canada to Boston, and [illegible] Smyrna, he will receive the rewar[illegible] fered by the state, Solomon So[illegible] wick declines going with him unt[illegible] ter the next election for Governor [N. Y. E[illegible]

Baltimore, April 1[illegible]

A letter to the editors of the Am[illegible] ican, from a friend at Washing[illegible] under date of Tuesday, says:—"[illegible] eral MACOMB was this day nomin[illegible] by the President to the Senate [illegible] Commander in Chief of the Arm[illegible] the United States."

☞The Rev. J. B. Slem[illegible] will preach in the Presbyt[illegible] Church, at this place, next Sab[illegible] morning at the usual hour.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Vendi[illegible] Exponas issued by the Clerk of S[illegible] erset county court and to me dire[illegible] at the suit of Isaac Nichols, adm[illegible] Joseph R. Russom against Sa[illegible] Badly, will be sold at public sa[illegible] Wednesday the 21st day of May [illegible] at the court-house door betwee[illegible] hours of 2 and 3 o'clock P. M. th[illegible] lowing property to wit: part of a [illegible] of land called Cold Stream, 170 [illegible] more or less, and one yoke of [illegible] to the highest and best bidde[illegible] cash to pay and satisfy the above [illegible] tioned writ. ROBT. STEW[illegible]

April 25—29 Late[illegible]

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of V[illegible] tioni Exponas issued by the Cle[illegible] Somerset county court and to m[illegible] rected, the State of Maryland f[illegible] use of George Hopkins of Steph[illegible] gainst John S. Evans, Ralph [illegible] and William Harris, will be s[illegible] public sale on Wednesday the 21[illegible] of May next at the court-house [illegible] the following property, to wit; p[illegible] a tract of land (name not known[illegible] taining 200 acres, more or les[illegible] horse, gig and harness, to the hi[illegible] and best bidder, for cash, to pa[illegible] satisfy the above mentioned w[illegible] Sale to commence at 2 o'clock [illegible] ROBERT STEWA[illegible]

April 26—29 Late[illegible]

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri F[illegible] issued out of Somerset county [illegible] and to me directed, at the suit [illegible] State of Maryland for the use o[illegible] Byrd against George Dashiell, [illegible] Fowler, Benchumb Acworth an[illegible] jamin Dashiell, I have seized an[illegible] en in execution the following pro[illegible] to wit: one negro man Charles [illegible] en as the property of the said D[illegible] amb; one negro man Mingo, a[illegible] do. Bob, taken as the property [illegible] said Benjamin; which I shall p[illegible] to sell on the premises of the sa[illegible] chamb on Friday the 16th of M[illegible] the hour of 11 o'clock A.M. and [illegible] turday the 17th on the prem[illegible] the said Benjamin at the hour [illegible] o'clock A. M. for cash to satisf[illegible] above mentioned claim.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, S[illegible]

April 23—29. T[illegible]

From the Richmond Enquirer.

Arts of Administration Editors.

These ingenious gentlemen, are practising the same manœuvres which they played off during the last year in vain. They then assumed a strength to which their cause was not entitled. They made their demonstrations upon Pennsylvania, N. Carolina, Virginia and N. York. As soon as they were beaten off from one point, they dexterously shifted their artillery upon another field—but the elections in Pennsylvania and in N. York, the signs in Virginia and N. Carolina, then dissipated all their idle calculations. Despair, however, has inspired them with additional audacity—and they are once more playing off the same game of bold assertion and ridiculous misrepresentations. They are again claiming the State of New York—and even Pennsylvania and Virginia do not escape their dying grasp. They affect to speak of re-action and revolution in New York—and, as they have for the last time taken the field with the coffin handbills and new versions of the exploded tales of the Six Militiamen; as they have drawn from the War Office a misspelt letter, and hope to bring a rejected Tariff Bill to the reinforcement of their despairing partisans we shall have a new budget of rumours from all quarters of the compass.

They have not altogether abandoned Virginia!—we are yet to see letters written in order to be printed, and paragraphs penned for the purposes of deception. Already the National Intelligencer begins by disingenuously asserting that "the election for Members for the H. of Delegates, in the different counties, as far as they have been heard from, are very flattering for the prospects of the Administration in that State." "Very flattering," indeed! when the [illegible] is directly the reverse—when the number of Administration Delegates, already elected, is so very inconsiderable in proportion to that of their opponents.—No one circumstance has more strongly satisfied us of the degeneracy, to which the N. Intelligencer is reduced, than the disingenuousness, the craft, the gross perversity which it has displayed in relation to the sentiment of Virginia. It is guilty of the most palpable suppressio vere It seizes upon every circumstance, which seems to favour the cause of the Administration—(and if there happen to be two versions of that circumstance, it is sure to put forth the false one)—And as to all those strong and leading incidents, which mark out the current of opinion in Virginia, they are either unceremoniously suppressed or most unblushingly perverted. We tell its Editors frankly, that all their artifices will be of no avail. They have no other effect than to injure their own character, without promoting the cause to which they are devoted. They need not "lay the flattering unction to their soul." Nothing can shake the opinion of Virginia—Her vote for Andrew Jackson will be overwhelming—We derive this information from the most satisfactory sources. The course which the N. Intelligencer pursues as to Virginia, conclusively proves to us, that it is capable of practising the same manœuvres as to the other States. We know it is disingenuous in the account which it gives of her—and we strongly suspect the truth of all that it says about others.

Pennsylvania—There can scarcely exist a doubt about this respectable State; whatever tricks the Administration prints are attempting to practice upon the subject. The following paragraph is from a respectable paper at the seat of government.

"The Pennsylvania Reporter,* the state paper, says—"We can now assert, from the very best information from every part of the State, that the estimate of the Central Committee, is below what the Jackson majority will be. Forty-five thousand may now be calculated upon in this State with safety."

New York—The great effort, however, is to create an impression of a re-action going on in this State. Why should it take place? The two great Republican parties (the Clintonians, & the Bucktails) are now united—and the pending election is in a very essential degree to be determined upon the old party ground. But passing from these abstract principles of calculation, where are the evidences of the re-action which has been asserted to exist?—We are told that they are to be found in the West—That the reader may judge for himself, we submit the following facts from the New York papers—among many others which they communicate:

Signs of the West.—To show with what appearance of truth the Administration letter-writers have claimed majorities in our Western towns, we will give the following statements, which speak loudly in praise of that candour which has characterised all the operations of a corrupt coalition in our state. In Onondaga, a large meeting has been held approving the National Tariff, deprecating the designs of the Administration to defeat the bill, and expressing their partiality for Andrew Jackson, as the republican and popular candidate for the Presidency. In Ithaca, at a late annual town meeting, two distinct tickets were made out, with the express declaration, on the part of the Adams men; and a ready acquiescence on the part of the Jacksonians to run on the Presidential grounds. The result was the success of the entire Jackson ticket, by nearly two hundred majority. Tompkins county has ever been claimed by the coalition. In Lansing the "sign" is at least two to one for Jackson, and the whole county will show itself of the same opinion, except perhaps a few western towns, where they are not yet awakened to the agency of the Administration in the Morgan excitement.

In Ontario county, the towns of Phelpes, Hopewell and Manchester, have elected the entire republican Jackson tickets for town officers, and Seneca, the Jackson republican Supervisor. The three last towns gave, at the last fall election, an Adams majority of three hundred and seven.

In Chenango county, the results of the town elections are, that fourteen towns have elected Jackson republicans; three the Adams ticket, and two uncertain.

As further signs of re-action, the Albany Argus contains the following statements:

In Schaghticoke, Rensselaer county, the Jackson candidate for supervisor, is elected by a majority of 120 over Mr. Allen Cornell, the Adams candidate. Mr. Cornell's name is attached by the Albany Dictators to their address for a convention!

In the town of Fayette, Seneca county, the republican Jackson supervisor is elected by a majority of 100. Mr. Watkins, whose name has been also used by the Albany Dictators, received 30 votes. The Adams majority in this town at the last election, was 265!

In the town of Junius, Seneca county, the most populous in the county, after a very sharp contest, in which nearly 800 votes were polled, the Jackson republican supervisor has succeeded by a majority of 99, and the Jackson republican clerk by a majority of 70. In this town at the special election for clerk in January last, the Adams ticket claimed a majority of 300!

In the town of Sandlake, Rensselaer county, where great efforts were made by the federalists, the entire Jackson ticket is elected by a majority of 60. At the election last fall, the republican majority was 5; at the previous election the majority for the federal ticket was 80.

In Greenbush, Rensselaer county, the republican Jackson supervisor, and the entire ticket, with one exception, is elected by a majority of more than two to one over the Adams ticket.

The Rochester Daily Advertiser gives the following results of similar meetings in Monroe county, which plainly show the great re-action produced by the endeavours of the Administration to render the Morgan excitement subservient to the political intrigues:

In Mendon, which last fall gave a majority of 52 for the Morgan Committee, the republican ticket has now succeeded.

The result in Pittsford is equally gratifying.

The Anti-mason ticket is defeated in Clarkson where the Committee last election had about 175 majority.

In Ogden, the majority against the Morgan managers is about 140. The Republicans of that town have seen too much Weedism to be easily gulled into the support of old Federalists in the shape of a "Morgan Committee."

The republican gain in Parma, is about 107; although the Ant's had 110 majority last fall, they have now with difficulty squeezed in their candidates by a majority of three or four votes.

In Yates and Brighton, the administration ticket succeeded, but the majority in the former was 50 and the latter 70 less than it was last fall, and even under these circumstances, only part of the ticket succeeded.

Judge Price is elected supervisor of Rush, by a considerable Jackson majority.

No opposition was made in Perrinton or Sweeden.

Thus do we see that the great "coalition" game, which has been attempted in our western counties, has failed. Clay did not deal his cards well, nor play his own hand well. He "swung" out too soon, and his partner could not return to his lead. They could not make low, and we would have given them as much. It now becomes necessary for the party to make a firm and decided stand; the attack of an expiring and despairing administration must be awaited; and preparations made to guard against them from every quarter

A letter to the editor of the Argus, dated Buffalo, April 1, says: "This day has proved "all fools' day" in good earnest to the political anti-masonic alias administration party in this town. The polls have just closed, and the regular People's candidate has succeeded by a majority of nearly three hundred votes! The people, who have felt and acted honestly, who reprobated the crime, which has produced the feelings here, see through the designs of the political managers, and are resolved to defeat them. They are indignant that political bankrupts have attempted to use the question to ride into office. Erie may be safely counted for Jackson and the republican party."

It is abundantly evident, that, the state continues for Jackson, nor can any change take place between this and the period of the next election which can diminish the republican vote, or shake the republican strength. Still it is a great contest and every man should be at his post as if defending and sustaining his own rights. A desperate attack upon the people is contemplated by the aristocracy.

[N. Y. Enq.

More "Re-action"—Of the 16 towns in the county of Herkimer, thirteen have elected Jackson republican supervisors.

In the county of Yates, of the 7 towns, six have elected republican supervisors, friendly to Jackson—the seventh has returned a supervisor in favour of Adams by a majority of 6 or 7 votes.—Albany Argus.

*This paper has upwards of 2000 subscribers, and until lately published the laws of the U. States—but Mr. Clay, in his political desperation, conferred this printing on an Adams print which circulates only about 600 papers, because the editor of the Reporter would not bow to his majesty Johnny Q. Can an honest man approve this course? Will the People tolerate such proscription?—V. Her.

From the National Intelligencer (an Adams print) of the 11th instant, we copy the following article, as re-published from that paper of Sept. 20, 1817.

ANDREW JACKSON.

From "The Life of Jackson," just published.

In the person of General Jackson is perceived nothing of the robust or elegant. He is six feet and an inch high, remarkably straight and spare, and weighs not more than a hundred and forty-five pounds. His conformation seems to disqualify him for hardship; yet, accustomed to it from early life, few are capable of enduring fatigue to the same extent, or with less injury. His dark blue eyes, with brows arched and projecting, possess a marked expression; but when, from any cause, excited, they sparkle with peculiar lustre and penetration. In his manner he is pleasing. In his address commanding, while his countenance, marked with firmness and decision, beams with a strength & intelligence that strikes at first sight. In his deportment there is nothing repulsive. Easy, affable, and familiar, he is open and accessible to all. Influenced by the belief, that merit should constitute the only difference in men, his attention is equally bestowed on honest poverty, as on titled consequence. No man, however inconsiderable his standing, ever approached him on business, that he did not patiently listen to his story, and afford him all the information in his power. His moral character is without reproach, and by those who knew him most intimately, he is most esteemed. Benevolence, in him, is a prominent virtue, that never passed distresses without seeking to assist and relieve. He is, however, not without some of those foibles, which heaven always mingles in the composition of men. Vice and virtue are often found in the same bosom, which like light and shade in a picture, reflect each other in brighter contrast. Deriving from his birth a temper irritable and hasty, it has had the effect to create enemies, and involve him in disputes, which have sometimes brought him to the field of individual contest. On this subject, he has been heard to remark, that, throughout life, he made it a settled rule, never to insult, or wantonly assail, the feelings of any. Controlled by this golden rule, and influenced by reason, we should doubtless seldom err; but it is a misfortune incident to nature, that the mind, when irritated, not unfrequently induces improper conclusions from premises, and ascribes intention to conduct and language, in themselves innocent. Wise is he, peculiarly blest, and greatly to be envied, who, in every situation, before he acts, can deliberately think It was this quality, which on his entering the army, induced many to fear he would prove too rash for a safe commander,—that occasions would arise, when he would suffer his judgment to be estranged, through the improper exercise of feeling.—Events have proved the fallacy of the conjecture, and shown, that there were none who reasoned more dispassionately on the fitness and propriety of measures, none more cautious, where caution was necessary, or more adventurous, when daring efforts were required. Few Generals had ever to seek for order, amidst a higher state of confusion, or obtained success thro more pressing difficulties. The effects he produced, under circumstances gloomy and inauspicious, now through his eloquence and persuasion, and again by his firmness, portrays a character for decision and a mind intimate and familiar to human nature. That the hireling soldier, prodigal of his life, because his sovereign orders, and the mere echo of his superiors, should entertain a respect for his commander, is too commonly the case, to excite surprise: of such materials, General Jackson's army was not composed; they were freemen—citizens—yet, with the exception of those who abandoned him, in this advance against the Indians, there was scarcely one who served with him, officer or soldier, that was not warmly or particularly attached to him.

General Jackson possesses ambition, but it rests on virtue and ambition, which, regulated by a high sense of honor, leads him to desire "that applause which follows good actions"—"not that which is run after." No opinions of others, and none where much is at stake, and at conflict with his own, less under their influence.—He has never been known to call a council of war, whose decisions, when made, were to shield him from responsibility or censure. His council of war, if doubting himself, was a few officers in whom he fully confided, whose advice was regarded, if their reasons were conclusive; but these not being stisfactory, he at once adopted and pursued the course suggested by his own mind.

Much as we may delight to range through the field of battle, in quest of acts to fix a hero's character, yet inconsiderable circumstances often mark it much more strongly; it is then that the mind, retiring from every thing like motives, gives a loose to impulse, and acts from feeling alone. The general who meets and repels his country's foes is not unfrequently impelled by ambition, and a recollection that a nation's gratitude will succeed his efforts; but when amidst the general carnage, he is seen acting as a Christian and sympathizing in others' woes, his character is marked by virtue, and more truely ennobled. At the battle of Tohokepa an infant was found, pressed to the bosom of its lifeless mother. This circumstance being made known to General Jackson, he became interested for the child, directed it to be brought to him, and sought to prevail on some of the Indian woman to take care of it. They signed their unwillingness, to do so; and that inasmuch as all its relations had fallen in the battle, they would perfer it should be killed. The General, after this disclosure, determined he would not entrust it with them, but became himself the guardian of the child. Bestowing on the infant the name of Lincoir, he adopted it into his family, and has ever since manifested the liveliest zeal towards it, promoted by benevolence, its fate bore a strong resemblance to his own, who in early life, and from the ravages of war; was left in the world forlorn and wretched, without friends or near relations.

Of the two great parties which have distracted our country, General Jackson is a Republican. In his first political career, he rallied on the side of the People. During Mr. Adams' Administration, when the party was few and inconsiderable, he appeared on the side of the rights of man, espousing and advocating the principles of tolerance and free will, until, disgusted at the mode of administering the government, he retired from the Legislative councils of the nation. He is not, however, one of those blind, infatuated partizans, who holds the opinions of others in derision, and determines on the good or bad qualities of a man, accordingly as he belongs to this or the other sect; but influenced by the belief that there are many base and designing, and amiable and virtuous men on both sides, acts on the liberal principle that "Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow."

From the Gazette de France, of Tuesday Feb 26.

PARIS, Feb. 25.—We have received letters from Constantinople, dated the 26th of January. They are extremely interesting:

"Circumstances appear at length to indicate the approach of a crisis which has been long feared. The last hatti scheriff, which destroys all hopes of reconciliation with Russia, as well with respect to its internal affairs, and the treaty of Ackerman, as with regard to the proposals of pacification, has been read in all the mosques; and the immediate closing of the Bosphorus against the ships of all the Christian nations, affords a proof that the late negociations have so incensed the Porte, that it no longer cares for the maintenance of the exising treaties with the other states. In the midst of all these alarms, the military preparations and measures of precaution are prosecuted with great diligence. A palace for the Sultan is building on the Asiatic coast, with ditches and fortifications, to which he may retreat in case, Constantinople may be besieged."

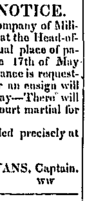
MARRIED, on the 23d inst. by the Rev. James Denston, Mr. George Jones to Miss Rebecca Simms, both of this county.

Baltimore Prices Current.

BALTIMORE, FRIDAY, APRIL 25.

FLOUR, best family,		$6a6 50
Susquehanna,		4 50
WHEAT, best white, p. bu.		90a95
red do		80a85
CORN,	in demand	37a40
RYE,		42a44
OATS,		21a23
BARLEY,		60a62
WHITE BEANS,		80a100
PEAS,		55a60
CLOVER SEED,		3 50a4 00
TIMOTHY SEED,		2 50
FLAXSEED,		75a80
FEATHERS,	do	26a28
BEES-WAX, per pound		26a28

MILITARY NOTICE.



THE Quantico Company of Militia, 25th Regiment, are ordered to meet at their usual place of company parade (near the Poplar,) for drill, on Saturday the 10th day of next month (May.)

Punctual attendance is required, as, on that day a company court martial will be appointed for the trial of absentees. The roll will be called precisely at 10 o'clock A. M.

By order,

LEVIN JONES, (of Levin) April 29, 1828. Captain.

MILITARY NOTICE.

THE Rewastico Company of Militia is ordered to meet at the Head-of-Little-Creek, their usual place of parade, on Saturday the 17th of May next. Punctual attendance is requested, as an election for an ensign will take place on said day—There will also be appointed a court martial for the trial of absentees.

The roll will be called precisely at 11 o'clock A. M.

By order,

JOHN S. EVANS, Captain. April 29, 1828. ww

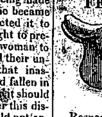
SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of John W. Jones for the use of Henry Adams against Josiah D. Jones, I have seized and taken in execution the following property; to wit: one boat called 'Franklin,' of 40 tons burden; and two head of horses, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, on Tuesday the 13th of May next, at 1 o'clock P.M. at the court house door to satisfy the above writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

April 29 wp1

FELIX JENKINS,



Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk Maker,

No. 10, South Street, BALTIMORE,

Respectfully informs his friends, customers, and the public generally, that he continues to carry on the Saddlery, Harness, and Trunk Making Business, in all its variety, and on the most extensive scale. He has lately received from England, per the ship Philip Tabb, an assortment of articles in his line. Country merchants will find it to their interest to call at No. 10 South street, and to examine the qualities and prices of his goods, as he is determined to sell as low as they can be purchased in Philadelphia.

☞A liberal discount will be made for cash or town acceptances.

April 15 jdm

This is to give Notice,

THAT the Subscriber of the city of Baltimore, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Baltimore county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of MARY WARD late of said county deceased.

All persons having claims against said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof, on or before the 5th day of November next, to JAMES M. BUCHANNAN, Esq. my attorney, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate; and all persons indebted to the said estate, are requested to make immediate payment to my attorney as aforesaid. Given under my hand, this 7th day of April, 1828.

HOWES GOLDSBOROUGH.

April 15 jdm

MARSHAL's SALE.

BY virtue of two writs of Fieri Facias issued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for Maryland District, and to me directed at the suit of John H. Bayly against George Jones of Robt. and Robert Jones, executor of Charles Jones, I have seized and taken in execution the following property to wit—One tract of land called Old Berry, containing 387 acres, more or less, and shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, the above mentioned property, on Tuesday the 29th of April, at the Court-House door, in Princess-Anne, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

HUMPHREY HUMPHREYS, Dep. Marshal for Som. county.

April 5th—8j

Consumptions, Coughs, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthams, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for, and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of the proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER, Princess-Anne, Md.

Nov. 20, 1827.

TAN-YARD, &c. To Let.

THE subscriber will rent for next year, a two story brick house (a cellar under it,) with three acres of excellent ground, situated at Quantico. There is also on the premises a Tan-Yard, a tan house, bark-mill, bark-mill house, bark house, carriage house; corn house and stables. Apply to

JOHN J. DAVIS, or THOS. JONES,

April 22 Quantico.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of Sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued by the clerk of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of John S. Evans adm'r of James Evans use of George Hopkins of Stephen, against William Hopkins, Matthias D. Hopkins and Jessy Walter, will be sold at public sale on Friday the 9th of May next, in the town of Quantico, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. the following property; to wit—two head of horses, one yoke of oxen and five head of cattle, to the highest and best bidder for cash to pay and satisfy the above mentioned writs.

ROBT. STEWART,

April 14th—22 late Shff

Timbered Land For Sale.

I am requested by John H. Bayly, Esq. to offer for sale a tract of land commonly called "Pine Pole," situated about two miles from Princess-Anne This tract of land is valuable for the excellent timber now standing on it, and its contiguity to navigation. For terms apply to

GEO. HANDY.

Princess-Anne, Md. April 22, 1828.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Levin D. Jones, Elizabeth Collier and John Larmore and Wife against James W. Dashiell, will be sold at public sale on Tuesday the 13th of May next, at the court-house door in the town of Princess-Anne, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit—one negro woman Iby, one negro Jacob, one do. Bill, one do. Jessy, one do. Jack, one do. Hewet, one do. Moses, three head of horses, and one gig and harness, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for cash to pay and satisfy the above mentioned writs.

ROBT. STEWART,

April 14 22 Late Shff.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of two writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Isaac Deckerson use of George Jones and Robert Jones Executor of Charles Jones against George Crockett and George Matthews, will be sold at public sale on Saturday the 10th of May next, the following property, to wit—part of a tract of land called Stare Yard, containing 45 acres, more or less; part of a tract half marsh, name not known, 126 acres, more or less, and one yoke of oxen, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs. Sale to commence at 10 o'clock A. M. on the premises of said Crockett.

ROBT. STEWART,

April 14th—22 Late Shff.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued by the Clerk of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Margaret E. Dashiell, Leah Dashiell, Jane Dashiell, by George Hopkins their guardian, & Ann C. Dashiell by James Herron her guardian against Benjamin I. Jones, James W. Dashiell and John Jones of Benjamin, will be sold at public sale on Tuesday the 13th of May next, at the Court House door in Princess-Anne, the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called Fines, containing 44 acres, more or less; part of Good Luck, containing 57 acres, more or less; part of Rich Swamp, containing 100 acres, more or less, part of Handy's & Wolf's Hope, containing 140 acres, more or less, and one horse, the goods and chattels lands and tenements of the said Benjamin; part of a tract of land called Menches Desert, and part of Discovery, containing 100 acres, more or less, and one horse, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of the said James; also one tract of land called Bell Grove containing 290 acres, more or less, and one horse, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of the said John, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for the ready cash to pay and satisfy the above mentioned writs. Sale to commence at 1 o'clock P. M.

ROBT. STEWART

April 22. late Shff.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., MAY 6, 1828. NO. 6.

THE PARTERRE.

VARIETY makes into little moals a variety for the useful and the sweet.

DEATH.

In this misjudging world, they picture death
A fearful tyrant—O believe it not!
It is a friend, &c.

[illegible] morning the [illegible] parent had not one thought for self, but when that father's eyes first closed upon her tears had fallen on the grave of the companion of her infancy, she opnce looked round for comfort, for consolation, and felt, for the first time, her loneliness, and the sickness of hope deferred. Fearsome doubts and misgivings, not for her fidelity, but his safety: he again laid on the bed of sickness, and leaden far away! She dwelt on his idea till it became a present reality; suspense was agony: at length resolved on visiting England. She dared, and after a quick voyage, reached the land; a wanderer seeking for happiness, which, like the slender down by the lily on the water, still eludes the grasp. It was not then in the groves of Avengen, she looked back to the British shore; it was in the promised home of a beloved and happy bride. The day after her arrival in London, she drove to her address (for her father during the troubles in Spain, had secured some property in the English funds,) hoping on him to gain some intelligence of Colonel. Passing through a very dead street, her coach becoming jaded in the press, occasioned a stoppage. Gazing round in that [illegible], when, anxious to escape the impressions within, the eye involuntarily [illegible] for others without, her attention was attracted to an elegant equipage.

Could she be mistaken?—never, at form—it was surely Fitzallan!—Well she remembered that form, that air of protection which he supported his comrades! "The agitated Spaniard just caught a glimpse of her slight and delicate figure, of eyes blue as a spring sky, of cheeks of sunset; and, ere her surprise allowed the power of movement, the carriage was out of sight. Her energies returned, and she proceeded to the heart oppressed and disquieted by afflictions, to feel that "There is a calm for those who weep,

A rest for weary pilgrims found—
They softly lie, and sweetly sleep,
Low in the ground.
The storm that wrecks the wintry sky,
No more disturbs their deep repose,
Than summer evening's latest sigh,
That shuts the rose!

The soul, of origin divine,
God's glorious image, freed from clay,
In Heaven's eternal sphere shall shine
A star of day!" MARTHA

ISADORE.

In the church-yard of *, there is a grave covered with no other inscription than "Isadore d'Ereille, aged nineteen." These few words speak histories to the heart; they tell of a beautiful flower wilthered far from its accustomed soil, in the spring-day of its blossom; they tell the fate of a young and unhappy stranger, dying in a foreign country, remote from every early association, her last moments unsoothed by affectionate solicitude:—no tender voice, whose lightest sound breathed happy memories, no eye of fondness to which the fainting mourner might look for sympathy—her very ashes separated from their native earth.

"Might I not fancy myself a hero of affection?" said Colonel Fitzallan, bending gracefully as he caught the small snow white hand which had just arranged his sling; "Fairlady, hence forth I vow myself your true and royal knight, and thus pledge my heart's first homage!" pressing the yielding fingers gently to his lips. Most laboured! Isadore, while those eloquent interpreters of the feeling, a blush, sigh and smile, mingled together—feared not passionately as I love, or he could not trifle thus; a light compliment was never yet breathed by love. Isadore was at that age when the deeper tenderness of woman first dawns from the grave of childhood, like the rainbow that dyes the rose as it expands into summer loveliness. Adored by her father, she had her mother's voice and look, and came a sweet remembrancer of his youth's sole warm friend of manhood, of that love whose joy departed ere it knew one cloud of care, or one sting of sorrow; a vowal of anger secreted to Don Fernando a sacrilege against the dead, and his own melancholy constancy gave a reality to the romantic imaginings of his child. She now loved Fitzallan with all the fervor of first excitement: she had known him under circumstances the most affecting, when the energies and softer feelings of woman were alike called forth; when the proud and fearless soldier became dependent on her he had protected; laid on the bed of sickness, for from the affectionate hands that would have smoothed, the tender eyes that would have wept over his pillow. Isadore became his nurse, soothed with unremitting care the solitude and weariness of a sick room; and when again able to hear the fresh air of heaven, her arm was the support of her too interesting patient.—

"Why Fitzallan, the day of romance was over, a man above thirty cannot enter into the wild vision of an enthusiastic girl, fluttered by the attachment which isadore's every look betrayed, he trifled with her, regardless or thoughtless of the yousng and innocent heart that confided so fearlessly. Love has no power to look forward—the delusions consciousness of the present, a faint but delightful shadow of the past, from its eternity; the possibility of creation never entered the mind of his Spanish love, till Fitzallan's instant return to England became necessary. They parted with all those gentle vows which are such sweet anchors for hope to rest on in absence—but alas, such fair omen! For a time the English lover wrote very regularly. That philosopher knew the human heart who said, "I would generate from my mistress for the sake of writing to her." A word, a look, may be forgotten, but a letter is a lasting memorial of affection. The correspondence soon slacken[illegible] Isadore's anxious fancy [illegible] the promise of happiness, grasps even at the possible evil. One evening she leaned by a window, gazing fondly on the glowing sky of a summer sunset, the cloth color of the cheek, which redeemed the carnation of the west, the intense light of her soft but radiant black eyes, excited almost hope: could the hand of death be on what was so beautiful? for the first time she asked for her lute; hitherto, she had shrunk from the sound of music; Fitzallan had loved it; to her it was the knell of departed love. She waked a few wild and melancholy notes. "These sounds," sighed she, "are to me fraught with tender recollections; it is the vesper hymn of my own country." She mingled her voice with the tones, so faint, so sad, but so sweet, it was like the song of a spirit as the concluding music died away. She looked backward, and Edward for a while supported her head on his shoulder, at length he pushed the thick curls from off her face, and timidly pressed her lips—he started from their thrilling touch—it was his first kiss—Isadore had expired in his arms!

(From the American Daily Adv.)

MADDER.

Bladen Hatch, 27, 1828.

Mr. Poulson, Please to publish the letter I herewith transmit for public benefit. The writer wants and will receive the thanks of the society, for his patriotic endeavour to introduce into our country, a most valuable dye-stuff. It will be too late in the season to wait for a regular meeting of the society, to obtain their directions for the distribution of the roots. I have, therefore, requested the secretary, Mr. William S. Warder, by and with the advice of the vice presidents and curators, to cause the roots to be distributed to and among such applicants as in their judgment, will do justice to their cultivation.

I am, moreover, convinced, that an entire change in the farming of those who live near, or with an extensive circuit around our city, will conduce to their essential and indispensable advantage, and to the prosperity of the city, which will become one of the first manufacturing cities in the United States, when the inland supplies of coal, iron and other native products arrive at full protection, and which will then be most indispensably required.

It therefore behooves our farmers and gardeners, immediately to begin the cultivation of all such articles as will be in extensive demand, and of thereof will be more important than the madder. It requires time (three years,) to perfect its availability, and it yields, 100 kinds of Chinn and India roots, and 15 varieties of the Asiatic rose—Enduring the rigour of the severest winters unshurned, and yielding with so little attention such a rich accumulation of beauty and fragrance, every garden should possess at least all the more conspicuous varieties of this unrivalled flower; and it is hoped, ere long, we shall see the fashion followed in this country, which has for years prevailed in England, of training the lovely climbing varieties of the Chinese and other twining roses against the sides of our country houses and cottages, as the profusion of flowers which they yearly afford, during the autumn, leaves no room to question these rural cottages, degree of rural enchantment, which the sight of a single cottage round the spot.

Soil.—Generous, with few exceptions, delighted in a light fresh soil, subject to ploughing, spade, with frill & wet. I have found a mellow loam very successful in causing them to flourish, and yielding the vigorous growth and abundance of flowers, that rose can be by no means difficult to accomplish, when planted on a very dry chalky soil. The Single Yellow, and Red and Yellow Austrian, bloom freely in almost any soil, and will bloom on sand. There are various other yellow roses, viz: the Single and Double Yellow Scotch, the Yellow Tea-scented, the the Yellow Multiflora, &c.

Black flowers—The desideratum of a black rose has long been a subject of comment, but does not in fact exist. Those so denominated are of an exceeding deep purple color, with some shade of black intermingled. Of these there are darker from others, and they vary in point of size, form, and in being more or less double, &c. The annexed has been separated from the others, those which are there considered the darkest or blackest, which have all produced flowers; is in consequence able to give his opinions with accuracy. The darkest of these is the La Belle Africaine next one is the Imperial, the Sable, the Black Mogul, and the Glorious Superba Noir; then follow the other dark varieties enumerated in the catalogue, including the Tuscany, which was a few years since the darkest of the Black roses, and is still considered as one of the most beautiful roses.

Tricolour, or Belle Alliance.—This is a most singular and beautiful rose; there is no accounting for the variegations it is in appearance. When first expanded, the petals are a fine red, striped with white, the rose afterwards changes to shades of lilac, united with the red and white, at which period it is most striking. I was obtained from a very skilful florist in the interior of Holland, and by him more highly prized than any other rose in his collection.

Sweetbrier, or Eglantine.—This delightful species of the rose family is cultivated for its fragrant leaves on the sides of houses, or up the pillars of the piazza, or to intermingle with the other rose bushes in the flower-garden. There are a number of varieties, the most common is the Single Red, which is found frequently in hedges in a wild state; the Double Red, Double Blush, Double Marbled, Double White, the Evergreen, and the Chinese White. Some of these grows large as a middle sized rose, an two inches in diameter. After training them in the direction they are to occupy, the branches may be inoculated with numerous other kinds of roses at a considerable height from the ground, which will render them particularly interesting.

Propagation.—The rose is generally increased by suckers from the root, or by layers; there are also many varieties which succeed by cuttings, but these are principally the Chinese varieties. They may also be increased by inoculating and grafting; but these seldom survive beyond the third year, when others should be budded from them to supply their places.

Varieties.—These are so numerous, that it is impossible to give descriptions of them in this limited work. Many of them, however, have brief remarks attached to their names in the catalogue, descriptive to their differences. Affixed the author's collection is very numerous, still the selections have been made with great care, and they contains a rich accumulation of the varied beauties of this favourite flower. I will now proceed to make a few remarks relative to some particular varieties.

Moss Rose.—Of this there are a number of varieties, varying in color, size, and other circumstances. The one most generally known is the Red Moss. The others are Blush moss, with very large flowers of an exceedingly delicate color, and by many considered to surpass all others; the Network moss, and the Scarlet moss are very fine; the White and the Striped moss, the Small moss, Dark moss, Perpetual moss, &c. are also much admired, and the whole form an unique collection in this family of flowers.

Yellow Roses.—There appears to exist some difficulty in making a Double yellow to flower well; I will therefore remark, that it requires a dry situation, and in dryad and gravelly soils; and that the old wood should be cut cost near the ground every autumn, which will cause a succession of lovely blooming shoots. When budded on the Common China, or the White rose, it is said to bloom exceedingly well; and one instance is mentioned by Loudon, where it was budded on the China rose at the height of 6ps feet from the ground, in which case it was found to flower abundantly.

The following remarks are also extracted from his Magazine.

The Double Yellow rose flowers better on an east or west, or even a north wall, than on one exposed to the south; it should never be pruned farther than by cutting out the dead and injured shoots, and thinning out the blossom buds; it has flowered under such treatment for several years on the south and west end of a house. The flowers as freely budded on the Rosa indica as Rose odorata does on the Common Blush rose. Another writer recommends a northern aspect in preference to a southern one, and measures one that bloomed on a tree on an east or north-east wall, and others that had produced abundance of flowers when planted on a very dry chalky soil. The Single Yellow, and Red and Yellow Austrian, bloom freely in almost any soil, and will bloom on sand. There are various other yellow roses, viz: the Single and Double Yellow Scotch, the Yellow Tea-scented, the the Yellow Multiflora, &c.

Black flowers—The desideratum of a black rose has long been a subject of comment, but does not in fact exist. Those so denominated are of an exceeding deep purple color, with some shade of black intermingled. Of these there are darker from others, and they vary in point of size, form, and in being more or less double, &c. The annexed has been separated from the others, those which are there considered the darkest or blackest, which have all produced flowers; is in consequence able to give his opinions with accuracy. The darkest of these is the La Belle Africaine next one is the Imperial, the Sable, the Black Mogul, and the Glorious Superba Noir; then follow the other dark varieties enumerated in the catalogue, including the Tuscany, which was a few years since the darkest of the Black roses, and is still considered as one of the most beautiful roses.

Tricolour, or Belle Alliance.—This is a most singular and beautiful rose; there is no accounting for the variegations it is in appearance. When first expanded, the petals are a fine red, striped with white, the rose afterwards changes to shades of lilac, united with the red and white, at which period it is most striking. I was obtained from a very skilful florist in the interior of Holland, and by him more highly prized than any other rose in his collection.

Sweetbrier, or Eglantine.—This delightful species of the rose family is cultivated for its fragrant leaves on the sides of houses, or up the pillars of the piazza, or to intermingle with the other rose bushes in the flower-garden. There are a number of varieties, the most common is the Single Red, which is found frequently in hedges in a wild state; the Double Red, Double Blush, Double Marbled, Double White, the Evergreen, and the Chinese White. Some of these grows large as a middle sized rose, an two inches in diameter. After training them in the direction they are to occupy, the branches may be inoculated with numerous other kinds of roses at a considerable height from the ground, which will render them particularly interesting.

JOB PRINTING,
SUCH AS
Handbills, Cards, Blanks,
PAMPHLETS, &c.
Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms.
At the Office of the Village Herald.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

[illegible] Congress commenced and continued its sessions during the week ending on Saturday last, when the following business was transacted:

[illegible] Observations on the Culture of the Vine; Observations on the Culture of the Mulberry; Remarks on experiments made last season, by W. B. Buchanan, of Warren—Extracts from late English Papers, On Agriculture, Trades, &c.—The Potato, increased cultivation recommended, with remarks on the value of an acre and the manufacture of the Fibre—Rye Flour for bread, by Sir John Sinclair—Salt added to Dung for Manure—Remarks on the Cotton Trade—Steam and Wind Power—Improved breed of cattle in Pennsylvania—Cotton Seed—Whiskey—Valuable Manure from Sea Weed—Information to Manufacturers—To Destroy Weevil among Grain—Cotton Seed—Form of construction of an Improved Beehive—Tide Mills at Easton, Md.—Baltimore and Susquehanna Railroad Stock—Draught of a horse on a Rail-way—Trade on Canals in Pennsylvania—Rates of Tolls in England, on Canals—Poetry, Woman—Thoughts on Female Education—Trotting Match—Walking—Poetry, Life's Chase—Blood Hounds—Pedigree of Young Paul Jones—Premiums offered by the Pennsylvania Soc. for the Promotion of the Culture of the Mulberry and the Raising of Silk—Advertisements—Prices.

Agriculture.

In order to disseminate extensively the numerous advantages which flow from the development of new resources and valuable improvements in the Agricultural World, it is reasonable that every farmer who wishes to promote the accumulation and distribution of practical knowledge, must prove of the final importance. A Periodical Publication devoted to these purposes, if conducted with spirit and industry, cannot prove otherwise than eminently useful.

Under these impressions, the Publishers have determined on offering to the agricultural community, the Farmer's Magazine, as a repository of useful information; satisfied they cannot fail to render a more valuable service, or better contribute to its permanent prosperity, than in advancing, as they hope to do, its agricultural interests.

The leading feature of this publication will be sustained by original or simple resources, united to the promised contributions of several Agricultural Societies, and the assistance of distinguished agriculturists, in this and other states.

The Literary and Scientific department will be conducted by a gentleman heretofore editor of a popular literary journal.

In furtherance of their views, the publishers solicit original contributions on Agriculture, Horticulture, Rural and Domestic Economy, and the co-operation of agriculturalists and the friends of Agriculture throughout the country, to whom is respectfully submitted the following

PROPOSALS

For publishing in the City of Philadelphia, Pa.

THE PRACTICAL

FARMER'S MAGAZINE,

OR

Agricultural and Literary Gazette.

THE FARMER'S MAGAZINE is designed to contain information drawn from Authentic Sources relative to the improvement of the Agricultural and Domestic Farms, sources of manure, number and kind of Stock, farming utensils, implements, Horticulture, Rural Improvements; drawings and descriptions of Useful Inventions; critical notices and reviews of such publications as may tend to the interests of the Husbandman; improvements in the breed of Domestic Animals; accounts of such Foreign and Domestic trees, shrubs, vines, plants, seeds and the establishment of new resources or useful for subsistence, comfort or ornament, with information relative to the cultivation of the various esculent kinds of soil, &c.; and in short, whatever may tend to increase the product of the farm and promote the Rural Economy of the country.

Insertion will always be given to such Essays, Addresses and Reports, as may be communicated for publication, by the several Agricultural Societies of this and other states.

A Land Register will contain as far as practicable, a list of farms, which are now, or may hereafter be, for Sale, specimens of their size, situation, quality and such other particulars as may be deemed Useful.

Space will be allotended the Solid and Sterling Beauties of Literature, the useful arts and science, Chemistry, Natural History and Philosophy, Biography and Travels, states of the Markets in the principal Sea Ports, &c. &c.

TERMS.

The Farmer's Magazine will be published semi-monthly, at Three dollars, payable either at the time of subscribing, or on receipt of the first number. The publication has been adopted, which is deemed most convenient for binding, while the quality of the paper, the beauty of the type, (entirely new) and the general execution of the work, will be such, as it is hoped will reflect credit on the Publishers, and gratify its patrons.

42-Address (post paid) Thomas C. Clarke, agent for the Proprietors, No. 48, Market St. Phil'a.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Charles Jones, use of Greenbury Toule, use of William Dent against Matthias Wisner and others, seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—Four head of cattle, 1 bay mare, 1 feather bed and furniture, 1 corner cupboard, 1 bureau, 1 pine table, one walnut table, 1 set of chairs, one tract of land 2 acres of land called "Hazzard," which I shall proceed to sell at public sale, on Saturday the 24th day of May, next, between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M and 3 o'clock P. M. on the premises, when and where, or when there is no sale on the premises, the same will be kept open and adjourned from day to day, until the sale is made, when and where attendance will be given by the undersigned, the goods disposed of, and the proceeds of sale applied to satisfy the above mentioned writs. Sale to commence at 10 o'clock A. M. and to be continued

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATIS.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, MAY 6, 1828.

PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

☞We this week occupy a considerable portion of our paper with documents concerning military executions, which give the finishing stroke in refutation of the venal charges bro't against the Hero of New Orleans. We ask not to these the attention of those who got up the infamous story about Jackson's murdering six militia-men; nor of those who industriously circulated, for political effect, the vile forgeries relating thereto, knowing them to be false and groundless, and believing at the same time in their hearts that Jackson only did his duty. These deceivers of the unsuspecting and uninformed may continue to whine, and whine, and whine, with Binns and his coffins in their van, until their hypocritic moans commingle with the elegiac notes of those who'll be left to chant the funeral dirge of Adams' corrupt administration. But we most respectfully ask the attention of the impartial, honest, serious seekers after truth to these documents. They emanate from the highest sources—they are the productions of the only persons capable of giving such facts, as they reveal, from experience and actual observation. They will not—they cannot be doubted. And no man whose heart glows with the love of country, or feels the kindlings of patriotism, can read the statements given in this day's paper, without concurring with us in the opinion that Gen. Jackson was bound by custom and by law to do what he did do, and that in doing this he rendered us a service for which we should ever esteem him as a Soldier—as a Patriot—as a Man worthy the confidence of a free People.

The Administration men, generally speaking, do not sincerely believe that Gen. Jackson is incompetent to the faithful discharge of the duties of Chief Magistrate. They only affect such belief with a view to persuade those who are unacquainted with the character of the General, that he is an ignorant pretender—which is an insult to the understanding of any republican. Nor do they believe that he will ever suffer himself to become the servile tool of any man, or any set of men.—And although they tauntingly allege this as a reason for withholding their support from him, the very contrary is one of the most powerful motives that ever urged them on in propagating slanderous forgeries with a view to defeat the election of one of our country's greatest friends. We believe the fact to be this:—the grand objections of the Coalition to the People's Candidate lie in his being the powerful rival of John Q. Adams,—who, on his elevation to the Presidency, will not enquire who recommends a man to office, but what recommends him. If we were asked what lead us to believe thus, we should point to the sentiments expressed by many of his present revilers at a time when they entertained no fears of his becoming President. Of such is the following from the Albany Daily Advertiser, (now an Adams paper) of 1824:

"The following eulogium upon the character of Gen. Jackson is taken from ex-president "Monroe's Tour" published in 1819, before there was an idea of Gen. Jackson becoming a candidate for the presidency. Let the opponents of the hero look at this and bide their shamed faces.

☞In ANDREW JACKSON, commander in chief of the division of the south, the president found a MAN fit for any emergency—a STATESMAN cool and dispassionate—a SOLDIER, terrible in battle and mild in victory—a PATRIOT, whose bosom swelled with the love of country—in fine, a man, 'whose like we scarce shall look upon again.'"

☞In our next paper we shall give some particulars concerning the LICENSE LAW.

☞The Orphans Court of Somerset County will sit on Tuesday the 20th instant.

RULES, ARTICLES, &c.

By the 7th article of the Rules and Articles of War, "Any officer or soldier, who shall begin, excite, or join in any mutiny or sedition, in any troop or company in the service of the U. States, or in any party, post, detachment, or guard, shall suffer death, or such other punishments, as, by a Court Martial, shall be inflicted." By the 8th article, a similar penalty is awarded, where any officer or soldier "does not use his utmost endeavors to suppress a mutiny, or, coming to the knowledge of an intended mutiny, does not, without delay, give information thereof to his commanding officer." And, by the 20th article, the crime of desertion, is punishable by death, or such other punishments, as by sentence of a Court Martial shall be inflicted."

This is the law under which the court-martial, convened for the trial of the six militia-men, found them guilty of the crimes therein deemed punishable with death, and accordingly sentenced them to be shot. The sentence was forwarded to Gen. Jackson for his approval. He examined the charges preferred against them—mutiny—desertion—plundering the public stores, &c. The men who composed the court-martial were their own officers, their neighbours at home, their companions in the camp, and if sympathy, or affection, or tender ties could have influenced, or biassed, them sufficiently to mitigate the punishment, doubtless it would have been alleviated. But the law was explicit—it was plain—so plain that "the way-faring man, though a fool," could have adjudged them guilty of no other punishment than DEATH. This judgment was approved by Gen Jackson, and this was obviously correct. Had he disapproved it, we should now have the whining political hypocrites of our day as busily engaged in traducing the General, for trampling under foot the rules and articles of war—for setting at nought the just sentence of an impartial court-martial and making his own will the sole rule of action—and for permitting mutinous deserters to go at large unpunished, as they are in fabricating lies, and forging letters, to render "the last hope of our country," odious in the eyes of the uninformed. But all this whining about the six militia-men is demonstration strong of what the Adams men would be at: They wish to bring into vogue the doctrines of the reign of terror—They are openly and daringly labouring to do away the principle that the militia are subject to martial law. Now, let this wish of their hearts be consummated, and what will be the consequence? Regular troops must be employed to fight our battles. Yes! the horrible doctrines of the elder Adams will be revived—Large standing armies in times of Peace, and the subversion of our sacred Liberties will follow! Reader! pause and reflect.—You dare not remain indifferent. The cause of your Country, the cause of sacred Freedom is at stake!! But one path of redemption opens to our view —the vigilance and activity of the People in the approaching contest! And what man, who holds himself not less than man, will shrink from his duty? A duty made not only sacred, but imperative by the glorious example of our Revolutionary fathers, the voice of whose entombed spirits issues forth invoking you to rally to the standard of republicanism, and once more redeem the republic from the scourge & the stigma of the Reign of Terror.

WEST POINT ACADEMY.

The Coalition party denounced, as enemies to the country, the Jacksonians who dared to make enquiries relative to the expenditures of this institution. And why? Because they very well knew that facts would be brought to light exhibiting to the honest farmers, mechanics, &c. (whom the elder Adams denominated "the common people—designed to labour,") how their money is squandered by the present extravagant and corrupt administration. The Visiters to this Academy cost in

1817	$00 00
1818	00 00
1819	481 37
1820	175 60
1821	167 50
1822	51 00
1823	265 16
1824	624 54
1825	870 48
1826	2,745 25
1827	2,253 51
1828	3,000 00	asked for.

It is only necessary to add, that last year, the expense of Visiters was paid from the contingent fund of the War Department, which, including that item, was $10,000. The estimates of the War Department, for the current year, are $15,000 for the contingent fund, and $3,000 for Visiters, making an increase in one year, from 10 to $18,000.

"MY LORDS, THE KING HAS BEEN SHOT AT."

Such was, in substance, a message to the British parliament from the King occasioned by the attempt of a crack-brained enemy of royalty, to shoot his majesty with an air-gun, some thirty years ago, or more, while his majesty was parading the streets of London, in his stage coach. Little did we ever expect, that in our day, and in our country, we should have witnessed a more absurd and ridiculous farce, to satisfy the offended dignity of a member of the President's house. Mr. Adams, in the most solemn manner, has thought proper to send a message to congress, announcing that his son had been insulted—"that the king's" heir "had been shot at."—What is the amount of this mighty offence? It appears that Col. Jarvis accompanied his father-in-law, a warm administration man—and several ladies from Massachusetts, on a respectful visit to one of the levees. While there, the ladies were so grossly insulted by the young heir-apparent, that Col. Jarvis deemed it his duty to require an apology for his ungentlemanly conduct to the company; and all his efforts to obtain an explanation proving fruitless, he determined to resent the injury on the first opportunity. He met him in the rotunda of the capitol, and deliberately tweaked his highness nose, and slapped his face for his impertinence.

We are not the advocates of disorder, and indeed we would go as far as any man in the community, to observe the most rigid decorum, more especially towards the officers of government. We may disapprove the measures of our rulers,—we may believe them to be actuated by improper motives, but whenever individuals are constitutionally placed in office we would maintain and enforce the observance of every respect to which they are entitled, & would punish the least violation of their rights and privileges On the other hand, every individual, —the humblest man in the community,—has his inherent rights and privileges;—and no rich Satrap or proud Don, in this land of liberty, can wantonly assail them, without undergoing the penalty of his insolence. Ever since the institution of this government, public levees have been held at the President's house or palace, and the doors are thrown open on those days for the reception of all parties, nations, and visiters of every denomination, whom curiosity or respect may lead there. The establishment is furnished & supported at the expense of the people of the United States, and every citizen has not only a right to attend, but to take with him his friends and acquaintance. And however the fact may be disguised, it is certain, that every person who conducts, himself as a gentleman at these parties, is considered fully entitled to the common courtesies between man and man. Admit, for argument sake, that the President would not cheerfully extend the usual civilities to Col. Jarvis, can that circumstance justify the unnecessary insults lavished on the ladies under his protection, by Mr. John Adams, jun?—Such rudeness is at variance will all decency and propriety.

It may be said, that Col. Jarvis, being one of Mr. Adams's political opponents, ought not to have visited the President's house;—but this objection does not always hold good. Persons of the slightest observation, every day notice political adversaries extending mutual civilities, in the various and multiform relations of life. For our part, we protest against all such violent and party feelings, which would create rudeness in our intercourse with the world. If these levees are restricted to the advocates of the "puritan and the black leg," they must afford no pleasing spectacle of the popularity of the present dynasty. Fastidious people may reprobate the course; but the fact often occurs we presume, that necessity, like that of Col. Jarvis's, might induce persons to gratify their connexions, by witnessing this display of style on the part of the President,—the doors being indiscriminately thrown open to receive the American people.

We shall await the further development of this matter, while we regret that private and personal altercations should require the intervention of both branches of congress. It admits of a question, how far the son of Mr. Adams exceeded his power, by his unparalelled conduct to a guest of his father's house. Old Dominion.

From the Baltimore Republican.

We this morning continue our report of the Committee of H. of R. on Expenditures in the Department of State. We commence with the following quotation from that report:

"Such are the charges of $25 for the portrait of Washington, and $10 for a medal, and $13 for a print of the President of the United States, which though of inconsiderable amount, nevertheless involve principle to as great an extent as would a larger amount. If the head of a Department can (consistently with principle) apply the contingent funds appropriated for the current expenses of this office to discretion, save that of the fund at his disposal; which if sufficiently ample he might apply to the erection of a monument on the public ground, to perpetuate the memory of whomsoever he might think proper."

This is another piece of information which will surprise the American People. The image of Washington should be not only in our houses but in our hearts. If it be proper to have it in the offices at Washington, Congress ought to appropriate the money; no Jackson man will object. But if the Secretary of State has a right to buy one picture, he may buy another by the same right, and thus be would have it in his power to pension any one of his minions, who happened to be a painter, of he might, (for we have no confidence in the principles on the discretion of Mr. Clay,) to daub the walls of the office with caricatures, and coffin handbills, for the amusement of the Sultan and his Janizaries, at the public expense. That the Secretary should have charged the portrait of the present Chief Magistrate to the contingent fund is still more surprising. We think, that when a man wishes to have a likeness of his friend he should pay for it himself.

"The committee, upon contrasting the expenditures of the State Department for the three last years, with those years which preceded them, cannot (consistently with that economy which should be exercised in the disbursement of public money) account for the increased expenditure. From the statement annexed to the report of the former committee, made to the House in the session of 1824-5 the expenditures of the Department for those years amounted to the sum of $35,311 18, averaging something more than $17,000 per annum; when the expenditures for each of the years embraced in the inquiries of the committee, will average more than $32,000."

Thus the expenditures in the State Department during the last three years, that is, since Mr. Adams came into office, have been nearly double what they were during the three years preceding. This is a specimen of the economy of the actual administration.

"The Committee beg leave to add, that, from the document A, it appears that the sum of $197 was paid to Peter Force, out of the contingent fund of the department, for publishing proclamations of Indian treaties, when, from a referrence to the act of Congress of May 1820, it will appear that the publication of such treaties is expressly confined to one paper, and that to be within the limits of the state or territory to which the subject-matter of such treaty shall belong."

Peter Force is an Adams editor at Washington and conducts that infamous press the National Journal, a paper whose depravity is only to be compared with its excessive dullness and insipidity; if Mr. Clay has found the means to reward this pander from the contingent fund, in direct contravention of law, who can tell what use he may not have made of that fund under the pretext of lawful appropriation.

"The committee have adverted to the estimates presented for each of the years to which they have extended their inquiries, as to the sum necessary to meet the exigences of the Department for extra clerk hire, which they find has uniformly been $1000—that sum for the three years would amount to $3,000; when, in fact, there was expended; during that period, more than four times that amount. Under the act of 20th April, 1818, (which regulated the amount of the specific appropriation for the clerk of the Department,) there was appropriated for the year 1825 and '26, each, the sum of $15,900 for clerks. By the act of 2d March, 1827, there was addition of $4,400 made to the former appropriation; making the sum of $20,300 for that year; notwithstanding which, there was expended of the contingent fund for extra clerk hire, more than 1000 over the expenditure of 1825, for the same object."

From this it appears that Mr. Adams, although he was aware that the appropriation of the preceding years had been insufficient, nevertheless neglected to apply to Congress for an increase of it. The manifest design of that forbearance was this; that the smaller the sum specifically appropriated should be, the larger would be the contingent fund at his and Mr. Clay's disposal, to purchase future, and pay for past services themselves.

When at length the vigilant servants of the people in Congress discover the deficiencies and cause the appropriation to be increased so as to correspond with the increased expenditures of preceding years, and thus diminish the fund, previously abandoned to the uncontrolled use of our Electioneering Cabinet, Mr. Adams unwilling to yield that powerful weapon, the national purse, keeps his expenditures ahead of the appropriation, and thus reserves $1000 for secret service money. Instead of courting an examination of his accounts, he shuns it and flies beyond the reach of investigation. Suspicion has pursued and reason has detected him.

From the same.

In the remark, which appeared in this paper of Monday, on the subject of the signs in Delaware, it is as pleasant as it is remarkable, to observe the great "reaction" which has taken place in that state, since the Presidential election in 1824. We are informed that Philip Short Esq. was at that period almost the only friend of General Jackson in Sussex county; but on the day of the meeting of Jackson's friends at his Inn in Georgetown, there were about 550 of them assembled.—After the meeting adjourned, 104 being determined to "make a day of it," as they say in Ireland, sat down to an excellent dinner, provided in a hospitable Jackson style by Mr. Short. We have no fears about Delaware.

From the Delaware Gazette.

As you were.—After an absence of near two weeks from home, we find ourselves again seated in our editorial chair, and our pen employed in communicating our observations to our readers.

In the course of the tour which we have just completed through the lower part of our Peninsula, we have enjoyed frequent opportunities of conversing with men of the best information; and who have always been held in the highest esteem in their different neighbourhoods, and the information which we have received from them upon the subject of politics, is of the most encouraging and animating kind to the friends of the purity of elections and to the election of General Andrew Jackson to the chair of Chief Magistrate of the country. Our old friends in Sussex are presenting an almost unbroken front in favor of the candidate of the people; and almost the whole of the best men of the two parties into which the people of the state have hitherto been divided, are now found mingling their voices and energies in favor of the same great cause. The Robinsons, Coopers, Payntens, Burtons, Williamses, Millers, Rosses, Polks, Stockleys, Bulls, Hickmans, Wests, Smiths, Cannons, Powells, Cullens, &c. &c. men hitherto divided and at the head of the two opposite parties, are now moving hand in hand in support of the good cause, while upon the side of Adams we find as the leaders Mr. Layton and Purnal Johnson! Astonishing efforts have been employed to mislead the minds of the people, in relation to the two Presidential candidates; but light is now penetrating the mists of misrepresentation and falsehood, which has been raised by the friends of the Administration, and a moving has commenced in the waters of public sentiment which must inevitably sweep away the refuges of lies in which they have been trusting. The current has set in which must carry all before it; and our friends may rest assured that the success of the Jackson ticket in Sussex county, in October next, is the next thing to certain.

We hope, however, that our friends will not in the least relax in their exertions; but that in the good work in which they have engaged, they will persevere with unwearied dilligence until corruption is driven from office, and upstart pride and grovelling impudence are reduced to their proper level.

The means which have been resorted to by the advocates of our present corrupt cabinet to sustain their sinking cause, are such as must excite astonishment and disgust in every unprejudiced and honorable mind.

'Unexpected' from Louisiana!

From the Albany Argus, April 28.

LOUISIANA.—Extract of a letter to a gentleman in this city, from his correspondent in New Orleans, dated, April 9, 1828—"We held our election yesterday for city officers; and we beat them in their strong hold, in every ward where we had our candidates This settles the presidential question in this state, as this was the only hope. It is the people vs. the aristocracy, and this state is safe."

Another account says:—

"The Elections in New Orleans have terminated in nearly as complete a defeat to the Adams party as did the late elections in New York. Mr. Peychaud was nominated candidate for the office of mayor by the friends of Mr. Adams, and the utmost exertions were used to secure his election. His competitor was Mr. Denis Prieur, who has been elected by 898 votes to 521. The Jackson ticket, says the Louisiana Advertiser, prevailed by handsome majorities in every ward but one, and in that ward, had a majority of two votes out of 140 that were given in. Of the twelve members who composes the city council, all are in favour of General Jackson but two. The Adams papers in that city are somewhat melancholy on the subject One of them says the election has terminated in favour of Mr. Prieur, "by a large and unexpected majority." We recommend to the Adams paty to moderate their expectations, which have hitherto, in almost every instance, so wofully deceived them. General Jackson is the candidate of the people, and the people will elect him."

GROANS.—The editor of the Steubenville Herald, one of the thick and thin supporters of the coalition, finding that Adams' fate is sealed, and that the Hero of New Orleans will to a certainty be our next president, thus gives vent to his feelings:

"Is it not a sure sign that the best days of our republic are past, when a large portion of the people are to be found, who would elect a military chieftain to guide to peace and happiness twelve millions of inhabitants! Is it not a sign that "the world's last best hope" is on the downhill road to that which destroys all republics—military despotism?"

This is the old aristocratic song—The people are their own worst enemies—they are unfit to govern themselves.—What a pity it is, that they don't delegate all power to a select few of the well-born, according to Mr. Adams' notion. All then would be well.—American Sentinel.

A Sign in Boston.—Hyatt, in playing Billy Black for his benefit, at the Tremont, attempted to read some conundrums, reflecting on Gen. Jackson—he was hissed so loudly, that he came to the foot lights and burned the paper.

WAR.—A rumor is afloat that war has once more broken out in Europe. The London Observer of the 16th March states that the Russian Ambassador received despatches from his court, containing the Emperor's declaration of war against Turkey. But, the following contradicts this rumor:

In the House of Commons, on the evening of the 22d March, Sir R. Wilson asked if it was intended to sustain the treaty of the 6th July, and whether there had been any order to prevent provisions being sent to the Turkish stations in the Morea? Mr. Secretary Peel said there was no change in the views of government as to the treaty, and no notice has been received of any change in the Russian relations, or of any declaration of war by Russia against Turkey. When such intelligence arrived, it would be time enough to state the views of government. The instruction respecting the Morea continued, and the attention of the admirals was called to them.

Dreadful Occurrence.—As Mr. Geo. Love, in Berre, Orleans county, on the 18th ult. was cutting wood near a maple sugar manufactory, his wife dodging from the flame which a gust of wind blew in her face, threw her head under her husband's axe, which descended upon her neck, and severed the muscles and tendons and entered the bone. The unfortunate woman, with medical aid, survived a number of days, and left her miserable husband and three children to mourn her loss. Mr. Love was so terribly afflicted by the first shock as never to retain his perfect senses and on the day of her death left his house in a state of derangement; and though searched for on the day of the funeral, in every direction, by an hundred men, has not yet been found.

We are authorized to announce

William Done, Esq.

as a Candidate for the next General Assembly of Maryland.

April 6, 1828. jw

Samuel & William Meeteer,

PAPER

MANUFACTURERS.

No. 3 Market Street, Baltimore.

CASH OR GOODS GIVEN FOR

RAGS,

IN LARGE OR SMALL PARCELS.

☞It is recommended to those who bring Rags to market, to apply at our Store, as the surest way of obtaining the highest market price.

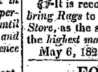
May 6, 1828. mm

FOR SALE,



A new and fast-sailing VESSEL, of 31 tons burden, well built, of the best materials, and well rigged.

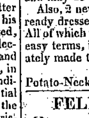
Also, a WINDMILL, the materials of which are of the best quality, (post cap and cog wheel black walnut,) stands about 50 feet from the water, and may be easily removed.

Also, 2 new MASTS, 45 feet long, ready dressed to put into a vessel—All of which the subscriber will sell on easy terms, if application be immediately made to

HENRY MADDUX.

Potato-Neck, May 6. mv

FELIX JENKINS,



Saddle, Harness AND Trunk Maker,

No. 10, South Street, BALTIMORE,

Respectfully informs his friends, customers, and the public generally, that he continues to carry on the Saddlery, Harness, and Trunk Making Business, in all its variety, and on the most extensive scale. He has lately received from England, per the ship Philip Tabb, an assortment of articles in his line. Country merchants will find it to their interest to call at No. 10 South street, and to examine the qualities and prices of his goods, as he is determined to sell as low as they can be purchased in Philadelphia.

☞A liberal discount will be made for cash or town acceptances.

April 15 jdm

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of the State of Maryland against James W. Dashiell and John Jones of Benj. will be sold at public sale, on Friday the 16th day of May next, on the premises, the following property, to wit: four hundred and forty eight acres of land, more or less, by the name of 'Meache's Desert' and part of 'Discovery,' one negro man Charles, one do. John, one do. Jasper, one do. William, the property of said James; Also three hundred and fifty-seven acres of land, more or less, by the name of 'Belgrave,' part of Shadwell, part of Store-Yard, one negro man Philip, one do. Joe, one do. Nelson, one do. David, the property of said John. Sale to commence between the hours of 10 and 12 o'clock A. M.—Attendance by

ROBT. STEWART.

April 28—M6 late Shff.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suits of the Union Manufacturing Company and Zadock Long, use of Henry Langford, use of William Roach, use of Thos. K. Carroll against Robert J. Henry, will be exposed to public sale on Thursday the 23d day of May next at Rehoboth, the following property, to wit: Four lots at Rehoboth—Manlor's lot, Mary's lot, Glascow's lot, Limerick's, lot containing, 977 acres, more or less; Dickerson, Hope, containing 125 acres, more or less, Goose Marsh, containing 50 acres, more or less; Cow Marsh, containing 50 acres more or less, and Convenience, 134 acres, more or less; Also negroes—man Ben, 1 do. George, 1 do. Jacob, 1 do. Tom, 1 boy Stephen, 1 do. John, 1 do. William, 1 do. Edmund, 1 do. Joe, 1 negro woman Susan, 1 do. Bridget, 1 girl Milly, 1 man Titus, 1 do. James, 1 boy Charles, 1 girl Rachael, 1 do. Betsey, 4 yoke of oxen, 40 head of cattle, 45 head of sheep, fifty head of hogs, one horse, two yoke of mules, 1000 bushels of corn, more or less, 2000 weight of pork and bacon, more or less, and I give notice that on the day above mentioned I shall proceed to sell the same to satisfy the above claims with the interest and cost due and to become due.

Attendance by

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

May 6, 1828. 2t

ask the reader's attention to der of Governor Blount, and dress of General Jackson to ave Tennesseeans," and ask has any longer doubts, that Six militia men" were order for the term of SIX months. him, if he any longer doubts, knew they were called out months. Does not Governor order to Gen. Jackson ex tate it? Does not Gen Jack dress to them apprize them sk him to read the letter of Edward Livingston, and the assertion of the Adams at the "six militia men" were after the news, or the rumor had reached New Orleans, infamous lie. Was not the s, the first rumor of Peace, to New Orleans by Mr. Liv And at what time does he fix 18th or 19th of February. id Gen. Jackson approve the of the Court Martial? On the second of January—27 days be a rumor of Peace.

ask him to read the letter of Armstrong, and tell us, if he feel convinced, that the exe of the "six militia men" was ry as an example to the army ng at Mobile? Were not our here restless, under their pri and ready to break out into subordination? And if these us mutineers and deserters pardoned before their eyes, ot they too, have been encour mutiny and desert? Was there er from the enemy? Does not Armstrong tell us, that they daily expectation of an attack enemy? Had'nt they actually possession of Dauphin Island? Armstrong tells us too, that the of Peace had not reached Mo hen the execution took place there was but one sentiment ed in the army with regard to xecution—that of approval of its effects were evident, in oration of order, subordination ood discipline—that there was murmur of complaint on the ther of the troops, who were the rs of "six militia men," or of prits themselves—that he con with them, and they blamed but those engaged with them.

ask him to read the letter of Gaines, and say whether he ot believe that Gen. HARRI Gen. PORTER, the late Ma eral BROWN, and every ficer in the army, would have exactly as Gen. Jackson did?— Gen. Gaines would have so act evident Gen. Gaines' letter is tant too, as it shows some of the rous consequences of desertion. ws, that in the first 2 years of war, the desertions were so nu is, that the armies of the U. S. seriously weakened by them, the objects of the Government ed by them; and, that General RISON and General BROWN compelled to resort to capital ments.

ask him to read the cases of tion of soldiers by General NE, which we publish to-day, mark how the conduct of JACK is borne out by the example of great and good man—a man, united with all the bravery and tion of the soldier, all the meek that peculiarly meek sect from he sprang — the Society of ds.

ere are many other cases than which we publish to-day, of ecution of soldiers, which took under the command of him, who first in war, first in peace, and the hearts of his countrymen,— great WASHINGTON, of the and amiable LAFAYETTE, various other distinguished of the Revolution. B. Rep.

the 16th of January last, the of Representatives passed a tion, directing the Secretary of besides several other documents oned in the Resolution, to furn at House with "copies of any spondence in the War Depart between the President or Secre War and the Governor of ssee, during the late war, on ubject of the time which the militia of said State should be ed to serve in the Armies of the d States."

the 20th May, 1814, Governor issued the following order to al Jackson, at that time an offi the State of Tennessee, of whose the Governor was the Com in Chief.

"Nashville, May 20, 1814.

In compliance with the requisi Major General Thomas Pinck at the posts of Fort Williams, trother, Fort Armstrong, Fort d Forts Old and New Depos ld be kept up, the doing of he has confined to you, until jects of the Government in re to the war against the hostile Indians shall have been fully d; and from the probable expira the time of service of the now occupying those impo sts, commanded by Col. Bunch o a final accomplishment of the of Government in relation to eek war, you will without delay, ut one thousand militia infantry second division, for the term of ths, unless sooner discharged er of the President of the Unit tes, or, you may accept a ten service of the above number of eer infantry from the 2d divi om the aforesaid term, for the purpose of garrisoning the said posts at your option: which latitude in relation to calls for men to act against the Creeks, in furtherance of the views of government in that behalf, is given to me by instructions from the War Department. These troops will be required to rendezvous at Fayetteville on the 20th of June next, thence they will proceed to the above mentioned posts, under your order, in such number to each, as you shall assign. It is important to the public interests, that they should be at their posts between the 1st & 10th of July next, as about that time the term of service of the troops, now there under colonel Bunch, will expire, and at which posts there is much public property committed to their charge.

You will order the muster master to attend and muster the troops into service—you will call on the contractor for provisions, and on the assistant deputy quartermaster likewise, for supplies in his department.

(Signed) WILLIE BLOUNT."

To Maj. Gen. Andrew Jackson, Second division of Tennessee Militia."

Upon the receipt of this order from his superior officer, to whom, and to whom alone, he had any right to look, General Jackson issued the following general order:

General Jackson's order to his Division 24th of May, 1814.

"Brave Tennesseeans of the 2nd division!—The Creek war, through the Divine aid of Providence, and the valor of those engaged in the campaign, in which you bore a conspicuous share, has been brought to a happy termination. Good policy requires that the territory conquered should be garrisoned, and possession retained, until appropriated by the Government of the United States. In pursuance of this policy, and to relieve the troops now stationed at Forts Williams, Strother, and Armstrong, on the Coosa river, as well as Old and New Deposite, I am commanded by his excellency, Governor Blount, to call from my division one thousand men in the service of the United States, for the period of SIX months, unless sooner discharged by order of the President of the United States.

The Brigadier Generals, or officers commanding the 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th and 9th Brigades of the 2d division, will forthwith furnish from their brigades respectively, by draft or voluntary enlistment, two hundred men, with two captains, two first, two second, and two third lieutenants, and two ensigns, well armed and equipped for active service, to be rendezvoused at Fayetteville, Lincoln county, in the State of Tennessee, on the 20th of June next; and then be organized into a regiment, at which place the field officers, and the muster master will be ordered to meet them.

Officers commanding the brigades composing the 2d division of Tennessee militia, are charged with the prompt and due execution of this order.

ANDREW JACKSON, Maj. Gen. Commanding 2d division, M. T."

We ask—where is the above order of Gov. Blount? It was not communicated with the other documents, by the Secretary of War, to Congress! Where is it? Governor Blount has sworn, that he forwarded it to the Secretary of War shortly after he issued it, and we here give his deposition, sworn to before a Justice of the Peace in Tennessee.

State of Tennessee, Montgomery County. }

Be it remembered, that Willie Blount, late Governor of Tennessee, this 1st day of March, 1828, personally appeared before me Hiram Bobo, a Justice of the Peace in and for the County of Montgomery, in the State aforesaid, and he being first duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists of Almighty God, deposeth and saith: that the foregoing purporting to be a copy of an order from him to Major Gen. Andrew Jackson, dated 20th May, 1815, on his files: that the foregoing copy is taken by himself, from the file now in his possession, of his official papers of that date: that a copy of said order was by him transmitted, shortly after its date, by mail, to the War Department: that he has reason to believe, and does believe, that the detachment required by said order to be called out, was regularly mustered agreeably to order, into service, in the month of June, 1814, and that said detachment, to his knowledge, was put under the command of Col. Pipkin, of the Tennessee Militia. And further he saith not.

WILLIE BLOUNT, Late Governor of Tennessee."

"I, Hiram Bobo, Justice of the Peace in the county of Montgomery, State of Tennessee, hereby certify that the foregoing deposition was made and subscribed before me, this 1st day of March, 1828.

HIRAM BOBO, J. P."

We will not ask, what has become of Gen. Jackson's order, because, although we have no doubt it was forwarded to the Secretary of War, we have no means of proving the fact.—But we have given above the deposition of Gov. Blount, that he did forward his order, shortly after it was issued, to the Secretary of War. Where is it? Why was it not furnished to congress with the rest of the documents?

The chief charge of the Adams party against Gen. Jackson with regard to the execution of the "Six Militia Men" has been, that they were not called out for SIX months. All the illegality of the execution, which they have contended for, rested upon this assertion. Governor Blount's order above, gives the death-blow to the charge. But Governor Blount's order was not furnished to the House, by the Secretary of War. How did it happen, that this order which would have so clearly established the fact, that the "Six Militia Men" were called out for SIX months—we say how did it happen, that this order, of all others, was not furnished by the War Department? We believe these documents were in the Department.—We believe they were not furnished, because they would have vindicated the conduct of Gen. Jackson, and brought shame and disgrace upon the instigators, aiders and abettors in this foul conspiracy against his character and his fame. We believe they were suppressed! ib.

House of Representatives, April the 11th, 1828. }

Dear Sir—I desire to be informed at what precise period, the rumour of peace first reached General Jackson at New Orleans in 1815. I have understood that you, on your return from the British fleet to which you had gone to effect an exchange of prisoners, brought the first intelligence which the General received on that subject. If from recollection or any memoranda in your possession you can give me the information it will be esteemed a favour.

I have the honour to be very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES K. POLK.

Hon. Edward Livingston.

Mr. Livingston's Answer.

April 11th, 1828.

Dear Sir—My recollection of the date at which the English account of the signature or the treaty of Ghent, was brought to New Orleans, carries it to the eighteenth or nineteenth of February, 1815.

I was sent to the British fleet to treat for the exchange of prisoners, about the first of February, and was detained there until the fall of Fort Boyer; just as I was leaving the Admiral's ship, the Brazen, sloop of war, came in sight, and I remained until she came up. She brought the first news of the treaty, and I arrived with it at N. Orleans on the 18th or 19th.

My recollection of these dates is strengthened by that of a gentleman, now a visiter at this place, who accompanied me on the mission. The account brought by the Brazen was a Gazette, not an official account of the treaty, and I ought perhaps to add, that very soon after receiving this account General Jackson wrote either to General Lambert or to Admiral Cochrane (I think the former) requesting to know whether he considered the account sufficiently authentic, to justify a cessation of hostilities, to which I think no answer was received until after the eighth of March, when advices were received to induce the General to believe, that the treaty had been ratified at Washington, although even then he had received no despatches from the Government announcing that event. I hope this may be a satisfactory answer to your note of this date,

And am with great respect, your obedient servant,

EDW. LIVINGSTON.

The Hon. Mr. Polk.

Washington City, 11th April, 1828.

Dear Sir—I have received your note of this date, requesting me to state all I may know, in relation to the execution of the "six militiamen" at Mobile in 1815.

In answer I have to state that I joined the army at Mobile, in command of a battalion of the 24th Regiment United States infantry, about the 26th of December, 1814, General Jackson being at that time engaged in the defence of New Orleans. The situation of the army at Mobile was most critical. The troops chiefly militia, suffered much from the scarcity and want of regular supplies of provisions. The enemy, some time after the battle of the 8th of January, made his appearance in the bay, and took possession of Dauphin Island. We expected an attack daily. Subordination in our camp was all important for our safety. We could but take a retrospective view of this desparate mutiny, which had but a short time before taken place at Fort Jackson, and to dread its recurrence in our camp. It was at this awful crisis that General Jackson's order reached us, approving the execution of the "six militia men." The officers conversed freely of the example then about to be made. But one sentiment prevailed. All were deeply impressed with the belief that it was of vital importance to the subordination and future safety of the army, and thought the time propitious for the execution. For myself I have always tho't the example a most fortunate one, both as regards the discipline of the army, and the safety of the country.

I was looking on when those unfortunate men were executed, conversed with them a few minutes before their execution in company with Col. Gilbert C. Rupelt. They spoke feelingly of their approaching fate, but without blame to any one but those engaged in the mutiny. At the time they were executed, we had no news or expectation of peace. I remained myself in camp until after the news of peace arrived, and never heard a murmur of dissatisfaction. There were present two brigades of Tennessee militia, many of them no doubt neighbors to those men, and yet not one word of complaint was heard, either against the Court Martial that tried them, or the commanding General that approved the sentence. All agreed in its necessity and importance. The effects produced on the army by this example was evident; the strictest subordination prevailed; every officer and soldier did his duty, and we were relieved from any apprehension of a mutiny in our camp.

I am very respectfully,
Your ob't servant,

F. W. ARMSTRONG.

To the Hon. James K. Polk, Washington.

Washington City, March 24, 1828.

Dear Sir, Believing that without subordination an army is inefficient and dangerous only to its friends, and that, to enforce it, examples are sometimes indispensable, and knowing that you were in the service of the United States, during the late war, we are induced to ask whether you know of any executions by sentence of courts martial during the war, either of regulars or militia, and if so, under what circumstances, and under whose command.

Latterly, much has been said relative to six or seven soldiers executed under sentence of courts martial in that division of the army commanded by Gen. Jackson, for the purpose of exciting, unjustly, the prejudices of his countrymen against him. We are perfectly satisfied that Gen. Jackson did nothing more than his duty required, and our object in making this inquiry of you is not to impute censure to any other officer, under whose command executions may have taken place, but to shew, if such be the fact, that others, as well as General Jackson, have been constrained for the public good to let the laws have their effect against those convicted of crimes, which, if passed over with impunity, must have rendered the army worse than useless. We will feel obliged by as early an answer as may suit your convenience.

We have the honor to be,
Very respectfully, your ob'd. serv'ts.

HU. L. WHITE.
JAMES K. POLK.

Maj. Gen. E. P. Gaines.

Washington City, March 26, 1828

Gentlemen—In reply to your inquiry whether I know of any executions by sentence of courts martial, either of regulars or militia, and if so, under what circumstances and under whose command—I think it due to the service, as well as to the reputation of my late and present associates, in arms, to say that I have witnessed, during the war in 1813 and 1814, from ten to twelve executions, and that every respectable and efficient commander with whom I have the pleasure to serve, both of the regular army and militia, however much opposed at the commencement of the war to the infliction of capital or ignominious punishment of every kind, was impelled by experience to concur in the opinion, that, without such examples in cases of desertion, mutiny &c. the country would have continued to suffer a succession of disasters, such as those which marked the character of the greater part of the first two years of the war.

The first execution which I witnessed was near Franklintown, in the state of Ohio, in May or June, 1813, while under the command of major general Harrison. Three or four deserters were convicted, and one of them shot upon that occasion; the others were pardoned. In the course of the campaign, in the following September, two or three other deserters were executed upon an island near Put-in-bay, on Lake Erie.

The next executions witnessed by me were at Sackett's Harbour, in February, or March 1814, under the command of major general Brown. I am under the impression that six or 7 deserters were shot at one time, and two at another time, in the latter part of the winter or spring, of 1814, at Sackett's Harbour. The exact number I may not distinctly recollect, but I think there were seven, eight, or nine. I was, at the time of the executions, near Put-in-bay, and at the first mentioned execution at Sackett's Harbour, adjutant general, prepared the orders, after a very full and deliberate consultation with the major general, and at Sackett's harbour I read the orders to the troops and the offenders at the place of execution.

These executions were principally, if not exclusively, confined to deserters from the regular army. Much to the credit of the militia, there were comparatively few desertions from this description of force in service with me on the northern frontier.—Had there, however, been many cases of desertion among the militia, I feel warranted by the opinions of many respectable officers, such as general Porter, and those under his command, in supposing that examples would have been made of the principal offenders.

I had often in the year 1813 conversed with major general Harrison, and in 1814, with general Brown, upon the policy and necessity of such punishments, as I did afterwards, in the year 1815, with general Jackson, and I am convinced that there was scarcely a shade of difference of opinion between them upon the subject. They each deplored the evil of desertion, as most demoralizing and disastrous in its consequences to the character and physical power of the army, and fraught with incalculable mischief to the resources and reputation of the people of the United States. I am strongly under the impression that each of those general officers have at differen: times expressed to me the opinion, that they deem it an act of mercy, rather than of cruelty, to make examples of hardened offenders, particularly at the commencement or in the progress of an active campaign against the enemy. Inasmuch as the principle of mercy enters into human efforts to preserve from the ravages of war the innocent and helpless women and children, and the faithful citizens and soldiers who remain at their posts, true to their trusts, but who, abandoned by their unworthy associates, become an easy prey to the opposing foe; inasmuch as it is an act of mercy to protect the innocent when thus situated, and when that protection can be effected only by punishing the deserters, traitors to their brethren in arms, and worse than traitors to their country, it cannot be denied that it is an act of mercy to shoot cowardly deserters.

Previous to the executions at Sackett's harbour, in the year 1814, it was reported and believed that near two thousand men had deserted from the army in the preceding eighteen or twenty months. Now, I think it will not be questioned, that with two thousand well instructed men, added to General Brown's division when under my command at Fort Erie in August 1814, the crippled army under lieut. general Drummond would have been destroyed, captured or driven from Upper Canada—with two thousand well instructed men at Bladensburg on the 14th August, 1814, our beautiful capitol would have been preserved; and though last not least, with two thousand well instructed men added to the force under General Jackson at New Orleans on the 8th of January, 1815, the shattered remnant of the British army, seeking the "Beauty and Booty" of that noble city, must have been destroyed or captured.

EDMUND P. GAINES.

The Hon. H. L. White, of the Senate, and the Hon. J. K. Polk of the H. R.

GENERAL GREENE.

A friend has put into our hands, an original letter of that great Captain and most amiable man, Gen. NATHANIEL GREENE, so distinguished in the war of the Revolution. It is a letter written from his camp in South Carolina, dated 22d April 1782, and addressed to his brother officer the gallant Col. Otho H. Williams. In this letter Gen. Greene, after having mentioned some symptoms of mutiny, that had shown themselves in one of the lines of his army, says:—

☞"One of the Sergeants is to be this day HUNG for encouraging it. Some of that line have been practising upon your line; but I am in hopes without effect. This fellow that is to be hung to day was one of the most forward in the former mutiny. You know I act with decision. They had better be quiet. It is true the Troops have great reason to complain; but this disposition in that line, has a deeper root than sufferings. Desertion has prevailed with us for a few nights before the face of mutiny appeared, to a very alarming degree. We are now in a position near Dorchester. Head Quarters is at Mr. Waring's neer where you visited—Colonel Lee a little before you left the camp. The Enemy threatened us dayly; and was our troops in good temper, altho they out number us greatly, I should have little objection to a fight. General Wayne remains at Ebenezer and great desertion prevails with the enemy there, and considerably here, a few days ago twenty four refugees come off together. Capt. Neal fell in with the enemies horse a little below Dorchester yesterday and got the rubers. He lost seven or Eight men and Eight or ten horses.—He killed the Negro Generally known by the name of March.—

"I am told Congress have again changed the plan of promotion. If so, I fear you will meet with dificulty in obtaining yours. How ever you must learn patience, justice moves slow."

"Believe me to be yours affectionately N. GREENE."

This letter shows that examples by military execution have been made by other great men beside General Andrew Jackson. It shows too, that other great men have been guilty of errors, in orthography and syntax as well as General Jackson.

It is painful to be presenting a man whose memory is embalmed in our affections, in the light of a bad speller and incorrect grammarian and we do it, not in disparagement of General Greene, but in defence of General Jackson. We doubt not, that the errors of both, are to be attributed to haste and inattention; and not to ignorance. General Greene was the favorite of WASHINGTON, and prized next to him, by the old Congress and the people. He was a man of a high order of intellect and of the purest character. Yet he hung mutineers, and committed errors in syntax and orthography. The fact is both General Greene and General Jackson were men of actions and not of words. They were fighting the battles of their country, and if they could not describe them with as much grafic beauty and as "strict a regard to rhetorical propriety" as Mr. Adams, they could tell, intelligibly, what they had done. Can Mr. Adams tell what he has done? Is his famous letter to LEVITT HARRIS relieved at all, of its mean and cowardly spirit, by the goodness of its grammar, or the correctness of its spelling!

[Baltimore Republican.

Execution of a Militia Man.

In Gordon's "History of the rise, progress, and establishment of the Independence of the United States," page 28 of the 4th vol. we find the following account of the execution of a soldier under the command of General GREENE. It was after Gate's defeat and shortly after Gen. Greene arrived at Head Quarters and assumed the command of the southern army

"On his arrival in camp, he learned that the troops had made a practice of going home without permission, staying weeks, and then returning. Determined to stop such a dangerous custom, the General gave out, that he would make an example of the first deserter of the kind he caught; and one was accordingly shot at the head of the army, drawn up to be spectators of the punishment. At night he sent officers round the camp, to listen to the talk of the soldiers, and was happy to find that the measure had taken its desired effect, and that the language of the men was only—"We must not do as we have been used to, it is new lords, new laws."

Now, this was the case of a soldier's doing what they had all been in the habit of doing—his home being in the neighborhood of a camp, he had gone there without leave. He had not gone off with the intention of remaining altogether—meant to return. But an example was necessary for the good of the service and the safety of the country, and General Greene, whose humanity no one ever questioned or dare question, did not hesitate to have him executed. Contrast this case with that of the "six militia-men," and tell us, if Jackson was a murderer, what was Greene?

LOST.

THE subscriber lost on Saturday 3d instant, two Notes of Hand drawn in favour of him against William Wilson, sen. one for $20.00, and one against George Goddard for $30.00.—He supposes he lost them near White-Haven. Any person finding said notes and returning them to the subscriber shall have ample compensation.

JOSHUA DONOHO.

May 6th. waw

This is to give Notice,

THAT the Subscriber of the city of Baltimore, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Baltimore county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of MARY WARD late of said county deceased.

All persons having claims against said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof, on or before the 5th day of November next, to JAMES M. BUCHANNAN, Esq. my attorney, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate; and all persons indebted to the said estate, are requested to make immediate payment to my attorney as aforesaid. Given under my hand, this 7th day of April, 1828.

HOWES GOLDSBOROUGH.

April 15 jdm

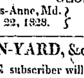
Timbered Land For Sale.

I am requested by John H. Bayly, Esq. to offer for sale a tract of land commonly called "Pine Pole," situated about two miles from Princess-Anne This tract of land is valuable for the excellent timber now standing on it, and its contiguity to navigation. For terms apply to

GEO. HANDY.

Princess-Anne, Md. } April 22, 1828. } §

TAN-YARD, &c. To Let.



THE subscriber will rent for next year, a two story brick house (a cellar under it,) with three acres of excellent ground, situated at Quantico. There is also on the premises a Tan-Yard, a tan house, bark-mill, bark-mill house, bark house, carriage house, corn house and stables. Apply to

JOHN J. DAVIS, or
THOS. JONES,

April 22 Quantico.

Consumptions, Coughs, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical discases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of the proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER, Princess-Anne, Md.

Nov. 20, 1827.

THE PARTERRE.

VARIETY instils into the mind a relish for the useful and the sweet.

From the Boston Statesman.

On seeing, through a distant window, a belle completing her toilette for a Ball.

'Tis well—'tis well—that clustering shade
Is on thy forehead sweetly laid;
And that light curl that slumbers by
Makes deeper yet thy depth of eye;
And that white rose that decks thy hair
Just wins the eye to linger there,
Yet makes it not to note the less
The beauty of that raven tress.

Thy coral necklace?—ear-rings too?
Nay—nay—not them; no darker hue
Than thy white bosom be to-night
On that fair neck the bar of light,
Or hide the veins that faintly glow
And wander in that living snow.

What!—yet another? Can it be
That neck needs ornament to thee?
Yet not thy jewels—they are bright,
But that dark eye hath softer light;
And tho' each gem had been a star,
Thy simple self were lovelier far.
Yet stay—that string of matchless pearl?
Nay—wear it—wear it—radiant girl;
For ocean's best of pure and white
Should only be thy foil to-night.

Aye—turn thee round—'tis lovely all;
Thou'lt have no peer at that gay ball;
And that proud toss—it makes thee smile
To see how deep is thine own guile:
And that slow look, that seems to stray
As each sweet feature made it stay:
And that small finger, lightly laid
On dimppled cheek and glossy braid,
As if to know that all they seem
Is really there and not a dream!
I wish I knew the gentle thought
By all this living beauty wrought.
I wish I knew if that sweet brow—
That neck on which thou gazest now—
If thy rich lip and brilliant face—
Thy perfect figure's breezy grace—
If these are half the spell to thee
That will this night bewilder me!

CASSIUS.

To the Editor of the Village Herald.

Sir,

I feel anxious to see the following article inserted in your paper. Should you see proper to give it a place in your next Herald, you will gratify

Yours, ELLA.

THE MAN OF MY CHOICE.

My studies this evening afford me a character, which I am confident the ladies will admire; and I therefore hope the sighing Strephons will endeavour to imitate it.

A lady, upon being reproached with insensibility, and an unnatural coldness of disposition, made the following reply. It may be added, that the original is in the French language.

The austere coldness and insensibility you reproach me with, and perhaps think a constitutional defect, is neither the effect of prudery, nor the melancholy scruples of a silly saint—Believe me above such little motives of action; believe that my blood often circulates with rapidity; believe that I I know there is but one spring in the year of life, and that love is combined with and attached to humanity; nay, I will even permit you to believe that Cupid, in certain attire, has as many charms in my eyes as in those of the rest of my sex; yet, after all these confessions, which I make with pleasure and openness, as artifice and disguise are only the refuge of little minds, for which I have no occasion, I tell you, that as much as I honor love, I despise lovers, and detest their perfidious flames, their deceitful arts, while their false vows, alas! often but too much credited by our amiable and credulous sex, merely because they feel no trace of such perfidity in their own gentle bosoms.

But if you would see my frigid system vanish into air, let fortune throw into my way such a man, imagination sometimes creates, and whom I am afraid is only to be found there; however, take my mental picture of him.

He must have a gentle though lively temper, to hide a strong and masculine mind.

His impressions of attachment must neither be dictated by avarice nor vanity, but proceed directly from a feeling heart.

He must be well informed without pretensions, serious without melancholy, free without licentiousness, and, in short, carry nothing to excess but love and prudence; nay, he may charm all my sex, and adore—only me.

He must hide his passion in public, as I desire no other proofs of it there, but a passing glance to convey the feelings of his heart, which nobody must observe but me.

In private he may make up for public restraint, by breathing a chaste and delicate passion; and, if he merit it, he may probably hear of a reciprocal flame, pure as the love that fans it.

To render this union of heart more durable, he must be my guide, my friend, my counsellor, and my lover, so that, when near him, my mind may acquire elevation and grandeur.

Yet, I confess it, should Fortune throw such a man in my way, my coldness would vanish at his approach like snow in sunshine, and I would accompany his footsteps at all times, and in all places; but whether in a cottage or a palace, I would never deign to bestow a thought.

Till that idol of my heart and mind be realized, I desire not to please, and shall persevere in my coldness, which never cost me an effort.

The groupe of admirers, whom my feeble charms attract, are not flattering to me; I despise their sentiments, with their little arts to please, and yawn at their incense.

Let them seek the weak and the vain, who will listen to their sighs and sufferings; the zephyr bends the reed, but has no effect on the sturdy oak.

WHAT I HATE, AND WHAT I LOVE.

I hate to be compelled to listen to the dull, monotonous, prosing work of an hour, under the name of a gospel sermon, however sound or learned it may be. But I love to see a minister ardent and pathetic in addressing his fellow men, and to hear him bold and undaunted in his denunciations of sin and sinners.

I hate to see a preacher put me off with a vox preterea nihil, nothing but sound, when I am hungry for the bread of life.

I hate to have a preacher attempt to amuse me with little details of geography, and history, and Greek grammar, when I want to hear him thunder forth the terror of the law, and in accents, sweet as angels use, announce to impenitent sinners the infinite fulness of forgiving love. I had rather hear the most blundering declaimer, who has the root of the matter in him, and who deals out the plain truths of the gospel with fervor and affection, although his language and style may be unpolished and incorrect.

I hate to hear a preacher, who is evidently embarrassed for ideas, tell his hearers of the amplitude of his subject, and how much he might say upon it if time would permit.

I sincerely hate all those artifices and flourishes by which many in the sacred desk attempt to win the attention of their hearers.

"In man or woman, but far most in man,
And most of all in man that ministers
And serves at the altar, in my soul I loathe
All affectation. 'Tis my perfect scorn;
Object of my implacable disgust."

I hate to see a minister take an abundance of pains to set off his discourse with philosophy and morals, and say a great many of those learned and curious things which would become a literary essay or oration, but which, in a gospel preacher, are exactly those refinements I don't wish to hear; but some John the Baptist, preaching faith and repentance, in the plainest terms, I should altogether prefer.

I hate to hear a preacher deal much in apologies, either at the commencement or the conclusion of his discourses: and most cordially do I hate to hear him inform his hearers of his unpreparedness for his task. I choose to be my own judge in such cases, and strongly protest against an infringement on my right. But I love to see my spiritual instructer come directly to the point, and drive forward with all his might, in the best possible manner, and be sure to leave off when he has done.

From the Wesleyan Methodist Mag.

THE DEATH WATCH.

It is probable, that no insect has caused more dismay and uneasiness than the diminutive creature which is usually called the Death Watch.—Death is, in general, the King of Terrors; and the watchlike ticking of this grub is almost as generally considered a certain harbinger of his approach. Nothing is therefore more difficult in many instances, than to satisfy the disturbed sufferer of the natural agency of this alarm. That an insect almost invisible should, in regularity of time, and distinctness of sound, imitate a machine, which has employed so many hands in its construction, and composed of wheels and springs, with the utmost ingenuity, is above all ordinary comprehension; and indeed the natural mechanism by which it is effected is indescribable even by the professed naturalists. It was only within a few years past that I considered these visiters as solitary and nightly disturbers; since which I have accidently discovered that this is by no means the case. Having occasion to stretch a piece of silk paper moistened with glue-water, on a square frame, I was frequently surprised, at different hours of the day, by a noise similar to what we are accustomed to hear in a watch-maker's window, full of watches and distinctly audible at five or six yards' distance. I soon found that my frame was occupied as a drum, by numbers of these little gray vermin, not much larger than mites; and was thus enabled to identify the performers and witness the harmlessness of their music: and I think it is more than probable, that could these little creatures oftener meet with a proper tympanum, we should much more frequently hear them, at certain seasons, when their little drumming, which no doubt only concerns their own social community, is constantly heard by their companions, though inaudible to us. How humiliating it is to human pride, what an evidence of the fall of man, that the greatest warrior, statesman, and moral philosopher, are liable to be appalled, and feel something like the passage of the sentence of death on a condemned criminal, at the sound of this insect! The extreme terror recently excited in the family of a near neighbour, by one of these animated particles of dust, has induced me to send you these particulars; the publication of which may be more than amusing to many of your readers; believing, as I do, that superstition and ignorance were never sources of genuine piety.

J. FERNELL.

Liverpool, May 15th, 1727.

A humor apt to put great weight upon small matters, and consequently to make much trouble out of little, is the greatest ingredient to unhappiness of life; the contrary the greatest happiness.

Tyrolean Warfare.—The following passage, from the Life of Napoleon, describes the fate of a division of 10,000 men of the French and Bavarian army, who invaded the Tyrol by the Valley of the Inn, during the campaign of 1809:

The invading troops advanced in a long column up a road bordered on the one side by the river Inn, there a deep and rapid torrent, where clifts of immense height overhung both road and river. The vanguard was permitted to advance as far as Prutz, the object of their expedition. The rest of the army were, therefore, induced to trust themselves still deeper in the tremendous pass, where the precipices, becoming more and more narrow as they advanced, seemed about to close above their heads. No sound but of the screaming of the eagles disturbed from their eyries, and the roar of the river, reached the ears of the soldier, and on the precipices, partly enveloped in a hazy mist, no human forms showed themselves. At length the voice of a man was heard calling across the ravin, "Shall we begin?" "No," was returned in an authoritative tone of voice, by one who, like the first speaker, seemed the inhabitant of some upper region. The Bavarine detachment halted, and sent to the General for orders; presently was heard the terrible signal, "In the name of the Holy Trinity, cut all loose!" Huge rocks, and trunks of trees, long prepared and laid in heaps for the purpose, began now to descend rapidly in every direction, while the deadly fire of the Tyrolese, who never throw away a shot, opened from every bush, crag, or corner of rocks, which would afford the shooter cover. As this dreadful attack was made on the whole line at once, two thirds of the enemy were instantly destroyed; while the Tyrolese, rushing from their shelter, with swords, spears, axes, scythes, clubs, and all other rustic instruments which could be converted into weapons, beat down and routed the shattered remainder. As the vanguard, which had reached Prutz, was obliged to surrender, very few of the ten thousand invaders are computed to have extricated themselves from the fatal pass.

Deny every thing, and insist upon proof.—Lawyer Acmood figured at the bar in Essex county, Massachusetts, something like a half century ago. He had a student named Varnum, who having just completed his studies, was journeying to a distant town in company with his master. Acmood, on his way, observed to his student—"Varnum, you have now been with me three years, and finished your studies; but there is one important part of a lawyer's practice, of great consequence, that I have never mentioned," "What is that?" inquired the student. "I will tell it," replied Acmood, "provided you will pay expenses at the next tavern." The student agreed; and Acmood imparted the maxim at the head of this article. The supper, &c. were procured; and on preparing to set off from the tavern, Acmood reminded Varnum that he had engaged to pay the bill.—"I deny every thing and insist upon the proof," retorted Varnum. The joke was so good, that Acmood concluded it best to pay the bill himself.

Baltimore Prices Current.

Baltimore, May 2.

In a practical view, there can be to our readers nothing more acceptable than a correct statement of the prices at which their staple commodities are actually selling at the time being; and the measures taken by us for procuring this information are such as to justify the utmost reliance on its accuracy. No misapprehension can arise, except what may result from the natural dependence of price upon quality, and the difficulty of stating the latter with entire precision, and so as to be exactly understood. In the case of tobacco, for instance, every planter can understand the difficulty of defining the nice differences of shade and condition, by which the price is liable to be affected. So with wheat, as to its soundness, plumpness, color and freedom from garlic, cockle, dust, and offal of various kinds—but our statements will be so particular, and localities as to its growth, so often given, as to afford to the planter and farmer the best possible guide that the nature of the case will admit of—allowance being made for changes of circumstances which must control every market—as variable as the winds themselves.

For an example of the influences of circumstances where there is no want of competition, nor any possibility of combination or monopoly, take the case of CORN at present.

The ship Philip Tabb has been loading here principally with corn for Liverpool, taking about 15,000 bushels. This had the effect of raising the price so that the highest sales were made at 41 cents; that demand being satisfied, the article is now dull again, and the arrival of any considerable quantity would depress it to 35 cents. It may now be set down at 38; actual sales for best white; mixed white and yellow, dull sale at 36 and 37. The last sales at Charleston were 39—at Providence and eastern ports 42, and the shipments of corn from this port being chiefly coastwise, there is no demand at present, we are sorry to say, to justify the hope of its bringing better prices. Where corn is mixed it does not sell so well as either kind would alone; separately, being suited to different markets. The unmixed yellow for the West Indies particularly.

Wheat—the last sales of prime red, from the Susquehanna, 92 cents; for Virginia red wheat of good quality, 87 cents is a fair quotation; barley from Virginia, 60 to 65, rye 40 to 43; beans, best white $1 per bushel; black-eyed peas, 60 to 62½ cents; ginseng, 20 cts. per pound; beeswax 25; snake root 20; feathers 28; whiskey, in barrels, from the wagons, barrel included, 25 cents per gallon; apple brandy, 25.

Tobacco, from the Rappahannock, Virginia, from common to the best quality, $2 to 8.50 per hundred; James River, of all qualities, from 2.50 to $8; Maryland tobacco may, in general, say Prince George's crops, be set down at from $1 to 2.50, and from that to $3 to 8.50. It may be added, as the opinion of a gentleman, who is conversant with the subject, and certainly not interested or inclined to disparage the article, that the seven hundred hogsheads already inspected at Queen Anne's, would not now average more than $2.50. These are gloomy accounts, and nobody can regret them more than we do; but the truth must be told, though the heavens fall.—Hence lands, in the lower counties, have fallen at least 60 per ct., and other things in like proportion, except when sold on credit, and that, we are sorry to say, has a magical influence on the value of things. Expose to sale for cash, at an auction in the country, a cow or a horse, and they will not bring, the one six, nor the other twenty dollars; but let the auctioneer pronounce the magical words "on a credit of six months," and the old cow sheds her coat, frists her tail, the wrinkles vanish from her horns, her udder enlarges, she abounds in signs of a good milker, and whether with calf or not, she suddenly swells into the value of eighteen dollars, and the horse to sixty dollars. A bladder in a state of exhaustion, or inflated, is not more different than the value of things thus sold for the money, or on a few months credit, at the end of which, money will in fact, perhaps, be scarcer than now! —Let 'us friends, remember the sound warning of Poor Richard to the people, at one of these 'six months' credit' sales.

"Creditors have better memories than debtors; creditors are a superstitious sect, great observers of set days and times."

But we took our pen to note the prices of things, and here we are scribbling a homily in favour of economy and keeping out of debt. Well! perhaps worse homilies have been preached by better men.—Farmer.

Silk.—The annexed statement of the amount of exports of silk from Italy. in the year 1807, 1808, 1809, and 1810, is copied from the Philadelphia Democratic Press, to which it was communicated by the Pennsylvania Society for the promoting of the culture of the mulberry, and the raising of silk worms. A perusal of it cannot but furnish a strong inducement to persons favourably circumstanced for the purpose, to embark, in the cultivation of mulberry trees, with a view to competition in the fabrication of silk; and we should be well pleased to see this branch of manufactures, as well as that of cotton and woollen, flourish, provided it be not sought to give it a sickly and ephemeral existence, by restrictions and prohibitions, unwisely on commerce.

In a paragraph, alluding to the subjoined statement, the editor of the Democratic Press makes the following remarks: "Let it be remembered that the mulberry is a beautiful shade tree; that 2000 lbs. of leaves are required for the consumption of the worms, to produce ten lbs. of silk; that a hundred trees are required to afford so many leaves; and then let it be computed, from the amount of silk manufactured in Italy, the millions of trees that we should require, and in the immense number of men, women, and children, who would find employment in planting trees, gathering leaves, and attending to the worms. What wealth would pour in upon our state if we could but persuade our fellow citizens to plant the mulberry trees and rear the silk worms!"

Exports of Silk and articles connected therewith from Italy, in the years 1807, 1808, 1809, 1810.

		Milan Livres.
Raw silk, Milan pound of 12 ounces lbs.	839,540	14,793,706
Spun silk	9,303,224	156,007,446
		170,771,158
Augmentation of 15 pr. 70		256,156,17[illegible]
Dyed silk	838,464	25,591,500
Coarse silk,	273,200	775,200
Floss	402,300	654,657
Coarse Floss	2,598,260	923,649
Silk stuffs	650,071	35,280,077
Mixed do.	6,385	257,381
Floss do.	33,173	892,605
Gauze and veils	91,983	8,874,987
Sewing silk	16,300	737,534
Ribands, silk & mixed	56,962	2,175,011
Do. floss	28,078	676,386
Sundries		2,072,352
Equal to about		$55,000,000
Or per annum, about		13,750,000

28 ounces of Milan are equal to about 25 French ounces.

6 livres; 10 souls, 3 deniers of Milan are worth 5 French francs.

To Cleanse Silk and other Goods.

Grate raw potatoes to a fine pulp in clean water, and pass the liquid matter through a coarse sieve, into another vessel of water; let the mixture stand till the fine white particles of the potatoes are precipitated, then pour the mucilaginous liquor from the fecula, and preserve the liquor for use. The article to be cleaned, should then be laid upon a linen cloth on a table; and having provided a clean sponge; dip the sponge in the potato-liquor, and apply it to the article to be cleaned, till the dirt is perfectly separated, then wash it in clean water several times. Two middle-sized potatoes will be sufficient for a pint of water. The white fecula will answer the purpose of tapioca, and make an useful nourishing food with soup, and milk, or serve to make starch and hair-powder. The coarse pulp, which does not pass the sieve, is of great use in cleaning worsted curtains, tapestry, carpets, or other coarse goods. The mucilaginous liquor will clean all sorts of silk, cotton, or woollen goods, without hurting or spoiling the colour. It is also useful in cleaning oil paintings, or furniture that is soiled. Dirty painted wainscots may be cleaned by wetting a sponge in the liquor, then dipping it in a little fine clean sand, and afterwards rubbing the wainscot with it.

LONG WOOL.

The British Society for the encouragement of arts, manufactures, and commerce, have awarded a premium to Charles Callies Western, Esq. M. P. for a specimen of long and fine Anglo-Merino wool.

In a communication to the Society, Mr. Western thus describes a sample of this wool: "The wool will be of three years' growth next clipping time; I took it off this morning from the backs of two weather sheep. I drew it from the skin with quite as much difficulty as if it had only been of one year's growth, and with as much pain to the animals. You will observe the strength and elasticity of the wool, and the impossibility of discovering any difference in each successive year's growth. I estimate the weight of one fleece at 25 lbs., the other at 28 or 30 lbs. in the grease.

"The food of the sheep has been, according to the season, tares and clover, green grass, hay, turnips, mangel wurtzel and oats. Weight of the sheep alive—one 239; another, 244 lbs. Dead, one 158 lbs.; the other 149 lbs.

"I am more and more convinced I am right in the object at which I aim, that of growing long, fine strong Marino wool for combing. I am satisfied it is practicable, that the farmer who applies his attention and skill to this object, will find an adequate return in the sale of wool and mutton."

Mr. Western says in a subsequent communication: "The principal object that I had in view was, to make known the fact, that the Anglo-Merino sheep, will carry their fleece in all its strength and beauty, three years. I have produced the article such as was never seen or contemplated before, most people supposing that sheep shed their fleece every year. I do not propose the wool should be more than two years growth, which would require one year's cutting. The sheep should be weathers, and put up at about sixteen or eighteen months old." Transactions of the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, &c. v. 45, p. 36, (1827.)

Endless Chain Propeller.—Mr. Henry H. Sitler, of Geneva, N. Y. has sent to the Secretary of State, for the purpose of procuring a patent a specification of a plan for propelling boats on canals, by means of an endless chain, to be moved by steam engines at fixed distances. The same plan, is applicable to the propelling of carriages on rail roads, has been suggested by Mr. Tredgold, in his treatise on rail roads. Mr. Sitler proposes to use an iron chain, seven miles and a half, passing, at each extremity of that distance, round a horizontal wheel or drum. It is proposed to support the chain on the sides of the towpath by horizontal rollers at suitable distances, and at every deviation from a straight line, vertical rollers are to be fixed, by the use of which rollers, friction would be lessened. Steam engines would be required at stations, alternately, of three and a half miles apart, to turn the wheel and move the chain, up on one side of the canal, and down on the other, similar to two buckets over a windlass. The annual expense of this plan, for the whole line of the Erie Canal, would be $408,699. This expense might be diminished by the substitution, at various points, of water-power for steam.

From the Baltimore Chronicle.

Gentlemen: I have been much pleased with your neat remarks on the manufactures of Baltimore. Long famous for those of flour, there are added those of cotton, iron, copper, chemicals, and leather on a very large scale, and many minor branches are extensively carried on, interesting a large portion of our people, and circulating vast sums of money amongst us. The gross amount of annual production is not less than five, and probably equal to six millions of dollars. —Without this, we should be "poor indeed." Without manufactures, the distress and depopulation of our city in 1821, would be only a type of what would follow, at the present time. Then you might often see two, three or four houses in a range, and in eligible situations, "to let"—now the city teems with people, and hundreds of snug and comfortable dwellings have been recently erected by and for the mechanics and manufacturers; and a great deal of business is doing in backshops and by places, without much appearance of bustle. It is these that have stayed a rapid depreciation, and without them, the annual value of the rents of the city would be at least thirty three per cent. less than it is.

The manufacture of shot is one of the smaller items which I believe you have not noticed; but persons at a distance ought to know that our shot is equal in its quality, and as cheap in price, as any other, foreign or domestic. The present tower is capable of making five tons per day, or 1500 tons in a year; the whole sales of the city are estimated at 150 tons annually—hence the tower is not more than worked a 10th of its capacity; still it is pleasant to be assured, that of shot, as well as some other things, we have apparatus and means sufficient to meet any probable demand that can be made, and keep at home hundreds of thousands of dollars heretofore sent abroad. Success then to "The American System."

To preserve peach trees from the grub worms.—The season is approaching for skirting peach trees, to prevent the worms from injuring them. The millers deposit their eggs in the bark of the tree, near the surface of the earth. Skirting it with straw or swingling tow about a foot in height, and covering the lower part of it in the earth, excludes them, and consequently preserves the tree. It may be done with any thing that will last through the season.

I have not ascertained the period in which the millers sting the tree but the summer before the last, a tree that came from the stone in the spring had two worms in it in the fall—other trees had them as usual. Last spring I adopted the plan now recommended, and not one has been found since. The skirting was taken off in the fall, and the trees are sound and thrifty. I consider this method as sure and easy preventive, and wish it might be generally known. The cultivation of this healthy and delicious fruit is of general interest, which has been very much discouraged by the frequency of the worms.

If suffered, they may spread among our young apple orchards. A farmer from Baltimore informed me about four years since, that he skirted a thousand apple trees with old cloth or any thing he could find that would skirt out the millers. One method of his neighbors, was to kill the worms with a wire. They were last summer in some young orchards in Dutchess county, New York. A.

(From the N. York Morning Courier.)

TO MOTHERS.

It may be useful to know, and w be the means of alleviating much pai that when the breast and nipples a much inflamed, and cannot be sucke but with the most intense suffering the mother, a very simple remedy w relieve the breast from its milkey bu then, without the slightest suffering This is no other than filling a com mon bottle with hot water, and afte standing a few minutes, empty it an apply the mouth of the warm bottl to the deceased nipple, and the mil will flow spontaneously into the bottl giving at the same time a pleasurab sensation, and a complete relief to th overloaded breast. A PHYSICIA

STAYS.

Strong stays, which do the duty o the muscles placed by nature aroun the spine, cause the muscles to dwin dle from inaction, so that afterward when the support of the stay fails t become unequal, the back bends o twists. Stays, therefore, can neithe help to make strong and well-forme backs originally, nor can they be remedy after the weakness has ap peared. A healthy young woman fro the country, whose spine lies deep be tween the first cushions of the mus cles which support it, if braced up i tight stays, according to town fashio will frequently exhibit, at the end o a short time, such a wasting of th flesh, that the points of bone in th spine may be counted in the eye.

Save this scrap.—The following re ceipt for a cold is said to be so effica cious, that we publish it at the reques of a correspondent, who has tested i virtues.

Take a large tea-spoon full of flax seed, with two pennies worth of li liquorice, and a quarter of a pound o sun raisins, put it into two quarts o soft water, and let it simmer over slow fire till it is reduced to one; the add to it a quarter of a pound of brow sugar candy, pounded, a table spoo full of white wine vinegar, or lemo juice.

NOTE.—The vinegar is best to b added only to that quantity you a going immediately to take; for if it b put into the whole, it is liable in a littl time to grow flat. Drink half a pi going to bed, and take a little whe the cough is troublesome. This recei generally cures the worst of colds two or three days, and if taken in tim may be said to be an almost infall ble remedy. It is a sovereign balsa ic cordial for the lungs, without th opening qualities which engender fre colds on going out. It has been know to cure colds that have almost bee settled into consumptions, in less tha three weeks.

(From the London Literary Gazette.)

Preserving Eggs.—Perhaps yo were not aware when you inserted th notice of some experiments in keepin eggs, that thousands are preserve yearly, or, as it is technically calle pickled by pastry cooks, &c. The pri ciple upon which they are pickled i to slack some lime a few days befo it is wanted, and when there is heat left in it, it is fit for use; then p alternate layers of the lime and egg into a tub, or any thing else, till fu the eggs not to touch one another little water should be kept on the to to prevent the lime from becomi too hard. H.

Family Ointment.—The followi simple recipe is said to produce an e cellent ointment for chopped han burns, and other sores—Take a pi of marrow about the size of a small egg, put it beside the fire in a sm gallipot; when it is sufficiently melte strain off the oil, to which add th tea-spoonfuls of whiskey or oth spirits; beat up the mixture until i cold, when it is ready for use.

Breach of Promise.—An inquest w taken at the Court of Common Pl held at Poughkeepsie last week, in action for a breach of promise of m riage. The Jury gave $1500 damag

Affectation in any part of our c riage is lighting up a candle to o defects, and never fails to make us taken notice of, either as want sense or as wanting knowledge.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., MAY 13, 1828. NO. 7.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year if paid in advance, or $2 50 if paid within six months, or $3 if not paid within six months.

Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (for the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will hereafter be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion) until arrearages are paid off, and a failure to notify a discontinuance previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square will be inserted three times for $1 and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion; those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

Advertisements, if handed in by Monday night at 10 o'clock, shall appear in the paper next morning.

Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

All communications addressed to the editor must come POST PAID.

HORSES.

The following remarks upon horses copied from the publication of an eminent farrier in Europe; and we think them worth the perusal of farmers generally.

The pulse of a horse in health, is from 36 to 40 beats in a minute, and may be easily felt by prefixing the finger gently upon the temporal artery which is situated about an inch and a half backwards from the corner of the eye.

Horses have not the faculty of ing, or even belching wind out their stomachs, and therefore are liable subject to wind colic.

When a horse has been over-ridden, bloody shots may be seen in the s of the eyes.

A limber dock is sure evidence of a limber back, that is a weak one.

A horse that is hardy and good business, has a short back bone which terminates forward of the hip.

A decoction of white oak bark, will kill bots by tanning them, and will become so shrivelled as to be discernible when discharged.

The principal signs of a good horse are these. The eyes set apart in the head, large and bright; the quirl in the forehead; one or two in the neck is a good sign; the neck well on high; the shoulder blades pretty high, and converging to a point; the breast full and large, and so also behind; the body round, for flat bodied or slab sided horses are weak naturally; the dock stiff going wide behind, if the gambols knock together, it shows that the horse is feeble; chewing the bit when provoked, is a good sign.

It is a Spanish proverb, that "a gray will sooner die than tire."

Reptiles of the Mississippi Valley.—Mr. Flint, in the Western Monthly Review for February, describes the species of reptiles that infest the Western and South Western Among the venomous serpents the rattle snake, king snake, water asp, copper head, moccasin snake, ing snake, and horn snake. One variety of rattle snakes is yellow, and is said to inhabit the same burrows with the prairie dog. The copper head is a terrible serpent, and is deemed to inflict a more dangerous bite than the rattle snake. The hissing hisses like a goose. "We consider one," says Mr. F. "with a stick across his back, and it instantly bit itself, and soon became swollen and The horn snake has a thorn in its tail, resembling that of a dunghill creases the population becomes, the swine prey upon these reptiles, and they quickly disappear. Their resorts are near the bases of rocky hills, and near vast swamps. are often bitten by them, and a person that is badly bitten swells, and often becomes blind. The bite is often fatal. Mr. F. says he has seen a fatal case.—He describes a most tragical occurrence, terrible in the relation than the affliction of Laocoon. emigrant family inadvertently their cabin on the shelving de of a ledge that proved a den of snakes. Warmed by the first the hearth of the cabin, the reptiles issued in numbers, course in rage by night into room, where the whole family As happens in those cases, some the floor, and some in beds; reptiles spread in every part of and mounted on every bed. were stung in the arms of parents and in each others arms. imagination dares not dwell on the of such a scene. Most of the were bitten to death; and those who escaped, finding the whole cabin occupied by these horrid tenants, hissing and shaking their rattles, fled from the house by beating off the covering of the roof, and escaping in that direction.

FELIX JENKINS, Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk Maker, No. 10, South Street, BALTIMORE,

Respectfully informs his friends, customers, and the public generally, that he continues to carry on the Saddlery, Harness, and Trunk Making Business, in all its variety, and on the most extensive scale. He has lately received from England, per the ship Philip Tabb, an assortment of articles in his line. Country merchants will find it to their interest to call at No. 10 South street, and to examine the qualities and prices of his goods, as he is determined to sell as low as they can be purchased in Philadelphia.

A liberal discount will be made for cash or town acceptances.

April 15 jdm

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued by the Clerk of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Margaret E. Dashiell, Leah Dashiell, Jane Dashiell, by George Hopkins their guardian, & Ann C. Dashiell by James Herron her guardian against Benjamin I. Jones, James W. Dashiell and John Jones of Benjamin, will be sold at public sale on Tuesday the 13th of May next, at the Court House door in Princess-Anne, the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called Fines, containing 44 acres, more or less; part of Good Luck, containing 57 acres, more or less; part of Rich Swamp, containing 100 acres, more or less, part of Handy's & Wolf's Hope, containing 140 acres, more or less, and one horse, the goods and chattels lands and tenements of the said Benjamin; part of a tract of land called Meaches Desert, and part of Discovery, containing 100 acres, more or less, and one horse, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of the said James; also one tract of land called Bell Grave containing 280 acres, more or less, and one horse, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of the said John, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for the ready cash to pay and satisfy the above mentioned writs. Sale to commence at 1 o'clock P. M.

ROBT. STEWART,
April 22. j late Shff.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Levin D. Jones, Elizabeth Collier and John Larmore and Wife against James W. Dashiell, will be sold at public sale on Tuesday the 13th of May next, at the court-house door in the town of Princess-Anne, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit—one negro woman Ibby, one negro Jacob, one do. Bill, one do. Jessy, one do. Jack, one do. Hewet, one do. Moses, three head of horses, and one gig and harness, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for cash to pay and satisfy the above mentioned writs.

ROBT. STEWART,
April 14 22 Late Shff.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Hubble & Pattison against John Lowe, will be sold at public sale on Tuesday the 13th of May next, at the court-house door, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. one house and lot in Sharp-town, to the highest and best bidder for cash to pay and satisfy the above mentioned writ. ROBT. STEWART.
April 14—22 late Shff.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of two writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Matthias Dashiell use of Charles Rider against Benjamin Gravenor and James Graham, will be sold at public sale on Tuesday the 13th of May next, at the court-house door in Princess-Anne, part of a tract of land called 'Wilson's Discovery,' containing 85 acres, more or less, two beds, one horse, one yoke of oxen and two cows, the property of Benjamin Gravenor, also one negro man Jacob, one bed, part of a tract of land called 'Wilson's Discovery,' part of 'Neighbour's Vexation,' containing ninety acres, to the highest and best bidder for cash to pay and satisfy the above mentioned writs. Sale to commence at 11 o'clock A. M.

ROBT. STEWART,
April 14—22 late Shff.

MILITARY NOTICE.

THE Rewastico Company of Militia is ordered to meet at the Head-of-Little-Creek, their usual place of parade, on Saturday the 17th of May next. Punctual attendance is requested, as an election for an ensign will take place on said day—There will also be appointed a court martial for the trial of absentees.

The roll will be called precisely at 11 o'clock A. M.

By order,
JOHN S. EVANS, Captain.
April 29, 1829. ww

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued by the Clerk of Somerset county court and to me directed, the State of Maryland for the use of George Hopkins of Stephen against John S. Evans, Ralph Lowe and William Harris, will be sold at public sale on Wednesday the 21st day of May next at the court-house door the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land (name not known) containing 200 acres, more or less, one horse, gig and harness, to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to pay and satisfy the above mentioned writs.—Sale to commence at 2 o'clock P. M.

ROBERT STEWART,
April 26—29 Late Shff.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued by the Clerk of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Isaac Nichols, adm'r. of Joseph R. Russom against Samuel Badly, will be sold at public sale on Wednesday the 21st day of May next at the court-house door between the hours of 2 and 3 o'clock P. M. the following property to wit: part of a tract of land called Cold Stream, 170 acres more or less, and one yoke of oxen, to the highest and best bidder for cash to pay and satisfy the above mentioned writ. ROBT. STEWART,
April 25—29 Late Shff.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of the State of Maryland against James W. Dashiell and John Jones of Benj. will be sold at public sale, on Friday the 16th day of May next, on the premises, the following property, to wit: four hundred and forty eight acres of land, more or less, by the name of 'Meache's Desert' and part of 'Discovery,' one negro man Charles, one do. John, one do. Jasper, one do. William, the property of said James; Also three hundred and fifty-seven acres of land, more or less, by the name of 'Belgrave,' part of Shadwell, part of Store-Yard, one negro man Philip, one do. Joe, one do. Nelson, one do. David, the property of said John. Sale to commence between the hours of 10 and 12 o'clock A. M.—Attendance by

ROBT. STEWART.
April 28—M6 late Shff.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of John W. Jones for the use of Henry Adams against Josiah D. Jones, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit; one boat called 'Franklin,' of 40 tons burden; and two head of horses, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, on Tuesday the 13th of May next, at 1 o'clock P. M. at the court house door to satisfy the above writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
April 29 wp1

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suits of the Union Manufacturing Company and Zadock Long, use of Henry Langford, use of William Roach, use of Thos. K. Carroll against Robert J. Henry, will be exposed to public sale on Thursday the 29d day of May next at Rehoboth, the following property, to wit: Four lots at Rehoboth—Manlor's lot, Mary's lot, Glascow's lot, Limerick's, lot containing, 977 acres, more or less; Dickerson Hope, containing 125 acres, more or less, Goose Marsh, containing 50 acres, more or less; Cow Marsh, containing 50 acres more or less, and Convenience, 134 acres, more or less; Also negroes—man Ben, 1 do. George, 1 do. Jacob, 1 do. Tom, 1 boy Stephen, 1 do. John, 1 do. William, 1 do. Edmund, 1 do. Joe, 1 negro woman Susan, 1 do. Bridget, 1 girl Milly, 1 man Titus, 1 do. James, 1 boy Charles, 1 girl Rachel, 1 do. Betsey, 4 yoke of oxen, 40 head of cattle, 45 head of sheep, fifty head of hogs, one horse, two yoke of mules, 1000 bushels of corn, more or less, 2000 weight of pork and bacon, more or less, and I give notice that on the day above mentioned I shall proceed to sell the same to satisfy the above claims with the interest and cost due and to become due.

Attendance by
JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
May 6, 1828. 2t.

PROPOSALS BY BENJ. EDES FOR PUBLISHING IN BALTIMORE,

THE EMERALD,

And Baltimore Literary Gazette.

The Emerald and Baltimore Literary Gazette will be published every Saturday, in quarto form, super-royal sheet, with new long primer type, and in superior style—the editorial department to be under the direction of several gentlemen of acknowledged talents.

The want of a paper of the nature proposed, will be allowed by every citizen of this metropolis; nor has the proprietor, in his efforts, been so much prompted by a desire of gain, as by a hope of encouraging literature throughout this section of the Union. Confident of the approbation of all persons of taste, he therefore proposes the publication of the Emerald & pledges himself that no effort shall be wanting on his part to please the pulibc in general.

The Emerald shall contain the choicest selections of miscellaneous literature, from the most esteemed periodicals of this country and Europe; and the strictest attention shall be observed as to their moral tendency. Its contents shall be—Tales, original and selected; moral, humorous and scientific Essays; original and selected Poetry; Biographical Sketches of distinguished worthies; Anecdotes, &c.—The original matter will be furnished by individuals who have through the medium of our best literary productions, established themselves in public favor. Also, interesting items of foreign and domestic intelligence; critical notices of passing events; the drama, new publications, and a correct description of the prevailing fashions, both abroad and at home.

It may be worthy of notice, that the Emerald shall be in no way whatever connected with either of the great political parties; and that no communication that has a tendency, either directly or indirectly, to invade the sanctuary of domestic retirement, shall find admission into its columns; though they will always be open to an honest discussion of any question that does not tend to inflame personal or party animosity.

TERMS.—Price of subscription four dollars per annum, one half to be paid on delivery of the first number, and the balance at the expiration of six months. Postmasters and other persons of the inland towns, procuring six subscribers and becoming responsible for the payment, will be entitled to one copy gratis. When 400 Subscribers are obtained the Emerald will be issued.

Subscribers will be received at the Office of the Village Herald.
March 25 eem

PROPOSALS

For publishing in the City of Philadelphia, Pa.

THE PRACTICAL

FARMER'S MAGAZINE,

OR

Agricultural and Literary Gazette.

THE FARMER'S MAGAZINE is designed to contain information drawn from Authentic Sources relative to the improvement and management of remarkable Farms, sources of manure, number and kind of Stock, farming utensils, labourers, dairies, &c.; Agricultural Improvements; drawings and descriptions of Useful Inventions; critical notices and reviews of such publications as may tend to the interests of the Husbandman; improvements in the breed of Domestic Animals; accounts of such Foreign and Domestic trees, shrubs, vines, plants, seeds and grains, as are considered necessary or useful for subsistence, comfort or ornament, with Information relative to their treatment, growth, requisite kinds of soil, &c.; and in short, whatever may tend to increase the product of the soil, and advance the Rural Economy of the country.

Insertion will always be given to such Reports, Addresses and Papers, as may be communicated for publication, by the several Agricultural Societies of this and other states.

A Land Register will contain as far as practicable, a list of farms, which are now, or may hereafter be, For Sale, account of their size, situation, quality and such other particulars as may be deemed Useful.

Space will be afforded the Solid and Sterling Beauties of Literature, the useful arts and science, Chemistry, Natural History and Philosophy, Biography and Travels, states of the Markets in the principal Sea Ports, &c. &c.

TERMS.

The Farmer's Magazine will be published semi-monthly, the price is three dollars, payable either at the time of subscribing, or on receipt of the first number. That form and size has been adopted, which is deemed most convenient for binding, while the quality of the paper, the beauty of the type, (entirely new), and the general execution of the work, will be such, as it is hoped will reflect credit on the Publishers, and gratify its patrons.

Address (post paid) Thomas C. Clarke, agent for the Proprietors, No. 48, Market St. Phil'a.

FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber is desirous of disposing of his real estate, being and lying in Worcester county, Md. and situated on Dividing-Creek. The landed estate consists of 2000, or more acres. The improvements are a dwelling house and out buildings with a good SAW and GRIST MILL, both in excellent order; also a young orchard. About 100 acres of the land is in a good state of cultivation.

There is, on one part of the above property, an abundance of Iron Ore, which would warrant the erection o a Forge, and prove an object of value to a purchaser acquainted with, and calculated for, such an undertaking.

The terms of sale will be—one third down, and 3 years for the payment o. the balance. For further particulars apply to

JOHN MORRIS.
April 22

FOR SALE,

A GIG, made by Ogle of Philadelphia; it is but little defaced, and the harness is in good order. The above Gig will be sold low for cash or good paper. Apply to

SEVERN TEACKLE.
Princess-Anne, April 15.

EASTMAN'S MANUFACTORY OF

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,

At No. 36 Pratt street, opposite the United Hotel, Baltimore.

THE subscriber would inform the public, that he has on hand a large assortment of Gideon Davis' Improved Patent PLOUGHS of cast & wrought Shares, with & without Coulters; Hillside, Substratum and Shovel Ploughs; a large stock of Cultivators of superior quality; Harrows; Swingletrees, double & single: Cornshellers and Washing Machines. Also on hand as usual, his Patent Cylindrical Straw Cutters, which have given universal satisfaction, and Brown's Vertical Wool Spinners; Cast-steel Axes; Grubbing Hoes, Picks and Mattocks, which he warrants of superior quality; very superior Oil Stones, saturated with oil—all of which will be sold at reasonable prices for cash or acceptances in this city.

His very extensive sales of the above articles for the last 3 years is an evidence of the general satisfaction he has given to his numerous customers, and he flatters himself that with the increased pains he has taken in selecting his timber and other materials this season, and also to improve as much as possible on the workmanship of his implements, that he will continue to merit the public patronage which has been so liberally bestowed and for which he takes this opportunity to express his grateful thanks.

Orders by mail (post paid) will receive prompt attention.

JONATHAN S. EASTMAN.

N. B. On hand, 9 bushels good MILLET SEED, which will be sold low. FRUIT TREES will be furnished to orders. Implements ordered by any customers which I do not keep on hand will be carefully selected and furnished to the orders. March 11. tx

Samuel & William Meeteer,

PAPER

MANUFACTURERS.

No. 3 Market Street, Baltimore.

CASH OR GOODS GIVEN FOR

RAGS,

IN LARGE OR SMALL PARCELS.

It is recommended to those who bring Rags to market, to apply at our Store, as the surest way of obtaining the highest market price.

May 6, 1828. mm

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Executors of Thomas Byrd, against Moses C. Smith, I have seized & taken in execution the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called Pemberton's Goodwill, containing one and a half acres, more or less, being in the town of Salisbury, in Somerset county, described as number two on a platt made out by John Landreth, esq. and filed in the Clerk's office of said county, being the same lands and lot which was conveyed to a certain Belitha Christopher by a certain John Gould by deed bearing date the 9th of August A. D. 1814, and which said house and lot is at present occupied by a certain Elijah Christopher, which said property I shall proceed to sell, on the premises, on Saturday the 17th day of May next between the hours of 2 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
April 22. 2wwh

LOST.

THE subscriber lost on Saturday 3d instant, two Notes of Hand drawn in favour of him against William Wilson, sen. one for $20.00, and one against George Goddard for $30.00.—He supposes he lost them near White-Haven. Any person finding said notes and returning them to the subscriber shall have ample compensation.

JOSHUA DONOHO.
May 6th. 3waw

FOR SALE,

A new and fast-sailing VESSEL, of 31 tons burden, well built, of the best materials, and well rigged.

Also, a WINDMILL, the materials of which are of the best quality, (post cap and cog wheel black walnut,) stands about 50 feet from the water, and may be easily removed.

Also, 2 new MASTS, 45 feet long, ready dressed to put into a vessel—All of which the subscriber will sell on easy terms, if application be immediately made to

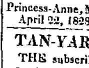
HENRY MADDUX.
Potato-Neck, May 6. mr

Timbered Land For Sale.

I am requested by John H. Bayly, Esq. to offer for sale a tract of land commonly called "Pine Pole," situated about two miles from Princess-Anne This tract of land is valuable for the excellent timber now standing on it, and its contiguity to navigation. For terms apply to

GEO. HANDY.
Princess-Anne, Md. April 22, 1828. §

TAN-YARD, &c. To Let.



THE subscriber will rent for next year, a two story brick house, (a cellar under it,) with three acres of excellent ground, situated at Quantico. There is also on the premises a Tan-Yard, a tan house, bark-mill, bark-mill house, bark house, carriage house, corn house and stables. Apply to

JOHN J. DAVIS, or
THOS. JONES,
April 22 Quantico.

Consumptions, Coughs, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthams, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for, and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondriacal, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of the proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER,
Princess-Anne, Md.
Nov. 20, 1827.

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATIS.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, MAY 13, 1828.

PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

☞The Orphans Court of Somerset County will sit on Tuesday the 20th instant.

THE LICENSE LAW.

It is really ridiculous to see the pitiful tricks to which the Administration men, in their desperation, resort, for the purpose of sustaining a little longer a glimmering hope of success in their Ebony cause. Some of the political schemers in Frederick county, finding that the license law was not likely to redound much credit to its authors, lately endeavoured to persuade the people that it was a Jackson measure—that it had originated with the Jackson party, and was by them carried into effect. But the Citizen, a republican paper printed in Frederick, immediately exposed the absurdity of this attempt to pass off the license law as a Jackson measure: The license law, says that paper, was reported by Mr. Semmes, chairman of the committee on ways and means in the H. of D. The chairman and four others of that committee were Adams men, and were appointed by an Adams Speaker. It was sustained and passed by 51 members, ☞ at least 40 of whom were Adams men!—It was opposed and voted against by 19 members, 15 of whom were Jacksonians. How do these facts stand?—and who dare deny their correctness? If this law is to be made a party measure the Adams men are entitled to the credit of having originated and passed the bill, and they are welcome to all the honour of it. If they choose they may adopt for one of their mottoes, in the ensuing campaign, "Adams and the license law."

The committee on Ways and Means consisted of Messrs. Semmes, Potter, Tilghman, Teackle and Taney, all Adams men; and Mr. Fitzhugh, and Mr. Steuart of Baltimore, both Jackson men. Of these, the five first named were the ardent and active supporters of the bill, and did all they could to force it through the house.—Mr. Fitzhugh, though objecting to many items in the bill, thought it better than no law at all, it was necessary to make some provisions to replenish the treasury,—and accordingly voted for it; while Mr. Steuart spoke and voted against it. How well the five leading members of the committee carried their project, let the votes and proceedings testify. There were 51 votes for the bill, 40 of which were from avowed Adams men; there were 19 votes against the bill, only 4 of which were from Adams men. The Yeas and Nays show conclusively that the Adams men are the fathers of the law, and we defy them to deny it with any thing like the semblance of proof.

With regard to the Senate—It is known this body does not possess the power to originate or amend any money bill; and must either pass such a bill in the shape in which it comes from the House of Delegates, or reject it at once. They had no other alternative.—The treasury was empty—There was a deficiency of $90,000 in the government of last year.—Some provision had to be made for the expenses of government; the popular branch of the legislature had adopted this bill by a large majority, thus assuming all the responsibility, and the Senate could not otherwise than concur.

More recently we find, by the Baltimore Republican that the Adams party in that city "have eagerly seized upon this law as an electioneering engine against the Jackson party—and have in the most unblushing manner, ascribed the origin and passage of it to that party exclusively. Not content with this, they have with a full knowledge of the decided opposition of our delegates to the bill in all its stages, endeavoured to transfer to their shoulders the whole burthen of this objectionable law, by charging them not only with voting for it, but also with giving it their most efficient aid.

As they have chosen to turn aside from the consideration of the law itself for the purpose of making an insidious attack upon the Jackson party, and have thus endeavoured to make the vote upon this law an objection to the party from which it has proceeded, we will give them the full benefit of their objections—as they have made it the test let them not flinch from it. If it was a fair objection when urged by them against the Jackson party, they must not complain, if after putting our citizens in possession of the facts, we ask them to apply the objection to the very party by whom it has been incautiously advanced. One would have thought that the fate of him of old who made the Brazen Bull for the punishment of others, and was the first to be burnt in it, would have admonished our crafty adversaries to wait for facts before they urged an objection, which is about to recoil upon their own heads with such force."

The following is an extract from the Journal which will at once show the correctness of the above remarks:—

On motion by Mr. Teackle, the sixth section of said bill was amended, by inserting after "semi-annually," in the third line thereof, the words, "on or before the first Mondays of May and November in every year hereafter."

On motion by Mr. Semmes, the 11th section of said bill was amended, by inserting after the words, "shall receive fifty cents for each and every license," the following: "granted under this act, out of the money received by him for such license."

On motion by Mr. Steuart, of Baltimore, the following, offered by him as an amendment and to come in as an additional section to the bill, was twice read and agreed to viz:

"13. And be it enacted, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend to any importer of goods, wares and merchandise, who does not break packages, or sell the said imported goods, wares and merchandise, in less quantity than the cask, package or other form in which the same was imported."

On motion of Mr. Thomas of Frederick, the question was put, Will the house now adjourn? And it was determined in the negative.

The question was then taken, Shall the bill pass, as amended? And the yeas and nays being required by seven members, were taken and appeared as follow:

Affirmative.

Messrs. Speaker, Thomas of St. Mary's, Gough, Hawkins, Blackistone, Comegys, Brown, Goldsborough, Mackey, Mercer, Semmes, Gantt, Duvall, Wells, Boon, Kent, Stewart of Anne Arundel, Sellman, Linthicum, Taney, Parran, Somervell, Rogerson, King, Turner, Lloyd, Martin, Banning, TEACKLE, DONOHO, GIBBONS, DENNIS, Williams of Dorchester, Tilghman, Stevens, Roth, Williams of Worcester, Hitch, Powell, Hooper, Holtz, Potter, Jones, Fitzhugh, Walgamot, Rentch, Yates, Lee, Peter, Hughes of Montgomery, Lansdale—51.

Negative.

Messrs. Bourne, Price, Shower, Ely, Mills, Harlan, Thomas of Frederick, Kemp, Shriver, Hope, Montgomery, Smithson, Sutton, Steuart of Baltimore, M'Mahon, M'Neil, Hoffman, Hoblitzell, M'Culloh—19.

So it was resolved in the affirmative.

"A SIGN"—In Berks county, Pennsylvania. In three adjoining townships, where in 1823, 687 votes were polled, we have been credibly informed, by different persons that there are but TWO Adams men known! The townships are Richmond, Maxatawny and Greenwich, all democratic ones. In conversation with a very respectable gentleman from Hereford township, as we did with many from other parts of the county, during our late court, he said "we have but one Adams man in all our valley!" With such facts before us, it is an easy matter to guess at the vote of this county. These are indeed signs. [Chronicle.

The Pledge to the Federal Party.

It has been frequently stated, (says the Baltimore Republican—and he should have added, but never contradicted by those who are implicated,) that Mr. Adams, just before the last presidential election took place in the House of Representatives, gave to Mr. Webster a written pledge, that if elected, he would pursue a certain course with regard to the Federal party. By those who knew nothing about the matter, or if they did, were regardless of the truth, this statement has been denied in the broadest and most unqualified terms. Some of those who made the charge referred, for a confirmation of it, to Mr. WALSH, (editor of an Adams paper in Philadelphia called the National Gazette,) Mr. Hopkinson, of the same place, & Mr. Stockton, of New Jersey; all of whom, belonged to the Federal party, and to all of whom, it was asserted, the LETTER was shown. None of those gentlemen ever denied that such a letter was shown to them. But the Philad'a. Mercury says. Mr. Walsh seems to have rendered it unnecessary to say more upon this part of the Bargain that gained Mr. Adams the Presidential chair, by a full and free admission of THE FACT, under such such qualifications as guilty men always make to palliate the turpitude of their offences. Behold Corruption unveiled! Mr. Walsh HAS SEEN THE LETTER. He avows it! Hear him!!

☞ ☞ ☞ ☞

From the National Gaz. of May 1.

We observe the following sentence in a series of resolutions printed for some public meeting:

"It is now ascertained, that Mr. Adams made overtures to the leaders of the federal party before his election, offering in substance to bring them into power, provided they would support him."

This may serve as a specimen of the electioneering falsehoods put in circulation under the authority of party assemblages. No evidence of THE FACT THUS STATED—nor the shadow of evidence—is extant or could be adduced. The utmost that has been alleged, with any semblance of truth is—that one or two members of Congress, Federalists, who decidedly preferred Mr. Adams to Gen. Jackson, on the broadest grounds, wished to know, before they definitely resolved to vote for him, whether, if made President, he would pursue the policy of excluding federalists from office; and they accordingly asked information on the subject from Mr. WEBSTER, or some other friend of Mr. Adams, supposed to be acquainted with his sentiments.

Their object was—not any stipulation for themselves, but SIMPLY THE SATISFACTION OF BEING ASSURED that a disfranchisement as detrimental to the national weal, as unjust and absurd in itself, was not likely to be continued. To this application, the gentleman addressed gave a written answer, which had the approbation or REVISION of Mr. Adams; and which contained a doctrine on the point, similar to the one soon after made to the world, more emphatically and fully, in his inaugural address. Here is all that has been ALLEGED with any degree of plausibility.

With what face (continues the Mercury,) can Mr. Walsh or his employers, now recommend Mr. Webster as minister to England? With what face can he now come before the public and advocate the re-election of a man who has steeped himself and the country in the most foul corruption, up to the very lips? Yet this will he have to do; because he is attached to a faction that was nursed in the lap of venality and corruption by old Adams; and was never yet free from the taint of treason and corruption. We allude to the faction of Hartford.

To be sure, Mr. Walsh disclaims any stipulation for themselves; it was simply a guarantee of non-disfranchisement!! Why thus quibble and quirk about a crime, that the most simple man in the country can see through! Whether the pledge of appointment is made negatively, or affirmatively, it does not alter the fact of the pledge; for it is equally binding upon Mr. Adams, and equally beneficial to the federal party. Not to be EXCLUDED from Office, is to be ADMITTED—Not to be ADMITTED, is EXCLUSION! Nothing can be plainer; and the only part of the Bargain that Mr. Walsh laments, is its non-fulfilment by Adams! And we pray you, Mr. W., to note our words; ☞It never will be fulfilled by Mr. A. And this we call "disfranchisement."

To the People we now commit this monstrous act of political corruption—that has prostrated the sovereignty of the people—violated the genius of our constitution—abused the privilege of the majority, and brought into contempt the right of suffrage, and the purity of republican government. Let the people judge on the premises, and pronounce their verdict.

Binns swears on the altar of his conscience, that Judge Marshall is "a Democrat of the first water." Judge Marshall was appointed by old John Adams in virtue of his toryism; and when the democrats succeeded in electing Jefferson, such was the bitter hatred of Marshall towards that great Republican, that when he administered to him the oath of office ☞HE TURNED HIS BACK UPON HIM IN DISGUST, and resolved never again to exercise the right of Suffrage!!! ☜ [By referring to his letter in the V. Herald of the 15th April, the reader will find that he himself says, he has not voted for twenty years! and although he gives as his reason, the establishing of the district system, he thereby shows his inveterate hatred of popular governments, which is equally as odious in the sight of Republicans as his descending from the bench to pass judgment on the case of Clay & Adams, without having heard the evidence.] He has latterly changed this resolution, and now means to vote for J. Q. Adams, because he is a Tory.

Think of John Binns praising John Marshall as "a Democrat of the first water!"

Cease ill Counties in Mary Land [illegible]

Cecil county is in Maryland.

From the Baltimore Republican.

CECIL COUNTY, 27th April, 1828.

One of the main props of the Ebony and Topaz party in this county, has broken and tumbled down. The Elkton Bank has gone, and report says that the paper is worse to-day than even the Somerset bank was while Littleton D. Teackle was president thereof.

James Sewall, the Adams electoral candidate, was for many years president of the Elkton bank. Doctor John Groome who lately presided at the Adams meeting in this county, for the purpose of directing the people to vote for Mr. Sewall, is at this time president of the bank; Groome is said to be rich, and old Jack P——e's of opinion, it is said, that he can be made to pay all the notes that the bank has out with his name to them; but Groome's son John, who was one of the Adams candidates for the Assembly last fall, is counsel for the bank; and it is thought he will hardly press the claim against John the elder.

One who holds an Elkton Ten Dollar Note.

☞READ THIS.☜

From the Frederick "Citizen" of May 2.

The shocking facts and circumstances which have been disclosed in relation to the means employed by Messrs. Adams and Clay to secure for themselves the two most prominent offices in this government, one would suppose would be quite sufficient to convince any impartial and enquiring man that all was not right—nay, that ALL WAS WRONG in that transaction. Hardened as some zealots appear to be, we do not yet despair of convincing them, if they are not entirely invulnerable to the shafts of truth, and the suggestions of common sense. We have for some time had in our possession certain information touching the election of Mr. Adams, which we have been repeatedly urged to publish, but thus far we have forborne to comply, not only because we believe the proof the bargain is sufficiently clear, but on account of the mortification & shame which we presume it will produce. But patriotism prompts to duty, and the feelings of private sympathy must yield to the dictates of Truth, and the demands of Justice. NEXT WEEK we shall lay before our readers the communication to which we allude; and if the facts therein involved, upon being proved, do not stagger the faith of those who profess to believe in the political purity of Mr. Adams, we shall set them down as incorrigible, and abandon them to a perverse and stiff necked generation.

"Flattering Prospects."—In a late number of the National Intelligencer, the editor of that print, after enumerating seven counties in Virginia whose elections they had heard from, and giving their votes on the Convention question alone, conclude with the declaration, that "the elections for members of the House of Delegates, in the different counties, as far as they have been heard from, are very flattering for the prospects of the Administration." On reading this flourish, we had the curiosity to inspect the returns from these same seven counties, to ascertain the relative proportion of Administration and Jackson members who had been chosen: the result was, that of the fourteen members elected FOUR were for the Administration and TEN for Jackson; and on extending our examination a little further, and comparing the number of votes given in these counties for the Administration candidates with the number given to the Jackson candidates, we found them, in the aggregate, to stand thus:

Jackson Candidates	6115
Administration Do.	1367

Making a disparity in favour of the Jackson candidates of four thousand seven hundred and forty-eight votes!!

The above text and commentary, may assist the reader, in forming something like a correct idea of the meaning which is attached in the Coalition vocabulary, to the terms "very flattering prospects"—"highly gratifying intelligence," &c. &c.—Winchester Virginian.

VIRGINIA ELECTIONS.

	Jackson.	Adams.
In nine counties,	3505	173
Henrico,	258	207
Frederick,	742	354
King George,	112	117
Pendleton,	232	000
Greensville,	120	000
Princess Ann,	136	240
Nottoway,	83	12
Warwick,	81	00
Rockbridge,	211	260
Chesterfield,	577	000
Buckingham,	230	90
Montgomery,	764	000
Nansemond,	159	177
Ohio,	483	55
Spotsylvania,	580	83
Isle of Weight,	270	000
Total	8552	1774

RHODE ISLAND.—The election in this state has just terminated, and in such a manner as to indicate great strength to the Jackson party there. The Providence federal papers, and we believe they are all federal but the Patriot, with a virulence exceeding in its rancour the days of the gag law in the reign of the first Adams, denounced two of the republican candidates for senators as Jackson men, opposed to the administration. They proclaimed that the election of these candidates would and ought to be considered as the triumph of the Jackson party—they are elected, and now these same papers are trying to explain away the facts. It will not do—people in Rhode Island are getting awake, and so they are in other states. It is not only a fact that these senators are Jackson men, but it is equally well known that Gov. Fenner is also a Jackson man, open and avowed, and although these federal editors detest him for his politics they dared not oppose him. It is further known that Mr. Carrington, who is elected a representative from Providence, is also a Jackson man. These are facts which if denied, are susceptible of proof. It is amusing to see these Providence editors who have evinced the most shameless intolerance and illiberality, whose minds seem more circumscribed than even the bounds of their little state, writhing, in agony that the good sense of the people has put them down. It is the violence of these papers—the bold exposure of their cloven foot,—which has made converts to the Jackson or democratic cause. Similar causes produced like effects in New-Hampshire; and Massachusetts will yet arise in her republican strength.—Boston Statesman.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE.—The changes in favour of Gen. Jackson, in this part of the state, are as numerous and rapid as his friends could wish; and should the other parts of the state keep pace with Sullivan county, we hesitate not to say that the Jackson electors will receive a majority of two or three thousand votes in the fall. The current is too strong to be resisted.—[N. H. Spectator.

From the New-York Enquirer.

ECONOMY.

We do not profess to belong to that class of politicians, who feel, or pretend to feel, a desire to be economical at the expense of public good—on the contrary, we desire to see liberality governed by prudence, and expenditures controlled by necessity. Nevertheless, when wanton extravagance, and waste of public money are sanctioned by the administration, the sooner the people change their public servants, the better it will be for the coffers of the nation. We have before us the report of the committee on the expenditures of the department of state, in which there are some items which would make a republican cabinet blush, viz.:—

"Maurice Furst for a gold medal of John Quincy Adams, $100."

Now, the sum of $100, it is true, is not of much consequence, but it is the principle it involves. For what public use, or benefit, is this gold medal of Mr. Adams intended? who is to wear it? is it Mr. Clay? we think he has weight enough of the original around his neck. Where is the appropriation, by congress, for this gold medal? If you give away $100 of the public money, for a gold medal of the President, there is nothing to prevent the payment of a pension to him, and allowance to his eldest son. To the next—

"Do. M. M. Cruickshank, for blue velvet, port folio, embroidered with chenille (with gold tassels) $100."

Monstrous! $100 for a port folio, when a neat morocco one, in a plain republican style, may be had for $10, which would answer the purpose—besides, where is the appropriation, or who is it for? Probably it is the identical golden port folio, in which Prince John carries the messages to both houses of congress.

"Cash paid Richard Rush, for sundry books and newspapers, procured by him in London, $799 98."

Nearly 800 dollars for foreign news papers without reference to the sum to newspapers at home, which print by "authority." For whose use were these newspapers imported, and where is the appropriation?

"Do. to Robert Ellis for Lives and Portraits of eminent Englishmen!! $40."

Has not President Adams given sufficient proof of his attachment to eminent Englishmen without making the freemen of this country pay the expense? Is this a proper expenditure of public money?

"Do. W. A. Davis 16 reams English laid 4to post paper, gilt, at $9 per ream, $144."

Well done American System. Mr. Clay, who calls himself the father, or he should rather say the step father of this system, expending 144 dollars of the people's money for English writing paper. We know the reason, however; for though American hot pressed letter paper is equally as good as English, yet it has no little stamp of a crown on the corner of the quire.

"Do. G. Gaither for a dozen Silver Pens. $2 50."

Silver pens—vanitas vanitatum—or as some ill-natured Latinists would say, Ebony and Topaz. Mr. Adams wears a thimble when he writes, and probably requires some equally hard substance in the composition of his pens, but why a dozen silver pens, if plain continental goose quills would not answer, one silver pen might do.

"Do. G. E. Ironside, for a platina pen, $6."

Just now a whole dozen silver pens cost but $2 50; but as silver was cheap and plenty in Washington, (which is not the case in Wall-street) something more costly must be sought for, or the people's money would continue to rust in the coffers.

"Do. Davis & Force, for printing 50 copies ☞directions for Minister's dress, $2 50."

Shades of Benj. Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, Roger Sherman, Patrick Henry and other venerable patriots who founded our Republic—what would you say, could you be familiar with such expenditures in the 52nd year of American independence? Bonaparte, amidst the splendour of his Court, took pleasure in singling out Chancellor Livingston, and always conversed with him though he wore a snuff-colored coat; but to make people pay for directions for such trash, or indeed to meddle with a Minister's coat and breeches, is contemptible, and beneath the character of a free and enlightened people.

"Do. W. Slade, for bearing despatches to New-York, $100."

This is an impudent charge, to say the least of it. It is true, that political partisans have had their newspapers tied up and sent to foreign Courts as despatches, and they have received 1000, 1500, and 1900 dollars for expenses, but to send a despatch messenger to New-York, when a daily mail runs from Washington, is a shameful expense. We can inform them, however, that the person who received one hundred dollars for carrying despatches to New-York, actually carried them to Vermont, to which place he was sent on an electioneering mission.

We must lay by the black book for the present, with the simple remark, that extravagance and impudent waste of public money, are sanctioned at Washington, while the remnant of our revolutionary officers, are in vain praying for the pittance which is due to them—and we are daily losing sight of that simplicity and economy, which should characterize a Republican Government.

Adam's Levee and Ball in honour of Jackson.—The following account of the grand Levee and Ball, given by Adams, to Jackson Jan. 8, 1824, is copied from the Commercial!!

"I enjoyed the pleasure of being present at the Ball given by Mr. Adams on the 8th inst. in honour of Gen. Jackson. The House, which is a spacious private dwelling was thrown open in almost every part to admit the crowd of visitors who had been invited to attend this demi-public entertainment. Numerous lamps illuminated the Halls, stair-case and drawing rooms. The lower apartments were decorated with ever green wreaths entwined round the white painted pillars that supported the ceiling, hanging in circles about the chandeliers, and passing in unbroken lines round the cornices of I believe that entire story. Before 8 o'clock all the rooms were so much occupied, as to render it a slow and somewhat difficult matter to pass out of one into the other. The General entered about half past 8. His name was loudly announced, and in an instant all eyes were turned to seek the hero of the night.—He looked unusually well. His feelings excited by the occasion suffused his cheek (at other times rather sallow) with a ruddy tinge. His face was dressed in smiles, and his bending form, as he advanced in uniform thro' the thick ranks of receding beauty presented a fine image of Mars, in the presence of Venus. He approached Mrs. Adams, who was in a silk dress, sparkling with ornaments, with a sort of Spanish hat loaded with plumes and taking her arm the pair promenaded as well as the encumbering crowd rendered it possible, paying his respect to the many groupes who were in succession courtesying and bowing to his salute. We soon lost sight of him as he passed into the other apartments; and those who were endeavouring to discover in which room he was to be found missed the sight of him altogether."

Alas! alas! poor human nature. Now Jackson is a murderer, an assassin—he never gained the victory of New Orleans—he is every thing shocking and infamous, and why, gentle reader? forsooth, he is the People's candidate for President against Adams.

CONTENTS

Of the American Farmer of May [illegible]

Extract from a Circular of E. [illegible] Harris of New Orleans, on the raising and curing of Tobacco; with notes by the Editor of the American Farmer—On the Culture of Lucerne, translated from the Abbe Rozier, concluded—Culture of the Sugar Cane—Most extraordinary and destructive frost in Alabama—N. Herbemont on Pruning Grapes, with some difficulties in their culture—Gooseberries—Transplanting the High Cranberry—Railroad between Baltimore and the City of Washington—Code of Instruction for Husbands—A Fine Extract from Cherries—Portrait of a Sportsman—the Old School—Scene at a Nobleman's Castle in England—Poetry—Anacreontic—Signs of a good Horse—Thorough bred Stallions—Tables—Money—Editorial.

☞Postponements.

The sale of Francis D. Nelson's property is postponed to Wednesday the 14th inst. at 11 o'clock A.M.

The sale of Levin W. Ballard's property is postponed to Tuesday the 13th instant, between the hours of 2 and 3 o'clock P. M.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fi. Facias issued by James L. Waller, a Justice of the Peace for Somerset county and to me directed at the suit of Joshua Hitch and John W. Leatherbury against Thomas Roberts, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called Nelzy containing 16 acres more or less; which I shall proceed to sell on the premises on Monday the 2nd of June next, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

May 12th 1828.

From the Philadelphia Mercury.

Presidential Votes.

STATES for Jackson.		STATES Certain for Adams.
[illegible]	[illegible]	Massachusetts	15
[illegible]	28	N. Hampshire	8
[illegible]	[illegible]	Maine	9
[illegible]	24	Connecticut	8
[illegible] Carolina	15	Rhode Island	4
[illegible] Carolina	11	Maryland	4
[illegible]	9	Vermont	7
[illegible]	[illegible]		55

STATES for Jackson.		STATES Doubtful.
[illegible]	[illegible]	New York	14
[illegible]	[illegible]	Mississippi	3
[illegible]	8	Kentucky	14
[illegible]	5	Ohio	16
[illegible]	5	Illinois	3
[illegible]	5		50
	24

The foregoing table shows as correct a view of the present state of the [candid]ates for President and Vice [President] as is perhaps, possible [to obtain] at the present time. From [the data] here furnished, by the votes [illegible] the certain election of Gen. [Jackson] by the votes of nine states, [which] are all conceded by our opponents. 132 votes constitute an election. Exclusive of this number, we [have] 24 votes in five states, highly [probable], but those we have not included in the estimate; deeming it [liberal] to leave out every contested or disputed vote. We give Mr. [Adams] 56 certain; 50 are doubtful. [For] him to obtain all the doubtful [and] all those highly probable for [Jackson] and in our opinion certain still Mr. Adams cannot be [elected]. But on a reasonable calculation General Jackson will receive [half] the doubtful, which added to [the] total of those set down as probable gives him 169 votes.

[On th]is data, the certainty of Mr. [Adams'] defeat suggests a question [to the] patriotism and reason strongly [calling] on the serious attention of his [friends]. Why persist in waging a [political] warfare to the dishonour of our country, and the blight of [illegible] in a hopeless contest? When [nothing] can possibly be gained by [falsehood] and forgery, slander and [illegible] why continue to tear to atoms the characters of our greatest [men], and expose to the contempt of foreign monarchs our republican principles and [illegible] government? Would it not be consonant to the genius of our political institutions, to acquiesce with good grace in the voice of the people, and succumb to a decision of the people, that is hallowed by every consideration of love of country, [illegible] fame? If a hope existed of [illegible] the defeat of Mr. Adams, [there] would be some excuse for [their] pertinacity and factious desperation. But that hope has long since expired. When both Houses of Congress elected by the people as inimical to Adams, he might have perused [in them] so infallible indication [of the] popular will; and it must continue to excite astonishment, that a power so signally doomed to [defeat] by the predicatory voice of the people, should still continue in the delusion of recovering confidence, by a desperate career of course abuse and vindictive [illegible]. It is, indeed, a feature of [illegible] that will stamp the present [illegible] with peculiar and unparalleled [illegible] party vanquished in [the] centre of their own camp; dependent on their victors for the [breath of] life, should continue to cherish [hopes] of triumph, in virtue of the [abuse] they hourly pour upon their adversaries! We have often contemplated this view of the question with incredulity; we could not believe that Mr. Adams' friends cherished the most remote idea of final [success] in this election. We do not believe they can be so insensible to [the] facts, and demonstrative evidence of public opinion; we allude to the decided majorities in both houses of Congress opposed to Mr. Adams; [a] unprecedented in this country, forming an entirely novel feature in the youthful history of our political life. We invite the attention of the people to this striking manifestation of public sentiment; and then [ask if] it be possible that the people [illegible] silent, whom they [illegible] by majorities in Congress.

[It must] be remembered that the [foregoing] statement is the one least [favourable] to General Jackson—it is [made from] the statement of our enemy. [Were] it our complexion, it would assume a shape too formidable for the [hopes] of our opponents.

[Again] we say to the friends of Mr. [Adams], why lay waste the character of the country in so hopeless a [contest]? Why struggle against a doom [which] history has already recorded on the [page] of truth? It is an old saying, [to] cease to do evil, is an atonement [for] guilt almost equal to virtue.

From the same.

[Gen]. Jackson on the American [System]. We insert to day the able, independent, and patriotic letter of [Gen.] Jackson to the Executive of [illegible] on this subject—Again the [illegible] favour bursts upon us in all his native glory. Again are his enemies vanquished, and his friends rejoiced. A[gain] does he prove, that his principles [are those] of Jefferson, and his policy, [that of] the true friend of his country. [illegible] no more puts a new impress upon [his] letter to Dr. Coleman; and asks [to be] considered as the true type of [his] opinions at the present moment.—[In a] words, he is now, as we ever [believed] him to be, the Father of the American System in its wide and extended sense—not of the Yankee system—not of the woollen system, nor any of the other partial and local views of the question, but of the system in its universal and comprehensive sense OUR NATIONAL. General Jackson says—

"Heaven smiled upon and gave us Liberty and Independence, and national defence—in the same manner it has committed to us the gifts which He has extended to us, we deserve not the continuation of His blessings. He has filled our mountains and our plains with minerals, with Lead, Iron, and Copper, and given us climate and soil for the growing of Hemp and Wool. These being the grand materials of our national defence, they ought to have extended to them adequate and fair protection, that our manufactories and labourers may be placed on a fair competition with those of Europe."

—What will the libellers say to this? Why, that General Jackson wrote this in 1824!—We say it is false—he has written it in April 1828.

From the Eastern (Maine) Argus.

Mr. Adams and the Federal Party.

Governor Giles has recently published an article in the Richmond Enquirer, in which he states that in the year 1807, just before Mr. Adams deserted the federal party Mr. A. made a confidential disclosure to him of the treasonable projects of the leading federalists of New England. Afterwards he made a similar communication to Mr. Jefferson. Mr. J. has alluded to the same thing in a private letter to Mr. Giles, which has also been published. What the precise facts were, communicated by Mr. A. to Gov. Giles and Mr. Jefferson, has never been made public; as Mr. A. made them under the seal of secrecy. Mr. Giles has three times mentioned this subject in different articles, published in the Richmond Enquirer, and has called on Mr. Adams in the most solemn manner to make the matter public. Mr. Adams however preserves the most mysterious silence, a silence that can only be accounted for by the fact that he has re-united himself to the very men whom he then denounced as plotting the dissolution of the union. Mr. Adams has himself publicly alluded to these treasonable plots in a review of Fisher Ames' works published in 1809 or '10. He intimates that the conspiracy extended to some of the leading politicians of N. York, that it was intended to carry it into effect by military force, and that Hamilton was to command the army. Too much has been made public on the subject for it to be winked out of sight. It does not rest on the authority of Gov. Giles alone. It is confirmed by Mr. Jefferson, and corroborated by Mr. Adams himself. As the facts now appear, Mr. Adams is acting with men whom he denounced as conspirators against their country—he gives them his confidence—he placed them in the highest offices of the government—they come into power and assume the reins of government with him. We want light on this subject.

The facts which are known are these. In 1807, Mr. Adams accused the leaders of the federal party of engaging in a conspiracy against the union and liberties of the country; he is now connected in the closest bonds of union with these same federalists.

Was the accusation true or false?—If it was true, what must be thought of Mr. Adams' political re-union with that party? If it was false, why was the charge made and in this secret and mysterious way? It is evident that it was believed by Mr. Giles and Mr. Jefferson to be true when it was made. But whether true or false, the position in which Mr. A. is placed is at once embarrassing and discreditable.

It is now ascertained that Mr. A. made overtures to the leaders of the federal party before his election, offering in substance to bring them into power provided they would support him. It is not now denied that a letter was written by one of Mr. A.'s tools, shown to him and altered so as to suit his views, and then sent to Mr. Webster. We say it is not denied, because the persons named as being engaged in this intrigue have not denied it. This letter containing Mr. Adams' pledge, was offered to be shown to Mr. McLane of Delaware, to secure his vote, but he, though a uniform and consistent federalist, yet not of the ultra school, indignantly repelled the approaches of corruption.

These facts are known. They are left by Mr. Adams unexplained. His union with Mr. Clay was like the union of Antony and Octavius, overcoming the most rancorous personal hostility on both sides to secure themselves political power. But passing over this, and reverting to his secret and midnight intrigues against and with the federalists, and in what light do they exhibit Mr. Adams? As a desperate political intriguer, ready to sacrifice principles, parties and friends to insure his own personal aggrandizement; overleaping all those principles which govern honourable and virtuous minds, to grasp at power. He has acted with all parties, and betrayed all parties.

Up to 1806, he was a violent federal partisan. In 1807, he betrayed their secrets, denouncing them as conspirators, and joined the republican party. A new order of things arises. He is a candidate for the presidency. He professes to be exclusively republican.—He, or his friends for him, denounced Mr. Crawford, his competitor, as being too much inclined to favour the federal party to bring them into power, provided they will support him. These are facts on record. They cannot be denied, and we ask the republicans to reflect on them.

We know that many most estimable republicans have not been satisfied with us for opposing Mr. Adams. But with the strongest convictions we have on our minds, we cannot support him. Believing as we do, we should be unfaithful, not only to the republican party but to the country, if we gave him our support. Our opinions have not been hastily made up. We have come to them slowly, and will add, reluctantly. The time has been when we had a high opinion of Mr. Adams. We will admit also that our partiality was increased in consequence of his being a New England man. We were from the first reluctant in opposing him, because we were unwilling to surrender opinions long entertained and long cherished, and also because we knew that many of our best friends warmly supported him and entertained the same feelings and opinions which were once cherished by ourselves. But as the conductors of a public press, our duties to our country are paramount to all considerations of personal wishes and private convenience. We do not believe that political power can be safely entrusted to the hands which now hold it. We believe that the fountain head is impure. The administration of the first Adams was emphatically denounced the reign of terror; that of the second, is with equal propriety and truth called the reign of corruption.

COLONIAL TRADE.

A brief account of it, and how it was lost through the culpable negligence of the President of the United States.

In the summer of 1825, Great Britain, not having concluded any satisfactory arrangement with the U. States in relation to her colonial trade, passed a law, whereby the ports of her colonies were closed after a certain day, to any nation who did not reciprocate with her the provisions of that law, and opening them to any nation who would do so. The Executive of the United States, although in possession of this act of Parliament, failed to submit it to Congress, as he ought to have done. In consequence of this, the time limited by the act expired, without any reciprocal act being passed by us. Great Britain then finding herself in a different situation from that which she had before occupied in relation to the U. States gave effect to her own statue, and her West Indian ports were so closed to the vessels of the United States.

France acted with more discretion: and in February, 1826, adopted an ordinance, by which the British act of Parliament is reciprocated by her.—The effect of the ordinance however is, to open the ports therein mentioned to the vessels of any nation.—The United States therefore might have entitled themselves to its benefits as well as any other power. To enable as well as to induce them to do so, in June 1826, the Baron de Mareuil, the French Minister at Washington, communicated the ordinance to our government. This Minister afterwards, expressed to our Secretary of State a wish, which the chairman of the committee of commerce has read from the despatch containing it, that the liberal provisions of this ordinance should be reciprocated by us.

But the President of the U. States, although warned of the consequences of improper delay, in the memorable example to which reference has been made, OMITTED to communicate this ordinance to congress, either at the session which commenced in 1826, or at the present session, nor was the important intelligence which this ordinance contains, ever communicated to the people of the United States, until the document itself was dragged from the port folio of the Secretary of State, by the resolution offered by the Senator from Maryland, demanding, information in relation to this subject.

Such is the history of this transaction. From this, it will appear, that if France, after the official communications she has made, and after waiting for nearly two years for an act of reciprocity on our part, has already regarded, or shall hereafter consider the silence of this government, as evidence of an indisposition to reciprocate her policy, and shall therefore change that policy as to the United States we must ascribe any injury that may result to us from such a change, to the gross neglect of our own executive.—He might be considered perhaps as using strong language, (said Mr. Tazewell) but he thought the evidence before the Senate abundantly justified what he had said, that nothing but the most inexcusable negligence, could have produced the state of things which he believed now existed.—(Speech of Mr. Tazewell, April 2d, 1828.

ADAMS IN MAINE.

A ludicrous drawback upon the courage and confidence of the administration party in Oxford county has just been witnessed there—more, however, with feelings of compassion, than exultation by the straight forward, firm and undaunted friends to the election of Gen. Andrew Jackson. For some weeks since a note has been kept in the administration paper at Norway, and by way of display copied into other papers out of that county, calling an Administration Convention to be holden at Norway on the 30th of the current month, and requesting the friends of Adams in their respective towns to assemble previously to elect delegates to compose said Convention. Accordingly a caucus was called by one of the select men of Paris, semi-officially, by posting up notices and advertising in the Norway paper sufficiently long as. was supposed to ensure notice thereof to every voter in the town, and last Saturday afternoon was the time assigned for brining the love of that community for the administration into a tangible form. But what was the chagrin of the "faithful few," when on looking about themselves they found only six, out of two thousand inhabitants, assembled at their call! O disloyalty! disloyalty in the extreme! What means this lank, and unpropitious display of feebleness. We must have an adjournment, was the cry, (not to a meeting house?) and the meeting was therefore adjourned for one hour to rally new members, lest, as one orator expressed himself, the six should be laughed at by the Jackson Printer, at this place! When the hour had expired, and the heart become weary with effort the meeting was again called to order, and "the whole number," says the Jeffersonian, "including 'out of town borders' and 'cast off journeymen printers,' amounted to FOURTEEN!" Mirabile dictu! Adams in Maine! But the best of the tale is untold. The principal orator of the fourteen, whose political principles are not pretended to have undergone any change, who addressed the meeting in a set speech, is the same man who on the 4th of July 1814, gave the following toast.

"Thomas Jefferson. When he dies, may he be ferried over the river Styx, in one of his favourite gun-boats, while Tom Paine holds the helm, and Bonaparte guards the gun to keep off Cerberus and the Furies."

Another member of the caucus is of the same kidney: a third was a gentleman who not a great while since railed and wrote against caucuses, and recently denounced John Q. Adams and General Jackson as 'both rascals.'

So much for the administration Court House meeting of Oxford. Go on gentlemen. Every demonstration of your strength, furnishes new evidence of your comparative weakness. We cheer your perseverance. We hope not to need your patience.

[Maine Patriot, of April.

From the Boston Statesman.

NEW ENGLAND.

The friends of General Jackson in Massachusetts must be up and doing. Although this is the nest of aristocracy, yet we must come out and do our share in the great contest for liberty and republican principles now waging in this state, and in the Fall, if proper exertions are made, we shall give at least the third of the votes of Massachusetts in favour of Jackson. The late election shows that the Jackson party is increasing. There was no correct organization or arrangement, yet the votes thrown for Judge Morton were spontaneous exhibitions of feeling, and demonstrate that much may be done even here in Gath, to shake John Q. Adams on his throne.

In Vermont, our friends are zealously at work, and the Jackson force is very strong, and constantly increasing. In New Hampshire, we polled more than twenty thousand votes—and had it not been for the lying letter, stating that Madison and Monroe would stand on the Adams ticket in Virginia, which imposed on many republicans, we should have prevailed. All the recent accounts from the patriotic republican state, inform us that every honorable exertion will be made, and that there is every prospect that the Jackson electoral ticket will triumph, and the entire vote of the state will be given to the democratic candidate—the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory, and deserves her gratitude and highest honours. In Rhode Island it is said that the Jackson men have actually beaten the Adams men. In Connecticut, the administration party is about two thousand votes stronger than the Jackson party, who are full of the spirit and hope—but as the Hartford Convention was holden there, it ought to be for Adams. In Maine there is a decided Jackson majority in both branches of the Legislature, and we shall have some of the electoral votes of that state, where they vote by districts.

This is the state of things in N. England, the only place where John Q. Adams has any strength, and the only part of the country where he can reasonably expect the vote of a single state. Let us, then, persevere in the good cause; we can do much, even in New England—yes, even in Massachusetts; and we owe it to our country and ourselves, to leave no stone unturned to aid the success of the great and glorious cause in which we are engaged.

The administration papers contain an extract of a letter from Copenhagen, which says, that Mr. Wheaton, our charge de affaires at that place, "has met with a distinguished reception from the Royal Family, and that the king was much pleased with him. "I have observed," says the letter writer, "that his majesty, at court, converses with Mr. Wheaton longer than with any other of the diplomatic characters who were present." "O Cricket!" How these Adams Diplomatists do please emperors and kings! [Boston Statesman.

THE TARIFF.

This grand forlorn hope the Adams men have been clinging to with their fondest anticipations, calculating they would have at least one powerful weapon left to hurl at the Jackson party; intending, if possible, to defeat the bill, and charge the failure to the General's friends. In this wo-begotten hope they have been disappointed. The Tariff bill has passed the House of Representatives nearly in the shape as reported by the committee, by a vote of one hundred and five to ninety-four; and thus the fond hopes of those self-styled disinterested politicians are blasted in the bud, realizing what we have oft repeated, that selfishness is the governing principle of man. What has become of the goodly eastern brethren and their patriotism? Of the New England delegation twenty-six voted against the bill and fifteen in its favour: even the Rev. Mr. Everett, one of the delegates to the Harrisburg convention, voted against the bill. Verily we believe that many of the honest, but misinformed, followers of the present desperate Administration will see their misleading, and be ready to cry "Peccavi," and promise to sin no more—truth can only be arrived at but at the expense of error, the acknowledgment of which constitutes one of the most ennobling traits of human nature. The spirit of inquiry is abroad—truth and justice must outweigh falsehood and deception. Let the people know all the facts, and we fear not the result—they will prostrate one of the most unprincipled Administrations that ever presided over any country.—Ind. Journal.

GOOD WAGES.

John Quincy Adams received for his services and expenses, from the 29th of April, 1813, to the 27th February, 1815, a trifle over twenty-two months, SIXTY EIGHT THOUSAND FOUR HUNDRED and SEVENTY DOLLARS, and of this sum, about forty thousand dollars were received for one year's services: all of which appears in the public report made to Congress, April 30, 1822. And be it remembered, that while Mr. Adams was thus surfeiting himself on Treasury pap, he wrote a letter to Mr. Harris, of St. Petersburg, complaining that our government was "weak and penurious." Mercury.

LOUISIANA.

[Extract of a letter, dated "New Orleans, April 9"]

Glorious victory.—An election for mayor, aldermen and recorder of this city took place yesterday, and resulted in the total defeat of the administration candidates. In consequence of their being two Jackson candidates for recorder, an Adams man is elected to that office. Our ticket succeeded in every ward but one, which elected an Adams alderman by a majority of two! The city council, heretofore in favour of the "powers that be," now has 10 out of 12 members in favour of Jackson's election. They might have easily elected their recorder, but division always causes defeat. The average majority for the Jackson ticket is 350—1420 votes were taken.

N. Y. Enquirer.

THE SIX COFFINS.

From the Dover Gazette.

Says Ben to Jo, pray let us know
What these Six Coffins mean,
Some shipwreck sore upon our shore
I fear has lately been—
Says Jo to Ben, these hold six men,
Once mighty in the nation;
To Johnny Q. belongs this crew,
The wreck's Amalgamation.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of John J. Davis use of James H. Handy against John Taylor, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—Part of a tract of land called 'Warwick,' and part of a tract of land called 'Medfield,' containing 219½ acres, more or less; also part of 'James's Debate,' 89 acres, more or less, part of 'Ralph's Venture,' 94 acres, more or less; part of 'Cannon's Good Luck,' 10 acres; also part of 'Chance' and 'Addition to Chance,' containing 12 acres, more or less, one negro Ely, 1 do. George, 1 do. Major, 1 do. Adam, 1 do. Leah, 1 do. Polly, 1 do. Leah, 1 do. Nancy and 1do. Nancy, 1 do. Lucretia, 1 do. Sarah, and 1 do. Amelia, which I shall proceed to sell at the court house door in Princess-Anne, on Tuesday the 13th of May next, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN Shff.

April 29—22. L D C 2

E. T. J. Woodward,

Corner of Dugan's wharf & Pratt St. BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, Oats, and Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

Also,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. mw

WEAVERS' BRUSHES,

Reeds and Shuttles,

Wash and cake boards,
Sifters, Lamp and candlewick,
Muddlers, and lime squeezers
Pound, half pound and and quarter pound Butter Prints, of various patterns
Weaver's slays or reeds
Shoe, sweeping, dusting and other brushes
Twine and cord, patent taps
Cane, for reed makers
Humming and common tops
Boot & shoe blacking, towel rollers
Lamp wicks, assorted sizes, by the dozen or gross
Spiggots and faucets, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs, and hydrants
Fancy and common bellows
Fishing lines and rods, butter bowls and trays, Baskets
Nests of sugar boxes and tubs
Potato & turnip mashers, rolling pins
Carpenters' or joiners' chalk lines, etc.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,

No. 101½ Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.

May 19th, 1828.

We are authorized to announce

William Done, Esq.

as a Candidate for the next General Assembly of Maryland.

May 6, 1828. jw

We are authorized to announce

John C. Wilson, jr. Esq.

as a candidate to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

May 13, 1828. mu

We are authorized to announce

Levin D. Jones, Esq.

as a candidate to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

May 13, 1828. lv

We are authorized to announce

William H. Waters, Esq.

as a candidate to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Court of Appeals and to me directed, at the suit of Benjamin I. Dashiell, use of Ara Spence, Irving Spence and William U. Purnell, Executors of James B. Robbins against Arnold E. Jones, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: All the buildings, improvements and implements used and occupied as a tanyard, all the tans, vats, hides, tanned and untanned, and one cart and horse, now occupied by Samuel McBryde, which I shall proceed to sell at the Court-house door, in Princess-Anne on Saturday the 31st instant, between the hours of 2 and 3 o'clock P. M. for cash to the highest and best bidder, to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

May 8th—13 sgh

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of the State of Maryland for the use of John Byrd against George Dashiell, John Fowler, Beachamb Acworth and Benjamin Dashiell, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one negro man Charles, taken as the property of the said Beachamb; one negro man Mingo, and one do. Bob, taken as the property of the said Benjamin, which I shall proceed to sell on the premises of the said Beachamb on Friday the 16th of May, at the hour of 11 o'clock A.M. and on Saturday the 17th on the premises of the said Benjamin at the hour of 11 o'clock A. M. for cash to satisfy the above mentioned claim.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

April 23—29. T J

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court, and to me directed, at the suit of Charles Jones, use of Greenbury Toole, use of William Done against Matthias Wingate, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit:—Four head of cattle, 9 head of hogs, 3 beds and furniture, 1 corner cupboard, 1 bureau, 1 pine table, one walnut table, 1 horse, bridle and saddle, and 92 acres of land called 'Hazzard,' which I shall proceed to sell at public sale, on Saturday the 16th of May next, between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M. and 3 o'clock P. M. on the premises, to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the aforesaid writ.

GEO. DASHIELL, late Sff.

April 22. fjlc

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, the State of Maryland, use of William Hearn, against William Crockett, will be sold at the court-house door, on Tuesday the 13th day of May next, between the hours of 2 and 4 o'clock, the following property, to wit—A house and lot in the town of Princess-Anne, at present occupied by Hetty Crockett, being a lot of ground adjoining the water and lying on the main street contiguous to the town bridge, to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above writ.

GEORGE DASHIELL,

April 22 late Shff.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, the State of Maryland, use of William Hearn, against John Jones, Dames Quarter, will be sold at the court-house door in the town of Princess-Anne, on Tuesday the 13th day of May next, between the hours of 2 and 4 o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called Prospect, containing 273 acres, more or less, being in my bailiwick, to the highest and best bidder; for cash, to satisfy the above writ.

GEORGE DASHIELL,

April 22, 1828. late Shff.

This is to give Notice,

THAT the Subscriber of the city of Baltimore, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Baltimore county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of MARY WARD late of said county deceased.

All persons having claims against said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof, on or before the 5th day of November next, to JAMES M. BUCHANNAN, Esq. my attorney, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate; and all persons indebted to the said estate, are requested to make immediate payment to my attorney as aforesaid. Given under my hand, this 7th day of April, 1828.

HOWES GOLDSBOROUGH.

April 15 jdm

THE PARTERRE.

'Twill daily instil into the mind a relish for the useful and the sweet.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

TO ——

Why shrink'st thou from me, beauteous flower,
As tho' I wish'd to harm thee,
Has then my touch asp like the power,
Thus rudely to alarm thee?

'Tis thus Mimosa gently turns,
When ruman blasts assail her,
For when her broken stem she mourns,
No Zephyr will bewail her.

I blame thee not.—The fairest flower,
Is often easiest shattered,
Even by the wish'd for vernal shower,
Its sweetest perfumes scattered.

Rest here thy head dear blushing rose,
No ruffian winds shall shake thee;
Upon my breast thy bloom repose,
No storm of life shall wake thee.

PHILO—SE.

From the Percy Anecdotes.

FORTY-FIVE DAYS SUFFERINGS.

Captain David Harrison, who commanded a sloop of New York, called the Peggy, has left a melancholy narrative of the sufferings of himself and his crew, when in a voyage from Fayal, one of the Azores, in 1769. A storm which had continued for some days, successively blew away the sails and shrouds; and on the first of December, one shroud on a side and the main sail alone remained. In this situation they could make very little way, and all their provisions were exhausted, except bread, of which but a small quantity was left; they came at last to an allowance of a quarter of a pound a day, with a quart of water and a pint of wine for each man.

The ship was now become very leaky; the waves were swelled into mountains by the storm, and the thunder rolled incessantly over their heads in one dreadful almost unintermitting peal. In this frightful dilemma, either of sinking with the wreck, or floating in her and perishing with hunger, two vessels came in sight, but such was the tempest, that neither could approach; and they saw the vessels that would willingly have relieved them, disappear, with sensations more bitter than death itself. The allowance of bread and water, though still further contracted, soon exhausted their stores, and every morsel of food was finished, and only about two gallons of water remained in the bottom of a cask. The poor fellows who, while they had any sustenance, continued obedient to the captain, were now driven by desperation to excess; they seized upon the cargo, and because wine and brandy were all they had left, they drank of both till the frenzy of hunger was increased by drunkenness, and exclamations of distress were blended with curses and blasphemy. The dregs of the water cask were abandoned to the captain, who abstaining as much as possible from wine, husbanded them with the greatest economy.

In the midst of these horrors, this complication of want and of excess, of distraction and despair, they espied another sail. Every eye was instantly, turned towards it; the signal of distress was hung out, and they had the unspeakable satisfaction of being near enough to the ship to communicate their situation. Relief was promised by the captain; but this, alas! was but "the mock of wo;" and instead of sending the relief he had promised, the unfeeling wretch crowded all sail, and left the distressed crew to all the agony of despair which misery and disappointment could occasion.

The crew once more deserted, and cut off from their last hope, were still prompted by an intuitive love of life to preserve it as long as possible. The only living creatures on board the vessel, besides themselves, were two pigeons and a cat. The pigeons were killed immediately, and divided among them for their Christmas dinner; the next day they killed the cat; and as there were nine persons to partake of the repast, they divided her into nine parts, which they disposed of by lot. The head fell to the share of Captain Harrison, and he declared that he never eat any thing that he thought so delicious in his life.

The next day the crew began to scrape the ship's bottom for barnacles; but the waves had beat off those above water, and the men were too weak to hang long over the ship's side. During all this time, the poor wretches sought only to forget their misery in intoxication; and while they were continually heating wine in the steerage, the captain subsisted upon the dirty water at the bottom of the cask, half a pint of which with a few drops of Turlington's Balsam, was his whole subsistence for twenty-four hours.

To add to their calamity, they had neither candle nor oil; and they were in consequence compelled to pass sixteen hours out of the twenty-four in total darkness, except the glimmering light of the fire. Still however, by the help of their only sail, they made a little way; but on the 28th of December, another storm overtook them, which blew their only sail to rags.—The vessel now lay like a wreck on the water, and was wholly at the mercy of the winds and waves.

How they subsisted from this time to the 13th of January, sixteen days, does not appear, as their biscuit had been long exhausted, and the last bit of animal food which they tasted, was the cat on the 26th of December; yet on the 13th of January they were all alive, and the crew, with the mate at their head, came to the captain in the cabin, half drunk indeed, but with sufficient sensibility to express the horror of their purpose in the countenances. They said that they could hold out no longer, their tobacco was exhausted, they had eaten up all the leather belonging to the pump, and even the buttons from their jackets, and that now they had no means of preventing their perishing together, but by casting lots which of them should be sacrificed for the subsistence of the rest. The captain endeavoured to divert them from their purpose until the next day; but in vain; they became outrageous, and with execrations of peculiar horror, swore that what was to be done, must be done immediately; that it was indifferent to them whether he acquiesced or dissented; and that though they had paid him the compliment of acquainting him with their resolution, yet they would compel him to take his chance with the rest, for general misfortune put an end to personal distinction.

The captain resisted, but in vain; the men retired to decide on the fate of some victim, and in a few minutes returned, and said the lot had fallen on the negro, who was part of the cargo. The poor fellow knowing what had been determined against him, and seeing one of the crew loading a pistol to despatch him, implored the captain to save his life; but he was instantly dragged to the steerage, and shot through the head.

Having made a large fire, they began to cut the negro up almost as soon as he was dead, intending to fry his entrails for supper; but James Campbell, one of the fore-mast men, being ravenously impatient for food, tore the liver out of the body, and devoured it raw; the remainder of the crew, however, dressed the meat, and continued their banquet until two o'clock in the morning.

The next day the crew pickled the remainder of the negro's body, except the head and fingers, which, by common consent, they threw overboard. The captain refused to taste any part of it, and continued to subsist on the dirty water. On the third day after the death of the negro, Campbell, who had devoured the liver raw, died raving mad, and his body was thrown overboard, the crew dreading the consequence of eating it. The negro's body was husbanded with rigid economy, and lasted the crew, now consisting of six persons, from the 13th to the 26th of January, when they were again reduced to total abstinence, except their wine. This they endured until the 29th, when the mate again came to the captain at the head of the men, and told him it was now become necessary that they should cast lots a second time. The captain endeavoured again to reason them from their purpose, but without success; and therefore considering that if they managed the lot without him, he might not have fair play, consented to see it decided.

The lot now fell upon David Flat, a fore-mast man. The shock of the decision was so great, that the whole company remained motionless and silent for some time; when the poor victim who appeared perfectly resigned broke silence, and said, "My dear friends, messmates, and fellow sufferers, all I have to beg of you is, to despatch me as soon as you did the negro, and to put me to as little torture as possible." Then turning to one Doud, the man who shot the negro, he said, "It is my desire that you should shoot me." Doud reluctantly consented. The victim begged a short time to prepare himself for death, to which his companions most readily agreed. Flat was much respected by the whole ship's company, and during this awful interval, they seemed inclined to save his life; yet finding no alternative but to perish with him, and having in some measure lulled their sense of horror at the approaching scene by a few draughts of wine, they prepared for the execution, and a fire was kindled in the steerage to dress the first meal as soon as their companion should become their food.

As the dreadful moment approached, their compunction increased, and friendship and humanity at length triumphed over hunger and death. They determined that Flat should live at least until 11 o'clock the next morning, hoping, as they said, that the Divine Goodness would in the mean time open some other source of relief. At the same time they begged the captain to read prayers; a task which with the utmost effort of his collected strength, he was scarcely able to perform. As soon as prayers were over, the company went to their unfortunate friend, Flat, and with great earnestness and affection expressed their hopes that God would interpose for his preservation; and assuring him, that though they never yet could catch or even see a fish, yet they would put out all their hooks again to try if any relief could be procured.

Poor Flat, however, could derive little comfort from the concern they expressed; and it is not improbable, that their friendship and affection increased the agitation of his mind; such, however, it was, that he could not sustain it, for before midnight he grew almost totally deaf, and by four o'clock in the morning was raving mad. His messmates, who discovered the alteration, debated whether it would not be an act of humanity to despatch him immediately; but the first resolution, of sparing him till eleven o'clock, prevailed.

About eight in the morning, as the captain was ruminating in his cabin on the fate of this unhappy wretch, who had but three hours to live, two of his people came hastily down, with uncommon ardour in their looks, and seizing both his hands, fixed their eyes upon him without saying a word. A sail had been discovered, and the sight had so far overcome them, that they were for some time unable to speak. The account of a vessel being in sight of signals, struck the captain with such excessive and tumultuous joy, that he was very near expiring under it. As soon as he could speak, he directed every possible signal of distress. His orders were obeyed with the utmost alacrity … [illegible] … this way.

The approach of the ship being more and more manifest every moment, their hopes naturally increased, and they proposed a can to be taken immediately for joy. The captain dissuaded them all from it except the mate, who retired and drank it to himself.

After continuing to observe the progress of the vessel for some hours, with all the tumult and agitation of mind, that such a suspense could not fail to produce, they had the mortification to find the gale totally die away, so that the vessel was becalmed at only two miles distance. They did not, however, suffer long from this circumstance, for in a few minutes they saw a boat put out from the ship's stern, and row towards them full manned, and with vigorous despatch. As they had been twice before confident of the deliverance, and disappointed, and as they still considered themselves tottering on the brink of eternity, the conflict between their hopes and fears, during the approach of the boat, was dreadful. At length, however, she came alongside; but the appearance of the crew was so ghastly, that the men rested upon their oars, and with looks of inconceivable astonishment asked what they were?

Being at length satisfied, they came on board and begged the people to use the utmost expedition in quitting the wreck, lest they should be overtaken by a gale of wind, that would prevent their getting back to the ship. The captain, being unable to stir, was lifted out of the cabin, and lowered into the boat by ropes; his people followed him, with poor Flat still raving; and they were just putting off, when one of them observed, that the mate was still wanting. He was immediately called to, and the can of joy had just left him power to crawl to the gunnel, with a look of idiotic astonishment, having to all appearance forgot every thing that had happened. The poor drunken creature was with difficulty got into the boat, and in about an hour they all reached the ship in safety, which was the Susannah of London, commanded by Capt. Thomas Evers. He received them with the greatest tenderness and humanity, and promised to lie by the wreck until the next morning, that he might, if possible, save some of Captain Harrison's property; but the wind blowing very hard before night, he was obliged to quit her, and she probably with her cargo, went to the bottom before morning. The crew had been without provision forty-five days. The mate, James Doud, who shot the negro, and one Warner, a seaman, died on the passage. The remainder, including Flat, who continued mad during the voyage, arrived safe in the Susannah, in the Downs, in the beginning of March; whence Captain Harrison proceeded on shore, and made the proper attestation on oath of the facts, related in this melancholy narrative.

JORDAN DIVIDED BEFORE THE ARK.

"Behold, the Ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth passeth before thee unto Jordan."

"Jordan," says the sacred historian, "overfloweth all his banks, all the time of harvest." Accordingly, it was in full flood—impetuous and impassible—when the Israelites encamped before its "swellings." No bridge spanned its current, and the people had no boats to cross in. They had, however, a divine promise that "within three days they should pass over this Jordan." How, they were not told at the time. It is, therefore, probable that, during this interval, many anxious thoughts and feelings passed through their minds; for they were not informed that the river would be divided, as the Red Sea had been. And, now, they no longer had "the fiery, cloudy pillar" to look to. It had led their way through the waves and the wilderness; but when Canaan was fully in view, it vanished for ever, like the star of Bethlehem when it had led the Magi to the manger of the Incarnation. It is not probable, therefore that the people calculated upon the dividing of the waters again, when that standard was withdrawn which first made "the waters afraid." Its removal from the camp, at such a critical moment, would naturally induce such an idea that the miracle at the Red Sea was not to be renewed at Jordan: for the visible means being thus taken away, the probability was, that the former measures would not be adopted. And as the people did not yet know the full virtue of the Ark of the Covenant, nor anticipate all the uses of it, it is impossible to say in what manner they expected to pass over Jordan. An extraordinary subsiding of the waters seems, however, the only thing they could have looked for, until the third day, when they were assured that the Lord would do "wonders" amongst them. Then, and not before, could they have had any distinct hope of a miracle. During the interval, therefore, between the general promise and this particular assurance, they must have cast many a trembling and impatient look at "the swellings of Jordan," while "the waves thereof roared and were troubled." And this trial of their faith and patience must have been aggravated by the near sight they had of Canaan. The land of promise was now before them in all its loveliness. The vines of Eshcol, the cedars of Lebanon, the palm trees of Carmel, and the roses of Sharon, were visible to the eye. The autumnal fragrance of fertile Palestine breathed across the waters. There seemed to be only a step between the camp and sitting down under the vines and fig-trees … [illegible] … "O that I had the wings of a dove, that I might flee away and be at rest!" All must have been impatiently looking for the subsiding of the swellings. But still Jordan overflowed all its banks. "Deep called unto deep" upon its channels, and "the mountains shook with the swelling thereof." And there was no Moses to stretch his rod over the waves, and no pillar or cloud of fire to lead the way.

But, early in the morning of the third day, the Ark of the Covenant, borne by the priests, began to move to the brink of Jordan. It was placed about two hundred cubits in advance of the camp, that the eyes of all Israel might see it. They did see it—but only as usual: it gave no token of a miracle. Its cherubim of glory did not wave the rod of Moses or of Aaron. The Sheckinah of the Divine presence did not shine out from its mercy-seat. It assumed no new appearance, and showed no visible symbols of a present Deity.—But, "The waters saw thee, O God, the waters saw thee; they were afraid; Jordan was driven back." "The waters which came down from above, stood and rose up upon an heap, very far from the city of Adam, that is beside Zaretan; and those that came down towards the sea of the plain, even the salt sea, failed and were cut off." "Well might David ask, "What ailed thee, O thou sea, that thou fleddest? Thou Jordan, that thou wast driven back?" The answer is, "Behold the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord of all the earth passeth into Jordan." Then all Israel passed over on dry ground.

This interesting fact has been long and often employed as an emblem of that special support which God has promised to vouchsafe unto his people at death. Accordingly, "the swellings of Jordan" are become a familiar image of death. And there is a scriptural propriety, as well as poetic boldness, in the image: for as Jordan divided Canaan from the wilderness, so death flows between this world and that heaven of which Canaan was both the type and pledge.

"Death, like a narrow sea divides
This heavenly land from ours."

And death is felt to be a dark and stormy river—at the sight and sound of which the heart naturally trembles. The fear of death is instinctive in the human mind. Even the ancient Romans, notwithstanding all their natural bravery and acquired hardihood, betrayed it, by trying to hide it under the refinements of language. They would not say of a friend, that he was dead, but that he had lived. Hence their common expression, "Decessit e vita." "Euthanasia! Euthanasia!" was the piercing cry of Augustus Cæsar. The wish for a happy death burst through all the forms of imperial dignity. And even now, in Morocco, no one dare inform the Emperor that a friend or an officer is dead; but must paraphrase the fact, by saying, "he has fulfilled his destiny." Dr. Johnson, it is well known, could not bear the subject of death to be introduced in his presence. Boswell offended him even by asking if it was not possible to fortify the mind against the fear of death. Sir Thomas More and Sir Walter Raleigh affected, indeed, to jest on the scaffold; but their frequent attempts to escape death betrayed their real feelings. The greatest physician of the age says, that a brave general, who had often "faced the cannon's mouth," dropped down overwhelmed, when informed that his disease was fatal.—Spirit and Manners of the Age.

From the American Farmer.

HEMP AND FLAX.

Mr. Skinner,

Sir,—A subscriber to your paper in Nelson county, Virginia, has asked the comparative merits and demerits of water rotted hemp and that which has been dressed without rotting. I can not answer this inquiry as it regards hemp, but as flax is an article of nearly as much importance, and as its character is very much the same, I will state to you the difficulties which have occurred in the manufacture of unrotted flax, which will, I have no doubt, in a great measure refer also to hemp, at least so as to enable your subscriber to draw a conclusion unfavourable. I have been some time desirous of making this statement, because many ingenious men are engaged in inventing machinery to break flax without rotting, before ascertaining what is to be done with it after this great business has been accomplished.

There never was, to my mind, any difficulty in breaking flax by machinery rotted or not; but my experience in the manufacture justifies me in hazarding the opinion, that flax not rotted, can never be advantageously made use of, unless it be subsequently steamed, or undergo some other process to give it that softness and pliability which water rotted flax always possesses, and without which it cannot be spun economically by machinery, and these after operations will always be more expensive than the simplest of all simple processes—water rotting.

An ingenious gentleman invented a machine for breaking flax without rotting, and sent me a quantity of flax prepared for experiment. The following is extract from the letter I wrote him, after I had it manufactured into cloth.

100 lbs. of raw flax, hackled on a rougher and cleaner, rendered of cleaned flax,	30 lbs
Total loss in waste,	12
Balance in tow,	58
	100

Now contrast this with water rotted Irish 100 lbs. of Armagh flax, (a … [illegible] … whilst the Irish flax loses in those operations about 45 per cent. The tow of water rotted flax can be as readily manufactured as the flax—but the tow of the machine flax can be made no use of whatever in our mills … 2500 lbs. of machine flax, costing $250, I received 657 lbs. of yarn, which cost me 38 cents per lb. exclusive the cost of labour in manufacturing.

To enable you to judge of the possibility of spinning and weaving this flax, I send you a sample of the yarn and the cloth woven therefrom, and although I took some pains to soften by letting it stand over the race-way some weeks to imbibe moisture, you will find on examination that it is so harsh as to render it impossible for the weaver to bring it together; which will account to you for the slack appearance of the cloth.

In the construction of our machinery, we are compelled to compensate for the want of adhesion and elasticity in the fibres of water rotted hemp and flax, but the ingenuity of man has not yet provided for spinning the fibres of a hickory tree, to which I must assimilate the machine flax: the tow therefrom breaks short off in the teeth of the cards, to such a degree as to cover the floor, without having the appearance of being either elongated or reduced in diameter.

My experiments on flax not rotted, dew rotted, and water rotted, for manufacturing into cloth, confirm those made by Mr. N. Goodsell, of New York, as reported by him in the 5th volume of your "Farmer;" and I am satisfied myself that the cheapest and best method is to water rot flax and hemp, both for the manufacturer and the consumer. I recommend Mr. Goodsell's communication to your readers, and especially to those interested in the growth or manufacture of flax.

I have been a manufacturer of flax for many years, on a very extensive scale, and would most gladly second the exertions of any farmer in cultivating it, in any way that I could be thought useful; but with all my endeavours, and those of agricultural societies to back me, I have not in seven years been able to procure one ton of native water rotted flax, although the difference in the price which I offer between this and dew rotted flax is 33½ per cent. American dew rotted flax is now selling in our neighbourhood at 18 cents per pound. Pull the same flax when the bloom falls and the balls are forming, and water rot, it is then worth 11 to 14 cents per lb. besides that the crop will weigh from 25 to 30 per cent. more per acre.—This difference in price and weight ought alone, without any protecting duties, to afford sufficient encouragement to any grower of flax, and will be ample, so long as the manufacturer is sustained to afford him a market; for without the demand created by our establishments, the consumption must be very limited, not certainly sufficiently extensive to make any effort in producing it, much less in improving the quality.

A FLAX SPINNER.

MALT LIQUORS.

As Farmers are about to come to a general resolution to dispense altogether with the use of ardent spirits, except as medicine in cases of cramp or other emergencies; and as it will be, at first especially, desirable to substitute for whiskey some light refreshing beverage, all good housewives will wish to know how best to make and preserve small beer the following directions contain some useful hints for bottling. Those given in the same book for brewing, appear to be on too large a scale for common family use—we will endeavour to procure information on that point also, adapted to the wants and convenience of families in the country.

The proper Method of Bottling Malt Liquors.

As a necessary preparation for executing this business properly, great attention must be paid to your bottles, which must first be well cleaned and dried, for wet bottles will make the liquor turn mouldy or mothery, as it is called; and by wet bottles a great deal of good beer is frequently spoiled. Though the bottles may be clean and dry, yet, if the corks are not new and sound, the liquor will be still liable to be damaged; for, if the air can get into the bottle the liquor will grow flat, and never rise. Many who have flattered themselves they knew how to be saving, by using old corks on this occasion, have spoiled as much liquor as stood them in four or five pounds, only for want of laying out three or four shillings. If bottles are corked as they should be, it will be difficult to draw the cork without a screw; and to secure the drawing of the cork without breaking, the screw ought to go through the cork, and then the air must necessarily find a passage where the screw has passed. If a cork has once been in a bottle, though it has not been drawn with a screw, yet that cork will turn musty as soon as exposed to the air, and it will communicate its ill flavour to the bottle in which it is next put, and spoil the liquor that way. In the choice of corks, take those that are soft and clear from specks. You may also observe, in the bottling of liquor, that the top and middle of the hogshead are the strongest, and will sooner rise in the bottles than the bottom. When you begin to bottle a vessel of any liquor, be sure not to leave it till all is completed, otherwise it will have different tastes.

If you find a vessel of liquor begin … [illegible] … when the weather … all the lights … and cover them … very proper and temperate …

From the Hunting Directory.

PORTRAIT

Of a Sportsman of the Old School.

"In the old but now ruinous hall of Berwick Hall, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, once lived the known William Draper, Esq. … bred, fed and hunted the staunchest pack of fox hounds in Europe, with an income of only 700 pounds per annum; he brought up creditably eleven sons and daughters … of excellent hunters … bred fox hounds … with horses, suitable for the convenience of my lady and her daughters. He lived in the old hospitable style of the country, killing every month an ox of his own feeding, and … himself on maintaining a … table, but with no foreign … His general apparel was a drab hunting coat, a belt round his waist, and a strong velvet cap on his head. In his humour he was facetious, always having some pleasant story, both in the field and in the hall; so that his company was much sought after by persons of good condition, and which was of great use to him in the subsequent advancement of his children. His stables and kennels were kept in high order, and many sportsmen observed them as patterns for huntsmen and grooms, who were glad to come there without fee merely to learn their business. When they had obtained proper instructions, he then recommended them to other gentlemen, who wished for no better character than Squire Draper's recommendation. He was always, during the hunting season, at … the morning, mounted on one of his nags at five o'clock, himself bringing forth his hounds … note of their old master's voice. In the field he rode with judgement … ing what was unnecessary, and … ing his hounds when they were at fault. His daughter Di, who was equally famous at riding, used to assist him, cheering the hounds … voice. She died at York … old age, and what was wonderful, many sportsmen, who dared not follow her, she died with whole … in her bed.

"After the fatigues of the day, which were generally crowned … the brushes of a brace of foxes, he entertained those who would return with him and which was some … miles distant, with old English hospitality. Good old October was the liquor drank; and his first toast was, "All the brushes in Christendom." At the age of eighty years, this gentleman died, as he chiefly lived; for he died on horseback. As he was going to give some instructions to a friend who was rearing up … fox-hounds, he was seized with a … and dropped from his old favourite pony, he expired! There was no … rich or poor, in his neighbourhood but lamented his death, and the … were the only things that had occasion to be glad that Squire Draper was no more."

THE SUGAR-CANE.

Now, that it has been proved beyond doubt, by actual experiment, … the sugar-cane can be successfully cultivated on Red river lands, … public opinion is evidently setting that way. Some of our most wealthy enterprising planters are recommending on a more extensive scale than heretofore. This augurs well for the prosperity of the country. We … long, to see many others following … example, and we heartily wish … that success which we believe … crown their exertions.

Alex. (Lou.) Gaz.

How fearful is the very life which we hold? We have our being beneath a cloud, and are a marvel even to ourselves. There is not a single thought which has its affixed limits. Like circles in the water, our researches … long as they extend, and vanish … last into the immeasurable and … omable space of the vast unknown. We are like children in the dark; we tremble in a shadowy and terrible void, peopled with our fancies. Life is our real night, and the first … the morning, which brings … ty, is death.

What is so unearthly … as the first birth of … The air of heaven … wanderings … it in its warmth … deteriorate in … it increases … the step which … snow?

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., MAY 20, 1828. NO. 8.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Court of Appeals and to me directed, at the suit of Benjamin Dashiell, use of Ara Spence, Irving Spence and William U. Purnell, Ex[ecutors] of James B. Robbins against … I have seized and taken in execution the following property, viz. All the buildings, improvements and implements used and occupied as a tanyard, all the tans, … hides, tanned and untanned, and … now occupied by … which I shall proceed to sell at the Court house door in Princess Anne, on Saturday the … between the hours of … o'clock P. M. for cash, to the highest bidder, to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

E. T. J. Woodward,
Head of Dugan's wharf, & Pratt St.
BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers, that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, Oats, and Tobacco, and all other articles of Country produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

Also,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware, Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. mw.

Consumptions, Coughs, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthma, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, asthma, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since; being upwards of a year.

(Signed,) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen … that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease, and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state— … persons of consumptive habits, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the commencement period of life ought carefully attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, … when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the … valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals injured parts, opens the pores and soothes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an anodyne; consequently that obstruction of the chest … the lungs which constitutes the … [illegible] … expectoration, which is so … called for, and whilst it … and heals it also gives … to the tender lungs … removes the hectic fever … digestion, gives strength to … nerves, repairs the appetite and … the spirits. This Specific … always be given in safety—it … pleasant to the taste, and is … particularly useful in hypochondriac, nervous, and hysterical … [illegible] … JOHNSTON & SUDDLER … Princess Anne …

WEAVERS' BRUSHES.
Reeds and Shuttles,
Wash and cake boards,
Sifters, Lamp and candlewick,
Muddlers, and lime squeezers
Pound, half pound and quarter pound Butter Prints, of various patterns
Weaver's slays or reeds
Shoe, sweeping, dusting and other brushes
Twine and cord, patent taps
Cane, for reed makers
Humming and common tops
Boot & shoe blacking, towel rollers
Lamp wicks, assorted sizes, by the dozen or gross
Spiggots and fossets, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs, and hydrants
Fancy and common ballows
Fishing lines and rods, butter bowls and trays, Baskets, &c.
Nests of sugar boxes and tubs
Potato & turnip mashers, rolling pins
Carpenters' or joiners' chalk lines, etc.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.
May 13th, 1828.

Adams's Levee and Ball in honour of Jackson.—The following account of the grand Levee and Ball, given by Adams, to Jackson Jan. 8, 1824, is copied from the Commercial:

"I enjoyed the pleasure of being present at the Ball given by Mr. Adams on the 8th inst. in honour of Gen. Jackson. The House, which is a spacious, private dwelling, was thrown open in almost every part to admit the crowd of visitors who had been invited to attend this demi-public entertainment. Numerous lamps illuminated the Halls, stair-case and drawing rooms. The lower apartments were decorated with ever green wreaths entwined round the white painted pillars that supported the ceiling; hanging in circles about the chandeliers, and passing in unbroken lines round the cornice of I believe that entire story. Before 8 o'clock all the rooms were so much occupied, as to render it a slow and somewhat difficult matter to pass out of one into the other. The General entered about half past 8. His name was loudly announced, and in an instant all eyes were turned to seek the hero of the night.—He looked unusually well. His feelings excited by the occasion suffused his cheek (at other times rather sallow) with a ruddy tinge. His face was dressed in smiles, and his bending form, as he advanced in uniform thro' the thick ranks of receding beauty, presented a fine image of Mars, in the presence of Venus. He approached Mrs. Adams, who was in a silk dress, sparkling with ornaments, with a sort of Spanish hat loaded with plumes, and taking her arm in his, promenaded as well as the encumbering crowd rendered it possible, paying his respect to the many groupes who were in succession courtesying and bowing to his salute. We soon lost sight of him as he passed into the other apartments, and those who were endeavouring to discover in which room he was to be found missed the sight of him altogether."

Alas! alas! poor human nature. Now, Jackson is a murderer, an assassin—he never gained the victory of New Orleans—he is every thing shocking and infamous, and why, gentle reader? forsooth, he is the People's candidate for President against Adams.

N. Y. Enq.

We re-insert the above from our last in order to introduce the following remarks from a Pennsylvania paper:

The Doylestown Democrat says that Andrew Jackson was then if ever, a murderer, and received the smiles and homage of the beauty, chivalry and talent of the country, and in the house of Mr. Adams.

Andrew Jackson was then if ever an adulterer, and the hand of Mrs. Adams, in the eyes of a chaste and moral assembly, was then extended in fellowship towards him.

Andrew Jackson was then, if ever the violator of the sanctuary of the Senate and grave Senators delighted to honour him who had violated the constitution they had sworn to defend.

The dark designs of Mr. Adams have turned to plague the inventor.—Little did he imagine that he was then elevating the subaltern to the rank of superior, and tearing the gems from his diadem, hereafter to be placed in that of Jackson. His popularity is daily increasing; soon the long agony of the friends of Mr. Adams will be over—their days are numbered, and the convulsive groans will cease to be heard in the triumph of the Hero of New Orleans.

Now, because the General is the candidate of the people, Presidential sycophants and hypocrites have not only levied their slander against him, but … the most distinguished men of our country … [illegible] … that this lady who … Washington, and at home, is distinguished for her piety and hospitality, is attempted to be sacrificed, in order to gratify their insatiate appetite for slander and detraction. Let them go on—for in all the charges they have made against Gen. Jackson, he has come out like pure gold, while some of his foreign enemies have been detected in a FORGERY, which they have never pretended to deny.

Gen. Jackson possesses qualifications of the first order for the cabinet or the field; and has enjoyed the confidence and esteem of Presidents Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe. He has, notwithstanding the powerful patronage of the Government, a majority of both houses of Congress; and we are proud to say that the Pennsylvania Democracy will give the electoral ticket in his favour by an astounding majority.

Biographical Sketch of the Life of Maj. General ANDREW JACKSON.

By Robert Walsh,
Editor of an Adams paper in Philadelphia entitled The National Gazette.

[To the Reader.—While reading this sketch, please bear in mind that you are not reading the language of a Jacksonian, but the language of one who is the political enemy of Andrew Jackson.]

Andrew Jackson is of Irish parentage. His father and mother emigrated to South Carolina, in the year 1765, with two sons both young, and purchased a tract of land, on which they settled, in what was then called the Waxaw settlement, about forty-five miles above Camden. Here was born, on the 15th March, in the year 1767, Andrew, the subject of the present sketch. His father died soon after, leaving the three children to be provided for by the mother, a woman who would seem to have possessed excellent feelings and considerable strength of mind. The scantiness of their patrimony allowed only one of them to be liberally educated; and this was Andrew, whom she destined for the sacred ministry. He was sent to a flourishing academy in the settlement, where he remained occupied with the dead languages, until the revolutionary war brought an enemy into his neighbourhood, whose approach left no alternative but the choice of the British or American banners. The intrepid and ardent boy, encouraged by his patriotic mother, hastened, at the age of fourteen, in company with one of his brothers, to the American camp, and enlisted in the service of his country, and distinguished himself in several engagements. When he left the camp, he returned to his classical studies, as a means of future subsistence, with increased industry; and at the age of eighteen, in the winter of 1784, repaired to Salisbury, in North Carolina, to a lawyer's office, in which he prepared himself for the bar. In the winter of 1786, he obtained a license to practice, but finding this theatre unfavourable for advancement, he emigrated to Nashville in 1788, and there fixed his residence. Success attended his industry and talents; he acquired a lucrative business in the courts, and ere long was appointed attorney-general for the district in which he … he continued to act for several years.

Tennessee being at that time exposed, even in the heart of the settlements, to the incursions of the Indians, he became, like all around him, a soldier, and one whose activity and resolution soon made him as conspicuous as he was useful. The progress which he made in public estimation, by his abilities and services, is marked by his election, in 1796, to the Convention assembled to frame a constitution for the state. In this body he acquired additional distinction; which placed him, the same year, in Congress, in the House of Representatives, and the following year, in the Senate of the United States. He acted invariably with the Republican party in the National Legislature; but grew tired of an unavailing struggle in a small majority, and of a scene of discussion and intrigue for which he did not deem himself as well fitted as the successor, for whose sake, no less than for his own gratification, he resigned his post in 1799. While a senator, he was chosen by the field officers of the Tennessee militia, without consultation with him, major-general of their division, and so remained until 1814, when he took the same rank in the service of the United States. On his resignation as senator, he was appointed one of the judges of the supreme court of Tennessee. He was called from his retirement, however by the second war which broke out with G. Britain. When the acts of Congress (of the 6th February, and July 1812) which authorised the President to accept the services of fifty thousand volunteers, were promulgated, Jackson published an energetic address to the militia of his division, drew two thousand five hundred of them to his standard, and tendered them without delay to the federal government.

In November, he received orders to descend the Mississippi, for the defence of the lower country, which was then thought to be in danger. In January, in a very inclement season, he conducted his troops as far as Natchez, where he was instructed to remain until otherwise directed. Here he employed himself indefatigably, in training and preparing them for service. But the danger which was meant to be repelled having ceased to exist, in the opinion of the secretary of war, he received instructions, from the latter, to dismiss, at once, from service, those under his command.—The number of sick in his camp was great, and they were destitute of the means of defraying the expenses of their return home. The rest of his troops, from the same dearth of resources, must have enlisted in the regular army, under Gen. Wilkinson.—Jackson felt himself responsible for the restoration of them to their families and friends, and therefore, resolved to disobey the orders of the department of war, whose head could not be acquainted with the circumstances of the case. He retained as much of the public property in his possession, as was necessary to his purpose of marching them back. Wilkinson remonstrated and admonished in vain. Jackson replied that he would bear all the responsibility—he refused to allow Wilkinson's officers, when commissioned, to recruit from his army; seized upon the wagons required for the transportation of his sick, and set out with the whole of his force. He gave up his own horse to the infirm, and shared in all the hardships of the soldiers in a long and arduous march. It was at a time of the year when the roads and the swamps to be trodden were in the worst condition. His example silenced all complaint, and endeared him the more to his companions. On his arrival at Nashville he communicated to the President of the United States what he had done, and the reasons by which he had been guided. His conduct was approved of at Washington, and the expenses, which he had incurred, directed to be paid.

About this time the British and the celebrated Tecumseh had stirred up the Creek nation of Indians, parties of whom made irruptions into the state of Tennessee, committing the most barbarous outrages upon defenceless and insulted families. Having obtained a supply of ammunition from the Spaniards, at Pensacola, a band of six or seven hundred warriors assaulted Fort Mimms, situated in the Tensaw settlement, in the Mississippi Territory, succeeded in carrying it, and butchered nearly all its inmates; three hundred persons including women and children. Only seventeen of the whole number escaped to spread intelligence of the dreadful catastrophe. The news produced the strongest sensation in Tennessee; and all eyes were, at once, turned to Jackson as the leader of the force which must be sent forth to overtake and punish the miscreants. He was, at this time, confined to his chamber with a fractured arm and a wound in the breast, injuries received in a private rencontre. It was resolved by the legislature to call into service thirty-five hundred of the militia, to be marched into the heart of the Creek nation, conformably to the advice of Jackson, who, notwithstanding the bodily ills under which he laboured, readily undertook the chief command in the expedition. He issued an eloquent and nervous address to the troops, on the day of the rendezvous, in which he told them, among other things—"We must and will be victorious—we must conquer as men who owe nothing to chance, and, who, in the midst of victory, can still be mindful of what is due to humanity." On the 17th Oct. 1813, he reached the encampment, although his health was far from being restored. It would require too much space to follow him in all the movements of a campaign, in which he appears as a most skilful commander, vigilant disciplinarian, and dauntless soldier.—Suffice it to say, that Jackson with consummate skill and bravery waged a destructive war against them, and after encountering numerous perils and difficulties, succeeded in quelling the savages and restored to our frontiers, peace and security from their depredations.

The complete and final discomfiture of so formidable a foe as this confederacy of Indians, drew the attention of the general government to the Tennessee commander, and produced a speedy manifestation of the respect entertained for his services and character, in his appointment as brigadier and brevet Major-general in the regular army. A commission of Major-general was forwarded to him in May, 1814. The government deemed it advisable to enter into a treaty with the vanquished Indians, for the purpose … of restricting their limits so as to cut off their communication with the British and Spanish agents. General Jackson was deputed with colonel Hawkins as commissioner, to negociate with the Creeks; and on the 10th of July he reached Alabama on this errand, and by the 10th of August accomplished an agreement, under which the Indians bound themselves to hold no communication with British or Spanish garrisons, or foreign emissaries, and conceded to the United States, the right of erecting military posts in their country. The contraction and definition of their territorial limits were attended with considerable difficulty, but Jackson peremptorily and successfully insisted upon what he deemed necessary for the future security and permanent benefit of the United States. After this affair was concluded the General turned his attention to another important quarter of the country, where it was expected the enemy's forces might be brought to operate.

On the first of December, he was in New Orleans, and there established his head-quarters General Coffee and Colonel Hinds were ordered to march with their commands, and take a position as convenient to New Orleans as should be compatible with the object of procuring forage for the horses of the dragoons.

Resistance on the lakes being at an end, the enemy was expected to advance without much further delay.—Expresses were sent off in quest of Gen. Coffee, to whom his commander wrote, "You must not sleep until you arrive within striking distance. Innumerable defiles present themselves where your riflemen will be all important." On the night of the 19th December, Coffee encamped, with eight hundred men, within fifteen miles of New Orleans; having marched eighty miles the last day. In four days, Colonel Hinds, with the Mississippi dragoons, was at his post; having effected a march of two hundred and thirty miles in that period.

Jackson was not long in discovering the truth of what had been communicated to him by the governor of Louisiana, that "the country was filled with British spies and stipendiaries." He suggested to the legislature the propriety and necessity of suspending the privilege of habeas corpus. While that assembly were deliberating slowly upon their power to adopt the measure, he proclaimed the city of New Orleans and its environs to be under martial law, and established a most rigid military police. The crisis did not admit of any other system, consistently with the public safety; and happy it was that the commander did not want either sagacity or decision. On the 21st December, General Carroll reached General Coffee's encampment four miles above the city, from Nashville, with two thousand Tennessee yeomanry.

On the 22d, the British were accidently discovered emerging from the swamp and woods about seven miles below the town. In spite of all the precautions taken to guard the most dangerous avenues, treachery found out for the enemy a narrow pass, Bayou Bienvenu, through which they reached the banks of the Mississippi. On the 23d, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, positive information of their landing was brought to Jackson. He resolved to meet them that night.—Generals Coffee and Carroll were ordered to join him; and arrived, in two hours, with their forces. As he was marching through the city, his ears were assailed with the screams of a multitude of females, who dreaded the worst consequences from the approach of the enemy. "Say to them," exclaimed he, to a gentleman near him, "not to be alarmed; the enemy shall never reach the city."

The number of the British was at first three thousand, and it was increased during the night. The onset was made by the Americans about dusk. The battle, complicated and fierce, continued for some time until both parties were thrown into confusion, owing to the darkness of the night and the nature of the ground. The enemy yielded the field for nearly a mile. The American general, finding that they were constantly receiving reinforcements, resolved to draw off and renew the attack at dawn of day, after he had called for General Carroll and his division, who had been left behind. Carroll soon arrived, but as the numbers of the enemy were discovered to be augmented to six thousand, Jackson deemed it expedient to forbear all offensive efforts, until the troops daily expected from Kentucky should reach their destination. Accordingly, he fell back and formed his line behind a deep ditch that ran at right angles from the river. This position was recommended by two circumstances the swamp, which skirted the river at various distances, approached here within four hundred yards of it, and hence from the narrowness of the pass, it was more easily to be defended; there was, too, a deep canal, and the dirt being thrown on the upper side, already constituted a tolerable breast-work. Behind this the American troops were formed with a determination to resist there to the last extremity. The portion of them who were actually engaged in the battle on the 23d, did not amount to two thousand men. Their loss was 24 killed, one hundred and fifteen wounded and seventy-four made prisoners; the killed and wounded and prisoners of the enemy were not less than four hundred. "This action for boldness of conception, and by the wisdom of the policy, and the importance of the result, does infinite credit to the American leader. The British had believed that, once landed, they should move forward to the easiest of conquests over raw militia and untried regulars. They were arrested and disconcerted, and Jackson improved the interval of their hesitation and cautious preparation, to strengthen his works and organize the state militia who were arriving every day. The canal fronting the line was deepened and widened, a strong wall of earth built, the levee cut almost a hundred yards below, embrasures pierced, &c. Having made these and various other important and judicious arrangements, and possessing, as he remarks, "a rampart of high minded and brave men," he felt and expressed a degree of confidence which animated even the recruits who were strangers to him and to every kind of military service.

The enemy were abundantly active on their side, tho' at first ignorant of his situation and designs. They bro't up in the direction of their encampment, their artillery, bombs and ammunition. By means of a battery which they erected in the night of the 27th, they destroyed the American armed schooner Caroline, lying under the opposite shore. Gathering hardihood from this circumstance, which in fact, deprived Jackson of a material aid, they left their encampment and moved towards the American lines.—Their numbers had been increased, and Sir Edward Packenham, their commander in chief, led them in person on the 28th December to storm the works. Their heavy artillery discharged showers of bombs, balls and rockets. These it was thought would ensure success, and they were moving forward with all the pride and pomp of war, when the American batteries opened and caused their advance to halt. The conflict continued in several quarters until the assailants, being too roughly handled, abandoned for the time, the general attack which they had meditated. One hundred and twenty of them were killed and wounded; the loss of the Americans did not exceed nine killed, and eight or ten wounded.

While Jackson and his comrades were thus bravely repelling the foe, a panic seized the Legislature at New Orleans. Apprized that it was secretly agitated to offer terms of capitulation, he directed the Governor to arrest the members and hold them subject to his further orders, the moment the project of surrendering should be fully disclosed. The Governor at once placed an armed force at the door of the capitol, prevented the members from convening, and thus stifled whatever schemes might have been proposed. Various and shrewd devices were practised by Jackson to conceal from the enemy the comparative paucity of his force, and the miserable dearth of arms in his camp. From the general government no supply of arms and ordnance had been received, except one boat-load brought down the Mississippi by General Carroll.

Skirmishes alone, by advanced parties, occurred for several days after the attack of the 28th of December.—The British were encamped two miles below the American army, on a perfect plain, and in full view. In the interval between the period just mentioned and the 1st January, they were busy in preparing for another assault on an enlarged scale. An impenetrable fog prevailed during the night of the 31st, and until nine o'clock the following morning: when that was dispelled, there stood disclosed to the Americans, several heavy batteries, at the distance of six hundred yards, mounting eighteen and twenty-four pound carronades. These were immediately opened by the British, and a tremendous discharge of artillery, accompanied by Congreve rockets, was maintained until near noon. A vast number of balls were directed against the building in which Jackson was believed to be. It was battered into a heap of ruins, but the General according to his custom, had repaired to the line as soon as he heard the sound of the enemy's cannon. The roar of the American guns proved that there would be a vigorous defence; and with such effect were they managed, that the British batteries were disabled, and the assailants compelled to retire, by 3 o'clock, despairing of a breach in the line, and astonished at the precision with which the 'Yankees' threw their shot. An advance was made upon General Coffee's brigade, in order to turn the left, but with no better success. To be prepared against all contingencies Jackson had established another line of defence about 2 miles in the rear, and where his unarmed troops (no inconsiderable number) were stationed as a show of strength.

On the fourth of January arrived the long expected reinforcement from Kentucky, amounting to two thousand two hundred and fifty men, of whom about five hundred had muskets, and the rest guns, from which little or no service could be anticipated. New Orleans had been previously searched for weapons and stripped of whatever were discovered. The British were at the same time reinforced in a much more satisfactory way for them. Now approached the great and last struggle

General Jackson, unmoved by appearances, anxiously desired it—he seldom slept—he was always at his post, that there might be no relaxation of vigilance on any side.

On the memorable 8th January, the signals intended to produce concert in the enemy's movements, were descried at dawn. They were prepared to storm the line, and the charge was made with so much celerity that the American soldiers at the outposts had scarcely time to fly in. Showers of bombs and balls were poured from new batteries. The two British divisions, commanded by Sir Edward Packenham in person, pressed forward. A thick fog enabled them to approach within a short distance of the intrenchments before they were discovered: but this circumstance insured them defeat and destruction.—The American artillery and small arms, discharged in a continued volley, mowed down their works and arrested their progress. The fatal aim of the western marksmen was never so terribly exemplified. Sir Edward Packenham, seeing that his troops wavered and receded, hastened to the front, but quickly fell, mortally wounded, in the arms of his aid-de-camp. General Gibbs and Keene were also dangerously hurt & borne from the field, which by this time was strewed with dead and dying. The British columns, often broke and driven back, were repeatedly formed and urged forward anew. Convinced at last that nothing could be accomplished, they abandoned the contest, and a general and disorderly retreat ensued. One American redoubt was carried by superior numbers; but quickly evacuated under the fire of the riflemen at the line. So great was the carnage of the British; so perilous the disorder into which they were thrown, that had arms been possessed by that large portion of the American militia who had remained inactive and useless for the want of them, the whole British force must have surrendered. But under the peculiar circumstances of the case, Jackson was unable to attempt, without extreme rashness, a pursuit of the vanquished. He adopted the safe alternative of continuing in his position

According to Gen. Lambert's official report of the affair of the 8th, the British loss, in the main attack on the left bank of the river, amounted to upwards of two thousand men, in killed, wounded, and prisoners. It may be estimated at nearly three thousand, while that of the Americans was but thirteen. The effective force of the latter at this line on the left bank, was three thousand seven hundred—that of the enemy at least nine thousand. The whole force landed from the British ships in Louisiana is believed to have been about fourteen thousand. The British Commander in Chief and Major General Gibbs died of their wounds, besides many of the most valued and distinguished British officers. On the ninth the enemy requested and obtained an armistice of some hours to bury their dead.

After the action of the 8th the American batteries were continually throwing balls and bombs into the British camp. Harassed, dismayed, and enfeebled, that once powerful army which was to arrive at New Orleans by a primrose path, and hold in subjection all the lower region of the Mississippi, took a final and furtive leave in the night of the 18th of January, and embarked in their shipping for the West Indies. Thus ended the mighty invasion, in twenty-six days after the foreign standard had been exultingly planted on the bank of the Mississippi. Thus triumphed General JACKSON by a wonderful combination of boldness and prudence; energy and adroitness; desperate fortitude and anxious patriotism.

Though the enemy had withdrawn from New Orleans in the manner which has been stated, Jackson could not be sure that they would not return. Against this contingency, he prepared himself by cautious arrangements in the distribution of his force and the construction of new defences at assailable points, before he returned to New Orleans. In that city he was received as a deliverer—almost every mind was kindled to enthusiasm from the consideration of the evils which he had averted, as well as of the victories which he had gained. The most solemn and lively demonstrations of public respect and gratitude succeeded each other daily, until the period of his departure for Nashville soon after the annunciation of peace concluded at Ghent between Great Britian and the United States. Though honoured and cherished by the larger part of the citizens, he was not, however without occasion to display the energy and decision of his character in a way that favoured the ends of jealousy and detraction. Anonymous articles calculated to excite mutiny among the troops and afford the enemy dangerous intelligence, having appeared in one of the newspapers of New Orleans, he caused the author of it to be revealed to him by the editor of the paper. He found that the offender was a member of the Legislature, but this circumstance did not prevent him from ordering his arrest and detention for trial. Application was immediately made to one of the Judges for a writ of Habeas Corpus and it was immediately issued. Jackson arrested the Judge also and sent him from the city. The General had not yet raised the edict of martial law, there being no certain intelligence of peace or of the departure of the enemy from the coast. Within a few days the cessation of hostilities was officially announced. The Judge was restored to his post and the exercise of his functions. Without loss of time a rule of court was granted for General Jackson to appear and shew cause why an attachment for contempt should not issue, on the ground that he had refused to obey a writ and imprisoned the organ of the law. He did not hesitate to appear and submit a full and very able answer, justifying his proceedings. After argument before the Court, the rule was made absolute; an attachment sued out, and Jackson, brought up to answer interrogatories. He declined answering them; but asked for the sentence, which the Judge then proceeded to pass. It was a fine of one thousand dollars. The spectators who crowded the hall betrayed the strongest indignation. As soon as he entered his carriage, it was seized by the people and drawn by them to the coffee-house, amid the acclamations of a large concourse. When he arrived at his quarters, he put the amount of his fine into the hands of his aid-de-camp, and caused it to be discharged without delay. He was scarcely beforehand with the citizens, who in a short time raised the sum among themselves, by contribution, and were anxious to be permitted to testify at once their gratitude and shame. What was thus collected was appropriated at his request to a charitable institution. He enjoyed the consciousness that the powers which the exigency of the times forced him to assume, had been exercised exclusively for the public good and that they had saved the country. In 1821, the Corporation of New Orleans voted fifty thousand dollars for erecting a marble statue appropriate to his military services. The same body gave also one thousand dollars for a portrait of him painted by Earle of Nashville. Thus, the miserable fine may be said to have been obliterated.

On his return to Nashville—a journey of eight hundred miles—he saw on every side marks of exultation and delight. It must be within the memory of most of our readers, what was the sensation produced throughout the Union by the tidings from New Orleans, and what the popular enthusiasm concerning the merits of "Old Hickory."

Gen. Jackson retired again to his farm, and after spending his time in the pursuit of the arts of husbandry for about two years, still retaining his rank in the army, he was once more called into active service to defend our frontiers from the incursions of the Seminole Indians. This service was performed with the like promptitude that has uniformly distinguished his active life, and resulted in making our countrymen's arms again victorious over the efforts of their enemies. It would occupy more room than we can afford at this time to follow the General through all his numerous exploits in this war, they are well known to many of our readers, and we shall not repeat them here.

When the treaty with Spain ceding the Floridas was finally ratified, Congress passed a law empowering the President to vest in such person or persons as he might select, all the military, civil, and judicial authority exercised by the officers of the Spanish government. The President, under this law, appointed General Jackson, to act in the first place as commissioner for receiving the Provinces, and then to assume the government of them.

On the 4th of July, 1822, the Governor of Tennessee, by order of the Legislature, presented him with a sword as a testimonial "of the high respect" entertained by the state for his public services. And, on the 20th of August of the same year, the members of the General Assembly of Tennessee recommended him to the Union for the office of President—a recommendation which has been repeated by the Legislature of Alabama, and various assemblages of private citizens in other parts of the country. In the autumn of 1823, he was elected to the Senate of the United States. In the south-western, and some of the southern states, and in Pennsylvania, he is eminently popular. Before his election to the Senate, he was appointed by the President, with the concurrence of the Senate, Minister Plenipotentiary to the government of Mexico: but he declined the station from a repugnance to the monarchial system which then prevailed in Mexico, and to the means by which the supreme power had been usurped.

In person, General Jackson is tall, and remarkably erect and thin. His weight bears no proportion to his height, and his frame, in general, does not appear fitted for trials such as it has borne. His features are large; his eyes dark blue, with a keen and strong glance; his eyebrows arched and prominent—his complexion is that of the war-worn soldier. His demeanor is easy and gentle: in every station he has been found open and accessible to all. The irritability of his temper, which is not denied by his friends, produces contrasts in his manner and countenance, leading to very different conceptions and representations as to both: but that natural infirmity has decreased, and those who have lived and acted with him, bear unanimous testimony to the general mildness of his carriage and the kindness of his disposition. It is certain that he has inspired his soldiers, his military household, his domestic circle, and his neighbours, with the most affectionate sentiments. The impetuosity of his nature, his impatience of wrong and encroachment, his contempt for meanness, and his tenaciousness of just authority, have involved him in bitter altercations and sanguinary quarrels: —his resentments have been fiercely executed, and his censures harshly uttered: yet he cannot be accused of wanton or malicious violence—the sallies which may be deemed intemperate can be traced to strong provocation, operating in most instances, upon his patriotic zeal and the very generosity and loftiness of his spirit. He sacrificed the enemies of his country, where he deemed that signal examples of rigor were necessary for the public welfare and the lasting suppression of murder and rapine—he was never found wanting in clemency and humanity towards those whom essential justice and paramount duty allowed him to spare and relieve. Thus, after the battle of the Horse Shoe, in the Creek war, every Indian warrior was spared who surrendered himself—several of his men lost their lives in endeavouring, by his orders, to save some obstinate individuals who refused to surrender; although his own troops were suffering with hunger, he forbade the corn of the Indians to be taken from them, and caused the wounded among the latter to be dressed and nursed as his own men. At the battle of Tohopeka, an infant was found alive on the breast of its lifeless Indian mother: Jackson directed it to be brought to him, and not being able to prevail upon any one of the Indian Women to undertake the care of it, adopted it into his family, and has ever since proved a kind protector to the orphan.

In the various critical situations in which he was placed by emergencies and the unlimited discretion cast upon him, he appears to have been governed by general and solid principles which he knew how to apply satisfactorily in explaining his measures. The very salutary energy and decision with which he pursued the course, that he had deliberately concluded to be right and necessary, subjected him to the belief or charge of having acted merely from a vehement, overbearing, or arbitrary disposition. If his feelings were strongly roused and displayed against the timid or the traitorous portion of the inhabitants of New Orleans who would have given the enemy an easy and fatal triumph—against the Spanish authorities in Florida who served the British and supplied the Seminoles—against Arbuthnot and Ambrister, the unwearied instigators and insiduous confederates of the Savages thirsting for American blood—against the imposter prophets, who had directed the butchery of white women and children, and whose occupation it was to incite depredation and murder—against a Spanish Governor who would have violated a treaty, and despoiled orphan females of their inheritance—we may say that both the warmth of those feelings, and the rigour with which they were manifested, will be not only excused, but even admired by generous minds.

The copious despatches which Gen. Jackson had occasion to write to the government, detailing his campaigns and official proceedings; his numerous addresses to his troops, and the statements and arguments, which the charges preferred against his official conduct, compelled him to publish for his justification, would altogether, form a sizeable volume. They are marked by great fluency and energy of expression; cogent reasoning; apt reference to general principles, and the utmost earnestness and apparent rectitude of intention. He writes nervously and perspicuously; he speaks with facility and force. Grace and refinement, he has not studied either in composition or delivery. Those qualities are not to be expected in one whose life has been chiefly passed in such scenes as we have sketched; He is artificial in nothing. His reading cannot be supposed to be extensive nor his application to books very frequent. In regard to business he has been always found indefatigable and sagacious. He possesses a competent estate, and lives hospitably in the manner of a substantial farmer. He is without children.—His amusements have consisted in the management of his domestic concerns, the sports of the turf and social intercourse. He is temperate in his diet and in all respects enjoys a good private reputation. His public character is to be known from the history of his public career.

THE MORGAN AFFAIR.

[From the Geneva Paladium,]

Combination.—It is now three weeks since we brought forward certain serious charges against a COMBINATION of politicians—including the managers of the Rochester "Anti-Masonic Enquirer," and the "Buffalo Patriot"—formed for the purpose of USING the Morgan excitement for the benefit of Messrs Adams and Clay, and the administration party in the state of New York. These charges were of serious import, and not lightly made. For three weeks we have waited for answer. The papers accused have stopped their exchange, and remained silent. It is right the people should know the facts in relation to this case that they may avoid being made the tools of knaves and scoundrels. In a word, that they may not be duped by those creatures, who having sought all other avenues to honour and respectability in vain, now hope to find an unguarded entrance, in this moment of excitement. We assert then, as facts susceptible of proof—

1, That when Thurlow Weed left the editorship of the "Rochester Telegraph," in the course of the past fall, his pecuniary resources were exhausted, and that he has a family to support.

2. That after the close of the election, he went on an expensive journey to the city of Washington.

3. That while on his way to Washington, he laid open all their plans, to an anti-masonic friend. That the object of his visit was avowed to be, to solicit the aid of the general government in using the Morgan excitement for the benefit of the administration party in the state of New York.

4. That upon his return from Washington, he bought the "Rochester Balance," and reissued it in an enlarged form, under the name of the "Anti Masonic Enquirer."

5. That D. D. Stephenson, editor of the "Balance," thereupon removed to Palmyra, and established the "Freeman" upon the same principles with the "Enquirer."

6. That both the "Enquirer" and "Freeman," are papers that every Printer knows do not pay their annual expenses, by a considerable amount—having comparatively no jobs or advertising.

7. That the "Buffalo Patriot" received a large sum of money for coming out against the masons—not for the purpose, we believe, of advocating public justice, but to use the excitement for the objects before specified.

We lay the facts before the people and defy the accused to an investigation. In addition to these formal assertions, we have evidence that the intention was to bring up Albert H. Tracy—an old republican, but now an Adams man—as a candidate for governor, in order to distract the republican party of New York. Information from Washington states, that the object of Mr. Weed was perfectly understood there. And that it was believed that the administration had grasped at the Morgan question, as a drowning man would catch straws, to save itself from sinking.

The editor of the Geneva Palladium offers to "prove on oath," that Thurlow Weed DID DECLARE, that "the object of his journey to Washington was to procure the aid of the general government, in using the Morgan excitement, for the benefit of the Adams party—[Palmyra Sentinel.

Virginia.—The hon. John Randolph, in his celebrated speech on the retrenchment resolutions, stated that the freeholders of his district were unanimous for Jackson. At a recent election for two delegates to the assembly in the county of Charlotte, (the residence of Mr. Randolph,) at the close of the polls, the votes stood, Jackson, 338, Adams, 00. So also in Albemarle, the residence of the late Thomas Jefferson, Jackson 265, Adams 00.

The returns of the votes in Virginia, thus far received, shew about 15,000 in favour of Jackson, about 3000 in favour of Adams.

From the Richmond Enquirer, May 9.

THE PLEDGE.

The confessions of Mr. Walsh have thrown all the Administration prints into confusion. They seem utterly at a loss how "to speak to it" They know not whether to deny his facts, or to plead justification. After having so stoutly denied the whole story of the pledge, and having obtained the unqualified authority of the President himself for their assertion; after having ridiculed and abused the Opposition for their invention of the story, they are mortified to find one of their own Editors, the confidential friend of Mr. Webster, coming forward to admit the authenticity of the material facts. It is too bad. They are literally dumb-founded. Not a paper of the Administration party has even ventured to lisp a syllable upon the subject. The papers at Philadelphia or at Baltimore have blinked the disclosure—nor have the two Officials at Washington raised a whisper about it. "What, morality dumb too!"

But it cannot be denied. We knew the facts before Mr. Walsh unsealed his lips—and more than he has ventured to speak. We knew, that Mr. Adams had recognized a written pledge, revised and modified it too, which was calculated and intended (can any man doubt it, from the very circumstances of the case?) to tamper with the election of the H. of R. and to promote his own elevation. We knew that he had stooped to play in this busy scene of intrigue—and to give pledges of support to the Federal Party, whom he had once abandoned to their fallen fortunes. When he supposed that they had lost their power to assist him, he left them to their adversity—and when he found that some few men were able to help him up the ladder, then, he hesitated not to court their support of himself by promises of support to their party.—Give what version you may please to this story—this is the complexion to which it must come at last. Else, why did Mr. Webster go to him for pledges at that critical time? Why did Mr. Adams give them at that moment?—Why, let it appear in black and white? why draw the veil so seduously over the transaction—why give a secret pledge? Why, so anxiously try to keep it secret for so long a period? and why did Mr. Walsh speak only, when he found the "signs" gathering so thick from N. Jersey, that if he did not speak and plead justification, the whole story might burst forth upon them without their co-operation or consent?

The facts cannot be denied—An intelligent people will draw their own conclusions. Can they vote for a man, who is suspected of such an intrigue? who, to purchase office for himself, has given to voters pledges of office to their party, and of course to themselves?

A fine Resolution.—The Administration papers say Mr. Adams has come to the determination of paying off five millions of the public debt on the first of July next. The mischief he has! If it depends upon his determination, we should like him to extend his determination, and conclude to pay it all. What stupidity or knavery this declaration betrays. The matter is not left for the determination of Mr. Adams; but the funds are provided by Congress, and the President is compelled to apply them according to law, in the payment of the debt, as fast as the ability of the nation will admit. It would really seem that the Adams' men take the American people to be children, who can be gulled with any measures they may choose to invent—D. Gaz.

JACKSON MEETING—Tompkins County, New York.

[From the Ithaca Journal.]

We have the gratification of presenting to our readers the proceedings of the republican general meeting, held in this village on the 16th of April. It was the most numerous and respectable meeting ever convened in the county of Tompkins. The court room was crowded notwithstanding spectators, but with respectable farmers and citizens of the county, who participated deeply participated, in what was going forward. As near as could be estimated, there were about FIVE HUNDRED persons present. We have never seen a deeper and more attentive interest manifested in the proceeding of a meeting. We congratulate the republicans of the county, of the state, and of the union, upon this manifestation of the energy, firmness and unanimity, with which the republicans of the county of Tompkins have determined to rally around the ancient standard of their party, and support the cause of PRINCIPLE, against that of Intrigue and CORRUPTION.

[We have only room for the following from the proceedings.]

Whereas it is expressly provided by the third section of the second article of the constitution, that the President of the United States, "shall, from time to time, give to the congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration, such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient;"

Therefore, Resolved, That inasmuch as the present incumbent has not in either of his messages to congress, recommended to their consideration the necessity or expediency of revising the tariff, or of any further legislative aid for the encouragement and protection of our domestic industry, but has maintained on that subject a studied silence, we are compelled to conclude, either that he is altogether opposed to any further protecting duties, or that he has avoided the responsibility of advancing an opinion, from the fear of opposition on that account, in those sections of the Union which are known to be opposed to it; and that we cannot consistently sustain the claims of any man for the office of President, who is opposed to what is emphatically denominated the "American System," or who has not sufficient firmness, honesty and independence, to risk his personal popularity in support of it.

From the Eastern (Maine) Argus.

"STRIKE—BUT HEAR ME."

The act which has been construed into John Q. Adams' conversion to republicanism, and which has been relied upon as proof of it, was his giving a vote in favor of the embargo law, in December, 1807—mark the date. But the awkward conduct of Mr. Adams upon this occasion, distinct from all other facts, save that of his having been always prior to that time a headstrong federalist, was of itself sufficient to betray, the hypocricy and insincerity of his vote, and at the same time shocked the understanding of every member present at the Senate Board, including both parties. It was an insult to them individually for him to suppose them to be so completely destitute of discernment and subject to his artifice, as to be duped by the shallow and barefaced pretension which he made of unbounded confidence in the recommendation of President Jefferson—a man whom he had been taught from his infancy to despise, and one whom he himself had ridiculed for years, and particularly within the early months of the same year then current! Yet when Mr. Jefferson's secret message was received by the Senate, recommending an embargo, Mr. Adams instantaneously rose from his seat, and advised the members at the Board, not to discuss the subject at all! adding, that "the President had recommended the measure upon his high responsibility, and therefore, the Senate ought not to deliberate! !" This was his own language, taken down at the moment in black and white by a venerable Senator present; whose integrity in the political world as far outshines that of John Quincy Adams, as the sun outshines the bug whose brilliancy can only be seen through the darkness of midnight. The sentiment itself, instead of evincing a caution and regard for the rights of the people, who had entrusted their destiny to his hands, and instead of being suited to the solemnity of the occasion—an occasion which proposed to shut up a whole nation from all intercourse with the rest of mankind and the world, for an unlimited time;—and instead of comporting with the doctrines of freedom of debate, and republicanism, it is a sentiment most clearly demonstrating his love of arbitrary principles, and his constant and long cherished hope of seeing our government resolve itself into something like a repository of "the whole executive power in one man," agreeably to the theory prescribed by his father, as "the true policy of the common people,"—"laborers, husbandmen, mechanics and merchants in general!"

It is very true at the time this vote, and these ardent expressions of confidence in the recommendation of Mr. Jefferson, were made, they were received as evidence of Mr. Adams' conversion to republicanism and to the republican party, then predominant, let the reader recollect. But they were so viewed by only inference;—the conclusion, at best, was only implied by the friends of Mr. Jefferson, who ever greeted every expression of confidence in him with joy, from whatever source it might come, because they knew and felt it was due him, and that it confirmed the opinion they themselves honestly and justly entertained of him. In their readiness, however, to applaud the confidence which Mr. Adams seemingly reposed in Mr. Jefferson, they mistook and overrated the motives and feelings of the former, and gave, as many still continue to give him for it, both a species and a degree of credit that he never merited. Could he be brought to divulge the real and secret thoughts of his own soul in this particular, could Mr. Adams be brought to speak of this subject upon a bed of death, and under a right sense of his immediate departure to the judgment seat of Him who "knoweth the secrets of the heart," I solemnly believe he would endorse and confirm this statement in its fullest extent.

When Mr. Jefferson recommended an embargo, his friends abroad among the people, having no opportunity or means of knowing the exact circumstances and grounds upon which he thought it advisable, ought and did at once, through confidence in his ability, integrity, and political foresight, submit and support it "with the utmost energy." But for a member of the Senate, whose duty it was to oversee and inquire into, and examine with vigilance the views of the President and their merits, to drive headlong into every or any measure, of particularly the greatest importance, merely upon the recommendation, or upon the "high responsibility" of the President alone, betrays either a blind subserviency, dangerous in the extreme, yes, fatal to our government and constitution, or a negligence in itself culpable even to corruption. Even though the Senator be the unbounded friend of the President, the case would still be the same, as it regards the interests of the people at large and his constituents. For he has the right and the power to make himself acquainted with the reasonableness and grounds of the President's views and recommendations, and it is his imperious duty at all times to call for information of that character, before giving over to, confiding in any such views or recommendations. Say otherwise, and I would ask, of what use is a Senate at all, and why not "place the whole executive power in one man," as the elder Adams wished the "common people" of this country to do? But Mr. Adams, upon the proposition for an embargo, said to the Senate, "let us not discuss the subject!"—"The President has recommended it upon his high responsibility, and let us not deliberate! !" I maintain, that we commit a wide mistake, when we attribute either patriotism or republicanism to J. Q. Adams for his vote in favor of the embargo, though I most heartily justify the measure in Mr. Jefferson, considering the circumstances which then existed. I maintain, that Mr. Adams' vote upon the occasion, was aimed at nothing short of a revolution among the people, and the overthrow of the REPUBLICAN PARTY in this country, together with the destruction of the constitution of our free government. LEONIDAS.

Mr. Burges of Rhode Island.—Mr. Burges, who is now the leader of the coalition forces, and thanked his God that he was not a democrat, in his speech against the tariff bill for which he voted, made a violent assault upon the friends of Gen. Jackson, and particularly upon Kentuck, attributing to their cowardice, and at the same time charging, that when the people meet for the purposes of divine worship, the ceremony ends with a 'knock down and drag out.' He even went so far as to say, that on such occasions, little boys had picked up a basket full of ears and noses. Mr. Daniel, of Ky, in his reply, handled the old gentleman with merited severity.—The Journal of yesterday complains, that Mr. Daniel refused to give Mr. Burges an opportunity to explain: to this an answer is easily given. Mr. Burges himself, had refused to yield the floor for explanation, and Mr. Daniel's politeness on a former occasion was requited by abuse instead of explanation. We do not believe that Mr. Clay's Kentucky friends will permit Mr. Burges to publish his speech as spoken. We pause to see. Mr. Daniel's reply was highly creditable to him and his state—[U. S. Tel.

From the Albany Argus.

GLARING HYPOCRICY.

One year ago, the Adams men in Massachusetts set themselves up as the sole friends of home industry. They claimed support for the administration as the exclusive friends of the American System; and now, when the time to test their sincerity arrives the delegation from that state, with one exception, vote against the tariff and against the protection of home industry. What barefaced hypocricy! And it is now said that the administration has resolved to kill the tariff bill in the senate, through the agency of Mr. Webster, and the other Adams senators of the eastern states. This will cap the climax, and place those double dealers before the public in their true light. The silence of the president's message on this topic, seems, was full of meaning. HOMESPUN.

Political Piety.—His honour, the Mayor of Washington, after stringing together some signs, favorable, as he thinks, to the "coalition," fetches a deep sigh, and says, "we confide in the truth and justice of the cause, and the continued favor of a benign Providence towards this blessed country." Well, we are glad to see this good change in his honour, the Mayor of Washington. Instead of praying for the re-election of John Quincy Adams, he takes an opposite course, and prays for the prosperity of our country.

VALUABLE PROPERTY AT PRIVATE SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale FARM, situated at the mouth of Wicomico Creek, in Somerset county, Md. containing about 300 acres, known by the name of "Kibble's D[illegible] tiny." The improvements are an excellent two story frame house, with necessary out buildings—A peach orchard containing nearly 1000 trees—Also a good apple orchard.

For further particulars and terms apply to JOSHUA MORRIS.

May 20, 1828.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, MAY 20, 1828.

PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

A Sign.—Agreeably to public notice, the company commanded by Capt. J. S. Evans met on Saturday the 17th inst. at Rewastico, Somerset c'y. Before they dismissed it was proposed to take a vote on the Presidential question, which resulted as follows:

For Andrew Jackson	48
J. Q. Adams	8

Cold Comfort.—A letter of the current month, written by a decided Adman in Washington, to his friend in this county, is now in our possession. The writer, who appears to be an intelligent gentleman, says, he believes John Q. Adams will not be re-elected. He is not the only Administration man who believes this.

Consistency!—The Adams men say it has been usual for the President to serve eight years, (except the elder Adams, if you please;) and therefore they can see no reason why Adams should not be re-elected. But this reasoning, if reasoning it can be called, is designed to deceive the unwary—if it were true, it would also hold good with respect to the Vice-President. But they shrink from this test. John C. Calhoun came to the Vice-Presidency, not only free from corruption, but free from suspicion. He was decidedly elected by the people, while J. Q. Adams intrigued and wrested the sovereignty from the people. And John C. Calhoun is to be ousted at the end of four years—R. Rush put in his stead—and Adams continued 8 years for usage sake! Admirable consistency! indeed!!

Effect of Steam News.—An old republican, who resides a few miles below Princess-Anne, lately came to town to get his papers from the post-office—he being a subscriber to the National Intelligencer. A Jacksonian observed to him, it was rather strange, that he took but one paper, that he preferred an Adams print. Not strange at all, sir, (replied the old gentleman,) for every number which I read rivets me more firmly in favour of Old Hickory. Will his honour the lord mayor of Washington take note of this?

We last week published from the New York Enquirer an article under the head of "Economy." We have since received the Report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of State, by which it appears that the Enquirer, and consequently we, should not have said "$100 for a print of J. Q. Adams"—but $10 for a print and $13 for a print of the President of the U. S. This correction is not necessary, although we feel confident that no honest man could have thought it an intentional alteration from $10 to 100—because it was there stated, as we here repeat—'tis not the paltry sum of 10 or 100 dollars to which we call the attention of the public, but to the dangerous and antirepublican "principle which it involves to as great an extent as would a larger amount." Besides, if we wish to speak about large sums of money squandered by the present extravagant administration we need not stop to speak of so small amount as the enormous price of the medal—$100—we could find one ten times as large, one hundred times as large, taken from the contingent fund by J. Q. Adams without even naming an item, "$10—but simply secret service expenditure under the denomination of the President's certificate, without explanation!!! (we have before us the Report of the committee in Congress) which we can prove what is asserted.) The fact is, the contingent fund is becoming, or has already become, the grand fount from which the power-loving gentry draw money for defraying the expense of every article their pride or prodigacy demands and for securing to themselves the means whereby they may retain their ill-gotten power. It further appears from this report, that upon contrasting the expenditures of the Department of State for the last three years, with those years which immediately preceded them, that the latter average only about $17,000 a year, while the former (under Adams' dynasty) exceed more than $32,000 annually! showing an increase of upwards of $15,000 per annum!! This is "with an eye to the strictest economy" with a vengeance!!!

To be perfectly satisfied of the truth of any circumstance is to plain, judicious, open and decissive men the surest road to conviction. The effects of the license law may be fully gleaned from the following communications, which we recommend to the consideration of our readers. There is perhaps no modern act of the Legislature that has excited the passions of the people more than the license law, and we are of opinion that their complaints are justifiable. For what reasonable purpose soever it might have been intended, still it is, of such a nature as does not by any means suit the feelings of our citizens. The question naturally arises, who were the first propagators of this measure? A reference to the records of the state will answer this interrogative. And altho' it has been endeavoured to be palmed upon the Jackson men, yet we are perfectly astonished at any attempt of that kind when it is so well known that it originated with the Adams men and passed by their support.

But here follow the communications:

COMMUNICATION.

14th May, 1828.

Mr. Zieber—I am pleased to find in the last Herald you have noticed the Licence Law—Public feeling is already on tip-toe regarding it—and so unpopular has it already become that the Ebony party with their wonted consistency and regard for truth have charged the Jackson party with the making of this law. But the public cannot be induced to believe this. It is well known that the House of Delegates, where all money bills must originate under the Constitution, had a very large majority of members who belong to the Adams party—The Adams party elected their Governor and council—They discarded one member of the council merely because he was a Jackson man, and regulated every matter to suit their party purposes. Finding however that this licence law, and many others almost as odious, have began to excite public scrutiny, and public indignation, the Adams party wish to screen themselves by charging the Jacksonians. But I am pleased to find this charge repelled with so much promptness, and inasmuch as they cast the first stone the Jacksonians are at full liberty to enter into the contest. I have understood that your notice of this law has given great offence—that it is a grievous offence to animadvert on the proceedings of members of the legislature, and an unpardonable sin to print the names of members in large capitals. Now, it appears to me, that if I should ever have the Honour of voting in the legislature on a bill it would give me pleasure to have my vote proclaimed on the house top—and I should neither be afraid nor ashamed of my vote, on any bill that might be proposed. I trust the time will not arrive when the proceedings of our public servants, and especially our Legislators, will be kept from public scrutiny and animadversion too when merited—a different course would amount to re-enacting John Adams' sedition law. That the licence law is fraught with folly and injustice—that it is unfair and unequal in its operations, and that it is vague and uncertain in phraseology cannot be denied. It is indeed difficult to interpret it—and should it go fully into operation according to its broad and unlimited terms and expressions, scarcely any person in Maryland can act with safety without first taking out a licence as the law directs.

Yours respectfully.

Communication.

LICENSE LAW.—The examination of this Law is recommended to the serious consideration of a discerning public—it appears that scarcely an individual can be exempt from its provisions, whoever purchases and sells, is subject to the Tax; a farmer who may lay out his money in the purchase of Corn, Wheat, Bacon or other articles, and sells it is liable to the Tax. Its operation in our city will be most distressing; numerous widows and children who reside in miserable tenements and selling small articles to aid in support of themselves and family, and who can scarcely support nature or pay rent, will by this oppressive law be compelled to go to the Poor House for support; by this means our taxes will be greatly augmented which already are most oppressive—no law which man could devise is more unjust—the man whose operations may be several hundred thousand dollars annually, pays no greater tax than the poorest individual in society—can there be justice, humanity or equality in such a law?

Baltimore Patriot.

The Rome Republican, a republican journal, published at Rome, Oneida county, N. Y. hitherto neutral in its presidential course has avowed its partiality for Gen. Jackson, in a pertinent address to the public.

MR. ADAMS' ECONOMY.

As the friends of Mr. Adams have boldly asserted, that this Administration has been "the most economical that ever was in the country," we will institute a very brief comparison between the expenses of the three first years of his Administration and the three last years of Mr. Monroe's Administration.

MONROE.

Current expenditures, exclusive of military pensions and the payments of the Public Debt.

1822	$7,879,444 11
1823	8,003,566 07
1824	8,939,449 56
Total,	$24,822,459 74

ADAMS.

Current expenditures, exclusive of military pensions and the payments of the Public Debt.

1825	$10,249,529 13
1826	11,505,722 44
1827	11,752,515 61
Total,	$33,507,767 18
Deduct Monroe's from Adams'	24,822,459 74
☞	$8,685,307 44

Thus it appears, that Mr. Adams in the first three years of his administration has expended more than Mr. Monroe did, in the three last years of his administration, by more than EIGHT MILLIONS AND A HALF of dollars. ☞These statements come from the books of the Departments at Washington—they come from the Records of the Government, and cannot be denied.

What has been the cause of this ENORMOUS INCREASE of expenditures? Both of the periods during which they occured, were in times of peace. In what way has Mr. Adams spent in three years, EIGHT MILLIONS SIX HUNDRED & EIGHTY FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS more than Mr. Monroe did, in the same space of time? The people of this country will be curious to hear this question answered. Will any friend of the present "economical" administration answer it? He would if he could.

Baltimore Republican.

From the Bangor, Maine, Republican.

WEST-INDIA TRADE.

The low prices, which our lumber brought in this market, and in Boston, last year, were the natural consequence of a falling off of the prices of lumber in the West-India Islands, the greatest market of ultimate consumption for this article. It may be satis factory for the friends of the National Administration—its opponents have long been apprized of the fact—to know why lumber is such a drug, that the lumbering business affords no profit, and cannot be carried on without great risk or loss. It may be a little humiliating, but not a little profitable to them, to be apprised, that their favourites Messrs. Adams and Clay—a greater trading firm (in the way of politics at least) than any in the eastern states, have been the sole cause of this decline in our trade.—And how?—By an order in Council of June 1825, the British government threw open certain ports in the West-Indies, to all nations, who would reciprocate in the liberal conditions of a proposed free intercourse. And six months were allowed for the acceptance of the proposed conditions; in default of which, total prohibition, or a heavy tariff on many important articles, among which was lumber, was to be levied. By proclamation, accepting the terms of the Order in Council, Mr. Adams might have rendered the benefits of this offer available to our citizens. Such, however, was the multiplicity of his engagements, that he neglected to do it. And the consequence has been either entire exclusion of our lumber, or admission under such heavy duties as to render the trade of little value. The French government, too, in imitation of the English and on similar terms, threw open the ports of Martinique & Guadaloupe by an Ordinance of Feb. 1826 The President was informed of this by the French Consul, in June following. But the Ordinance was suffered to sleep in his Bureau, until a few weeks since, when General Smith of Baltimore dragged it out before the Senate, in consequence of the arrival at that port of two French vessels with cargoes, laded under the belief that our government could not have been so stupid as to neglect the offers of theirs. They were, however, obliged to turn back on account of the heavy duties exacted upon their cargoes in ports of the U. S. The trade in lumber lost to these islands has amounted to about $800,000 a year—equal to the whole lumber trade of Bangor.—The negligencies of this Administration and its mismanagement, have no where fallen more heavily than upon this part of the State of Maine. But the people—administration-men—bear it with all quietness and meekness of spirit—Their turbulence last year and that of their political friends, the manufacturers, urging a revised tariff—otherwise, an "American System," has resulted, in the house of representatives, in a duty of ten cents to the gallon, on imported molasses, almost the only article received in exchange for lumber.—This duty was first proposed in 1824, by that great friend and favorite of New-England—Henry Clay!—and if it pass the Senate, farewell to the lumbering business!—

From the Albany Argus.

Consistency of the Honourable H. C. Martindale (an Adams man.)

In his speech on the tariff bill, Mr. Martindale holds the following language:

"Had my colleague been employed as an advocate, and actually been fed by British gold, he could not have done more for their interests. I make no imputations, sir. I only speak of the necessary and fatal operation of the bill. But I must be allowed to say, what I conscientiously believe, that had a million of British gold been expended in this house, it could not have produced a more powerful effort than has actually been made here to procure the adoption of a measure, the direct and obvious tendency of which is to promote their interests."

And yet, after this sweeping denunciation, the consistent Mr. Martindale voted for the bill! This case is without a parallel, save the one furnished by the same gentleman, a year or two since, when he moved to strike out the first section of a bill, and then made a speech of two days against his own motion! OLD RIFLE.

Albany in N. York for Adams.

What are the evidences that the city of Albany will give an Adams majority in the fall? Why, truly, because, of the five supervisors, it has elected four friendly to Jackson, and the fifth, if he is for the coalition, was elected without opposition in a ward in which the Jackson alderman on a contest succeeded over the Adams candidate by more than two votes to one: and because also of the 21 town officers elected at this time, not more than 5 are in favour of the administration, and of these, 4 were nominated by the friends of Jackson & returned without opposition in Jackson wards. The only candidate of the coalition in the entire city, which has succeeded upon an opposition, is the collector in the fourth ward, which was owing to a division on that ticket among the republicans! If the republican friends of Andrew Jackson are united, and we have no reason to doubt it, there is not a ward in the city in which they will not succeed, and the majority in the city will not be less than five hundred. Ib.

We have received the first number of the "Republican Register," published by G. Williams & Co. at Hamilton, Madison county. The introductory editorial address abounds in sound political views, and exposes the anti-republican course pursued by Mr. Adams. It advocates, in a decided manner, and upon strong republican grounds, the election of Andrew Jackson. It will prove also a valuable local vehicle of information. Ib.

The Cloud thickening!—The Frankfort (Ky.) Argus publishes a certificate of six respectable citizens who state, that some time after the last Presidential Election, they heard Mr. Francis Johnson "give as a reason for his vote for Mr. Adams, that if Mr. Adams was elected President, Mr. Clay would be elected Secretary of State, but if Gen. Jackson was elected President, Mr. Clay would not be Secretary"—a Confession tantamount to Mr. Trimble's.

The "Frederick Citizen" (of Md.) charges Mr. Warfield (member of the H. of R. in the session of 1824-5) with having stated, soon after the Presidential Election, that he had had a conversation with Mr. Adams, at Mr. A's own request, at which Mr. A. satisfied his doubts about voting for him, and that he gave the casting vote of Maryland, by which Mr. A. was elected. The Editor of the Citizen dares Mr. Warfield to deny the charge—and in that case, pledges himself that "the testimony is at hand, fully & satisfactorily to establish the charges." This indeed a serious charge

Richmond Enq.

MR. ADAMS' BARGAINING—MORE PROOF.

☞ The vote of the free state of Maryland bartered away, through the arts and political cupidity of J. Q. Adams.

We stated in our last, and often intimated before, that we had in our possession, certain facts, which would fully establish the unwarrantable means resorted to by John Q. Adams, to obtain the exalted station which he now holds contrary to the wishes of a vast Majority of the people of the U. States, as we believe the ballot boxes ere long will prove. We comply with a request made, to submit them first in the form of queries, though they are to be regarded as direct and unequivocal allegations; and we are authorized to say, that if Mr. Warfield will dare to deny them, testimony is at hand, fully and satisfactorily to establish the charges therein involved. Without designing to indulge in comment at present, we will merely remark, that the people cannot and will not rest satisfied with silence on the part of Mr. Warfield—he must reply either negatively or affirmatively. A respect for our institutions and our rights, demands that this affair should undergo a close investigation. Private sympathy must be sacrificed on the holy altar of Patriotism. Mr. Adams is charged with tampering with an independent representative of the people—he is charged with laying a plan to seduce, that representative from the path of independence, and with carrying that planinto effect. If Mr. Warfield's conduct in yielding to the seductive arts of Mr. A. is censurable, the conduct of the seducer is a thousand fold more so. When the charge shall be proved by the testimony which is at hand, the measures of Mr. Adams' punishment ought to be equal to the heinousness of his offence.

"Did not the Hon. Henry R. Warfield, state, after he came from the city of Washington, that shortly before the presidential election, he received a letter from Mr. Adams, requesting him to call and see him?

Did he not say that after receiving a second letter, he called upon Mr. Adams.

Did he not say, that on his arrival into the presence of Mr. Adams, there were several members of Congress with other gentlemen present? Did he not say, that Mr. Adams told him he wished to have some private conversation with him?

Did he not say, that after he and Mr. Adams had retired, that Mr. Adams asked him whether he could not give him his vote?

Did he not say, that he replied, If you satisfy me upon some points, I will have no objections to give you my vote?

Did he not say, that after having had a good deal of conversation, upon leaving the room, Mr. Adams observed, that he hoped he had satisfied him?

Did he not say, that he gave him to believe he was perfectly satisfied?

Did he not say, that he gave the casting vote of the State of Maryland, by which Mr. Adams was elected?

And did he not say, that he could get any foreign appointment, but that it would not do for some time, inasmuch as it might lead to a suspicion of the manner in which things were conducted?

"All hail, New-Hampshire."—The Walpole Farmer's Museum of the 27th ult. has "hoisted the colors of Andrew Jackson and the Republican party." It had previously been a zealous Administration paper. In giving the motives of this change, the Editor says:—

"We conceive that the Administration party, notwithstanding the unwarrantable means they have used, have utterly failed to establish by testimony in any shape, the numerous charges they have preferred against General Jackson. For three years past, he has been the object of the vilest abuse, and we are free to acknowledge that we have contributed our share to the inglorious work, which we have done with false impressions and erroneous views."

☞ A writer in Moore's Journal, (a Mr. "Bob Tail,") challenges us to a bet, and offers to deposite one hundred or five hundred dollars in the banks at Keene or Charlestown, that Adams will get NINETY VOTES for President, at the next election. Verily, the Adams men are lowering their tone fast, to offer bets that Adams will get ninety when it requires one hundred and thirty-one votes to elect a President. This Bobtail'd correspondent of Moore's, must be a braver, or a more rash, man than many of his party to offer bets even at that rate; for not many of them would dare bet that Adams can get two thirds the necessary number of votes to elect him.—[N. H. Spectator.]

"BRITISH GOLD."

In the times of high party excitement between the Democrats and Federalists, among their criminations and recriminations of each other, they used talk of French influence, and British influence, of British Gold, and French Gold; and many a good, honest man of each party, we have no doubt, did really believe that his opponents were under improper foreign influence. But when the war came, and Federalists and Democrats found themselves fighting side by side in defence of their common country; when they thrown together in the same camp, in the same mess and came to know one anothers private feelings, they no longer misinterpreted one anothers public principles, and they could not but smile at their own weakness. From that time until this, we have heard no more of the Federalists being under the influence of British Gold, or of the Democrats being under that of French Gold. But now, the idle cant, which was never used but by designing men to gull the ignorant, is revived! Revived—not to be applied to the Democrats or the Federalists, but to the friends of JACKSON! Yes, of ANDREW JACKSON—of the Hero of N. Orleans—of the conqueror of Packenham!! And by whom is this idle tale got up? By the HARTFORD CONVENTIONISTS!!! Yes, the New Hampshire Journal, the mouth-piece of the Hartford Conventionists in New Hampshire, says,

"If British Gold can elect General Jackson, the Agents of Great Britain declare openly, that it shall not be wanted."

Now, is n't this enough to disgust every man of sense in the country?—And the idea too, of the British, of all people in the world, being in favor of Gen. Jackson! Why, they had as lief see the D—l President. Balt. Rep.

[COMMUNICATED.]

Good Sheep.

Mr. Editor—I had the pleasure of witnessing slaughtered, a few days ago, at the house of my old friend Col. J. C. Wilson, one of the finest Wethers I ever saw—it was of Ward's breed, four years old, and weighed 208 lbs.—Also, a ram lamb, Bakewell breed, one year old, which weighed 204 lbs. Should you deem the above worthy a place in your paper it may incite others to emulation and gratify

A Subscriber.

May 19th, 1828.

Violent Hail Storm.—We are indebted to a friend for the following extract of a letter dated, Potters Landing, Caroline Co. E S. Md. May 8.

"We had one of the most destructive hail storms here, on the evening of the 6th inst. ever witnessed by our oldest people. Our crops of Rye and Wheat are much injured. Buildings, fences, orchards and timber, are prostrated. There are upwards of fifty houses blown down in this neighbourhood; the gardens are spoilt. The hail was so severe as to destroy many birds. Doves, partridges, robins, blackbirds, &c, have been found dead in great numbers. The Storm has broke for me upwards of one thousand panes of window glass. The whole neighbourhood has suffered in the same way. The loss in fact is immense. Whole orchards are swept. I hope it has not been general. In width here it was from four to six miles—its extent unknown."

Marvelous—most marvelous!—In the month of February last, a girl in Bainbridge, Alabama, was suspected of having given birth to and murdered an illegitimate child; nothing satisfactory, however, was proved against her and she left the place.—On 9th of April, some boys found the body of a child in a mill pond, with a part of the parietal and occipital bones of the head crushed, but the os frontis, (the bone of the forehead,) was perfect. These bones were entirely divested of flesh, and bleached perfectly white by the combined operation of water and air. The rest of the body was perfect. It was immediately conjectured that the body was that of the child above alluded to, and the female relative with whom the girl lived was suspected of being the murderer. She was accordingly brought to the place where the body lay. Now for the marvelous part of the story. We have said that the bones of the head were perfectly white, and that the frontal bone was both white and sound. As soon as the suspected murderer approached the body, this latter bone assumed a blood red appearance! "This blushing of the dry bone," says the account before us, "was as evident as if a milk-white handkerchief were stained with blood over one part while the other remained white." We should suspect this to be a plagiarism on the Canadian wonder-makers, were it not for the following certificate:

We do certify in the presence of Almighty God, that on the evening of the 9th of April this present month, we were assembled together at Nathaniel Futrell's shop in Bainbridge, to look at a child found by Wm. B. Rice and other boys on the same day, in Col. Willis' Mill pond. That the said child's head was all dissolved or in some way destroyed except the bones, which were of a perfectly white, bleached colour. That after the woman who was supposed to have had an agency in the death of the child came on the ground, a part of the front or forehead bone, say a place somewhat larger than a dollar, became red as blood, while the rest of the same bone, and all the other bones of the head, still continued of a dry bony whiteness.—Given under our hands this 11th day of April, 1828.

N. A. FUTRELL,
WM. CLAYTON,
L. BRYANT,
MARY ANN CLAYTON,
RACHEL FUTRELL,
SARAH WILLIAMS.

The United States and Turkey.—The N. Y. Courier states that the treaty between our Government and the Porte is fully confirmed; and letters at London state, that the terms are very favourable to America, as the Treaty was negociated during the angry excitement of the Porte against the European powers.

Annapolis, May 15.

Died on Sunday morning the 11th inst. the venerable Jeremiah Townley Chase, Esq:—Under the old Judiciary system, he presided as Chief Judge of the General Court of this State. On the re-organization of the Judiciary system, in 1806, he was selected as Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals, which office he held until a few years since, when he voluntarily retired from public life.

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court.

April 13th 1828.

§§§§§§§§§§ ON application of Elizabeth S. J. Evans, Adm'x. of §§SEAL.§§ James Evans, late of Somerset county dec'd, it is ordered, that she give the notice required by law for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week, for the space of three successive weeks, in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,

JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans court of said county in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of James Evans late of Somerset county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th of November next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under my hand this 13st day of May, 1828.

E. S. J. EVANS, Adm'x. of J. Evans, dec'd.

May 20, 1828.

We are authorized to announce
William Done, Esq.
as a Candidate for the next General Assembly of Maryland.
May 6, 1828.

We are authorized to announce
John C. Wilson, jr. Esq.
as a candidate to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.
May 13, 1828.

We are authorized to announce
Levin D. Jones, Esq.
as a candidate to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

We are authorized to announce
William H. Waters, Esq.
as a candidate to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

General Jackson, unmoved by appearances, anxiously desired it—he seldom slept—he was always at his post, that there might be no relaxation of vigilance on any side.

On the memorable 8th January, the signals intended to produce concert in the enemy's movements were descried at dawn. They were prepared to storm the line, and the charge was made with so much celerity that the American soldiers at the outposts had scarcely time to fly in. Showers of bombs and balls were poured from new batteries. The two British divisions, commanded by Sir Edward Packenham, in person, pressed forward. A thick fog enabled them to approach within a short distance of the intrenchments before they were discovered: but this circumstance insured them defeat and destruction.—The American artillery and small arms, discharged in a continued volley, mowed down their works and arrested their progress. The fatal aim of the western marksmen was never so terribly exemplified. Sir Edward Packenham, seeing that his troops wavered and receded, hastened to the front, but quickly fell, mortally wounded, in the arms of his aid-de-camp. General Gibbs and Keene were also dangerously hurt & borne from the field, which by this time was strewed with dead and dying. The British columns, often broke and driven back, were repeatedly formed and urged forward anew. Convinced at last that nothing could be accomplished, they abandoned the contest, and a general and disorderly retreat ensued. One American redoubt was carried by superior numbers; but quickly evacuated under the fire of the riflemen at the line. So great was the carnage of the British; so perilous the disorder into which they were thrown, that had arms been possessed by that large portion of the American militia who had remained inactive and useless for the want of them, the whole British force must have surrendered. But under the peculiar circumstances of the case, Jackson was unable to attempt, without extreme rashness, a persuit of the vanquished. He adopted the safe alternative of continuing in his position.

According to Gen. Lambert's official report of the affair of the 8th, the British loss, in the main attack on the left bank of the river, amounted to upwards of two thousand men, in killed, wounded, and prisoners. It may be estimated at nearly three thousand, while that of the Americans was but thirteen. The effective force of the latter at this line on the left bank, was three thousand seven hundred—that of the enemy at least nine thousand. The whole force landed from the British ships in Louisiana is believed to have been about fourteen thousand. The British Commander in Chief and Major General Gibbs died of their wounds, besides many of the most valued and distinguished British officers. On the ninth the enemy requested and obtained an armistice of some hours to bury their dead.

After the action of the 8th the American batteries were continually throwing balls and bombs into the British camp. Harassed, dismayed, and enfeebled, that once powerful army which was to arrive at New Orleans by a primrose path, and hold in subjection all the lower region of the Mississippi, took a final and furtive leave in the night of the 18th of January, and embarked in their shipping for the West Indies. Thus ended the mighty invasion, in twenty-six days after the foreign standard had been exultingly planted on the bank of the Mississippi. Thus triumphed General Jackson by a wonderful combination of boldness and prudence; energy and adroitness; desperate fortitude and anxious patriotism.

Though the enemy had withdrawn from New Orleans in the manner which has been stated, Jackson could not be sure that they would not return. Against this contingency, he prepared himself by cautious arrangements in the distribution of his force and the construction of new defences at assailable points, before he returned to New Orleans. In that city he was received as a deliverer—almost every mind was kindled to enthusiasm from the consideration of the evils which he had averted, as well as of the victories which he had gained. The most solemn and lively demonstrations of public respect and gratitude succeeded each other daily, until the period of his departure for Nashville soon after the annunciation of peace concluded at Ghent between Great Britain and the United States. Though honoured and cherished by the larger part of the citizens, he was not, however without occasion to display the energy and decision of his character in a way that favoured the ends of jealousy and detraction. Anonymous articles calculated to excite mutiny among the troops and afford the enemy dangerous intelligence, having appeared in one of the newspapers of New Orleans, he caused the author of it to be revealed to him by the editor of the paper. He found that the offender was a member of the Legislature, but this circumstance did not prevent him from ordering his arrest and detention for trial. Application was immediately made to one of the Judges for a writ of Habeas Corpus and it was immediately issued. Jackson arrested the Judge also and sent him from the city. The General had not yet raised the edict of martial law, there being no certain intelligence of peace or of the departure of the enemy from the coast. Within a few days the cessation of hostilities was officially announced. The Judge was restored to his post and the exercise of his functions. Without loss of time a rule of court was granted for General Jackson to appear and shew cause why an attachment for contempt should not issue, on the ground that he had refused to obey a writ and imprisoned the organ of the law. He did not hesitate to appear and submit a full and very able answer, justifying his proceedings. After argument before the Court, the rule was made absolute, an attachment sued out and Jackson brought up to answer interrogatories. He declined answering them; but asked for the sentence, which the Judge then proceeded to pass. It was a fine of one thousand dollars. The spectators who crowded the hall betrayed the strongest indignation. As soon as he entered his carriage, it was seized by the people and drawn by them to the coffee-house, amid the acclamations of a large concourse. When he arrived at his quarters, he put the amount of his fine into the hands of his aid-de-camp, and caused it to be discharged without delay. He was scarcely beforehand with the citizens, who in a short time raised the sum among themselves, by contribution, and were anxious to be permitted to testify at once their gratitude and shame. What was thus collected was appropriated at his request to a charitable institution. He enjoyed the consciousness that the powers which the exigency of the times forced him to assume, had been exercised exclusively for the public good and that they had saved the country. In 1821, the Corporation of New Orleans voted fifty thousand dollars for erecting a marble statue appropriate to his military services. The same body gave also one thousand dollars for a portrait of him painted by Earle of Nashville. Thus, the miserable fine may be said to have been obliterated.

On his return to Nashville—a journey of eight hundred miles—he saw on every side marks of exultation and delight. It must be within the memory of most of our readers, what was the sensation produced throughout the Union by the tidings from New Orleans, and what the popular enthusiasm concerning the merits of "Old Hickory."

Gen. Jackson retired again to his farm, and after spending his time in the pursuit of the arts of husbandry for about two years, still retaining his rank in the army, he was once more called into active service to defend our frontiers from the incursions of the Seminole Indians. This service was performed with the like promptitude that has uniformly distinguished his active life, and resulted in making our countrymen's arms again victorious over the efforts of their enemies. It would occupy more room than we can afford at this time to follow the General through all his numerous exploits in this war, they are well known to many of our readers, and we shall not repeat them here.

When the treaty with Spain ceding the Floridas was finally ratified, Congress passed a law empowering the President to vest in such person or persons as he might select, all the military, civil, and judicial authority exercised by the officers of the Spanish government. The President, under this law, appointed General Jackson, to act in the first place as commissioner for receiving the Provinces, and then to assume the government of them.

On the 4th of July, 1822, the Governor of Tennessee, by order of the Legislature, presented him with a sword as a testimonial "of the high respect" entertained by the state for his public services. And, on the 20th of August of the same year, the members of the General Assembly of Tennessee recommended him to the Union for the office of President—a recommendation which has been repeated by the Legislature of Alabama, and various assemblages of private citizens in other parts of the country. In the autumn of 1823, he was elected to the Senate of the United States. In the south-western, and some of the southern states, and in Pennsylvania, he is eminently popular. Before his election to the Senate, he was appointed by the President, with the concurrence of the Senate, Minister Plenipotentiary to the government of Mexico: but he declined the station from a repugnance to the monarchial system which then prevailed in Mexico, and to the means by which the supreme power had been usurped.

In person, General Jackson is tall, and remarkably erect and thin. His weight bears no proportion to his height, and his frame, in general, does not appear fitted for trials such as it has borne. His features are large; his eyes dark blue, with a keen and strong glance; his eyebrows arched and prominent—his complexion is that of the war-worn soldier. His demeanor is easy and gentle: in every station he has been found open and accessible to all. The irritability of his temper, which is not denied by his friends, produces contrasts in his manner and countenance, leading to very different conceptions and representations as to both: but that natural infirmity has decreased, and those who have lived and acted with him, bear unanimous testimony to the general mildness of his carriage and the kindness of his disposition. It is certain that he has inspired his soldiers, his military household, his domestic circle, and his neighbours, with the most affectionate sentiments. The impetuosity of his nature, his impatience of wrong and encroachment, his contempt for meanness, and his tenaciousness of just authority, have involved him in bitter altercations and sanguinary quarrels:—his resentments have been fiercely executed, and his censures harshly uttered; yet he cannot be accused of wanton or malicious violence—the sallies which may be deemed intemperate can be traced to strong provocation, operating in most instances, upon his patriotic zeal and the very generosity and loftiness of his spirit. He sacrificed the enemies of his country, where he deemed that signal examples of rigor were necessary for the public welfare, and the lasting suppression of murder and rapine—he was never found wanting in clemency and humanity towards those whom essential justice and paramount duty allowed him to spare and relieve. Thus, after the battle of the Horse Shoe, in the Creek war, every Indian warrior was spared who surrendered himself—several of his men lost their lives in endeavouring, by his orders, to save some obstinate individuals who refused to surrender, although his own troops were suffering with hunger, he forbade the corn of the Indians to be taken from them, and caused the wounded among the latter to be dressed and nursed as his own men. At the battle of Tohopeka, an infant was found alive on the breast of its lifeless Indian mother: Jackson directed it to be brought to him, and not being able to prevail upon any one of the Indian Women to undertake the care of it, adopted it into his family, and has ever since proved a kind protector to the orphan.

In the various critical situations in which he was placed by emergencies and the unlimited discretion cast upon him, he appears to have been governed by general and solid principles which he knew how to apply satisfactorily in explaining his measures. The very salutary energy and decision with which he pursued the course, that he had deliberately concluded to be right and necessary, subjected him to the belief or charge of having acted merely from a vehement, overbearing, or arbitrary disposition. If his feelings were strongly roused and displayed against the timid or the traitorous portion of the inhabitants of New Orleans who would have given the enemy an easy and fatal triumph—against the Spanish authorities in Florida who served the British and supplied the Seminoles—against Arbuthnot and Ambrister, the unwearied instigators and insiduous confederates of the Savages thirsting for American blood—against the imposter prophets, who had directed the butchery of white women and children, and whose occupation it was to incite depredation and murder—against a Spanish Governor who would have violated a treaty and despoiled orphan females of their inheritance—we may say that both the warmth of those feelings, and the rigour with which they were manifested, will be not only excused, but even admired by generous minds.

The copious despatches which Gen. Jackson had occasion to write to the government, detailing his campaigns and official proceedings; his numerous addresses to his troops, and the statements and arguments, which the charges preferred against his official conduct, compelled him to publish for his justification, would altogether, form a sizeable volume. They are marked by great fluency and energy of expression; cogent reasoning; apt reference to general principles, and the utmost earnestness and apparent rectitude of intention. He writes nervously and perspicuously; he speaks with facility and force. Grace and refinement, he has not studied either in composition or delivery. Those qualities are not to be expected in one whose life has been chiefly passed in such scenes as we have sketched. He is artificial in nothing. His reading cannot be supposed to be extensive nor his application to books very frequent. In regard to business he has been always found indefatigable and sagacious. He possesses a competent estate, and lives hospitably in the manner of a substantial farmer. He is without children.—His amusements have consisted in the management of his domestic concerns, the sports of the turf and social intercourse. He is temperate in his diet and in all respects enjoys a good private reputation. His public character is to be known from the history of his public career.

THE MORGAN AFFAIR.

[From the Geneva Paladium,]

Combination.—It is now three weeks since we brought forward certain serious charges against a COMBINATION of politicians—including the managers of the Rochester "Anti-Masonic Enquirer," and the "Buffalo Patriot"—formed for the purpose of USING the Morgan excitement for the benefit of Messrs Adams and Clay, and the administration party in the state of New York. These charges were of serious import, and not lightly made. For three weeks we have waited for answer. The papers accused have stopped their exchange, and remained silent. It is right the people should know the facts in relation to this case that they may avoid being made the tools of knaves and scoundrels. In a word, that they may not be duped by those creatures, who having sought all other avenues to honour and respectability in vain, now hope to find an unguarded entrance, in this moment of excitement. We assert then, as facts susceptible of proof—

1. That when Thurlow Weed left the editorship of the "Rochester Telegraph," in the course of the past fall, his pecuniary resources were exhausted, and that he has a family to support.

2. That after the close of the election, he went on an expensive journey to the city of Washington.

3. That while on his way to Washington, he laid open all their plans, to an anti-masonic friend. That the object of his visit was avowed to he, to solicit the aid of the general government in using the Morgan excitement for the benefit of the administration party in the state of New York.

4. That upon his return from Washington, he bought the "Rochester Balance," and reissued it in an enlarged form, under the name of the "Anti Masonic Enquirer."

5. That D. D. Stephenson, editor of the "Balance," thereupon removed to Palmyra, and established the "Freeman" upon the same principles with the "Enquirer."

6. That both the "Enquirer" and "Freeman," are papers that every Printer knows do not pay their annual expenses, by a considerable amount—having comparatively no jobs or advertising.

7. That the "Buffalo Patriot" received a large sum of money for coming out against the masons—not for the purpose, we believe, of advocating public justice; but to use the excitement for the objects before specified.

We lay the facts before the people and defy the accused to an investigation. In addition to these formal assertions, we have evidence that the intention was to bring up Albert H. Tracy—an old republican, but now an Adams man—as a candidate for governor, in order to distract the republican party of New York. Information from Washington states, that the object of Mr. Weed was perfectly understood there. And that it was believed that the administration had grasped at the Morgan question, as a drowning man would catch straws, to save itself from sinking.

The editor of the Geneva Palladium offers to "prove on oath," that Thurlow Weed DID DECLARE, that "the object of his journey to Washington was to procure the aid of the general government, in using the Morgan excitement, for the benefit of the Adams party—[Palmyra Sentinel.

Virginia.—The hon. John Randolph, in his celebrated speech on the retrenchment resolutions, stated that the freeholders of his district were unanimous for Jackson. At a recent election for two delegates to the assembly in the county of Charlotte, (the residence of Mr. Randolph,) at the close of the polls, the votes stood, Jackson, 333, Adams, 00. So also in Albemarle, the residence of the late Thomas Jefferson, Jackson 265, Adams 00.

The returns of the votes in Virginia, thus far received, shew about 15,000 in favour of Jackson, about 3000 in favour of Adams.

From the Richmond Enquirer, May 9.

THE PLEDGE.

The confessions of Mr. Walsh have thrown all the Administration prints into confusion. They seem utterly at a loss how "to speak to it." They know not whether to deny his facts, or to plead justification. After having so stoutly denied the whole story of the pledge, and having obtained the unqualified authority of the President himself for their assertion; after having ridiculed and abused the Opposition for their invention of the story, they are mortified to find one of their own Editors, the confidential friend of Mr. Webster, coming forward to admit the authenticity of the material facts. It is too bad. They are literally dumb-founded. Not a paper of the Administration party has even ventured to lisp a syllable upon the subject. The papers at Philadelphia or at Baltimore have blinked the disclosure—nor have the two Officials at Washington raised a whisper about it. "What, morality dumb too!"

But it cannot be denied. We knew the facts before Mr. Walsh unsealed his lips—and more than he has ventured to speak. We knew, that Mr. Adams had recognized a written pledge, revised and modified it too, which was calculated and intended (can any man doubt it, from the very circumstances of the case?) to tamper with the election of the H. of R. and to promote his own elevation. We knew that he had stooped to play in this busy scene of intrigue—and to give pledges of support to the Federal Party, whom he had once abandoned to their fallen fortunes. When he supposed that they had lost their power to assist him, he left them to their adversity—and when he found that some few men were able to help him up the ladder, then, he hesitated not to court their support of himself by promises of support to their party.—Give what version you may please to this story—this is the complexion to which it must come at last. Else, why did Mr. Webster go to him for pledges at that critical time? Why did Mr. Adams give them at that moment?—Why, let it appear in black and white? why draw the veil so seduously over the transaction—why give a secret pledge? Why, so anxiously try to keep it secret for so long a period? and why did Mr. Walsh speak only, when he found the "signs" gathering so thick from N. Jersey, that if he did not speak and plead justification, the whole story might burst forth upon them without their co-operation or consent?

The facts cannot be denied—An intelligent people will draw their own conclusions. Can they vote for a man, who is suspected of such an intrigue? who, to purchase office for himself, has given to voters pledges of office to their party, and of course to themselves?

A fine Resolution.—The Administration papers say Mr. Adams has come to the determination of paying off five millions of the public debt on the first of July next. The mischief he has! If it depends upon his determination, we should like him to extend his determination, and conclude to pay it all. What stupidity or knavery this declaration betrays. The matter is not left for the determination of Mr. Adams; but the funds are provided by Congress, and the President is compelled to apply them according to law, in the payment of the debt, as fast as the ability of the nation will admit. It would really seem that the Adams men take the American people to be children, who can be gulled with any measures they may choose to invent—D. Gaz.

JACKSON MEETING—Tompkins County, New York.

(From the Ithaca Journal.)

We have the gratification of presenting to our readers the proceedings of the republican general meeting, held in this village on the 15th of April. It was the most numerous and respectable meeting ever convened in the county of Tompkins. The court room was crowded, not with idle spectators, but with respectable farmers and citizens of the county, who participated deeply in what was going forward; there were, as near as could be estimated, there were about FIVE HUNDRED persons present. We have never seen a deeper and more attentive interest manifested in the proceeding of a meeting. We congratulate the republicans of the county, of the state, and of the union, upon this manifestation of the energy, firmness and unanimity, with which the republicans of the county of Tompkins have determined to rally around the ancient standard of their party, and support the cause of PRINCIPLE, against that of Intrigue and CORRUPTION.

[We have only room for the following from the proceedings.]

Whereas it is expressly provided by the third section of the second article of the constitution, that the President of the United States, "shall, from time to time, give to the congress information of the state of the Union; and recommend to their consideration, such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient;"

Therefore, Resolved, That inasmuch as the present incumbent has not in either of his messages to congress, recommended to their consideration the necessity or expediency of revising the tariff, or of any further legislative aid for the encouragement and protection of our domestic industry, but has maintained on that subject a studied silence, we are compelled to conclude, either that he is altogether opposed to any further protecting duties, or that he has avoided the responsibility of advancing an opinion, from the fear of opposition on that account, in those sections of the Union which are known to be opposed to it; and that we cannot consistently sustain the claims of any man for the office of President, who is opposed to what is emphatically denominated the "American System," or who has not sufficient firmness, honesty and independence, to risk his personal popularity in support of it.

From the Eastern (Maine) Argus.

"STRIKE—BUT HEAR ME."

The act which has been construed into John Q. Adams' conversion to republicanism, and which has been relied upon as proof of it, was his giving a vote in favor of the embargo law, in December, 1807—mark the date. But the awkward conduct of Mr. Adams upon this occasion, distinct from all other facts, save that of his having been always prior to that time a headstrong federalist, was of itself sufficient to betray, the hypocricy and insincerity of his vote, and at the same time shocked the understanding of every member present at the Senate Board, including both parties. It was an insult to them individually for him to suppose them to be so completely destitute of discernment and subject to his artifice, as to be duped by the shallow and barefaced pretension which he made of unbounded confidence in the recommendation of President Jefferson—a man whom he had been taught from his infancy to despise, and one whom he himself had ridiculed for years, and particularly within the early months of the same year then current! Yet when Mr. Jefferson's secret message was received by the Senate, recommending an embargo, Mr. Adams instantaneously rose from his seat, and advised the members at the Board, not to discuss the subject at all! adding, that "the President had recommended the measure upon his high responsibility, and therefore, the Senate ought not to deliberate! !" This was his own language, taken down at the moment in black and white by a venerable Senator present, whose integrity in the political world as far outshines that of John Quincy Adams, as the sun outshines the bug whose brilliancy can only be seen through the darkness of midnight. The sentiment itself, instead of evincing a caution and regard for the rights of the people, who had entrusted their destiny to his hands, and instead of being suited to the solemnity of the occasion—an occasion which proposed to shut up a whole nation from all intercourse with the rest of mankind and the world, for an unlimited time;—and instead of comporting with the doctrines of freedom of debate, and republicanism, it is a sentiment most clearly demonstrating his love of arbitrary principles, and his constant and long cherished hope of seeing our government resolve itself into something like a repository of "the whole executive power in one man," agreeably to the theory prescribed by his father, as "the true policy of the common people,"—"laborers, husbandmen, mechanics and merchants in general!"

It is very true at the time this vote, and these ardent expressions of confidence in the recommendation of Mr. Jefferson, were made, they were received as evidence of Mr. Adams' conversion to republicanism and to the republican party, then predominant, let the reader recollect. But they were so viewed by only inference;—the conclusion, at best, was only implied by the friends of Mr. Jefferson, who ever greeted every expression of confidence in him with joy, from whatever source it might come, because they knew and felt it was due him, and that it confirmed the opinion they themselves honestly and justly entertained of him. In their readiness, however, to applaud the confidence which Mr. Adams seemingly reposed in Mr. Jefferson, they mistook and overrated the motives and feelings of the former, and gave, as many still continue to give him for it, both a species and a degree of credit that he never merited. Could he be brought to divulge the real and secret thoughts of his own soul in this particular—could Mr. Adams be brought to speak to this subject upon a bed of death, and under a right sense of his immediate departure to the judgment seat of Him who knoweth the secrets of the heart, I solemnly believe he would endorse and confirm this statement in its fullest extent.

When Mr. Jefferson recommended an embargo, his friends abroad among the people, having no opportunity or means of knowing the exact circumstances and grounds upon which he thought it advisable, ought and did at once, through confidence in his ability, integrity, and political foresight, submit and support it "with the utmost energy." But for a member of the Senate, whose duty it was to oversee and inquire into, and examine with vigilance the views of the President and their merits, to drive headlong into every or any measure, of particularly the greatest importance, merely upon the recommendation, or upon the "high responsibility" of the President alone, betrays either a blind subserviency, dangerous in the extreme, yes, fatal to our government and constitution, or a negligence in itself culpable even to corruption. Even though the Senator be the unbounded friend of the President, the case would still be the same, as it regards the interests of the people at large and his constituents. For he has the right and the power to make himself acquainted with the reasonableness and grounds of the President's views and recommendations, and it is his imperious duty at all times to call for information of that character, before giving over to confiding in any such views or recommendations. Say otherwise, and I would ask, of what use is a Senate at all, and why not "place the whole executive power in one man," as the elder Adams wished the "common people" of this country to do? But Mr. Adams, upon the proposition for an embargo, said to the Senate, "let us not discuss the subject!"—"The President has recommended it upon his high responsibility and let us not deliberate!" I maintain, that we commit no wide mistake, when we attribute either patriotism or republicanism to J. Q. Adams for his vote in favor of the embargo, though I most heartily justify the measure in Mr. Jefferson; considering the circumstances which then existed. I maintain, that Mr. Adams' vote upon the occasion, was aimed at nothing short of a revolution among the people, and the overthrow of the REPUBLICAN PARTY in this country, together with the destruction of the constitution of our free government. LEONIDAS.

Mr. Burges of Rhode Island.—Mr. Burges, who is now the leader of the coalition forces, and thanked his God that he was not a democrat, in his speech against the tariff bill for which he voted, made a violent assault upon the friends of Gen. Jackson, and particularly upon Kentuck, attributing to their cowardice, and at the same time charging, that when the people meet for the purposes of divine worship, the ceremony ends with a 'knock down and drag out.' He even went so far as to say, that on such occasions, little boys had picked up a basket full of ears and noses. Mr. Daniel, of Ky, in his reply, handled the old gentleman with merited severity.—The Journal of yesterday complains, that Mr. Daniel refused to give Mr. Burges an opportunity to explain, to this an answer is easily given, Mr. Burges himself, had refused to yield the floor for explanation, and Mr Daniel's politeness on a former occasion was requitted by abuse instead of explanation. We do not believe that Mr. Clay's Kentucky friends will permit Mr. Burges to publish his speech as spoken. We pause to see. Mr. Daniel's reply was highly creditable to him and his state—[U. S. Tel.

From the Albany Argus.

GLARING HYPOCRICY.

One year ago, the Adams men in Massachusetts set themselves up as the sole friends of home industry. They claimed support for the administration as the exclusive friends of the American System; and now, when the time to test their sincerity arrives, the delegation from that state, with one exception, vote against the tariff, and against the protection of home industry! What barefaced hypocricy! It is now said that the administration has resolved to kill the tariff bill in the senate, through the agency of Mr. Webster, and the other Adams senators of the eastern states. This will cap the climax, and place these double dealers before the public in their true light. The silence of the president's message on this topic, it seems, was full of meaning. HOMESPUN.

Political Piety.—His honour, the Mayor of Washington, after stringing together some signs, favorable, as he thinks, to the "coalition," fetches a deep sigh, and says, "we confide in the truth and justice of the cause, and the continued favor of a benign Providence towards this blessed country." Well, we are glad to see this good change in his honour, the Mayor of Washington. Instead of praying for the re-election of John Quincy Adams, he takes an opposite course, and prays for the prosperity of our country.

VALUABLE PROPERTY

AT PRIVATE SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his FARM, situated at the mouth of Wicomico Creek, in Somerset county, Md. containing about 300 acres and known by the name of "Kibble's Destiny." The improvements are an excellent two story frame house, with necessary out buildings—A peach orchard containing nearly 1000 trees—Also a good apple orchard.

For further particulars and terms apply to JOSHUA MORRIS.

May 20, 1828.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, MAY 20, 1828.

PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

A Sign.—Agreeably to public notice the company commanded by Captain J. S. Evans met on Saturday the [illegible] inst. at Rewastico, Somerset c'y. Before they dismissed it was proposed to take a vote on the Presidential question, which resulted as follows:

For Andrew Jackson 48
J. Q. Adams 8

Cold Comfort.—A letter of the current month, written by a decided Adams man in Washington, to his friend in this county, is now in our possession. The writer, who appears to be an intelligent gentleman, says, he believes John Q. Adams will not be re-elected. He is not the only Administration man who believes this.

Consistency!—The Adams men say it has been usual for the President to serve eight years, (except the elder Adams, if you please,) and therefore they can see no reason why Adams should not be re-elected. But this reasoning, if reasoning it can be called, is designed to deceive the unwary—if it were true, it would also hold good with respect to the Vice-President. But they shrink from this test. John C. Calhoun came to the Vice-Presidency, not only free from corruption, but free from suspicion. He was decidedly elected by the people, while J. Q. Adams intrigued and wrested the sovereignty from the people. If John C. Calhoun is to be ousted at the end of four years—R. Rush put in his stead—and Adams continued eight years for usage sake! Admirable consistency! indeed!!

Effect of Steam News.—An old republican who resides a few miles below Princess-Anne, lately came to town to get his papers from the post-office—he being a subscriber to the National Intelligencer. A Jacksonian observed to him, it was rather strange, he took but one paper, that he preferred an Adams' print. Not strange at all, sir, (replied the old gentleman,) every number which I read rivets me more firmly in favour of Old Hickory. Will his honour the lord mayor of Washington take note of this?

We last week published from the N. York Enquirer an article under the head of "Economy." We have since received the Report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of State, by which it appears the Enquirer, and consequently we, should not have said "$100 for a medal of J. Q. Adams"—but $10 for a medal and $18 for a print of the President of the U. S. This correction is deemed necessary, although we feel confident that no honest man could have thought it an intentional alteration from $10 to 100—because it was not stated, as we here repeat—'tis not the paltry sum of 10 or 100 dollars which we call the attention of the public, but to the dangerous and anti-republican "principle which it involves to as great an extent as would a larger amount." Besides, if we wish to talk about large sums of money expended by the present extravagant administration we need not stop to [illegible] one of so small amount as the [illegible] price of the medal—$100—we could find one ten times as large, yea one hundred times as large, taken from the contingent fund by J. Q. Adams without even naming an [illegible] at $10—but simply secret service expenditure under the denomination of President's certificate, without specification!!! (We have before us the report of the committee in Congress by which we can prove what is here asserted.) The fact is, the contingent fund is becoming, or has already become, the grand fount from which the power-loving gentry draw [illegible] for defraying the expense of [illegible] article their pride or profligacy demands and for securing to themselves the means whereby they may retain their ill-gotten power. It further appears from this report, that upon contrasting the expenditures of the Department of State for the last three years, with those years which immediately preceded them, that the latter average only about $17,000 a year, while the former (under Adams' dynasty) exceed more than $32,000 annually! showing an increase of upwards of $15,000 per annum!! This is "with an eye to the strictest economy" with a vengeance!!!

To be perfectly satisfied of the truth of any circumstance is to plain, judicious, open and decissive men the surest road to conviction. The effects of the license law may be fully gleaned from the following communications, which we recommend to the consideration of our readers. There is perhaps no modern act of the Legislature that has excited the passions of the people more than the license law, and we are of opinion that their complaints are justifiable. For what reasonable purpose soever it might have been intended, still it is of such a nature as does not by any means suit the feelings of our citizens. The question naturally arises, who were the first propagators of this measure? A reference to the records of the state will answer this interrogative. And altho' it has been endeavoured to be palmed upon the Jackson men, yet we are perfectly astonished at any attempt of that kind when it is so well known that it originated with the Adams men and passed by their support.

But here follow the communications:

COMMUNICATION.

14th May, 1828.

Mr. Zieber—I am pleased to find in the last Herald you have noticed the Licence Law—Public feeling is already on tip-toe regarding it—and so unpopular has it already become that the Ebony party with their wonted consistency and regard for truth have charged the Jackson party with the making of this law. But the public cannot be induced to believe this. It is well known that the House of Delegates, where all money bills must originate under the Constitution, had a very large majority of members who belong to the Adams party—The Adams party elected their Governor and council—They discarded one member of the council merely because he was a Jackson man, and regulated every matter to suit their party purposes. Finding however that this licence law, and many others almost as odious, have began to excite public scrutiny, and public indignation, the Adams party wish to screen themselves by charging the Jacksonians. But I am pleased to find this charge repelled with so much promptness, and inasmuch as they cast the first stone the Jacksonians are at full liberty to enter into the contest. I have understood that your notice of this law has given great offence—that it is a grievous offence to animadvert on the proceedings of members of the legislature, and an unpardonable sin to print the names of members in large capitals. Now, it appears to me, that if I should ever have the Honour of voting in the legislature on a bill it would give me pleasure to have my vote proclaimed on the house top—and I should neither be afraid nor ashamed of my vote, on any bill that might be proposed. I trust the time will not arrive when the proceedings of our public servants, and especially our Legislators, will be kept from public scrutiny and animadversion too when merited—a different course would amount to re-enacting John Adams' sedition law. That the licence law is frought with folly and injustice—that it is unfair and unequal in its operations, and that it is vague and uncertain in phraseology cannot be denied. It is indeed difficult to interpret it—and should it go fully into operation according to its broad and unlimited terms and expressions, scarcely any person in Maryland can act with safety without first taking out a licence as the law directs.

Yours respectfully.

Communication.

LICENSE LAW.—The examination of this Law is recommended to the serious consideration of a discerning public—it appears that scarcely an individual can be exempt from its provisions, whoever purchases, and sells, is subject to the Tax; a farmer who may lay out his money in the purchase of Corn, Wheat, Bacon or other articles, and sells it is liable to the Tax. Its operation in our city will be most distressing; numerous widows and children who reside in miserable tenements and selling small articles to aid in support of themselves and family, and who can scarcely support nature or pay rent, will by this oppressive law be compelled to go to the Poor House for support; by this means our taxes will be greatly augmented which already are most oppressive—no law which man could devise is more unjust—the man whose operations may be several hundred thousand dollars annually, pays no greater tax than the poorest individual in society—can there be justice, humanity or equality in such a law?

Baltimore Patriot.

The Rome Republican, a republican journal, published at Rome, Oneida county, N. Y. hitherto neutral in its presidential course has avowed its partiality for Gen. Jackson, in a pertinent address to the public.

MR. ADAMS' ECONOMY.

As the friends of Mr. Adams have boldly asserted, that his Administration has been the most economical that ever was in the country, we will institute a very brief comparison between the expenses of the three first years of this Administration and the three last years of Mr. Monroe's Administration.

MONROE.

Current expenditures, exclusive of military pensions and the payments of the Public Debt.

1822	$7,879,444 11
1823	8,003,566 07
1824	8,939,449 56
Total,	$24,822,459 74

ADAMS.

Current expenditures, exclusive of military pensions and the payments of the Public Debt.

1825	$10,249,529 18
1826	11,505,722 44
1827	11,752,515 61
Total,	$33,507,767 18
Deduct Monroe's from Adams'	24,822,459 74
☞	$8,685,307 44

Thus it appears, that Mr. Adams in the first three years of his administration has expended more than Mr. Monroe did, in the three last years of his administration, by more than EIGHT MILLIONS AND A HALF of dollars. ☞Those statements come from the books of the Departments at Washington—they come from the Records of the Government, and cannot be denied.☜

What has been the cause of this ENORMOUS INCREASE of expenditures? Both of the periods during which they occured, were in times of peace. In what way has Mr. Adams spent in three years, EIGHT MILLIONS SIX HUNDRED & EIGHTY FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS more than Mr. Monroe did, in the same space of time? The people of this country will be curious to hear this question answered. Will any friend of the present "economical" administration answer it? He would if he could.

Baltimore Republican.

From the Bangor, Maine, Republican.

WEST-INDIA TRADE.

The low prices, which our lumber brought in this market, and in Boston last year, were the natural consequence of a falling off of the prices of lumber in the West-India Islands, the greatest market of ultimate consumption for this article. It may be satisfactory for the friends of the National Administration—its opponents have long been apprized of the fact—to know why lumber is such a drug, that the lumbering business affords no profit; and cannot be carried on without great risk or loss. It may be a little humiliating, but not a little profitable to them, to be apprised, that their favourites Messrs. Adams and Clay—a greater trading firm (in the way of politics at least) than any in the eastern states, have been the sole cause of this decline in our trade.—And how?—By an order in Council of June 1825, the British government threw open certain ports in the West-Indies, to all nations, who would reciprocate in the liberal conditions of a proposed free intercourse. And six months were allowed for the acceptance of the proposed conditions; in default of which, total prohibition, or a heavy tariff on many important articles, among which was lumber, was to be levied. By proclamation, accepting the terms of the Order in Council, Mr. Adams might have rendered the benefits of this offer available to our citizens. Such, however, was the multiplicity of his engagements that he neglected to do it. And the consequence has been either entire exclusion of our lumber, or admission under such heavy duties as to render the trade of little value. The French government, too, in imitation of the English and on similar terms, threw open the ports of Martinique & Guadaloupe by an Ordinance of Feb. 1826. The President was informed of this by the French Consul, in June following. But the Ordinance was suffered to sleep in his Bureau, until a few weeks since, when General Smith of Baltimore dragged it out before the Senate, in consequence of the arrival at that port of two French vessels with cargoes, laded under the belief that our government could not have been so stupid as to neglect the offers of theirs. They were, however, obliged to turn back on account of the heavy duties exacted upon their cargoes in ports of the U. S. The trade in lumber lost to these islands has amounted to about $800,000 a year—equal to the whole lumber trade of Bangor.—The negligencies of this Administration and its mismanagement, have no where fallen more heavily than upon this part of the State of Maine. But the people—administration-men—bear it with all quietness and meekness of spirit—Their turbulence last year and that of their political friends, the manufacturers, urging a revised tariff—otherwise, an "American System," has resulted, in the house of representatives, in a duty of ten cents to the gallon, on imported molasses, almost the only article received in exchange for lumber.—This duty was first proposed in 1824, by that great friend and favorite of New-England—Henry Clay!—and if it pass the Senate, farewell to the lumbering business!—

From the Albany Argus.

Consistency of the Honourable H. C. Martindale (an Adams man.)

In his speech on the tariff bill, Mr. Martindale holds the following language:—

"Had my colleague been employed as an advocate, and actually been fed by British gold, he could not have done more for their interests. I make no imputations. I only speak of the necessary and fatal operation of the bill. But I must be allowed to say, what I conscientiously believe, that had a million of British gold been expended in this house, it could not have produced a more powerful effort than has actually been made here to procure the adoption of a measure, the direct and obvious tendency of which is to promote their interests."

And yet, after this sweeping denunciation, the consistent Mr. Martindale voted for the bill! This case is without a parallel, save the one furnished by the same gentleman, a year or two since, when he moved to strike out the first section of a bill, and then made a speech of two days against his own motion! OLD RIFLE.

Albany in N. York for Adams.

What are the evidences that the city of Albany will give an Adams majority in the fall? Why, truly, because, of the five supervisors, it has elected four friendly to Jackson, and the fifth, if he is for the coalition, was elected without opposition in a ward in which the Jackson alderman on a contest succeeded over the Adams candidate by more than two votes to one: and because also of the 21 town officers elected at this time, not more than 5 are in favour of the administration, and of these, 4 were nominated by the friends of Jackson & returned without opposition in Jackson wards. The only candidate of the coalition in the entire city, which has succeeded upon an opposition, is the collector in the fourth ward, which was owing to a division on that ticket among the republicans! If the republican friends of Andrew Jackson are united, and we have no reason to doubt it, there is not a ward in the city in which they will not succeed, and the majority in the city will not be less than five hundred. Ib.

We have received the first number of the "Republican Register," published by G. Williams & Co. at Hamilton, Madison county. The introductory editorial address abounds in sound political views, and exposes the anti-republican course pursued by Mr. Adams. It advocates, in a decided manner, and upon strong republican grounds, the election of Andrew Jackson. It will prove also a valuable local vehicle of information. Ib.

The Cloud thickening!—The Frankfort (Ky.) Argus publishes a certificate of six respectable citizens who state, that some time after the last Presidential Election, they heard Mr. Francis Johnson "give as a reason for his vote for Mr. Adams, that if Mr. Adams was elected President, Mr. Clay would be elected Secretary of State, but if Gen. Jackson was elected President, Mr. Clay would not be Secretary"—a Confession tantamount to Mr. Trimble's.

The "Frederick Citizen" (of Md.) charges Mr. Warfield (member of the H. of R. in the session of 1824–5) with having stated, soon after the Presidential Election, that he had had a conversation with Mr. Adams, at Mr. A's own request, at which Mr. A. satisfied his doubts about voting for him, and that he gave the casting vote of Maryland, by which Mr. A. was elected. The Editor of the Citizen dares Mr. Warfield to deny the charge—and in that case, pledges himself that "the testimony is at hand, fully & satisfactorily to establish the charges." This indeed a serious charge

Richmond Enq.

MR. ADAMS' BARGAINING—MORE PROOF.

☞ The vote of the free state of Maryland bartered away, through the arts and political cupidity of J. Q. Adams.

We stated in our last, and often intimated before, that we had in our possession, certain facts, which would fully establish the unwarrantable means resorted to by John Q. Adams, to obtain the exalted station which he now holds contrary to the wishes of a vast Majority of the people of the U. States, as we believe the ballot boxes ere long will prove. We comply with a request made, to submit them first in the form of queries, though they are to be regarded as direct and unequivocal allegations; and we are authorized to say, that if Mr. Warfield will dare to deny them, testimony is at hand, fully and satisfactorily to establish the charges therein involved. Without designing to indulge in comment at present, we will merely remark, that the people cannot and will not rest satisfied with silence on the part of Mr. Warfield—he must reply either negatively or affirmatively. A respect for our institutions and our rights, demands that this affair should undergo a close investigation. Private sympathy must be sacrificed on the holy altar of Patriotism. Mr. Adams is charged with tampering with an independent representative of the people—he is charged with laying a plan to seduce, that representative from the path of independence, and with carrying that plan into effect. If Mr. Warfield's conduct in yielding to the seductive arts of Mr. A. is censurable, the conduct of the seducer is a thousand fold more so. When the charge shall be proved by the testimony which is at hand, the measures of Mr. Adams punishment ought to be equal to the heinousness of his offence.

"Did not the Hon. Henry R. Warfield, state, after he came from the city of Washington, that shortly before the presidential election, he received a letter from Mr. Adams, requesting him to call and see him?

"Did he not say that after receiving a second letter, he called upon Mr. Adams?

Did he not say, that on his arrival into the presence of Mr. Adams, there were several members of Congress with other gentlemen present? Did he not say, that Mr. Adams told him he wished to have some private conversation with him?

Did he not say, that after he and Mr. Adams had retired, that Mr. Adams asked him whether he could not give him his vote?

Did he not say, that he replied, If you satisfy me upon some points, I will have no objections to give you my vote?

Did he not say, that after having had a good deal of conversation, upon leaving the room, Mr. Adams observed, that he hoped he had satisfied him?

Did he not say, that he gave him to believe he was perfectly satisfied?

Did he not say, that he gave the casting vote of the Stat of Maryland, by which Mr. Adams was elected?

And did he not say, that he could get any foreign appointment, but that it would not do for some time, inasmuch as it might lead to a suspicion of the manner in which things were conducted?

"All hail, New-Hampshire."—The Walpole Farmer's Museum of the 27th ult. has "hoisted the colors of Andrew Jackson and the Republican party." It had previously been a zealous Administration paper. In giving the motives of this change, the Editor says:—

"We conceive that the Administration party, notwithstanding the unwarrantable means they have used, have utterly failed to establish by testimony in any shape, the numerous charges they have preferred against General Jackson. For three years past, he has been the object of the vilest abuse, and we are free to acknowledge that we have contributed our share to the inglorious work, which we have done with false impressions and erroneous views."

☞ A writer in Moore's Journal, (a Mr. "Bob Tail,") challenges us to a bet, and offers to deposite one hundred or five hundred dollars in the banks at Keene or Charlestown, that Adams will get NINETY VOTES for President, at the next election. Verily, the Adams men are lowering their tone fast, to offer bets that Adams will get ninety when it requires one hundred and thirty-one votes to elect a President. This Bobtail'd correspondent of Moore's, must be a braver, or a more rash, man than many of his party to offer bets even at that rate; for not many of them would dare bet that Adams can get two thirds the necessary number of votes to elect him.—[N. H. Spectator.]

"BRITISH GOLD."

In the times of high party excitement between the Democrats and Federalists, among their criminations and recriminations of each other, they used talk of French influence, and British influence, of British Gold, and French Gold; and many a good, honest man of each party, we have no doubt, did really believe that his opponents were under improper foreign influence. But when the war came, and Federalists and Democrats found themselves fighting side by side in defence of their common country; when they thrown together in the same camp; in the same mess and came to know one anothers private feelings, they no longer misinterpreted one anothers public principles, and they could not but smile at their own weakness. From that time until this, we have heard no more of the Federalists being under the influence of British Gold, or of the Democrats being under that of French Gold. But now, the idle cant, which was never used but by designing men to gull the ignorant, is revided! Revided—not to be applied to the Democrats or the Federalists, but to the friends of JACKSON! Yes, of ANDREW JACKSON—of the Hero of N. Orleans—of the conqueror of Packenham!! And by whom is this idle tale got up? By the HARTFORD CONVENTIONISTS!!! Yes, the New Hampshire Journal, the mouth-piece of the Hartford Conventionists in New Hampshire, says,

"If British Gold can elect General Jackson, the Agents of Great Britain declare openly, that it shall not be wanted."

Now, is n't this enough to disgust every man of sense in the country?—And the idea too, of the British, of all people in the world, being in favor of Gen. Jackson! Why, they had as lief see the D—l President. Balt. Rep.

[COMMUNICATED.]

Good Sheep.

Mr. Editor—I had the pleasure of witnessing slaughtered, a few days ago, at the house of my old friend Col. J. C. Wilson, one of the finest Wethers I ever saw—it was of Ward's breed, four years old, and weighed 208 lbs.—Also, a ram lamb, Bakewell breed, one year old, which weighed 204 lbs. Should you deem the above worthy a place in your paper it may incite others to emulation and gratify

A Subscriber.

May 19th, 1828.

Violent Hail Storm.—We are indebted to a friend for the following extract of a letter dated, Potters Landing, Caroline Co. E. S. Md. May 8.

"We had one of the most destructive hail storms here, on the evening of the 6th inst. ever witnessed by our oldest people. Our crops of Rye and Wheat are much injured. Buildings, fences, orchards and timber, are prostrated. There are upwards of fifty houses blown down in this neighbourhood; the gardens are spoilt. The hail was so severe as to destroy many birds. Doves, partridges, robins, blackbirds, &c. have been found dead in great numbers. The Storm has broke for me upwards of one thousand panes of window glass. The whole neighbourhood has suffered in the same way. The loss in fact is immense. Whole orchards are swept. I hope it has not been general. In width here it was from four to six miles—its extent unknown."

Marvelous—most marvelous!—In the month of February last, a girl in Bainbridge, Alabama, was suspected of having given birth to and murdered an illegitimate child; nothing satisfactory, however, was proved against her and she left the place.—On 9th of April, some boys found the body of a child in a mill pond, with a part of the parietal and occipital bones of the head crushed, but the os frontis, (the bone of the forehead,) was perfect. These bones were entirely divested of flesh, and bleached perfectly white by the combined operation of water and air. The rest of the body was perfect. It was immediately conjectured that the body was that of the child above alluded to, and the female relative with whom the girl lived was suspected of being the murderer. She was accordingly brought to the place where the body lay. Now for the marvelous part of the story. We have said that the bones of the head were perfectly white, and that the frontal bone was both white and sound. As soon as the suspected murderer approached the body, this latter bone assumed a blood red appearance! "This blushing of the dry bone," says the account before us, "was as evident as if a milk-white handkerchief were stained with blood over one part while the other remained white." We should suspect this to be a plagiarism on the Canadian wonder-makers, were it not for the following certificate:

We do certify in the presence of Almighty God, that on the evening of the 9th of April this present month, we were assembled together at Nathaniel Futrell's shop in Bainbridge, to look at a child found by Wm. B. Rice and other boys on the same day, in Col. Willis' Mill pond. That the said child's head was all dissolved or in some way destroyed except the bones, which were of a perfectly white, bleached colour. That after the woman who was supposed to have had an agency in the death of the child came on the ground, a part of the front or forehead bone, say a place somewhat larger than a dollar, became red as blood, while the rest of the same bone, and all the other bones of the head, still continued of a dry bony whiteness.—Given under our hands this 11th day of April, 1828.

N. A. FUTRELL,
WM. CLAYTON,
L. BRYANT,
MARY ANN CLAYTON,
RACHEL FUTRELL,
SARAH WILLIAMS.

The United States and Turkey.—The N. Y. Courier states that the treaty between our Government and the Porte is fully confirmed; and letters at London state, that the terms are very favourable to America, as the Treaty was negociated during the angry excitement of the Porte against the European powers.

Annapolis, May 15.

Died on Sunday morning the 11th inst. the venerable Jeremiah Townley Chase, Esq.—Under the old Judiciary system, he presided as Chief Judge of the General Court of this State. On the re-organization of the Judiciary system, in 1806, he was selected as Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals, which office he held until a few years since, when he voluntarily retired from public life.

State of Maryland, sc.

Somerset County Orphans Court.
April 13th 1828.

§§§§§§§§§§ ON application of Eliza-
§§SEAL.§§ beth S. J. Evans, Adm'x. of §§§§§§§§§§ James Evans, late of Somerset county dec'd, it is ordered, that she give the notice required by law for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week, for the space of three successive weeks, in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans court of said county in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of James Evans late of Somerset county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th of November next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under my hand this 13st day of May, 1828.

E. S. J. EVANS, Adm'x. of J. Evans, dec'd.

May 20, 1828. k

We are authorized to announce
William Done, Esq.
as a Candidate for the next General Assembly of Maryland.
May 6, 1828. jw

We are authorized to announce
John C. Wilson, jr. Esq.
as a candidate to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.
May 13, 1828. mu

We are authorized to announce
Levin D. Jones, Esq.
as a candidate to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

We are authorized to announce
William H. Waters, Esq.
as a candidate to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

Village Herald.

"FEARLESS, FREE AND HONEST!"

PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., JULY 8, 1898. NO. 15.

PUBLISHED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. 1.

THE CORNCOPIA.

Blending the useful with the moral.

(From the Episcopal Watchman.)

THE BLESSED LAND.

"The inhabitants shall not say, I am sick."

Not sick—Shall throbbing brows no more
With nameless anguish sway?
No, more the ebbing life-blood pour
Cold currents through the heart?
Fortured nerve with racking pain
Up sudden madness thrill?
Nor strive the powerless limbs in vain
Their office to fulfil?
Is there no weak, nor palsied hand,
Nor agonizing breast—
Where Book of Mercy! is that land
Which thus the page has blest?

Dwells there no sickness of the heart
Within that favoured bound?
No pleasures with its pinioned dart
The unwary youth to wound?
No hope deferred, the soul to harm?
No joy on parting wing?
No love with fickle smile to charm,
With false embrace to sting?
Oh glorious world!—from life of time,
From fears and changes free,
Why should we shrink to seek that clime,
Though Death our passport be?

I WATCH FOR THEE.

By Mrs. C. B. Wilson.

I watch for Thee—when, parting day
Sinks on the earth a long-ray'd ray;
When his last blushes, o'er the rose
A richer tint of crimson throws;
And every flower's leaves are curled
Like Beauty shrinking from the world;
When silence reigns, o'er lawn and lea
Then, dearest Love! I watch for thee!

I watch for thee—when eve's first star
Shines dimly in the heavens afar,
And twilight's mute and shadowy gray,
Upon the lake's broad waters play!
When not a breeze, or sound is heard,
To startle evening's lonely bird,
Hushed! as eve the humming bee—
Then dearest Love! I watch for thee!

I watch for thee—when, on the wings
Of childhood, slumber gently lies;
When sleep has stilled the noisy mirth
Of playful voices, round our hearth,
And each young cherub's fancy glows
With dreams that only childhood knows,
Of pleasures past—or yet to be—
Then dearest Love! I watch for thee!

I watch for thee! Hope of my heart!
Returning from the crowded mart,
Of wearily toil, and wordly strife
And all the busy scene of life;
Then, Mirth, brow of brightness wear,
A moment's voice, the shade of care,
My smile, amid that gloom, shall be
The rainbow of the storm to Thee!

Copartnership.—Mr. John Lenard, of Oakham, thereby gives notice to his numerous friends, that, on Wednesday of last week, he entered into copartnership, "for better for worse," for life, with Miss Mary Burr, of Xes R——s. Printers in this state, and throughout the Union, will confer a favour upon me and my friends, by publishing the above in their respective papers."

Alas! I think it would have been hard
If he'd not taken her then,
For if she is disposed to Lean-hard
Why he must bear the Bur-then.

FROM ZION'S HERALD.

LOVE OF ADMIRATION.

This principle of applause is an inherent principle in the human breast, deep, powerful and always active.—It moves when every other motive fails, and has perhaps produced more great men, more useful men, and more "heels of noble daring," than all other causes united. Its power is absolute, and its empire universal. It was this which built "that great city, Babylon"—reared the pyramids—traced the vast labyrinth, and in the days of Alexander, conquered the world.

Like many other bad causes, it often produces good effects. It is one of the strong cords which binds society together—and will not be broken till the millennium. Look at any community remarkable for virtue! New-England for instance—here is a great deal of honesty, industry, learning and enterprise—but take away the love of applause, and how much of these good things would remain? It would strike a death blow at the virtues of all but the feeble few who act upon principle—and a small number it is to be feared they would be.

Look into the family circle; here its effects are so pleasing, that its real nature is forgotten, and it is accounted a virtue. The wife with untiring zeal plies the needle, or moves the spindle, the husband, and feels amply rewarded by the approving smile of her husband;—and he, for the same reward bears patiently the trials of business, while the children, animated by the desire of parental favor, press through the difficulties which meet them at school. It would be a pity to take away this principle, except a better were to be substituted; for it would cut the sinews of industry. Who would toil for riches, if no credit came with them? Who would climb the hill of science, if the temple of fame was not on the sum-mit?

When we see so many excellent results flowing from this principle, and consider how much it does, and always has done for the good of mankind, if we had no guide but reason, we should hardly be willing to call it an evil passion. But the scriptures throw a flood of light on this subject. Here a nobler standard is presented, and we are taught that his religion is vain, who "loves the praise of man more that the praise of God." Here we learn, that this desire of pleasing which operates so happily in the family and in society at large, is sinful, unless it springs from a supreme desire to please God. This may seem to many "a hard saying," and they may be ready to exclaim "who can hear it?" Let such remember the words of our Saviour, "Blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me."

But if the desire of applause does some good in the world, it does far more injury. It makes men voluntary and perpetual slaves to one another,—and a more grievous servitude it often proves, than any which ever

[illegible]

THE DOG.

Leonard Zollkoffer, a Swiss Nobleman, who went to Paris on the conclusion of the Swiss Union, as Ambassador, had a large dog, which on his departure he had ordered to be shut up for eight days; the dog was so fond of his master, that he followed him all the way to Paris, (400 miles) and on the day of audience made his way, all covered with dust and heaped up, near the feet upon his master. In the family castle, at Thuvings, there is a painting of the story.—The dog is the only animal that dreams; he and the elephant the only animals that understand books; the dog is the only animal that has been brought to speak. Leibnitz bears witness in his History of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, to a shepherd in Saxony, that he could speak distinctly thirty words. A friend came to Morsat, the famous French philosopher, and entreated him as a mark of friendship, to attend his hound who had broken his leg. Morsat cured him, and in about ten days after, as he was at breakfast, heard a whining and scratching at his door, and on opening it, behold his old patient, with another dog that had broken his leg! making signs to be healed. Dogs are put to an amazing variety of uses. In Otaheite, they are fattened on bread and fruit for eating; in Kamschatka they are used for drawing sledges; in Upper India for beasts of burden; in Guinea as mules & pack-horses; by the Jesse Islanders for fishing. Blumenbach rather thinks that all the varieties of dogs do not come from one original sort. [London paper.

Singular effect of Lightning.—The ship New York on a late voyage from New York to London, encountered a severe storm of thunder and lightning. There was a passenger on board, very old and corpulent, whose legs were so paralyzed, that for three years he had not walked half a mile, and when since his embarkation has not been able to stand. After the discharge of the lightning, which passed close to the place where the aged cripple was lying, every body was astonished to see him rise, pace up and down the deck, and walk about for a long time, as if nothing had ever ailed him. At first his head was a little affected; but that soon went off; while the benefit which he had experienced in his limbs remained. He continued to use them freely during the passage, and on the arrival of the ship in port, he walked with ease to the place of his residence.

[London Mech. Mag.

[illegible]

RAIN IN A CLEAR SKY.

In a work of De Veza, Hinbonh, [illegible] after the manner of the ancient philosophers, [illegible] they, we meet the following pretty story: "When Pindarus, the lyric poet, was at Sparta into the south of Italy, he consulted the oracle of Apollo, and was informed he should leave the region he was in to inhabit, by the fall of a plentiful shower out of a clear sky. Full of doubt and anxiety at this answer and unable to meet any one who could interpret it to him, he took his departure, grieved in his mind, and ascended a mountain in the region, to contemplate his city. This made him fall to considering the oracle more narrowly, when, which he came to the conclusion that she had undertaken a foolish project and that the gods meant to tell him, not that it was impossible to be done, but that it is a thing which is clear, and yet the main out of a plentiful now seemed to him a matter impossibility. Tired out with the anxiety his thoughts arising from this conclusion, he had laid his head in the lap of his wife who had come with him, and soon fell asleep. Upon waking, he lay for a long time silently in her lap, she kept looking upon his face, till thinking of the disappointment he had met with, and perils he had yet to undergo, she began to weep bitterly, for that the tears fell plentifully upon him, and awoke him. Astonished at the unexpected shower of his wife, he related his dream to her, and she, in joy, for his wife's name was Nephe, signifies cloud, and thus he had arrived at the region where he was, to settle. The next night he dreamed that a Nymph came to him and said, "Pindarus, go to the Pythian games, and the victory of those games, and he and his posterity reigned in that quarter of Italy, as you may see in Virgil."

(From the London Mechanic's Magazine.)

SHEEP.

It is the common practice to place the hives, where the sun has the greatest influence, upon a southern or eastern wall, and let them remain in the same situation during the winter. For the summer this is all right, but for the winter, it would be better, they should be placed where the sun never appears. It is not so much the degree of cold as the sudden change in the elevations, that does the mischief. The sun is sometimes powerful, even in the depth of winter; thus the bees are exposed, in the morning, to a temperature of the extreme cold of the night. Besides, when lying in a torpid state, which they do during the cold weather, they do not rouse so much food, and I am led to believe that the cold is not so excessive during the day, if the hives are placed in shade during the day, but even allowing the reverse, still I think as the degrees of cold are less variable, the north side of the house or wall is the preferable situation during the winter. Nor should the bees be removed to a warmer place, as trees have so far shot forth their buds that they may find a sufficient repast.

I think those hints may be useful to those who would wish to become practical apiarists. My knowledge of the matter is theoretical, but I have friends who follow the practice.

R. H.

A NEW AND CHEAP PAINT.

More impervious to the weather than common paint.

Take of unslacked lime a quantity sufficient to make two gallons of white wash when slacked—mix it with a due quantity of water—add to it 24 lbs. of coarse sugar, 2 lbs. of rice, 2 lbs. of salt—The exact proportion of each will be best ascertained by experiment. This when applied as a paint, appears perfectly hard and glossy—by mixing either ivory black or lamp black with it, the appearance of stone may be imitated as well as white, and it will bear to be washed with water. This wash is now almost altogether used at the south for houses, fences, &c. [N. Y.-Com. Adv.

Another Revolutionary Hero departed.

The time now rapidly approaches, when an individual whose fortune it was to have been engaged in the memorable struggle for independence, will be regarded, from his rarity, as the object of much curiosity and veneration. He will be revered not so the subject of much veneration. The youngest of them have now reached the autumn of life, and they are falling around and like leaves from the fading forest. Among others, we are compelled to record the death of Isaac Van Wert, who died at the residence of his father, and far from being the least meritorious of the most deserving class of revolutionary heroes, he was distinguished in the youthful trio evinced in detecting the artifices of their prisoner, and their noble resistance to his tempting offers of rewards, and inducements, if they would but be willing to men in their condition, entitle their memories to the everlasting gratitude of their countrymen. It is on account of their fidelity, the whole war had greater influence upon its termination, and one can scarcely look back without shuddering at the reflection how near we were to the brink of ruin, and how near we were to the enjoyment of all by the patriotism and firmness of these yeomen Mr. Van Wert died in Greensburgh, near Tarrytown, where he resided for some time and been occupied in the employment of husbandry. He maintained a modest and unpretending character, and he leaves upon his death-bed the Paulding monument was mentioned to him, he requested that no such memorial might be placed over his remains.—Troy Register.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Joshua Hitch against Thomas Robertson I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit Part of a tract of land called Nelsey, containing 15 acres, more or less, lying and being in Somerset county, "and on the county road which leads from Salisbury to Quantico Mills, and now occupied by Abigail V. Cox, which I shall proceed to sell on Saturday the 14th July next, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. on the premises, for cash, to satisfy the aforementioned writ and costs.

JOSHUA BRITTAIN, Shff.

June 24. ts

Notice to Bill Posters.

[illegible]

Baltimore, 6th mo. 24.

VALUABLE PROPERTY

AT PRIVATE SALE.

THE subscriber offers at sale the FARM, situated at the mouth of Wicomico Creek in Somerset county, Md. containing about 300 acres and known by the name of "Ripple's Destiny." The improvements are an excellent two-story frame house, necessary out-buildings—with a orchard containing nearly 1000 trees—Also, a good apple orchard. Vessels of a large burden can come within 50 yards of the house.

☞ The crops of corn and wheat on the farm will be sold with the land.—There are about 170 acres of the former and of the latter about forty bushels were sown.

For further particulars and terms apply to

JOSHUA MORRIS.

May 20, 1898.

FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber is desirous of disposing of his real estate, being and lying in Worcester county, Md. and situated on Divider Creek. The landed estate consists of 200½ or more acres. The improvements are a large TENEMENT, with a good SAW and GRIST MILL, both in excellent order. A so, a young orchard of choice fruit. The land is in a good state of cultivation.

There is, on one part of the above property, an abundance of Iron Ore, which would warrant the erection of a Forge, and prove an object of value to a purchaser acquainted with, and calculated for, carrying on the business.

The terms of sale will be—one third down; and 2 years for the payment of the balance. For further particulars apply to

JOHN MORRIS.

April 22 tf

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street,

BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Old and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD.

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1898. mw

PROPOSALS

For publishing in the City of Philadelphia, Pa.

THE PRACTICAL

FARMER'S MAGAZINE,

OR A

Agricultural and Literary Gazette.

THE FARMER'S MAGAZINE is designed to contain instructive and entertaining theoretic Sources relative to the management and management of remarkable Farms, sources of culture, manures, the Breed of Stock, farming utensils, labourers, dairies, &c.; Agricultural Improvements; drawings and descriptions of useful Implements; Illustrations and reviews of such publications as may tend to the interests of the Husbandman; improvements in the breed of Domestic Animals; accounts of rural Sports and Domestic trees, shrubs, vines, plants, seeds and grains, as are considered necessary or useful for subsistence, comfort or ornament, with the mode of culture, and treatment, growth, requisite kinds of soil, &c.; and in short, whatever may tend to increase the profit and add to the pleasure and advance the Rural Economy of the country.

Insertion will always be given to such Rural Communications as may be sent to be communicated for publication, by the several Agricultural Societies of this and other states.

A Land Register will contain as far as practicable, a list of farms, which are now, or may be, on the market, with a description of their size, situation, quality and such other particulars as may be deemed Useful.

Space will be afforded the Solid and Sterling Beauties of Literature; the useful arts and sciences, Chemistry, Natural History and Philosophy; Reports of the Markets in the principal Seat Ports, &c. &c.

TERMS.

The Farmer's Magazine will be published semi-monthly, the price is Three dollars, payable on the receipt of the first number. That form and size has been adopted, which is deemed most convenient for binding, and preserving of the paper, the handy double type, (entirely new,) and the general execution of the work will be achieved at the time of publishing the first of the Publisher, will gratefully its patrons.

☞ Address (post paid) Thomas C. Clarke, Publisher, the Proprietors, No. 48, Market St. Philda.

May 17

Village Herald.

"FEARLESS, FREE AND HONEST!"

PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., JULY 8, 1898. NO. 15.

PUBLISHED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. 1.

[illegible]

the service of the United States, for the term of Six months. They were placed under the immediate command of Colonel Pigeon, and distributed in the posts in the Creek nation—Outlaw troops, the six who were afterwards tried and executed at Mobile, for mutiny and desertion, were a part. It was notorious to the troops themselves, and to the whole country, at the time they were mustered into service, that it was for the term of six months. The fact had been announced to the troops in the general order calling them into service. The government of the United States, at the time they entered the service, and long subsequent to it, so understood it; for they have regularly paid for SIX months in advance, and there is no official evidence that it is not even now so understood. The master rolls were required by the Department of War at the time, and show on their face that they were mustered into service for SIX months. The pay rolls show that they were paid for SIX months. In a letter from Mr. Eaton, the Secretary of War, dated Oct. 19th, 1814, and among the documents laid before the Senate, he says, "In reference to this very detachment, there is in service from the State 1000 men at the posts in the Creek country. They were organized for SIX months, and have been three months yet to serve. Here the Department of War were distinctly informed that the SIX months, mentioned in the Pay rolls, meant "six months," and that they had nearly three months to serve. Take it for granted, with the Secretary of War, that the Pay rolls, on the face, the most violent partisan will no longer contend, that the "six months" mentioned in the contract of Capt. Pipkin's Company, were bound to serve only three instead of six months, as he has been unjustly assailed; I hereby comply with your request, in giving information of the exact time, which I have served in the service of the United States, with the service and execution of these unfortunate men, so far as I have been enabled to gather it from the Pay rolls.

On the 11th of January, 1814, the Secretary of War, wrote to the Governor of Tennessee, "Authorize him to supply Militia drafts, or by volunteers, any deficiency which may arise in the Militia division under the command of Major General Jackson, and without referring on this head to the Department. It may be well that your Excellency should consult Gen. Pinckney on such occasions as he can best judge of the whole number necessary to the attainment of the object." Here was a discretionary power given to the Governor of Tennessee, to call out such a portion of the Tennessee militia, without waiting for further specific orders from the Department of War, if he might consider such an emergency, or deficiency of troops under Gen. Jackson's command. This discretion vested in the Governor was exercised, with the exception of the regiment, that it might be well for him to call out, "Authorize him to supply any deficiency of troops under Gen. Jackson's command." This discretion vested in the Government was unlimited that a copy of said order was by him transmitted, shortly after its date, by mail, to the War Department: that he has reason to believe, that the detachment required by said order to be called out was regularly mustered, agreeably to order, into service, in the month of June, 1814, and that said detachment, to his knowledge, was put under the command of Col. Pipkin, of the Tennessee Militia. And further he saith not.

WILLIE BLOUNT,
Late Governor of Tennessee.

I, Hiram Bobo, Justice of the Peace in the County of Montgomery, State of Tennessee, hereby certify that the foregoing deposition was made and subscribed before me this 1st day of March, 1828.

HIRAM BOBO, J. P.

House of Representatives, April 11th, 1828.

Dear Sir—I desire to be informed at what precise period, the rumour of peace first reached General Jackson at New Orleans in 1815. I have understood that you, on your return from the British fleet to which you had gone to effect an exchange of prisoners, brought the first intelligence which the General received on that subject. If from recollection or any memoranda in your possession you can give me the information, it will be esteemed a favor.

I have the honor to be very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES K. POLK.

Hon. Edward Livingston.

Mr. Livingston's Answer.

April 11th 1828.

Dear Sir—My recollection of the date at which the English account of the signature of the treaty of Ghent, was brought to New Orleans, carries it to the eighteenth or nineteenth of February, 1815.

I was sent to the British fleet to treat for the exchange of prisoners, about the first of February, and was detained there until the fall of Fort Boyer; just as I was leaving the Admiral's ship the Brazen, sloop of war, came in sight, and I remained until she came up. She brought the first news of the treaty, and I arrived with it at N. Orleans on the 18th or 19th.

My recollection of these dates is strengthened by that of a gentleman, now a visiter at this place, who accompanied me on the mission. The account brought by the Brazen was a Gazette, not an official account of the treaty, and I ought perhaps to add, that very soon after receiving this account General Jackson wrote either to General Lambert or to Admiral Cochrane (I think the former) requesting to know whether he considered the account sufficiently authentic to justify a cessation of hostilities, to which I think no answer was received until after the eighth of March, when advices were received to induce the General to believe, that the treaty had been ratified at Washington, altho' even then, he had received no despatches from the Government announcing that event.

I hope this may be a satisfactory answer to your note of this date,

And am with great respect, your most obedient servant, EDW. LIVINGSTON.

The Hon. Mr. Polk.

From the Richmond Enquirer.

Plain matters of facts—undenied and undeniable.—No. II.

ONE AT A TIME.

"CONSTRUCTIVE JOURNIES."

Mr. John H. Pleasants, senior Editor of the Whig, has promptly followed up the President's example. He presented his accounts for doing nothing, containing the following item:

"Department of State,

To John H. Pleasants, Dr.

To this sum for voyages out and home,	$900
To actual expenditures, in travelling expenses and board from the time of leaving Richmond on the 19th of April, 1825, to the 28th May, of the same year, in which interval I was seeking, from Baltimore to Boston, the means of getting to Buenos Ayres,	$247
To expenses on my return from New York to Richmond,	$37
To per diem allowance, at $6, from the 16th April to the 23d August, is 126 days inclusive,	$756
	$1,940

Approved: H. Clay—7th December, 1826.

This account was approved by the Secretary without vouchers."

Mr. Pleasants never was in South America—He went to Liverpool for his own gratification. The governor had nothing for him to do there. Mr. Clay allowed this item, with a full knowledge of its falsehood. Here then, Mr. Clay knowingly lent his aid to vitiate the public records by the admission of another falsehood—another "Constructive Journey"—Can such vitiated records possess the properties of evidence? As it regards J. H. Pleasants himself, this fact would not be worth notice—He is too insignificant for notice. But it is extremely important, when sanctioned by Mr. Clay, and the treasury officers. It goes still farther to destroy the sanctity and credibility of the treasury records, and shows the dangerous tendency of a precedent, set by the President, especially when plundering the public treasury, by a fiction, is the object. It shows the ready reception, and extension of this nefarious precedent throughout all the branches of the treasury Department—all this may be in strict harmony with J. H. Pleasants' notions of morals. But can the American patriot, who loves his country, and its cruelly abused institutions, tolerate such examples, tho' sanctioned by a corrupt Administration? To whom should the people of the U. S. look for purity of morals, for a scrupulous adherence to truth—for disinterested patriotism? For the safe keeping of the public money? Surely, first to their President, and then to the next highest officers. When all these are found wanting, and the people continue to honour them with their confidence, what becomes of the Republic? Is it not lost in the corruption of public and private morals? In confounding all distinctions between virtue and vice? How much worse then is the conduct of J. Q. A.—in vitiating your treasury records, than J. H. P. for an attempt to obtain money, from the treasury, and by a "safe precedent?" a suggestio falsi, in this adult stage of life too, he sets himself up, as the almost rigid censor of public and private morals.

Here then, is one brief sketch of the public morals, of the professed administration moralists, the honored secretary of the most moral Anti-Jackson-conventionists!!! The lauded supporter of the morals of the most corrupt administration!—Could a better selection be made for such a purpose? Could $1940 be better disposed of, than in a gratuity to the trusty labourer in the vineyard—Given for doing nothing, under the false pretension of having done something for the public? Now, who makes the best figure in this "plain matter of fact" portrait? J. Q. A. or J. H. P.?—Is not J. Q. A. the more to blame of the two? Ought not more to have been expected from him? For the present, here let the comparison rest between them.

QUÆRIST.

From the Boston Statesman.

The Contrast.—On the 17th of November, 1814, Mr. John Q. Adams, then our minister at Ghent, wrote to Mr. Leavitt Harris in Russia, a letter from which the following are extracts: "The defence of Baltimore has "given us little more to be proud of than "the demonstration against it has afforded "to our enemy. Prevost's retreat from Platts"burg has been more disgraceful to them "than honourable to us, and Wellington's "veterans, the fire eater Brisbane and the "fire brand Cockburn, have kept the rawest "of our militia in countenance, by their ex"pertness in the art of running away. The "general issue of the campaign is yet to "come, and there is too much reason to ap"prehend that it will be unfavourable to our "side." "Divided among ourselves, more in "passions than interests, with half the nation "sold by their prejudices and their igno"rance to our enemy, with a feeble and pe"nurious government, with five frigates for "a navy, and scarcely five efficient regiments "for an army, how can it be expected that "we should resist the mass of force which "that gigantic power has collected to crush "us at a blow." It was in such discouraging language, and such flings against our "feeble and penurious government," that Mr. Adams indulged, in a day when every true patriot would have nerved himself the firmer in the service and defence of his country—and it was in that day, when disaster, according to this terroist, was so impending over our homes, that he charged our "feeble and penurious government" with sixty-two thousand six hundred and forty four dollars for two years service!

Mark the contrast! Andrew Jackson, in that day of peril, instead of grasping every possible cent, and more than every legal cent, from the reduced coffers of the country, expended all his personal funds, and pledged his private fortune towards raising the means of defending his country. Instead of accusing his government of feebleness and penurity, and holding out the desponding and disgraceful language of fear and submission, he raised the banner of his country, and invited to its defence, by the most elevated examples of constancy, devotion and courage, the brave volunteers of the west; showing himself at every point of danger, exciting all to the noble discharge of their duty; passing days of fatigue and exertion and sleepless nights, in preparing for the gallant resistance which the invader afterwards met with at his hands and the hands of his undaunted compatriots; and appearing, in the midst of the conflict, in that eventful and trying hour, at the head of his troops, holding to all this encouraging and animating language, "Remember that our watchword is victory or death; our country must and shall be defended: we will enjoy our liberty or perish in the last ditch."

Such is the language, and such the deeds, of the man, who is now haunted down by the friends of the diplomatic candidate with every epithet, and charged with every crime, that scurrility or malignity can invent. Let the country choose between them.

From the Frederick (Md.) Citizen, of June 27.

The Franking Privilege—Much has been said lately on both sides about the abuse of the franking privilege, by those entitled to its exercise. An instance has come under our knowledge, which we notice on account of the circumstances attending it. An enormous package bearing the frank of Mr. Henry Clay, was sent to a clergyman, an eminent professor of one of the Catholic Semminaries in this county, accompanied by a letter, as we are informed, from Mr. Clay, requesting the professor to circulate the contents of the package freely among the people. It proved to be a bundle of the North Carolina address in favour of the administration, the authorship of which is ascribed to Mr. Gaston of that state. Prefixed to the address is an artfully written preface, setting forth that the author, "Mr. Gaston, was educated at the Georgetown College, in the District of Columbia, by the Rev. Mr. Plunkett of the Catholic church, of which Mr. Gaston is a pious and zealous member." The preface continues to remark that Mr. Adams' imputed hostility to the Catholics is a perversion of his real sentiments, or Mr. Gaston would not be found among his supporters, &c., all very ingeniously and artfully devised to excite the credulity and vanity of the Catholic reader. This brief notice of the preface will impart an idea of its designed object to the discerning reader.—But it appears, that ingeniously as it was devised, direct and frank as was Mr. Clay's request, the reverend gentleman was far from receiving this mark of Mr. Clay's favour as a compliment or honor. On the contrary, we understand that the professor wrote Mr. Clay a letter couched in genteel but pointed rebuke. Mr. Clay must be a man of the most unblushing assurance, to attempt to enter the secluded haunts of literature and piety, and entice their peaceful devotees to leave the altar and the desk and become his political horn-blowers. He would make the classic shade of our seminaries political bear gardens, and convert every son of science and religion into a runner to-and-fro, nay he would, as old John Adams said of families high in power, "annihilate heaven and earth rather than be thwarted in his designs." Oh, temporal Oh mores!

N. B.—Mr. Clay being in the habit of throwing his correspondence before the public, would perhaps have no objection to the publication of the Professor's letter. Hope I don't intrude!

Massachusetts in a bad way.—By a statement of the State Treasurer of Massachusetts, it appears that the Commonwealth owed the sum of 76,237 dollars, and that the cash in the Treasury was only 4,564 dollars. The Treasurer states, "that without an immediate supply, he must in a very few days be under the necessity of stopping payment." Why don't they go to a public dinner, and apply the profits to [illegible] the State? When Daniel was to be dined there was no want of supplies. N. Y. Inq.

The Last Legislature of Maryland.

Shameful Extravagance!

LET THE PEOPLE LOOK TO IT!!

The extravagance of our state government, is a subject which claims the attention, and interests the people of the state immediately. We ask an attentive perusal of the following of every reader, and also a further examination of the subject matters by our correspondents.

"On referring to the votes and proceedings of the last house of delegates, I find the following at page 437.

Mr. Thomas of Cecil, offered the following preamble and order for consideration:

Whereas by a resolution of the legislature at its present session, the governor and council were directed to furnish the general assembly with a statement of the money paid to each of the several persons employed to record the chancery papers: And whereas a report has been made, showing that the following sums were paid, (to wit:)

To William D. Beal for recording since 1826,	$3,891 38
George Brown for do. do.	3,863 48
Isaac Hines, for do. do.	3,889 26
Henry Hobbs, for do. do.	3,558 54
Joseph Mayo, for do. do.	3,890 40
Thomas Culbreth, for superintending the work,	5,117 26
Henry Hobbs for recording platts,	976
Joseph Mayo for indexing,	100
	$25,586 26

After reading this item of public expenditure, let no man wonder how it happens the public treasury is exhausted. Twenty-five thousand five hundred and eighty-six dollars and twenty-six cents, taken from the State treasury and given away by the Executive to a few political friends. We say given away, for how could those men fairly earn this enormous sum of money in the short space of about eighteen months, the time for which we learn they were engaged in this work. The most outrageous item of all is the five thousand one hundred and seventeen dollars and twenty-six cents, given to Thomas Culbreth as superintendent. Mr. Culbreth receives as Clerk of the Council, $1500 per year—and yet we find the Executive giving him this enormous sum in addition. Can it be possible he could have had leisure to earn this money, and still perform his duties as Clerk? Such extravagant expenditures are really provoking. The farmers of this county labour hard the whole year round, and are glad to find both ends meet at the close of the year. The best "superintendents" or overseers can be had at $200 or $300 a year, and they are satisfied if able to clothe and feed themselves and family. The mechanic labours diligently and he too is cheerful and contented when able to keep out of the Sheriff's and Constable's hands. And yet these classes of society are to be taxed to enable the Executive to gratify the insatiable appetites of a few favorites. The Adams party in the State seem disposed to copy closely after the Administration of the General Government. It appears by public documents that in three years Mr. Adams' Administration has expended six millions of dollars more than were expended in a similar length of time by Mr. Monroe. When the Adams Governor and Council of this State were elected, the public treasury was full to overflowing, and yet in the short space of three years it has become totally bankrupt. No wonder the Adams party in our late Legislature were so anxious to pass the licence law or some other odious tax bill. They thought, perhaps if the public treasury could be sirly filled, no question would be asked, and the people none the wiser about the manner in which their money was expended. If the people tamely submit to those outrageous pilferings and oppressions, they are unworthy of the right of self-government. What sirs, a freeman work and worry, toil and sweat to enable himself and family to live; and yet submit to the government of a party who are impudently dividing the public money among themselves. We ask our fellow citizens to look to those things before it is too late. No man dare deny our statements, the record stares him in the face.

Citizen.

MR. ICHABOD BARTLETT.

The N. Hampshire Patriot reminds Mr. Bartlett of some of the unsavory sentiments, which he (even Mr. I. B.) himself formerly expressed about the "strictest economy" of the present Administration. Now, his cry is that "the system of economy and accountability was never more perfect from the origin of our government, than at the present period;" that all which the maligants say to the contrary is nothing but "causeless excitements," "false alarms" & "imaginary evils." Very differently indeed did the aforesaid I. B. express himself on the floor of the H. of R. on Dec. 28, 1826, when he exclaimed:

"I believe that with all our professions of economy, it will be found, upon examination, that there is not a government on earth, where the public money is distributed with a more loose and lavish hand, than it is among us."

At the same time he declared, he had a resolution on the subject prepared, which he had "hitherto been restrained from offering to the House"—But since, his "resolution" has failed him, and he is a stickler for the other side of the House.

Why it is that Mr. B. is now touched with a very different conviction, remains to be proved.—But his mind seems to be of so singular a construction that the more the proofs accumulate upon it, the weaker is their effect. Since Dec. 1826, we have seen the Panama Ministers return from an unsuccessful pursuit of the Congress of Tacubaya—more constructive Journies, paid for than were ever performed—one of the voters of Mr. Adams (viz. Mr. Cook) rewarded by a secret mission, to be kept carefully out of the view of the people, when such a mission had been substantially put to sleep for a twelvemonth, and when every alleged necessity for it was removed by the crippled situation of the Mexican fleet—These and a variety of other abuses had been developed—proofs had been accumulated of the loose and lavish manner in which the public money had been squandered away—and yet this said I. B. can now have the intrepidity to cant about the perfect economy of the present administration.

Take one solitary case—Mr. Rochester of the state of N. York—He was appointed Secretary of the Panama Mission—He [illegible] received pay [illegible] before he was called to the public service—He went then in search of the Congress—he could not find it—and for that unavailing [illegible] paid—next [illegible] appointed [illegible] Charge d'affaires to Guatimala [illegible] N. York [illegible] Savannah [illegible] probably more than [illegible] of the public money—He arrives just in time to aid his friends of the Coalition in their demonstration upon N. York—Call you this case an evidence of the perfect economy of the administration?—Never in this country has the public money been distributed, with a more loose and lavish hand!

But we have another diplomatic case on a rather larger scale—the Mission to London—In little more than three years, Mr. A. has had three ministers and two Charge d' Affaires—Messrs. King, Gallatin and Barbour, an outfit to each of $9,000—home-fit to Mr. King's son for about 8 weeks administration [illegible] $4,500—to young Mr. Lawrence, present Charge, say $4,500 more—Outfits and Charge-fits say $30,000—to which add their Salaries, Secretaries, clerks, &c.—and we shall have probably a sum of considerably more than $75,000, during Mr. Adams' term—Credit it by the loss of the W. India trade—and is this the "strictest economy?"—or "the loose and lavish hand" with which the Public money is squandered?

R. Enquirer.

GENERAL JACKSON.

Much has been said of General Jackson's disposition to disregard the laws of his country, when they thwart his purpose. There is one scene of his life which his enemies studiously conceal. It is the court scene in New Orleans, where Judge Hall imposed upon him a fine of one thousand dollars for contempt.

To save the city, he had found it necessary to resort to martial law. Although rumors of peace had reached him, he knew not but they were put forth by the enemy for the purpose of lulling him to security, for, though dreadfully defeated, they were still hovering on the coast, with a force much stronger than his. He deemed it necessary, to maintain all his precautions until those rumours were confirmed by the most authentic intelligence.—He had arrested a Frenchman for a violation of martial law, and Judge Hall, of the United States Court, issued a writ of habeas corpus, and attempted to rescue him from custody. The General had the Judge himself arrested, and sent beyond his lines.

But authentic news of peace was received two days after, and martial law abolished.—The Judge returned and resumed his functions. He immediately summoned Jackson to appear before him, to answer for contempt in not obeying the writ and imprisoning the Judge. The General prepared a statement of facts in vindication, which the Judge refused to hear, but made the rule absolute.—It was returnable on the thirty-first of January. The people were much excited in favor of their heroic leader, and crowded the hall of Justice. How did General Jackson behave? Did he go to the court at the head of his officers, in the pride and pomp of war? Did he go with his sword and epaulets, in the proud gait of an exulting conqueror?—No: every thing military is lain aside; he comes unattended, in the garb of a plain citizen and has almost penetrated the crowd and reached the bar of the court before he is discovered. At once, the hall rings with the acclamation of a thousand voices. Does the General avail himself of this enthusiasm, to drag the Judge from his bench and trample on the ermine of Justice? Does he even smile on the assembled multitude, or give them the least encouragement to insult the Judge or arrest him in the discharge of his functions? Far from it. He mounts a bench, and with earnest entreaty begs them to desist, and for his sake, for their own and their country's sake, not to interrupt the administration and execution of those laws, and that constitution, for which they had toiled and bled. The Judge, alarmed at the popular fervor, tells the marshal it is not safe to proceed, and directs him to adjourn the court. Jackson turns to him and bids him to proceed. "There is no danger here," says he, "there shall be none—the same arm which protected this city against the invaders of our country, will shield and protect this court, or perish in the attempt!"

Is there any thing more sublime in history? See a military chieftain, at the head of a victorious army, surrounded by a devoted people, shielding from insult and outrage, the very Judge who is passing sentence of condemnation on his acts, and punishing him for saving his country! Was this man regardless of the constitution and laws, when, after having freed his country from a ruthless invasion, he offered himself as the voluntary victim of their violated majesty?

The Judge being thus enabled to proceed under the protection of Jackson's arm, imposed on him by whose sufferance alone he could act, a fine of one thousand dollars, for contempt of his authority!

A burst of popular enthusiasm again rings through the hall of justice. Jackson is seized by the people, hurried out of the hall, placed in a carriage and drawn to the coffee house. Does he direct the fury of the assembled multitude against the Judge, for a sentence so extraordinary, and under circumstances so peculiar? No: he again addressed them; again begs them to repress their enthusiasm; to submit to the laws; to respect the person of the Judge; to show by their conduct, that they are worthy of the free institutions for which they have fought. He tells them, he suspended the laws only to save them and the country; that he glories in seeing their supremacy restored through his instrumentality, although he is made the first victim. Thus, by his entreaties and his submission to the blow which was aimed at him by the judicial arm, which he could have arrested in a moment, the people are induced to return peaceably to their homes, and the reign of the law is again restored. Yet we are told this man acts in utter disregard of the laws of his country!

Jackson paid the fine. But the citizens of New Orleans immediately subscribed the sum, placed it to his credit in one of the banks and gave him notice that it was at his disposal. Did he accept it, and then turn and taunt the Judicial power of his country with its impotency? No: he refused to accept the proffered bounty, but at his suggestion, it is given to those whose relatives had fallen in defence of the city.

When, in the progress of ages has there been a more glorious example of submission to the laws, in one who was their master? Is there any thing to equal it in Greek or Roman history? Is there any thing to equal it in modern free governments? When has a citizen General, at the head of a victorious army, and surrounded by a devoted people, been summoned to the bar of justice to an- [illegible] the constitution and laws [illegible]

From the Buffalo Republican.

War, Pestilence and Famine.—This expression of Mr. Clay, betrays more than is at first view apparent. It is a deliberate assertion, that the people are not capable of self government. He ascribes their choice of Andrew Jackson to a blind and heedless enthusiasm for mere military renown, and prefers "war, pestilence, and famine, or any other scourge," rather than the gratification of that preference. Mr. Clay should have borne it in mind, that there were thousands of his fellow citizens as capable of judging correctly, and as patriotic as himself, who deem Andrew Jackson eminently qualified for the civil station to which the voice of his country would call him. Should he forget the unprecedented unanimity with which most of the state legislatures have proclaimed a similar inclination? And should he forget that at the most solemn conventions of popular representation the same preference has been calmly and temperately avowed? But all this, to the jaundiced vision of Mr. Clay, is nothing—our Jeffersons, our Carrolls, our Crawfords, our Livingstons, our Macons, our congresses, our assemblies, our conventions, yea the whole people are actuated by "a blind and heedless enthusiasm for mere military renown," while he, kind soul alone stands "firm and erect, amidst all the bellowings of the political storm, prepared to sacrifice himself for the good of his country!" Time was when Mr. Clay would exclaim, "vox populi, vox Dei," but now he would implore the Deity to visit the country with "war, pestilence or famine," rather than to give the people the man whom they delight to honor for their ruler.

A glorious Sign.—On Saturday last an overwhelming meeting was held in the city of Rochester, Monroe county, by the republican friends of Andrew Jackson, which has struck terror into the minds of the whole Adams gentry throughout the western counties. It is well known, that Monroe county has been considered the strong hold of the coalition. Here Clay and his party established that infamous paper called the Anti-Masonic Enquirer, for the purpose of abusing the honest feelings of the people in relation to the unfortunate case of Morgan. The Albany managers have always looked upon that spot as the very hot-bed of Adamsism. It is with no ordinary emotion that we find the friends of Andrew Jackson beginning to stir. The Long Room of the Mansion House, says the Rochester Advertiser, was crowded to a degree unsurpassed by any meeting ever held in that village. James Seymour, Sheriff of the county, was called to the chair, and Addison Gardener, was appointed Secretary. It was particularly attended by the mechanics, the artisans, and the real democracy of the county. Many eloquent speeches were made, and a series of resolutions adopted of the most patriotic and invigorating character.

Such are the first effects of the war—pestilence—and famine speech upon the free citizens of N. York. It will be followed by numerous meetings in every part of the state. The agents of the coalition reckon without their host, when they talk of New-York being for Adams. Such was the cry they raised previous to the last fall elections in this city. They were then met at the polls and overwhelmed by the votes of the people. The next election throughout this great state will be the same as the election last fall, but on an enlarged scale. They will be routed—overwhelmed—defeated by the votes of an indignant and patriotic people.

[N. Y. Enquirer, of June 25.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman of the highest respectability, residing in the vicinity of Dover, N. H.

"New Hampshire is doing well. Indeed, since the election in March last, the changes have been much more rapid than they were before the election. I should think that the counties of Strafford and Rockingham would now give a nett gain of one thousand votes from the March election." The cause of Republicanism and old Hickory, is steadily gaining ground throughout the State."

[From the Lockport Journal.]

Our limits will not permit the publication of the proceedings of the numerous public meetings which have recently been held in various parts of the state. They breathe a spirit and evince an energy on the part of the friends of Gen. Jackson, which promises much. No one can road the recent manifestations of public sentiment in this state, and continue to believe the oft repeated declarations of the Adams men, that a re-action is progressing, favourable to their candidate. The truth is, the cause of Gen. Jackson in New-York, has never assumed a more encouraging appearance than at present. The assertion that his vote in this state will fully equal the highest estimate which his friends have made, is fully warranted by existing facts.

From an Ohio Paper.

Anecdote.—An up-to-the-hub Adams man in Cincinnati, being recently selected as a grand juror, vain of the "brief authority" vested in him, and rather overstepping the strict line of his duty, walked into a store, and very pompously inquired of the proprietor, if he knew of any gambling establishment—"Why, yes, I believe I do know of one," replied the person inquired of—at which the juror pricked up his ears, and was very anxious to know where it was, that he might make a grab. "Where is it, and who keeps it?" he demanded. "The gambling establishment I allude to," said the storekeeper, "is in Washington City, and kept by Adams and Clay." Old Ebony was quite chap-fallen, and asked no further questions at that place.

"Sanctification of the Sabbath."—The name of Col. Archibald M'Intyre, of this town, has appeared in two of the newspapers of this county for the last four or five weeks as chairman of a meeting held to promote the sanctification of the Sabbath. On the last Sabbath save one, Col. M'Intyre started from home to attend the administration convention at Albany, which was held last Tuesday!!—Distance from the Colonel's residence to Albany about 40 miles. Comment is unnecessary.—Johnstown Herald.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, JULY 8, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President

ANDREW JACKSON.

For Vice President

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties.

Thomas K. Carroll.

We are authorized to announce Thomas Bayly, Anthony B. Bennett, John C. Wilson, jr., and John J. Davis, Esqrs. Candidates to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

A notice of the celebration of the 4th of July at B. C. Springs, is unavoidably deferred for our next No.

COMMUNICATED.

EXPOSURE.

The Iris of the 4th instant contains a statement of appropriations for furniture for the President's House, during the administrations of the following Presidents, viz:

Mr. Jefferson's	$29,000
Mr. Madison's	25,000
Mr. Monroe's	30,000
Mr. Adams' only	6,000

All this is not true; add to Mr. Adams' [illegible]000 and then there will be a nearer approach to truth. It is a well known fact, and we have the documents to prove it, that $14,000 were appropriated to Mr. Adams the first year of his term, and $6,000 the second year, making the sum of twenty thousand dollars for two years. The billiard table, chess men and other gambling furniture, were purchased with a part of the $14,000, although a small sum was expressly appropriated for furnishing "the west room."

It is admitted that no appropriation was made at the last session of Congress, and probably none was asked for, because so much had been said by Mr. Adams and his officers about economy that none could be demanded. But expending $20,000 in 2 years—which is at that rate $80,000 in 8 years, the period in which Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe filled the Executive chair. [This is something like outstripping Herod.

Truth in Evidence.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

I shall not take the trouble to follow "Observer" through all the windings of his communication in last Friday's Iris, as I have but little time to devote to this purpose, and besides, the production is unworthy such attention. Its abounding with scurrilous epithets and low ribaldry is "confirmation strong" of the author's inefficiency to establish what he alleged in his first essay, and inability to confute the suggestions which that piece elicited. Foiled in his sorry attempt to gull the Methodists he winces most [illegible]ously, and insidiously institutes the enquiry—"what connexion is there between political opinions and doctrines of religion?" as if I had shown a disposition to educe such a connexion. The direct contrary is the fact. But why did Observer tell us that a certain class of people formed correct opinions which "should be solely regarded?" Is this an attempt to wrest from us the inestimable privilege of judging for ourselves? Does he not here express a wish to have us form our political opinions by the notions of a set of men whose vocation debars them from the opportunities necessary to acquire political knowledge? Is this Republicanism, or is it Egotism? He also labours manfully to extricate himself from the predicament in which his "affinity" sentence involved him. [illegible] fellow! an "affinity among the Methodists in favour of John Q. Adams"!! An involuntary smile steals on my face, as this reminds me of Milton's Satan boasting his supremacy in heaven! But behold he gives a [illegible] version, so that "If he did not mean" [illegible] struck me on first examining his gull[illegible] he has at least given us something so narrow-minded, so uncharitable, nay so illiberal, [illegible] I should think an honorable man would have been ashamed of it, and never suffered it to appear, even in the Iris. 'Tis this: he [illegible] the subject of his "affinity" sentence is [illegible] "sentiments of the ministers," and hence [illegible] old adage of "like priest like people."—[illegible] he reiterates John Binns' statement that [illegible] Methodist ministers are almost unanimously favourable to John Q. Adams, which, [illegible] same him, I shall for a moment admit, [illegible] universally known that the people of [Ten]nessee are nearly unanimous in favor of [Jack]son, and I believe that state contains a large body of Methodists. Here then the members of the church differ from the ministers. This would upon examination prove to be the case in many other places. But where [is the] "affinity"—"like priest like people?" [Does] it exist in those places? No. Then the [memb]ers are not like the ministers. Their [senti]ments are at variance—they bear no re[semblance] to each other—the preachers are not [illegible] by their flocks—The latter, therefore, cannot even have religion, because they [are n]ot "like priest," there is no "affinity a[mong] them"—agreeably to John Binns and [Obse]rver.

The next thing which I shall notice is, [Obse]rver's unenviable faculty or creative [illegible], which is quite peculiar to a number of [illegible] whom I could point out. He says I [am n]ot a Methodist, but that I have falsely [assu]med this name to give effect, &c. I can [only] regret that he is guilty of saying so—[I] thank my God, the charge is false! [not b]ecause my name is enrolled on a class [book]—nor from my using the means of grace publickly and privately—but because, [throu]gh Divine Mercy, I stand properly pre-[illegible] ask him [illegible] hope [illegible]

Again, he says, I am an individual who scarcely enters the church door once a year. Whence did you, Mr. Observer, derive your information? Is not this something which you never heard—and is it not too a malicious untruth, such as Wesley says is condemned by all parties. (He said this before Observer made his appearance.)

Again, you say, whoever reads the articles of the Herald (in reply to you) must see they are the result of consultation. Were you led to judge so from frequent certain management practised in the Adams camp? Had you any ground other than your judgment (prejudice or something worse would probably be more appropriate) for making this assertion? You must know it is utterly unfounded and untrue.

And again, you say, we boast of the opinions of the preachers of the West as being favourable to Gen. Jackson. I never saw any thing in a Jackson paper concerning the political opinions of our preachers except in pieces written to confute the statements made by the Adams party on this subject. I believe the Jacksonists are not so unreasonable as to call upon religious sects to aid them. I hope no one among them will ever act so absurdly. But, let me ask, what induces you to tell such falsehoods? Are these the only stanchions remaining in your wigwam to support your desperate cause? Falsehoods known to be such by the speaker, and uttered with the intention to deceive, are properly termed lies. Were you not guilty of telling or circulating untruths, which you yourself believed not, before you wrote the piece in last Friday's Iris, which contains so many? Are these evidences of your magnanimity? You must think we Methodists are a stupid, ignorant race who have not sufficient discretion to make choice of a man for President. I know not what else could have induced you to publish your 'affinity' communication in favour of a Unitarian.

Some time since D. S. Carr, Esq. of Baltimore, whose character for veracity has never been questioned by any authority entitled to credit, published the fact that "the subject of the presidential question was not (as every body ought to know) agitated by the General Conference—that a gentleman of Baltimore of the highest respectability, an Adams man, and a member of the conference, said, from what he could learn from private expression of opinion by the members composing that body there was a majority in favour of Jackson." For publishing this, Observer endeavours to ridicule the editor of the Baltimore Republican and, it appears, would fain bring him to a level with John Binns and himself. Now look at the remarks of the Christian Advocate & Journal, of the 20th June. That paper says, "no means were used at the conference to test the political sentiments of any member, nor do we believe that it was made an enquiry at all, unless, perhaps in a desultory or private way." The Advocate is also at a loss to know how the Adams prints got their information. Can Observer tell? or will he now vent his spleen to degrade that paper and its editor? The Advocate says something more with which Observer's statements harmonize most discordantly. Observer said the conference consisted of 197 members including 6 bishops—The Advocate says there were only 169 members including 5 bishops. This needs no comment.

I said in my last piece, that preachers "are not called to study politics—not to lounge about grog shops, &c." How came you, Mr. Observer, to take notice of the latter part of this quotation. The former part deserves just as much notice as the latter, but it seems the latter alone engaged your attention. Now, I incline to think that your taking notice of what you "deemed unworthy of notice" tells something which you wished to conceal.——

"O shame where is thy blush!!"

Permit me now to give you a little advice, and then I shall have done: When you reply to this piece endeavour to bear in mind what the Apostle saith, Eph. iv. 25 & 29.

A METHODIST.

From the Richmond Enquirer.

Plain Matters of Facts—undenied and undeniable.—No. III.

ONE AT A TIME.

"CONSTRUCTIVE JOURNIES."

"Constructive Journies" are becoming quite fashionable and quite profitable; whilst agriculture is going out of fashion, and has become, utterly unprofitable. In the Report of the Committee of Retrenchment, is the following passage:

"Mr. McKenney's salary as clerk is fixed by law at $1,600. In May 1827; it appears that, for some purpose, he was sent by the Secretary of War upon a mission to several Indian tribes, and the sum of $1,750 advanced to him. Mr. McKenney was also associated with Governor Cass, to hold a treaty with the Indians at Green Bay, for which he charged, as compensation, the sum of EIGHT DOLLARS for every 28 miles travelled, and EIGHT dollars per day while engaged in making the treaty at Green Bay. Mr. McKenney settled his accounts with Governor Cass, or Mr. Forsyth, his Secretary, and charged not only his mileage for going, but also $600 for returning from Green Bay to Washington, ☞and which journey HE DID NOT MAKE.☜ From this point, in pursuance of the instructions from the War Department, he visited, by way of St. Louis, the Indians in Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia; thence to Washington. For the latter service, upon his return, he presented his accounts to the Department for settlement, amounting to four thousand five hundred and thirty-two dollars."

Mr. McKenney then, performed no such journey. He proceeded from Green Bay to the South, without previously returning to Washington as he charged. Ought not the people to check the progress of this facile fashionable mode of putting their money in the pockets of the parasites of government? They find their public officers will not do it for them; and they must, therefore, do it for themselves. Mr. Barbour, Secretary at War, sanctioned this entry, and has thus contributed his mite to vitiate the Treasury records. Notwithstanding this most mischievous offence, and other miserable condescensions, the President and Senate have honored him with the office of minister to London—Can the American patriot, whatever be his personal prejudices, look upon this transaction without astonishment? What reliance can he have upon the public agents who have approved and sanctioned such an offence against the sanctity of their Treasury records? Can he fail to see, that rewarding such acts, by public honors and emoluments, will extend the corruption to all public officers, and particularly to the Treasury officers? Under such circumstances, what becomes the first duty of the people?—the constitutional censors of the public agents? Surely to apply the rod of elections to all defaulters of every description, and to all who countenance them. Elections are the only means in their hands, for the correction of such abominable abuses, and they are abundantly sufficient if properly applied. Let then the people in their elections, regardless of person, party or possession, reject every public agent who has ever given any countenance, in the remotest degree, to vitiate the Treasury records. If this be done, the Republic may be saved and the People's money be preserved for public uses; if not, the fate of the Republic is sealed, and the oppression of the people inevitable and without end. Let then the people at the approaching election, reject their plundering public agents and do themselves justice—Which the same public agents have not done, and never will do, under the present examples.

QUÆRIST.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Gen. Jackson justly enjoys in an eminent degree the public favour; and of his worth, talents and services, no one entertains a higher, or more respectful opinion than myself."—John Q. Adams.

"Whose (Jackson's) whole career has been signalized by the purest intentions and the most elevated purposes, and whose services to this nation entitle him to its highest rewards."—John Quincy Adams.

"My friendship for Gen. Jackson, and the strong proofs of confidence and regard I have given him, while President, forbids my taking any part against him in the ensuing Presidential election."—James Monroe.

"The recollection of the public relation in which I stood to Gen. Jackson, while President, and the proofs given to him, of the high estimation in which he was held by me." &c.—James Madison.

"Gen. Jackson is a clear headed, strong minded man, and has more of the Roman in him than any man now living."—Thomas Jefferson.

"Towards that distinguished captain [Andrew Jackson] who has shed so much glory on our country, whose renown constitutes so great a portion of its moral property, I never have had, I never can have, any other feelings than those of the most profound respect, and the utmost kindness."—HENRY CLAY'S Speech on the Seminole War.]

From the Albany (N. Y.) Argus, of June 21.

Every day serves to confirm the conviction, that the vote in this state for Gen. Jackson, will be at least two to one, if not three to one. The general character of the present administration—its cabinet electioneering—the means it has resorted to—its intrigues in our own state, and its attempt to manufacture a government for us—its premature convention, and particularly the political complexion of that convention—its uneasy efforts—its multiplied convocations for effect—its attempt to pervert and increase a local excitement for electioneering purposes—its awkward attempts to win favour in this state by the recent selection of individual citizens, and especially the appointment to the head of a department of one whose talents nor whose estimation with the people presented very strong claims to a preference of this sort—all these things are re-acting with much force and to a wide extent, and will add to the already greatly preponderating strength of Gen. Jackson, the votes of thousands who are leaving the administration in disgust. The friends of Andrew Jackson throughout the Union may count, with entire confidence, upon at least two electoral votes to one in the state of New York.

From the Baltimore Republican.

KENTUCKY.

The Adams party are constantly endeavouring to impress the People with the belief, that if the Administration candidate for the office of Governor in Kentucky, is elected in August, it will be an unequivocal evidence of the subsequent success of the Administration in the Presidential election, not only in Kentucky, but throughout the Union. This is all nonsense, and they know better; but they wish to keep up a show to the last—they wish to put off, as long as possible, the day when they must admit they are beaten. If they gain the Governor's election in Kentucky, they may create the belief with their ignorant partisans at a distance, that it has given them a chance of success. It is all folly however. They'll be beaten in the Governor's election in Kentucky—they'll be beaten in the Presidential election in Kentucky, and they'll be "routed, beaten, and overwhelmed" throughout the Union. New York 24, Maryland 6, Virginia 24, N. Carolina 15, S. Carolina 11, Georgia 9, Tennessee 11, Pennsylvania 28, Alabama 5, Mississippi 3, Missouri 3, Illinois 3, and Jackson has 11 more than enough to elect him, without N. Jersey, Delaware, KENTUCKY, Ohio, Indiana, or Louisiana.

If Barry, the Jackson candidate for Governor in Kentucky, is elected, will the Administration party give up and admit they are beaten? The only difference which the Governor's election in Kentucky can make on the subject of the Presidential election is this—If the Jackson candidate is elected we shall be relieved from the heat of the election in all other parts of the country, for the Adams men can't then any longer impose on one another—every man of them, no matter how ignorant, will know that further struggle on their part, is useless—If the Adams candidate is elected, the Adams party will keep up the fight till November, when they'll be beaten all hollow.

WASHINGTON COUNTY.

The Adams party, hereabouts, have been crowing of late, about great changes, which they said have taken place in Washington county, in favour of the administration. We presume they have been deceived by their friends, the Adams managers in Washington county. One of the tricks resorted to by these worthy gentry, has been the publication of long lists of names, as being those of gentlemen who belong to the Adams party and were members of their Committee of Vigilance. This trick has been exposed by the Jackson men, whose names were placed on them without authority, publicly ordering their names to be stricken off. We published a short time ago, a letter from 10 of these Jackson men, desiring their names to be stricken off of the Adams Committee of Vigilance in Washington county—a short time after, we published a letter from 32 more of them, desiring the same thing; and to-day, we publish a letter from 21 more, desiring their names to be stricken off of the aforesaid Adams Committee. This makes SIXTY THREE, whose names we have seen ordered to be stricken off, already. We doubt not more have done it, and more will do it. But take 63 from Adams in one district in Washington county, and add them to the Jackson vote, and it makes a difference of 126 votes.

Baltimore Republican.

To the Citizens of Washington County:

Believing as we do, from what has lately transpired in our county, that the Adams party would stop at nothing short of bargain and management to enlist the friends of Gen. Jackson into their ranks, to make proselytes to their sinking causes, we have seen with no astonishment our names published to the world in such a manner so as to induce you to believe that we have turned over from General Jackson to Mr. Adams. We do not know what could have put it into the heads of a few busy bodies who appear so meddlesome about the votes of other men, to place our names among the friends of Mr. Adams. We are very sure, we never authorized any person so to do, something so contrary to our opinion. They need not think to bribe us by seeing our names published in the public papers. They need not expect to influence our votes by management, flattery, corruption, or intrigue; we have heard too much of that kind practised about our Capital. We were for Jackson at the last election, we have seen nor heard nothing which has come to light, to change our minds, but much which goes to confirm us in our opinion. Nor do we know of any change having taken place in our neighbourhood; those who were for Jackson are still firm and unshaken for old Hickory.

Yours, respectfully,

Joseph Funk,	John Putman,
William Jones,	Jacob Funk,
Michael Grosh,	Matthias Sayler,
David Funk,	Daniel Gierhart,
George Hamilton,	John Miller,
Samuel Doup,	Daniel Moats
Jacob Moats,	John Warner jr.
Henry Funk,	Henry Rice,
Daniel Rice,	John Doup,
Michael Ozier.

FRANKING.

A gentleman told us that he counted eighty-one packages of Chapman Johnston's address franked by R. P. Letcher to one Post Office in his district, and understood there were similar packages almost innumerable to other offices. In some districts at the East, ward-represented by Adams men, there are heavy complaints among the people that they get nothing else by the mails but useless pamphlets franked by their Congressmen.—A vile imposition got up at Washington, containing misrepresentations and forgeries under the title of official documents ordered to be printed by Congress, is extensively franked by the Adams men with unblushing impudence. Several of those gentlemen have been severely reproved by persons receiving their favours, for these dishonorable attempts to mislead them.

Yet the Ebony editors have the assurance to assail Major Moore because he exercises his privilege of franking for the purpose of throwing light where these men would scatter darkness! What a noble fellow he would be, if he had only franked 100,000 copies of Clay's address, spurious militia documents, Wright's speeches, Chapman Johnsons's address, Binns' coffins or Hammond's slanders on Mrs. Jackson! But it is his activity in defeating their impositions & lies which makes them hate and abuse him, for it is not pretended that he has used his franking privilege illegally or otherwise than they have.

A story is going the rounds of the Ebony papers that Col. Johnsen has franked some article of dress, and the matter is set off with all the ebony hues which John Q. Adams gave to Thomas Jefferson and "dusky Sally." It is said the thing was seen by many gentlemen in Georgetown.

Now, Georgetown is not the Post Office to which Col. Johnson's letters to his family are directed; but they necessarily pass thro' the Georgetown office. It is not to be supposed that the Postmaster at Georgetown has not only taken the covers off of letters, directed to a neighbouring office, read their direction, peeped into them, and ascertained whom their contents were for, but has called in his fellow citizens as witnesses, not so much of the abuse of the franking privilege, as of his own most outrageous violation of duty! It might well be suspected that a Postmaster who would thus open the mails of other offices and peep into letters to ascertain their contents, would do the same thing for money, and he ought instantly to be removed from office. If, therefore, this tale be true, Mr. Finnell has committed a gross outrage for which he deserves to be removed. We do not believe him capable of so gross and palpable a violation of duty, and therefore the story must be false.

Frankfort Argus.

From the Ohio Peoples Press.

CHARLES HAMMOND'S OPINION OF AMERICAN DEMOCRACY.

A great many of the Administration gentlemen, in this quarter of the country profess to be DEMOCRATS, of the true Jeffersonian school; and would be highly affronted to be branded with the name of Federalist. Some of these same gentlemen are subscribers to that monthly budget of travelling calumny, called Truth's Advocate, which is edited by Charles Hammond, Esq. This Mr. Hammond has boldly told the public a short time ago, that his federal principles have never changed. It will be seen, by the following article, with his sentiments in 1815, and according to his own declaration, they still remain his sentiments. I offer it to these Administration Democrats, as an emetic or cathartic, just as they please to take it:

From the Ohio Federalist, April 20, 1815.

(Published and written by C. Hammond, author of Truth's Advocate.)

"I do not believe that there can be found, in the universe, a herd of such docile and tractable animals as our AMERICAN DEMOCRATS. They are lead by much less difficulty than A FLOCK OF SHEEP; for these refuse to follow their shepherd through mire and water, whereas our Democrats stop at nothing, but believe, and say, and DO AS THEY ARE BID. They are the only living ANIMALS I have ever seen, which seem to have neither MIND nor WILL of their own, and which follow their leaders with the same kind of BLIND INSTINCT, with which the YOUNG QUADRUPED follows its dam."

The [illegible] Military Chieftains.—Who are the Military Chieftains in this age of peace and harmony, when the olive buds and blows from the Black sea to the sources of the Missouri? The Adams and Clay men are the only chieftains of the day. They have been brandishing their steel weapons ever since Congress rose. They are flashing the carving-knife over half the union, and putting it into the jugular of every silly sheep that is fat enough for the sacrifice.—[Noah.

☞The Albany Daily says, that Smith Thompson, one of the United States' Judges of the Supreme Court, is to be the Adams candidate for Governor. They said the same of Chief Justice Savage. The fact is, the only men who will serve them for that station, are Solomon Southwick and Francis Granger, Esqs. Who of any standing would desire to be beaten by 25,000 majority? [Noah.

A Jackson paper, evincing much talent and sound political views, made its appearance on the 11th ultimo at Norridgewock, Maine.

Baltimore Prices Current.

July 4, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $6 a 6.50; superfine Howard-st. 4.75 a 4.87½; city mills 4.50; Susquehanna, 4.37½ a 4.50; WHEAT, best red .85 a .90; best white .95 a 1.00—CORN, .32 a .34; OATS .20 a .22

☞A Camp Meeting for Annamessex Circuit will be held on Deal's Island, JULY 17th.

☞A Camp Meeting will commence at Nanticoke Point on the 14th of next August.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court, at the suit of Henry Lankford, administrator of Pierce Riggin against Henry J. Riggin; by virtue of two writs of Fieri Facias, one at the suit of Elizabeth J. C. Stewart, by William Miles her guardian, one do. at the suit of Mary A. Stewart by William Miles her guardian; by virtue of six writs of Fieri Facias issued by Burton Cannon, a justice of the peace for Somerset county, to wit:—one at the suit of Levin Tiler, executor of Samuel Milborn, 1 do. at the suit of Isaac Riggin, administrator of Noah Riggin, 2 at the suits of [illegible] 1 do. at the suit of James Stewart; 1 do. at the suit of Robert Lankford; by virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by William Oosten, a justice of the peace for Somerset county, at the suit of Richard H. Samson, at the use of James Samson, at the use of Burton Cannon, all the above writs against Henry J. Riggin, and to me directed, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit:—One negro man Jim, 1 do. woman Ann, 1 do. Nelly, 1 do. Esther, 1 do. boy Dave, 1 do. girl Margaret, 1 do. Case, 1 do. Jane, 1 do. Eliza, 3 head of horses, 3 yokes of oxen, 4 head of cattle, 20 head of sheep, 6 feather beds and furniture, 1 corner cupboard, 1 clock, 1 sideboard, 1 desk, 1 walnut table, 3 pine do. 1 stand, 1 lot of earthen ware, 1 dozen chairs, 1 safe, 2 trunks, 1 lot of knives and forks, 1 grind stone, 1 hand mill, 1 wain cart, 1 carriage, 1 wheat fan, 1 lot of casks, 1 cider mill, 1 cross-cut saw, 1 hand do. 3 ploughs, 3 harrows, 3 axes, 1 lot of iron, 150 bushels of corn, more or less, 14 stacks of fodder, more or less, 1 lot of flax in the straw, 2 pair of and-irons, 3 ox yokes, 3 ox chains, 6 hives with bees, 1 lot of tin ware, 1 lot of cooper's ware, 1 looking glass, 2 guns, 1 tract of land called Gray's Purchase, containing 100 acres, 1 do. Dudly, 50 acres, 1 do. Rawley Hill, 50 acres, 1 do. part of Unity Enlarge, 43 acres, 1 do. Privilege 30 acres, 1 do. part of Privilege; 20 acres, 1 do. part of Phillips' Conclusion, 200 acres, 1 do. part of Friend's Assistance, 90 acres, 1 do. part of Pasturage, 20 acres, part of a tract of land called Panther's Den, 1 do. part of Allen's Vale, 1 do. Lonely Glade—the three last named tracts containing 914 acres of land; all the above tracts containing more or less acres—which I shall proceed to sell at the court-house door on TUESDAY the 29th of JULY (inst.,) between the hours of 12 and 4 o'clock, P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

July 8, 1828. wp

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess-Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

LEVIN H. POWELL.

July 8 ww

A LIST OF LETTERS

Remaining in the Post-Office at Princess-Anne, Md., on July 1, 1828.

B—William Bennett, Isaiah Bayley, Jane Benson

C—Joseph S. Colgan

D—Elizabeth Dory, George Davy, jun. William Dix, Elizabeth Durby, Isaac Denson, William F. Dashiell, Littleton U. Dennis

F—Josiah Furness, Whitty Fountain

G—Henry I S Gibbons

H—William Hunt, Mrs Sarah Hayward, Isaiah Hayman

I—Isaiah & Susan (care of Lambert Hyland)

J—John Jones 2, Levin D Jones, Alexander Jones, Doct Matthias Jones

K—Robert I H King

L—Henry Lankford

M—William Miles, Daniel Miles, John McDaniel, William M'Daniel 2, Miss Ann Martin, Miss Sarah R Maddux, Master Somerset Lodge

P—William Purnell, William Parkes 2, Stephen Parkes

R—Noah Riley, Robert Rich, Miss Mary Ann Riggin

S—John B. Stevenson, Rev. William M. Stone

T—Gilbert Townsend, Rinaldo Turner

W—William Williams, Miss Mary G. Wilson

SAML. BROWN, P. M.

July 8, 1828. ww

THE CORNUCOPIÆ.

"Blending the useful with the sweet."

FROM THE RICHMOND ENQUIRER.

Messrs. Editors—In imitation of the curses of Cormac O'Kelly upon Donneraile, I send you the versification of Mr. Clay's curses at Baltimore:—

H. Clay's Curses at Baltimore.

Alas! I'm sick and wo begone,
My towering hopes are overthrown,
My labour has been vainly spent,
I never can be President!———
So mad am I, it makes me roar,
Then hear me, Men of Baltimore,
Sooner be Plague upon us sent
Than Jackson be the President,
May War on us its horrors vent
Ere Warrior be the President.
This Country waste with Famine gaunt
Ere Chieftain be made President.
Here, Pestilence, make thy descent
If he's to be the President.
The Union be't asunder rent
So Jackson's not our President.
Let Bargain all things circumvent
'Tis better than such President.
Corruption! come—I am content
It once kept off this President.
Establish e'en "safe precedent"
But choose not Andrew President.
Alas! I'm sick and woe begone,
Let Physic to the dogs be thrown.
If he to me had vigor lent
This man should not be President.
My steps should be untiring bent
Throughout my country's vast extent—
I'd take the Hermit Peter's trade
And boldly preach a new crusade—
To every city—hamlet—town
In pilgrim weeds I'd get me down—
To every woman, man and child,
I'd beat my breast in frenzy wild—
And argue till my breath was spent
'Gainst making Jackson President.
Avert, oh Heaven! this dire event
Let not this Chief be President.
The only prayer I ever sent
Is—make not Jackson President.
'Twould ruin me to all intent
To have old Hick'ry President.
He cannot from his path be bent
He'll never do for President.
His hair wont know his head's intent
If Jackson be the President.
No Presses can be brib'd to "print"
If this man be the President.
No men on useless Missions sent,
The Devil take such President.
What will become of John of Ghent
If Hick'ry be the President?
What will become of Princely Hal?
Like Lucifer you'll see him fall.
And never rise from that descent
If once this fellow's President.
To flinders then the world be rent
So Jackson's not the President.

From the American Farmer.

CHEAP SPINNER.

Virginia, 28th, May, 1828.

Sir: I notice in your Amercian Farmer, No. 7, vol. 10, a communication from a gentleman in Milledgeville, Geo. signed Fanch Carter, expressing a wish to know, if a spinning machine could be procured such as would answer family use. I also noticed in three or four previous numbers, a similar and anonymous communication, dated Harrisville, Kentucky. I now inform those gentlemen, and southern planters generally, thro' the medium of your widely circulated paper, I am in possession of a family spinner and cotton carder, designed solely for family use, being the fruits of two years labour to bring it to its present perfection. I cannot here with any propriety, use panegyric on the perfections of these machines but their merits must force their way and become in general use. The spinner is now patented, and is thought to be as durable, cheap and simple, (if not more so,) than any machine now in use.—Its probable cost will be something like the following:

A workman 3 days, at $1.33; from 6 to 12 steel spindles may be used, at 25 cents each; an iron crank 50 cents, being the only iron about it; wire and tacks 12½. The right of using it will bear a proportion to the cost of making, which is intended to bring it within the reach of every poor family.

From six to eight cuts of cotton or woollen yarn, can be spun in a day, on each spindle; six have been done; a child of ten years old, black or white, is sufficient to work it, being done by the foot sitting on a chair.—To adjust the quality of thread, is done by moving two pegs, spinning it from twine to any degree of fineness wanting.

The probable cost of the cotton carding machine, will range from $20 to $30, and is equally durable and simple, moved by the foot also, with ease. The speed is about equal in discharging rolls in a given time or number, to the common woollen carding machine. A model is now in progress for the patent office for this machine. Agents will be made in different states, and I shall visit the southern states myself, as soon as practicable.

Gentlemen at a distance, desirous of having the use of either, or both these machines, will inform me of it. A complete drawing, with corresponding references, so as to render the whole perfectly understood, will be sent them, on condition of their enclosing $10 for both.

I am yours, &c.

WM. R. McCALL.

A Christian church among the Arabs, Turks and Persians.—The Lutheran Intelligencer has the following paragraph from the Monthly Magazine published at Sleswig:—

On the shores of the river Tigris there exists a Christian church; the members of which call themselves Chaldeans, and trace their origin to the time of the apostles. It is supposed that they number 500,000 souls, all of whom are trained to arms, and whether at home or abroad, engaged in temporal matters, or worshiping in church, they are never without arms, being constantly exposed to attacks from the Turks. Their patriarch is the first civil officer of the republic. The metropolis is called Iolemark, and is situated in the mountains, bounded by the river Zabal, which empties into the Tigris. During the winter season about 12,000 persons reside in the city; but in the spring the number is much diminished by the removal of many to the adjacent villages, for the purpose of cultivating their fields. The city is enclosed by a strong rampart well mounted with cannon. But little is known of these peopole. The papists attempted to make an impression upon them some years ago, but failed, and that because of the Bible, of which they had many manuscript copies. Since it has been discovered that these Bible Christians have no printing establishments among them, and no books, the British and Foreign Bible Society is making arrangements to provide them with printed copies of the Bible.

A Procession of Drunkards.

Suppose a hospital—and all the inebriates of our country composing a procession to it, exhibiting all the varied forms and different stages of intemperance—the trembling limbs—the squalid aspects—the bloated features—the diseases, phrensies, which this single voice has produced. What should we think of a spectacle of three hundred thousand distempered by this single cause—stretching in single rank more then 100 miles—and among them hoary heads, venerated magistrates, the blushing sex, tender years, commingled with every frantic, brutal, and loathsome creature that society can exhibit.—What a scene to be imagined! Suppose it a hospital they were approaching—it must possess a greater elevation than the highest mountain in our country, for the most distant to behold it, while the foremost were stepping upon its threshold. Suppose them carried forth to be deposited in one continued and extended line—the whole breadth of our state would not be conpetent to bury them. The case is none the less real, because it requires the assistance of the imagination to comprehend it. There is such a company, actually on the march, of whom it is calculated that ten thousand annually reach the grave of the inebriate, through the different sections of our country.—Dr. Nichol's Address

CONVEYANCE OF SOUND.

The wide spread sail of a ship, rendered concave by a gentle breeze, is a singular collector of sound. It happened once on board a ship sailing along the coast of Brazil, 100 miles from land that the persons walked on deck, when passing a particular spot heard most distinctly the sound of bells varying as in human rejoicing. All on board listened and were convinced—but the phenomenon was mysterious and inexplicable. Months afterwards, by comparing notes, it was ascertained, that at the time of observation the bells of the city of St. Salvadore, on the Brazillian coast, had been ringing on the occasion of a festival; the sound, therefore favoured by a gentle wind, had travelled over one hundred miles of smooth water, and had been brought to a focus by the sail in the particular situation on the deck where it was listened to. It appears from this, that a machine may be constructed having the same relation to sound that a telescope has to sight.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Joshua Hitch against Thomas Roberts I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: Part of a tract of land called Nelzy, containing 15 acres, more or less, lying and being in Somerset county, and on the county road which leads from Salisbury to Quantico Mills, and now occupied by Abigail V. Cox, which I shall proceed to sell on Monday the 14th July next, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. on the premises, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

June 24. 3tc

VALUABLE PROPERTY

AT PRIVATE SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his FARM, situated at the mouth of Wicomico Creek, in Somerset county, Md. containing about 300 acres and known by the name of "Kibble's Destiny." The improvements are an excellent two story frame house, necessary out-buildings—with A peach orchard containing nearly 1000 trees—Also, a good apple orchard.

Vessels of a large burden can come within 20 yards of the house.

☞The crops of corn and wheat on the farm will be sold with the land—There are about 175,000 of the former and of the latter about forty bushels were sown.

For further particulars and terms apply to

JOSHUA MORRIS.

May 20. 1828.

FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber is desirous of disposing of his real estate, being and lying in Worcester county, Md. and situated on Dividing Creek. The landed estate consists of 2000, or more acres. The improvements are a dwelling house and out buildings with a good SAW and GRIST MILL, both in excellent order; also a young orchard. About 100 acres of the land is in a good state of cultivation.

There is, on one part of the above property, an abundance of Iron Ore, which would warrant the erection of a Forge, and prove an object of value to a purchaser acquainted with, and calculated for, such an undertaking.

The terms of sale will be—one third down, and 3 years for the payment of the balance. For further particulars apply to

JOHN MORRIS.

April 22 3d

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street, BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. mw

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's obt. servant.

WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.

Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess-Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland. LEVIN ABBOTT.

June 9th—24th 1828.

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC.

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER,

Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne, Md.

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers.

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers,
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 Butter Prints

100 groce of Lamp Wick, assorted sizes, Spiggots and fossets, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs, and hydrants, shoe, sweeping, dusting and other brushes, sifters, muddlers, and lime squeezers, fancy and common bellows, pound, half pound and and quarter pound Butter Prints, of various patterns, fishing lines and rods, butter bowls and trays, baskets, wash and cake boards twine, and cord, patent taps, humming and common tops, nests of sugar boxes and tubs, boot & shoe blacking, towel rollers, potato and turnip mashers, rolling pins, carpenters' or joiners' chalk lines, spoons and paddles, trenchers, crabbing and cabbage nets.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,

No. 101½ Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.

Baltimore, 6th mo. 24. tow

SINCLAIR & MOORE,

Pratt-St. Wharf, Baltimore,

HAVE in store—Millet, Lucerne, early Corn, bunch, pole & soup Beans, a large assortment for planting, and garden seeds generally.

PLOUGHS,

Amongst which are the much approved self-sharpening point Plough—By turning and reversing said point, the share lasts much longer than the cast share of any other plough, in as much as the point is of steel, and when worn bevelling it is sharpened, if turned over. The CULTIVATORS made by Sinclair & Moore, pulverize the ground more effectually, and much deeper than the old fashioned there hoed kind—and by the use of these in the culture of corn, it will save nearly two-thirds of the ploughing.

ALSO, Socket Shovels, Scythes, Mattocks and Picks, with handles;—spring steel Hay and Manure Forks, WHEAT FANS, & GRAIN CRADLES, with best Waldron Scythes; Garden Tools generally; Wove Wire for Seives, and Mill Screens.

☞They have received from on board the brig Hyperion, capt. Forbes, just from Liverpool, a quantity of grain and grass Scythes, (Waldron's prime) Sickles, Malleable trace Chains; Straw and Hay Knives; Grass Hooks, and Garden Tools, amongst which are turnip and other Hoes; Edging Tools, budding and pruning Knives, &c. &c.

☞For the greater convenience of those who use our PLOUGHS in Somerset, we have appointed JOHNSTON & SUDLER, of Princess-Anne, our agents for the sale of them, who will constantly keep a supply of the different kinds at our prices.

June, 1828. S. & M.

EASTMAN'S MANUFACTORY

OF

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,

At No. 36 Pratt street, opposite the United Hotel, Baltimore.

THE subscriber would inform the public that he has on hand a large assortment of Gideon Davis' Improved Patent PLOUGHS of cast and wrought Shares, with and without Coulters; Hill-side, Substratum and Shovel Ploughs; a large stock of Cultivators of superior quality; Harrows; Swingletrees, double and single: Cornshellers and Washing Machines. Also on hand as usual; his Patent Cylindrical Straw Cutters, which have given universal satisfaction, and Brown's Vertical Wool Spinners; Cast-steel Axes; Grubbing Hoes, Picks and Mattocks, which he warrants of superior quality; very superior Oil Stones, saturated with oil—all of which will be sold at reasonable prices for cash or acceptances in this city.

His very extensive sales of the above articles for the last 3 years is an evidence of the general satisfaction he has given to his numerous customers, and he flatters himself that with the increased pains he has taken in selecting his timber and other materials this season, and also to improve as much as possible on the workmanship of his implements, that he will continue to merit the public patronage which has been so liberally bestowed and for which he takes this opportunity to express his grateful thanks.

Orders by mail (post paid) will receive prompt attention.

JONATHAN S. EASTMAN.

N.B. On hand, 9 bushels good MILLET SEED, which will be sold low. Implements ordered by any customers which I do not keep on hand will be carefully selected and furnished to the orders.

March 11. tx

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phoebus.

For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

June 3, 1828. kw

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.

Somerset County Orphans Court.

June 10th, 1828.

§§§§§§§§§§ ON application of Isaac T. Mar- §§SEAL.§§ shall, Administrator of Jacob Mar- §§§§§§§§§§ shall, late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in the paper printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,

JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of JACOB MARSHALL, late of said county, deceased.—All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 29th of December next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 10th of June, 1828.

ISAAC T. MARSHALL,

Adm'tor of Jacob Marshall, dec'd.

June 17, 1828. k

CONSTABLE's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by George M. Willing, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, one, James Dorman use of Jery. Mezzick use of Hooper & Jenkins against Louda Riggin and James Powell, and one George Wright against Louda Riggin, I have seized and taken in execution as the property of the said Louda, one negro Girl named Sarah, which said negro girl I shall sell on the 22nd of July next, to the highest bidder for ready cash, at the Court-House door, in Princess-Anne, between 2 and 3 o'clock P. M. to satisfy the above claims.

SAMUEL McBRYDE,

June 24—j1 Constable.

EMIGRATION TO LIBERIA.

NOTICE.

THE Managers of the American Colonization Society give notice, that they are ready to receive applications for the conveyance of free people of color to the colony of Liberia.

In all cases, the age, sex, and professions of the applicants must be mentioned.

Applicants from the State of Maryland must be prepared to offer the affidavit of some free white person, to their having actually resided within the State of Maryland for "twelve months" previous to the period of emigration.

Applications may be made in Baltimore to Hon. Judge Brice, Charles Howard Esq. of John E., John H. B. Latrobe Esq., or Charles C. Harper Esq., Agents of the Society.

PROPOSALS

For publishing in Hagerstown, Md. a Weekly Newspaper, under the title of

The Hagerstown Mail.

The Mail will convey "news from all nations"—particularly those most interesting to our own country, and will be conducted so as to give early and correct information of public affairs generally; of political occurrences in the different states; of the rise and fall of American produce in our principal cities, and the prices in foreign markets.

The political principles of this paper will be as purely Republican as those contained in the Declaration of Independence, and the Rights of the People shall be at all times zealously, firmly and fearlessly supported, whoever may be in power. The Establishment is intended to be a permanent one, and as such every endeavor will be used to render it a first rate country paper deserving public patronage.

With regard to the Presidential question which now agitates the whole Union, the Mail will decidedly and openly advocate the election of ANDREW JACKSON. And when it is considered that there is only one press in Baltimore, and only one between Baltimore and Cumberland that espouses his cause, it will readily be allowed that in so large an extent of country there is room for at least another—more particularly as all the other presses in this rich, and populous country, where he has so many disinterested friends, are against him; the times emphatically demand the establishment of such a press, for at no period of our political history have such unfair and unjustifiable means been resorted to, in order to destroy the character of a public man, as have been within the last year to injure the well-earned fame of the Hero of New Orleans, and merely because he is a candidate before the people for a high and important office—although he was brought out by the people themselves; but the Mail will never leave him until he arrives at Washington, and receives from the hands of the people, the honors justly due to one whose whole life in peace and in war has been devoted to his Country's Liberty, Welfare and Happiness.

Terms of Subscription.

For a single paper Three Dollars a year. But this may be discharged by Two Dollars paid in advance, or Two Dollars and Fifty cents in Six Months.—Any person obtaining Ten subscribers and becoming responsible for the money shall have a paper gratis.

Hagers-town, May 13—July 1

PROPOSALS

For publishing in the City of Philadelphia.

THE PRACTICAL

FARMER'S MAGAZINE.

OR

Agricultural and Literary Gazette.

THE FARMER'S MAGAZINE is designed to contain information drawn from authentic Sources relative to the improvement and management of remarkable Farms, sources of manure, number and kind of Stock, farming utensils, labourers, dairies, &c. Agricultural Improvements; drawings and descriptions of Useful Inventions; critical notices and reviews of such publications as may tend to the interests of the Husbandman; improvements in the breed of Domestic Animals; accounts of such Foreign and Domestic trees, shrubs, vines, plants, seeds and grains, as are considered necessary or useful for subsistence, comfort or ornament, with Information relative to their treatment, growth, requisite kinds of soil, &c.; and in short, whatever may tend to increase the product of the soil, and advance the Rural Economy of the country.

Insertion will always be given to such Reports, Addresses and Papers, as may be communicated for publication, by the several Agricultural Societies of this and other states.

A Land Register will contain as far as practicable, a list of farms, which are now or may hereafter be, For Sale, according to their size, situation, quality and such other particulars as may be deemed Useful.

Space will be afforded the Solid and Sparkling Beauties of Literature, the useful arts and science, Chemistry, Natural History, Philosophy, Biography and Travels, state of the Markets in the principal Sea Ports, &c. &c.

TERMS.

The Farmer's Magazine will be published semi-monthly, the price is three dollars, payable either at the time of subscribing or on receipt of the first number. That form and size has been adopted, which is deemed most convenient for binding, while the quality of the paper, the beauty of the type, (all new,) and the general execution of the work will be such, as it is hoped will reflect credit on the Publishers, and gratify its patrons.

☞Address (post paid) Thomas C. Clarke, agent for the Proprietors, No. 48, ... St. Phil'a. May 17

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., JULY 22, 1828. NO. 17.

From the Richmond Enquirer.

Plain Matters of Fact—undenied and undeniable.—No. IV.

ONE AT A TIME.

"CONSTRUCTIVE JOURNIES."

"MURDER WILL OUT."

The patience of the reader is earnestly solicited, and his best attention solemnly invoked, during the following developement of one plain matter-of-fact, demonstrated by others, undenied and undeniable. The whole, it is thought, will exhibit one of the most corrupt scenes of profligacy and depravity in the use of Executive patronage, that ever disgraced any government in any age, or in any nation. Its execution too, is attended with every mark of intentional treachery, perfidy, falsehood and concealment. It occurred in the case of Daniel P. Cook, formerly a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, from Illinois. It is stated that Mr. Cook settled his account for his travelling expenses by land to his residence in Illinois in the usual way, and actually received $8 for every 20 miles of that long journey, which he did not then perform. This case, then, affords another fruitful effect of a precedent of receiving a compensation for "constructive journies," according to the bright example set him by the President. In this novel and peculiar case, however, the most extraordinary circumstances, attend the compensation for the journey to his residence, which was then actually performed, and which rendered the performance of the other by land unnecessary.

The fact in relation to the journey actually performed, is, that a secret mission was given to Mr. Cook, real or pretended, to call at the island of Cuba on his route home, for a stipulated compensation of $2000, in consideration of his services in giving the vote of Illinois to Mr. Adams at the last Presidential Election, against the known sense of his constituents, as will hereafter most clearly appear; and for which act of treachery and cupidity, his constituents rejected him at the next election. Every circumstance attending this most singular transaction, from its origin and concealment to the time of its unexpected explosion, tends to aggravate its depravity and profligacy, [illegible] requires nothing but patience to read and attention to investigate the circumstances of the origin, design, concealment, and final disclosure to render these convictions conclusive in the mind of every lover of truth, whatever may be the previous [illegible] feelings or prejudices; and why should not every American citizen be one of the lovers of truth, and wish its developement, even if it should conflict with the most [illegible] of his heart? Is it not [illegible] to know the truth, especially [illegible]? Is it not particularly so when [illegible] is daily enveloped with political falsehoods? but alas! when the human heart once becomes enamoured with an object however unworthy of its affection, it requires almost more than human efforts to yield to the [illegible] which dissipates and dispels the [illegible] of falsehoods. Those very falsehoods which are the true causes of its own [illegible] and unfortunate impressions. How much better would it be for us all then, [illegible] we would [illegible] of falsehood [illegible] arms of truth [illegible] former impressions, [illegible] and delusive fears, [illegible] selves up to the [illegible] of truth and love of country [illegible] prejudices, in the spirit of truth and love of country, hear this [illegible] table tale from the [illegible] committee in its official reports:—

"This subject was announced by Mr. Hamilton on the 27th April, in the following manner.

"The chairman stated to the committee, that he felt it his duty to mention, that a citizen, now [illegible] of this District, had inquired of him whether, in any of the accounts of the contingent expenses of the Government, the United States were charged with the sum of $2000 paid to the late Daniel P. Cook, late representative in Congress from the State of Illinois, for certain [illegible] services, upon which Mr. Cook was supposed to have been [illegible] during the last summer?

"The individual making the communication also stated that he had [illegible] believe, that the Hon. Mr. Benton of the Senate, and the Hon. Mr. Letcher of the House of Representatives, were acquainted with this fact, and that he had good reason to believe that John McLean, Esq. Postmaster General, was also cognizant of the circumstances connected with this transaction.

"The Chairman stated that he did not feel at liberty to communicate the name of his informant, but in regard to the purport of the communication he felt no such reserve; and it was for the committee to make such order on the statement as they might deem proper.

It was, on motion of Mr. [illegible]

"Resolved, That the committee [illegible] the communication when Mr. Wickliffe moved, that the committee proceed to the examination of the fact stated, that the chairman request the attendance of Messrs. Letcher and Benton, and issue a summons for the Postmaster General.

"Mr. Everett [illegible] desiring to confer with Mr. Sergeant, who was absent [illegible] indisposition, on the very important subject involved in the communication, he would move that its consideration be postponed until to-morrow, Saturday, the 26th, at 12 o'clock; (the motion) which was carried nem. con."

Fellow Citizens, pause! Give ear! [illegible] to look, and look well, and think well upon this disclosure. It is followed by a tale of a novel and most [illegible] character—yielding to none ever told in the depth of human depravity! This unfortunate man, Daniel P. Cook, having the entire vote of Illinois in his own hands, gave the vote by ballot to Mr. Adams, at the last Presidential Election; and through its false, corrupt influence, Mr. Adams was made President of the United States. This vote was given against the sense of its constituents, as has since been sufficiently proved by dismissing him from their confidence. Under these circumstances, who is the last man in the United States Mr. Adams ought to have chosen for a secret mission, to be kept secret, and to be paid for out of the secret service fund? Surely every man of honorable feeling would answer in a moment, Daniel P. Cook—unless, indeed, there should be some other one in the United States, under similar circumstances. Unfortunately, one other was to be found—Mr. Scott, representative of Missouri. These unfortunate men stood upon equal grounds in their corrupt services for Mr. Adams, and were, of course, the last to have been preferred for such a mission. All other things, then, being equal, upon the presumption that Mr. Adams was exclusively influenced by his duties to his country, Cook is the last man in the United States except Scott, that Mr. Adams ought secretly to have chosen for a secret mission, and paid out of the secret fund. There may, indeed, be one, it is not possible there might be more than one consideration, which, on the occasion had been real, would have justified the choice—that Mr. Cook was the only man in the United States who was qualified for this secret service. Was such the fact? So far from it, that Mr. Cook was not qualified with a knowledge of the Spanish language, which was [illegible] requisite to the proper performance of the duties contained in his instructions. [illegible] other indispensable pre-requisites were, sound health, physical strength, muscular power and [illegible] intelligence. So far from Mr. Cook's possessing either, that he is proved by his own friends to the most [illegible] devotees of the administration, to have been lingering in the last stage of pulmonary consumption. Who then could have been less qualified to discharge the active rugged duties of the mission, than Mr. Cook? No human being. To what conclusion, then, must we come in [illegible] Mr. Adams' real motives for his conduct? Could they possibly have been patriotic? Do not those facts preclude the possibility of a belief, that Mr. Adams chose Mr. Cook exclusively from [illegible] for the [illegible] of the public good? It is not possible to [illegible] that he acted under any such patriotic [illegible]. The means were utterly incompatible with the end. Yet Mr. Adams must have acted under some very strong influence [illegible]. He must, then, have acted under the [illegible] some [illegible] obligation [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] the corruption and perfidy of that party [illegible] tending [illegible] to their Allegiance [illegible] once to have abandoned them [illegible] posed them to their most [illegible] gations would such conduct have [illegible] themselves, and their present and future [illegible]? How useful its example and [illegible] corrupt rulers! But lamentably to be told, the [illegible] opportunity was lost, and perhaps will never again return to the [illegible] devoted adherents voluntarily [illegible] participators in the crimes of their leaders, and [illegible] their commission, and strange infatuation, this participation [illegible] the discovery had gone too far, even by possibility to escape detection. Something might have been expected from Mr. Everett's clerical professions and habits; but so far from these blessings producing the effect of making him steadfast in the faith, despising all-worldly things, and lifting himself up amongst the Ethereals, he seems to have claimed political licenses far out-stripping the claims of the poets themselves, in the license universally accorded them, afford pleasure to the mind, by clothing it with agreeable fictions. However still [illegible] his faith, his politics constitute the essence of libertinism. Witness his early, [illegible] declaration in favour of State Rights, calling for an extension, rather than a contraction of them—whilst in his actual policy [illegible] strenuously advocated [illegible] the most preposterous means for [illegible] the most frightful and consolidat[illegible]. Witness his life, most unhappy [illegible] belong to [illegible] a corrupt party, to the [illegible] tive of the whole people [illegible]. Indeed, [illegible] Mr. Everett [illegible] the political Zodiac, from the tropic [illegible] to Capricorn, and [illegible] Mr. Sergeant, [illegible] been expected [illegible] human being. [illegible] his liberal patrons [illegible] with more in prospect [illegible] attempting an unworthy [illegible] the imagination [illegible] more corrupting [illegible] donatives for doing nothing [illegible] tempting unworthily abortive objects. [illegible] could Mr. Sergeant [illegible] cord, that bound him to them, and cast away his liberal and corrupt benefactors? [illegible] at least, in Mr. Sergeant [illegible] to be apprehended [illegible] Mr. Clay is the [illegible] the age, [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] be doubly endeared from the consideration that we have among us many of those who were your compatriots in arms in the war of the revolution, many who with you in youth braved the hardships of settling a wilderness, [illegible] to see that wilderness crowned with a flourishing country in a high state of improvement; many who rallied around the standard you raised at the instant [illegible] of savage massacre, at the commencement of the late war, and who saw you, [illegible] through peril and danger, [illegible] a succession of unparalleled victories secured peace and tranquility to our country. These have had an opportunity of witnessing all the acts of your eventful life, as well in the [illegible] as in the discharge of [illegible] civil and varied trusts conferred upon you by your [illegible] all of whom are anxious to testify by this small token of respect, the estimation in which they hold your private virtues, your [illegible] noble integrity, and your [illegible] we wish also to testify [illegible] at home and abroad, that although there are some who can bow to the propagation of calumny for the purpose of tarnishing your fame, yet, we [illegible] our friend, our neighbour, [illegible] patriotic deliverer. [illegible] individually beg leave to tender to you [illegible] our best wishes, for your present and future happiness.

ROBERT ALLEN,
A. W. OVERTON,
D. BURFORD,
ALLEN ALLISON,
AB. CARUTHERS,
Gen. Andrew Jackson. Committee.

Hermitage, May 20th, 1828.

Gentlemen—Your [illegible] note of the 14th [illegible]

[illegible]

ANDREW JACKSON.

[illegible] HENRY CLAY [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] pel the punishment so justly merited. The family of this same Charles King has received from our present excellent administration [illegible] for unfounded services [illegible] thirty-one thousand five [illegible] ninety cents [illegible] the Dartmouth [illegible] administration [illegible] New York [illegible]

[illegible]

FOR RENT.

FOR the ensuing year, the House now occupied [illegible] by Mrs. Mary [illegible] by Joseph S. [illegible] in the town of Princess Anne. For terms apply to
JAMES POLK.
July [illegible]

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of [illegible]

[illegible]

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of [illegible]

[illegible]

JOSHUA CRAIT[illegible]
July 15th, 1828.

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATIS.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, JULY 22, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory." Jefferson.

"Whose services to this nation, entitle him to its HIGHEST REWARDS."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

We are authorized to announce
Thomas Bayly,
John C. Wilson, jr.,
Anthony B. Bennett, and
John J. Davis, Esq'rs.
as Candidates to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

BLOOD AND CARNAGE!

We choose these words for the heading of our remarks because we believe the Ebony men delight far more in contemplating any thing of this kind than the subject to which we would call their attention. Several weeks since there appeared an article in the Messenger of Discord—of Lies: i. e. the Iris or Teackle's sewer, concerning a sum of $8000 received by Gen. Jackson, agreeably to law, for one year, for "pay as Major General, subsistence, rations, pay, subsistence and clothing for servants, rent, fuel, holding treaties with Choctaw Indians," &c. &c. This, to the Anti-Jacksonians, precious morceau, was selected by the "Superintendent," with exquisite care from some misnomer, into which it was transferred from the editorial department of a coalitionist who stumbled on it in the like department of another of John the 2nd's subjects, who had picked it up, the Lord knows where,—and which in its descent to the Iris or Teackle's sewer had gathered, as it went, additions and amendments, so that, by the time it was handed to the friends of Johnny Q. in Somerset, it resembled truth about as much as two hogsheads of whisky betoken "moral power." But, although the General rendered hazardous and important services in the mean time, and had several fellow labourers to divide the sum with, it is considered a most prodigiously horrid compensation. Yet, if $8000 for one year's services and expenditures, is an extravagant sum, what shall we think of the following? Ay,

☞LOOK AT THIS TOO!☜

Statement of moneys received by Mr. Adams, during the two years ending 29th April 1815, as any one may see for himself by referring to the public documents for 1821, 22, No. 120, vol. 7.

Outfit on the Ghent Mission	$9,000 00
Salary on do.	20,299 30
Contingencies do.	6,345 60
Outfit on Mission to Great Britain	9,000 00
Salary on Russian and British Missions	18,000 00
	$62,644 90

Sixty-two thousand six hundred and forty-four dollars and ninety cents, for TWO YEARS' services, or upwards of thirty-one thousand PER YEAR!! And this sum paid to the man who, at the same time, denounced the government of his country as "FEEBLE and PENURIOUS!!" But these enormous wages were charged and received by JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, the "practised statesman," who has a hereditary right to pocket the people's money, having been educated at the public expense, and received from the national treasury, first and last, about FOUR HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS!

Mr. Clay, in his book, says that as early as October, 1824, he had fully made up his mind to vote for Mr. Adams. Mr. Floyd, of Virginia, says that about the first of January, 1825, the Secretary held the following language to him:

"When I take up the pretensions of Mr. Adams, and weigh them, and lay them down—then take up the pretensions of Gen. Jackson, weigh them, and lay them down by the side of those of Mr. Adams—I never was as much puzzled in all my life, as I am to decide between them."

Qualities intrinsically estimable, will, in spite of management, falsehood and forgery, command attention, love, esteem, respect.—Hence the natural consequence that the People, in time, from true and ungarbled statements of matters of fact, become the true friends of correct principles and the warm supporters of Andrew Jackson, the terror of tories. And hence the alarm of "And co." or Teackle as exhibited in the Iris of last Tuesday. Methinks, the "community might have anticipated a discontinuance of the vile" exposures of "Constructive Journies—Waste of Public money—Uncle Sam's Extravagance—&c. &c. &c. &c." after he came to oppose the "force of those obvious facts" with "an inordinate" flood of "sinuosities—impositions—calumnies—scandalous and malicious libels—without measure and without bounds." But, sirs, (to borrow a phrase from one of your fellow labourers in corruption's cause) "the thumb nails of fate are fixed upon ye"—A proper exposition of the high-handed measures of the present debased administration, will not—"cannot fail in the estimation of every rational mind," to show in bold relief, the great necessity of elevating to the Presidential chair the man "who has filled the measure of his country's glory"—maugre all the invitations of the Ebony Superintendent of the Iris to the "examination" of "impresented proofs."

☞To the important matter presented on the subsequent page, we invite the attention of the Public in general and the POOR MAN in particular. They will there find, not only a confutation of a malicious charge brought against Gen. Jackson, but an extract from the journal of the U. S. Senate, showing that John Q. Adams voted for property qualification in voters, in opposition to the right of suffrage—that no man should be eligible as a representative, unless he held, in his own right, in fee simple, ONE HUNDRED ACRES OF LAND, and that no person should be qualified to VOTE unless he held, in like manner, FIFTY ACRES OF LAND!!! Can any genuine republican desire that such a man should continue President of the United States?

It has cost Messrs. Adams and Clay Six Hundred and Seventy Three Thousand Eight Hundred and Fifty Four Dollars MORE to manage the government during the first three years they have had it in charge, than it cost Mr. Monroe during the three years immediately preceding!!—a sum of money thus absolutely wasted by this administration, how, nobody knows but themselves; though a glance at their array of hired editors, their host of retainers, and pensioned writers, and the floods of printed libels against Jackson sent abroad in the country, will go far to explain it. A sum of money, we say, that would have schooled half a million of poor children—made half a dozen such canals as that proposed between the Raritan and Delaware, or reduced the public debt more than six millions of dollars! And yet we are asked what fault lies at the door of the administration!—and by the men too, who have been sharing this splendid plunder!"

"And Co." or Teackle quotes the misnomers "We the People" and "The Marylander" as Gospel authority! Thus we learn from whom he gets his information. Ha! ha! No wonder he says—"Birds of a feather flock together." Who colleagues with him? Does the rule hold good here? Alas! alas! how are the mighty fallen!!

Some of the filthy tory prints of the Coalition are struck with alarm at beholding the effects produced by the report of the retrenchment committee in Congress. They think it is most prodigiously severe that the secrets of the prison house in Washington—Expenditures—Waste of Public Money—should be laid before the People in spite of all the ingenuity they evinced at management, bribery, shuffling, bargaining, "&c. &c. &c. &c. &c." as Teackle's sewer has it. They say that the ferreting and hunting out of the shameful waste of Public Money by the present corrupt administration, increased the expenses of a single session of Congress to more than Half a Million of Dollars!!! And yet they want Mr. Adams re-elected that he may bestow or waste more by bribery, &c.

DELAWARE.—It is heart-cheering to observe the zeal, activity, and enthusiasm of the people of this small but patriotic state, in the cause of the second saviour of his country. All that was wanting in that quarter, to put down the cause of corruption, was light to the understandings of the people. Once acquainted with the nature of the wrongs inflicted on them by Mr. Adams and his war, pestilence, and famine Secretary—their determination to oppose and put out the usurping incumbent, was instantaneous and resolute. They now perceive in what respect the voice of the majority has been disregarded; and how the bargain of a cabal, has annihilated the constitution and the liberties of the country. Delaware has heard the trump of patriotism, and she has shaken off her slumber, in order to put to rout and confusion, the venal band of conspirators, who would manacle the people, and plunder them of their substance, their rights, and their liberties. The light of knowledge is fast diffusing itself over the minds of the people of that state. The bargain—the pledge—the corruption, and the weakness of Mr. Adams, are well known to their citizens Action is now the word and the deed. Every man is at his post—to defend his birth-right, and vindicate the sovereignty of the people from the grasp of the usurper. Delaware, like New Jersey, is with us. New York follows with 29 certain votes; and a brilliant victory awaits the cause of Jackson and the people. The banner that waved triumphant at Orleans over 14,000 British warriors, now leads us to achieve for the Hero a civil victory of 160 electoral votes.

"And Co." or Teackle calls the People "an inordinate combination." Were the people ever so called in this republic before J. Q. Adams was made President, contrary to their wishes? No, never! The epithet did not originate in the land of freedom. The unholy Coalition imported it from the usurped soil of Kings, Queens Garters, and Ribands.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Mr. Editor,

You have, perhaps, seen in the paper edited at this place a literary effusion highly complimentary, containing an exposition of the name Iris. Without dwelling on the infinite obligation existing from the literary world to this author, for his labour in letters, this scrap is intended as a passing review of the same subject. The pittance of ancient lore which has fallen to my lot has taught me that Iris was the Messenger of Juno. She acted in this capacity in the fifth book of Virgil's Eneid, where she is sent by that Goddess to burn the Trojan ships. While she was engaged in this nefarious undertaking, she did not appear in her real character, but assumed the imposing form of a certain noble matron, perfectly assured that, while remaining in her true standing, she could not effect her clandestine purposes. Again, in the ninth book of the same poem, she becomes the tool of Jupiter. The prince of Latin poets asserts her to be "Haud ignara nocendi." This is enough to show the fickleness, management and intrigue of Iris: it shows that she always received her authority from some source unknown to mankind and intentionally concealed: that she was at the nod of any one of the superiour gods who might choose to employ her.

When we look at the name Iris, the glaring inconsistency of this ebullition of mind is still more irresistibly evinced. She was sent by higher authority on errands of mischief, injury, discord and contention, and hence, the word Iris signifies nothing more nor less than strife. But the author just alluded to, has surpassed other literati, having announced a wonderful discovery, that Iris "is the emblem of the universal empire of Truth."—Now, Mr. Editor, is it sound morality to say that discord and contention go hand in hand with Truth? Will not the one or the other have the predominance? If you are unwilling to answer, let common facts and daily experience be the oracle.—Notwithstanding these palpable inconsistencies, the author says "the Somerset Iris and Messenger of Truth sounds well." He is mistaken—it sounds badly to say that Iris, the messenger of discord is in intimate union and even the same with Truth. Discord generally deteriorates the cause of truth, and stalks abroad trampling the sacred pearl under her feet. This the author must have known, or we must allow him a scanty acquaintance either with morals or ancient literature. If we say that he is acquainted with the truth on this subject we at the same time say, that he has made a wilful misrepresentation. But, indeed, there is very little to prefer between one who undertakes to turn author at the expense of his own ability and an intentional deceiver; the former is devoid of sense, the latter of principle.

Iris, the instrument of deception, artifice and calumny, with an adventitious and fictitious character, enlisted in an unjust cause and deputed from the courts of the very princess of artifice, to be selected for the title of a newspaper which wishes to be esteemed respectable! And yet our author gives the editor glowing praise for the selection of so appropriate a title for his paper! Did the editor and his parasite wish to tell the world the real character of his periodical? Did he mean that his paper would actually be what its title announces it to be? Eh! bien, Monsieur—But he should not have subjoined "the Messenger of Truth." H.

July 11th, 1828.

FALSEHOOD REFUTED.

We lately gave our readers some account of the attempts which have been made by the administration papers, to subsidise the talents and influence of the Methodist Clergy, in aid of the re-election of John Q. Adams, and thereby unite CHURCH AND STATE, after the manner of the English Monarchy. From our acquaintance with many of the ministers of that church, and their acknowledged predilection for a republican government, we did not believe they could be induced to identify their religion with the destiny of a man, equally notorious as an ARISTOCRAT and a UNITARIAN. The proud demeanor and haughty bearing of John Q. Adams, has no connexion with the piety and meekness of Christianity, and is illy suited to an association with its ministers. The following letter from the venerable Mr. Crume, formerly the Presiding Elder of this Circuit, will show the falsehood of John Binns and others of the Adams clan, in claiming the Bishops and Clergy of the Methodist church, who lately met in General Conference at Pittsburg, as partisans of the House of Braintree. But it is all in character. Wicked and corrupt rulers are compelled to resort to wicked and corrupt means to sustain themselves in power.—Nat. Repub.

To the Editors of the National Republican.

Gentlemen—In your paper of the 13th June I perceived an article signed "An Enemy to Aristocracy," and I must confess that I was somewhat surprised from his communication to find that there was any one base enough to maliciously misrepresent the Convention of the Methodist Episcopal church held at Pittsburg, and I now feel myself under the necessity to inform "an Enemy to Aristocracy," that he was correct in his position, that the administration presses have SLANDERED a large and respectable body of Clergymen. For to my knowledge, we neither had a secret or public conlave assembled for the purpose of testing our strength upon the Presidential question; and as for our making any attempts to become the National Church, it would have been spurned as soon by the members of the Convention generally as it would be by the community at large.

I also observed a quotation in the Ohio State Journal, from the Crawford Messenger, stating that "at the General Convention of the Methodist Episcopal church, now in session at Pittsburgh, there are 197 members including six Bishops, in that highly respectable body of men, and but Seven were in favour of Gen. Jackson, and the remaining 190 in favour of Adams," "this, as the Messenger remarks, is no ordinary Sign of the Times." I think so myself—when parties will stoop so low, and resort to such pitiful falsehoods, to prop the cause of any man. There does not appear to be any ingenuity in this tale, or the authors appear to be extremely ignorant relative to the existing facts of the Convention. In the first instance, they state that there were 197 men, including six Bishops. Now the fact is, that there were only 177 delegates altogether—consequently their number could not consist of more, provided they all attended, which was not the case, for to my knowledge there were about twenty absent; and secondly, they state "including six Bishops," when it is a notorious fact that there are but five in the United States, belonging to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

To conclude, I pledge myself that National politics, in no shape whatever, were introduced in our deliberations, either as a body of Christian Ministers or private citizens. We understood better what we had to represent than that; besides, had we been inclined so to do, we would have been well aware that instead of representing the Church we should have misrepresented it, and consequently held ourselves out for a target to be shot at by both Christians and Politicians. I will venture to assert that no man, however prying he might have been, was able to gather the general or particular sentiments of all the members of that body; but should he have been able to accomplish his purpose, I presume he would have found us, like all other members of the community, divided in our views on the Presidential question.

MOSES CRUME.

From the National Republican.

THE METHODIST CONVENTION.

I was gratified to observe in the last Republican, a letter from the Revd. Moses Crume, of Oxford, Butler county, relative to the base attempt of the entire corps of the administration editors, to blast the reputation of a christian church, and brand its representatives with entering into an ecclesiastical combination to promote the election of John Quincy Adams; similar to the political one, secretly managed by the Hon. John C. Wright, in March, 1827.—Those acquainted with the venerable minister, whose names affixed to the communication, know him to be a man of piety and exemplary conduct, and to enjoy the confidence of the christian body to which he belongs, as well as that of his neighbors and acquaintances generally. The members of the Methodist Church are earnestly requested to examine impartially into the subject, and decide whether they can lend their support to, and become the advocates of, men who connive at such infamous conduct as that which charges the heralds of salvation with descending from their holy and consecrated offices, to enter into the political disquietudes which distract the nation. A majority of the Methodists are the advocates of Gen. Jackson, and I cannot doubt, that those who reflect on the late attacks on their ministers, will open their eyes to the light, and see the precipice on which they stand. It was but a short time previous to this manœuvre, that a prominent member of the same church, was accused before the public, with dishonesty in the discharge of his official duties: I refer to the Postmaster General. The personal friends of Mr. McLean, without regard to party, have ever admired the traits of his private character; and admired his devotion to the various moral and religious duties imposed on him, as an official member of a christian church. To those persons, it is a source of regret, that editors could be found so destitute of moral principles, as to attempt to darken the reputation of a man whose whole conduct through life, both private and public, had been one of an unusually exemplary nature. These slanders recoil on the heads of their authors, and will serve to convince many who were regardless of the consequences of voting for Mr. Adams, that by advocating a man who denies the divinity of Christ, they are preparing the way for his partisans to power, who will traduce, vilify, and misrepresent any facts, to ensure office. An Enemy to Aristocracy.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF NEW YORK.

From the Ithica, (N. Y.) Journal.

We have noticed several estimates made by the friends of Mr. Adams, in anticipation of the electoral votes of this state. In one of these estimates they have the modesty to claim thirty one votes for Mr. Adams! These calculators, one and all, either deceive themselves, or intend to deceive others. The more knowing ones, perhaps, determined to lose nothing for want of assurance, hope by making great claims, to secure a little: And a little, from the sum total of electoral votes, is all they can obtain in this state. To show the fallacy of the calculations referred to, we state, that the districts composed of the city of New York, the counties of Orange, Ulster and Sullivan, Greene and Delaware, Albany, Rensselaer, Onondaga, Cayuga and Tompkins, &c. &c. are all claimed for Mr. Adams, whereas there is not a possibility of his obtaining any one of them. Now, as to the aggregate. No rational, intelligent supporter of Mr. Adams, will seriously pretend, that he can obtain a majority of the electors chosen in districts. There are, chosen by the people, 34 electors, of which, to have a majority, Gen. Jackson must have eighteen. This majority choose the other two electors, making twenty: and these TWENTY votes are as certain for General Jackson, as any thing can be which is not positively determined. But, from six to nine MORE votes, General Jackson will in all probability obtain. We have, for two years past, closely observed the indications of publick opinion in this State; and from these, and the best information we can obtain, the following estimate is formed. We feel confident, it will vary little from the actual result. We shall be obliged to our friends in the several districts for the correction of any probable error, be it either for or against our favorite conclusion. And we invite the rational supporters of Mr. Adams, who do not desire to spend their breath in uselessly reviling the hero, patriot, and favorite of the people, seriously to contemplate this map of public sentiment, and draw from it what consolation or encouragement they can.

Districts.	Counties.	Jackson.	Adams.
1st,	Suffolk and Queens	1
2d,	Kings, Richmond, and Rockland	1
3d,	New York	3
4th,	Westchester and Putnam	1
5th,	Dutchess	1
6th,	Orange	1
7th,	Ulster and Sullivan	1
8th,	Columbia		1
9th,	Rensselaer	1
10th,	Albany	1
11th,	Greene and Delaware	1
12th,	Schoharie & Schenectady	1
13th,	Otsego	1
14th,	Oneida		1
15th,	Herkimer	1
16th,	Montgomery	1
17th,	Saratoga	1
18th,	Washington		1
19th,	Franklin, Clinton, Essex and Warren,	1
20th,	Oswego, Jefferson, Lewis and St. Lawrence	2
21st,	Chenango and Broome	1
22d,	Madison and Cortland	1
23d,	Onondaga	1
24th,	Cayuga	1
25th,	Tompkins and Tioga	1
26th,	Ontario, Seneca, Wayne, and Yates		2
27th,	Monroe and Livingston		1
28th,	Cattaraugus, Allegany, and Steuben,	1
29th,	Genesee and Orleans	1
30th,	Chatauque, Erie, & Niagara		1
		27	7
	Chosen by maj'ty of the electors	2
		29

A BET.—As we know that the Adams men are a betting as well as a boasting tribe, and that they make assertions in regard to the result of the election in this state, and in the United States, in which they do not believe—we are authorized, in order to test their confidence in their predictions, to offer the following bets:—$1,500, that Jackson will get a majority of the electoral votes of this state—$2,000, that he will be elected President of the United States, and $100 that he will have one—the like sum, that he will have two—the like sum that he will have three majority, and so on up to fifteen majority over Mr. Adams, at the next election, both candidates being alive when the votes are counted. If the Adams men have confidence in their declarations, let them close with this proposition, which they have received with the most [illegible] sible [illegible] Adams prospects. We will repeat this offer from time to time, in reply to any assertions they may make. Noah.

SECRETARY SOUTHARD.

This sapient Secretary of our Navy, seems to have imbibed (we suppose from association with John Q.) the hatred of the Adams family towards foreigners. In his Report to the Senate of the United States, at their late session, he says—

☞"It would be fortunate, in every respect, if not one man floated upon an American bottom, either MERCANTILE or MILITARY, who did not claim AMERICAN soil as his BIRTH PLACE."☜

Again—☞"That FOREIGN seamen, although NATURALIZED, be as rapidly excluded from our navy as possible." ☞"In conformity with this suggestion, an ORDER has been issued to the officers engaged in recruiting, directing them to seek, first, NATIVE AMERICANS, and to enlist NONE OTHER except as matter of necessity."☜

Again Secretary Southard suggests to the Senate ☞That LANDSMEN be enlisted in the INTERIOR. Such (says he) as are picked up in the CITIES, are generally dissipated men, advanced in years, with bad habits and enfeebled constitutions; who never can become useful in any capacity."

Now the greatest part of the foregoing, although it comes from Mr. ADAMS' Secretary of the Navy, does appear to be the sheerest nonsense we have ever seen.

"Foreign seamen, although naturalized, are to be "as rapidly excluded as possible, from our navy." Why? What disadvantage found to result, during the last war, from the employment of naturalized foreigners? Why should they be excluded? Are they not citizens? Have they not proved their attachment to our country, by leaving their own, to fix their homes here? Didn't they fight gallantly for the "star-spangled banner" during the last war? Why admit foreigners to become citizens, if they are always to be treated as aliens?"

But the truly ridiculous part of the Secretary's Report is, his recommendation, "that men be enlisted in the interior." Go to Harrisburg, Fredericktown, Pittsburg, &c. &c. to get seamen! This must make the old Sea Captains of Baltimore laugh. Does the Secretary suppose, that the hardy robust "landsmen" of Frederick county, or of Lancaster county, are going to quit their ploughs and their pleasant fields to go to sea? The idea is ridiculous! Nor if men are enlisted in the interior for sea service, they will only be those who hang about the little villages drinking and idling, and who are as worthless as those, who are described by the Secretary, as belonging to the "cities." But suppose a recruiting officer were to bring down a crew of stout, hardy German farmers from Pennsylvania—we should like to know what Captain, whether "mercantile or military," would like to trust himself at sea with them?

It is but too evident, that this recommendation of Mr. Adams' Secretary of the Navy, to exclude all foreigners from the service, has its origin in the deep hatred and dislike, which Mr. ADAMS has always evinced towards foreigners. The inhabitants of the "cities," the Adams men say, are generally against ADAMS, and it seems from the Secretary's ordering his recruiting officers not to enlist in the cities, that Adams is also against them.

We should like to see ADAMS and Southard, with a crew of "landsmen," at sea, with the management of a Baltimore clipper, or a man of war. We fancy they would not look less awkward than a sailor on horseback.

We would suggest to the Secretary of the Navy, the propriety of establishing a naval Arsenal at Fredericktown. The "interior" would be a fine place to build vessels. We don't pretend to be much of judges of these matters, but it seems to us, that one of the great faults of our former system has been not having cavalry aboard all our men of war! If, instead of Marines, each vessel of war were to have a troop of Cavalry aboard, we think she would be much more formidable. Independent of the advantages of this sort of force in a sea fight, it would offer a great inducement to the "landsmen" to go without their horses. We barely throw out the suggestion with all deference to the Secretary's better judgement.

Baltimore Republican.

WRECK.—A New Orleans paper of the 20th ultimo, states that on the 20th May, Captain Hatch, of the brig Horace from Havre, off the west end of St. Domingo fell in with the wreck of the English brig Robert, Captain Robinson, lying on her beam ends, and nearly under water. Captain H. took from the wreck the only living person on board, a young man named Alexander Jones, aged 17 years, of the town of Princess-Anne, in Maryland. All the crew and passengers, with the exception of this young man, perished. He was in the cabin at the time the vessel capsized, in company with three other passengers, and heard the captain give some orders in a hurried manner to the crew, who were all on deck; immediately after which the brig capsized. She was from St. Thomas, bound to Montego Bay, with a cargo of produce and lumber. Captain Hatch cut a whole through her quarter with the hope of extricating the other three passengers who were in the cabin; the body of only one of them was found. It was supposed that the others were buried in the cargo. The sea broke over the wreck with such violence, that it was found impossible to effect any thing forward. A bundle of letters was seen floating out of the skylight, about ten feet under water, which the mate of the Horace, Mr. Foss, dived after and brought up; they were dried and will be carefully forwarded to the persons to whom they are addressed. American.

IN CHANCERY.

12TH JULY, 1828.

ORDERED, That the sale of the real estate of William Waters, made and reported by the Trustee, Marcellus Jones, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause be shewn to the contrary on or before the 12th day of September next, provided a copy of this order be inserted once in each of three successive weeks, in one of the newspapers published in Somerset county, before the 12th day of August next. The report states the amount of sales to be $601 25.

True copy. TEST, RAMSAY WATERS, Reg. in Chan.

July 22, 1828.

[illegible] FALSEHOOD.

[illegible] Gen. Jackson, as a member of the convention which framed the constitution of the State of Tennessee, voted for a property qualification, the coalition prints have copied an extract from the constitution of that State in the following words: "[illegible] freemen of the age of twenty-one years and upwards, possessing a freehold in the county wherein they may offer to vote, and being inhabitants of any one county within the State six months immediately preceding the day of election shall be entitled to a vote for members of the General Assembly, for the county in which they shall respectively reside."

From the fact that these words are to be found in the constitution of Tennessee, an argument is made that General Jackson is in favor of a property qualification for a voter. To sustain this charge it must first appear that the section has been fairly and correctly quoted, and secondly that Gen. Jackson voted for it.

By a reference to the constitution it appears that, as usual, the Adams and Clay men have altered the record. The section reads thus:

"Section 1st. All freemen of the age of twenty one years and upwards, possessing a freehold in the county where they may offer to vote, and being inhabitants of the State, and all freemen who have been inhabitants of any one county within the State, six months immediately preceding the day of the election, shall be entitled to a vote for members of the General Assembly, for the county in which they shall respectively reside."

Here it will be seen that the comma, after the words [illegible] has been converted into a semicolon, and the words "of the State; and all freemen who have been inhabitants," printed in italics, have been omitted. Why was this forgery published? As printed by the Adams prints, the clause would give color to the charge, if they could prove that General Jackson voted for the section; whereas the practice under the constitution, has been to allow all persons to vote, who possess a free hold in the county, and are inhabitants of the State, who have not been six months resident in the State, under the first member of the section, and under the [second] all freemen, who have been inhabitants of any county within the State, six months immediately preceding the election, are also permitted to vote. It will be seen that the section, as it is in the constitution, recognizes two classes of voters. One who own a free hold in the county, and are inhabitants of the State, at the time of the election, but whose residence is less than six months; and others who own no free hold, but have been inhabitants six months, preceding the election.

This was a regulation in favor of the citizen, who had removed to the State, and had given an evidence of his determination to become a bona fide citizen, to be found in the constitution of no other State. Instead of restricting the right of suffrage, it enlarges it. The argument against a property qualification, is, that the vote is given to property, not to the man. Here the possession of property is received as an evidence that the inhabitant has resolved to become a bona fide citizen, and it is his intention to become a permanent inhabitant, to possess a community of interests with the great body of the voters, that operates to place him on a footing with those, who having no free hold, have manifested the same intention by a residence of six months.

That each community, ought to preserve the control of its own internal concerns, from the official intermedling of strangers, who are in one place to-day, and in another to-morrow, cannot be denied. If every man, the moment he sat his feet on the soil of a State, was entitled to vote, Mr. Adams would send an army of travelling clerks, and hundreds of office holders and office seekers, to decide the next election, by running from State to State, and county to county.

Why has this fraud, this forgery been practised? If truth would have answered the purpose, it is fair to presume, that falsehood would not have been resorted to. The publication of such forgeries, can have no other object, than to destroy the character of the [illegible], and injure the party which is under the necessity of using them. Had a Jackson man been guilty of such a gross violation of truth and fairness, we should have heard it echoed from Maine to Florida—and it is no bad "Sign" in our favor, that all the [illegible] of this class, are on the part of our [illegible].

But what shows this matter in an equally [illegible] point of view, is, that it does not appear from any record whatever, that General Jackson voted for or against this proposition.

[U. S. Telegraph.

[From the Delaware Gazette.]

ANOTHER FABRICATION.

The Adams men have now got up a story that Gen. Jackson, in a Convention to form a constitution for the State of Tennessee, [voted] for a property qualification in the voter. The following article stamps that story with falsehood.—What shall we have [next?]

GENERAL JACKSON AND THE RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

General Jackson having been represented by his enemies as inimical to universal suffrage, the Nashville committee (appointed at a public meeting for the purpose of detecting and exposing the numerous falsehoods circulated against him,) published an address, which contained the subjoined paragraph, noticing this charge. The gentlemen who signed the address, and whose names are attached to the extract, stand among the most respectable citizens of this country. One of them is [illegible] to our present minister to France; another, Mr. Campbell, was late minister to [illegible].

"It is alleged that General Jackson, when a member of the Tennessee Convenion, voted for a property qualification in a voter.—This the committee positively assert is untrue. It is notorious that he advocated the Constitution of the State, which secures the right of suffrage to every freeman."

[John] Overton, Chair'n,	Robert Foster
[illegible] Champbell,	Wm. L. Crown,
[illegible] Watson,	Robert White,
[illegible] Claiborne,	Joseph Philips,
[illegible] Graham,	Wm. B. Lewis,
[illegible] Wharton,	Edward Ward,
[illegible] Balch,	Felix Robertson,
[illegible] Shelby,	Josiah Nichol,
[illegible] White,	John M'Nairy.

[The] matter is settled with regard to General Jackson, and it shows that the allegation is false. But it is not so with Mr. Adams. We shall show by undeniable testimony, that Mr. Adams has voted, not only for a property qualification in voters, but for other provisions equally repugnant to the principles of a republican government. While Mr. Adams was a Senator in Congress, the following will be found upon the journal of that body:

"Friday, Feb. 10th, 1804.—On the second reading of the bill to erect Louisiana into two territories, an amendment was offered containing the following provisions:

"1st. That no person should be elegible to a seat in the territorial legislaure, unless he owned one hundred acres of land, or a house and lot in the city of New Orleans.

"2d. That no person should be qualified to vote for a representative, unless he owned 50 acres of land.

"3d. That the governor of the territory should have power to prorogue the legislature.

"4th. That he should have power to dissolve it.

"5th. That he should have power to negative the bills passed by the legislature."

Mr. Adams voted for the amendment containing those five provisions, in a minority of five, as may be seen by reference to the Journal of the Senate, vol. 3. page 354.

From the U. S. Telegraph.

Adams and the Poor Man.

In the Senate of the U. States.

Friday, Feb. 10, 1804.

"The Senate resumed the second reading of the bill erecting Louisiana into two territories, and making provision for the temporary government thereof; and—

"On motion, by Mr. Anderson, to amend the bill, by adding the following after the eleventh section:

"As soon as there shall be —— thousand free white male inhabitants, of full age, in the territory, upon giving proof thereof to the governor, they shall receive authority, with time and place, to elect representatives from their counties or townships, to represent them in the general assembly. Provided, That for every five hundred free, white, male inhabitants, there shall be one representative, and so on progressively with the number of free, white, male inhabitants, shall the right of representation increase; until the number of representatives shall amount to ——; after which, the number and proportion of representatives shall be regulated by the legislature: Provided, that no person be eligible, or qualified to act, as a representative, unless he shall have previously resided THREE YEARS within the limits of said territory, and shall likewise hold in his own right in fee simple, ONE HUNDRED ACRES OF LAND, or, in like manner, possess A HOUSE AND LOT in the City of Orleans: Provided, also, That a freehold of FIFTY ACRES OF LAND in the territory, and a residence within the limits for ONE YEAR previous to its formation,* shall be necessary to qualify a man as an elector of a representative.

"Sec.—The representatives thus elected shall serve for the term of two years; and in case of the death of a representative, or removal from office, the Governor shall issue a writ to the county or township for which he is a member, to elect another in his stead, or serve for the representative of the term.

"Sec.—The general Assembly, or Legislature, shall consist of the Governor, Legislative Council, and a House of Representatives: the Legislative Council shall consist of — members, to continue in office five years, unless sooner removed by the President, any —— of whom to be a quorum, and the members of the council shall be nominated and appointed in the following manner, to wit: As soon as a representative shall be elected, the Governor shall appoint a time and place for them to meet together, and when met they shall nominate —— persons, residents in the territory, and each possessed of a free hold in —— Hundred Acres of Land, and return their names to the President, —— of whom he shall nominate, and, by and with the commission; and, whenever a vacancy shall happen in the council, by death, resignation, or removal from office, the House of Representatives shall nominate two persons, qualified as aforesaid, for each vacancy, and return their names to the President, one of whom he shall, in manner aforesaid, appoint and commission for the residue of the term; and every five years four months at least before the expiration of the time of service of the members of council, the said House shall nominate —— persons, qualified as aforesaid, and return their names to the President, —— of whom he shall, in manner aforesaid, appoint and commission to serve as members of council five years, unless sooner removed. And the Governor, Legislative Council, and House of Representatives, shall have authority to make laws, in all cases, for the good government of the district, not repugnant to, nor inconsistent with, the constitution and laws of the United States. And all bills having passed by a majority in the House of Representatives, and by a majority in the council, shall be referred to the Governor for his assent: but no bill or legislative act whatever, shall be of any force WITHOUT HIS CONSENT. The Governor shall have power to CONVENE, PROROGUE, and DISSOLVE, the general assembly, when in his opinion, it shall be EXPEDIENT."

And on the question to agree to this amendment, it passed in the negative—yeas 5, nays 19.

The yeas and nays being required by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are,

Messrs. ADAMS, Anderson, Cocke, Condict and Worthington.

Those voted in the negative, are,

Messrs. Armstrong, Baldwin, Bradly, Breckenridge, Brown, Dayton, Ellery, Franklin, Hillhouse, Jackson, Olcott, Pickering, Potter, John Smith, Samuel Smith, Stone, Sumpter, Venable, and Wright.

[Journal of the U. S. Senate, vol. 3 p. 354.

* A more effectual means to prevent the purchase of lands in the territory, and to check its population, could not have been devised. No man would be so silly as to buy lands in a country not likely to be improved, and no man would be willing to emigrate from any section of the Union in which he had a voice in the enactment of laws, to become subject to the caprice of the few individuals, recently members of a monarchal government, who occupied the "territory one year previous to its formation," and who would have constituted an Aristocracy of the ultra school.—Eds. Tel.

HENRY WARFIELD AND THE BARGAIN.

The following, which we copy from an article that recently appeared in the Louisiana Journal, sustains our friend of the Frederick Citizen in the charges, which he has made against Mr. Henry Warfield, and confirms the charge of BARGAIN in the last Presidential election, which has been made by the Jackson party against Adams & Clay. The public attention should always be kept to this subject, as the great, original sin of Adams and Clay, and the violated spirit of the Constitution demands, that upon this offence, they should be condemned. The means by which they have endeavoured to retain their ill-gotten power would be sufficient cause for their ejection by an insulted and injured people; but we should be best pleased to see them hurled from office upon the charge, that they have violated the WILL of the PEOPLE, and BARGAINED for the Chief Magistracy; and on this, we doubt not, they will be condemned.—Balt. Rep.

From the Louisiana Journal.

"Henry, or Harry Warlfield, as he is more frequently called, was elected a Federal member from Maryland in 1824. At the time of his election, he was an ardent and thorough-going Jackson man, and soon after his election, he wrote to his brother, Charles A. Warfield, then a planter in this Parish, acquainting him of the fact of his election and of his decided preference for Gen. Jackson; if not among all the candidates, at least in opposition to John Quincy Adams. In this "mood and temper" of mind Mr. Henry Warfield remained until the session of Congress. "About three or four weeks after the session commenced, Mr. Warfield wrote his brother Charles another letter, in which he stated, that since the meeting of Congress, he had perhaps at the solicitation of Mr. Clay, and on the invitation of Mr. Adams himself, had one or two private interviews with the latter, in reference to the Presidential Election, and to the course of policy which Mr. Adams would pursue and adopt, if elected; that the result of these interviews with Mr. Adams was a determination on his part, to vote for Mr. Adams, and as his vote would turn the scale of the Maryland vote; that that State would go for Adams. After this, he proceeds to say, that his friend Clay would be made Secretary of State, under Mr. Adams. We do not undertake to give the precise language of the letters, for we never saw them, but that we give the import and substance we have the word of Mr. Warfield, and of others, to whom he read them. After they were read to a gentleman of this Parish, copies of them were first requested and afterwards demanded on the ground that the contents of them ought to be considered public property. Mr. Charles A. Warfield, refused to give the copies, and to all applications for a sight of the letters since says, that he has burnt them. Unless, however, we are greatly misinformed, he did on the celebration of the 8th of January last state to one of the New York delegation, Col. Hamilton, and also to the author of "Jefferson," the contents of the letters, although destroyed. Mr. Charles A. Warfield is now living in the city of N. Orleans, and if we have stated any thing in reference to the contents of those letters which is not so, we shall conceive it a favour to be put right. But if Mr. C. A. Warfield, undertakes to correct our statement, we hope that he will consider himself bound by the rule of such as plead a mimomer, and give the contents in totidem verbis. In justice to ourself, it is proper to remark, that we violate no faith and betray no trust in making this disclosure.—That part of the contents of the two letters which we have alluded to, has become public, and as they furnish something more in the way of proof than the shadow of evidence of the charge preferred against Mr. Adams we did not know that we could render Mr. Walsh a greater favour than by putting them at his service."

Clay has taken his departure for Kentucky, to manage the August election there!—How is this?—Mr. Clay is Secretary of State, and yet he must superintend a State election!! Are we awake? Is this real? Is it possible that corruption has reached so rank a head?—What! are not the people competent to self-government?—Must they be driven like negroes, by pensioned leaders, reeking with the sweat of official corruption?—Out upon it!—There is some mistake here!—We cannot be the free Americans, who won Independence at the price of blood; and reared a republican government on the basis of free suffrage. We must be all royalists—all Englishment. And this Mr. Clay must be the king's son, gone to the Province of Kentucky, to look after his father's slaves!—Yes; it is so!—The King has sent his heir to visit every city, town, and hamlet, to put down rebellion, and keep the people from free thought and free action. Phil. Mercury

Letter from a Member of Congress to a gentlement in Cincinnati, dated Washington, May, 19, 1828.

Dear Sir,—You have enclosed me a newspaper which contains an article upon the subject of the amount expended by Mr. Adams for household furniture since his election. I assure you I could not be otherwise than astonished to learn that any one had the boldness to assert that Mr. Adams had only expended $6,000 for furniture since his election. Now, Sir, I am here on the spot with the law and documents before me which disprove this statement. I have been a member of Congress prior to and ever since the election of Mr. Adams, and know the facts which I state to be true.

In 1825, upon the election of Mr. Adams, the sum of $14,000 was placed under his control, and he put it under the control of his son, John Adams, Jr. to purchase furniture. This sum has been expended, and the account settled at the treasury. It will be recollected, that it was to this fund that young Mr. Adams charged the Billiard Table, &c. At the session of 1825—6 a law was passed appropriating $25,000 more to furnish the east room. This sum was to be expended in the purchase of articles exclusively of domestic manufacture. At the next session of congress, a bill was reported by Mr. Everett to amend the act making this appropriation, so as to place it at the discretion of the president, urging as a reason that as the law of the last session did not place the money under the control of any one particularly, no one could draw it from the treasury. I then rose in my seat and declared my determination to offer an amendment to repeal the former appropriation. Then Mr. Everett offered an amendment to repeal all but six thousand, upon the ground that the president had expended the amount in the purchase of furniture before he knew of the defect in the law of 1826. I well recollect Mr. Everett's declaration, and if you will turn to the Intelligencer of June or July, you will see the report of debates on this subject.—The law was so modified and $6,000 drawn from the treasury by Mr. Adams to purchase furniture for the east room. There was no furniture in that room on the first January last, except some old chairs, yet I repeat the fact, $6,000 have been drawn from the treasury under a law to purchase furniture for it. So you will see Mr. Adams has expended for furniture in less than two years of his administration $20,000—that is, he has drawn it from the treasury of the U. States. I refer to the acts of congress of 1824—'25, 1825—'6 and 1826—'7. You may publish this letter, and should the fact be controverted by any respectable gentleman, you may give him my name, provided he will promise to controvert the truth of what I say over his own signature. I mean by this course to except Charles Hammond or any other thing in the shape of man who disgraces his genius by assailing female character through the press. Yours.

OFFICIAL ELECTIONEERING.

Our readers are already aware that the committee on retrenchment, at Washington, ferreted out the fact of Adams and Clay paying Daniel P. Cook, of Illinois, who gave that state to Adams, by which he was appointed to the presidency, a LARGE SUM OF MONEY for some secret service which they refuse to communicate to the public. This is probably one of the most flagrant acts of CORRUPTION ever practised in a free country, and has produced a strong excitement all over the Union. Knowing that the development of this transaction would furnish additional reasons for superseding the present administration, by honest and faithful public servants, the coalition have become seriously alarmed. After the adjournment of congress, on the 26th ult. a plan was got up by Adams and Clay, to counteract the wide spreading influence which that development was calculated to produce. Adams calls on Clay to make an official report to him, on the subject, which Mr. Clay made on the third inst. and caused it to be published in the National Intelligencer, of the seventh, by which it appears that fifteen hundred dollars were paid to Cook, in his life time, but that his accounts have not yet been settled with his legal representatives. A more paltry trick never was contrived to deceive and mislead a free people:—it is too shallow even for the Ebony faction.

National Republican.

MR. ADAMS AT GHENT.

Gentlemen—In the Boston Centinel, the organ of the Hartford Convention, during the last war, and at present publisher of the laws of the Union, by "authority" of Henry Clay, you will find, under date of March 25, 1815, the subjoined "interesting" article:

"The following article, translated from a Ghent paper, will be found interesting:

Ghent, December 29. Yesterday the American Legation gave a magnificent dinner to the English Ambassadors, at which the Intendant and numerous Hanoverian Staff officers were present. Every thing indicated that a most perfect reconciliation had taken place between the two nations.

Lord Gambier had risen to give "the United States of America" as the first toast; but His Excellency was PREVENTED by Mr. J. Q. Adams, who gave "His Majesty the King of England,"—on which the music struck up "God save the King." Lord Gambier then gave "The United States of North America," and the music played "Hail Columbia."

Count H. Van Steinhuyer then gave—"The Pacificators of the States—May their union contribute to the happiness of the Department which is confided to my government; and may their Excellencies communicate to their governments the lively interest which those under me take in their reconciliation."

Mr. Adams then gave—"His Royal Highness the Prince of Orange;" and Mr. Gallatin and Lord Gambier, both begged the Intendant to certify to the city of Ghent the gratitude of the Ministers for the attention which the inhabitants had shown them."

In reading over the foregoing extract, I was forcibly impressed with the contrast between Mr. Adams and the representatives of the Princes with whom he was feasting.—Lord Gambier and Count Steinhuyer both joined Mr. Gallatin in complimenting the People—whilst Mr. Adams, in the exuberance of his contempt for the "weak and penurious" government of the United States, would not suffer Lord Gambier to toast our country, until he had first offered his devotion to the "KING of England!" whose liege subjects had recently violated every principle of honorable warfare in their naval and military operations against us. But Mr. Adams was educated a monarchist, and his devotion to monarchs is only an hereditary principle, as may be seen in the following letter from the patriarch Langdon, who was vilified and traduced in '98, as Mr. Woodbury is by the same party at the present time:

"Portsmouth, October 18, 1800.

"Dear Sir,—In the conversation held between us Mr. Adams certainly expressed himself (as far as my memory serves me) in the very words mentioned in your letter viz. that he hoped, or expected to see the day when Mr. Taylor, and his friend Mr. Giles, would be convinced that the people of America would not be happy without a hereditary Chief Magistrate and Senate, or at least for life.

"Believe me sincerely,

"Your obedient servant,

"JOHN LANGDON

"Samuel Ringold." W. Tel.

From the Bridgeton (N. Y.) Observer.

A SIGN—It is a remarkable fact that there are residing in this county and the inmates of the same family, three persons whose ages jointly make 208 years; each of whom were more or less engaged in the glorious struggle for independence, and each of whom feels deeply interested in the election of that patriot Andrew Jackson. They are all in the enjoyment of good health, and it is highly probable they will live many years; it is however their earnest desire to see once more, ere they leave this world, pure Republicanism triumph over Toryism in the Election of Old Hickory. The first one alluded to will in a few months be 75 years of age.

the 2d.	67
the 2d.	66
	—208 years in all.

☞LICENSE LAW.

"From and after the 1st May, 1828, no "licence may be issued of longer duration "than until the 1st May thereafter, and the "same licence money must be paid therefor "as for a whole year, no matter at what "time, in the interval, it may be applied for "and granted. Those whose licences shall "not have expired 1st May, 1828, may in "virtue thereof continue to sell, until they "expire, such articles only, as those licences "authorise the sale of."

For the information of the public, I deem it proper to publish the above extract, which embraces a part of the construction placed, by the Treasury department, on the present license law—in order that those interested may come prepared, on the 1st of the ensuing month, when many licenses will expire, to renew the same with a proper understanding of the provisions of that law.

GEO. HANDY, Clerk of S. C. C.

July 10th, 1828.

Baltimore Prices Current.

July 18, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $6 a 6.50; superfine Howard-st. 4.75 a 4.87½; city mills 4.50; Susquehanna, 4.37½ a 4.50; WHEAT, best red .85 a .90; best white .95 a 1.00—CORN, .36 a .38; OATS .20 a .22

Contents of the American Farmer, July 18.

Raw Potatoes, bad for Milch Cows—Douglas' Threshing Machine—Family Spinner—Premium offered of $100, by Massachusetts Agricultural Society, for best Butter—On Wheel Carriages—Extracts from the Manual on the Culture and Manufacture of Silk, with remarks and notes, and an engraving of a Silk Reel—Preservation of Peach Trees—Plums—Letter from Dr. S. L. Mitchell to Wm. Prince on his Treaties on Horticulture—To Horticulturists—The Process of making Castor Oil—Mr. Parmentier's Horticulture and Flower Garden on Long Island—Fourth of July in Washington, commencement of the Canal and President Adams' Address on breaking the ground—On Buying Bargains—Pedigrees of Thorough bred Horses, continued—Editorial Extract of a letter from Mr. Jacobs, of London—Prince's Gooseberries—Foreign intelligence—Commercial Record—Advertisements—Prices Current.

☞A Camp Meeting will commence at Nanticoke Point on the 14th of next August.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Court of Appeals for the Eastern Shore of Maryland and to me directed, at the suit of John Parsons use of George C. and John H. Johnson against John Smart, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate of the said John Smart in and to a tract of land lying and being in my bailiwick, called Wright's Conclusion, containing two hundred and sixty acres, more or less, being the same lands which were conveyed to a certain John Dashiell by Charles Jones, Sheriff of Somerset county, by deed bearing date the first day of March, 1825, and at present occupied by Mr. Kendal Parsons, and which I shall proceed to sell at the Court-House door in the town of Princess-Anne, in Somerset county, on Tuesday the 12th day of August next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock, P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

July 22, 1828.

FOR RENT,

For the ensuing year, that FARM which was formerly the property of William Tilghman, dec'd. situated on the head of Back Creek. For terms apply to

JAMES STEWART.

July 22, 1828. kw

WANTED.

I want to hire a COLOURED WOMAN, of good character, who understands cooking and house work in general. To such a one I will give liberal wages. Enquire at the Village Herald office. July 22

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phœbus.

For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

June 3, 1828. wk

CONSTABLE's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by George M. Willing, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, one, James Dorman use of Jery. Mezzick use of Hooper & Jenkins against Louda Riggin and James Powell, and one George Wright against Louda Riggin, I have seized and taken in execution as the property of the said Louda, one negro Girl named Sarah, which said negro girl I shall sell on the 22nd of July next, to the highest bidder for ready cash, at the Court-House door, in Princess-Anne, between 2 and 3 o'clock P. M. to satisfy the above claims.

SAMUEL McBRYDE,

June 24—j1 Constable.

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form, and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks,

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
CA. SA.'s before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas.
WARRANTS.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks,

PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms,

At the Office of the Village Herald.

THE CORNUCOPIÆ.

"Blending the useful with the sweet."

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

LINES sacred to the memory of the Rev. James G. Lanyon, itinerant preacher of the Gospel in the Methodist E. Church, on Annamessex Circuit, who died in the year 1824.

He lived beloved and died lamented.

How sure was the arrow that flew from his bow,
And holy the fire that glow'd in his breast;
How great was his ardour Jehovah to know,
And brilliant his prospect of going to rest.

How soft was the thunder that roll'd from his tongue,
And mild was the lightning that beam'd from his eye,
While hundreds upon him in silence have hung,
Who taught them, in rapture, to live and to die.

How often he spoke of the glories ahead,
Of pleasures unnumber'd and riches untold,
Where toil and affliction forever are fled,
And heaven doth its sweeter enjoyments unfold.

How often he told of the riches of grace,
The love of Jehovah, the gift of His Son,
The kingdom of glory, the regions of peace,
Which God will illumine in place of the sun.

But his warfare is ended—no more he'll appear
On the walls of our Zion, nor will he be seen
To comfort the mourner, the pensive to cheer,
Or shed on the darken'd of knowledge the beam.

Hung up is his shield in the armory of God,
And sheath'd is the sword he successful did wield,
Where glory diffuses its odours abroad—
His right to continue Jehovah hath seal'd.

O James, shall I meet thee in glory array'd,
Where tears to enjoyment shall ever give place,
Where acts of Omnipotent love are display'd,
And glory succeeds all the wonders of grace.
M. S.

FROM ZION'S HERALD.

A CONTEMPLATION.

I know that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the house appointed for all living.
BIBLE.

"On this side and on that, men see their friends
Drop off like leaves in autumn; yet launch out
Into fantastic schemes, which the long livers
In the world's hale and undegenerate days
Could scarce have leisure for.—Fools that we are,
Never to think of death and of ourselves
At the same time; as if to learn to die,
Were no concern of ours."—

Death is the fell destroyer of the human race; he knows no distinctions among men, but human being is marked by him as his victim. As soon as men step into being, and open their eyes upon nature's light, they are subjected to the law of mortality and commence their journey to the "house appointed for all living." Nor are they aware, so silent and unruffled is their motion down the stream of life, of the rapidity of their flight to their destined home.

"Time hurries on
With a resistless, unremitting stream;
Yet treads more soft than e'er did midnight thief
That slides his hand under the miser's pillow,
And carries off his prize"—

If our flight be thus rapid and silent to the world unknown, how important is the admonition of our Lord,—"Be ye also ready." It is the height of infatuation,

"For creatures of a day, in generous mood,
To frolic on eternity's dread brink
Unapprehensive; when, for aught we know,
The very first swoln surge shall sweep us in."

The grave is the "house appointed for all living," and thither all are bending their steps. "All go unto one place, all are of the dust and all return to dust again." In this house as in one central point all must meet. Men of all nations and of every clime. The shivering inhabitants of the ice bound cliffs of the north, the fair complexional dwellers in the temperate, and the sun burnt tribes of the torrid zone, here must meet. Men of every creed will here meet and lay aside all their animosities and discords; Jews, Christians, Mahomedans, and Pagans. Men of all grades and stations will meet here; the high, the low, mighty monarchs and their meanest subjects. Men renowned for their scientific researches, and literary knowledge and the illiterate peasant—the haughty prelate and the humble Christian. The monarch of disease spreads over all alike the shadows of the long night of death. In the grave there is no trace of that enmity which once existed in their hearts towards each other. Here all meet on a level and claim their kindred with the dust.

Since all must be reduced to an equality—become inmates of one house, why should we think so much of the distinctions which at present exist among men? Why should the rich frown upon the poor? Men of science look down with contempt upon the unlearned? Why should the poor envy men of wealth, since riches will ... ? Why should those into whose minds the light of science has never shone, envy the man of literary distinction, since in the grave to which he is hastening, there is no "knowledge, nor wisdom, nor device."

Whatever path the finger of providence may mark out for us, we should walk therein with cheerfulness; or whatever station may be assigned us by the Supreme Ruler of the universe, we should be content therewith, and endeavour to fill it with becoming dignity. It is not from the sphere in which we move in life, but from the lustre which we reflect around us in that sphere that we rank in the estimation of our Maker, and be entitled to that inheritance which is incorruptible and fadeless. If with one talent we gain one, we shall be as praise-worthy as those who with five talents gain other five.
C. R.
Dorchester, Mass.

From the American Farmer.

DISTEMPER IN HORSES AND DOGS.

It is seldom that we meet with a scientific, or even a rational account of the diseases of animals. We have names and prescriptions for names, but we have no such description of diseases, as will enable their distinctive character to be understood. The following notice of a common disease, known by the name of distemper and influenza in some stages, and by that of glanders in its last and worst, is extracted from the Zoonomia of the celebrated Dr. Darwin.
D.

THE CATARRHUS CONTAGIOSUS.

Is a frequent disease among horses and dogs; it seems first to be disseminated amongst those animals by miasmata, diffused in the atmosphere, because so many of them receive it at the same time; and afterwards to be communicable from one horse or dog to another, by contagion as above described.—These epidemic or contagious catarrhs more frequently occur amongst horses and dogs than amongst men; which is probably owing to the greater extension and sensibility of the mucous membrane, which covers the organ of smell, and is diffused over their wide nostrils, and their large maxillary and frontal cavities. And to this circumstance may be ascribed the greater fatality of it to these animals.

In respect to horses, I suspect the fever at the beginning, to be of the sensitive, irritated, or inflammatory kind, because there is so great a discharge of purulent mucus, and that therefore they will bear once bleeding in the early part of the disease; and also one mild purgative, consisting of half an ounce of aloes, and as much white hard soap, mixed together. They should be turned out to grass both day and night for the benefit of pure air, unless the weather be too cold, (and in that case they should be kept in an open airy stable without being tied,) that they may hang down their heads to facilitate the discharge of the mucus from their nostrils.—Grass should be offered them, or other fresh vegetables, as carrots and potatoes, with mashes of malt, or of oats, and with plenty of fresh, warm or cold water, frequently in the day. When symptoms of debility appear, which may be known by the coldness of the ears or other extremities, or when sloughs can be seen on the membrane which lines the nostrils, a drink consisting of a pint of ale, with half an ounce of tincture of opium in it, given every six hours, is likely to be of great utility.

In dogs, I believe the catarrh is generally joined with symptoms of debility early in the disease. These animals should be permitted to go about in the open air, and should have constant access to fresh water. The use of being as much as may be in the air is evident, because as the air which they breathe passes twice over the putrid sloughs of the mortified parts of the membrane, which lines the nostrils, and the maxillary and the frontal cavities; that is, both during inspiration and must therefore be loaded with contagious particles. Fresh new milk, and fresh broth should be given them, very frequently, and they should be suffered to go amongst the grass, which they eat as an emetic, and if possible should have access to a running stream of water, as the contagious mucus of the nostrils both of these animals, and of horses, generally drops into the water when they attempt to drink. Bits of raw flesh, if the dog will eat them, are preferred to cooked meat, and from five to ten drops of tincture of opium may be given with advantage, when symptoms of debility are evident, according to the size of the dog, every six hours. If sloughs can be seen in the nostrils, they should be moistened twice a day, both in horses and dogs, with a solution of sugar of lead or of alum, by means of a sponge fixed on the end of a whalebone or by a syringe.—The lotion may be made by dissolving half an ounce of sugar of lead in a pint of water.

Ancient philosophers seem to have believed, that the contagious miasmata in their warm climates affected dogs and horses previous to mankind. If those contagious particles were supposed to be diffused amongst the air, or originated by the ... of putrid marshes, as these animals hold their heads down lower to the ground, they may be supposed to have received them sooner than man. And though men and quadrupeds might receive a disease from the same source of marsh putrefaction, they might not be afterwards capable of communicating the infection to one another, though they might infect other animals of the same genus, as the new contagious matter generated in their own bodies, might not be precisely similar to that received, as happened in the jail fever at Oxford, where those who took the contagion and died, did not infect others.

"On mules and dogs the infection first began,
And, last, the vengeful arrows fix'd on man."

MODE OF TRAVELLING IN RUSSIA.

As soon as winter sets in, that is, as soon as the sea which is not agitated by the slightest wind, becomes a solid mass, the road is marked out on the ice which leads from Petersburgh to Kronstadt: this is done by a line of large buoys. About every league are stationed six sentry boxes, well armed, and the centinels, during foggy weather, keep up fires at certain distances, and, by the tinkling of bells, serve as a security and guide to the traveller. About half way is established a restaurateur. The innumerable crowds of people, of all ages and both sexes enveloped in their large pelisses, and gliding with moderation upon the fragile surface, which alone separates them from the abyss beneath, offer to the inhabitant of a southern country a strange sight, and impress him with a feeling of terror quite unknown to northern people. But it is when they begin to run the boners, that the road to Kronstadt presents the most animated picture. These boners are boats fixed on two plates or blades of iron like skates, with a third which is adapted like a rudder. Seats are arranged round this bark, which has one, two, or sometimes three masts. Driven before a wind which always blows with violence during this season, and directed by an able pilot, these boats, distinguished by their variety of rigging and flags of different colors, skim along the surface with inconceivable rapidity. A pale sun lends its rays to the scene, but imparts no heat; the sails are unfurled; the north wind whistles; the boat darts forward; and the sailors, by skilful manœuvres, endeavour to pass each other, and thus, in less than an hour, you glide through a space of ten leagues.—Ancelot's Travels in Russia, in 1820.

How to tell a good Husband.—A few days since a gentleman of the green sod was engaged in loading his cart with boards which had recently been drawn from a raft, and had placed his horse in a position which rendered it difficult to pass; two girls, one of them, a smiling little gipsey, not liking the obstruction, turned the horse out of the way. Pat, who that moment was tottering under the weight of a very heavy plank, burst forth with a volley of abusive language, when this smiling fair stretched forth her finger and exclaimed, "I'll bet a dollar you whip your wife."

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.
Somerset County Orphans Court.
July 8th, 1828.

ON application of Sarah Dashiell, Administratrix of John Dashiell, (negro) late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that she give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in the Village Herald, printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy. Test.
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order
Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of JOHN DASHIELL, late of said county, deceased.—All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 29th of January next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 8th of July, 1828.

SARAH DASHIELL,
Adm'trix of John Dashiell, dec'd.
July 15, 1828. k

SINCLAIR & MOORE,
Pratt St. Wharf, Baltimore,

HAVE in store—Millet, Lucerne, early Corn, bunch, pole & soup Beans, a large assortment for planting, and garden seeds generally.

PLOUGHS.

Amongst which are the much approved self sharpening point Plough—By turning and reversing said point, the share lasts much longer than the cast share of any other plough, in as much as the point is of steel, and when worn bevelling it is sharpened, if turned over. The CULTIVATORS made by Sinclair & Moore, pulverize the ground more effectually, and much deeper than the old fashioned there hoed kind—and by the use of these in the culture of corn, it will save nearly two-thirds of the ploughing.

ALSO, Socket Shovels, Scythes, Mattocks and Picks, with handles; — spring steel Hay and Manure Forks, WHEAT FANS, & GRAIN CRADLES, with best Waldron Scythes; Garden Tools generally; Wove Wire for Seives, and Mill Screens.

☞They have received from on board the brig Hyperion, capt. Forbes, just from Liverpool, a quantity of grain and grass Scythes, (Waldron's prime) Sickles, Malleable trace Chains; Straw and Hay Knives; Grass Hooks, and Garden Tools, amongst which are turnip and other Hoes; Edging Tools, budding and pruning Knives, &c. &c.

☞For the greater convenience of those who use our PLOUGHS in Somerset, we have appointed JOHNSTON & SUDLER, of Princess Anne, our agents for the sale of them, who will constantly keep a supply of the different kinds at our prices.

June 17, 1828. S. & M.

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers.

300 lot Cane, suitable for Reed makers.
200 Nests Sugar Boxes
25 Barrel Covers
150 Butter Prints

100 gross of Lamp Wick, assorted sizes, Spiggots and fossets, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs, and hydrants, shoe, sweeping, dusting and other brushes, sifters, moulders, and lime squeezers, fancy and common bellows, pound, half pound and quarter pound Butter Prints, of various patterns, fishing lines and rods, butter bowls and trays, baskets, wash and cake boards twine, and cord, patent taps, humming and common tops, nests of sugar boxes and tubs, boot & shoe blacking, towel rollers, potato and turnip mashers, rolling pins, carpenters' or joiners' chalk lines, spoons and paddles, trenchers, crabbing and cabbage nets.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101½ Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.
Baltimore, 6th mo. 24. ww

A LIST OF LETTERS
Remaining in the Post Office at Princess Anne, Md., on July 1, 1828.

B—William Bennett, Isaiah Bayley, Jane Benson
C—Joseph S. Colgan
D—Elizabeth Dory, George Davy, jun. William Dix, Elizabeth Darby, Isaac Denson, William F. Dashiell, Littleton U. Dennis
F—Josiah Furness, Whitty Fountain
G—Henry I S Gibbons
H—William Hurd, Mrs Sarah Hayward, Isaiah Hayman
I—Isaiah & Susan (care of Lambert Hyland)
J—John Jones 2, Levin D Jones, Alexander Jones, Doct Mattinas Jones
K—Robert I H King
L—Henry Lankford
M—William Miles, Daniel Miles, John McDaniel, William McDaniel 2, Miss Ann Martin, Miss Sarah R Maddux, Master Somerset Lodge
P—William Purnell, William Parkes 2, Stephen Parkes
R—Noah Riley, Robert Rich, Miss Mary Ann Riggin
S—John B. Stevenson, Rev. William M. Stone
T—Gilbert Townsend, Rinaldo Turner
W—William Williams, Miss Mary G. Wilson

SAML. BROWN, P. M.
July 8, 1828. ww

VILLAGE HERALD.
TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞Subscriptions paid within 90 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞All communications addressed to the editor must come POST PAID.

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,
Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished, the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The publics obt. servant.
WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.
W. C. R.

Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess-Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

LEVIN H. POWELL.
July 8 ww

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC.

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.
10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an anodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER.
Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne, Md.

FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber is desirous of disposing of his real estate, being and lying in Worcester county, Md. and situated on Dividing Creek. The landed estate consists of 2000, or more acres. The improvements are a dwelling house, and out buildings with a good SAW and GRIST MILL, both in excellent order; also a young orchard. About 100 acres of the land is in a good state of cultivation.

There is, on one part of the above property, an abundance of Iron Ore, which would warrant the erection of a Forge, and prove an object of value to a purchaser acquainted with, and calculated for, such an undertaking.

The terms of sale will be—one third down, and 3 years for the payment of the balance. For further particulars apply to

JOHN MORRIS.
April 22 kd

E. T. J. WOODWARD,
Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street.
BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,
Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.
And a general assortment
Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.
DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD
Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. mw

PROPOSALS
For publishing in Hagerstown, Md. a Weekly Newspaper, under the title of
The Hagerstown Mail.

The Mail will convey "news from all nations"—particularly those most interesting to our own country, and will be conducted so as to give early and correct information on public affairs generally; of political occurrences in the different states; of the rise and fall of American produce in our principal cities, and the prices in foreign markets.

The political principles of this paper will be as purely Republican as those contained in the Declaration of Independence, and the Rights of the People shall be at all times zealously, firmly and fearlessly supported, whoever may be in power. The Establishment is intended to be a permanent one, and as such every endeavor will be used to render it a first rate country paper deserving public patronage.

With regard to the Presidential question which now agitates the whole Union, the Mail will decidedly and openly advocate the election of ANDREW JACKSON. And when it is considered that there is only one press in Baltimore, and only one between Baltimore and Cumberland that espouses his cause, it will readily be allowed that so large an extent of country there is room for at least another—more particularly as all the other presses in this rich, and populous country, where he has so many devoted friends, are against him; the times emphatically demand the establishment of such a press, for at no period of our political history have such unfair and unjustifiable means been resorted to, in order to destroy the character of a public man, as have been within the last year to injure the well-earned fame of the Hero of New Orleans, and merely because he is a candidate before the people for a high and important office—though he was brought out by the people themselves; but the Mail will never ... him until he arrives at Washington, and receives from the hands of the people, the ... nors justly due to one whose whole life in peace and in war has been devoted to his Country's Liberty, Welfare and Happiness.

Terms of Subscription.

For a single paper Three Dollars a year. But this may be discharged by Two Dollars paid in advance, or Two Dollars Fifty cents in Six Months—Any person obtaining Ten subscribers and becoming responsible for the money shall have a paper gratis.

Hagers-town, May 13—July 1

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, at the suit of W... Kibble against Isaac Surmon, I have ... and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one house and lot, containing one acre, more or less, known by the name of Hog-Neck, and situated on Wicomico river, about 3 miles from its head; also two ... one loom, one gun, one sein, two ... two hogs, and one yearling, which I ... proceed to sell on Wednesday the ... next August, on the premises to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the ... mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, ...
July 15, 1828. ws

EMIGRATION TO LIBERIA.
NOTICE.

THE Managers of the American ... zation Society give notice, that they ... dy to receive applications for the ... ance of free people of color to the ... of Liberia.

In all cases, the age, sex, and pr... of the applicants must be mention...

Applicants from the State of Md. must be prepared to offer the ... some free white person, to their ... tually resided within the State of Md. for "twelve months" previous to the ... of emigration.

Applications may be made in ... to Hon. Judge Brice, Charles How... of John E., John H. B. Latrobe ... Charles C. Harper Esq., Agents ... ciety.

JOB PRINTING
Neatly executed at this off...

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., JULY 29, 1828. NO. 18.

Mr. ADAMS for Gen. JACKSON.

Department of State.
Washington, 28th Nov. 1818.

Sir: Your despatches to No. 92 inclusive, with their enclosures, have been received at this department. Among these enclosures are the several notes addressed to you by Mr. Pizarro, in relation to the transactions during the campaign of General Jackson against the Seminole Indians and the banditti of Negroes combined with them, and particularly to his proceedings in Florida, without the boundaries of the U. States.

In the 4th and last of those notes of Mr. Pizarro, he has given formal notice that the king, his master, had issued orders for the suspension of the negotiation between the United States and Spain, until satisfaction shall have been made by the American government to him for these proceedings of General Jackson, which he considers as acts of unequivocal hostility against him, as outrages upon his honor and dignity, the only acceptable atonement for which, is stated to consist in a disavowal of the acts of the American general, thus complained of—the infliction upon him of a suitable punishment for his supposed misconduct and the restitution of the posts and territories taken by him from the Spanish authorities, with indemnity for all the property taken, and all damages and injuries, public or private, sustained in consequence of it.

Within a very few days after this notification, Mr. Pizarro must have received, with copies of the correspondence between Mr. Onis and this department, the determination which had been taken by the President, to restore the place of Pensacola, with the fort of Barrancas, to any person properly authorised, on the part of Spain, to receive them, and the fort of St. Marks to any Spanish force adequate to its protection against the Indians, by whom its forcible occupation had been threatened, for purposes of hostility against the United States. The officer commanding at the post, has been directed to consider 250 men as such adequate force; and in case of their appearance, with proper authority, to deliver it up to their commander accordingly.

From the last mentioned correspondence, the Spanish government must likewise have been satisfied that the occupation of these places in Spanish Florida, by the commander of the American forces, was not by virtue of any order received by him from this government to that effect, nor with any view of wresting the province from the possession of Spain, nor in any spirit of hostility to the Spanish government; that it arose from incidents which occurred in the prosecution of the war against the Indians—from the imminent danger in which the fort of St. Marks was of being seized by the Indians themselves, and from the manifestations of hostility to the United States, by the commandant of St. Marks and the governor of Pensacola, the proofs of which were made known to General Jackson, and impelled him, from the necessity of self-defence, to the steps of which the Spanish government complains.

It might be sufficient to leave the vindication of these measures upon those grounds, and to furnish, in the enclosed copies of Gen. Jackson's letters, and the vouchers by which they are supported, the evidence of that hostile spirit on the part of the Spanish commanders, but for the terms in which Mr. Pizarro speaks of the execution of the two subjects of Great Britain, taken, one at the fort of St. Marks, and the other at Sowany, and the intimation that these transactions may lead to a change in the relations between the two nations, which is doubtless intended to be understood as a menace of war.

It may be, therefore, proper to remind the government of His Catholic Majesty of the incidents in which this Seminole war originated, as well as of the circumstances connected with it, in the relations between Spain and her ally, whom she supposes to have been injured by the proceedings of General Jackson, and to give to the Spanish cabinet some precise information of the nature of the business, peculiarly interesting to Spain in which these subjects of her allies, in whose favor she takes this interest, were engaged, when their projects of every kind were terminated in consequence of their falling into the hands of Gen. Jackson.

In the month of August, 1814, while a war existed between the United States and Great Britain, to which Spain had formerly declared herself neutral, a British force, not in the fresh pursuit of a defeated and flying enemy—not overstepping an imaginary boundary between their own territories and those belonging, in some sort, as much to their enemy as to Spain, but approaching by sea, and by a broad and open invasion of a Spanish province, at a thousand miles, or an ocean's distance from any British territory, landed in Florida, took possession of Pensacola and the fort of Barrancas, and invited, by public proclamations, all the runaway negroes—all the savage Indians—all the pirates, and all the traitors to their country, whom they knew or imagined to exist within reach of their summons, to join their standard and wage an exterminating war against the portion of the United States immediately bordering upon this neutral and thus violated territory of Spain. The land commander of this British force, was a certain Col. Nicholls, who, driven from Pensacola by the approach of Gen. Jackson, actually left to be blown up, the Spanish fort of Barrancas, when he found it could not afford him protection, and evacuating that part of the province, landed at another, established himself on the Apalachicola river, and there erected a fort from which to sally forth with his motley tribe of black, white, and red combatants against the defenceless borders of the United States, in that vicinity. A part of this force consisted of a corps of colonial Marines, levied in the British colonies, in which George Woodbine was a captain, and Robert Chrystie Ambrister was a lieutenant.

As between the United States and Great Britain, we should be willing to bury this transaction in the same grave of oblivion with other transactions of that war, had the hostilities of Col. Nicholls terminated with the war. But he did not consider the peace which ensued between the United States and G. Britain as having put an end either to his military occupations, or his negotiations with the Indians, against the United States. Several months after the ratification of the treaty of Ghent, he retained his post and his party-colored forces, in military array.

By the 9th article of that treaty, the United States had stipulated to put an end immediately after its ratification, to hostilities with all the tribes or nations of Indians with whom they might be at war at the time of the ratification, and to restore to them all the possessions which they had enjoyed in the year 1811. This article has no application to the Creek nation with whom the United States had already made peace, by a treaty concluded on the 9th day of August, 1814, more than 4 months before the treaty of Ghent was signed. Yet Col. Nicholls not only affected to consider it as applying to the Seminoles of Florida, and the outlawed Red Sticks whom he had induced to join him there, but actually persuaded them that they were entitled, by virtue of the treaty of Ghent, to all the lands which had belonged to the Creek nation within the United States in the year 1811, and that the government of Great Britain would support them in that pretension. He asserted also this doctrine in a correspondence with Col. Hawkins, then the agent of the United States with the Creeks and gave him notice, in their name, with a mockery of solemnity, that they had concluded a treaty of alliance, offensive and defensive, and a treaty of navigation and commerce with Great Britain, of which more was to be heard after it should be ratified in England. Col. Nicholls then evacuated his fort, which, in some of the enclosed papers, is called the fort at Prospect Bluff, but which he denominated the British post on the Apalachicola; took with him the white portion of his force, and embarked for England, with several of the wretched savages whom he was deluding to their fate—among whom was the prophet Francis or Hillis Hadjo—and left the fort amply supplied with military stores and ammunition, to the negro department of allies. It afterwards was known by the name of Negro fort. Col. Hawkins immediately communicated to this government the correspondence between him and Nicholls, here referred to, upon which Mr. Monroe, then secretary of state, addressed a letter to Mr. Baker, the British Charge d' Affairs at Washington complaining of Nicholls' conduct, and shewing that his pretence that the 9th article of the Treaty of Ghent could have any application to his Indians, was utterly destitute of foundation. Copies of the same correspondence were transmitted to the minister of the United States, then in England, with instructions to remonstrate with the British government against these proceedings of Nicholls, and to shew how incompatible they were with the peace which had been concluded between the two nations. These remonstrances were accordingly made, first in personal interview with Earl Bathurst and lord Castlereagh, and afterwards in written notes, addressed successively to them.

Lord Bathurst, in the most unequivocal manner, confirmed the facts, & disavowed the misconduct of Nicholl; declared his disapprobation of the pretended treaty of alliance offensive and defensive, which he had made; assured the American Minister that the British Government had refused to ratify that treaty, and would send back the Indians whom Nicholls had brought with him with advice to make their peace on such terms as they could obtain. Lord Castlereagh confirmed the assurance that the treaty would not be ratified; and if, at the same time that these assurances were given certain distinctions of public notoriety were shewn to the Prophet Hillis Hadjo, and he was actually honored with a commission, as a British officer; it is to be presumed that these favours were granted him as rewards of past services, and not as encouragement to expect any support from Great Britain in a continuance of savage hostilities against the United States, all intention of giving any such support having been repeatedly and earnestly disavowed.

The Negro fort, however, abandoned by Col. Nicholls, remained on the Spanish territory, occupied by the banditti to whom he had left it, and held by them as a post, from whence to commit depredations, outrages and murders, and as a receptacle for fugitive slaves and malefactors, to the great annoyance both of the United States and of Spanish Florida. In April 1816, General Jackson wrote a letter to the Governor of Pensacola, calling upon him to put down this common nuisance to the inhabitants of both countries. That letter, together with the answer of the Governor of Pensacola, have already been communicated to the Spanish Minister here, and by him doubtless, to this government. Copies of them are, nevertheless now again enclosed; particularly as the letter from the Governor explicitly admits, that this fort constructed by Nicholls, in violation both of the territory and neutrality of Spain, was still no less obnoxious to his government than to the United States; but that he had neither sufficient force, nor authority, without orders from the Governor General of the Havana, to destroy it. It was afterwards, on the 27th July, 1816, destroyed by a cannon shot from a gun vessel of the United States, which, in its passage up the river was fired upon by it. It was blown up, with an English flag still flying as its standard, and immediately after the barbarous murder of the boat's crew, belonging to the Navy of the United States, by the banditti left in it by Nicholls.

In the year 1817, Alexander Arbuthnot, of the Island of New Providence, a British subject, first appeared, as an Indian trader, in Spanish Florida, and as the successor of Col. Nicholls, in the employment of instigating the Seminole and outlawed Red Stick Indians to hostilities against the United States, by reviving the pretence that they were entitled to all the lands which had been ceded by the Creek nation to the United States, in August 1814. As a mere Indian trader, the intrusion of this man, into a Spanish province, was contrary to the policy observed by all the European powers in this hemisphere, and by none more rigorously than by Spain, of excluding all foreigners from intercourse with the Indians, within their territories. It must be known to the Spanish government, whether Arbuthnot had a Spanish license for trading with the Indians in Spanish Florida or not; but they also know that Spain was bound by treaty, to restrain by force all hostilities on the part of those Indians, against the citizens of the United States; and it is for them to explain how, consistently with those engagements, Spain could contrary to all the maxims of her ordinary policy, grant such a license to a foreign incendiary, whose principal, if not his only object, appears to have been to stimulate those hostilities which Spain had so expressly stipulated by force to restrain. In his infernal instigation he was but too successful. No sooner did he make his appearance among the Indians, accompanied by the Prophet Hillis Hadjo, returned from his expedition to England, than the peaceful inhabitants on the border of the United States, were visited with all the horrors of savage war; the robbery of their property and the barbarous and indiscriminate murder of women, infancy and age.

After the repeated expostulations, warnings, and offers of a peace, through the summer and autumn of 1817, on the part of the United States, had been answered only by renewed outrages, and after a detachment of forty men, under Lieut. Scott, accompanied by seven women, had been waylaid and murdered by the Indians, orders were given to Gen. Jackson, an adequate force was placed at his disposal, to terminate the war. It was ascertained that the Spanish force in Florida was inadequate for the protection even of the Spanish territory itself, against this mingled horde of lawless Indians and negroes; and, although their devastations were committed within the limits of the United States, they immediately sought refuge within the Florida line, and there only were to be overtaken. The necessity of crossing the line was indispensable; for it was from beyond the line that the Indians made their murderous incursions within that of the United States. It was there that they had their abode, and the territory belonged, in fact, to them, although within the borders of the Spanish jurisdiction. There it was that the American commander met the principal resistance from them; there it was, that were found the still bleeding scalps of our citizens, freshly butchered by them; there it was that he released the only woman, who had been suffered to survive the massacre of the party under Lieut. Scott. But it was not anticipated by this government that the commanding officers of Spain in Florida, whose especial duty it was, in conformity to the solemn engagement contracted by their nation, to restrain by force, those Indians from hostilities against the United States, would be found encouraging, aiding, and abetting them, and furnishing them with supplies for carrying on such hostilities. The officer in command, immediately before Gen. Jackson, was, therefore, specially, instructed to respect, as far as possible the Spanish authority wherever it was maintained, and copies of those orders were also furnished to Gen. Jackson upon his taking the command. In the course of his pursuit, as he approached St. Marks, he was informed, direct from the Governor of Pensacola, that a party of the hostile Indians had threatened to seize that fort, and that he apprehended the Spanish garrison there was not in strength sufficient to defend it against them. This information was confirmed from other sources; and by the evidence produced upon the trial of Ambrister, it proved to have been exactly true. By all the laws of neutrality and of war, as well as of prudence and humanity, he was warned in anticipating his enemy, by the amicable, and that being refused, by the forcible occupation of the fort. There will be no need of citations from printed treatises on international law, to prove the correctness of this principle. It is engraved in adamant on the common sense of mankind; no writer upon the laws of nations ever pretended to contradict it; none of any reputation or authority every omitted to assert it.

At fort St. Marks, Alexander Arbuthnot, the British Indian trader from beyond the seas, the firebrand, by whose torch this negro Indian war against our borders had been rekindled, was found an inmate of the commandant's family; and it was also found that, by the commandant himself, councils of war had been permitted to be held within it by the savage chiefs and warriors; that the Spanish store houses had been appropriated to their use; that it was an open market for cattle, known to have been robbed by them from citizens of the United States, and which had been contracted for, and purchased by, the officers of the garrison. That information had been afforded from this fort by Arbuthnot, to the enemy, of the strength and movements of the American army; that the date of the departure of express had been noted by the Spanish commissary, ammunition, munitions of war and all necessary supplies furnished to the Indians.

The conduct of the Governor of Pensacola was not less marked by a disposition of enmity to the United States and by an utter disregard to the obligations of the treaty, by which he was bound to restrain, by force, the Indians from hostilities against them. When called upon to vindicate the territorial rights and authority of Spain, by the destruction of the negro fort, his predecessor had declared it to be not less annoying and pernicious to the Spanish subjects in Florida, than to the United States; but had pleaded his inability to subdue it. He, himself, had expressed his apprehensions that Fort St. Marks would be forcibly taken by the savages, from its Spanish garrison; yet, at the same time he had refused the passage up the Escambia river, unless upon the payment of excessive duties, to provisions destined as supplies for the American army, which, by the detention of them, was subjected to the most distressing privations. He had permitted free ingress and egress at Pensacola of the avowed savage enemies of the United States. Supplies of ammunition, munitions of war, and provisions had been received by them from thence. They had been received and sheltered there, from the pursuit of the American forces, and suffered again to sally thence, to enter upon the American territory and commit new murders. Finally on the approach of Gen. Jackson to Pensacola, the Governor sent him a letter, denouncing his entry upon the territory of Florida, as a violent outrage upon the rights of Spain, commanding him to depart and withdraw from the same, and threatening, in case of his non compliance, to employ force to expel him.

It became, therefore, in the opinion of Gen. Jackson, indispensably necessary to take from the Governor of Pensacola the means of carrying his threats into execution. Before the forces under his command, the savage enemies of this country had disappeared. But he knew that the moment those forces should be disbanded, if sheltered by Spanish fortresses, if furnished with ammunition and supplies by Spanish officers, and if aided and supported by the instigation of Spanish encouragement, as he had every reason to expect these would be, they would re-appear; and fired, in addition to their ordinary ferociousness, with revenge for the chastisement they had so recently received, would again rush with the war hatchet and scalping knife, into the borders of the United States, and mark every foot-step with the blood of their defenceless citizens. So far as all the native resources of the savages extended, the war was at an end, and Gen. Jackson was about to restore to their families and their homes, the brave volunteers who had followed his standard, and who had constituted the principal part of his force. This could be done with safety, leaving the regular portion of his troops to garrison his line of forts, and two small detachments of volunteer cavalry, to scour the country round Pensacola, and sweep off the lurking remnant of savages who had been scattered and dispersed before him. This was sufficient to keep in check the remnant of the banditti, against whom had marched, so long as they should be destitute of other aid. It was in his judgement, not sufficient, if they should be suffered to rally their numbers under the protection of Spanish forts; and to derive new strength from the importance or the ill will against the United States of the Spanish authorities. He took possession, therefore, of Pensacola, and of the fort of Barrancas, as he had done at St. Marks, not in spirit of hostility to Spain, but as a necessary measure of self defence, giving notice that they should be restored whenever Spain should place commanders and a force there, able and willing to fulfil the engagements of Spain towards the United States, of restraining, by force, the Florida Indians from hostilities against their citizens.

The President of the United States, to give a signal manifestation of his confidence in the disposition of the King of Spain, to perform with good faith this indispensable engagement, and to demonstrate to the world, that neither the desire of conquest, nor hostility to Spain, had any influence in the councils of the United States, has directed the unconditional restoration to any Spanish officer, duly authorized to receive them, of Pensacola and the Barrancas, and that of St. Marks to any Spanish force adequate for its defence against the attack of the savages.—But the President will neither inflict punishment, nor pass a censure upon Gen. Jackson for that conduct, the motives for which were found in the purest patriotism, of the necessity for which he had the most immediate and effectual means of forming a judgement, and the vindication of which is written in every page of the law of nations, as well as in the first law of nature, self defence. He thinks it, on the contrary due to the justice, which the U. States have a right to claim from Spain, and you are accordingly instructed to demand of the Spanish government, that an inquiry shall be instituted into the conduct of Don Jose Masot, Governor of Pensacola and Don Francisco C. Luengo commandant of St. Marks, and a suitable punishment inflicted upon them for having, in defiance and violation of the engagement of Spain with the United States, aided and assisted these hordes of savages, in those very hostilities against the United States, which it was their official duty to restrain. This inquiry is due to the character of those officers themselves, and to the honour of the Spanish government. The obligation of Spain to restrain by force, the Indians of Florida from hostilities against the United States and their citizens, is explicit, is positive, is unqualified. The fact, that for a series of years they have received shelter, assistance, supplies and protection, in the practice of such hostilities from the Spanish commanders in Florida, is clear and unequivocal. If as the commanders, both at Pensacola and St. Marks have alleged, this has been the result of their weakness, rather than their will, if they have assisted the Indians against the United States to avert their hostilities from the province, which they had not sufficient force to defend against them, it may serve, in some measure, to exculpate individually those officers, but it must carry demonstration irresistible to the Spanish government, that the right of the United States can as little compound with impotence as with perfidy, and that Spain must immediately make her selection, either to place a force in Florida, adequate to the protection of her territory, and to the fulfilment of her engagement, or cede to the United States a province, of which she retains nothing but the nominal possession; but which is, in fact, a derelict open to the occupancy of every enemy, civilized or savage, of the United States, and serving no other earthly purpose than as a post of annoyance to them.

That the purposes, as well of the Negro Indian banditti, with whom we have been contending, as of the British invaders of Florida, who first assembled and employed them and of the British intruding and pretending traders, since the peace, who have instigated and betrayed them to destruction, have been not less hostile to Spain than to the United States, the proofs contained in the documents herewith enclosed, are conclusive. Mr. Pizarro's note of the 29th August, speaks of his Catholic Majesty's profound indignation at the "sanguinary execution on the Spanish soil, of the subjects of powers in amity with the King"—meaning Arbuthnot and Ambrister. Let Mr. Pizarro's successor take the trouble of reading the enclosed documents; and he will discover who Arbuthnot and Ambrister were, and what were their purposes: That Arbuthnot was only the successor of Nicholls, and Ambrister, the agent of Woodbine, and the subaltern of M'Gregor. Mr. Pizarro qualifies Gen. Jackson's necessary pursuit of a savage enemy beyond the Spanish Florida line, as a shameful invasion of his Majesty's territory—yet, that territory was the territory also of the savage enemy, and Spain was bound to restrain them by force, from hostilities against the United States—and it was the failure of Spain to fulfil this engagement, which had made it necessary for General Jackson to pursue the savages across the line. What, then, was the character of Nicholls' invasion of his Majesty's territory, and where was his Majesty's profound indignation at that? Mr. Pizarro says, his Majesty's palaces & forts have been violently seized on by Gen. Jackson. Had they not been seized on—nay, had not the principal of his forts been blown up by Nicholls, and a British fort on the same Spanish territory been erected during the war, and left standing as a Negro fort in defiance of Spanish authority, after the peace? Where was his Majesty's profound indignation at that? Has his Majesty suspended formally all negotiation with the sovereign of Colonel Nicholls, for the shameful invasion of his territory without colour of provocation, without pretence of necessity, without the shadow or even avowal of a pretext? Has his majesty given solemn warning to the British government that these were incidents "of transcendent moment capable of producing an essential and thorough change in the political relations of the two countries." Nicholls and Woodbine, in their invitations and promises to the slaves to run away from their masters and join them, did not confine themselves to the slaves of the United States—they received with as hearty a welcome, and employed with equal readiness, the fugitives from their masters, in Florida, as those from Georgia. Against this special injury the Governor of Pensacola did earnestly remonstrate with the British admiral Cockburn, but against this shameful invasion of the territory—against the violent seizure of the forts and palaces—against the blowing up of the Barrancas; and the erection and maintenance under British banners, of the negro fort on Spanish soil—against the negotiation by a British officer in the midst of peace, of pretended treaties, offensive and defensive, and of navigation and commerce upon Spanish territory, between Great Britain and Spanish Indians, whom Spain was bound to control and restrain. If a whisper of expostulation was ever wafted from Madrid to London, it was not loud enough to be heard across the Atlantic, nor energetic enough to transpire beyond the walls of the palace from which it issued, and to which it was borne.

The connection between Arbuthnot and Nicholls, and between Ambrister and M'Gregor, is established beyond all question, by the evidence produced at the trials before the court martial. I have already remarked to you on the very extraordinary circumstance, that a British trader from beyond the seas, should be permitted, by the Spanish authorities, to trade with the Indians of Florida. From his letter to Hambly, dated 3d May, 1817, it appears that his trading was but a pretence, and that his principal purpose was to act as the agent of the Indians in Florida, outlaws from the Creeks, to obtain the aid of the British Government in their hostilities against the United States.—He expressly tells Hambly there, that the chief of those outlaws was the principal cause of his, Arbuthnot's, being in the country, and that he had come with an answer from Earl Bathurst, delivered to him by Governor Cameron, of New Providence, to certain Indian talks, in which this aid of the British Government had been left by Nicholls, as the agent between the Indians and the British Government; but having found that Nicholls had failed in his attempt to prevail upon the British Government to pursue this clandestine war, in the midst of peace; and that they were not prepared to support his pretence, that half a dozen outlawed fugitives from the Creeks, were the Creek nation; when Arbuthnot the incendiary, came and was instigating them, by promises of support from Great Britain; to commence their murderous incursions into the United States. Hambly, at the request of the Creeks themselves, wrote to him to withdraw from among that band of outlaws, and giving him a solemn foreboding of the doom that awaited him, from the hand of justice, if he persevered in the course that he pursued. Arbuthnot, nevertheless, persisted; and while he was deluding the wretched Indians with promises of support from England, he was writing letters for them to the minister in the United States, to governor Cameron, of New Providence, to Col. Nicholls to be laid before the British Government, and even to the Spanish governor at St. Augustine and the governor general of the Havana, soliciting in all quarters aid and support, arms and ammunition for the Indians against the U. States; bewailing the destruction of the Negro fort, and charging the British government with having drawn the Indians into war with the United States, and deserting them after the peace.

You will remark among the papers produced on his trial, a power of attorney, dated 17th June, 1817, given him by 12 Indians, partly of Florida and partly of the fugitive outlaws from the United States. He states that this power, and his instructions, were to memoralize the British government, and the governor general of the Havana. These papers are not only substantially proved as of his hand writing, on the trial, but in the daily newspapers of London of the 24th and 25th of August last, his letter to Nicholls is published, (somewhat Garbled) with a copy of Hambly's above mentioned letter to him, and a reference to this Indian power of attorney to him approved by the commandant of St. Marks, F. C. Luengo. Another of the papers is a letter written in the name of the same chiefs, by Arbuthnot, to the governor general of the Havana asking of him permission for Arbuthnot to establish a warehouse on the Appalachicola, bitterly and falsely complaining that the Americans had made settlements on their lands within the Spanish lines, and calling upon the governor general to give orders to displace them, and send them back to their country. In this letter they assign as a reason for asking this license for Arbuthnot, the want of a person to put in writing for them their talks of grievances against the Americans. And, they add, "the commander of the fort of St. Marks has heard all our talks and complaints. He approves of what we have done and what we are doing, and it is by his recommendation we have thus presumed to address your excellency." You will find these papers in the printed newspapers enclosed, and in the proceedings of the court martial, and will point them out to the Spanish government, not only as decisive proofs of the unexampled compliants of the Spanish officers in Florida, to foreign intrusive agents and instigators of Indian hostilities against the United States, but placing beyond a doubt that participation of this hostile spirit in the commandant of St. Marks, which General Jackson so justly complains of, and of which we have so well found a right to demand the punishment.—Here is the commandant of a Spanish fort bound by a sacred engagement of a treaty to restrain, by force, the Indians within his command from committing hostilities against the United States conspiring with those same Indians, and deliberately giving his written approbation to their appointment of a foreigner, a British subject as their agent, to solicit assistance and supplies from the governor general of Havana, and from the British Government for carrying on these same hostilities.

Let us come to the case of Ambrister.—He was taken in arms, leading and commanding the Indians, in the war against the American troops; and to that charge, upon his trial, pleading guilty. But the primary object of his coming there, was still more hostile to Spain, than to the United States.—You find that he told three of the witnesses, who testified at his trial, that he had come to this country upon Mr. Woodbine's business at Tampa Bay—to see the negroes righted; and one of them that he had a commission in the patriotic army under McGregor; and that he had expected a captaincy. And what was the intended business of McGregor and Woodbine, at Tampa Bay? It was the conquest of Florida from Spain, by the use of those very Indians and negroes, whom the commandant of St. Marks was so ready to aid and support in the war against the United States. The chain of proof that establishes this fact, is contained in the documents communicated by the President to Congress at their last session, relating to the occupation of Amelia Island by McGregor. From these documents you will find, that while McGregor was there, Woodbine went from New Providence, in a schooner of his own to join him: That he arrived at Amelia Island just as McGregor, abandoned the companions of his achievement there, was leaving it. That McGregor, quitted the vessel in which he had embarked at Amelia, went on board that of Woodbine, and returned with him to New Providence: That Woodbine had pursuaded him they could yet accomplish the conquest of Florida, with soldiers to be recruited at Nasson, from the corps of colonial marines, which had served under Nicholls during the late war with the United States, which corps had been lately disbanded; and with negroes to be found at Tampa Bay, and 1500 Indians, already then engaged to Woodbine, who pretended that they had made a grant of all their lands to him.

Among the papers the originals of which are in our possession, in McGregor's own hand writing instructions for sailing into Tampa Bay, with the assertions that he calculated to be there by the last of April or first of May, of the present year; a letter dated 27th December last to one of his acquaintance in this Country, disclosing the same intention; and the extract of a proclamation which was to have been issued at Tampa Bay, to the inhabitants of Florida, by the person charged with making the settlement there before his arrival, announcing his approach, for the purpose of liberating them from the despotism of Spain, and of enabling them to form a government for themselves. He has persuaded those who would listen to him here, that his ultimate object was to sell the Floridas to the United States. There is some reason to suppose that he had made indirect overtures, of a similar nature, to the British government. This was Ambrister's business in Florida. He arrived there in March, the precursor of McGregor and Woodbine, and, immediately upon his arrival, he is found seizing upon Arbuthnot's goods and distributing them among the Negroes and Indians; seizing upon his vessel, and compelling its master to pilot him, with a body of armed negroes, towards the fort of St. Marks, with the declared purpose of taking it by surprise in the night. Writing letters to governor Cameron, of New Providence, urgently calling for supplies of munitions of war, and of cannon for war against the Americans; and letters to Colonel Nicholls, renewing the same demand of supplies, informing him that he is with 300 negroes, a few of our Bluff people, who had stuck to the cause, and were relying upon the faith of Nicholls' promises. "Our Bluff people" were the people of the negro fort, collected by Nicholls and Woodbine's proclamation, during the American and English war, and the cause to which they stuck was the savage, servile, exterminating war against the United States.

Among the agents and actors of such virtuous enterprises as are here unveiled, it was hardly expected that there would be found remarkable evidences of their respect, confidence and good faith towards one another. Accordingly, besides the violent seizure and distribution by Ambrister, of Arbuthnot's property, his letters to governor Cameron, and to Nicholls, are filled with the distrust and suspicion of the Indians, that they were deceived and betrayed by Arbuthnot: while in Arbuthnot's letters to the same Nicholls, he accused Woodbine of having taken charge of poor Francis, the prophet, or Hills Hadjo, upon his return from England to New Providence, and under pretence of taking care of him and his affairs—of having defrauded him of a large portion of the presents which had been delivered out from the king's store to him, for Francis' use. This is one of the passages of Arbuthnot's letter to Nicholls, omitted in the publication of it last August, in the London newspapers.

Is this narrative of dark and complicated depravity, this creeping and insiduous war both against Spain and the United States; this mockery of patriotism, these political philters to fugitive slaves and Indian outlaws, these perfidities and treacheries of villians incapable of keeping their faith even to each other, all in the name of South American Liberty, of the rights of runaway negroes, and the wrongs of savage murderers—all combined and projected to plunder Spain of her provinces, and to spread massacre and devestation along the borders of the United States? Is all this sufficient to cool the sympathies of his Catholic majesty's government, excited by the execution of these two "subjects of a power in amity with the king?" The Spanish government is not this day to be informed that, cruel as war in its mildest forms, must be, it is, and necessarily must be doubly cruel, when waged with savages; that savages make no prisoners but to torture them; that they give no quarter, that they put to death without discrimination of age or sex; that these ordinary characteristics of Indian warfare have been applicable, in their most heart sickening horrors, to that war, left us by Nicholls, as his legacy, reinstigated by Woodbine, Arbuthnot and Ambrister, and stimulated by the approbation, encouragement, and the aid of the Spanish commandant at St. Marks.—Is proof required? Intreat the Spanish Minister of state, for a moment, to overcome the feelings which details like these must excite, and to reflect, if possible with composure, upon the facts stated in the following extracts from documents enclosed.

Letter from sailing master Jairus Loomis to commodore Daniel T. Patterson, 13th August, 1816, reporting the destruction of the negro fort.

On examining the prisoners they stated that Edward Daniels, O. S. who was made prisoner in the boat, on the 17th July, "was tarred and buried alive."

Letter from Archibald Clarke to General Gaines, 26th February, 1817; (Message of the President of the United States to Congress, 25th March, 1817, p. 9.)

"On the 24th inst. the house of Mr. Garret, residing in the upper part of this county, near the boundary of Wayne county, (Georgia,) was attacked, during his absence, near the middle of the day, by this party, (of Indians) consisting of about fifteen, who shot Mrs. Garret in two places, and then dispatched her by stabbing and scalping. Her two children, one about three years, and the other two months old, were also murdered, and the eldest scalped; the house was then plundered of every article of value, and set on fire."

Letter from Peter B. Cook (Arbuthnot's clerk,) to Eliza A. Carney, at Nassau, dated Suwahnee, 15th Jan. 1818, giving an account of their operations with the Indians against the Americans, and their massacre of Lieut. Scott and his party.

"There was a boat that was taken by the Indians, that had in it thirty men, seven women, and four small children. There were six of the women saved, and all the rest of them got killed. The children were took by the legs, and their brains dashed out against the boat."

If the bare recital of scenes like these cannot be perused without shuddering, what must be the agonised feelings of those whose wives and children are from day to day, and from night to night, exposed to be the victims of the same barbarity! Has mercy a voice to plead for the perpetrators and instigators of deeds like these? Should inquiry hereafter be made, why, within three months after this event, the savage Hamathli Micco, upon being taken by the American troops, was, by order of their commander, immediately hung, let it be told that, that savage was the commander of the party by which those women were butchered, and those helpless infants were thus dashed against the boat. Contending with such enemies, altho' humanity revolts at entire retaliation upon them, and spares the lives of their feeble and defenceless women and children, yet mercy herself surrenders to retributive justice the lives of their leading warriors taken in arms—and still more the lives of the foreign, white incendiaries, who, disowned by their own governments, and disowning their own natures, degrade themselves beneath the savage character by voluntarily descending to its level. Is not this the dictate of common sense? Is it not the usage of legitimate warfare? Is it not consonant to the soundest authorities of national law? "When at war (says Vattle,) with a ferocious nation, which observes no rule and grants no quarter, they may be chastised in the persons of those of them who may be taken; they are of the number of the guilty; and by this rigor the attempt may be made of bringing them to a sense of the laws of humanity." And again: "As a General has the right of sacrificing the lives of his enemies to his own safety or that of his people, if he has to contend with an inhuman enemy, often guilty of such excesses, he may take the lives of some of his prisoners, and treat them as his own people have been treated." The justification of these principles is found in their salutary efficacy, for terror and for example. It is thus only that the worse than Indian barbarities of Indians can be successfully encountered. It is thus only that the worse than Indian barbarities of European imposters pretending authority from their governments, but always disavowed, can be punished and arrested. Great Britain yet engages the alliance and co-operation of savages in war.—But her government has invariably disclaimed all countenance or authorization to her subjects to instigate them against us in time of peace. Yet so it has happened, that from the period of our established independence to this day, all the Indian wars with which we have been afflicted are distinctly traceable to the instigation of English traders or agents, always disavowed, yet always felt, more than one detected, but never before punished.—Two of them, offenders of the deepest dye, after solemn warning to their government, and individually to one of them, have fallen flagrante delicto, into the hands of an American General; and the punishment inflicted upon them has fixed them on high as an example, awful in its exhibition, but, we trust, auspicious in its results, of that which awaits unauthorized pretenders of European Agency, to stimulate and interpose in wars between the United States and the Indians, within their control.

This exposition of the origin, the causes and the character of the war with the Seminole Indians and part of the Creeks, combined with McGregor's mock patriotism and Nicholls' negroes, which necessarily led our troops into Florida, and gave rise to all those incidents of which Mr. Pizarro so vehemently complains, will it is hoped, enable you to present other and sounder views of the subject to his Catholic majesty's government. It will enable you to show that the occupation of Pensacola and St. Marks was occasioned neither by a spirit of hostility to Spain, nor with a view to extort, prematurely, the province from her possession, that it was rendered necessary by the neglect of Spain to perform her engagements of restraining the Indians from hostilities against the United States, and by the culpable countenance, encouragement and assistance given to those Indians in their hostilities, by the Spanish governor and commandant at those places. That the United States have a right to demand, as the President does demand, of Spain the punishment of those officers for this misconduct; and he further demands of Spain a just & reasonable indemnity to the U. S. for the heavy and necessary expenses which they have been compelled to incur, by the failure of Spain to perform her engagements to restrain the Indians, aggravated by this demonstrated complicity of her commanding officers with them, in their hostilities against the United States. That the two Englishmen executed by order of general Jackson were not only identified with the savages, with whom they were carrying on the war against the United States, but that one of them was the mover and fomenter of the war, which, without his interference and false promises to the Indians of support from the British government, never would have happened—that the other was the instrument of war against Spain as well as the United States, commissioned by McGregor, and expedited by Woodbine, upon their project of conquering Florida with these Indians and negroes. That, as accomplices of the savages, and sinning against their better knowledge, worse than savages, Gen. Jackson, possessed of their persons and of the proofs of their guilt might by the lawful and ordinary usages of war, have hung them both without the formality of a trial. That to allow them every possible opportunity of refuting the proofs or showing any circumstances in extenuation of their crimes, he gave them the benefit of a court martial of highly respectable officers. That the defence of one consisted, solely and exclusively, of technical evidence against him, and the other confessed his guilt.

Finally, that in restoring Pensacola and St. Marks to Spain, the President gives the most signal proof of his confidence, that hereafter her engagement to restrain, by force, the Indians of Florida from all hostilities against the United States, will be effectually fulfilled; that there will be no more murderers, no robberies within our borders, by savages prowling along the Spanish line seeking shelter within it, to display in their villages the scalps of our women and children, their victims, and to sell, with shameless effrontery, the plunder from our citizens in Spanish forts and cities; that we hear no more apologies from Spanish governors and commandants, of their inability to perform the duties of their office and the solemn contracts of their country—no more excuses for compliances to the savage enemies of the United States from the dread of their attacks upon themselves—no more harboring of foreign impostors, upon conclusion, that a strength sufficient will be kept in the province to restrain the Indians by force, and officers empowered and instructed to employ it effectually to maintain the good faith of the nation, by the effective fulfilment of the treaty. The duty of this government to protect the person and property of our fellow-citizens on the borders of the United States is imperative—It must be described—and if, after all the warnings that Spain has had—if, after the prostration of all her territorial rights and neutral obligations, by Nicholls and his banditti, during the war, and of all her treaty stipulations, by Arbuthnot and Ambrister, abetted by her own commanding officers, during peace, to the cruel annoyance of the United States—if the necessity of self defence should again compel the United States to take possession of the Spanish forts and places in Florida, declare, with the candor and frankness that becomes us, that another unconditional restoration of them must not be expected; that even the President's confidence, in the good faith and ultimate justice of the Spanish Government will yield to the painful experience of continual disappointment; and that, after unwearied and almost unnumbered appeals to them, for the performance of their stipulated duties, in vain, the United States will be reluctantly compelled to rely for the protection of their borders, upon themselves alone.

You are authorized to communicate the whole of this letter, and the accompanying documents, to the Spanish government.

I have the honor, &c.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

Insult and Injury.—One of the Western members of Congress, in a letter to the Editor of the Louisville Advertiser, asserts, that those Indians for whose board and portraits Mr. Adams paid $3,278, of the public money, are "the very Chiefs who instigated the massacre at Fort Mims, and who lighted the flame of Indian hostility on our Southern borders." This shows the kind of regard Mr. Adams has for the hardy yeomanry of the country, whose votes he is now so very anxious to obtain.

THE MORAL POWER

Of our Government destroyed by Mr. Adams.

The government of our country depends entirely for the force of its moral power both at home and abroad, upon the estimation it is held in by the people. A popular government, such as Mr. Monroe's during his last term, is doubly powerful, because it is upheld and supported by the voice of all the Citizens. Sedition, discontent and embarrassment, being frowned upon by the unanimity of the people, sink into insignificance under the weight of the government. At home, under this state of public tranquility, the citizen happily exercises his rights, and contentedly looks upon the rulers he has chosen, and the measures they pursue for the common welfare. Abroad, the citizen is protected in his person and pursuits, whilst the government is respected by foreign powers, and its dignity, force and rights properly acknowledged. Thus at home and abroad we feel justly proud of our rulers and ourselves. Let us observe what has been the result of the election of Mr. Adams, who came into office against the will of the people, and at a period when our nation presented the happy aspect which has been portrayed. The first change was in the people. Discontent spread far and wide, at the manner of his election, the voice of the people emphatically declared against the election of Mr. Adams. Sedition sprung into existence—our national councils were divided, and a dreadful struggle has been going on from the inception of the corruption which produced these evils, to the present time, on the part of the people for their constitutional rights, and on the part of the administration against them. The land is convulsed, and the Temple of Liberty rent to pieces. Distraction, disunion and strife, are the portion of the people under Mr. Adams, whilst the government is administered with PROFLIGACY, and upheld by CORRUPTION and scarcely saved from RUIN by the patriotism of those whose rights it has outraged, and whose choice it defeated. Thus are we at home. In foreign lands our citizens are insulted, imprisoned and robbed, our flag degraded, our national character at its lowest ebb, and the moral power of the government annihilated!!! Whilst our foreign and domestic concerns are falling into ruin, from the carelessness, imbecility and profligacy of our rulers! These truths are susceptible of comprehension by every man in the community. Ask the Farmer, where is your Colonial Trade with the British West Indies? LOST!! He exclaims, by the electioneering diplomacy of Adams and Clay! Ask the citizen, where is the Effect of your Right of Suffrage? He answers, defeated by the bargain of Adams and Clay! Ask the merchant, are you protected abroad and does your flag protect you? He answers, sorrowfully, No!—The Emperor of Brazil robs me of my property, imprisons me among robbers and murderers, and insults our flag!! Ask your Delegates in Congress, are our National concerns prosperous, and is the Government frugal and economical! You are promptly answered in the negative. "Your government is badly administered, your concerns neglected for electioneering journies, and your money squandered upon purchased adherents and corrupt favourites." Ask your foreign Minister, does the Government sustain you abroad, in the just discharge of your duties? He indignantly says, I threw up my commission, it would neither serve my countrymen nor give force to my remonstrances; our Secretary of State was so busily engaged in furnishing Dinner Speeches against the rights of the People, he had no time to spare in writing me instructions! besides, Mr. Adams is so situated that he dare not use the language befitting our President from the fear that the charge which his emissaries have made against Jackson, viz, "that he would involve the country in a war" might be turned against himself! Citizens, who love your country, who venerate your form of government, who admire economy and simplicity in its administration, who prize the security and peace and happiness of the people, ponder on the grave matters of reflection, which the present contest offer, and decide, whether you will vote for a man who has thus changed the condition of your government and you, in the short space of his power—or, whether you will now support a man, who is the choice of the people, and the only individual who can restore you to your former glorious condition—Who is that man? Ask your own judgements, and they will reply, ANDREW JACKSON the Cincinnatus of America!

[Del. Gazette.

From the Delaware Gazette.

THE TABLE'S TURNED.

The Journal published a statement of Jackson's having received, while Major General in the United States service for himself and others, in one year about $7,000, and in another about 3,000. As he is so anxious to promote economy and censure extravagance, we cannot, perhaps, do him a greater kindness than to present the following picture to his view:

John Q. Adams in account with the United States, from the first of October, 1808, to March, 1829. Dr.

	Dolls.	Cts.
Oct. 1. For amount paid for outfits as Minister to Russia,	9,000	00
1813—April 29. Amount paid you for outfits as Minister to Ghent,	9,000	00
1815—Feb. 27. Amount paid you for salary as minister to Russia, from the 1st October, 1808, to this date,	50,104	00
Amount paid you for salary as Minister to Ghent, from 28th April 1813 to 27th February, 1815,	20,229	81
Amount paid you for contingencies during your mission to Ghent,	5,345	60
Feb. 28. Amount paid you for outfit as minister to Great Britain,	9,000	00
1817—June 10. Amount paid you for salary as minister to Great Britain, from Feb. 27, 1815, to this date,	20,545	00
Amount paid you for contingencies during your mission to Great Britain,	5,005	62
Amount paid you for coming home,	2,250	00
1825—March 6. Amount paid you for acting as Secretary of State, from June 10, 1817, to this date,	40,369	67
1829—March 3. Amount paid you to furnish your house,	24,000	00
Amount given you for filling the Presidential chair from the 4th of March 1825 to this date inclusive,	100,000	00
Total	$305,790	47

Here's a fine bill for you! Eighteen years' services, at forty dollars and ninety eight cents per day!!!

By consulting the above table it will be seen that Adams obtained for himself alone, in less than two years $43,845 60, to which should be added about $18,000 paid him as Minister to Russia at the same time.

Now, my good fellow, give it to Adams handsomely, and if you shall call for help, we will lend you a hand.

After you have done so, you can send your account to Henry Clay, provided it be done after the Kentucky election, and before the 4th of March next.

THE BARGAIN AND SALE AT WASHINGTON!!

So much additional light has been thrown upon the subject of the BARGAIN and CORRUPTION by which Mr. Adams, in defiance of the expressed voice of the people, obtained his election to the Presidency, that a moment spent in taking a bird's eye view of the evidence in support of that charge as it now stands, will not be unprofitable. This corruption shows itself—

1st. In the Bargain with Mr. Clay—by which he became reconciled to Mr. Adams, his bitterest political enemy, and by making him President received at his hands the second office in the country, and the highest in his gift. This charge has been made out clearly in the Address of the Central Committee.

2d. In the bargain with Mr. Scott, of Missouri—the evidence of which exists in the facts, that Scott had the sole vote of Missouri—that his vote was necessary to make Adams president; that the people of Missouri were opposed to Adams; that Scott voted for him, and consequently was turned out of his seat in Congress—and that Mr. Adams immediately nominated his brother for a Judge, made his partner District Attorney, and gave him a very lucrative appointment, one worth a great deal more than his seat in Congress.

3d. In the bargain with Mr. Cook of Illinois. Mr. Cook was in the same situation as Mr. Scott, holding the vote of a state, and that vote absolutely necessary to elect Mr. Adams—He was got over, though contrary to his pledges, &c. to his constituents—He lost his seat by the measure, and was rewarded by a secret mission to Cuba, where he remained a few weeks, on his way from Washington home, and pocketed from 1,500 to 5,500 dollars—the exact sum being as yet, concealed from all investigation.

4th. In the bargain with Mr. Warfield of Maryland.—The delegation from Maryland happened to be so divided as that Mr. Warfield had the casting vote, and on his vote consequently depended Mr. Adams' election. The following queries, with the certificate of Dr. Zollickoffer, one of the most distinguished citizens of Maryland, and a candidate for elector on Mr. Clay's ticket at the time, annexed, detail the part Mr. Warfield acted in that election, and how he came to vote for Mr. Adams:—

[Here follow the queries heretofore published.]

5th. In the bargain with Messrs. Webster and Co.—There is on this subject the most direct evidence; Mr. Webster obtained, previous to the last Presidential election, a written pledge to the Federalists from under Mr. Adams' own hand, promising to distribute among them a share of his official patronage—in return for which promises, they were to give him their support for the Presidency—and this letter was extensively used, both before and after that election—it was shown to numerous distinguished individuals of the federal party—it influenced many of them to support Mr. Adams—it had the full effect it was intended to have, and was then disregarded as it was designed to be.

These are some of the grounds upon which the charge of bargain and corruption against the present administration rests. If one charge be true, then do Messrs. Adams and Clay deserve to retire from the offices they disgrace, beneath the frown of an indignant and insulted people. "No measure of punishment," says Mr. Clay himself, "can be sufficiently great" for them.—Trenton Emporium.

From the Troy Budget.

MR. ADAMS' ECONOMY.

Mr. Adams' diplomatic account relative to England stands thus—

Mr. King, Mr. Gallatin and Mr. Barbour, three ministers sent to England in course of about three years and a half, outfit for each $9,000	$27,000
Homefit, or half outfit, for Mr. King's son, for staying eight weeks only after his father came home,	4,500
Young Mr. Lawrence, charge d'affairs after Mr. Gallatin's return, to be allowed the same homefit [by the same rule,]	4,500
Outfits and homefits during Mr. Adams' reign of three and a half years,	$37,000
Salary of the above named ministers and charge d'affairs, exclusive of Mr. Barbour upwards of	$30,000
Other expenses of the diplomacy with England, including salary of clerks or secretaries, and other necessary incidental and unavoidable charges, probably at least in all,	$20,000
	$76,000

This is a plain matter of fact, admitting of no evasion or denial.

Mr. Adams, in account with the United States stands thus—

Dr. to expenditures on diplomacy with England of the sum of	$76,000
Cr. By loss of the direct West India trade, amounting annually to about,	$5,000,000

Thus stands the account diplomatique with England, our formidable rival. Let the people look to the facts and see the economy and skill of the President. A FARMER.

Baltimore Prices Current.

July 25, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $6 a 6.50; superfine Howard st. 4.75 a 4.87½; city mills 4.50; Susquehanna, 4.87½ a 4.50; WHEAT, best red .85 a .90; best white .95 a 1.00—CORN, 36 a 38; OATS 20 a 22.

☞ A Camp Meeting will commence at Nanticoke Point on the 14th of next August.

PATRIA LIBERTATIS
…HE VILLAGE HERALD.
…Princess-Anne, Md.
…TUESDAY, JULY 29, 1828.

…HE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"…nor and gratitude to the man who has …ed the measure of his country's glory." Jefferson.

"…ose services to this nation, entitle him … HIGHEST REWARDS."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

Elector of President and Vice President of U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester com…

Thomas K. Carroll.

We are authorized to announce …homas Bayly, …ohn C. Wilson, jr., …nthony B. Bennett, and …ohn J. Davis, Esq'rs. …andidates to represent Somerset county …e next House of Delegates of Maryland.

[COMMUNICATED.]

…e following piece appeared in the Iris of …y last, purporting to be from the Jour…

"…a recent affray, Judge Scott, of Arkan… killed Gen. Hogan. A short time since, … Scott killed one of his associates. If …udge shall continue in this course for a …ears, he will have as many qualifications …esident of the United States as Gener…kson; and may count on the support of …se who now support Gen. Jackson, un…ey should be recreant to their own prin…" Nat. Journal.

…ely, nothing could more clearly evince …esperate state of the Adams cause, than …ttempt to pass off Judge Scott for a …onian. Judge Scott is not friendly to …al Jackson's election but has long since …d in with the coalition. That Judge … was engaged in the duels alluded to is …ted; but it is equally notorious that Mr. …s with full knowledge of the duel in … he killed his opponent nominated this Judge Scott for an appointment to the bench.—It is proper, however, to re… that the Senate of the U. States re… the nomination. Now this nomination …dge Scott by the president clearly evin…ne of two things—That Mr. Adams …dered that Judge Scott's moral charac…as not tarnished by this duel, or that his …al regard towards Judge Scott occa… this direliction of principle.

[COMMUNICATED.]

☞ LICENSE LAW.

…rom and after the 1st May, 1828, no …ce may be issued of longer duration … until the 1st May thereafter, and the …e licence money must be paid therefor …r a whole year, no matter at what …, in the interval, it may be applied for … granted. Those whose licences shall … have expired 1st May, 1828, may in …u thereof continue to sell, until they …re, such articles only, as those licences …orise the sale of."

…the information of the public, I deem …er to publish the above extract, which …ces a part of the construction placed, … Treasury department, on the present … law—in order that those interested …ome prepared, on the 1st of the ensu…onth, when many licenses will expire, …w the same with a proper understand… the provisions of that law.

GEO. HANDY, Clerk of S. C. C.
…0th, 1828.

… above extract and remarks appear …he "Iris" of the 22d inst. to have … a writer, who signs himself "One of …ople," into a considerable fever, for …use I may probably guess.—…e always thought it desirable to give …tion to the public, but especially in …s in which they are deeply interested; …re, finding that the present license law …rk and unintelligible and being fur…ith the construction placed upon it by …easurer of the Western Shore, (who …enture to say has acted advisedly,) I, …own free will and accord, deemed it …o publish the extract above for the in… of the public.—Laws are suppos…e made for the public good and if they …cure and mysterious, are expounded …vise and virtuous and it is proper that …positions should be made public, oth… those hidden laws are no more than …tters—now, forasmuch as "public in…" appears to be the order of the …d is a hobby which has lately been …th much spirit by some, I cannot see …d cause why this lonesome "One of …ple" should fret himself. It seems that …ne of the people," and he is the only …desirous that public attention should …drawn towards this license law,—he …e aware that it is odious and oppres…herefore the people must be kept …dark—must make no inquiry into the … of public servants, in fine it would in… the principle of passive obedience …esistance—But why should this solita…e of the people" take the subject mat…much in dudgeon? Is he interested in …as a retailer of spirituous liquors or …ods?—he may, to use a favorite word …be, an "occult" retailer of both for …ow. …ably this "One of the people" may …d a conspicuous agency in forming …ense law which bears down so hard …he people—This may be the cause of …nding—My publication of the above …ction may have made this favourite …f "One of the people" appear in the public eye, ugly and deformed, and decrepit.

This poor lonely "One of the people" instead of showing that the construction of the law in the above extract was not correct, seems to concede that point by a parade of italicised nouns, adverbs and adjectives.

In reply to the last remark of "One of the people," I shall only state that the menace bears strong resemblance to that famous Coward's (Capt Bobadil) mode of warfare, and cannot fail to remind one of the story of the timid boy who whistled in the dark to keep off hobgoblins.

GEO. HANDY.
28th July.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

To Mr.
LITTLETON DENNIS TEACKLE.

SIR,

It seems you have been thrown into a most violent, though indiscreet, passion, by the exposure of your "constructive" salary as Superintendent of Primary Schools; and in the heat and flurry of your intemperate and indecorous ire, you very ingeniously, and no doubt, intentionally endeavour to draw off the public attention from your "constructive" salary (which is the matter of public importance,) to a private quarrel between you and myself.

Whilst I smile, with contempt, at your bullying and blustering threat to prosecute my communication, as a libel, and admire the talents and ingenuity, whereby you attempt, in this way, to elude the public's just indignation, I must nevertheless, condemn and reprobate the application of those talents to such unworthy and disingenuous purposes. As I am not your personal enemy, Mr. Teackle, as I bear you no malice, and consequently have no disposition to scandalize you, I shall not descend to personal abuse. I leave that dirty expedient to you and your Somerset Sewer, and recur to the original topics of public importance.

Then, did you, or did you not, previous to your going to the last Legislature, most inveterately oppose any appropriation, by the State of Maryland, for the Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road?

Did you or did you not bring down, to this county, from Baltimore, pamphlets, tending to advise the people against such an appropriation?

Did you or did you not, after all this, vote for the appropriation in the Legislature; and if you did, what was your motive for such gross inconsistency?

Did you receive $500, for your services and expenses as Superintendent merely, or was it partly, (by a kind of barter and bargain,) in consideration for your vote on the Rail Road appropriation?

Now, sir, these are the subjects, in which the people are interested, and if you will make an address "to the public," and give fair and probable answers to these questions, the public will be much better satisfied, than with your vain attempts to delude their minds, with your nonsensical talk about "scandal" and "malice," and your silly and contemptible threats to prosecute that for a libel, which every body, who understands any thing about the matter, knows to be a proper enquiry into an important public matter.

I repeat, sir, the public want the answers, the whole answers, and nothing but the answers. We want the truth also, so that your statements, if they depend not on other evidence, but merely upon your ipse dixit, must be very plausible indeed, to ensure belief. You told us your Primary School Bill wanted no amendment, and that the resources of the Treasury, were sufficient to carry it into operation. Gov. Kent says, in his last message, that the Law, though well received by the people, is so defective, that without material amendment, it will be useless; and that the Treasury, instead of being sufficient to carry the School Law into operation, is deficient in funds for the current expenses of government. You and Gov. Kent are both Adams men, but you see there is a lie between you, as the saying is. I think you told the people, last fall in a hand-bill, that the office of Superintendent was without salary or emolument, and yet it seems for the same office, you received five hundred dollars. This is another—what-d'-ye-call-it? You know, Mr. Teackle, that it would not answer your double purposes, to have the Superintendent's compensation, a stated Salary, for that would exclude you, at once, from the Legislature. But, "thinks I to myself," "I'll hold out to the people the idea that the Superintendency of Public Instruction, is not an office of trust or profit, and after I get into the Legislature, I'll bring in a whopping account for services, that is for scribbling, and I'll manage the business well enough, with my Western Shore friends."—Should the people complain, you thought you could tell them that the committee on claims examined the account and approved it. But this wont do—You must give us the account and let us examine the items. You are not the first man who has received money, in "a legal course," and was not justly and honestly entitled to it. J. Q. Adams once received a neat sum, for a journey, he never performed. But this was a "constructive journey," you know. J. H. Pleasants was paid six dollars a day, and his travelling expenses besides, for carrying despatches to South America, instead of doing which, he sent the despatches to S. America by the Captain of a private vessel, and went, himself, in three ships to England. This is another "constructive journey," and though Pleasants did not perform the services, for which he was employed, yet Mr. Clay examined his account and put his 'Approved, H. Clay,' to it, and I suppose the poor captain, who performed the services, did not get a cent. And you, Mr. Teackle, have received, from our impoverished Treasury, five hundred dollars for a little useless scribbling, at your leisure. But this, you will say, to make the most of it, is but a "constructive" salary. Quercus, one of the people, makes an enquiry into your political conduct, advises the people to put down the rising corruption, in the extravagances of government, &c. and you hop into a pet, call his communication a libel, and threaten to notice it "in a legal course." I presume you would make this a "constructive" libel. You had better take care, what kind of "legal course" you get into, or you might again have cause to repent your "legal course." You have been engaged in, at least, two very disagreeable "legal courses." But do not let this discourage you. If you can employ, by your constructive salary, forty Philadelphia Lawyers to make out of my communication, by construction, a libel against you, or any body else, I say, wreak your vengeance—I repeat it, sir, in a spirit of defiance, WREAK YOUR VENGEANCE! but answer my enquiries. I know something about the liberty of the press, and I hope I shall never abuse it. But for you, for L. D. Teackle to talk about the indulgence of a licentious press to the gratification of private malice or political effect in terms offensive to good taste and the common decorum of civilization, is absolutely as ridiculous, as to hear a consummate and notorious rogue gravely delivering moral lectures on common honesty. I am really astonished at your inconsistency—Why, sir, have you not established a press at Princess-Anne, which is considered one of the vilest kennels of defamation and scandal? Has not your own parricidal hand penned the most base, foul, and libellous charges against Andrew Jackson, the second saviour of his country? Have not you charged him with a conspiracy and treason against his country? and have you not affected to have proofs of those charges? Have you not charged him with cold blooded murder!!! In fine, can you mention a crime, of which you have not charged him? You have even dragged his private character before the public gaze and misrepresented it. And still you talk about the licentiousness of the press. According to your own account, you, Mr. Teackle, are the last man in the wide world who ought, talk about any man's character public or private. I tell you, sir, in conclusion, to LOOK AT HOME! (In haste.)

QUERCUS.
July 26th.

P. S. I hope you will not think, sir, that this is all I mean to say to you. No sir, 'tis not all. I am compelled to stop, to send my communication to the press for the next Herald; as I cannot let an opportunity pass to reply to you. I shall reserve, till my next a further "notice" of you, "in a legal course." A very equivocal phrase, Mr. Teackle. Q.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

"He who will not reason is a bigot—he who dare not is a slave—and he who cannot is a fool." How far this quotation portrays the character of "Observer," may be seen by a reference to the coarse ebullitions of his coarser mind, as "gorgeously displayed" in several numbers of the Iris—particularly in the last. Although he has produced a piece exceeding in length any of those written relative to his "affinity" sentence, he says little or nothing concerning that shameful attempt at imposition; nor does he confute the positions taken in my last communication.—Yet he persists in reiterating what he cannot substantiate, and again promises a continuance of his stuff on a future day—which makes good the Spanish proverb, he who is thrown would always wrestle. But I have no disposition to continue an unprofitable paper war with one, who, it appears, is ready to sacrifice any remaining principle of honor or decency that he may have, in order to satiate an inordinate thirst of defamation. Nor do I think that any one will censure me in this, whatever Observer may say hereafter, either for his own merriment or for the gratification of those who laud his inventive faculty, which, like pertness and ignorance, may make an assertion in three lines which it will cost learning and ingenuity hundreds to answer. But to avoid prolixity, I shall present a number of short extracts from his writings, which shall for the present close the contest on my part, and a failure to prove which, will verify his admission, viz: that it is an evidence of a bad cause where slander is made a subterfuge for argument. He asserts—

That the articles which appeared under my signature were never the production of a Methodist, but the production of individuals who scarcely enter the church door once a year—a trick of dishonesty and perversion;

That I have sacreligiously thrown around me the respectable name of a religious denomination to deceive the people;

That the articles of the Herald [against him] are the result of consultation;

That the origin and beginning of this business was with us;

That we have brought in the holy subject of Religion for the purpose of electioneering;

That making a profession of religion, when driven thereto by the charge of simulation, in a newspaper, is vain boasting and hypocrisy in a Methodist;

That this profession was accompanied by shouts of falsehoods, lies, untruths, &c.;

That there is a powerful opposition to Jackson in Tennessee;

That there is in the M. E. church a vast preponderance of sentiment or affinity in favour of Mr. Adams; so that "like priest [or king?] like people" is appropriate;

That Mr. Adams is not a Unitarian who thinks that CHRIST is inferior to GOD and ought not be acknowledged as LORD; and, what appears from his dogmatical cogitations,

That for him [Observer] to make assertions without proof, is deliberate and the manner of a high-minded and honorable man,* as well as the using of the following pretty epithets, which, in me, he would most certainly esteem highly culpable, however appropriately and justly they might be applied:

Unhallowed deception—affected gasconade—fulminating mouthpiece—sacreligious robo——hypothetical, illegitimate and perverted—animadversions—disingenuity unworthy—disingenuity peculiar to Jacksoism; vilify—baseness and irreligion—loose and latitudinarian—gorgeous and ostentatious—phillipic—perversions—labyrinths of scurrility—vent spleen, torrents of abuse—slander pertinaciously adhered to—glaring—grinn'd horribly, ghastly—low ribaldry, falsehoods, lies, untruths—[calling one who professes religion] a prodigy of a Christian!!—[and declaring 'a Methodist' to be] a Hypocrite!!! &c. &c. Reader, ought Observer, who uses these and many other abusive terms, talk about employing "scurrilous epithets?"

I now challenge Mr. Observer to the proof: And until he satisfactorily prove the above assertions, which are taken from his communications, I shall consider him a base …FAMER and malicious SLANDERER* unworthy of further notice by

A METHODIST.

* His own words, which were in several places necessary to speak the truth, as he insinuated it should be given without reserve.

How is this?—We have heard it remarked, that when Gen. Washington was President, he caused a treaty to be made with the King of Prussia, containing an article intended to suppress the iniquitous and inhuman practice of privateering, and establishing the wholesome doctrine that 'free ships shall make free goods'; in other words, that the flag should protect the property over which it waved; but that, when John Adams was President, and John Quincy Adams was minister to Berlin, (with his $30,000 salary and outfits,) he, the said John Quincy Adams, by dint of his boasted "diplomatic skill," laboured with the Prussian government until he prevailed with the King, (much against his inclination,) to renew the treaty, with the exception of the article in question, so important to us as a commercial and a neutral nation, and so necessary on the score of justice and humanity.

Adams sitting alone.—ENTER CLAY.

Clay. Sire, I am afraid our cake is dough! The Chieftain will be elected.

Adams. How is that! will not the "fifty mortal murders," which we have heaped on him, sink him?

Clay. No, sire, the people have become too enlightened—they will not believe us.—They know that the General is a humane man. They do not forget that we ourselves have praised him, when he was not in our way.

Adams. What do they say about his spelling?

Clay. Ah! sire, they allege that you are guilty of greater blunders in syntax than he in orthography—besides, they say the General can read men and things much better than your Worship.

Adams. What do they say about the arrangement between ourselves?

Clay. They have found us out.

Adams. Do they think me a republican?

Clay. No! They never did. And Walsh has confessed that there was an agreement between you and the old blue-lights to divide the offices.

Adams. I am afraid you have not been watchful to secure the press.

Clay. I have spent almost all my time at it, but the people stick to the Hero; they raise up presses faster than we can buy them. I shall, however, forthwith go to Philadelphia.* But the people are our ruin.

Adams. I have one sheet anchor yet. The Nose! The Nose! what do they say about my son's Nose?

Clay. The people will not be led by the Nose. They did not think it right that you should place your son in a situation to insult others without retaliation.

Adams. Then "farewell, a long farewell" to all my glory.

*Clay did go to Philadelphia, and on his return stopped at Baltimore, where he made his "War, Pestilence and Famine" speech—He is now on his way to Kentucky; and while he is thus scouting through the country he receives, under President Adams, a large SALARY as Secretary of State!!! Yes! instead of attending to the duties of his office he is off on an ELECTIONEERING Trip!

"Portsmouth, October 18, 1800.

"Dear Sir,—In the conversation held between us Mr. Adams certainly expressed himself (as far as my memory serves me) in the very words mentioned in your letter viz. that he hoped, or expected to see the day when Mr. Taylor, and his friend Mr. Giles, would be convinced that the people of America would not be happy without a hereditary Chief Magistrate and Senate, or at least for life.

"Believe me sincerely,
"Your obedient servant,
"JOHN LANGDON

"Samuel Ringold." W. Tel.

☞ The Orphans' Court of Somerset County will sit on the 12th of next August.

DIED, in Princess-Anne, on last Friday night, after a short but severe illness, Mr. CHARLES ROBINSON.

BARREN CREEK SPRINGS.

THE SUBSCRIBER

Begs leave to inform his friends & the public,

That his HOUSE is now open

FOR THE RECEPTION OF VISITERS.

An anxious solicitude to promote the comfort of those who are in pursuit of health, pleasure, or business, has induced him to make such arrangements as will enable him to give ample satisfaction to those who may favour him with their company. By those who have visited the Springs, during the present season, the waters have been pronounced more powerful in their effects than hitherto experienced—operating in most cases, as a purgative medicine. Those desirable effects, in conjunction with its chalybeate properties, which are acknowledged to be unsurpassed by any waters in the world, present a powerful inducement to such as are already assailed by disease, and to those who are desirous to avoid the bilious diseases of the climate.

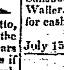
Persons who are inclined to try the efficacy of the waters may rest assured that every accommodation shall be provided to render them happy and comfortable; and the charges shall be apportioned to the pressure of the times.

The public's humble servant,
CHARLES LEARY.

N. B. Travellers, generally, particularly the passengers of the steam-boat Maryland, will find this an easy and commodious stage, after the arrival of the boat at Cambridge. (being only four miles distant from Vienna.) Here they will be certain to meet with the purest and best Waters of the peninsula, and a Table supplied with the best accommodations the country can afford—on the most reasonable conditions.

July 29. mku

STOP THE RUNAWAYS.



ABSCONDED on the 23d day of July, THREE NEGROES; one negro woman named Easter, aged about 45 or 50 years, and two negro men, one by the name of Bob, dark mulatto, about 19 years old, and the other by the name of Harry, very black, about 23 years old. We will give a reward of 25 dollars if taken in the county; if either taken so much in proportion; and if taken out of the county or state, we will give 45 dollars, if secured so that we can get them again, or if either taken up so much in proportion.

THOMAS BELL.
HOPKINS WINDSON.
Nanticoke Point, July 29. vk

NOTICE.

THOSE persons who have taken out license under the present license law are requested to call on me for fifty cents each, as I find I have charged that sum too much. I have been led into this mistake in consequence of the publication of the law in the Village Herald, (in the absence of an authentic copy,) as will appear by reference to No. 50, Vol. I. The Editor published the law verbatim as it was sent to him by Mr. L. D. Teackle, with interliniations in his own hand writing; so the fault lies at Mr. Teackle's door.

GEO. HANDY.
July 29.

PUBLIC VENDUE.

PURSUANT to an order of the Orphans Court of Somerset County, there will be sold at public sale, at the late residence of Richard Evans, deceased, on Smith's Island, on MONDAY the 11th of next AUGUST, all the PERSONAL ESTATE of said dec'd. (negroes excepted,) consisting of

The Crop growing on the ground, one Schooner Vessel, several Canoes; a large Stock of Horned Cattle,

SHEEP & HOGS, with Household and Kitchen Furniture, and various other articles. Sale to commence at 11 o'clock A. M. and to continue from day to day, until the whole be sold.

A credit of six months will be given on all sums exceeding $5, the purchasers giving approved securities, and for all purchases under $5 the cash will be required.

SEVERN MISTER,
July 29. Exec'r. of R. Evans, dec'd.

IN CHANCERY,
SOMERSET COUNTY COURT,
MAY TERM, 1828.

ORDERED, That the sales of the real estate of Peter Dashiell as made and reported by William W. Handy, Trustee for the sale of said estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shown by the second day of the next term of this court:—Provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess-Anne once a week for three weeks successively before the said day.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.
True copy. TEST,
GEO. HANDY, Clk.
July 29, 1828. wk

NOTICE.

THE Levy Court of Somerset County will receive Proposals in writing on Tuesday the 26th day of August next, in reference to a Standard Bearer, in compliance with the late act of Assembly relating to Weights and Measures. Applicants will hand in their proposals on that day.

By order,
GEO. HANDY, Clk.
July 29. km

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Court of Appeals for the Eastern Shore of Maryland and to me directed, at the suit of John Parsons use of George C. and John H. Johnson against John Smart, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate of the said John Smart in and to a tract of land lying and being in my bailiwick, called Wright's Conclusion, containing two hundred and sixty acres, more or less, being the same lands which were conveyed to a certain John Dashiell by Charles Jones, Sheriff of Somerset county, by deed bearing date the first day of March, 1825, and at present occupied by Mr. Kendal Parsons, and which I shall proceed to sell at the Court-House door in the town of Princess-Anne, in Somerset county, on Tuesday the 12th day of August next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock, P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
July 22, 1828.

FOR RENT,

For the ensuing year, that FARM which was formerly the property of William Tilghman, dec'd. situated on the head of Back Creek. For terms apply to

JAMES STEWART.
July 22, 1828. kw

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year, the Houses now occupied, one by Mrs. Mary Ballard, and the other by Joseph S. Colgan, in the town of Princess-Anne. For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.
July 15, 1828. k

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Johnson & Co. against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: a house and lot at present occupied by the said Elijah C. Johnson, being and lying in my bailiwick near Salisbury, on the road from Salisbury to Spring-Hill, and near to a mill-pond owned by William W. Handy, and adjoining a lot of ground purchased by Geo. Todd of the said Elijah C. Johnson, trustee for the sale of the real estate of Henry Trader; Also all the right, interest and estate of the said Elijah C. Johnson, in & to a house & lot in the county & town aforesaid, which was devised by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by Levin D. Collier; Also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esq.'s mills, being the office of the said Elijah, which said property I shall proceed to sell on Saturday the 9th day of August next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. in the town of Salisbury at the auction room of James L. Waller, Esq. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
July 15th, 1828. lde

JOB PRINTING,
SUCH AS
Handbills, Cards, Blanks,
PAMPHLETS, &c.
Thankfully received and neatly printed; on moderate terms,
At the Office of the Village Herald.

THE CORNUCOPIÆ.

"Blending the useful with the sweet."

ON BUYING BARGAINS.

If it be difficult to persuade the idle to be busy, it is likewise, as experience has taught me, not easy to convince the busy that it is better to be idle. When you shall despair of stimulating sluggishness to motion, I hope you will turn your thoughts towards the means of stilling the bustle of pernicious activity.

I am the unfortunate husband of a buyer of bargains. My wife has somewhere heard, that a good housewife never has any thing to purchase when it is wanted. This maxim is often in her mouth, and always in her head. She is not one of those philosophical talkers that speculate without practice, and learn sentences of wisdom only to repeat them; she is always making additions to her stories; she never looks into a broker's shop, but she spies something that may be wanted some time; and it is impossible to make her pass the door of a house where she hears goods selling by auction.

Whatever she thinks cheap, she holds it the duty of an economist to buy: in consequence of this maxim, we are encumbered on every side with useless lumber. The carpenter is employed once a week in building closets, fixing cupboards, and fastening shelves; and my house has the appearance of a ship stored for a voyage to the colonies.

I had often observed that advertisements set her on fire; and therefore pretending to emulate her laudable frugality, I forbade the newspaper to be taken any longer: but my precaution is vain; I know not by what fatality, or by what confederacy, every catalogue of genuine furniture comes to her hand; every advertisement of a newspaper newly opened is in her pocket book and she knows before any of her neighbours when the stock of any man leaving off trade is to be sold cheap for ready money.

Such intelligence is to my dear-one the Syren's song. No engagement, no duty, no interest, can withhold her from a sale, from which she always returns congratulating herself upon her dexterity at a bargain; the porter lays down his burden in the hall; she displays her new acquisitions, and spends the rest of the day in contriving where they shall be put.

As she cannot bear to have any thing uncomplete, one purchase necessitates another; she has twenty feather-beds more than she can use, and a late sale has supplied her with a proportionable number of Whitney blankets, a large roll of linen for sheets, and five quilts for every bed, which she bought because the seller told her, that if she would clear his hands he would let her have a bargain.

Thus by hourly encouragements my habitation is made narrower; the dining-room is so crowded with tables, that dinner scarcely can be served; the parlour is decorated with so many piles of china, that I dare not step within the door; at every turn of the stairs I have a clock, and half the windows of the upper floors are darkened, that shelves may be set before them.

This, however, might be borne, if she would gratify her own inclinations without opposing mine. But I who am idle am luxurious, and she condemns me to live upon salt provisions. She knows the loss of buying in small quantities; we have, therefore, whole hogs and quarters of oxen. Part of our meat is tainted before it is eaten, and part is thrown away because it is spoiled; but she persists in her system, and will never buy any thing by single pennyworths.

The common vice of those who are still grasping at more, is to neglect that which they already possess; but from this failing, my charm is free. It is the great care of her life that the pieces of beef should be boiled in the order in which they are bought; that the second bag of pease should not be opened till the first be eaten; that every feather-bed shall be lain on in its turn; that the carpets should be taken out of the chest once a month and brushed, and the rolls of linen opened now and then before the fire. She is daily inquiring after the best traps for mice, and keeps the rooms always scented by fumigations to destroy the moths. She employs workmen, from time to time, to adjust six clocks that never go, and clean fine jacks that rust in the garret; and a woman in the next alley lives by scouring the brass and pewter, which are only laid up to tarnish again.

She is always imagining some distant time in which she shall use whatever she accumulates; she has four looking-glasses which she cannot hang up in her house, but which will be handsome in more lofty rooms; and pays rent for the place of a vast copper in some warehouse, because when we live in the country we shall brew our own beer.

Of this life I have long been weary, but know not how to change it; all the married men whom I consult advise me to have patience; but some old bachelors are of opinion, that since she loves sales so well, she should have a sale of her own; and I have, I think, resolved to open her boards, and advertise an auction.

I am sir,
Your very humble servant,
PETER PLENTY.

(From the Southern Agriculturist.)

THE PROCESS FOR MAKING CASTOR OIL.

Dear Sir: In compliance with your request, I send you the process for making Castor Oil; and hope that it may prove useful to the gentleman who requested the information.

After collecting the bunches of seeds, expose them to the sun until perfectly dry—then lay them on a scaffold, and beat them with a very small flail, which will separate the hull from the seed; then pound them in a wooden mortar till the shell of every seed is broken. Have a vessel of water at boiling heat, which you will then put the seed into from ten to twenty minutes. A dirty scum will rise which must be taken off; the clear oil will then rise, which must be put into a second vessel without water, to be acted on by a slow fire, not to arrive at boiling heat; as soon as that may appear; (which will make inferior quality of oil;) it is ready for bottling as soon as cold exclude it from the air. The kind of Palma Christie said to be the best for making oil, is of the species where the stalk is pink.

P. S. The quantity of water in the first vessel must be as three to one to the quantity of the beat seed; and stir frequently to prevent its adhering to the bottom of the vessel, which would give it a burned taste. Be careful that it does not boil over, as it will take fire. I remain your's &c. S.—

THE HEAVENLY STATE.

"It has been asked, Shall we know each other in heaven?—Suppose you should not, you may be assured of this, that nothing will be wanting to your happiness. But oh, you say, how would the thought affect me now! There is the babe that was torn from my bosom: how lovely, then, but a cherub now! There is the friend, who was as mine own soul, with whom I took sweet counsel, and went to the house of God in company. There is the dear minister whose preaching turned my feet into the path of peace, whose words were to me a well of life. There is the beloved mother on whose knees I first laid my little hands to pray, and whose lips first taught my tongue to pronounce the name of Jesus! And are these removed from us for ever?—Shall we recognize them no more? Cease your anxieties. Can memory be annihilated? Did not Peter, James, and John know Moses and Elias? Does not the Saviour inform us that the friends benefactors have made of the mammon of unrighteousness, shall receive them into everlasting habitations? Does not Paul tell the Thessalonians they are his hope, and joy, and crown, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ?"
Jay's Lectures.

BEAUTIFUL EXTRACT.

Life is a fountain fed by a thousand streams that perishes if one be dried. It is a silver cord twisted with a thousand strings, that parts asunder if one be broken. Frail and thoughtless mortals are surrounded by innumerable dangers which makes it much more strange that they escape so long, than that they almost all perish suddenly at last. We are encompassed with accidents every day to crush the mouldering tenement that we inhabit. The seeds of disease are planted in our Constitution by the hand of nature.—The earth and the atmosphere, whence we draw our life, are impregnated with death—health is made to operate its own destruction. The food that nourishes the body contains the elements of its decay—the soul that animates it by a vivifying fire, tends to wear it out by its action—death lurks in ambush along all our paths.

Notwithstanding this is the truth, so palpably confirmed by daily examples before our eyes, how little do they lay it to heart! We see our friends and neighbors perishing around us, but how seldom does it occur to our thoughts that our knell; perhaps, shall give the next fruitless warning to the world.

Some men will follow Christ on certain conditions: if he will not lead them through rough roads, if he will not enjoin them any painful tasks, if the sun and wind do not annoy them; if he will remit a part of his plan and oder. But the true Christian, who has the spirit of Jesus, will say, as Ruth said to Naomi, "Whither thou goest I will go!" whatever difficulties and dangers may be in the way.—Cecil.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court, at the suit of Henry Lankford, administrator of Pierce Riggin against Henry J. Riggin; by virtue of two writs of Fieri Facias, one at the suit of Elizabeth J. C. Stewart by William Miles her guardian, one do. at the suit of Mary A. Stewart by William Miles her guardian; by virtue of six writs of Fieri Facias issued by Burton Cannon, a justice of the peace for Somerset county, to wit:—one at the suit of Levin Tiler, executor of Samuel Milborn, 1 do. at the suit of Isaac Riggin, administrator of Noah Riggin, 2 at the suits of Roland Bevins, 1 do. at the suit of James Stewart, 1 do. at the suit of Robert Lankford; by virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by William Costen, a justice of the peace for Somerset county, at the suit of Richard H. Samson, at the use of James Samson, at the use of Burton Cannon, all the above writs against Henry J. Riggin, and to me directed, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit:—One negro man Jim, 1 do. woman Ann, 1 do. Nelly, 1 do. Esther, 1 do. boy Dave, 1 do. girl Margaret, 1 do. Case, 1 do. Jane, 1 do. Eliza, 3 head of horses, 2 yokes of oxen, 4 head of cattle, 20 head of sheep, 6 feather beds and furniture, 1 corner cupboard, 1 clock, 1 sideboard, 1 desk, 1 walnut table, 3 pine do. 1 stand, 1 lot of earthen ware, 1 dozen chairs, 1 safe, 2 trunks, 1 lot of knives and forks, 1 grind stone, 1 hand mill, 1 wain cart, 1 carriage, 1 wheat fan, 1 lot of casks, 1 cider mill, 1 cross-cut saw, 1 hand do. 3 ploughs, 3 harrows, 3 axes, 1 lot of iron, 150 bushels of corn, more or less, 14 stacks of fodder, more or less, 1 lot of flax in the straw, 2 pair of and-irons, 3 ox yokes, 3 ox chains, 6 hives with bees, 1 lot of tin ware, 1 lot of cooper's ware, 1 looking glass, 2 guns, 1 tract of land called Gray's Purchase, containing 100 acres, 1 do. Dudly, 50 acres, 1 do. Rawley Hill, 50 acres, 1 do. part of Unity Enlarge, 43 acres, 1 do. Privilege 30 acres, 1 do. part of Privilege; 20 acres, 1 do. part of Phillips' Conclusion, 200 acres, 1 do. part of Friend's Assistance, 90 acres, 1 do. part of Pasturage, 20 acres, part of a tract of land called Panther's Den, 1 do. part of Allen's Vale, 1 do. Lonely Glade—the three last named tracts containing 914 acres of land, all the above tracts containing more or less acres—which I shall proceed to sell at the court-house door on TUESDAY the 29th of JULY (inst.,) between the hours of 12 and 4 o'clock, P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
July 8, 1828. wp

WANTED.

I want to hire a COLOURED WOMAN, of good character, who understands cooking and house work in general. To such a one I will give liberal wages. Enquire at the Village Herald office. July 22

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phœbus.
For terms apply to
JAMES POLK.
June 3, 1828. wk

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance, or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's obt. servant.
WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times, with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.
W. C. R.
Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess-Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

LEVIN H. POWELL.
July 8 ww

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC.

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmus, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER.
Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne, Md.

FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber is desirous of disposing of his real estate, being and lying, in Worcester county, Md. and situated on Dividing Creek. The landed estate consists of 2000, or more acres. The improvements are a dwelling house and out buildings with a good SAW and GRIST MILL, both in excellent order, also a young orchard. About 100 acres of the land is in a good state of cultivation.

There is, on one part of the above property, an abundance of Iron Ore, which would warrant the erection of a Forge, and prove an object of value to a purchaser acquainted with, and calculated for, such an undertaking.

The terms of sale will be—one third down, and 3 years for the payment of the balance. For further particulars apply to

JOHN MORRIS.
April 22 kd

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street.
BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of
Groceries, Liquors, &c.
CONSISTING OF
Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.
ALSO,
Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,
Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.
And a general assortment
Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.
DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD
Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.
May 13, 1828. mw

PROPOSALS

For publishing in Hagerstown, Md. a Weekly Newspaper, under the title of

The Hagerstown Mail.

The Mail will convey "news from all nations"—particularly those most interesting to our own country, and will be conducted so as to give early and correct information of public affairs generally; of political occurrences in the different states; of the rise and fall of American produce in our principal cities, and the prices in foreign markets.

The political principles of this paper will be as purely Republican as those contained in the Declaration of Independence, and the Rights of the People shall be at all times zealously, firmly and fearlessly supported, whoever may be in power. The Establishment is intended to be a permanent one, and as such every endeavor will be used to render it a first rate country paper deserving public patronage.

With regard to the Presidential question which now agitates the whole Union, the Mail will decidedly and openly advocate the election of ANDREW JACKSON. And when it is considered that there is only one press in Baltimore, and only one between Baltimore and Cumberland that espouses his cause, it will readily be allowed that in so large an extent of country there is room for at least another—more particularly as all the other presses in this rich, and populous country, where he has so many disinterested friends, are against him; the times too emphatically demand the establishment of such a press, for at no period of our political history have such unfair and unjustifiable means been resorted to, in order to destroy the character of a public man, as have been within the last year to injure the well-earned fame of the Hero of New Orleans, and merely because he is a candidate before the people for a high and important office—although he was brought out by the people themselves; but the Mail will never leave him until he arrives at Washington, and receives from the hands of the people, the honors justly due to one whose whole life in peace and in war has been devoted to his Country's Liberty, Welfare and Happiness.

Terms of Subscription.

For a single paper Three Dollars a year: But this may be discharged by Two Dollars paid in advance, or Two Dollars and Fifty cents in Six Months—Any person obtaining Ten subscribers and becoming responsible for the money shall have a paper gratis.

Hagers-town, May 13—July 1

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, at the suit of William Kibble against Isaac Surmon, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one house and lot, containing one acre, more or less, known by the name of Hog-Neck, and situated on Wicomico river, about 3 miles from its head; also two beds, one loom, one gun, one sein, two canoes, two hogs, and one yearling, which I shall proceed to sell on Wednesday the 6th of next August, on the premises to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
July 15, 1828. ws

EMIGRATION TO LIBERIA.

NOTICE.

THE Managers of the American Colonization Society give notice, that they are ready to receive applications for the conveyance of free people of color to the colony of Liberia.

In all cases, the age, sex, and professions of the applicants must be mentioned.

Applicants from the State of Maryland must be prepared to offer the affidavit of some free white person, to their having actually resided within the State of Maryland for "twelve months" previous to the period of emigration.

Applications may be made in Baltimore, to Hon. Judge Brice, Charles Howard Esq. of John E., John H. B. Latrobe Esq., or Charles C. Harper Esq., Agents of the Society.

JOB PRINTING

Neatly executed at this office.

IN CHANCERY,

12th July, 1828.

ORDERED, That the sale of the real estate of William Waters, made and reported by the Trustee, Marcellus Jones, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause be shewn to the contrary on or before the 12th day of September next, provided a copy of this order be inserted once in each of three successive weeks, in one of the newspapers published in Somerset county, before the 12th day of August next. The report states the amount of sales to be $601 25.

True copy. TEST,
RAMSAY WATERS,
July 22, 1828. Reg. in Ch

A LIST OF LETTERS

Remaining in the Post-Office at Princess-Anne, Md., on July 1, 1828.

B—William Bennett, Isaiah Bayley, J Benson
C—Joseph S. Colgan
D—Elizabeth Dory, George Davy, jun. William Dix, Elizabeth Durby, Isaac D son, William F. Dashiell, Littleton Dennis
F—Josiah Furness, Whitty Fountain
G—Henry T S Gibbons
H—William Hunt, Mrs Sarah Hayward, Isaiah Hayman
I—Isaiah & Susan (care of Lambert Hyl
J—John Jones 2, Levin D Jones, Alexander Jones, Doct Matthias Jones
K—Robert I H King
L—Henry Lankford
M—William Miles, Daniel Miles, John Daniel, William M'Daniel 2, Miss Martin, Miss Sarah R Maddux, M Somerset Lodge
P—William Purnell, William Parkes 2, phen Parkes
R—Noah Riley, Robert Rich, Miss M Ann Riggin
S—John B. Stevenson, Rev. William Stone
T—Gilbert Townsend, Rinaldo Turner
W—William Williams, Miss Mary G. son

SAML. BROWN, P.
July 8, 1828. ww

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.

Somerset County Orphans Co

July 8th, 18

§§§§§§§§ ON application of Sarah shiell, Administratrix of John shiell, (negro) late of Somerset ty, deceased, it is ordered that she give the required by law, for creditors to exhibit claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for successive weeks in the Village Herald, at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of W for Somerset county

In compliance with the above Ord

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, obtained from the Orphans Court of S set county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of JOHN SHIELL, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit same, with the vouchers thereof, to the scriber, on or before the 29th of Ja next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 8th of July, 1828.

SARAH DASHIELL
Adm'trix of John Dashiell,
July 15, 1828. k

SINCLAIR & MOORE

Pratt-St. Wharf, Baltimore,

HAVE in store—Millet, Lucerne, Corn, bunch, pole & soup Beans, a large assortment for planting, and garden generally.

PLOUGHS,

Amongst which are the much approved self-sharpening point Plough—By turning and reversing said point, the share will last much longer than the cast share of any other plough, in as much as the point is steel, and when worn bevelling it is sharpened, if turned over. The CULTIVATORS made by Sinclair & Moore pulverize the ground more effectually, and much deeper than the old fashioned hoed kind—and by the use of these in the culture of corn, it will save nearly two thirds of the ploughing.

ALSO, Socket Shovels, Scythes, tocks and Picks, with handles; steel Hay and Manure Forks, WHEAT FANS, & GRAIN CRADLES, with Waldron Scythes; Garden Tools generally; Wove Wire for Seives, and Mill S

☞They have received from the brig Hyperion, capt. Forbes, Liverpool, a quantity of grain and Scythes, (Waldron's prime) Sickles, cable trace Chains; Straw and Hay Grass Hooks, and Garden Tools, which are turnip and other Hoes; Tools, budding and pruning Knives,

☞For the greater convenience of who use our PLOUGHS in Somerset have appointed JOHNSTON & SU of Princess-Anne, our agents for the them, who will constantly keep a supply of the different kinds at our prices.

June, 1828. S.

Nest Boxes and Barrel Co

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 Butter Prints

100 groce of Lamp Wick, assorted, Spiggots and fossets, suitable for hogs barrels, kegs, and hydrants, shoe, dusting and other brushes, sifters, and lime squeezers, fancy and common lows, pound, half pound and pound Butter Prints, of various fishing lines and rods, butter trays, baskets, wash and cake boards and cord, patent taps, humming mon tops, nests of sugar boxes boot & shoe blacking, towel rollers and turnip mashers, rolling pins, or joiners' chalk lines, spoons and trenchers, crabbing and cabbage

The above articles are offered for reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEH
No. 101½ Baltimore, between S Calvert St
Baltimore, 6th mo. 24.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., AUGUST 5, 1828. NO. 19.

From the Frederick (Md.) Citizen, July 25.

The Warfield Intrigue.

Last week, we copied from the Louisiana Journal, a statement of certain facts which have been disclosed in New Orleans, in relation to the alleged intrigue between Mr. Adams and Mr. Warfield, to secure for the former the vote of Maryland in the election for President. All the material particulars in that statement, serve fully to corroborate the allegations proved by the certificate of Doctor Zollickoffer. We knew at the time of copying the article from the Louisiana paper, that the prefatory part, respecting the time of Mr. Warfield's election, was erroneous, but as that had no connection with the facts declared, we did not deem it necessary to refer to it. We had no idea that it would be seized upon to quibble about, and to shake the validity of the facts detailed. But we find in the Examiner of the day before yesterday, that Mr. Warfield lays hold of that unimportant point, with an avidity that verifies the maxim, "drowning men will catch at straws." He uses it to warrant the declaration that the statement is "characterized by error and misrepresentation." But HE DOES NOT DENY that he wrote to his brother Charles a letter declaring his preference of Jackson to Adams, and subsequently another letter to the same individual, stating, that "since the meeting of Congress, (Session of 1824-5) he had, on the invitations of Mr. Adams himself, had one or two interviews with him (Mr. A.)—that the result of those interviews was a determination on his (Mr. W's) part, to vote for Mr. Adams; and as his vote would turn the scale of the Maryland vote, that state would go for Mr. Adams. And added, that Mr. Clay would be appointed Secretary of State."

These are the facts alleged—these are what Mr. Warfield ought to have replied to. But he ingeniously eludes them. It is an indifferent point when he was elected: It is an indifferent point what were his opinions, or what he said were his opinions in the summer and autumn of 1824. These, we say, are immaterial points; and in the midst of grave and important charges, the consequence he attaches to these trifling circumstances, may be complimented as an ingenious artifice. The right question is, Did he communicate to his brother, Charles A. Warfield, information of the tenor, import and meaning of the above statement, which corresponds in substance, with communications made by him in this county to Dr. Zollickoffer and others. In reference to this directly, he is evasive, or rather, silent.

As there is one or so immaterial error in the Louisiana statement is characterized by error and misrepresentation. This may be the case, in part, and yet the main facts, the important facts in the statement may be true: And that they are true, Mr. Warfield's manifestly studied avoidance of a direct denial, with the testimony we have, leaves no room to doubt.

The letters of Mr. H. R. Warfield [says the Louisiana Journal] were shewn by his brother to several gentlemen of New Orleans and their contents related to others. Mr. Warfield's brother has had time to reply, and although he resides on the spot, and has been called upon to correct what may be misstated, he has remained silent. He prudently left the unpleasant task to his ingenious but unfortunate brother, who, to say the least, has managed his critical case as adroitly as could have been anticipated.

Had Mr. H. R. Warfield have given a flat denial to the charge of writing the letters to his brother, we would not have again refered to the New Orleans testimony, although so strongly corroborative of the allegations which originated here.

We have testimony ample and conclusive to sustain our allegations. Part of it has been produced; no attempt was made to impeach it; and Mr. Warfield having never ventured to deny, the allegations have been taken as admitted. We have now in our possession, a certificate from a gentleman (a member of the administration party,) who testifies as follows:

"I certify that the Honorable H. R. WARFIELD, REPEATEDLY declared, in my presence, that his vote secured Mr. Adams his election, and that he could get any foreign appointment whenever he wished."

It will be time enough to give the name of this gentleman, when Mr. Warfield denies. As we stated on a former occasion, we have the personal assurance of another respectable gentleman, that he can certify to the truth of the whole of Dr. Z's allegation, but is indisposed to do so, unless a pressing necessity should arise.

In reference to the above certificate, we may ask, how did Mr. Warfield know that it was his vote secured the election?—why not that other member? Was he the last to yield so, he acted from persuasion. How did he know he could get any foreign appointment? Was it promised as a douceur, for yielding to seductive persuasions, and giving the casting vote, and securing the election of Mr. Adams?

We may look for further particulars from Louisiana. No doubt the Journal will again touch this part of the most extensive intrigue that ever disgraced the annals of diplomacy.

Beautiful Consistency.—By depreciating the character of Jackson, the Adams papers prove either their own profligacy, or that Adams and Clay are the veriest hypocrites in creation. Clay has declared on the floor of Congress, that Jackson's conduct "shed glory upon the country, and his renown constituted a great portion of its moral property." Adams when Secretary of State, went still farther—asserting that "Jackson's services to the nation entitled him to its highest rewards, and that his whole career has been signalized by the purest intentions, and most elevated purposes." Thus the Administration papers either dis-believe their own judgments or falsify the deliberate assertions of Clay and Adams. Let them take whichever horn of the dilemma they choose—their important malice falls harmless at the feet of its venerable object.

Hartford Convention.—It is still denied by some of the coalition prints, that the Hartford Conventionists are uniformly in favor of J. Q. Adams. That they may have the proof of our assertion from one of their ablest papers, we re-publish the following article, from the Salem (Mass.) Gazette, one of the firmest and most devoted administration papers in the United States, and which has always been the uniform advocate of J. Q. Adams, and was opposed to the last war:—"It is believed, (says the Gazette) that every member of that convention living, is a friend to the re-election of Mr. Adams; at the time of his election, one of them (Hon. Mr. Longfellow,) was a member of Congress, and gave his vote for Mr. Adams; the Hon. Mr. Olcott, another member, voted in the New-Hampshire Legislative caucus in favour of Mr. Adams; the Hon. Mr. Hall, another member, lately distinguished himself in the Vermont Legislature, in support of the administration; and Mr. Hall and Mr. Goddard were chosen members of the Harrisburgh Convention. If all the Hartford Convention men should withdraw their support from Mr. Adams, his re-election would be desperate. The country was in danger of being over-run by the enemy, till the Hartford Convention men came forward to its defence; and if the Hartford Convention men withhold their support the cause of Mr. Adams is lost."

EARLY DIPLOMACY OF J. Q. ADAMS.

We perceive in a late Little Falls People's Friend, an inquiry as to the circumstances under which Mr. Adams renewed the "Prussian treaty," in about the year 1798. The editor states that his recollection does not carry him back to that period, and hence he has not the facts within his reach. A republican friend has put into our hands Wood's "History of the administration of John Adams," a volume of 500 pages, published in 1801 or 1802, and abounding in historical facts and political illustrations of the period to which it refers. From this work we make the following extract. By it, it will be perceived that the great principles introduced into the Prussian treaty of 1786, negotiated by Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin, viz: that free ships make free goods, and that privateering be abolished, were not inserted in the treaty renewed in '97 or '98 by John Q. Adams, during the administration and under the appointment of his father, and that they were omitted at the urgent and reiterated demands of the American negotiator (Mr. Adams,) contrary to the wishes of the Prussian minister.

"In the autumn of 1786, Mr. Jefferson, in conjunction with Franklin, negotiated with a minister from the court of Prussia, then at the Hague, the treaty known by the name of the 'Prussian Treaty,' in which an astonished world, has, for the first time, seen a public avowal, and positive provision between two sovereign and independent nations, by treaty, for the establishment of those two great and glorious principles, promotive of universal peace and happiness, to wit: 1st. That free ships shall make free goods; and 2nd. That privateering in time of war be abolished; principles which were to be wished could be rendered universal. Mr. John Adams was one of the commissioners for negotiating this treaty, and on its completion it was sent over to London, where Mr. Adams then resided as minister of the United States, for his signature. It is greatly to be regretted that Mr. Adams could not be content to retain to himself a share of the glory which reflects on the authors of this celebrated treaty; but unhappily for our country, while he was President of the United States, we have seen him nominate his son John Quincy Adams, as minister to the court of Prussia for the express purpose, as declared, of renewing the treaty with that nation, which having been limited to continue in force for ten years only, had expired. Accordingly, another treaty has been approved by a majority of the senate, and ratified by Mr. Adams; but which, instead of renewing and continuing the old treaty, is in itself a new one, expressly abandoning and renouncing the two inestimable principles; 1st. That free ships shall make free goods; and 2nd That privateering in time of war be abolished; principles which it appears from the correspondence accompanying the negotiation, laid before the senate of the United States by the late President, the wise and enlightened minister of the Prussian monarch was brought, with great difficulty and reluctance, to abandon on the earnest solicitation and reiterated demand of the American negotiator, under the suggestion that the maritime powers, particularly Great Britain, would never sanction or permit them."

Albany Argus.

From the Rochester Crisis, July 1.

EXPENDITURES OF THE ADAMS DYNASTY.—All "with an eye to the strictest economy"!!!

The charge so frequently brought against the present administration of being wasteful in the expenditures of the people's money, is strikingly verified in the employment of William S. Rochester, Esq. At the last election, Mr. Rochester was the violent opponent of Mr. Adams. Shortly after his success, in consequence of his corrupt coalition with Mr. Clay, this same Mr. Rochester is taken into the pay of the Government—appointed secretary of legation of Panama,—paid $2000 for his electioneering services before his departure under the pretence of Mr. Clay that he resigned a lucrative office to receive the appointment, when it is well known here that he resigned the office of circuit judge months before, expressly on the ground of ill health. After having done what he could by electioneering tours, he starts for Panama. That mission, like most of the projects of the administration, proved abortive. Judge Rochester was appointed charge d'affaires to Guatemala, with a salary of $4,500. Under this salary, this disinterested friend of the administration remained in the U. States about one year, making political excursions, in imitation of his patron Clay, and finally sailed in the month of March or April last, in a public vessel, at the public expense, with an outfit and salary of $9000 for Guatemala. He returned the 1st of June, having remained at Gautemala probably about one month! The Judge has in this way, since his first appointment, received about TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS of the hard EARNINGS OF OUR FARMERS; and what has he done? He is shortly expected home as charge d'affaires for the western part of New York, and the people will not forget that he will be in the receipt of about $13 per day of their money for electioneering through the country and praising the immaculate and "liberal" Clay. This is only one of the many instances which might be brof't to prove that the charges against the present administration are well founded. Let the friends of the present administration gainsay any of the above statement, if they can.—Has not Judge Rochester received about the above sum of the people's money? What public service for this money has he ever performed! It is nearly a year and a half since he was appointed charge d'affaires, and has received outfit and pay ever since. Has he actually been employed in his late mission more than one month at Gautemala—if so, how long? The friends of the Judge can tell. The little diversion from the republican ranks which can be made by thus purchasing the influence of a family with the people's money, is a poor bargain indeed.—Notwithstanding they paid for exertions of the Gautemala charge d'affaires, and the blusterings of certain other expectants of office, the administration, when the votes are counted in this electoral district, will be found in the minority. The freemen of the west are not to be dictated by men who receive the sum of THIRTEEN DOLLARS PER DAY for supporting a corrupt administration. They will not vote for men who are thus wasteful of the people's money—the money earned by the sweat of the mechanic's brow. While the FARMER is receiving less than one dollar per day for his hard labour, this Adams charge d'affaires is receiving his $13—and for what? Why merely to electioneer for the present immaculate administration, and thus be enabled, for another four years, to receive a similar sum per day and do nothing.

It is for the FARMERS and MECHANICS—the tillers of the soil and the industrious artisans—to say whether or not such a system of profligate extravagance should be continued!—It is for those whose hard labor sustains the Government, to determine whether or not an Administration shall be supported, which endeavours to purchase with the people's money an influence which its bare merits would never attain!

The case here presented is one which comes home to every Farmer—every Mechanic—in the Western District. It is but one of many similar instances with which the People should be made familiar.

NEWS OF OLD HICKORY.

SUMNER COUNTY, Tenn. June 16, 1828.

I had the pleasure of being with my old commander, General Jackson, on the day before yesterday, all day. He enjoys fine health. He was called some eight or ten miles from home to assist in examining to lay off a road, that interfered with the land of his little ward, and attended very cheerfully, dressed in cloth manufactured in his own family.—What an example this is to the cold blooded, would be friends to domestic industry, as exhibited in the last Congress, on the side of the coalition. Here we see one of the first citizens of the nation, assisting his neighbours with his counsel, to lay off a road, mixing with his old friends in the most perfect harmony, looking on cheerfully at the unexampled and disgraceful means used by the most unprincipled faction that ever disgraced this or any other country, to tarnish and ruin his fame. Do you hear him complain? No. Do you see him traversing the country, to enable his friends to get up dinners, that he may speak of the base and unmanly conduct of his enemies? No. He is quietly seated on his farm, attending closely to his rural pursuits, firm, unmoved, calm, and dignified. To a question asked him, how he felt at seeing the innumerable falsehoods in circulation, to tarnish his well earned fame—he replied, he could not keep from smiling at the diligence and perseverance of his enemies, but said he had the utmost confidence in the intelligence and virtue of the people, that they perfectly well understood the motive why he was assailed, and was well assured, they would ultimately render justice to all parties.

Yours, in haste,
SAM. GWIN.
W. Telegraph.

From the N. Y. Evening Post.

Another and yet Another!

Brazilian outrages come upon us in rapid succession. But what better can be expected? Have we not humbled ourselves disgracefully to this petty tyrant of the South, and ought we not be prepared for insults and robberies in every form? It is to be hoped that this slumbering and impotent administration of ours will at last be taught to feel something of an American spirit, and to see the necessity of adopting the manly and firm course which was so judiciously taken by Mr. Raguet to protect our citizens and their property, and to maintain the honor of our insulted country. Had not Messrs. Adams and Clay shamefully adjusted this affair with Mr. Rebello before the arrival of Mr. Raguet, who was at the time daily expected, and they knew it; and had they embraced that opportunity, Brazil would have been compelled to release our citizens from prison, and to pay us for our plundered property; and we should have heard no more of Don Pedro's piracies. They begin now to SINK, BURN, and DESTROY our Vessels. The next we shall hear will probably be that some of our unfortunate countrymen are hung up at the yard arm of a Brazilian man of war—and where at this crisis is our Secretary of State? Travelling in Kentucky electioneering for Gen. Metcalf, and breathing war, pestilence, and famine on Gen. Jackson and his country! Don Pedro understands the character of the administration with which he has to deal.—He is making the most of his time—for he knows that under the next administration our statesmen will do their duty. We shall not then see our Secretaries of State and Navy making annual electioneering visits to Kentucky and New Jersey. Our rights will be protected and the honor of the country maintained. But here is the account of the last aggression, and we hope it will reach Mr. Clay in his electioneering tour.

From the Boston Statesman.

ANOTHER BRAZILIAN OUTRAGE.

By the brig Norna, arrived here from Rio de Janeiro, letters from Buenos Ayres to April 20th have been received. The following is an extract from one to a merchant in this place:

"Buenos Ayres, April 19, 1828.

"This instant we have received accounts "from the Salado, stating that the Brazilian "corvette Casiocca had fallen in with the "schooner Amity, Capt. Collins, from Boston, off that port, and BURNT HER, "WITH HER CARGO. Such a daring outrage upon a neutral vessel never was committed by any government, and they must "pay most dearly for it. Capt. Collins and "crew were taken on board the corvette, and "we suppose carried to Monte Video. We "shall see what Com. Biddle says about "this."

The above schooner sailed from Boston on the 20th December last. The captain had orders to proceed to the river Salado, or Buenos Ayres, if not blockaded; but by no means to violate the blockade after his papers were endorsed; and it is presumed that this vessel has been taken and destroyed, contrary to the understanding between our government and that of Brazil, without being notified or warned off. We hope to see our government take immediate notice of this affair, and seek at once for that redress, which will be but too long in obtainment, however early it may be put in a favourable train.

It would be some consolation to Americans if we had a Representative at Brazil. But here again we have a most palpable instance of gross negligence and mis-conduct on the part of the Administration. When Mr. Raguet returned instead of demanding the immediate adjustment of our losses here, or sending a first rate minister immediately to Brazil, Mr. Adams, with his accustomed promptitude and judgment orders Mr. Tudor to take charge of this mission. And where was Mr. Tudor at this crisis? On the borders of the Pacific Ocean! Where he is now no man can tell—here is the last tidings of him.

BARREN CREEK SPRINGS.

THE SUBSCRIBER

Begs leave to inform his friends & the public,

That his HOUSE is now open,

FOR THE RECEPTION OF VISITERS.

An anxious solicitude to promote the comfort of those who are in pursuit of health, pleasure, or business, has induced him to make such arrangements as will enable him to give ample satisfaction to those who may favour him with their company. By those who have visited the Springs, during the present season, the waters have been pronounced more powerful in their effects than hitherto experienced—operating in most cases, as a purgative medicine: Those desirable effects, in conjunction with its chalybeate properties, which are acknowledged to be unsurpassed by any waters in the world, present a powerful inducement to such as are already assailed by disease, and to those who are desirous to avoid the bilious diseases of the climate.

Persons who are inclined to try the efficacy of the waters may rest assured that every accommodation shall be provided to render them happy and comfortable; and the charges shall be apportioned to the pressure of the times.

The public's humble servant,
CHARLES LEARY.

N. B. Travellers, generally, particularly the passengers of the steam-boat Maryland, will find this an easy and commodious stage, after the arrival of the boat at Cambridge, (being only four miles distant from Vienna.) Here they will be certain to meet with the purest and best Waters of the peninsula, and a Table supplied with the best accommodations the country can afford—on the most reasonable conditions.

July 29. mku

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks, PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms,
At the Office of the Village Herald.

PUBLIC VENDUE.

PURSUANT to an order of the Orphans Court of Somerset County, there will be sold at public sale, at the late residence of Richard Evans, deceased, on Smith's Island, on MONDAY the 11th of next AUGUST, all the PERSONAL ESTATE of said dec'd. (negroes excepted,) consisting of

The Crop growing on the ground, one Schooner Vessel, several Canoes; a large Stock of Horned Cattle;

SHEEP & HOGS, with Household and Kitchen Furniture, and various other articles. Sale to commence at 11 o'clock A.M. and to continue from day to day, until the whole be sold.

A credit of six months will be given on all sums exceeding $5, the purchasers giving approved securities; and for all purchases under $5 the cash will be required.

SEVERN MISTER,
July 29. Exet'r. of R. Evans, dec'd.

IN CHANCERY,

SOMERSET COUNTY COURT;

MAY TERM, 1828.

ORDERED, That the sales of the real estate of Peter Dashiell as made and reported by William W. Handy, Trustee for the sale of said estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shown by the second day of the next term of this court:—Provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess-Anne once a week for three weeks successively before the said day.

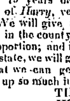
ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.
True copy. TEST.
GEO. HANDY, Clk.
July 29, 1828. wk

NOTICE.

THE Levy Court of Somerset County will receive Proposals in writing on Tuesday the 26th day of August next, in reference to a Standard Bearer, in compliance with the late act of Assembly relating to Weights and Measures. Applicants will hand in their proposals on that day.

By order,
GEO. HANDY, Clk.
July 29. km

STOP THE RUNAWAYS.



ABSCONDED on the 23d day of July, THREE NEGROES; one negro woman named Easter, aged about 45 or 50 years, and two negro men, one by the name of Bob, dark mulatto, about 19 years old, and the other by the name of Harry, very black, about 23 years old. We will give a reward of 25 dollars if taken in the county; if either taken so much in proportion; and if taken out of the county or state, we will give 45 dollars, if secured so that we can get them again, or if either taken up so much in proportion.

THOMAS BELL,
HOPKINS WINDSON.
Nanticoke Point, July 29. vk

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Johnson & Co. against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: a house and lot at present occupied by the said Elijah C. Johnson, being and lying in my bailiwick near Salisbury, on the road from Salisbury to Spring-Hill, and near to a mill-pond owned by William W. Handy, and adjoining a lot of ground purchased by Geo. Todd of the said Elijah C. Johnson, trustee for the sale of the real estate of Henry Trader; Also all the right, interest and estate of the said Elijah C. Johnson, in & to a house & lot in the county & town aforesaid, which was devised by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by Levin D. Collier; Also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esq.'s mills, being the office of the said Elijah, which said property I shall proceed to sell on Saturday the 9th day of August next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. in the town of Salisbury at the auction room of James L. Waller, Esq. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
July 15th, 1828. ldc

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Court of Appeals for the Eastern Shore of Maryland and to me directed, at the suit of John Parsons use of George C. and John H. Johnson against John Smart, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate of the said John Smart in and to a tract of land lying and being in my bailiwick, called Wright's Conclusion, containing two hundred and sixty acres, more or less, being the same lands which were conveyed to a certain John Dashiell by Charles Jones, Sheriff of Somerset county, by deed bearing date the first day of March, 1825, and at present occupied by Mr. Kendal Parsons, and which I shall proceed to sell at the Court-House door in the town of Princess-Anne, in Somerset county, on Tuesday the 12th day of August next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock, P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
July 22, 1828.

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATIS.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 5, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory." Jefferson.

"Whose services to this nation, entitle him to its HIGHEST REWARDS."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

We are authorized to announce
Thomas Bayly,
John C. Wilson, jr.,
Anthony B. Bennett, and
John J. Davis, Esq'rs.
as Candidates to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

Be Consistent!

While the Adams men are attempting to convict Gen. JACKSON of having been concerned with Burr, because (as they say) he was at Jackson's house, let them remember that that very Chief Justice MARSHALL, of whose being on their side they were boasting so much, a short time ago, actually dined with AARON BURR at the very time that he, the said Chief Justice Marshall, was sitting as the Chief Judge on the trial of the said Aaron Burr. We do not impeach Judge Marshall, but let them beware lest by their own mode of reasoning they convict him of Treason! [Balt. Rep.

CLAY and BURR.

When Burr was arrested in Kentucky, Mr. CLAY was his counsel, we believe, his volunteer counsel. He succeeded in obtaining his release. Mr. Clay afterwards came to the Senate of the United States, and a gentleman of Baltimore, of high character, has, within a short time, informed us, that Mr. Clay laughed at the idea of Burr's having any hostile intentions on our government.—And Mr. Clay, it is well known, opposed the suspension of the writ of Habeas Corpus, which was proposed in the Senate, for the purpose of enabling the Executive to act more efficiently in arresting the conspiracy of Burr. Was Mr. Clay engaged in the Burr conspiracy? Was Mr. Clay Mr. Burr's advocate in the Senate? Did Burr concert with him in Kentucky, that he should go to the Senate of the United States, and be ready to stand by him in time of need? These suspicions are as much justified by Mr. Clay's conduct as any of those which the Adams party would have the people entertain of Gen. JACKSON.

☞ BURR CONSPIRACY. ☜

We have seen in the Baltimore Patriot of 22nd July the letter and certificate of Nathaniel W. Williams, charging Gen. JACKSON with a participation in the Burr conspiracy. For the information of our readers and to enable them the better to understand the nature and evidence of this foul charge, we have deemed it proper to publish the whole of Gen. Jackson's letter to judge Williams, and the reply of Williams to Gen. Jackson.

It is impossible to describe, (says the Delaware Gazette,) in terms as strong as it merits, the villainous course pursued by the advocates of the present corrupt administration to sustain their sinking cause. In their desperate efforts to impede the progress of the candidate of the People, in his march to the Presidency, which he is pursuing with rapid strides, and which they so clearly perceive as to drive them to the utmost stretch of madness and fury, they lay aside all the obligations of honor and justice, and all regard to decency, consistency or probability.

After having harped upon the subject of the six militia men, and others of equal merits, until their readers are disgusted; after having employed their coffin handbills, and caused them to be circulated over the country under the franks of members of Congress, who, forgetting their own duty, and disregarding the honour of the country, have consented to become assistants in the unholy work of murdering the reputation of a man whom they hate on account of his virtues, and the services he has rendered to his country, they have now brought forward a charge of Jackson's having been concerned in Burr's conspiracy, and which rests upon the assertion of a person named N. W. Williams, and who, it seems, is a Judge in Tennessee. A Judge! The more is the pity, every honorable mind will exclaim, upon examining his statement, that the bench should be disgraced by such a man.

[Here follow the statements extracted from the Patriot—an Adams paper:]

Extract of a letter from Judge Nathaniel W. Williams, of Tennessee, to Nathaniel W. W. Kerr, Esq. dated 18th December, 1827.

"My Dear Sir: It is madness to think of Jackson for President of the United States. This Burr matter I cannot be mistaken about; my eyes and ears are my witnesses.—He (Jackson) offered me a commission of Captain in Burr's army, or told me I could get one if I would accept. And during this affair he said to me, in the presence of Judge —— (who though now says he does not remember it) depend upon it, gentlemen, the division of the United States has taken deep root; you will find a number of the members of the House of Representatives, deeply involved in this scheme."

General Jackson to Judge Williams.
Hermitage, Feb. 25, 1828.

Sir: Having received a letter from a high-minded, honorable gentleman from Virginia, who loves truth, and knows how to appreciate character, I loose no time in laying before you the postscript of his letter, which is in the following words, to wit: "It may be well to say that a letter was handed about at the Adams Convention, I hear, accusing you of being concerned in Burr's conspiracy, upon the authority of a Judge Nathaniel Williams, of your State. The report is, that this Judge Williams writes, when a young man, he applied to you, then a Judge, to sign his license as a lawyer, that you did so, but recommended to him, as you conceived him to be a man of promise, to push his fortune by joining Burr, who was then in your house, promising, if he would do so, to procure for him a commission as a captain in Burr's army. This story is going the rounds from the Adams Delegates, who have returned home, notwithstanding they ought to know that you was the first person to put Governor Claibourne on his guard against the schemes of Burr. VERBUM SAT."

The records of the country contradict this statement, as it is well known that I resigned my appointment of Judge before Colonel Burr ever was in the State of Tennessee. I cannot, then, for one moment, permit myself to believe that you, elevated as you are, to a seat on the judicial bench of Tennessee, could give your authority to such an unfounded falsehood. Duty to myself as well as justice to you, therefore, require that I should, without delay, advise you of this libel upon my character, so that you may at once declare whether you are or are not the author of this calumny before I expose it as such.

I am, and have been, well-advised of a secret combination of a base and wicked few in Tennessee, whose object is to slander me; but until now, I have never heard, or had the least intimation that you were of that group. Nor do I now believe that you, who must be so well satisfied of the falsehood contained in the postscript of the lettter referred to above, as well as the rectitude of my conduct since your acquaintance with me, could be so lost to virtue and to truth as to have originated and put in circulation so base a calumny. With this impression I send J. W. D. S. Donelson to you with this communication, having no doubt as an honorable man that you will send me a frank and prompt reply.

(A copy signed,) ANDREW JACKSON.

The Hon. Nathaniel Williams,
Judge of the Circuit Courts of Tennessee.

Judge Williams' reply to Gen. Jackson.
Sparta, Feb. 27, 1828.

After copying from Gen. Jackson's letter to me, the report as stated in his letter, I wrote as follows:

I can very frankly deny ever having written the letter spoken of by the gentleman who wrote you from Washington, but I did write a letter to a relation of mine at that time in Richmond. The letter, if seen, would show that it was designed as a confidential one. I do not, at this time, recollect accurately what the letter did contain; I believe, tho' I can remember a part, if not the whole, of what I intended at that time; and I will state it, as it is but just that what has been by my means privately circulated, should be publicly avowed under the necessities of this case.

Some time after Burr had passed Nashville once or twice, to the lower country, before Mr. Jefferson's proclamation, in riding from Gen. Jackson's house to Nashville, General Jackson in reference to that conspiracy, or what was afterwards called by others a conspiracy, said to me, "that I could, if I would accept it, obtain a commission of Captain."

Afterwards, during the setting of the county court of Sumner, at a time when Patton Anderson told me that either Burr or Adair, or both of them, were at General Jackson's house, in a room of a tavern then kept by Edmond Crutcher, General Jackson said to me—I think Judge Stuart was then in the room—"Take notice gentlemen, you will find that a division of the United States has taken deep root; you will find that a number of the Senate and a number of the members of the House of Representatives are deeply involved in the scheme."

I am not certain that the above was contained in my private letter to Mr. Nathaniel Kerr, but as I have made these statements privately it is but just that I should now avow them.

"I am in hopes, sir, that this letter will be altogether satisfactory to you, for Gen. Jackson may be assured (the presidential question aside) no man can feel more bound to General Jackson than myself, for the great honor conferred by him on my country.
NATH. W. WILLIAMS."

(Copy.)

Gen. Andrew Jackson.

Under the belief that it is my duty to make the following statement I make it. I moved to Nashville, Tennessee, from the county of Pittsylvania, Virginia, in the fall of the year 1804, at the age of 25; that is, I moved from Virginia in 1803, to Hawkins Court House, East Tennessee, and from there I moved to Nashville. In 1806 or '7, these Burr matters transpired. I, before protesting against the proceedings of Burr, had been frequently employed in General Jackson's collecting business, and other suits of his. I think in the spring or fall of 1806, in riding from the General's house to Nashville, near the Clover Bottom, he spoke to me in relation to a commission in Burr's army. And in the same year, at Gallatin, he made the declarations in relation to the division of the Union, as stated in our correspondence. I not only then determined that I would not agree to what I believed to be Burr's schemes, but that I would oppose him, as far as I could. Either before or after Mr. Jefferson's proclamation, it was as I thought, intended to impress the public mind with the belief that a ball, then on hand at Nashille, was intended as a mark of respect to Col. Burr. A number of gentlemen in Nashville, to destroy this impression, and to show their disapprobation of Burr, determined that Col. Burr should not attend the ball, and so informed Col. Burr through Judge John Overton, who returned with the information, as he told me, from Burr, that Col. Burr had declined coming to the ball. With this we were satisfied. About the time the ball was half over, I was standing against the wall, opposite the door of entrance into the room, & saw gen. Jackson lead Burr by the arm into the room, & introduce him, with considerable form, to the ladies and gentlemen then present. I do not recollect at this time that Mr. Jefferson's proclamation had any effect on the persons then about Nashville, who were from their conduct justly liable to our suspicions; and I think I took some pains to inquire into that circumstance. Some time afterwards, our party to show their further indignation, burnt Burr publicly in effigy. I have always believed that, during this Burr matter, that Major Tilman Dixon informed me, by letter, that Gen. Coffee had been engaged in procuring boats and provisions for Burr, on Cumberland river, though the letter, if there was one, I cannot now find, and I have examined for it. It was my understanding at the time, that Col. Stockely D. Hays went off as one of Burr's men in his boats, and I have never heard it disputed since. Col. Hays is a nephew of Mrs. Jackson. Although I never was at Gen. Jackson's house with Burr, yet I am tolerably well satisfied, accordingly to my recollection at this time of occurrences then, that in the fall of 1806, and winter of 1807, Burr and Gen. Jackson were very intimate, and that Burr was frequently at the General's house. The above is a statement of the most prominent facts as they are fixed on my recollection. If I am mistaken about any thing, it is about dates, and about them I do not pretend to accuracy.

NATH. W. WILLIAMS.

A list of the gentlemen in the ball room at the time, and who were present in the public square of Nashville, when Burr was burnt in effigy, as well as now recollected.

Geo. W. L. Marr, Esq. Attorney at Law.
Wm. Smith, attorney at Law, and now Clerk of the Circuit Court of Williamson county.
Thomas Swan, of Va. Attorney at Law. (dead.)
Doct. Watkins of E. Tennessee.
John G. Blount, of N. C.
Judge Porter, of Louisiana.
V. Tonstall of Pittsylvania County, Va.
E. S. Hall.
—— Curry, former Postmaster at Nashville.

I am not certain that the gentlemen referred to were present, if not they can say—the greater part I am pretty confident were present. I very well know there were at the burning of the effigy from 1 to 200 individuals.

N. W. WILLIAMS.

Now let us look at this story, and consider what degree of probability there is connected with it. In the first place, it is said to have occured while Jackson, was Judge, when the records of the state prove that he had resigned the office before Burr ever was in the state. This discrepency in dates is a fatal defect in the story. But there are other circumstances which prove its falsity. No man can suppose that Jackson would have written to Williams such a letter as is stated, if he had made to him the offer that is alleged; no one can imagine he could have been so ungarded in his conduct respecting Burr as is represented, upon the supposition that he was connected with him. But if we could admit all these absurdities, where has been Williams' patriotism which overlooked all those circumstances and has so long slumbered?—[Williams states he had just been admitted as an attorney to practise law. If so, he had taken an oath to support the constitution and laws of the government. Was not the concealment of this alleged conspiracy by Williams, a violation of his oath to support the constitution and laws? When Williams was appointed Judge in Tennessee, was it not a duty which he owed to the offended majesty of the law, and one which the station he occupied, loudly called for, if he knew of this, or any other treason, to make it known? But what are we to think of a man who knows of a treason, and for twenty-two years conceals it—suffers the traitor to enjoy the confidence of the nation—the friendship of the virtuous—to lead armies—to sit in the Senate chamber as a Legislator for the Republic and a Counsellor to the President, and never disclose the mighty secret until prompted by personal aggrandizement and malevolent feeling?—Ed. V. Herald.]

Desperate indeed must be the cause which requires a man to admit himself to have winked at the wickedness of a traitor, without exposing him, or endeavouring to protect his country against threatened danger.—And yet Williams speaks of his feeling bound to General Jackson for the great honour conferred by him on his country. Bound to a traitor, for the honour conferred by him on the country! Truly a man must be a simpleton or something worse, to talk in such a style. Reader what do you suppose him to be?

But why was his letter sent to Richmond just as the Adams convention was assembling, and why has the present statement made its appearance just upon the eve of the Kentucky election? These things are well understood. And what does Williams mean by feeling bound, (the Presidential question aside) to General Jackson? This seems to be the meaning of it: That he considered him entitled to the gratitude and honour of the country, but as he stands in the way of the promotion of individual purposes, and the gratification of personal ambition, he must be slandered, at the expense of all that is dear to virtue, or interesting to the country. This is the whole substance of the story about Jackson and Burr; and we only desire the people to ponder on the absurdities of the story, and the wickedness of its authors; and as they regard the dictates of honor and justice, and the best interests of the country, to act accordingly.—Del. Gaz.

"Gen. JACKSON justly enjoys in an eminent degree the public favor, and of his worth, talents and services, no one entertains a higher, or more respectful opinion than myself.
"JOHN QUINCY ADAMS."

GEN. JACKSON AND AARON BURR.

The coalition seem determined to keep us continually on the defensive, and being unable, from having exhausted their inventive powers, to fabricate new forgeries, are resolved to assail us with a repetition of the old. We dislike this mode of warfare. After having slain our enemies, we are not disposed to be haunted by their ghosts. The coalition, with characteristic disregard to truth, had charged General Jackson with having been concerned in the conspiracy of Aaron Burr; and were immediately answered by a letter from Mr. Jefferson, wherein that great man, who was not often mislead in his estimates of men, paid the highest compliments to the patriotism and fidelity of the Hero of New Orleans. But this testimony, ample and conclusive as it is, the coalition suppose to be forgotten by the people; and, therefore, think they may enter upon a repetition of the slander. Perhaps they may mislead a few, a very few, who may not have seen, or may have forgotten the letter of Mr. Jefferson; and to destroy even this hope, we will venture upon its republication.—Here it is.

Extract of a letter from Mr. Jefferson to Gen. Wilkinson, dated Washington, January 3d, 1807, giving instructions for detecting and arresting the movements of Col. Burr and his associates.

"If every thing from that place, (Louisville,) be successfully arrested, there is nothing from below that is to be feared. BE ASSURED THAT TENNESSEE, AND PARTICULARLY GEN. JACKSON ARE FAITHFUL."

Are we to suppose that Mr. Jefferson, who knew mankind, and consequently, was aware of the facility with which a portion of it might be seduced, would have said this of Gen. Jackson rushly and inconsiderately?—More especially would he have said it without sufficient reason, at a time when the whole Western country was pervaded by the ramifications of an extensive conspiracy, and when distrust of his neighbor had visited almost every individual? Those who would believe this of Mr. Jefferson, knew little of that great man's character. We repeat that such commendations from Mr. Jefferson, under such circumstances, are a sufficient answer to the charge, though it were supported by the affidavits of the whole Coalition.

But, in addition to the testimony of Mr. Jefferson, we have that of the most distinguished citizens of Tennessee, who took an active part in the movements then made to arrest the project of Col. Burr. A number of revolutionary veterans, who could show wounds received in battles where Washington, and Green, and Gates, and Lee, and Lincoln, and Mercer, and Knox, and such men commanded, on learning that treason was abroad in the land organized themselves into a company of volunteers, and offered to GENERAL ANDREW JACKSON, their services in defending their country. The following is their address to Gen. Jackson, with their names subscribed.

To Major General Andrew Jackson.

At a moment when great sensibility and even fearful apprehension for the welfare of our country, has been excited, from one end of the continent to the other: When our government, the best calculated of all others, for the attainment of individual security and happiness, has sounded the tocsin of alarm, to be on the alert in suppressing combinations of men, hostile to the integrity of the union and interests of our country. It behooves all men, both aged and youthful, to coalesce in their attachment to their country. In the affections of the citizens our government exists; not in oppressive and unnecessary coercion, as in other countries. These principles which eminently characterise republican institutions, clearly demonstrates, that every citizen whatever his situation may be, ought to contribute in some mode to the support of the government under which these inestimable blessings are enjoyed. The infirm, by their opinions and exhortations—to them experience belongs. They know the incalculable blessings of freedom, of thought, speech, action—security of person and property. Patriotism is their claim, though not exclusively, in a country of freedom. This is an important crisis, when the limits of legal active exertion, ought not to be sought with a microscopic eye. So far as our bodily powers will admit, we cheerfully submit to the rigors of military institutions. Our country will require nothing unnecessarily of us. The thread of age will not be broken, but it will be used to the extent of its strength.

Under those impressions, we agree to embody ourselves—aged and infirm as we may be, offer our services and our fortunes to our country, in support of its laws and constituted authorities.

Gen. James Robertson, captain,
James Hennen, surgeon,
Gen. Thomas Overton‡
Major Howel Tatum‡
Maj. Clem Hall‡
Captain James Tatum‡
Maj. William T. Lewis‡
Col. Joel Lewis‡
Col. Robert Hays‡
Capt. William Richard‡
Capt. Stephen Cantrell‡
Capt. Robert Edmondson‡
Major William Walton‡
Capt. William Lytle, sen.‡
Captain Joshua Hadley‡
Capt. John Beck‡
Capt. John Park‡
Capt. Jos. Coleman, Mayor, Nashville
William Tait
Thomas Talbot
George Poyzer
Thomas Dillon
William Whorton
George Whorton.

With others, old veterans composing a company, all over fifty years of age.

All those marked thus ‡ were officers in the revolutionary war.

To suppose any treasonable connection between Gen. Jackson and Col. Burr after reading this testimony, we must either believe that, these veterans who had shed their blood for their country's independence were, themselves, connected with Burr, and published this address to conceal their treason, or that they were so "ineffably stupid," as to place themselves under the command of one of whose fidelity and patriotism they were not well assured. But, admitting the patriotism of these revolutionary heroes, how can we reconcile the supposition of Gen. Jackson's treason with his answer to their address?—Here it is. Let the confident read it and rejoice; let the doubtful read it and be convinced:

General JAMES ROBERTSON, and the corps of INVINCIBLES, you have the honor to command.

The tender of your services at the serious crisis, when our government has warned to be watchful, is honorable, not only to yourselves, but the country in which we live. It is interesting and grateful at the present moment. The Executive of the Union in whom we all have confidence will not only receive it with pleasure as a mark of attachment to the government and laws, but the faithful historian of passing times, cannot avoid noticing it as an instance of patriotism, to be found only in Republics; for the support they rest on the opinion and affections of the people, and above all government, union of sentiments and action is necessary.

Though all citizens must be sensible of the inestimable blessings we enjoy, yet your generous expressions of them, has filled me with emotions of ardor as extraordinary, as the occasion which gave birth to them—may all men cherish such sentiments, is my sincere wish. Age, in a government of laws and freedom, is entitled to a claim of patriotism, but it is equally entitled to the highest respect from youth. The frost of age and experience is as necessary in the moral as in the physical world. The dissipated attention of men is collected and the neutral relaxation of youth invigorated. Hence our union of sentiments in the position that all men ought to contribute their mite in some mode to the public good. But when age in its wisdom bounds beyond its ordinary limits of counsel and admonition into the hardy field of exertions!—My God! how can I express my sensations!!!

Age, from the immutable principles of the law of nature, is entitled to an exemption, but should the danger which threatens our country, require your services in the field, it is hoped that the occasion may be temporary, and that you will only be wanting in the field of battle, where your years and meritorious services will be duly considered. There your commander well knows, that your former services, presence and bravery, will be equal to a regiment of men.

Accept the thanks of the government, and of your General to whom you so generously offered your services, with the sentiments of my grateful respect.

ANDREW JACKSON,
Maj. Gen. 2d Division.

But, we have not done. But a few weeks before the organization of this patriotic corps, and the publication at Nashville, of this patriotic address and answer, General Jackson addressed the following letter to Gov. Claiborne of Louisiana, for the purpose of warning him against an apprehended movement upon New-Orleans by the conspirators.

Letter of General Andrew Jackson to his Excellency William Claiborne, warning him to be on the alert to detect the Burr conspiracy.

Sir:—Although it is a long time since I wrote you, still that friendship that once existed remains bright on my part; although since I have had the pleasure of seeing you, I have waded through difficult and disagreeable scenes, still I have all that fondness for my old and former friends that I ever had, and their memory has been more endeared to me, by the treachery I have experienced since I saw you, by some newly acquired ones. Indeed I fear treachery has become the order of the day. This induces me to write to you. Put your town in a state of defence. Organize your militia, and defend your city as well against internal enemies as external: my knowledge does not extend so far as to authorize me to go into detail; but I fear you will meet an attack from quarters you do not at present expect. Be upon the alert; keep a watchful eye upon our General and beware of an attack as well from our own country as Spain, I fear there is something rotten in the state of Denmark. You have enemies within your own city that may try to subvert your government, and try to separate it from the Union. You know I never hazard ideas without good grounds, and you will keep these hints to yourself.—But I say again, be on the alert, your government I fear is in danger.

Whether they will be attempted to be carried into effect or not, I cannot say; but rest assured they are in operation or I calculate boldly. Beware of the month of December: I love my country and government: I hate the Dons; I would delight to see Mexico reduced, but I will die in the last ditch, before I would yield a foot to the Dons, or see the Union disunited. This I write for your own eye, and for your own safety; profit by it, and the ides of March remember.

With sincere respect I am, as usual, your sincere friend,
ANDREW JACKSON.
Nov. 12, 1806.

After publishing these documents, which we recommend to the attention of every republican press in the Union, we hope this slander may not be repeated; for though we know the Coalition would repeat it, if they thought its repetition would deceive a single voter, we hope they will not so far compromit their reputation for common sense, as to venture upon a thrice refuted falsehood.
U. S. Telegraph.

"The presidential question aside (says Nathaniel W. Williams,) no man could feel more bound to General Jackson than myself, for the great honor conferred by him on his country." But the Presidential question in the way, this same Mr. Williams thinks it necessary to attempt to [illegible] the idea that Gen. Jackson, who he [illegible] conferred so much honor on his country, has been engaged in a Treasonable Conspiracy against his Country!! Poor Mr. Williams, we pity him!

SIGNS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

A vote on the Presidential question was taken in capt. Fields' company, in Wilkes county, on the 5th ult. (none voting but those legally entitled,) which was as follows:

For Jackson	81
For Adams	none.

At another muster in Rockingham county, on the 4th ult. the vote stood thus:

For Jackson	197
For Adams	0
Declined voting	1

At a company muster in Caswell county, where between 250 and 300 of the citizens were assembled, the vote was taken and the whole company declared themselves in favor of Gen. Jackson, with the exception of 3.

At a muster in Haywood co. on the 15th ult. Jackson got 520 votes, Adams none!

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

MR. EDITOR:

When infuriate and dishonest politicians colleague with their minions, and endeavour to prostrate the fair reputation of him whose mighty arm saved our country from many a slanderous imputation, it becomes the people to arrest their evil machinations, and to represent them to the world in their darkest and most disgusting colours. After alleging that Jackson is the wilful perpetrator of the most horrid deeds—that he has shown a disposition to trample the rights of his fellow citizens under his feet, and after having been confuted in every position of the kind they have taken, they are now compelled, in order to sustain their tottering cause, to resort to means libellous in their nature, and disgraceful in their tendency—means, which were it not for their desperation, would cover them with shame, and which will in the lapse of time bring down upon them the contempt of an insulted people.

After more than twenty years have rolled round, they now, resting upon the authority of a Judge, say that Jackson was concerned in Burr's conspiracy. A man whose conduct has ever been marked with the most sterling patriotism, is charged with the crime of treason. But who are his accusers? Political opponents. They who have been defeated in all their struggles to put the Hero down.—[illegible]ons can forge a letter, and the Coalition can support him—What then should we expect from such a source?

I will now take a view of the statements of this judge Williams, and show to the reader their inconsistency, yea, their self-destruction. In an extract of his letter to Mr. Kerr, he says: "He (Jackson) offered me a commission of Captain in Burr's army, or told me, I could get one if I would accept." It may perhaps be necessary to show that in the above extract there are two sentences, which contradict each other. The first is, that Jackson offerred him a commission in Burr's army; the second is, that he did not offer him a commission, but told him he could get one, if he would accept. Here the Judge makes two statements, and one contradicts the other. But suppose the last statement, which he affirms, be correct, is there any thing so culpable in it? Judge Williams applies to Jackson to sign his license as a lawyer. After it is done, Jackson makes the observation—"You are a young man of some promise, if you will accept a commission in Burr's army you can get one." Is there any person who can believe that the General was serious in his remark, even if there were positive evidence of its truth? No. It seems from a view of all the circumstances, that he was rather amusing himself at the expense of this judge Williams, who at that time was a young man. He even at his present age has evinced but a very small share of good sense; hence it is reasonable to suppose that more than twenty years ago, he was extremely shallow. The General, knowing this, makes the observation, jocosely, you are a young man of some promise, apply to Burr, there get a commission and signalize yourself. I do not say that this is the exact language of the General, but it is in effect the same: The reader will perceive, that these observations are founded on the admission of the correctness of the above statement. But I will make a few more remarks which go to prove what I have said above, viz: that the Judge contradicts himself. In the postscript of the letter to Gen. Jackson from Virginia it is stated, that he (the judge) writes, that when a young man he applied to Jackson to sign his license as a lawyer; that he did so, but recommended to him to push his fortune by joining Burr.—But in his letter to Jackson he says that the observation was made to him by the General while riding from his house to Nashville.—Here is another contradiction. He certainly lost sight of truth; but to prove that it is all a falsehood, Jackson had resigned his judicial appointment before ever Burr came into Tennessee. What are we to think of this Judge who accuses the Hero of conspiracy after remaining silent for twenty-two years? We should point the finger of scorn at him, and exclaim, Such a Judge!

I will now leave this charge to the contemplation of the reader and pass over to his last attack upon the Patriot's character.—He says "that Gen. Jackson said to HIM, take notice GENTLEMEN, you will find that a division of the United States has taken deep root," &c. He says that the General addressed HIM; then why is the word GENTLEMEN used? Does not this show that the General did not address himself to him? This is prima facie evidence of an untruth on the part of the Judge; and it also goes to prove, that he has a greater opinion of himself than any other person has. But to proceed: judge Stuart, who it seems was the one mentioned in the letter to Kerr, and who was present as he thinks when Jackson made the observation, says that he does not remember it! Now this implies two very ostensible things: 1st, That Jackson never expressed himself as above stated, or if he did, 2nd, That he spoke in a manner that was by no means culpable. Or had the General conveyed the least idea that he was friendly to Burr, where is the man,—where is the friend to his country, that would have noticed it in a person of his standing in society. Yet the Judge, upon his own responsibility, boldly asserts that Jackson made the observation with all the seriousness imaginable. His reasons for asserting this are centred in his own breast. The people are ignorant of them, but to pronounce them corrupt is consistent with his conduct. He now has found an opportunity to wreak his vengeance by stating falsehoods. It is a pity that his ingenuity is not commensurate with his evil motives.

I now ask the candid reader, if he believes Jackson to be guilty of the charge alleged against him by judge Williams. If he still thinks so, has not the Hero reason to exclaim, Alas! my ungrateful countryman, after spending my youthful vigour, the prime of life in your service, you now in my old age strike me in the most tender part—your object to disturb my midnight repose with visions of distraction, yea, to bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave! I ask, if the General has not reason to make the exclamation, if he believe this got up by political opponents? But this is not all, [illegible]tion, his letter to Claibourne—Jefferson's letter—The confidence of many Revolutionary heroes in the purity of his motives, go to show, that Jackson never was what a few—a dishonest few, are endeavouring to make us believe him to be.

GUACANAHARI.

Princess-Anne, Aug. 4.

I am informed by a respectable gentleman of this county, that Mr. Teackle, the Editor of the Somerset Iris, publicly declared that J. R. W. Pitt of Dorchester was engaged in Burr's conspiracy. I make this statement merely to show how much confidence there is to be placed in this man who now is one of the greatest revilers of Gen. Jackson, and who is exerting the utmost stretch of his ingenuity in order to implicate him with Burr.
G.

THE BARGAIN—More Proof!

FROM THE FREDERICK CITIZEN.

Mr. Amos Kendall's reply to Mr. Clay's last publication, has come to hand. It is of great length, and of equal interest. Nothing that has yet appeared—not even excepting the able and triumphant address of the Central committee at Washington, conclusive as is its proof of the bargain—can be compared with it, in point of strong and undeniable testimony. It strips Mr. Clay of his mask, and exposes him to the world, an artful, intriguing, ambitious demagogue, a dissembling political knave, devoted solely to the aggrandizement of himself. Out of Mr. Clay's own mouth, does Mr. Kendall condemn him—by copies of private letters written by Mr. Clay, and corroborated by letters written by F. P. Blair and J. J. Crittenden. They lift the curtain and clear away the mystery which enveloped the manner in which the Kentucky delegation was decoyed into the support of John Q. Adams. These letters clearly and unequivocally and incontrovertibly establish the following facts:

"That it was known in Frankfort, in January 1825, that Mr. Adams would be elected President, and that he would make Mr. Clay Secretary of State; that letters from a number of Mr. White's constituents, urging him to vote for Mr. Adams, were procured at the instance of Mr. Henry Clay—and Mr. White was thus prevailed on to vote for Adams, "with a view to promote Mr. Clay's future prospects for the Presidency"—in other terms, to place him in the "line of safe precedent"—the office of Secretary of State.

Mr. Clay confessed in his letter to Mr. Blair, that the contest rested on him. He also stated that the friends of Jackson said their hopes of obtaining a western President rested on him. Mr. Crawford's friends declared that the hopes of the republican party were upon Mr. Clay—thus holding out no indirect offer of an office to Mr. Clay, and establishing the fact, that they were incapable of corruption. But how did Mr. Adams' friends approach him? Sir, "there is no station to which you are not equal"—we "pray you to consider whether the public good and your own future interests do not distinctly point to the course you ought to pursue." They knew Mr. Clay's true character, and of course appealed to his ambition and his selfishness—flattered his vanity by declaring that there was no office to which he was not equal—ministered to his ambition, by reminding him of his future prospects for the Presidency. Mr. Clay understood them. Hence he said in his letter to Mr. Blair, "my friends entertain the belief that their kind wishes towards me" [to make him President in future] will, in the end, be more likely to be accomplished by so bestowing their votes"—on Mr. Adams.—On this authority, (and surely it was unquestionable,) Mr. Blair assured Jeptha Dudley and others, that Mr. Clay would receive the appointment of Secretary of State, should Mr. Adams be elected President; and it was on the same authority that Blair Crittenden and others, wrote to Mr. White to vote for Mr. Adams, as it was understood that Mr. Clay would be brought into the cabinet."

Mr. Clay, it will be recollected, refused to publish his letter to Mr. Blair, alleging that it would be INDECOROUS to the public, as it was SPONTIVELY written; but added that any gentleman might have a view of it by calling on his committee in Frankfort Mr. Kendall called on the committee and attentively perused the letter, in the absence of the chairman, and treasured up its contents in his memory. He afterwards solicited a copy of the letter in reply to which the well drille! chairman said, that so far from getting a copy, Mr. Kendall should not even have had a sight of the letter, had he been present to prevent it. Mr. Kendall thus addressed Mr. Clay in relation to the letter:

"Let the date be recollected—it is January 8th, 1825. You commence by giving Mr. Blair your opinion upon a work by Lord Byron which you say you have sent him—(franked I presume.) You then enter into the subject of the Presidential election and say, that the time has now arrived when you must begin to think seriously for whom you are to vote. You state that the friends of all the candidates entertained the opinion that on you rested the decision of the contest, and that your situation was singular and amusing. You say that the friends of the several candidates accost you in turn; that a friend of General Jackson says to you, My dear sir, my hopes are upon you—do not disappoint us—our partiality was for you next to the hero—you know the anxiety we all had for a western President: That a friend of Mr. Crawford comes and says, the hopes of the republican party are upon you; and Mr. Crawford were the only republican candidates; had you been returned to the House, we should have concentrated our force upon you. The language of Mr. Adams' friends, you give in nearly the following words:

"A friend of Mr. Adams comes to me 'with tears in his eyes,' and says—Sir, Mr. Adams has always had the greatest respect for you. There is no station to which you are not equal. You were undoubtedly the second choice of New-England, and I pray you to consider whether the public good and your own true interests do not distinctly point you to the course which you ought to pursue."

You then give some reasons why Mr. Adams should be preferred to General Jackson, among which I remember only the statement that the Ohio delegation had determined to vote for Mr. Adams, the alleged want of qualification in the General and his military propensities. You then declare distinctly, and in the following words:

"My friends entertain the belief that their kind wishes towards me, will, in the end be more likely to be accomplished, by so bestowing their votes."

You then declare, that you have urged them to be governed by their views of the public good alone, and aver that you have been influenced only by that consideration. In conclusion, you use nearly the following words:

"Your Representative is inclined to concur with us in these sentiments, and as I know his respect for your opinion, I request, if you concur in our views, that you will write to him by return mail to strengthen him in his inclinations. Shew this to Crittenden alone."

You say you could not publish this letter without publishing letters from Mr. Blair to show how he understood it. This was written on the 8th of January. About the 20th he must have received it, I have stated, and he has admitted that about the 20th, he told me that Mr. Adams, if elected, would make you Secretary of State. Does not this shew how he understood it?

The letter concludes by saying "shew this to Crittenden alone." Doubtless it was shewn to him. On the 19th January, Mr. Crittenden wrote to "our representative" as follows:

"Thinking as I do of Mr. Clay—of his great integrity, his lofty American spirit, and his consummate ability, I believe it to be highly important to the public interest that he should occupy a distinguished station in the Executive Department. Under all present circumstances, my first wish in regard to this subject (and it is one dictated both by personal partialities and considerations of the public good) would be, that Jackson should be the President and Clay his Secretary of State: and I really do believe, that the common good is more concerned in Clay's being Secretary, than it is in the question whether Jackson or Adams shall be the President."

Does not this show how he understood it?

On the same day Mr. Blair wrote to "our Representative" as follows:

"You have it in your power to vote not only with a view to the first officer, but probably in reference to the whole administration. Under some circumstances the latter consideration might deservedly be more influential than the first, as the selection of the managers of the department not only involves, in a great degree, the conduct of public affairs throughout the Presidential term, but probably will decide the next Presidential election." Again—"If it had been thought that Mr. Adams would be elected, and if elected would give Mr. Clay the highest place in his cabinet, there is scarcely a doubt that the vote [of the Kentucky Legislature] would have been in favor of Adams."

Does not this further show how he understood it?

You say, in your letter to Mr. Blair, that your "friends entertain the belief, that their kind wishes towards you would be most likely to be accomplished" by voting for Mr. Adams. What were their "kind wishes?" Doubtless the 'kind wishes' of your friends in Frankfort and Washington were the same. We have seen that the "kind wishes" of Messrs. Blair and Crittenden were, that you should be Secretary of State, as a stepping stone to the Presidency.

Mr. Trimble said, after he came home, that he "voted for Mr. Adams because it was distinctly ascertained that he would make you Secretary of State." This shows what were his "kind wishes."

Gen. Metcalfe said, they "could not possibly get Mr. Clay made Secretary of State without voting for, and electing Mr. Adams." This proves what were his "kind wishes."

Mr. Fr. Johnson said, he "voted for Mr. Adams to get Mr. Clay made Secretary of State." This shows what were his "kind wishes."

Mr. White was not quite "kind" enough, and you undertook to get letters from some of your friends, among his constituents, "to strengthen him in his inclinations," and warm up his "kind wishes."

My "kind wishes" did not extend to your electing and accepting an office under John Quincy Adams, and it took your friend, Mr. Blair, some days to persuade me to aid in the kind purpose of making you Secretary of State by his election.

That the world may see how perfectly Messrs. Blair, Crittenden and myself finally concurred in our "kind wishes" and views. I annexed my letter to you, of 21st January, to theirs of the 19th, to Mr. White. You say I never explained to you what I meant by "promoting our interest in the west by any arrangement other than the election of General Jackson." True, but did you not well understand my meaning? Read the letters of Crittenden and Blair, which you doubtless saw at the time, and you will see, as you already know, that it consisted wholly in my "kind wishes" towards you, whose elevation we all considered as identified with "our interests in the west."

After the close of the investigation in the Senate of Kentucky, Mr. White, our former Representative, made a publication, in which he denied any knowledge of a bargain between you and Mr. Adams, and said—"When I gave my vote to Mr. Adams, I did it under the firm persuasion, from the information I had received, through many intelligent gentlemen, of high political standing, within my district, that I was acting in strict conformity to the will of my constituents."

This publication excited a feeling among many of his constituents which is described in a letter from me to him, of which I have lately procured a copy, an extract from which is annexed. In compliance, not only with my request, but with that of many others of his former constituents, he has sent me a further explanation, accompanied by copies of the letters received by him from Messrs. Blair and Crittenden. It will be perceived that the information to which he alluded in his former publication, was contained in these letters and many others of a similar import, and that it was nothing more nor less than that he should so vote as to secure to you the office of Secretary of State, as a means of promoting your future views in relation to the Presidency. In speaking of these letters, Mr. White says—"That I was confirmed in my vote by their suggestions, I do freely acknowledge: and, therefore, as I have often heretofore frankly avowed, I now state, that I voted for Mr. Adams with a view to promote Mr. Clay's future prospects for the Presidency."

The justification of Mr. White is complete. Ignorant of your management, he received the letters as the spontaneous effusion of his constituents and had no reason to doubt that they spoke the will of the people. If indignation be deserved by any one for the manner in which the vote of this district was given, it is by Henry Clay and not by David White.

In what attitude do these facts place you in relation to that gentleman? He was your friend and colleague. While, as you say you were urging him to be governed in his vote for President by the public good alone, regardless of all considerations personal to yourself, you were secretly taking steps to influence his course by the agency of your personal friends among his constituents.—Surely, you could not have offered a grosser insult to his integrity or to his understanding. It implies, that in your opinion, he had not honesty enough to do his duty, or not sense enough to understand it.

It is of no avail to say, that your letter to Mr. Blair does not mention the office of Secretary of State, or say, in so many words that an understanding existed between you and Mr. Adams. The manner in which it was understood and the purpose for which it was written, fully explains its meaning. But if we had to rely on the words of the letter alone for the motive by which you were then actuated, it would be difficult to imagine sentences conveying a more direct inference that you and your friends were acting with a view to your own personal aggrandizement. Though you and your friends have endeavoured to make an impression upon the public mind, that Gen. Jackson's friends appealed to your interests for the purpose of securing your support, it is remarkable that by this confidential letter it appears, that such appeals were made only by the friends of Mr. Adams. You represent Gen. Jackson's friends as appealing to you through the hopes of the west, and Mr. Crawford's through the hopes of the republican party. They give no assurance of respect and admiration from their respective leaders—no declarations of your fitness for any station—no predictions that you will in future profit by your course. But the friends of Mr. Adams are all flattery and promise. Scarcely does "public good" find a place in all they say, and then only that the appeal to "your own future interests" may not be too abrupt." "Mr. Adams has always had the greatest respect for you and the highest admiration of your talents: there is no station to which you are not equal." What does this mean but that Mr. Adams will bestow on you the first office in his gift? "You were undoubtedly the second choice of New-England" What does this mean but that New-England desires to see you in the second office now, and will support you for the first when Mr. Adams has served out his eight years? "I pray you to consider, whether the public good and your own future interests do not distinctly point you to the course you ought to pursue." What is this, but saying that your future interest will be promoted by supporting Mr. Adams—we will make you Secretary of State and then President? These appeals touched the sensitive chord and roused in your bosom the flutterings of hope and ambition. You understood them; your friends understood them; they saw how their 'kind wishes' towards you were to be accomplished; they made Mr. Adams President, and he made you Secretary of State.

From the (N. Y.) Poughkeepsie Telegraph.

Mr. Adams' Portrait.

There are some of the followers of Messrs. Adams and Clay, in this place, who have declared that the sum alleged to have been paid by Mr. Adams for his portrait, was only $10, and that was for a medal and not a portrait. It is true that the medal of John Q. Adams cost the people only $10, and it is also true, that ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS of the Public Money has been expended for having the PORTRAIT of Mr. ADAMS taken. But they would have the Farmers and Mechanics believe that they were only robbed of ten dollars, instead of TEN HUNDRED; and that the former was too trifling a sum to mention. The charge of $1,000 for the Portrait, is made in the following words and figures, and appears on the books of the Indian department; the money was taken from the "Contingent Fund" of that department, by order of Mr. Barbour then Secretary of War, but now made Minister to England for his useful servises to Mr. Adams.

"U. States Indian Department to Mority Furst, Dr.

For his expenses in coming to Washington city to take President Adams likeness, and returning,	$125 00
For loss of time and services in taking said likeness,	125 00
For three lead dies, at $250 each,	750 00
Received payment,	$1,000 00

New York, Jan 15, 1826.
MORITY FURST.

Recommended for payment—charge to contingencies of Indian Department. (Remit to New York.)

(N. B.) THOS. L. M'KINNEY.
Jan. 19, 1826. Dept. of War, Office of Indian Affairs."

A Contradiction—The Adams men pretend that they are opposed to the election of Gen. Jackson, on account of outrages committed by him while as the head of a Military force; and yet they say that if we were again involved in war they would be pleased to see him placed at the head of the army? Now here is a sample of their consistency. If Jackson did wrong while at the head of a military force, they would be pleased to see him placed in a situation in which he could do so again! Does not this prove, beyond dispute, their insincerity; and that their allegations against him are mere matters of pretence? It certainly does; and no sensible man can fail to perceive it.—Delaware Gazette.

No wonder that Dr. Clay prays for "a pestilence" for if there is not one among the Jackson men of the United States; they will be too many for the coalition in November.—Nothing but a "pestilence" among the "common people," the "husbandmen, mechanics, and merchants in general" who are destined to labour," as the House of Braintree say, can prevent the election of General Jackson.
Boston Statesman.

☞ NOTICE.

A PLANTER who desires to procure some SLAVES for his own service, will give the best prices in cash, for a few of both sexes, between the ages of 12 and 25 years. Those who have such to dispose of will please apply at Col. Dashiell's Tavern, immediately.
Princess-Anne, August 4.

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year, the Houses now occupied, one by Mrs. Mary Ballard, and the other by Joseph S. Colgan, in the town of Princess-Anne. For terms apply to
JAMES POLK.
July 15, 1828. k

Blank Warrants for sale at this Office.

☞ We have seen in the Iris of the 22nd July, the official Report of Mr. Lacock in the United States' Senate, on Gen Jackson's conduct in the Seminole war. It is only necessary to put the public in mind of the facts that this Mr. Lacock, as well as a majority of the committee were enemies of Gen. Jackson—and that the report underwent a full debate in Congress, that some of the most violent speeches were made against General Jackson, but notwithstanding all the efforts of Mr. Clay, Mr. Lacock and others, the Congress of the United States decided that Gen. Jackson's conduct was not censurable.

WHY NOT?—Clay receives Seventeen Dollars a Day as Secretary of State. Why is not this sum deducted from his accounts, during his Summer ELECTIONEERING campaign? Noah.

☞ The communications of "QUERCUS," "GUACANAHARI," "DAVID EXPLORATION," and several other articles intended for this week's paper, are unavoidably crowded out.

Baltimore Prices Current.

Aug. 1, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $6 a 6.50; superfine Howard-st. 4.75 a 4.87½; city mills 4.50; Susquehanna, 4.37½ a 4.50; WHEAT, best red .85 a .90; best white .95 a 1.00—CORN, .32 a .34; OATS .20 a .22

☞ A Camp Meeting will commence at Nanticoke Point on the 14th of August.

☞ The Orphans' Court of Somerset County will sit on next Tuesday.

[COMMUNICATED.]

OBITUARY.

My tale is full of sadness. The scalding tears of a disconsolate father—the wounded feelings of a parent "whose locks are silvered o'er with age," call forth the emotions of sympathetic anguish, and guide my pen while I relate a circumstance which would melt the icy nature of the savage and fill the heart of a man with sorrow. To loose an affectionate son, a warm friend, and a good member of society, is no common loss. It is to be regretted even when the cold hand of death drags its victim by degrees to a natural grave. But how much more is it to be lamented when the bloom of youth, the vigor of manhood, the father's pride, the mother's joy, are all ingulphed in a watery grave.—EVERTON, the son of Isaac Kennerly, Esq. was unfortunately drowned, on Sunday the 27th ult. in the Chesapeake bay. The particulars, I believe, have not been ascertained; but it seems, while a furious storm was raging, he was knocked off the deck into the watery main, and since has never been heard of. Such was the fate of this unfortunate youth. The lapse of years will pass away—the gray hairs of a father will be laid in the grave, yet this circumstance will be fresh in the memories of some, and while the tears of sympathy rolls down their cheeks, many will contemplate the great expanse of water which ingulphs the remains of Everton Kennerly.

☞ NOTICE.

The Entire Personal Estate of

The late CHARLES ROBINSON,

Will be sold at the residence of the deceased, in Princess-Anne, on TUESDAY THE 12th INSTANT, consisting of the CROP growing on the ground

AN ASSORTMENT OF
Groceries, Dry Goods, one Mare, one Gig and Harness, Cattle, Hogs, Household & Kitchen Furniture, and sundry other Articles.—

The cash will be required for purchases not exceeding five dollars; but for larger purchases, a bond or note with approved security will be required. Sale to commence at 10 o'clock A. M.

HENRIETTA B. ROBINSON,
Adm'x. of C. Robinson, dec'd.
August 5 wm

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess-Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to
THOMAS K. CARROLL.
August 5. jß

PUBLIC SALE.

IN pursuance of an order of Somerset county Court, passed at May Term, 1828, the undersigned, or a majority of them, will sell, on THURSDAY the 28th INSTANT, at Major Leary's tavern, at Barren Creek Springs, in said county, on a credit of twelve months—

All the REAL ESTATE of
LEVIN RUSSELL,

Late of said county, deceased, which was lately valued by the undersigned. The purchaser, or purchasers, to enter into bond with approved security to the heirs of said Russel for their respective proportions.

TUBMAN BEDSWORTH,
ZACCHEUS LLOYD,
BEACHAM ACKWORTH,
JAMES BOUNDS,
WILLIAM TWILLEY,
August 5—ßP Commissioners.

☞ NOTICE.

ON WEDNESDAY the 13th INSTANT, the Trustees of the Poor of Somerset county will elect an OVERSEER of the POOR for the residue of the year. Persons wishing that situation will make proposals in writing to the Board of Trustees, or some member thereof, on or before that day.

By order of the Board,
JAMES WILSON, Sec'y.
August 5. m?m

FOR RENT,

For the ensuing year, that FARM which was formerly the property of William Tilghman, dec'd. situated on the head of Back Creek. For terms apply to JAMES STEWART.
July 22, 1828. kw

THE CORNUCOPIÆ.

"Blending the useful with the sweet."

FROM THE EMERALD.

STANZAS.

I hate the world—it hath no sun
To warm the injured breast,
No couch whereon the worn out soul,
Might sleep and be at rest,
The heart once peirced must still bleed on
"Till life's last throbbing pulse be gone."

Is there one hope that does not fade,
One smile without a tear,
Is there one bright, one gladdening ray,
To light man's travel here?
There is no hallowed spot on earth,
That has not known Affliction's birth.

There are blue skies—yet they grow dark,
And flowers—yet they must die:
And seasons full of joy and dreams,
Yet they pass quickly by,
The spirit's hope—the spirit's glee,
Change to a stern reality.

I knew one in my early days,
One of earth's fairest kind,
"Made up alone of loveliness,"
Alike in form and mind,
She seemed the mould of heaven's own hand,
The creature of some Eden land.

But she had sinn'd, and what tho' years
Of penance and of prayer,
Had gained compassion from the sky,
And found forgiveness there?
Nor prayer, nor penitence, nor time,
Won the world's pardon for that crime.

She died, as broken hearts all die,
Uncared for and unwept,
With no memorial left to tell,
Where her still spirit slept;
They laid her in some lonely spot,
Her name and fate alike forgot.

Such is the world—it hath no sun
To warm the injured breast,
No couch whereon the worn out soul,
Might sleep and be at rest;
The heart once pierced must still bleed on
"Till life's last throbbing pulse be gone."
J. P. B.

SONG.—To Mary.

If in the hour of mirth and glee,
My thoughts from joyance stray,
They only turn to home and thee
So far, so far away.
Affection opes her thousand springs;
Remembrance strikes the lyre;
And Love, from off his glittering wings,
Sheds many an orb of fire.
Yes! if in crowds of mirth or glee
My thoughts from joyance stray,
They only turn to home and thee
So far, so far away.

Here, where the ocean laves the shore,
And beauty reigns o'er all;
Amid those scenes forever more,
My thoughts embitter'd fall;
For absence severs me from thee,
The mountains 'tween us rise,
And every star of light I see,
But tells me of thine eyes.
Yes! if in crowds, &c.

There be unnumbered beauties here,
Springing from nature's hand,
And bounteous heaven hath made appear
Sweet verdure o'er the land.
And yet, 'mid all these scenes so bright,
'Mid all the thoughts they bring,
I want my spirit's beaming light,
Its glow o'er me to fling.
Yes! if in crowds, &c.

Yet, may I hope—for hope is given
A day-star from on high—
Full soon to bask me in the heaven
That shines in thy blue eye.
And, Mary dear, this faithful heart
Will then be pressed to thine,
With joy to meet, and never part,
But love with life resign,
Yes! if in crowds, &c.

From the American Farmer.

To prevent the Destruction of Bees, by the Bee Miller.

Devan's Ferry, Bertie Co., N. C.,
July 8, 1828.

Sir,—I have, for many years, been the raiser of bees, and was at one time much troubled with the bee-worm, but, upon examination, I found they always bred between the bench upon which the hive sat and the bottom of the hive; I first adopted the method of having the bottom edges of the hive brought to so small a point or edge as to afford them no shelter; but now, during the warm season, I raise the hive by placing small sticks around under the hive, so as to raise it, say about half an inch from the bench, which I take out during winter or the cold months.

And I can say, sir, that for many years I have seen nothing of the bee-worm, and that my stock of bees has increased as fast as I can or could wish. Yours, &c.

MILEY HAMILTON.

Insect Architects.—Of the wonderful instinctive power and economy of the bee, the ant, and the beaver, most of our readers are no doubt well acquainted though they may not be aware that there is a species of insects which even excel these in wisdom and policy. These are called Termes in natural history, a genius of insects of the order Aptera: they are found in the East Indies, Africa and South America. They build pyramidal structures, ten or twelve feet in height and divided into appropriate apartments, magazines for provisions, arched chambers and galleries for communication. These structures are so firmly cemented that they easily bear four men to stand upon them, and in the plains of Senegal, appear at a distance like the villages of the natives. A portion only of these insects, not bigger than the larger ants, are labourers, and these build the structures, procure provisions for the males and females, and take care of the eggs. Another portion of the community act as superintendents over the labourers, or as guards to defend their habitations from intrusion or violence. When a breach is made in the dwelling, they rush forward and defend the entrance with great ferocity: some of them beating against any hard substance, as a signal to the other guards, or as encouragement to the labourers; they then retire and are suceeded by the laborers, each with a burthen of tempered mortar in his mouth, and who diligently set about to repair whatever injury has been sustained. The more domestic habits of these insects are no less remarkable than those of the bee, to which they in some degree assimilate.

From the Nashville (Tennessee) Republican. June the 11th. 1828.

Died, at the Hermitage, on the morning of the 1st instant, of a pulmonary complaint, and in the 16th year of his age, Lyncoya, the orphan son of a chief of the Creek Nation.

On the 3d of November, 1813, after the battle of Talulshatche was gained, an Indian child, about ten or twelve months old, was found by an American soldier, in the bloodiest part of the field, sucking at the breast of its dead mother, who was killed, unfortunately, in the action. The child was brought to Gen. Jackson, whose heart was immediately interested in its preservation. As many squaws had been taken, and some of them had children at the breast, he applied to these to suckle it, offering a reward to any one who would preserve it. They all refused, saying that as its father and mother had been killed, the best way would be to kill it also. At that time the army was destitute of provisions, and the only substance that could be got for the infant captive was made of a small quantity of brown sugar and the crums of biscuits scraped from the chinks of a barrel. These, mixed in water composed a diet which it seemed to relish; and with it the Gen. and his faithful servant Charles kept him alive until opportunity occurred for sending him to Huntsville. The general then committed his foundling to the care of Col. Leroy Pope, of that place, who was requested to take charge of him until he could be conveyed to Mrs. Jackson. Col. Pope humanely received the little "Indian boy," and his amiable daughter, Maria, bestowed upon him the tenderest care. She gave him the name of Lyncoya, and affectionately retained him at her father's until the close of the Creek war; when Gen. Jackson on his return march to Tennessee, took him home, delivered him to Mrs. Jackson, and adopted him into his family.

In his first years he was feeble and sickly, a consequence, probably, of his want of a mother's care and nourishment—a want which nothing can supply. But after a time he became healthy and grew finely. At the age of five he began to discover an inclination for solitude and a turn for mechanical employments. At this age he made a bow, fashioned after the manner of the Indians, the first of the kind that had ever been seen on the General's farm. This excited much surprise in the family, as he had no intercourse whatever with Indians, except on one or two occasions when a few chiefs called to visit the General; when they were observed to take but slight notice of him. But from instinct, or from a predisposition to imitate Indian manners, he was in the habit of dressing his head with all the feathers he could pick up in the yard—and amusing himself constantly with his little bow—differing in this particular from civilized children, who change their amusements and toys with a sort of capricious variety.

At 8 years of age the General sent him to a good day school in the neighbourhood, but he was very averse to learning, and not even master of the alphabet in the course of a whole year. At 10, however his intellectual faculties seemed to awaken. He became fond of learning and advanced in it rapidly, giving evident signs of genius. The General then proposed having his education completed at West Point, and securing him a station in the army; and had made known his wishes to President Monroe, who promised his countenance and favour. But before Lyncoya's education was sufficiently advanced to give him admission at West Point, Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay came into power under circumstances which prevented any application for a warrant on the part of General Jackson. He therefore proposed to Lyncoya that he should indulge his mechanical turn, and learn some profitable trade. He said he preferred being a saddler, and in 1827 his English education being sufficient he was bound to a saddler in Nashville.

During last winter he caught a cold which fixed on his lungs, and reduced him to such weakness that he got leave of absence, and returned, as he said, "home," to the Hermitage. There he was treated with the greatest kindness and care. His diet was attended to—medical aid called in, and exercise both in a carriage and on horseback afforded him. I have frequently seen him accompanying Mrs. J. in short excursions taken for his benefit; and that amiable and benevolent lady, learning that Liverwort was esteemed salutary in consumptive cases, procured it and administered it to the Indian orphan. But all was in vain; he declined with a progress daily visible; and, after very severe sufferings, which he bore with the uncomplaining fortitude of his race, expired under the roof of the hero who had conquered his nation, but who followed his remains to a decent grave, and shed a tear as the earth closed over him forever.

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phoebus.

For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

June 3, 1828. wk

WANTED.

I want to hire a COLOURED WOMAN, of good character, who understands cooking and house work in general. To such a one I will give liberal wages. Enquire at the Village Herald office. July 22

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks,

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
CA. SA's before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas
WARRANTS.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's obt. servant.

WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.

Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess-Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

LEVIN H. POWELL.

July 8 ww

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER.

Nov. 20, 1827. Princess Anne, Md.

FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber is desirous of disposing of his real estate, being and lying in Worcester county, Md. and situated on Dividing Creek. The landed estate consists of 2000, or more acres. The improvements are a dwelling house and out buildings with a good SAW and GRIST MILL, both in excellent order; also a young orchard. About 100 acres of the land is in a good state of cultivation.

There is, on one part of the above property, an abundance of Iron Ore, which would warrant the erection of a Forge, and prove an object of value to a purchaser acquainted with, and calculated for, such an undertaking.

The terms of sale will be—one third down, and 3 years for the payment of the balance. For further particulars apply to

JOHN MORRIS.

April 22 kd

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street.
BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828 mw

PROPOSALS

For publishing in Hagerstown, Md. a Weekly Newspaper, under the title of

The Hagerstown Mail.

The Mail will convey "news from all nations"—particularly those most interesting to our own country, and will be conducted so as to give early and correct information of public affairs generally; of political occurrences in the different states; of the rise and fall of American produce in our principal cities, and the prices in foreign markets.

The political principles of this paper will be as purely Republican as those contained in the Declaration of Independence, and the Rights of the People shall be at all times zealously, firmly and fearlessly supported, whoever may be in power. The Establishment is intended to be a permanent one, and as such every endeavor will be used to render it a first rate country paper deserving public patronage.

With regard to the Presidential question which now agitates the whole Union, the Mail will decidedly and openly advocate the election of ANDREW JACKSON. And when it is considered that there is only one press in Baltimore, and only one between Baltimore and Cumberland that espouses his cause, it will readily be allowed that in so large an extent of country there is room for at least another—more particularly as all the other presses in this rich, and populous country, where he has so many disinterested friends, are against him; the times too emphatically demand the establishment of such a press, for at no period of our political history have such unfair and unjustifiable means been resorted to, in order to destroy the character of a public man, as have been within the last year to injure the well-earned fame of the Hero of New Orleans, and merely because he is a candidate before the people for a high and important office—although he was brought out by the people themselves; but the Mail will never leave him until he arrives at Washington, and receives from the hands of the people, the honors justly due to one whose whole life in peace and in war has been devoted to his Country's Liberty, Welfare and Happiness.

Terms of Subscription.

For a single paper Three Dollars a year: But this may be discharged by Two Dollars paid in advance, or Two Dollars and Fifty cents in Six Months—Any person obtaining Ten subscribers and becoming responsible for the money shall have a paper gratis.

Hagers-town, May 13—July 1

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, at the suit of William Kibble against Isaac Surmon, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one house and lot, containing one acre, more or less, known by the name of Hog Neck, and situated on Wicomico river, about 3 miles from its head; also two beds, one loom, one gun, one sein, two canoes, two hogs, and one yearling, which I shall proceed to sell on Wednesday the 6th of next August, on the premises to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

July 15, 1828. ws

EMIGRATION to LIBERIA.

NOTICE.

THE Managers of the American Colonization Society give notice, that they are ready to receive applications for the conveyance of free people of color to the colony of Liberia.

In all cases, the age, sex, and professions of the applicants must be mentioned.

Applicants from the State of Maryland must be prepared to offer the affidavit of some free white person, to their having actually resided within the State of Maryland for 'twelve months' previous to the period of emigration.

Applications may be made in Baltimore, to Hon. Judge Brice, Charles Howard Esq. or John E., John H. B. Latrobe Esq., or Charles C. Harper Esq., Agents of the Society.

JOB PRINTING

Neatly executed at this office.

IN CHANCERY,

12TH JULY, 1828.

ORDERED, That the sale of the real estate of William Waters, made and reported by the Trustee, Marcellus Jones, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause be shewn to the contrary on or before the 12th day of September next, provided a copy of this order be inserted once in each of three successive weeks, in one of the newspapers published in Somerset county, before the 12th day of August next. The report states the amount of sales to be $601 25.

True copy. TEST,

RAMSAY WATERS,

July 22, 1828. Reg. in Chan.

A LIST OF LETTERS

Remaining in the Post-Office at Princess-Anne, Md., on July 1, 1828.

B—William Bennett, Isaiah Bayley, James Benson
C—Joseph S. Colgan
D—Elizabeth Dory, George Davy, jun. William Dix, Elizbeth Durby, Isaac Dashiell, William F. Dashiell, Littleton Dennis
F—Josiah Furness, Whitty Fountain
G—Henry I S Gibbons
H—William Hunt, Mrs Sarah Hayward, Isaiah Hayman
I—Isaiah & Susan (care of Lambert Hyland)
J—John Jones 2, Levin D Jones, Alexander Jones, Doct Matthias Jones
K—Robert I H King
L—Henry Lankford
M—William Miles, Daniel Miles, John McDaniel, William M'Daniel 2, Miss Ann Martin, Miss Sarah R Maddux, Masonic Somerset Lodge
P—William Purnell, William Parkes 2, Stephen Parkes
R—Noah Riley, Robert Rich, Miss Mary Ann Riggin
S—John B. Stevenson, Rev. William Stone
T—Gilbert Townsend, Rinaldo Turner
W—William Williams, Miss Mary G. Wilson

SAML. BROWN, P. M.

July 8, 1828. ww

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.

Somerset County Orphans Court,

July 8th, 1828.

ON application of Sarah Dashiell, Administratrix of John Dashiell, (negro) late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that she give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for the successive weeks in the Village Herald, printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test.

JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order,

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of JOHN DASHIELL, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 29th of January next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 8th of July, 1828.

SARAH DASHIELL,

Adm'trix of John Dashiell, dec'd.

July 15, 1828. k

SINCLAIR & MOORE,

Pratt-St. Wharf, Baltimore,

HAVE in store—Millet, Lucerne, Field Corn, bunch, pole & soup Beans, a large assortment, for planting, and garden seeds generally.

PLOUGHS,

Amongst which are the much approved self-sharpening point Plough—By turning and reversing said point, the share lasts much longer than the cast share of any other plough, in as much as the point is steel, and when worn bevelling it is sharpened, if turned over. The CULTIVATORS made by Sinclair & Moore, pulverize the ground more effectually, and much deeper than the old fashioned tooth hoed kind—and by the use of these in the culture of corn, it will save nearly two thirds of the ploughing.

ALSO, Socket Shovels, Scythes, Mattocks and Picks, with handles;—cast steel Hay and Manure Forks, WHEAT FANS, & GRAIN CRADLES, with Waldron Scythes; Garden Tools generally; Wove Wire for Seives, and Mill Screens.

☞They have received from on board the brig Hyperion, capt. Forbes, just from Liverpool, a quantity of grain and grass Scythes, (Waldron's prime) Sickles, Malleable trace Chains; Straw and Hay Knives, Grass Hooks, and Garden Tools, amongst which are turnip and other Hoes; Edge Tools, budding and pruning Knives, &c.

☞For the greater convenience of those who use our PLOUGHS in Somerset, we have appointed JOHNSTON & SUDLER of Princess-Anne, our agents for the sale of them, who will constantly keep a supply of the different kinds at our prices.

June, 1828. S. & M.

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers.

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 Butter Prints

100 gross of Lamp Wick, assorted; Spigots and faucets, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs, and hydrants, shoe, sweeping, dusting and other brushes, sifters, mats, and lime squeezers, fancy and common bellows, pound, half pound and quarter pound Butter Prints, of various patterns, fishing lines and rods, butter bowls, trays, baskets, wash and cake boards, ropes and cord, patent taps, humming and common tops, nests of sugar boxes and tubs, boot & shoe blacking, towel rollers, tubs and turnip mashers, rolling pins, carpenters or joiners' chalk lines, spoons and pie trenchers, crabbing and cabbage nets, &c.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,

No. 1012 Baltimore, between South and Calvert Sts.

Baltimore, 6th mo. 24.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., AUGUST 12, 1828. NO. 20.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

☞NOTICE.

The Entire Personal Estate of

The late CHARLES ROBINSON,

Will be sold at the residence of the deceased, in Princess Anne, on TUESDAY THE 12th INSTANT, consisting of the CROP growing on the ground

AN ASSORTMENT OF

Groceries, Dry Goods, one Mare, one Gig and Harness, Cattle, Hogs, Household & Kitchen Furniture, and sundry other Articles.—

The cash will be required for purchases not exceeding five dollars; but for larger purchases, a bond or note with approved security will be required. Sale to commence at 10 o'clock A. M.

HENRIETTA B. ROBINSON.

Adm'x. of C. Robinson, dec'd.

August 5 wm

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess-Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.

August 5. 1f

☞NOTICE.

A PLANTER who desires to procure some SLAVES for his own service, will give the best prices in cash, for a few of both sexes, between the ages of 12 and 25 years. Those who have such to dispose of will please apply at Col. Dashiell's Tavern, immediately Princess-Anne, August 4.

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year, the Houses now occupied, one by Mrs. Mary Ballard, and the other by Joseph S Colgan, in the town of Princess-Anne. For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

July 15, 1828. k

Blank Warrants for sale at this Office.

From the (N. Y.) Poughkeepsie Telegraph.

Mr. Adams' Portrait.

There are some of the followers of Messrs. Adams and Clay, in this place, who have declared that the sum alleged to have been paid by Mr. Adams for his portrait, was only $10, and that was for a medal and not a portrait. It is true that the medal of John Q. Adams cost the people only $10, and it is also true, that ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS of the Public Money has been expended for having the PORTRAIT of Mr. ADAMS taken. But they would have the Farmers and Mechanics believe that they were only robbed of ten dollars, instead of TEN HUNDRED; and that the former was too trifling a sum to mention. The charge of $1,000 for the Portrait, is made in the following words and figures, and appears on the books of the Indian department; the money was taken from the "Contingent Fund" of that department, by order of Mr. Barbour then Secretary of War, but now made Minister to England for his useful servises to Mr. Adams.

"U. States Indian Department to Mority Furst, Dr.

For his expenses in coming to Washington city to take President Adams likeness, and returning.	$125 00
For loss of time and services in taking said likeness.	125 00
For three lead dies, at $250 each,	750 00
Received payment,	$1,000 00

New York, Jan 15, 1826.

MORITY FURST.

Recommended for payment—charge to contingencies of Indian Department. (Remit to New York.)

(N. B.) THOS. L. M'KINNEY.

Jan. 19, 1826. Dept. of War, Office of Indian Affairs."

Mr. Adams as a Politician.

From the Ithica (N. Y.) Journal.

Our investigations of the character of John Quincy Adams have convinced us that he is sordid and selfish as an individual, and cold, faithless and unprincipled as a politician.—Such is our deliberate and candid opinion; and as we wish to justify our opinions in the estimation of all honorable men, we request the attention of our readers, and particularly of those who are admirers of Mr. Adams to the following facts:

Until the year 1803, during the whole period of what was termed the "reign of terror," and almost for the whole time that Mr. Jefferson was in office, Mr. Adams was a leading and severe federalist. He was among the most determined opponents of Mr. Jefferson's administration. He was the most active and noisy of Mr. Jefferson's revilers.—His writings for the public press were numerous, and distinguished for their vindictiveness. He not only indulged in those ordinary modes of recrimination and argument by which gentlemen politicians sustain their cause, but resorted to the lowest grades of pasquinade and ribaldry; and some of his productions in doggrel rhyme, are now well known and remembered. Take the following specimen from a production first published in the Boston Gazette, in 1802, and thence copied into the Port Folio with this introductory note:

"Some of our papers have hinted at the amours of a certain great personage, which are said to be of a dark complexion. In the language of poetry there are "jetty loves," as well as "rosy loves" and Cupid sometimes pierces a black heart. If, according to the elegant proverbs of Dr. Franklin, "a man may kiss his cow," surely a "philosopher may kiss his wench." The following, from an eastern paper, is witty and poetical."

SONG.

Supposed to have been written by the sage of Monticello.—[Written by John Q. Adams.]

Et etiam fusca grata colore Venus.—OVID.
And Venus pleases though as black as jet.

Of all the damsels on the green,
On mountain or in valley,
A lass so luscious ne'er was seen
As Monticellian Sally.
Yankee doodle who's the noodle?
What wife were half so handy?
To breed a flock of slaves for stock,
A blackamoore's the dandy.

Search every town and city through,
Search market, street, and alley;
No dame at dusk shall meet your view,
So yielding as my Sally.
Yankee doodle, &c.

When press'd by loads of state affairs,
I seek to sport and dally,
The sweetest solace of my cares
Is in the lap of Sally.
Yankee doodle, &c.

Let Yankee parsons preach their worst,
Let tory witlings rally!
You men of morals! and be curst,
You would snap like sharks for Sally.
Yankee doodle, &c.

She's black, you tell me—grant she be—
Must colour always tally?
Black is love's proper hue for me—
And white's the hue for Sally.
Yankee doodle, &c.

What though she by the glands secretes,
Must I stand shil-I-shall-I?
Tuck'd up between a pair of sheets,
There's no perfume like Sally.
Yankee doodle, &c.

You call her slave—and pray were slaves
Made only for the gally?
Try for yourselves, you witless knaves,
Take each to bed your Sally.
Yankee doodle, &c.

And the following a little more decent, from a production published in 1805, ridiculing the expedition of capt. Lewis to the Rocky Mountains.

We never will be so fobb'd off,
As sure as I'm a sinner;
Come, let us all subscribe, and ask
The hero to a dinner;
And Barlow, stanzas shall endite,
A bard the tide who tames, sir;
And if we cannot alter things,
By G-d we'll change their names, sir;

Let old Columbus be once more
Degraded from his glory,
And not a river by his name,
Remember him in story;
For what is old discovery,
Compared to that which new is?
Strike—strike Columbia river out,
And put in river Lewis.

Let dusky Sally henceforth bear
The name of Isabella,
And let the mountain all of salt,
Be christened Monticella.
The hog with navel on his back,
Tom Paine may be when drunk, sir,
And Joel call the Prairie dog,
Which once was called a skunk, sir,

Such are the specimens of Mr. Adams' political poetry. His prose was not less poetical than his rhyme, and equally vulgar and vindictive.

We will now call the reader's attention to one or two circumstances, immediately previous to the conversion of Mr. Adams. It may be well, however, to pause for a few moments over the following prophetic sentence of the elder Adams, in a letter to W. Cunningham, dated 15th Feb. 1814:

"If a family which has been high in office and splendid in wealth, falls into decay from profligacy, folly, vice, or misfortune, they generally turn DEMOCRAT, and court the lowest of the people, with an ardor, an art, a skill, and consequently with a success, which no vulgar democrat can attain."

In the spring of 1807, Mr. John Q. Adams presided as chairman at the federal caucus in Boston, which nominated the notorious Caleb Strong as candidate for governor: but Mr. Strong was defeated, and the republicans, by the election of Mr. Sullivan, triumphed for the first time in Massachusetts, after the downfall of John Adams' administration. About the same time, Mr. John Quincy Adams, at the table of a respectable citizen, 'lamented the fearful progress of the democratic party and of its principles; and declared that he had long meditated the subject and had become convinced, that the only method by which the democratic party could be destroyed, was by joining with it, and urging it on with the utmost energy to the completion of its views, whereby the result would prove so ridiculous and so ruinous to the country, that the people would be led to dispise the principles and to condemn the effects of democratic policy; and then, said he, we may have a form of government better suited to the genius and disposition of our country than our present constitution!"

The fact that Mr Adams made the foregoing declarations is established by affidavits now before us, published in the Boston papers in 1824. And conformably to this expression of his views, we find him in December, 1807, he then being a United States senator, elected by the federalists of Massachusetts, suddenly and unexpectedly acting with the republicans in congress, by supporting one of the most unfortunate of Mr. Jefferson's measures, the embargo; and so zealous was he on this occasion, that he declared, as the president had RECOMMENDED the measure, he "would not DELIBERATE, but would ACT!" To justify this sudden conversion, he DENOUNCED THE FEDERAL PARTY, CONFIDENTIALLY, it seems to president Jefferson and senator Giles, as having TREASONABLE VIEWS against the country. This fact was hinted at by Mr. Jefferson, in a correspondence a short time before his death; and now has been recently confirmed by Mr. Giles, gov. of Virginia, in an address to the public, from which the following is an extract:

"Mr. Adams made the disclosure to me of his intending to desert the federal party, the winter of 1807, 1808; to the best of my recollection, it was a short time previous to the first embargo. That it was made under the most solemn assurances of his patriotism and disinterestedness, and of entire exemption from all views of personal promotion by the party to which he was proselyted. Mr. Jefferson states the grounds of this change, as communicated by Mr. Adams himself, to be the TREASONABLE VIEWS of the federal party, and that these treasonable views extended to disunion. All that now remains to be disclosed to the public to give a full view of the whole ground of this eventful transaction, is to designate the particular conspiracy on the part of the federalists of that day, which did induce Mr. Adams to charge them according to Mr. Jefferson's statement, with treasonable views to dissever the Union; the particular foreign agents with whom it was carried on; the particular circumstances which gave rise to it; and the particular portion of the federalists implicated in the treasonable negociations then on foot. Mr. Adams can state facts to the public if he should think proper to do so. WILLIAM B. GILES.

February 28, 1828."

If these declarations of the "treasonable views" of the federal party were true, how can Mr. Adams justify himself for having so long acted as a member and confidential leader of that party, and for the recent acts of confidence by which he has distinguished some of its most influential leaders of that and a subsequent period? If they were FALSE, what epithet does the English language furnish to distinguish the full measures of his baseness?

But it seems that the elder Adams fully appreciated the motives and views of his son, that he did not believe John Q. had deserted his principles with his party; but that he had "turned DEMOCRAT" merely for the purpose of "urging on" and "destroying" the republican party. Consequently, we find the father in December 1808, objecting to the son being the candidate of the republicans of Massachusetts for governor of that state, "because it would produce an eternal separation between him and the federalists—AT LEAST THAT PORTION OF THEM WHO CONSTITUTE THE ABSOLUTE OLIGARCHY!!" And in order to prevent this "eternal separation," and to remove the young convert entirely from the party contensions of the day, it was cunningly devised between father and son, that the latter should claim as the reward of his apostacy, a foreign mission. In this attempt he was successful; and in October, 1808, it appears by his accounts, he received an outfit of $9,000 as minister to Russia. He remained abroad until the close of the late war; and in that period we shall look in vain for the evidences of his republican principles or of his American feelings. On the contrary, while negociating for peace at Ghent, and receiving upwards of thirty thousand dollars a year, he wrote a letter to Levitt Harris, in which he spoke with the coldest indifference of some of the most brilliant events of the late war, the defence of Plattsburgh, Baltimore, &c. ridiculing the militia of America, by remarking that "the fire eater Brisbane, and the fire brand Cockburn, had kept the rankest of our militia in countenance by their expertness in running away;" and used the following language in disparagement of our government and cause: with "A FEEBLE and penurious government, with five frigates for a navy, and scarcely five efficient regiments for an army, how can it be expected that we should RESIST the mass of force which that gigantic power [Great Britain] has collected to CRUSH US AT A BLOW!"

We now come to the most recent evidencies of Mr. Adams' political inconsistency—his want of political integrity.

The circumstance of his sudden and unexpected union with Henry Clay, whereby the latter supported him for the first office in the government, and received at his hands an appointment to the second office—we shall pass over at present. This may be deemed by some a perfectly honorable and natural, although a somewhat marvellous reconciliation of two powerful rivals of the same political party. But can they justify upon the same grounds the pledge, asserted to have been given by Mr. Adams to certain members of the federal party at the same period, and to secure to him their support for the same office? Yes, it does appear from evidence not to be resisted, that during the pendency of the last presidential election, Mr. Adams did, on the application of some of his old federal associates cause a letter to be written, which was revised by him, and interlined in his own hand writing, and which contained PLEDGES of a political nature to the federal party, which secured to him the votes of the federal members in congress. Mr. Webster is asserted to have been the active agent in this transaction. It has been also asserted that the letter was shown to Mr. M'Lane, of Delaware; to Mr. Stockton, of New-Jersey; and to a number of other distinguished federal gentlemen, and the circumstances have never been denied by them. The editor of the Buffalo Republican, formerly of New-Jersey, and acting there with the political friends of Mr. Adams, published in his paper of the 9th ult. the following extract from a letter of the late honourable Richard Stockton, of that state:

"You inquire of me in relation to the pledge given by Mr. Adams, through Mr. Webster, to the old federal party. An unsophisticated young man like yourself, unused to the chicanery of politics, might well enough question whether a proposition of that nature from an apostate, would have been accepted, or relied upon, by one in my situation, whom he had abandoned and denounced as plotting treason against the republic.—You do me too much honor, however. That pledge was made and accepted, and I will add, relied on too. In truth, we never had any faith in the apostacy of Mr. Adams—his principles remain unchanged. For one, I doubt not that his attachment to the men of our faith was unshaken, until after his preference of a noted democrat for the office of district judge was made known. You know enough of New Jersey, however, to know, that the appointment of an old federalist to that office, would have been fatal to his then dubious interests here; and perhaps my friends were asking too much, when they demanded the fulfilment of a voluntary pledge. The letter was shown me at Bispham's in Trenton, in presence of Mr. Hopkinson and one or two others. I know Mr. A's. hand writing well, and was perfectly satisfied of its being genuine, by its being interlined by him. The substance of the pledge has been correctly given in the papers. I have thus frankly answered in detail, the question you have propounded; and whatever influence these avowals may have on your mind, I am sure of being exonerated by you, of inconsistency in having changed ground."

We are aware that the authenticity of this letter has been questioned by some of the friends of the late Mr. Stockton; but the facts detailed in it, they do not deny. The editor of the Republican, however, in his paper of the 20th ult. affirms the genuineness of the letter; and declares that when the consent of the parties concerned is obtained, "it shall be published, accompanied by name, date, and all the circumstances connected with it." In corroboration, the Philadelphia Gazette says:

"The National Journal professes to doubt the existence of the letter from Mr. Stockton, published in the Buffalo Republican. It even goes so far as to assert its "conviction the whole story is an entire and intentional falsehood."

"We have positive and direct testimony, that Mr. Stockton made similar statements in conversation but a short time before his death. Mr Stockton was not the only person cognizant of those facts. There are gentlemen now living in this city, who can speak to the point if they choose."

In addition to this, the American Sentinel of that city, of April 23, affirms on his own responsibility, that

"The substance of the letter has been stated by Mr. Stockton to living witnesses, who can be summoned to court when an investigation is demanded."

The New-Brunswick (New-Jersey) Times, also says in relation to the subject:

"Mr. Stockton, in August last, related the substance of what is contained in the letter now published, to a gentleman of our acquaintance."

Mr. Walsh, also, one of the gentlemen referred to, a present supporter of Mr. Adams, after so long a silence, has at length in his paper of May first, been compelled to notice the subject. He confirms the existence of the PLEDGE, but as is natural for a party implicated, endeavours to palliate the transaction. He says,

"The utmost that has been alleged, with any semblance of truth, is that one or two members of congress, federalists who decidedly preferred Mr Adams to gen Jackson, on the broadest grounds wished to know before they definitely resolved to vote for him, whether, if made president, he would pursue the policy of excluding federalists from office; and they accordingly asked information on the subject from Mr. Webster, or some other friend of Mr. Adams, supposed to be acquainted with his sentiments.

The object was, not any stipulation for themselves; but simply the satisfaction of being assured that a defranchisement as detrimental to the national weal, as unjust and absurd in itself, was not likely to be continued. To this application the gentleman addressed gave a written answer, which had the approbation or revision of Mr. Adams; and which contained a profession of doctrine on the point, similar to the one soon after made to the world, more emphatically and fully in his inaugural address."

Here, then, is proof undeniable that certain federalists, "before they DEFINITELY RESOLVED to vote for" Mr. Adams as president, required from him a PLEDGE that he would appoint federalists to office; and that this PLEDGE was satisfactorily given. It was, as all know, redeemed in part; by the appointment of Rufus King as minister to England; of his son and son-in-law as members of the same mission; of Mr. Sergeant as commissioner to Panama, and of many other federal gentlemen to various public offices.

Now, to sum up the whole facts in this case, it appears: That John Q. Adams, after reviling Mr. Jefferson and the republican party as every thing mean and despicable, "turned democrat," and denounced his former political associates as TRAITORS to their country: That he "turned democrat," not from principle, but to "urge on" the party to "destruction," and that he did not desire an "eternal separation" from the federalists, "at least that portion of them who constitute the absolute oligarchy: That while then professing to be a republican, appointed by republicans to an important foreign mission, and drawing from the national treasury the amount of more than thirty thousand dollars a year, he denounced a republican administration as "WEAK and PENURIOUS," and yielded up his country in anticipation without a sign as a victim to the "gigantic power" of a foreign invader: That on return again to the bosom of his country and partaking largely of its official bounties, under the renewed triumphs of republican principles and the republican party, he embraced the first opportunity that self interest presented, to reunite himself to the federal PARTY which he had deserted and denounced for its "treasonable views;" gave to the leaders of that party, for the express purpose of securing their votes to himself for the presidency, a written pledge to appoint federalists to office; and that he has since redeemed that pledge, so far as he dared to do so, while hoping and looking for republican support to secure his re-election.

Can any candid and impartial reader, therefore, resist the conclusion to which we ourselves have come, that John Quincy Adams is a faithless and unprincipled politician? That he has, in his whole political career, been actuated by the sordid motives of pecuniary gain and official promotion? Certain portions of the federal party may indeed rely upon his recent pledges—they may cling to him as their last anchor of hope: But, he has forever forfeited—he does not merit and he cannot receive, the confidence of the friends of their country, the support of the republican party.

A True and Plain Statement.

Extract from the Address of the Maryland Jackson Convention.

Mr. Adams at the last election in the House of Representatives, received the votes of five of the Western States. In the nine Western States, General Jackson received twenty nine electoral votes, and Mr. Adams only three; but one of which was from the people, whereas twenty six of the Jackson electors were chosen immediately by the people themselves. The returns of the popular votes in the nine Western states, as contained in the papers printed at the time, and not contradicted, are as follows, viz:

	Jackson.	Adams	Clay	Crawford
Ohio,	18487	12280	19255
Kentucky	6455		16782
Alabama,	9443	2416	67	1680
Indiana,	7343	3085	5315
Tennessee,	20197	216		312
Mississippi,	3234	1794		119
Illinois,	1901	1542	1047	219
Missouri,	987	311	1401
Total,	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

From the above returns, it appears that of the votes of the people in the nine Western States, General Jackson received 38,512 votes more than Mr. Adams, [illegible] more than Mr. Clay—2615 more than Mr. Clay and Mr. Adams together, and 515 more than the whole received by all three of the opposing candidates. Suppose the contest to have been between Mr. Adams and General Jackson, and the votes confined to those two, is there any one who looks at the above statement of the actual votes received by Mr Adams, and reflects that Mr. Clay's friends had industriously represented Mr. Adams as unfriendly to the Western interests, and that a President ought not again be taken from the Cabinet. Is there any one, we repeat, who will venture to say that Mr. Adams would have got one-fourth of the votes of the nine Western States? And yet he received the votes of 5 states in Congress, and Jackson only four.

The following are the results of the votes, of such states as are not contained in the above list, taken from the papers printed at the close of the Presidential election. They cannot vary far from the official returns.

	Adams	Jackson	Crawford	Clay
Maine,	6870		2330
Massach'ts.,	30687		6616
Connecticut,	7587		1978
R. Island,	2145		200
N. Hampshire,	4107		643
Virginia,	3189	2861	8489	416
New Jersey,	9110	10985	1196
Pennsylvania,	5440	36100	1206	1690
N. Carolina,		20415	15621
Maryland,	14632	14523	3645	695
	83767	84884	41975	2081
Add W. S.	21555	68067	2330	43867
Total U. S.	105322	152951	47,065	46668

From this table it appears that General

Jackson's majority of the popular votes, so far as taken throughout the United States, over Mr. Adams, was 47,629 and over both Adams and Clay 961.

The returns of votes from new Hampshire, Virginia, and Missouri, in the above tables, are not entirely complete, the votes from some few counties not being included. These, however, could not vary the result 1000 votes, and suppose that thousand be taken from General Jackson, there can be no question on the mind of any one, who recalls the state of public opinion in the states of Delaware, New York, Vermont, Georgia, and South Carolina, where the electors were appointed by their Legislatures, that if the vote of the people had been taken there would have been for Jackson a much larger majority than 1000 votes. And if any one will recollect the state of public opinion in those Southern and Western States, where Clay and Crawford received the principal part of their votes, he cannot, without flying in the face of all reasonable calculations, come to any other conclusion, than that, if the election in those States had been by the people, and the choice restricted to Jackson and Adams, the majority of the former over the latter, throughout the Union, would have been greatly increased—and if you look to the public opinion in the States, where Crawford and Clay received the votes, you will be obliged to admit, that if their choice in the House had been confirmed to Adams and Jackson, the votes of nearly all of them would have been for Jackson, if the will of the people of these states, had been attended to by their Representatives in Congress. This subject may be placed in another striking point of view.

All the electoral votes for Mr. Adams were received from the New England States and New York, except seven, which were received as follows: One out of three from Delaware—three out of eleven in Maryland—two out of five in Louisiana—one out of three in Illinois—that is only seven electoral votes out of seventeen States, and not a majority of the electoral votes in any of those seventeen states; yet in the House of Representatives, he received the votes of five of these states.

"Few and Far Between!!"

Although there are, we believe, many of those editors who defile their columns with the infamous slanders and calumnies on Andrew Jackson, who at the same time know them to be false, yet we regret to say, that those who are found willing to acknowledge it are, "like angels' visits—few and far between." The following are of the latter class:

From the N. Y. Canal of Intelligence, (a decisive Adams paper.)

In our paper to-day we publish an extract from the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, in Congress, to whom was refered the case of the six militiamen. We do not give place to this document because we have become converts to the Jackson faith; but because we are not converts to the maxim "the end justifies the means." We do not wish to have the people's prejudices or predelictions wrought upon by the propagation of palpable errours and gross falsehoods. The use of these weapons has been attributed to the Jackson party; and if they do use them, let them have the exclusive use and credit of it. Truth is the most potent engine that can be used in such a warfare; for it will certainly and effectually operate; and the cause sustained by it, is surely just. The truth, it appears, has been fully told; and as all that we have published heretofore, either editorially or otherwise, has been rather against than for General Jackson, we publish the extract aforesaid from an honest feeling of duty to the General as unjustly accused in the execution of the militia men. We will add that our opinion on this head is changed. We believe the Court Martial did right; and that General Jackson did equally so. It appears that the mutinous excitement and acts of mutiny took place even before three months term of service had expired! and according to the articles of war, the punishment was legal. Thus the matter is indisputably at rest, unless these facts be controverted. The report of the Committee is calm, dispassionate, and dignified. Their view of the subject is candid; there is no glosing; no false colouring; and conceals no circumstances essential to be divulged. We are glad to see this charge so successfully confuted.

Another Instance!

The following remarks are copied from the [illegible] Daily Advertiser, an administration paper; and they furnish the most pointed censure upon those degraded Ebonyites who persist in their wholesale charges of 'treason' against General Jackson, without the shadow of foundation:

"JACKSON AND BURR.—We have seen much of late in the papers, attempting to show that General Jackson was concerned with Col Burr, in what is known by the name of 'Burr's Conspiracy.' What that 'conspiracy' was, we do not pretend exactly to know; but are rather of the opinion, that it did not aim at all at the government or people of the United States, but was intended to operate against Mexico. Therefore we, ought to disapprove of any act of hostility against another peaceable government, being perpetrated in this country; we would not be justified in pronouncing it treason, or the persons concerned in it, as traitors. Consequently, it it were proved that Gen. Jackson was an associate of Burr, and consenant of his designs, though we might regret his "demented quixotism" we could not call him by that name, which of all others, a patriot most hates.

"But admitting that Burr's intentions were to overthrow the government of the Union, (which admission, supposing Burr to have common sense, is a very great one) we have never yet seen any thing which would justify the belief that Gen. Jackson was in any way an encourager or promoter of such intentions. And even in the following letter of Judge Williams, we cannot discover aught that goes to change our former impressions.

"The expressions that Judge W. attributes to Gen. Jackson, are extremely vague, and amount to any thing or nothing. And in a matter of this kind, where the character of one of our great men, is, in a measure, at stake, we are not so hot politicians, as to suffer our national pride entirely to be merged in a desire to advance the interests of our party. We are not disposed to interpret these [illegible] to the dishonour of a patriot, whose fame is identified with that of his country, when we can as easily expound them differently."

"ORDER AND DECENCY" OF THE ADAMS PARTY!!!

[From the Louisville Advertiser.]

VILLAINOUS.

Our readers will be astonished when they peruse the following extract of a letter from a gentleman in Cincinnati. We supposed the cup of calumny had been drained to its very dregs, but we were deceived. We blieved that nothing more base, vallainous and dastardly could be imagined, projected or fabricated, by the coalition or its panders, than the attack upon the reputation of an unoffending female—Mrs. Jackson—but we confess we were deceived. Base and reckless as we viewed them, their malignant villany surpasses any thing we ever attributed to them, in word or thought. ☞Charles Hammond, we are informed, has been furnished with forged documents, to prove—what?—that the mother of Gen. Jackson was a prostitute; that she came to this country with the British army! and afterwards married a mulatto, by whom she had seven children, and that Gen. Jackson is one of them!!!

The forgery of the Harris letter—the fabrication in relation to Eppes, Decatur and Jackson—and the various forgeries in relation to John Woods and the 'six militia men'—the attempt to rob General Jackson of the glory of the victory of New Orleans—the forged note of the National Journal, to prove that Jackson could not spell, and the villainous attack on Mrs. Jackson, were not deemed sufficient! Still darker and more hellish forgeries were in reserve. Not content with assailing the wife of the defender of the west, his enemies are now prepared to assail the ashes of his deceased mother, by a forged statement equally at war with truth and all the generous sympathies of human nature. When men are driven by their ambition to the commission of such outrages upon the feelings of a venerable patriot—when truth is contemned and all that is moral and decorous in society is disregarded, we would inquire whether any man, who had any respect for himself, can approve the conduct of such a faction, and whether he can conscientiously support an administration, when its confidential friends make use of such means to prostrate Gen. Jackson?

The object of the coalition cannot be mis understood. They imagine they may possibly succeed in rousing Gen. Jackson to resentment, and thus drive him to the commission of some act that would injure his prospects of success. In this they will be deceived. Conscious that he lives in the affections of an overwhelming majority of his country men, he will view without emotion the vile attemps that have been made, or may yet be made, to tarnish his reputation. He knows such efforts must be despised by all honest and honorable men. The good opinion or support of those of an opposite character, he would not have.

This is another "Dusky Sally" story, and only putting in practise the Adams maxim, that a degraded and disappointed family, would at any time sooner annihilate heaven and earth, than fail of carrying their point. We suppose John Q. Adams considers these negro calumnies like his poetry about black Sal—carrying the "war into Africa."

The mother of Andrew Jackson.—Not satisfied with invading the retirement of the Hermitage and attacking the reputation of Mrs. Jackson by the foulest calumnies, the resurrection men of the coalition have dragged from her grave the monther of the Hero of New Orleans, and have insulted her memory by the foulest forgeries. We find the following remarks respecting the Patriot, of whom Jefferson said that he had "filled the measure of his country's glory" in Eaton's life of Jackson published years ago, before the last Presidential election:—

"Andrew Jackson was born on the 15th March 1767. His father Andrew, the youngest son of his family, emigrated to America from Ireland, during the year 1765, bringing with him two sons, Hugh and Robert, both very young. Landing at Charleston in South Carolina, he shortly afterwards purchased a tract of land in what was then called the Waxsaw settlement, about forty five miles above Camden, at which place "the Hero of New Orleans was born." Shortly after this birth, his father died leaving three sons to be provided for by their mother. She appears to have been an exemplary woman, and to have executed the arduous duties which devolved upon her, with the greatest faithfulness and great success. To the lesson she inculcated on the youthful minds of her sons, is no doubt owing in a great measure, that fixed opposition to British tyranny and oppression, which afterwards so much distinguished them. She impressed it upon them, as a first duty to expend their lives, should it become necessary in defending and supporting the natural rights of man." Andrew being intended by his father for the ministry, was sent to a flourishing academy near the Waxsaw meeting house, superintended by Mr. Humphreys. When Andrew was about fourteen years of age, the ravages of the British extended to that part of the country, and deriving encouragement from the recommendations of his mother whose feelings were no less alive on this occasion than his own, he went forth when a boy to fight in the revolution the battles of his country. He was severely wounded and his father killed. To add to his afflictions, his mother, worn down by grief and her incessant exertions to procure clothing and other comforts for the suffering prisoners who had been taken from her neighbourhood, expired, and Andrew Jackson was left a prisoner to the British, in the wide world a friendless orphan."

THE COALITION SLANDERS.

We have never regretted except for the honor of human nature, that the Adams tactics of the reign of terror, forgery and calumny, should be revived in the vain hope of injuring Jackson. The Coalition Calumnies do not harm Jackson—he is armed so strong in honesty, that they pass by him as the idle wind. But they show the bad hearts of Adams and Clay, and the wickedness and desperation of their cause. Adams has declared that Jackson's "whole career has been signalized by the purest intentions, and the most elevated purposes," and Clay has pronounced, that the reputation of this patriot constituted a great portion of the "MORAL WEALTH" of our country. After this, it is impossible for these men to refute their own testimony and injure the fame of Gen. Jackson, who is the same man now, as then. There is another good effect, which results from the coalition putting in practice the following unprincipled maxim of the first Adams that "a degraded, disappointed, and powerful family, would at any time sooner annihilate heaven and earth, than fail of carrying their point."

We say, therefore, we care not how much the tools of the coalition abuse Jackson and his friends—the more the better. It will cause great excitement among his friends, and greater exertion. Whenever there is a great excitement the republican cause is sure to triumph—for then the people all come out. The friends of Jackson will answer all the Adams calumnies against him, one after another, as John Q. Adams did the calumnies of the Spanish agents, against Gen. Jackson:—they "pass unnoticed, mere invectives against an officer whose services to this nation entitle him to their highest regard, and whose whole career has been signalized by the purest intentions and the most elevated purposes."

[Boston Statesman.

☞Is it true that the Adams party, to show their contempt of "Military Chieftains," are about to erect a Monument to Major Andre, the British spy, and to the Jersey mutineers, who were "shot to death" by the orders of Gen. WASHINGTON.

The degraded spirit, which would ridicule and bring into contempt the monuments of our glorious deliverers, would also demolish and rase them to the ground. Let our police be on the alert.

It will be seen that the Adams party, in their zeal to create a feeling of hostility towards Gen. Jackson, whom they have denounced a "Millitary Chieftain," represent all who stuck to their posts and risked their lives for their country last war, as enemies to their country, as traitors and dangerous men, and represent all those who deserted their posts as patriots and martyrs! Jackson, Coffee and Adair, the three officers, who were most distinguished in the Indian wars, and the defence of New Orleans, are said by these Adams patriots, to have been concerned in the BURR conspiracy; and Harris, Woods, and others who deserted their posts, and were executed for it, are held up to the American people, whose sympathy is invoked for them. Next we shall hear of a dinner given to Gen. Hull for his surrender at Detroit last war! [Baltimore Republican.

A CLINCHER.—We think it will be admitted that "An Observer," which follows below, and which we copy from the last Richmond Enquirer has rather cornered Mr. Clay's messenger to South America, Mr. John H. Pleasants, than otherwise.—[Bal. Rep.

LOOK AT THIS.

In an elaborate essay of the senior of the Whig, in this paper of the 12th inst. written in castigation of the "Quarrist," for his second number, I find the following paragraph: "I applied to Mr. Clay in January 1825, for employment as a messenger, with no wish, as I informed him, or expectation of acquiring either honour or emolument by the journey, but from the single desire of temporary absence. After the lapse of several months, he informed me that the department found it necessary to send despatches of importance to Buenos Ayres and Rio; and that if I would go, I must be in Washington by a certain day. With great difficulty and after the lapse of many weeks, I found a vessel in which I took passage. The succeeding incidents are detailed in the letters above."—I suppose that the veracity of Mr. J. H. Pleasants whatever may be thought of his sagacity or prudence, will hardly be doubted by the Coalition, or any of their subalterns; and yet if the facts in the foregoing paragraph be true, they afford not only proof that there was a bargain between Messrs. Clay and Adams, but also that Mr. Pleasants knew it as early as January, 1825, and confidently anticipated the ultimate result. Let it be remembered that in January, 1825, Mr. Clay was Speaker of the House of Representatives; that the election of President was not made in that body until the 9th of February of that year; that Mr. Adams was installed as President on the 4th of March, and Mr. Clay's nomination as Secretary of State confirmed (I think) on the 7th of that month. How could Mr. Pleasants apply to Mr. Clay for the appointment of messenger in January unless he had assurance that he was to be Secretary of State? and how could he have that assurance unless there had been an understanding or bargain (call it which you will) between Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay? Mr. Pleasants says "after a lapse of several months he informed me that the department," &c. Certainly the application then must have been made before Mr. Clay was actually and legally appointed, as Mr. Pleasants left Richmond, by his own account, on the 19th of April 1825, a little more than a month after (instead of several months after) Mr. Clay became Secretary according to the forms of the Constitution." If Mr. Pleasants affirms truly, wherefore can there be any necessity for further proof of the bargain? Verily the gentleman seems to have been confident indeed of the success of the contract; and to have taken "time by the forelock."

AN OBSERVER.

The Adams men frequently accuse men of inconsistency for abandoning Adams and joining Jackson—and the instances are so common, and rapidly increasing, that they have their hands full of business. There are probably now in New England ner one hundred thousand voters, who, at the last election, believing John Q. Adams to be an honest politician and a good republican, were in his favour, but who now believing him to be neither an honest politician nor a good republican, are against him. Who are the consistent men—those who support republican principles and will not abandon them for the sake of any man, but will abandon any man for the sake of their principles,—or those who are led by the nose and are willing to abandon republican principles and sacrifice the republican party for the sake of a selfish individual who despises republican principles, hates the republican party and would sacrifice any principles and any party to advance his own interest? —Boston Statesman.

In the time of William and Mary, there was in Parliament an enquiry somewhat like that of the committee on Retrenchment in Congress last winter. It is said by the English historians that it produced "a discovery of the most scandalous practices in the mystery of corruption, in occasional bounties, grants, places, pensions, equivalents and additional salaries." If Dr. Smollet had been describing the discoveries made by the committee on Retrenchment, of "the most scandalous practices in the mystery of corruption" by the coalition, he could not have been more near the mark.—Ib.

JACKSON'S PRINCIPLES.—We copy below, a letter written by Gen. Jackson, in 1801. It is his political creed, and such an one as became the supporter of Jefferson, at that trying period. Let every candid man read it, and decide for himself, whether the ability or patriotism of the writer can be questioned:

Knoxville, Sept. 31, 1801.

Dear Sir—Through life I have held it a sacred duty I owe to my country and myself, never to give my suffrage to a candidate for a seat in the Congress of the U. States, unless I was convinced that his political sentiments were congenial with those he represented, and that he would speak and do the will of his constituents: and being now informed that you are a candidate for the honor of representing the citizens of the State of Tennessee in the Representative branch of the Federal Legislature: believing as I do, that any citizen who would obtain the suffrage of the freemen of Tennessee, must be a character, the composition of which is virtue, talents, and the true Whig principles of '76: in short, sir, that he must be a Republican, and in politics, like Cæsar's wife not only chaste but unsuspected.

The first two component parts of this character I know you possess: the latter, as to myself, I have ever thought you did. But, sir, the public mind has been lately led to believe, that your political sentiments are doubtful; and some have held you up as an aristocrat. These reasons have operated with me to call upon you to answer the following interrogatories:

First. Are you and have you always been a true admirer of the Whig principles of '76?

Have you always been an admirer of State authorities?

Are you now, and have you always been, an admirer of the Constitution of the U. States: friendly to its administration agreeably to the true literal meaning of the instrument, and banishing the dangerous doctrine of implication?

Have you always been, and are you now opposed to standing armies in time of peace?

And are you now, and have you always been opposed to foreign political connexions?

Are you now, and have you always been opposed to the extension of the Executive patronage?

Have you always been, and are you now, an advocate for freedom of religion, and freedom of the press?

Are you now and have you always been, friendly to economy in the public disbursements, and an enemy to the system of loans?

And lastly, are you a real Republican in principle, and will you be a Republican in practice?

The above questions are put to you by a sincere friend in private life, and one who is very much disposed to extend to you his little political support. He expects, however, that these questions will be answered with your usual candor on other subjects. This letter is not confidential—nor will your answer be viewed as such—it is as well for the gratification of inquiring friends as myself.

Accept, sir, my respects, and believe me to be your most obedient servant,

ANDREW JACKSON.

Doct. William Dickson.

In the month of April 1807 preceding the embargo, Mr. Adams issued the following bulletin:—

At a large and respectable meeting of federalists, assembled at Concert Hall, on Wednesday evening, April 1, 1807—the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved unanimously, that we cordially agree, and pledge ourselves each to the other, that we will use every fair and honourable exertion in our power to effect the re-election of his excellency CALEB STRONG,* as governor, and his honor Edward H. Robbins, as lieut. governor; and that we will recommend to our fellow citizens who are to assemble on the 5th inst. at Faneuil Hall, the honorable Christopher Gore, HARRISON GRAY OTIS,† John Philips, William Spooner, and Peter Chardon Brooks, as senators for this county;—that so we may not only afford the best testimony of our approbation for their exertions for the protection of our rights, but to do all in our power to leave our children as free as our fathers left us.

By order of the meeting,

JOHN Q. ADAMS, Moderator."

Have we not here a public avowal of Mr. Adams' politics, from his own mouth?—under his own signature?—a public avowal of his predilection for federalism, and the federal party? And yet, in December 1807, as we are told, he was a pure, purified, new-born, uncontaminated, honest and thorough going democrat! But who can believe the assertion? What act as he done since to prove it? Did he not, in 1814, a few years afterwards, and while eating his bread from the treasury of the nation, and while under pay at the rate of nine thousand dollars per annum, ridicule, villify, and disgracefully misrepresent our government, in his letters to his correspondents? What did he say in his letter to Leavitt Harris, dated Ghent, November 16, 1814, respecting the people of this country, and the character of their government? Read him:

☞"Divided among ourselves more in passion than in interest, with half the nation sold by their prejudices and their IGNORANCE to our enemy; with a FEEBLE and PENURIOUS government, with five frigates for a navy and scarcely five efficient regiments for an army, how can it be expected that we should resist the mass of force which that GIGANTIC power has collected to crush us at a blow."

Such was his suicidal language, and in an enemy's country too!

With a feeble and penurious government! he!—From whom has HE received almost four hundred thousand dollars for his individual services? And for what services has that sum been paid him? A feeble and penurious government! O shame, where is thy blush.—And must we still clasp that man to our bosoms, to drain yet more the vitals and treasury of our feeble and penurious government? But I have more to add respecting his vote for Mr. Jefferson's embargo. The history of the times will explain his motives, if carefully examined, so that he who runs may also read with ease. LEONIDAS.

* This is the same Caleb Strong who, during the late war, refused the constitutional call of the government of the United States for the militia, and who, in his celebrated proclamation, pronounced England to be the "BULWARK OF THE RELIGION WE PROFESS."

† This is the same Harrison G. Otis who went on a certain journey to Hartford, in December, 1814.

COMMUNICATION.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

To LITTLETON DENNIS TEACKLE.

Sir, You still evade the subject of my enquiries, and keep the public in suspense, by your unconquerable silence.

If you are called on to explain the causes and motives of your glaring inconsistency, you still harp to the stale, worn out tune of noticing Quercus "in a legal course," and telling the people, "you 'll let him know, whether it is a libel or not." The mischief you will! But when do you mean to do it? There's the rub. If you could sue Quercus and have the matter over before the election, the people would have no objection to your legal course. But do you expect the people of Somerset to invest you with legislative authority again, and wait your slow motions to satisfy their suspicions, when appearances are so much against you? Why do you not, with the boldness of Innocence, and with the consciousness of correct and honest intentions, willingly and readily enter the lists of a just political enquiry, admire the scrupulous and cautious guardianship, which we exercise over our inherent rights, and the virgin purity of our representative government, and prove, to the conviction of our minds, that, though appearances are so much against you, yet that appearances are sometimes deceitful, and that your conduct, like Adams said of Jackson's, has been governed by "motives which are founded in the purest patriotism?" Would not this be the legal course of an Honest Representative? one, who regarded the purity of his government, more than his own aggrandizement? Indeed, sir, to be plain with you, the evasions you practise; the tremulous fear you manifest, when this unpleasant subject is touched upon: the indecorous passion you flew into, upon finding it before the public; the studied ambiguity and equivocality of your card "To the Public;" and the still more extraordinary silence you preserve about your deceiving the people, with respect to the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction; and your silence about the Rail R. appropriation on all so many circumstantial, or rather prima facie evidences against you. Do you mean to be driven into retirement and insignificance, by the idignant frown of the public, without making an effort to vindicate yourself? Or are you affraid of being caught in the predicament of Henry Clay, who, in each successive endeavour to prove his innocence, has developed the evidences of his guilt and infamy? 'Tis all nonsense for you to talk about 'libels' and 'legal courses.' You and every body else well know that there is nothing libellous, in the communication, you referred to. You think to put the people off till after the election, with the sound of 'libel' and 'legal courses,' when, if by any unforseen and unexpected event, you should happen to have been elected, Quercus and his essay may both go to perdition, for what you care. You would then laugh, in your sleeve, at any man, who would ask you if you meant to prosecute Quercus. If you were to bring suit, now, no body would believe you meant to prosecute it. The people would look upon it as a mere electioneering trick, intended for political effect, to evade the important point, from the investigation of which you seem to have such a mortal aversion. In such a gull trap as this, the people cannot be caught. Evasions and ill-tempered threats will not be considered, by the enlightened citizens of Somerset, as satisfactory answers to enquiries into your public conduct.

You have, no doubt, heard or read the story of a fellow who acknowledged to his lawyer, that he had stolen a sheep, but wanted to know how he should answer the court's interrogations on the subject. "When the court ask you a question, (said the limb of the law,) do you cry bah! And as often as they put the question to you, so often do you cry bah!" To this advice, he of the sheepskins strictly adhered, and a question, having arisen among the judges, whether the prisoner was more a knave or fool, was determined by a majority of the judges thinking him a fool. Your answers to the questions, propounded to you, have been equally as rational and as satisfactory to the people, as those of the sheep stealer were to his judges; but whether the people, your judges in this case, will come to a determination, similar to that of the judges, in the above, cannot, at present, be positively ascertained: perhaps not. You have acted in perfect accordance with the old adage, 'least said, soonest mended.' But to place the matter in bolder relief contemplate the following:

Quercus.—How came you, Mr. Teackle, to lead the people into the belief, that you were discharging the functions of Superintendent of Public Instruction, without compensation, and then to present such an extravagant account to the committee on claims, for your "services and expenses?"

Teackle.—I'll notice you in a legal course.

Quercus.—"Appearances justify suspicion, and when the public welfare is at stake, suspicion is just ground of enquiry." Appearances are against you. You opposed the making of any subscription, on the part of the state, for the Rail Road, previous to your going to the Legislature, but after you got there, you, L. D. T., with 4 delegates from CECIL and 3 from KENT, were the only members, out of 32 from the Eastern Shore, who voted for the measure, and you appear to be unable to assign any reason for your inconsistency. Six of the eight Eastern Shore members, who voted for the R. R. appropriation, voted for the resolution allowing you $500, as a constructive salary. The other two E. Shore members, who voted for the R. R. appropriation, were Mr Harlan, of Cecil, and yourself, neither of whose names appears on the ayes and nays, for and against, your constructive salary. Mr Stephens of Kent, the chairman of the committee on claims, that made a favourable report on your claim, (instead of a part of your claim,) was a strenuous advocate for the R. R. subscription. Five of the committee on claims, were for the R. R. appropriation. Mr. Lloyd of the committee on claims was opposed to the subscription for the R. R. and to your constructive salary. I believe Mr. Banning was also—these things look suspicious, and I therefore make this enquiry—

Had you any understanding with any member or members of the committee on claims of the Legislature, that if you voted for the R. R. appropriation, they would vote for your constructive salary; or, did you vote for the R. R. subscription under the expectation, that that would induce the committee of claims to report in favour of your constructive salary?

Teackle.—I'll notice you in a legal course.

Quercus.—If then, Expectation of personal emolument, was not the motive of your vote, that induced you, who had so inveterately opposed any subscription, on the part of the state, for the Rail Road, you alone, of all the representatives of Queen Anne's, Caroline, Talbot, Dorchester, Somerset and Worcester, to vote for a measure, which had so much excited your opposition?

Teackle.—I'll notice you in a legal course.

Pretty answers, indeed, for the representative of a free people, and the Superintendent of Public Instruction, to give. You, your representative, and when we call on you for an account of your conduct, you treat us with contempt. You, the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and when the "PUBLIC" call on you for 'Instruction,' you refuse to give. You pretend to be the people's friend, and when one of the people makes an enquiry into your public conduct, you tell him, "begone I'll present you for a libel"! High times in the reign of John the second. Another Gag law, I suppose you would muzzle the press then, put a stop to public enquiry; have every man imprisoned or hung who dared to enquire into the conduct of his representative. When the liberty of the press is invaded, when public enquiry is suppressed, when the representative ceases to be responsible to his constituents, our independence will have become extinct, the Eagle of our FREEDOM will have flown to some other clime, and we will have been prepared to hug the chains of despotism to our degraded bosoms. I hope there may be many centuries to come before the people of this Union, will contemplate, without indignation, an attempt to invade the Liberty of the Press. But were I sure that the people of this country were prepared for a surrender of their dearest rights, and had I an opportunity of addressing to them but one sentence, through the medium of the press—it should be: "Put down Corruption; encourage a proper spirit of public enquiry; cherish and maintain, with the last vital drop that in [illegible] its the heart, the Liberty of the Press, for it is the surest and safest guarantee of your unalienable rights, and the sacred Palladium of your Freedom and Independence." To this doctrine, every Republican will subscribe, as indispensable articles of his political creed. I must say, sir, with regret, that the manner, in which you have acted in this affair, has been at variance from the first principles of Republican government.

As this may be my last epistle to you, I think it my duty ere I close it, to enquire into another subject, in which you and the public are concerned. What has become of your scheme for enlisting the MORAL POWER of the community against the ruinous practice of treating? Have you found it unpopular and abandoned it? Or have you changed your views about that, like you did about the R. R. appropriation and now practice, what you during last fall, preached against? Put it to your conscience; are you not the most inconsistent politician, you ever heard or read of? What is the cause, why every thing fails, withers and falls into decay, which your unfortunate hand approaches? Say not again, I bear you malice. I assure you, sir, in my candid estimation, you are much more an object of pity, than hate—But from your sentiment towards the citizens of this county perhaps they ought to feel towards you a mixture of both. With a proper respect for the offices you hold under the Constitution of Gov. Kent, I am, &c.

QUERCUS.

August 4th, 1828.

☞Mr. JAMES A. SLOAN, of Cambridge, is authorized to act as our agent at that place.

TO LET—At Public Vendue.

ON Wednesday the 27th instant I shall offer TO LET to the highest and best bidder, for the ensuing year, the FARM late the property of Samuel Heath, dec'd. and now occupied by [illegible]d Barkley.

ALSO, on the same day, will be offered to let for the ensuing year the farm now occupied by John Powel. The above farms are situated between 2 and 3 miles distant from Princess Anne. Terms will be made known on the above mentioned day.

I also offer for RENT a HOUSE and LOT in Princess-Anne, formerly the property of Mrs. Mary Milleway, for which application can be made to me at any time.

JOSEPH BARKLEY.

August 12. tam

SALE FOR CASH.

By virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of James Polk, esq. against capt. Lee P. Harcum, I shall expose to public sale on Tuesday the 2nd day of September next, at the Court-House door in Princess-Anne, between the hours of one and two o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit: a part of a tract of land called "[illegible] Hall," containing 509 acres more or less; one negro man Stephen, one negro woman Kitty, one do. Leah, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, of the said Harcum, to satisfy the above writ with all the [illegible]

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

August 12, 1828. nw

SHERIFF's SALE.

By virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court, & to me directed at the suit of John W. Jones, for use of Henry Adams against Josiah [illegible]es, I have seized and taken the following property in execution, to wit; one schooner called the Franklin of 40 tons burthen, [illegible] head of horses, which I shall proceed to sell at the Court-house door, on Tuesday the [illegible] day of September, between the hours of 1 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Sff.

August 12. wp

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATIS.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 12, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory." Jefferson.

"Whose services to this nation, entitle him to its HIGHEST REWARDS."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

We are authorized to announce

Thomas Bayly,
John C. Wilson, jr.,
Anthony B. Bennett, and
John J. Davis, Esq'rs.

as Candidates to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

Extract of a letter to the Editor.

Mr. Zieber,

I herewith send you a small sign which took place at the 'Popler,' in this county.

The company commanded by Capt. L. Jones paraded on Saturday the 9th instant, when it was proposed to take a vote on the presidential question, which stood thus:

For Jackson	53
For Adams	11

[COMMUNICATED.]

ALL GONE!!!

By late arrivals, we understand that the President passed through Baltimore, a few days ago, on his way to Quincy, Mass. We presume he did not stop to make another mystified Ebony and Topaz toast,* as he was anxious to get on to Quincy, to see how the workmen come on with the house, he is preparing for his family, after the 4th of March next. So we go—Clay, on an electioneering tour, in Kentucky, and Adams, on his way to Massachusetts whilst the business of the cabinet is neglected, and the Brazilians are insulting our flag and murdering our citizens unnoticed and with impunity. Another reign of terrour. Wonder what Uncle Sam will say to this? PETER.

* The famous Ebony and Topaz speech of John Q. Adams is familiar, we presume, to the most of our readers. Anticipating the struggles which would be made against his re-election, by the republicans of our country, HE determined to electioneer for HIMSELF. But, unfo[illegible]y for the gentle[illegible] peculiar gift of nature, [illegible]cessary to constitute 'street oratory' or 'cross road eloquence' in so eminent a degree as 'princely Hal.' His celebrated speech had not its desired effect, for shortly after his arrival in Baltimore this last time, instead of finding converts, the loud acclamations and repeated huzzas of SIX THOUSAND JACKSON MEN (who assembled on the 5th inst. in Washington Square,) broke upon his ears in doleful strains. We should like to know, but really we should not like to possess the feel[illegible]s of John the 2nd, at the time when Mr M'Mahon [illegible] address on the above occasion.

We extract the following from a letter from a respectable gentleman in Baltimore to [illegible] in this place:

"Baltimore, August [illegible]

"We have just commenced the electioneering campaign here—I have no fears for the result. The People have been deceived, and they feel it, and are now girding on their shields to put down corruption and its supporters, Adams, Clay & Co. who, having by intrigue got the reins of government into their hands, now wish to sustain themselves by bribery, corruption, war, famine, and pestilence, or any other scourge, so that they may be able to deceive the People and devour the hard earnings of our honest yeomanry."

NINTH DISTRICT.

We have just received a letter from Dorchester, under date of August 9th, which assures us that "there will be majorities in New Market, Vienna, and Cambridge districts for the Jackson elector." Hence we believe that that part of Dorchester which belongs to this electoral district will not go against us. In Worcester the people are awake to their interests; they will give to the man who, (to use the words of Jefferson) "has filled the measure of his country's glory," a majority of at least 300, and very probably 400 As for this county, we feel satisfied that the signs are in our favour. Capt. Evans' company which met on the 17th May gave 48 for Jackson, 8 for Adams—Capt. Bennett's on the 14th June gave Jackson 87 and Adams 6—and Capt. Jones' on the 9th inst. gave Jackson 53 and Adams 11. These prove that we shall not be left far in the rear, if we be overpowered at all. Thus, upon the whole, we feel well persuaded, that when we shall have met the enemy they will be ours.

Scandalous—Scandalous in the extreme!

Is this a mark of that Order and Decency so sacred to the Coalition?

☞Mr. ALEXANDER DONOHO, an Adams candidate of this county for a seat in the next Legislature, concluded an electioneering speech, on last Saturday, by saying that Mrs. JACKSON was a DAMNED WHORE! What are we to think of this Pink of moral ORDER and DECENCY, of this mean and worthless creature, this insignificant and sordid wretch. But again we would ask, what should we expect from such a man—a man who has in this one instance displayed principles which the vilest African would scorn to possess. The name of Mrs. Jackson is too sacred to be uttered by his profane & polluted lips—And we feel assured from this one circumstance, that a majority of his party will despise him—will treat him as an impudent liar, a habitual swearer, and a degraded man. It is unnecessary to comment longer on this. We should not have deigned to mention this Mr. Donoho, if he had thrown his blackguard abuse upon one of his own sex; but as he has made an innocent female, the victim of his scandal, we conceive it our duty to represent him in his true colours. We only now request the attention of the Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, and all moral persons, to this observation of Mr. D. and if they can consistently vote for him, it is strange—very strange to us. Who will say to the contrary?

The Rev. Dr. ELY, of Philadelphia, says: "Mrs Jackson is an eminently pious woman, and has sustained this character for about a quarter of a century. On the subject of baptism, I believe she is a Baptist, and has been immersed. I have heard no evil said of her, by those who know her, unless it be this, that she prefers a prayer meeting to a palace; and this will not sink her in the estimation of any who do not forget their religion in their politics."

LOUISIANA.—The Coalition are in as much ecstacy at gaining a few hundred votes in Lousiana, as a starving man would be at the sight of a morsel of bread—but, like the morsel to the almost famished victim, it will only serve to augment their misery by prolonging the existence of agonizing hope. U. S. Tel.

When it is recollected that the Jackson candidate for governor of Louisiana, Mr Livingston, has not been in the state for four years, it cannot be considered such a "glorious victory." Besides, this state, as well as Kentucky, we never claimed, nor took into our calculations. Though we now think they probably will go for Jackson, particularly the latter. But let the Coalition LOOK TO THE OTHER END OF THE UNION. Jackson will receive a part of MAINE—three votes at least. The Cumberland convention, in that state, have just nominated the Hon. James C. Churchill recently a senator from that county as the Jackson elector. There is no doubt entertained of his election.

In Somerset and Penobscot, they are confident of succeeding with the republican elector.

In Oxford district it is also expected that the republican elector will carry.

The Boston Statesman says at the late celebration of the fourth of July in the town of Dexter, in Maine, there were twelve hundred citizens present. A vote being taken on the Presidential question, there were for J. Q. Adams THREE, for A. Jackson ALL THE REST.

DOCTOR ARMSTRONG.

This redoubtable witness for the Coalition has written an account of an attempt to assassinate him!!

We some days past received a letter from a gentleman who was present, who said that Armstrong had written for publication a libel on the father of Mr. Gilchrist—that the son called to know if what he had heard was true—that Armstrong admitted that he had written, the libel, but that he had ascertained that he could not prove what he had written, and did not intend to publish it. Mr Gilchrist then asked him to sign a statement which he had prepared, upon which the valiant Doctor broke ground and ran for his own house; he was pursued by Gilchrist, who chastised him, until the Doctor's wife, who is said to be the better man of the two, came to his relief.—Our informant adds that the affair had no connexion whatever with politics.

So much for the whining about assassination. We caution our brother Editors to be on their guard. The Coalition are becoming desperate, and this clamor about assassination is nothing less than preparatory to the scenes which they intended to act. ib.

☞We are far from countenancing acts of violence on either side. Nor are we willing to admit that the whole party should be censured for the imprudence of an individual.—But this attack on Armstrong is called 'Jacksonism in its true colours,' altho' he himself does not say that more than one of the four, (the number he gives) was favourable to Gen. Jackson; nor has he told us what was their reason for assailing him. In fact, he himself says he did not ascertain it!! We wonder whether the Adams party are ready to admit that Pinkney's attempt to assassinate Simpson, Clay's effort to shoot Randolph for words spoken in debate in Congress, &c. should be taken as true specimens of Adamsism. This would be more to the point; however, we have only room to say—desperate, indeed, must be the cause which requires support like the shallow device of Dr Armstrong, the bitter enemy and calumniator of Andrew Jackson.

More Murder.—The Adams papers have got up another charge of murder against the Jackson party. We are now accused of being murderers of the English language—that there is scarcely a Jackson man that can spell—thousands of them can't read. As a specimen, an Adams paper in the west says, that the Jackson men spell toast thus—tost.—Good! The Adams party will be tossed into the otium cum dignitate before the 1st of May 1829.—Nash.

Irishmen—Look at this.—The following insolent toast was drunk by a party of gentlemen in Vermont, who assembled to celebrate the 4th of July. We challenge party rancor to produce any thing more infamous Let us hear no more of the Adams party boasting of their decency.

By Capt. Prescot.—The Jackson party—Composed of disappointed desperadoes of America and filthy Irishmen.

"A Feeble and Penurious Government."

The immense sums of money which Mr. Adams has received out of the public purse, for very inadequate services (nay, for even positive injury to his country) are not fully known to the great body of the people. We have endeavoured, after some research, to collect the whole details together, and now present them at length to the world

Mr. Adams, at 27 years of age, was first appointed Minister resident to the Netherlands, and remained there from 1794 to 1797—3 years at 4,500 dollars $13,500

Outfit, 4,500

For this sum, eighteen thousand dollars, he did not do the country the slightest service It was a perfect sinecure. Proceed:—

He received an appointment to Portugal, in 1797, as Minister Plenipotentiary

Outfit, $9000

To Portugal he never went. While on his way from the Hague to Lisbon, he was countermanded to Berlin, by his father, then President.

Salary on the Berlin Embassy, from 1797 to January 1801,—3 years at $9000 $27,000

Salary on the same embassy from 1st Jan. 1801 to 26 April 1801 2,860

Debt, 2,250

Here is a sum over forty thousand dollars for four years. What did he do for this amount? He wrote his letters from Silesia, ridiculed the poor Roman Catholics of Bohemia, admired the structure of kingly governments, &c. &c.

Mr. Adams never having received any appointment from Thomas Jefferson, took his seat in the Senate of the U. S. on the 21st October, 1803, and resigned it in 1808—5 years at about $1,000 a year $5000

What did he do for this? He voted against the Louisiana Territory—against the amendment of the constitution—against a resolution of respect to the memory of Samuel Adams—against a bill for clearing the Ohio river—against repealing the duty on salt &c. &c.—Well, what next?

Salary paid him on the Russian Embassy from 5th Aug. 1809 to Feb. 1815, $50,101

Contingencies 5,153

Outfit, 9,000

Well! what did our diplomatist do for this sum of sixty four thousand dollars? Not a single thing of any benefit to the country. It was the first money paid him after his treachery to the federalists in the year 1807—8. It is well known, however, that he occupied much of his time in speculating in Russian stocks, and studying Russian diplomacy. As to the $5000 dollars of contingencies had any right to it by law? What is the next sop?

Salary for the Ghent Mission, from 20th April 1813 to 27th Feb. 1815, $20,299

Outfit, 9,000

Contingencies, 6,215

A sum over thirty five thousand dollars for endeavouring to negotiate away the navigation of the Mississippi to the British. In these items, too, are included the famous illegal outfit, and the equally famous "constructive journey from Ghent to Petersburg, which he never travelled, for both of which he charged about $6,000. Mr. Adams also charges double salaries, as will appear from the termination of the Russian and Ghent embassies, both ending, by his own showing, on the 27th February, 1815. From April 1813 to Feb 1815, Mr. Adams considered himself a 'constructive ambassador' at Russia, while he was, during a part of that period, negotiating the treaty of peace at Ghent. This was doing pretty well—it is working single and getting paid double. But this is not all the modesty and penuriousness of our great diplomatist. While he was receiving these double salaries and double outfits, he was accusing his country of weakness, ignorance, feebleness, and penury, in his private correspondence to Levitt Harris; and at the very same time, that is to say, November and December, 1814, he was dining and drinking with Lord Gambier and the British in the city of Ghent, and toasting "His Majesty the King of Great Britain," and "His Royal Highness, the Prince of Orange." Again:

Salary to Great Britain, from 28th Feb. 1815 to 10th June, 1817, $20,546

Outfit, 9,000

Debt, for coming home, 2,250

Contingencies, 5,605

Here is a sum over thirty four thousand dollars for which Mr. Adams did very little. His most prominent act was to receive Charles King's Dartmoor Report, in which the murder of several innocent American prisoners by the British was justified, by that hatred of "blood and carnage." But again.

Salary paid Mr. A. as Secretary of state, from 10th June, 1817, to 6th March 1825, $59,598

For this immense sum Mr. Adams set on foot that diplomacy which lost us the British Colonial trade. He also gave Texas to the Spaniards, when the Spanish Minister had instructions from his court to cede it to this country. He also endeavoured to blow the Missouri question into a flame, and array one section of the country against the other. He also wrote a book upon the Fisheries and scolded a certain War, Pestilence and Famine gentleman pretty ingeniously. What next?

Amount paid Mr. Adams in two years for furnishing his house. $20,666

About $14000 of this sum was expended the first year, against which the billiard table was charged. Mr Adams asked for $25,000 more, but Congress refused the request. He got however $6000, to furnish the east room, which room to this day is without any furniture save a few old chairs. What he has done with the money, none can tell but himself. It is known, however, that a few months ago he was fitting up his house at Quincy, Mass. as preparatory to the 4th of March, 1829. If he did not furnish the "east room," he has been furnishing "a room in the east." Now for the climax:

Salary for filling the Presidential chair, from March 4, 1825, to March 4, 1829, at $25,000 per annum, $100,000

For this immense sum of one hundred thousand dollars what has Mr. Adams performed? Has he not amply requitted the country with his usual benefits? The British colonial trade is completely lost, the French colonial trade is also lost. Brazils has insulted our flag and plundered our citizens: the national character has been tarnished, both at home and abroad; the cabinet has been degraded to an electioneering committee, or caucus: the President has insulted a sovereign state with threats and bravadoes, he has instituted ruinous, useless and expensive embassies to reward his favourites, he has wasted several millions of the public money, in buying up the press and the people's representatives, his measures have been weak, illiberal and dishonourable; he has filled the whole nation with tumults, disorder and excitement, &c.

Now, putting all these items together, we have the enormous sum of $377,181 paid to J. Q. Adams since he entered the public service. If there are any errors in the above statement, we call upon the coalition gentlemen to show them, and we shall correct them with the utmost cheerfulness. If the "Pink" has not yet forgot his Coker's arithmetic, his practical knowledge of accounts, his experience in making out cotton, tobacco, tea and sugar bills, we shall stand corrected by him as readily as by any other. He has shown a readiness to investigate the canal celebration; let him begin with these. In the mean time, we ask the HONEST MECHANIC, the HARD WORKING FARMAR, the POOR MAN who earns his bread with the sweat of his brow, to say, if this John Q. Adams, who will have received by March next, nearly four hundred thousand dollars of the public money, has not had quite enough for all the public services he has ever performed for his country?—N Q Enq.

Coulbourn's Cr'k. Camp Meeting.

RULES.

1. This meeting will commence on Thursday the 21st inst. and will end on the following Tuesday.
2. All persons intending to erect tents must come prepared, as no timber of any description will be allowed by the managers to be cut on Mr. Coulbourn's land.
3. Nothing of any kind will be allowed to be sold within the limits prescribed by law
4. There will be a tent kept under the direction of the managers for the accommodation of persons from a distance; likewise provision will be made for horses.

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Sifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; pound, half and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking, patent and common Taps, lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays, clothes and market Baskets, Nests Tubs and Sugar Boxes, Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes; Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners' Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 104 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets,

Baltimore, August 4th.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset County Court and to me directed, at the suit of William T. G. Polk, administrator of Samuel Polk, against George Porter, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit, part of a tract of land called White Chapel, containing 261 acres, more or less, part of a tract of land called Mount Sham, containing 4 acres, more or less; also one negro boy Hom, 1 negro woman Esther, 2 yoke of oxen, 5 head of horses, 5 cows, and 1 still, taken as the property of said Porter, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 2nd of September next, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock, P. M. at the court-house door in Princess-Anne, to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 12, 1828.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed: two at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'rs. of Thomas Byrd against Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and 1 other at the suit Hannah Hearn, Ex'x of Wm Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right, interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by L. D. Coliet, also one other occupied by William S. Disharoon; also a house at Joseph Bayly, Esquire's Mill, it being the office of the said Elijah, also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson of Levi Cathel of a certain [illegible]; also a clock & case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Waller Esq in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 6th of September next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above said writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 12. m

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas, one at the suit of Zadock Long use of William Roach, the other at the suit of Jeremiah Y. Dashiell, and of virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias at the suit of Jeremiah Y. Dashiell use of George W. Dashiell, 1 at the suit of George Jones survivor of George and Robert Jones, all issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed against Levin W. Ballard, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit; all the right and title of the said Ballard to part of a tract of land called Dashiell's Lot, containing 132 acres, more or less; part of Sandy Ridge and Fitzwaters, containing 156 acres more or less; one tract of land called Moore & Cassett, which the said Levin W. Ballard purchased of his father Levin Ballard, containing 134 acres, more or less; also 300 bushels of wheat, more or less; 4 yoke of oxen, and 2 colts which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 2d of September next, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. at the court house door, in Princess Anne, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 12.

COMMUNICATIONS, &c.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Mr. Editor,

I have lately read in your paper an article under the signature of "H." relating to the impropriety of connecting Iris with Truth. That article, in my humble opinion, was well written, and very explanative of its subject. But, Mr. Editor, the term Iris requires a more thorough exposition—an exposition that the most inordinate reader can comprehend.—The gentleman who signs his name "H." will confer a favour on "Guacanahari" by excusing this remark. It may imply a defect in his communication. If so, I will be free in saying, that it has not been my intention to advance one single sentence that would bear the construction. They who assimilate the daughter of Thaumas with truth, appeal to the words of the Deity in relation to the rainbow. This, I must confess, is well calculated to impose on persons ignorant of classical literature; but is there a boy who has perused Virgil, that cannot easily pry into the nature of the subject in question? I cannot think there is one so dull. What is truth? It is the grand object, the brilliant beacon by which honest and correct men steer their course through life. Truth and its attributes are the bases upon which is founded the whole duty of man toward his Creator; hence any thing foreign in its nature to them is alien to those principles which mankind should cherish, and which it becomes our duty to venerate. If truth be such, why did Iris, the messenger of Saturnian Juno, whom Virgil calls "Virgo," assume the figure of Beroe, the aged wife of Thracian Doryclus? Let the prayer of Pious Æneas to almighty Jove, answer. Let the ships saved from the fiery pest, answer. Iris was the messenger of discord, as Mercury was the messenger of peace. We find the youthful goddess assuming the furrowed cheeks, the hoary locks of age to effect the mischievous object of her mission. Hence she could not be connected with Truth. It never was her object. They who support the contrary position may say that Iris is a term merely used to convey an idea of the rainbow. I will admit that it is a figurative expression; but, Mr. Editor, a scholar—a scholar should be consistent. I would ask the question, why was the rainbow called Iris by the Heathens? Does it not show that their ideas of the arcus cœlestis were different from those of the people of God? Certainly, as Iris was the messenger of discord. If so, why do any persons use the Heathen name of rainbow, if they do not wish to adopt their ideas of it?

Let me demonstrate this by an example. There are many streams the waters of which commingle in one vast ocean, but the sources of which are diametrically opposite. Suppose, Mr. Editor, that you were to explore the head of one, and I of another: when our objects were accomplished, would we not find ourselves in countries different toto cœlo from each other. Your knowledge of geography will constrain you to say, Yes. Let me now apply this example. If we call the rainbow Iris our tho'ts would be immediately extended to the various fictions of Heathen Mythology. If we wish to call it by the Hebrew term (excuse my ignorance) or the English term used in the translation of the Bible, our thoughts would be immediately extended to the sacred pledge of the Deity. From what has been said above, I shall draw these inferences: If Mr. Teackle wished to call his paper the Somerset Iris and Messenger of Deceit, he could justify himself by a reference to her story. If he wished to call it the the Somerset Rainbow and Messenger of Truth, he could justify himself by a reference to the words of God, and no Christian would dare dispute its correctness and consistency. But as he calls his sewer (as you term it) the Somerset Iris and Messenger of Truth, I must pronounce the title inconsistent; and further, I must add, that the gentleman has displayed an ignorance totally unbecoming a man of his reputed literary acquirements.

Yours respectfully,

GUACANAHARI.

Princess-Anne, July 29th.

[Selected.]

Letter of J. Q. Adams to William Sullivan, Esq. chairman of the Bunker Hill Monument association, in June 1825.

Sir—In presenting you my acknowledgements for the obliging terms with which you had the goodness to enclose me the invitation of the Bunker Hill Monument Association, to attend the approaching celebration, I have to ask of you the additional obligation, that you would assure the Association of my regret, that my necessary distance from the scene deprives me of the gratification which I should have enjoyed by taking part in this solemn commemoration.

"I am with respect,

"Sir, your very obedient servant,

"JOHN QUINCY ADAMS."

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

In Imitation of John Q. Adams' Style.

Mr. Teackle,

From your situation in our representation for legislation, I have an inclination to make an indagation into the justification of your application for a compensation for the compilation and publication of such information and plans of education, as your deep cogitation, and your fruitful imagination deemed best, to arrest the majoration of hallucination in education.

It is a great mortification to the friends of the administration, that you have made no vindication of your vote on the Rail Road appropriation: nor attempted a replication to that important interrogation, concerning a bargain and combination, that gave you a constructive donation, for the gubernation of public education. From the circumlocution of your communication, from the occultation of the proper information, and from the angry ebullition of your heated imagination, upon Quercus' interrogation, it appears, to a demonstration, that you consider the interrogation too dangerous for replication.

Therefore, from my information, I have no hesitation in making a pronunciation of my prejudication, that your expectation to be in our next delegation, will meet with a complete prostration, so you may make no calculation of ever having again the gratification to fill a station, in our state legislation.

With much obligation, yours,

DAVID EXPLORATION.

L. D. Teackle, esq.

July 30th, 1828.

MARRIED, at Vienna, on last Thursday, by the Rev. Mr. Covell, Dr. J. King, of Somerset, to Mrs. Ann Dennis, of Dorchester.

"May their days,
Like a long stormless summer glide away
And peace and trust be with them! May they be
The after patrons of felicity;
That Lovers, when they wed, may only wish
To be as blest as they are."

Married, in England, Mr. Thomas Ginn, aged 71, to Miss Amelia Spruce, aged 18!—This is what we would call a marriage extraordinary, and if we may exercise a little wit, we should say:

Hymen, one day, got drunk on Ginn,
The gods sometimes miscarry;
Nor did he think it a great sin,
That Ginn with Spruce should marry.

When Ginn is old, the topers say,
'Tis fitted the best for use;
But Ginn was curious in his way,
And tasted new made Spruce.

In Plymouth, Mass. on the 6th ult. Capt. John Battles, jr. of the Eagle packet, to Miss Clarissa Spear.

When War's hoarse din is heard afar,
On Eagle's pinions, mounts the tar,
And when the Battle's sound draws near,
He firmly grasps his fav'rite Spear.

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's obt. servant.

WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price; which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.

Cambridge, June 3. 1828.

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER,

Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne, Md.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks, PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms,

At the Office of the Village Herald.

FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber is desirous of disposing of his real estate, being and lying in Worcester county, Md. and situated on Dividing Creek. The landed estate consists of 2000, or more acres. The improvements are a dwelling house and outbuildings with a good SAW and GRIST MILL, both in excellent order, also a young orchard. About 100 acres of the land is in a good state of cultivation.

There is, on one part of the above property, an abundance of Iron Ore, which would warrant the erection of a Forge, and prove an object of value to a purchaser acquainted with, and calculated for, such an undertaking.

The terms of sale will be—one third down, and 3 years for the payment of the balance. For further particulars apply to

JOHN MORRIS.

April 22 kd

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street.

BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. mw

PROPOSALS

For publishing in Hagerstown, Md. a Weekly Newspaper, under the title of

The Hagerstown Mail.

The Mail will convey "news from all nations"—particularly those most interesting to our own country, and will be conducted so as to give early and correct information of public affairs generally; of political occurrences in the different states; of the rise and fall of American produce in our principal cities, and the prices in foreign markets.

The political principles of this paper will be as purely Republican as those contained in the Declaration of Independence, and the Rights of the People shall be at all times zealously, firmly and fearlessly supported, whoever may be in power. The Establishment is intended to be a permanent one, and as such every endeavor will be used to render it a first rate country paper deserving public patronage.

With regard to the Presidential question which now agitates the whole Union, the Mail will decidedly and openly advocate the election of ANDREW JACKSON. And when it is considered that there is only one press in Baltimore, and only one between Baltimore and Cumberland that espouses his cause, it will readily be allowed that in so large an extent of country there is room for at least another—more particularly as all the other presses in this rich, and populous country, where he has so many disinterested friends, are against him; the times too emphatically demand the establishment of such a press, for at no period of our political history have such unfair and unjustifiable means been resorted to, in order to destroy the character of a public man, as have been within the last year to injure the well-earned fame of the Hero of New Orleans, and merely because he is a candidate before the people for a high and important office—although he was brought out by the people themselves; but the Mail will never leave him until he arrives at Washington, and receives from the hands of the people, the honors justly due to one whose whole life in peace and in war has been devoted to his Country's Liberty, Welfare and Happiness.

Terms of Subscription.

For a single paper Three Dollars a year. But this may be discharged by Two Dollars paid in advance, or Two Dollars and Fifty cents in Six Months—Any person obtaining Ten subscribers and becoming responsible for the money shall have a paper gratis.

Hagers-town, May 13—July 1

EMIGRATION TO LIBERIA.

NOTICE.

THE Managers of the American Colonization Society give notice, that they are ready to receive applications for the conveyance of free people of color to the colony of Liberia.

In all cases, the age, sex, and professions of the applicants must be mentioned.

Applicants from the State of Maryland must be prepared to offer the affidavit of some free white person, to their having actually resided within the State of Maryland for 'twelve months' previous to the period of emigration.

Applications may be made in Baltimore, to Hon. Judge Brice, Charles Howard Esq. of John E., John H. B. Latrobe Esq., or Charles C. Harper Esq., Agents of the Society.

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks,

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
CA. SA.'s before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas.
WARRANTS.

WANTED.

I want to hire a COLOURED WOMAN, of good character, who understands cooking and house work in general. To such a one I will give liberal wages. Enquire at the Village Herald office. July 22

SINCLAIR & MOORE,

Pratt St. Wharf, Baltimore,

HAVE in store—Miller, Lucerne, early Corn, lunch, pole & soup Beans, a large assortment for planting, and garden seeds generally.

PLOUGHS,

Amongst which are the much approved self-sharpening point Plough—By turning and reversing said point, the share lasts much longer than the cast share of any other plough, in as much as the point is of steel, and when worn bevelling it is sharpened, if turned over. The CULTIVATORS made by Sinclair & Moore, pulverize the ground more effectually, and much deeper than the old fashioned three hoed kind—and by the use of these in the culture of corn, it will save nearly two thirds of the ploughing.

ALSO, Socket Shovels, Scythes, Mattocks and Picks, with handles;—spring steel Hay and Manure Forks, WHEAT FANS, & GRAIN CRADLES, with best Waldron Scythes; Garden Tools generally; Wove Wire for Seives, and Mill Screens.

☞They have received from on board the brig Hyperion, capt. Forbes, just from Liverpool, a quantity of grain and grass Scythes, (Waldron's prime) Sickles. Malleable trace Chains; Straw and Hay Knives, Grass Hooks, and Garden Tools, amongst which are turnip and other Hoes; Edging Tools, budding and pruning Knives, &c. &c.

☞For the greater convenience of those who use our PLOUGHS in Somerset, we have appointed JOHNSTON & SUDLER, of Princess-Anne, our agents for the sale of them, who will constantly keep a supply of the different kinds at our prices.

June, 1828. S. & M.

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers.

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers.
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 Butter Prints

100 groce of Lamp Wick, assorted sizes, Spiggots and fossets, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs, and hydrants, shoe, sweeping, dusting and other brushes, sifters, mudlers, and lime squeezers, fancy and common bellows, pound, half pound and quarter pound Butter Prints, of various patterns, fishing lines and rods, butter bowls and trays, baskets, wash and cake boards twine, and cord, patent taps, humming and common tops, nests of sugar boxes and tubs, boot & shoe blacking, towel rollers, potato and turnip mashers, rolling pins, carpenters' or joiners' chalk lines, spoons and paddles, trenchers, crabbing and cabbage nets.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,

No. 101½ Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.

Baltimore, 6th mo. 24. wd.

IN CHANCERY,

12TH JULY, 1828.

ORDERED, That the sale of the real estate of William Waters, made and reported by the Trustee, Marcellus Jones, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause be shewn to the contrary on or before the 12th day of September next, provided a copy of this order be inserted once in each of three successive weeks, in one of the newspapers published in Somerset county, before the 12th day of August next. The report states the amount of sales to be $601 25.

True copy. TEST,

RAMSAY WATERS,

July 22, 1828. Reg. in Chan.

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.

Somerset County Orphans Court.

July 8th, 1828.

ON application of Sarah Dashiell, Administratrix of John Dashiell, (negro) late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that she give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in the Village Herald, printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,

JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration, on the personal estate of John Dashiell, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 29th of January next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 8th of July, 1828.

SARAH DASHIELL,

Adm'trix of John Dashiell, dec'd.

July 15, 1828. k

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Court of Appeals for the Eastern Shore of Maryland and to me directed, at the suit of John Parsons use of George C. and John H. Johnson against John Smart, I have seized and taken in execution all the right, title, interest and estate of the said John Smart in and to a tract of land lying and being in my bailiwick, called Wright's Conclusion, containing two hundred and sixty acres, more or less, being the same lands which were conveyed to a certain John Dashiell by Charles Jones, Sheriff of Somerset county, by deed bearing date the first day of March, 1825, and at present occupied by Mr. Kendal Parsons, and which I shall proceed to sell at the Court-House door in the town of Princess-Anne, in Somerset county, on Tuesday the 12th day of August next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock, P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

July 22, 1828.

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phœbus.

For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

June 3, 1828. wk

IN CHANCERY.

SOMERSET COUNTY COURT, MAY TERM, 1828.

ORDERED, That the sales of the real estate of Peter Dashiell as made and reported by William W. Handy, Trustee for the sale of said estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shown by the second day of the next term of this court; Provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess-Anne once a week for three weeks successively before the said day.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM PINGLE.

True copy. TEST,

GEO. HANDY, Clk.

July 29, 1828. wk

NOTICE.

THE Levy Court of Somerset County will receive Proposals in writing on Tuesday the 26th day of August next, in reference to a Standard Bearer, in compliance with the late act of Assembly relating to Weights and Measures. Applicants will hand in their proposals on that day.

By order,

GEO. HANDY, Clk.

July 29 km

BARREN CREEK SPRINGS.

THE SUBSCRIBER

Begs leave to inform his friends & the public

That his HOUSE is now open

FOR THE RECEPTION OF VISITERS.

An anxious solicitude to promote the comfort of those who are in pursuit of health, pleasure, or business, has induced him to make such arrangements as will enable him to give ample satisfaction to those who may favor him with their company. By those who have visited the Springs, during the present season, the waters have been pronounced more powerful in their effects than hitherto experienced—operating in most cases, as a purgative medicine. Those desirable effects, in conjunction with its chalybeate properties which are acknowledged to be unsurpassed by any waters in the world, present a powerful inducement to such as are already assailed by disease, and to those who are desirous to avoid the bilious diseases of the climate.

Persons who are inclined to try the efficacy of the waters may rest assured that every accommodation shall be provided to render them happy and comfortable; and the charges shall be apportioned to the pressure of the times.

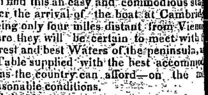
The public's humble servant,

CHARLES LEARY.

N. B. Travellers, generally, particularly the passengers of the steam-boat Maryland will find this an easy and commodious stage after the arrival of the boat at Cambridge, (being only four miles distant from Vienna.) Here they will be certain to meet with the purest and best Waters of the peninsula, and a Table supplied with the best accommodations the country can afford—on the most reasonable conditions.

July 29. mku

STOP THE RUNAWAYS.



ABSCONDED on the 23d day of July, THREE NEGROES; one negro woman named Easter, aged about 45 or 50 years, and two negro men, one by the name of Bob, dark mulatto, about 19 years old, and the other by the name of Harry, very black, about 23 years old. We will give a reward of 25 dollars if taken in the county; if either taken so much in proportion; and if taken out of the county or state, we will give 45 dollars, if secured so that we can get them again, or if either taken up so much in proportion.

THOMAS BELL,
HOPKINS WINDSOR.

Nanticoke Point, July 29. vk

☞NOTICE.

ON WEDNESDAY the 13th INSTANT the Trustees of the Poor of Somerset county will elect an OVERSEER of the Poor for the residue of the year. Persons wishing that situation will make proposals in writing to the Board of Trustees, or some member thereof, on or before that day.

By order of the Board,

JAMES WILSON, Sec'y.

August 5. m2w

FOR RENT,

For the ensuing year, that FARM which was formerly the property of William Tilghman, dec'd. situate on the head of Back Creek. For terms apply to JAMES STEWART.

July 22, 1828. kw

PUBLIC SALE.

IN pursuance of an order of Somerset county Court, passed at May Term, 1828, the undersigned, or a majority of them, will sell on THURSDAY the 28th INSTANT at Major Leary's tavern, at Barren Creek Springs, in said county, on a credit of twelve months—

All the REAL ESTATE of

LEVIN RUSSELL,

Late of said county, deceased, which has lately valued by the undersigned. The purchaser, or purchasers, to enter into bond, with approved security, to the heirs of said deceased for their respective proportions.

TUBMAN BEDSWORTH,
ZACCHEUS LLOYD,
BEACHAM ACKWORTH,
JAMES BOUNDS,
WILLIAM TWILLEY,

August 5—ft Commissioners.

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess-Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to show cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

LEVIN H. POWELL.

July 8 ww

JOB PRINTING

Neatly executed at this office.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., AUGUST 19, 1828. NO. 21.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months:

Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the year subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

Persons advertising must limit the number of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

Political Character of J. Q. Adams.

A series of numbers delineating the political character of J. Q. Adams, appears in the Albany Argus. They are written with great spirit and ability, and giving a vivid sketch of the life and public services of this political Proteus. We had designed to republish these numbers entire; but interesting and important essays and documents accumulate so rapidly upon our hands, that we shall be compelled to omit them. From the first number, however, we make the following extract:

I am now compelled to remark upon the manner in which your claims have been urged upon the American people.

Were it not from the grossness of the falsehood, it would be matter of amusement to witness the pompous terms in which the immense sacrifices which you have made for this country, are enumerated. Your friends tell us of a wholelife spent in the public service, a life of incessant labour and painful exertion.

Was it any sacrifice in a very young lawyer without business, to leave his empty office for an appointment at a foreign court, as the well paid representative of his nation?

Was it any sacrifice to be transferred to another court in the character of a minister plenipotentiary, with another outfit, and to reside there under the peculiar advantage of being the son of the President of the United States, which in some degree assimilated you, to European courts, to the rank of a prince of the blood?

Was it any sacrifice to serve five sessions in the Senate of the United States, when the federalists could give you nothing better, and when the republicans would not employ you at all?

When your own party could give you nothing more, was it any sacrifice to adhere to the party who had the disposition of all the offices, and the whole power of the nation?

You indeed made one voluntary sacrifice. You resigned the fragment of a senatorial term, and for this sacrifice you claimed the office of Secretary of State, and deeply resented the injurious treatment of Mr. Madison, who only appointed you minister plenipotentiary to the court of Russia!

Did you, like Jefferson, take the hazard of dying on the scaffold for penning the declaration of Independence, and endure the scoffs and calumnies of the federal presses, and witness in every newspaper and review, some foul allusion, some slanderous tale, or some satiric poem.

Was you, like Madison and Monroe, compelled to look on the desolation of your dwelling, to endure the peltings of the storm during the war, when the public credit was almost annihilated, when the coast was environed by the force of Great Britain, when their Vandal armies penetrated the interior and burnt the capital; when the dismemberment of the nation was a common topick of conversation; when the disasters of our armies filled every heart with dismay, and nothing but the most inflexible constancy could have carried them safely through a contest, of a character the more alarming and terrifick, inasmuch as internal feuds and refractory governours paralized the strength of the nation?

Did you, like Tompkins, devote your fortune to your country, beggar your family, voluntarily consent to your own ruin, and follow a sheriff's officer to prison?

Your sacrifices during this disasterous period, were three several missions, three or four outfits, expenses of your journies, actual and constructive, and about $90,000 of the public money, and the trouble of writing letters to Learitt Harris ! !

Was it any sacrifice to hold the office of Secretary of State eight years, and receive $45,000?

Was it any sacrifice to receive $100,000 for exercising the functions of Chief Magistrate for four years?

How then stands your account of sacrifices?

You have received, and will receive $400,000 of the public money. You have sacrificed nothing but principle; and from the facility with which that sacrifice is made, you must hold it in light estimation.

Mr. Jefferson was compelled to sell his library. He was compelled to resort to a lottery, to sell his estates. He died, leaving nothing to his family but his fame and his debts. Mr. Madison is in moderate circumstances.

Colonel Monroe has offered his plantations for sale, and is harrassed with debts, and daily liable to arrest.

Vice-President Tompkins was stripped of his whole estate, the quarterly stipend of his salary withheld to satisfy an apparent balance against him at the treasury, and he too died poor.

You are a rich man, and well you may be; and yet we are gravely told that because you have already received $400,000 of the public money, the nation owes you the office of President for another four years, and $100,000 more! Even your father's services are brought into the account. He also served his country, and received for his services more than $200,000. $700,000 in one family! Republicans beware!

Compare your services and those of your father with Washington's, and then estimate the value of the compensation. The leader of our armies eight years, the leader of our councils as many, refused all compensation beyond his actual expenses!

"ORDER AND DECENCY"

OF THE ADAMS PARTY!!!

The Genteel Party.—Alas, poor Jackson! all his public acts under the General Government, defended by John Quincy Adams—eulogized by Henry Clay—publicly thanked by Congress—and applauded by every American, is now discovered to be a murderer a horse racer, an ignoramus, who can hardly write or spell. Not content with heaping all this abuse upon the General, they have actually kicked all his supporters out of genteel society. The rabble, the stinking mechanics, who almost sickened to death Mr. Clay's protege, the delicate John H. Pleasants. The swinish multitude, the clodhoppers, (all the Jackson men,) are hereafter to keep at a respectable distance from such "Genteel" Society, as John Binns & L. D. Teackle.

"Order & Decency."—Adams paper in Delaware, has the following paragraph:

"But, fellow citizens, this is not all that the Almighty has done for the cause of the Administration. Dewitt Clinton, the great hope of the Jackson party—he to whom the idolators clung, as the ark of safety for their cause—by the mercy of God to this nation, has been removed (it is to be hoped) to a better world. In the midst of his usefulness, in the very vigor of his faculties, this eminent citizen was withdrawn from the prosecution of a design to which he had perverted the powers God had given him—the elevation of Andrew Jackson. In the sudden death of De Witt Clinton, 'the hand of God is visible. Let us adore his omnipotence."

What say the friends of Mr. Clinton to this impious effusion? Noah.

From the Pennsylvania Reporter.

☞SHOCKING—INHUMAN DEPRAVITY.

We had prepared our minds for extravagant defamation from the desperate men who now manage the helm of government. We saw Gen. Jackson, the gallant soldier who had risked his "life, his fortune, and his sacred honor," in the defence of his country's liberties, traduced and slandered to a level with the veriest outcast that polutes our streets. We heard him called a MURDERER, a SWINDLER, an ADULTERER, and last of all a TRAITOR to his country, but the depravity of the times interposed and furnished as a precedent for it all, the abuse of the venerable JEFFERSON, by old John Adams and his followers, in 1801 ! He was then denounced as a miserable debauchee, a cheat and a blackguard, the notorious paramour of his servant, BLACK SAL, a political renegado and pensioner of the French Government! ! Thus was the parent of our glorious declaration of independence slandered, and it was a matter of no surprise to us that the same men, for the same purposes, would vilify and defame the character of Andrew Jackson. But we were astonished, we were horror stricken, when we opened the papers that came by yesterday's mail, and found the following propogated by the bosom friend and pliant tool of Henry Clay, who is no less a personage than the famous Charles Hammond of Ohio? Citizens of this Republic, read the following, and then in terror grasp the hands of your aged mothers, your wives, your sisters and daughters, and pray to Heaven that no circumstance will ever transpire to place them within the reach of those hounds of perdition, who can rake up the ashes of the dead, and run the risk of blasting the fair fame of a saint in Heaven, for the unholy purpose of destroying the moral standing of her son!

☞"General JACKSON'S mother was a COMMON PROSTITUTE, brought to this country by the British soldiers! She afterwards married a MULATTO MAN, with whom she had several children, of which number GEN. JACKSON IS ONE!!!"

What can a virtuous people think of a party who would descend to infamy so glaring as this to carry its point? Think of the feelings of the gray headed veteran when he reads this attack upon the virtue of his dead mother!! The Ohio Free Press feels confident, judging from the source whence this slander emanates, and the time of its origination, immediately after Clay's arrival in the west, that he is the promulgator!! We can scarcely think so—as much as he has at stake, and as desperate as he has shown himself, still we cannot believe he would cold bloodedly inflict this wound on the old soldier! His wife, the partner of his toils and cares, of his pleasures and his sorrows, has passed the ordeal of detraction, and has come out like pure gold. But the hellish propensity of his persecutors was not yet glutted, and now the mains of the mother, cold and silent in the grave, must be raked up to prove that General Jackson is a MULATTO ! ! ! What—what, however, would they not get certificates to prove, when they seriously charge a man who has since held the military stations that Gen. Jackson has, with being engaged in Burr's conspiracy ! ! In open defiance, too, of the best testimony in the world declaring to the country who apprised government of Burr's movement! And so strongly did it impress itself upon the mind of JEFFERSON, that with his own peculiar emphasis he declared, when interrogated on the subject—"Don't be alarmed—Tennessee, and particularly Gen. Jackson, are faithful !"

One of the base and malicious falsehoods which the last Liris or Teackle has promised to heap upon General Jackson, is completely exposed by a writer in a Washington paper, as follows:

From the U. S. Telegraph.

HOWARD—No. 5.

"Oh there are some, who well can prate of precept,
And hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature;
But for example—for free and wholesome exhibition,
They're none of it." Not SHAKSPEARE.

Amongst the variety of fanciful and false charges which ingenuity and design has conjured up, to effect and prejudice the public mind towards Gen. Jackson, is the ridiculous one, that he managed and manœuvred with the Creek Indians to procure to himself a cession of land of three miles square. It is charged emphatically, as though it were true, that at the close of the Indian war in 1814, being at their Council in the capacity of Commissioner on the part of the United States, to conclude a capitulation and peace, he consulted materially his own interests, and by the influence he possessed, procured to be made to him a grant of land. It is not true! It is an impeachment against that honesty of purpose for which Jackson is so proverbially remarked. There lives not a man, who with truth can say, that in a single transaction of life, where money was concerned, any thing of selfish policy was ever manifested;—few men have less concern about such things than himself. But to facts, as regards the accusation as it has been made.

In the Creek war the Indians were divided in opinion; a portion being in favour of maintaining their friendly relation with the United States—and a still larger number disposed to unite with Great Britain. Subdued at length, General Jackson was directed by his government, to conclude with them a treaty. On that occasion he was met by those chiefs who had been in opposition to the war, and in favour of preserving with the United States their friendly relations. Most of the other chiefs, on account of their hostility, had fled from the country and sought a refuge with the Seminole tribe in Florida. When the collected chiefs met to sign the treaty that had been agreed upon, it was proposed by them in council, that in consideration of the essential services which had been rendered to the peace party, who alone were engaged in the negotiation, three miles square of the ceded country should be reserved for him in his own right, declaring their opposition to the treaty, unless a clause to this effect should be inserted. Jackson refused it, and the Indian Council with earnestness and pertinacity insisted that it should be done. At length, to put an end to the negotiation, and to close a business which detained him from other important duties to the South, he consented to place their presented desire in a separate article, apart wholly from the treaty. His reply was this: "I cannot place the request you make in the treaty; it shall, though, be introduced in a detached and separate article, with the circumstances disclosed which have led to it. I will send it in this form to the President, for his consideration and approval. I will say to him, you have insisted, and I agreed to the proposal. If he approves, it shall be disposed of for the benefit of the widows and children of your nation. On these terms only will I consent to place before him the offer you have made;" and so to the government it was presented.

The circumstances under which this arrangement took place were communicated by Gen. Jackson to Mr. Madison, who was then President of the United States. If any thing of personal benefit had been desired, this voluntary and unsolicited behest of the Indians might have been placed formally in the treaty, and ratified; but different from this, it was kept from it and sent forward merely as a desire expressed on the part of the Indians, that it might be done. The President in a special message, brought it to the consideration of the Senate. He committed the generous liberality of Jackson; and although it formed no part of the concluded treaty, but was a separate and detached affair, yet did Mr. Madison bring it to the consideration of Congress, with a suggestion that it might be carried into effect.* And what if it had been so done? Gen. Jackson as he had avowed at the time, and subsequent, before the treaty was acted upon, would have applied the proceedings after the manner he had stated at the negotiation. His friends have not a knowledge of the time, when the corrupting beguilments of wealth, had any action or influence upon him. Through life he has been known to regard the acquiring of tawdry and transient wealth, after the manner alone, that every sensible and prudent man should and ought to regard it—not to hide it in a ditch, nor for a train attendant, but for the glorious privilege of being independent.

* Message of President Madison to Congress: "The accompanying extract from the occurrences at Fort Jackson, in August, 1814, during the negotiation of a treaty with the Indinas shows that the friendly Creeks, wishing to give to General Jackson, Benjamin Hawkins and others, a national mark of their gratitude and regard conveyed to them respectively a donation of land, with a request that the grant might be duly confirmed by the government of the United States.

"Taking into consideration the peculiar circumstances of the case—the expediency of indulging the Indians in wishes which they associated with the treaty signed by them, and that the case involves an inviting opportunity for bestowing on an officer, who had rendered such illustrious services to his country, a token of its sensibility to them; the inducement to which cannot be diminished by the delicacy and disinterestedness of his proposal to transfer the benefit from himself. I recommend to Congress, that provision be made for carrying into effect the wishes and request of the Indians, as expressed by them.

JAMES MADISON."

The Essex Register unblushingly assures its readers, that in Pennsylvania the parties are 'about equal' on the Presidential question. As Falstaff says, "how this world is given to lying ! ! ! The last summer the Register claimed Pennsylvania as sure for Adams. But the words were hardly out of their mouths before the elections took place, and the ballot boxes proclaimed in this State, sure for Adams, a Jackson majority of fifty thousand votes. If we had fifty thousand majority, when the Essex Register claimed Pennsylvania as sure for Adams—we probably have now eighty or ninety thousand majority, when that veracious print does not claim it, and merely asserts that the parties are about equal. Boston Statesman.

In 1807, John Quincy Adams denounced the Federalists at Boston, (of whom he was one) as guilty of treasonable intentions, and intending to dissolve the Union. Was this true? Or was it not true? If not true, what are we to say of Mr. Adams for propagating so vile a calumny against his old friends? If it was true, why does he not state the facts, and name the persons concerned in the plot? If it was true, how came it that Mr. Adams negotiated with Daniel Webster, one of the Boston Federalists, and promised, if made President, to promote Mr. Webster's friends to office? to appoint men whom he had stigmatized as Traitors. This may be consistent conduct in an amiable diplomatist, but is not easily understood by honest men.

Trenton Emporium

FROM THE WINCHESTER VIRGINIAN.

To John H. Pleasants, Esq. senior editor of the Richmond Whig, and late bearer of despatches to South America via Liverpool.

SIR:—The public have waited with some impatience for the last fortnight, to learn how you will get over an apparent difficulty in which ("unintentionally, no doubt") you have involved yourself and your patron, Mr. Clay, by the declaration that you applied to him "in January 1825 for employment as a messenger" and that "several months afterwards," to wit, prior to the 19th day of April following, you obtained in consequence of that application, the appointment to South America whose duties, it should be recollected you discharged with so much satisfaction to your employers and with such singular fidelity to your country. I say the public have waited with a degree of impatience for an ecclaircissment of this difficulty, which subsequent occurrences have tendered to increase. They have been reminded that at the time you say you applied to Mr. Clay for office it was not in his power to confer it: that the election of a president had not then been made; nor was it publickly known for a considerable time afterwards who would be the successful candidate; and yet you were so well informed of what was going forward at Washington that you put in your claim for services rendered, two months before Mr. Clay came into office; and received your quid in the shape of an appointment worth $1950 for services which were not rendered, in less than six weeks afterwards. We have also been told upon authority no less unquestionable than that of your coadjutors, the veracious editors of the National Intelligencer, that they "have never known the editors of the Whig to make an assertion of their own knowledge, which was not credible."—(Whew!) Now, it must be acknowledged, that since the facts in relation to your appointment, your failure to perform the duties, your receipt of the $1950, &c. &c., were drawn out, you have not been backward in offering explanations and apologies in abundance to screen yourself and friends from the odium you had jointly and severally incurred; and hence I am prompted to propound to you one or two interrogatories which you will, doubtless, take pleasure in responding to.

1st. Did you really and truly apply to Mr. Clay in "January 1825" for an appointment as a messenger? If yea,

2d. What was his answer; and how did you know at that time that Mr. Adams would be elected; and that Mr. Clay would be his Secretary of State?

ANOTHER QUÆRIST.

N. B. The writer of the above will feel obliged by an early answer.

[From the Delaware Gazette.]

Drums, Kettles and Trumpets.—What erudite and logical editors the National Intelligencer has got. One Simon Snider, a yankee writer in the United States Gazette, is puffed up "sky high, sir," as John Randolph said, by Gales & Seaton, for communicating the following wonderful news:—"the efforts, however, which have been, and which are still making to elevate General Jackson to the highest honours of the Republic, on account of his military services alone, have given just cause for alarm, TO THE FRIENDS OF FREEDOM THRO'-OUT EUROPE" ! ! !—wonderful !—It should have read, to make better english,—THE FRIENDS OF MR. ADAMS IN EUROPE ! !—Aye, the friends of Mr. Adams, the "wealthy and well born" of old John Adams, may well have just fears of the success of Gen. Jackson; he will be a little too republican for their foreign taste. Gales has been abroad in his young days, or rather came from Europe, if report be true, and was a disciple of the Vicar of Bray.—Ah! Joe, I must tell you the story of the Lion.

Thirty Reasons in favor of Mr. Adams' re-election.

1. His desertion of the old federal party for the sake of office.
2. His declaration that when the President recommended a measure upon so high responsibility, he would not consider—he would not deliberate, he would act.
3. His writing verses of the most disgusting obscenity, against Mr. Jefferson, about dusky Sally.
4. His going to Mr. Jefferson with a lie in his mouth against the old federal party accusing them of treasonable designs against the government.
5. His abuse of Fisher Ames, and other distinguished federalists.
6. His receiving double outfits, double salaries, and contingent expenses for different places at the same time.
7. His refusal to refund money which he held and still holds in violation of the constitution and laws of the land.
8. His accusing the government of being weak and penurious because his unreasonable exactions could not be allowed.
9. His undervaluing the resources of the country while she was engaged in a war with a powerful foe.
10. His accusing the federalists of being sold by their passions and prejudices to the enemy.
11. His establishment of a Court etiquette and Court dress for diplomatic agents.
12. His controversy with Mr. Clay about the fisheries.
13. His bargain with Mr. Clay for the Presidency.
14. His appointment of a violent personal and political enemy to the first office in his gift, in compliance with that bargain.
15. His violation of promises made with a view to the Presidency
19. Advising members of Congress not to be paralyzed by the will of their constituents.
17. His foolish Panama project, and the expenses uselessly incurred in it.
18. His doctrine that the Executive has power to originate foreign missions without the consent of Congress.
19. His threatening a war against Georgia.
20. His loss of the British Colonial trade.
21. His electioneering tours and the encouragement given to the members of his Cabinet to do the same.
22. His recommendation in favour of light houses in the skies.
23. His ebony toast about speeding a bullet to the heart of a fallen enemy.
24. His loss of the French Colonial trade.
25. The increase of the contingent expenses under his administration.
26. His keeping in his employment a man who has openly attempted to control the press by the misuse of the public money.
27. His retaining as his Secretary of state a man who has attempted to take the life of a member of Congress for words spoken in debate, in the exercise of legislative duties; and recommending the appointment of a judge, who had shot a brother judge.
28. Because it would perpetuate a custom more honoured in the breach than the observance.
29. Because it would help Mr. Clay in the persuit of the object of his ambition.
30. Because it would establish the reign of corruption, and relieve the people for the future from the trouble of electing a President for themselves: as he would be enabled to appoint his successor.

Delaware Gazette.

From the Frederick Citizen, of August 8.

Huzza for Washington county!

On Saturday last the friends of Gen. Jackson held a meeting in Hagers-town, in pursuance of public notice given;—It was immense, exceeding in number every previous meeting that had ever been held there, and totally eclipsing the boasted Adams meeting held at the same place the Sturday before. And what is particularly worthy of remark, the Jacksonians did not resort to the trick of the Adams men by trying to entice them with a barbacue dinner. A letter from Hagerstown now before us, written on the 5th, says,—In order to draw off the people from the town and neighbourhood, so that our number might not seem large, the Adams men got up a barbacue at Cave-town on the day of our meeting. It was of no avail. The Jackson boys came in, in crowds. They said they did not want any thing to eat or drink—that they could eat acorns with Jackson. I have never seen so many people assembled at a political meeting before. We met in the Court-House, but had to adjourn to the Cold Spring, as the Court-House, large as it is, would not hold a fifth part of the people. The Frederick, Baltimore and Washington papers talk loudly about the Adams meeting of this place, as a sign that Jackson is done with us. After last Saturday, they may hold their tongues, for the rest of the year. Nothing can defeat Jackson with the people, all the "leading and respectable" men's exertions to the contrary notwithstanding. Washington county is indeed "as firm as her own limestone rocks and as immoveable, as her mountains"—for Jackson. I thought on Saturday, if Jackson himself could only have seen the great turn out of Farmers and Mechanics, he would have been satisfied even if he should be left out.

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATIS.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 19, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory." Jefferson.

"Whose services to this nation, entitle him to its HIGHEST REWARDS."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

We are authorized to announce

Thomas Bayly,
John C. Wilson, jr.,
Anthony B. Bennett, and
John J. Davis, Esq'rs.

as Candidates to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

Read, Pause, and Reflect.

"It is very gratifying to me to receive Gen. Jackson's opinions on all subjects—because I have the utmost confidence in the soundness of his judgment, and purity of his intentions JAMES MONROE."

"My friendship for Gen. Jackson, and the strong proofs of confidence and regard I have given him, while President, forbid my taking any part in the ensuing presidential election." JAMES MONROE.

"The recollection of the public relations in which I stood to Gen. Jackson, while President, and the proofs given to him, of the high estimation in which he was held by me, &c." JAMES MADISON.

"Gen. Jackson is a clear-headed, strong-minded man, and has more of the Roman in him than any man now living."
THOMAS JEFFERSON.

"Gen. Jackson justly enjoys in an eminent degree the public favour; and of his worth, talents and services, no one entertains a higher or more respectful opinion than myself." JOHN Q. ADAMS.

"An officer whose services entitle him to the highest rewards, and whose whole career has been signalized by the purest intentions and the most elevated purposes."
JOHN Q. ADAMS,
When Secretary of State and Defender of Gen. Jackson.

"Towards that distinguished Captain (Andrew Jackson) who has shed so much GLORY on our country, whose renown constitutes so great a portion of its moral property, I never had. I never can have, any other feelings than those of the most profound RESPECT and of the utmost kindness."
HENRY CLAY.

The following is from the Albany Daily Advertiser, (now an Adams paper,) of 1824:

"The following eulogium upon the character of Gen. Jackson is taken from ex-president "Monroe's Tour" published in 1819, before there was an idea of Gen. Jackson's becoming a candidate for the presidency. Let the opponents of the hero look at this and hide their shamed faces.

☞In ANDREW JACKSON, commander in chief of the division of the south, the president found a MAN fit for any emergency —a STATESMAN, cool and dispassionate—a SOLDIER, terrible in battle and mild in victory—a PATRIOT, whose bosom swells with the love of country:—in fine, a man, 'whose like we scarce shall look upon again.'"

It will be recollected that Gen. Jackson was at one time (1824) the candidate of the Adams party for Vice President, being then considered by that party as the man "best qualified by worth and services, to be associated in the government with Mr. Adams." The Rochester Telegraph of 1824, published his name under its editorial head for a considerable time—And the Adams party generally, from Maine to Georgia, supported him for Vice-President, until it became evident that the people preferred him for the presidency. The following, among other similar allusions, is found in the Rochester Telegraph of 1824—then, as now an Adams paper:

"The letters which are published to day place Mr. Monroe and Gen. Jackson on high and honourable ground, from which they can look down upon Walter Lowrie "more in sorrow than in anger." The letter of Gen. Jackson will endear him still more to the American people. The sentiments contained in it are worthy of the best Roman that ever lived —they are the sentiments of THE BEST AMERICAN THAT EVER LIVED. The minions of King Caucus will fail in their attempts to destroy such a man. Gen. Jackson, upon whom the mantle of WASHINGTON seems to have fallen, is secure of the affections and gratitude of his country."

The subsequent paragraph is contained in a biographical sketch of Gen. Jackson, by ROBERT WALSH, Esq. an Adams man, and editor of the Philadelphia Gazette;

"The copious despatches which Gen. Jackson had occasion to write to the government, detailing his campaigns and official proceedings; his numerous addresses to his troops, and the statements and arguments, which the charges preferred against his official conduct, compelled him to publish for his justification, would altogether, form a sizeable volume.—They are marked by great fluency and energy of expression; cogent reasoning; apt reference to general principles, and the utmost earnestness and apparent rectitude of intention. He writes nervously and perspicuously and he speaks with facility and force."

Gen. Jackson and A. Burr.

The charges made by judge Williams against the patriotism of Gen. Jackson have already gone the rounds. The ingenuity of the coalition has been, and now is, extended to its utmost stretch in planning schemes and devices to support the position which they have so ungratefully taken; while on the other hand, the friends of the old Hero have successfully repulsed the poisoned darts of calumny and detraction which have been so unmercifully aimed at him. But it appears that the coalition have instinct enough to know that every man is not a general reader. and that, in a country like ours, the most calumnious statements may be published and spread abroad among, what old John Adams calls, the "common people," when there is proof sufficient of their falsity. But by strange manœuvreing, and gross equivocation, they at the same time endeavor to make men believe that proof is not proof, and thus the unwary are led astray. They promise evidence "in due season," and when it is brought to light, it consists of garbled statements, dictated more by prejudice than by veracity.—Thus it has been in the case of Jackson and Burr, which is obvious to every man who will take the trouble to examine into its nature.

So far being premised, we will now show that Jackson is as innocent of the charge as the most patriotic man in our country. The reader will recollect that we published, in our 19th No. the statement which judge Williams thought it his duty to make public. We again publish the most prominent feature of that statement, under which we will present a letter from Dr. Watkins to one of the Editors of the Virginia Advocate, which proves the untruth of Williams' statement—which proves him to be more of "a criminal than a judge."

"Either before or after Mr. Jefferson's proclamation, it was as I thought, intended to impress the public mind with a belief that a ball, then on hand at Nashville, was intended as a mark of respect to Col. Burr. A number of gentlemen in Nashville, to destroy this impression, and to show their disapprobation of Burr, determined that Col. Burr should not attend the ball, and so informed Col. Burr through Judge Overton, who returned with the information, as he told me, from Burr, that Col. Burr had declined coming to the ball. With this we were satisfied About the time the ball was half over, I was standing against the wall, opposite the door of entrance into the room, and saw Gen. Jackson lead Burr by the arm into the room, and introduce him, with considerable form, to the ladies, and gentlemen then present. I do not recollect at this time that Mr. Jefferson's proclamation had any effect upon the persons then about Nashville, who were from their conduct justly liable to our suspicions, and I think I took some pains to inquire into that circumstance. Some time afterwards our party to show their farther indignation, burnt Burr publicly in effigy, I have always believed, that, during this Burr matter, that Mayor Tilman Dixon informed me, by letter, that Gen. Coffee had been engaged in procuring boats and provisions for Burr, on Cumberland river, though the letter, if there was one, I cannot now find, and I have examined for it.
"NATH. W. WILLIAMS.'

Charlottesville, May 14, 1828.

Dear Sir—In the winter of 1806, or '7, to the best of my recollection as to the time, I was a member of the dancing assemblies, for the season, in Nashville. On one of the evenings preceding a stated meeting for the night, it was communicated to the managers for the season, two of whom I distinctly recollect were the present John Overton, L. L. D. of Travellers Rest, near Nashville, and the late Doctor Hanson Catlett—that Col. Burr was in town. He was immediately ticketed, as Judge Overton informed me, nem con. I think by the managers. Some one, I do not now recollect who, objected to this act of the managers Judge Overton remarked that he had concurred in the invitation, from a conviction of its propriety—but, as he acted upon delegated authority, he wished a meeting as full and general as practicable, of the subscribers to the assemblies, to be convened; and if a majority of them disapproved of the act of the managers, the invitation to Mr. Burr should be promptly withdrawn A meeting was called, and a majority sanctioned the act of the managers. The ball went on very harmoniously; Col. Burr, though somewhat distrusted by some, was considered an elegant acquisition to it—and was treated accordingly; a hospitable, and gracious smile from the ladies, in return for his very general, and very elegant salutations, proved their happy acquiescence, in the general arrangement. General Jackson resided about fourteen miles from Nashville at the time: If he and his amiable lady attended on that occasion as they often did on others—I have lost all distinct recollection of it, which, I think I should not, if there had been any thing more marked in the attention of either to Col. Burr, than seemed to be generally awarded to him by the company present. While on this subject I will remark, that, sometime previous to this Ball, a young gentleman who resided in my family in Nashville, appeared anxious to go with Col. Burr—he afterwards cooled off. And questioned on the subject, by myself or some one in my presence, he stated that a Mr. Caffrey, I think was the name, had been about that time advised—verbally or by a letter, I am not certain which—by Gen. Jackson, to have nothing to do with Col. Burr's expedition.

Respectfully, TH. G. WATKINS.

We shall now leave the reader to ponder on this charge of the coalition, while we take a hasty view of some more important particulars.

Col. Burr's views, it is well known, were not ascertained until sometime after he had commenced preparations for his Southern expedition; but the general impression was, that he was about to make a settlement in the Spanish territory, which impression was founded on the fact, that he was not opposed by his own government. This induced many persons, young and fond of novelty, to associate with him, and to look upon him as a man deserving their greatest attention and respect. Among this number was Gen. Jackson, whose conduct evinces that he never entertained the least idea that Burr intended to aim a deadly stroke at his country's welfare. He had no reason to form a different conclusion, because it seems that Congress, or at least a majority of that body, secretly approved of the expedition. Now, any observation which Jackson might have made relative to this project, cannot prove that he possessed any evil designs against his country, because, he, together with others, believed that Burr aimed at Mexico. But when he had good and sufficient reason to support him in the opinion that he was plotting the disseveration of the Union, then he took the alarm and made use of the most efficient means to stop the progress of this unhallowed design. How Gen. Jackson's suspicions were awakened, may be gleaned from the following communication by Joshua Baker, Esq. of Martinsville, Louisiana—a gentleman whose character stands fair and unsullied:

April 8th, 1828.

Dear Sir,—You request me to send you the statement in writing I made at Mr. G . . . . . about the Burr affair. It has been so long since Donelson Caffrey, Esq. of St, Mary's Louisiana, made the same to me: that I cannot give the dates of the different transactions, nor the time when I had the conversation with him, but think it was about the time of the last Presidential election. I did not treasure up the facts and dates that Mr. C. communicated to me, because I did not think, nor do I now think, that any such proof was necessary to repel the idea of Gen. Jackson's having had any thing to do with Burr's conspiracy. Those who know Gen. J. could not for one moment suppose him to have been in any way engaged with Burr; and his acts of a public character show too much patriotism for any one to believe such a fabrication at this day. Mr. Caffrey's communication was substantially as follows:—Burr visited Tennessee, staid some time at Nashville, and was often to see Gen. Jackson. A friend of Burr went to see Gen. J. and while in familiar conversation with him, asked him what he would think of the man who had the talents and means to separate the Western States from the Eastern, and make the mountains the dividing line.—The General replied that he would consider him a traitor to his country, and would be one of the first to take his life. Here the conversation ended. This friend of Burr returned to Nashville, where Burr then was, and no doubt communicated to him Gen. Jackson's answer to this oblique question. This conversation awakened Gen. Jackson's suspicions, for he wrote to Gov. Claiborne, putting him upon his guard against Burr. Claiborne was then Gov. of the territory of Mississippi. Gen. J. also recalled from the service of Burr all his young relatives who had been induced to join Burr under the belief that he was going to revolutionize the Spanish dominion in North America. Mr. Caffrey was one of them. I think (though I will not be positive,) that Mr. C. showed me Gen. J's letter to him, advising him to abandon Burr.

Your friend. JOSHUA BAKER.

Here it is proved on the authority of a respectable gentleman that a "friend of Burr went to see Gen. Jackson, and while in familiar conversation with him, asked him what he would think of the man who had the talents and means to separate the Western States from the Eastern, and make the mountains a dividing line?" We request the particular attention of the reader to Gen. Jackson's answer to this interrogation—"I would' replied he, "consider him a traitor to his country, and would be one of the first to take his life." This aroused Jackson's suspicions. Hence his letter to governor Claiborne, in which he makes use of these emphatic expressions:—"Be on the alert; keep a watchful eye upon our general, and beware of an attack from our own country as well as from Spain; you have enemies within your city that may try to subvert your government, and try to separate it from the Union," &c. Hence also his letter to Thos. Jefferson, President of the U. States, which is fraught with patriotism & love of country: but for the satisfaction of the reader we will insert the letter.

The President of the United States.

Sir:—In the event of insult or aggression made on our government and country FROM ANY QUARTER, I am not well conviced that the public sentiment and feeling of the citizens within this state, and particularly within my division, are such, of such a nature and such a kind, that I take the liberty of tendering their services—that is under my command:—and at one moment's warning, after your signification that this tender is acceptable, my order shall be given conformably.

I beg leave to offer to your view the enclosed orders some time ago issued by me; since which time I have not been furnished with complete returns of the volunteer companies; but from the information I possess, I have no doubt that three regiments of volunteers, (to be commanded by their own officers, and such as may be recommended by their General) can be brought into the field, ready to march in twenty days from the receipt of orders.

Accept assurances for my high consideration and respect,

ANDREW JACKSON.
M. G. 2d Division Tennessee.

The reception of this letter by Jefferson, no doubt, induced him to write to General Wilkinson, saying, "be assured that Tennessee, and PARTICULARLY JACKSON, ARE FAITHFUL." It is also certain that many revolutionary heroes, who, like Mr. Jefferson, knew Jackson to be FAITHFUL, tendered him their services and were willing to acknowledge him their leader. But, although the coalition are as well convinced as we ourselves are, that the old Hero is innocent of the charge, yet they know that he is the powerful rival of J. Q. Adams, and nothing under Heaven will do for them, but to pull down that fair fabric—his fame—which he has built upon his integrity and merit, and annihilate every particle of it. Thus they endeavour to destroy the character of a man whose name is associated with our country's glory, whose principles are strictly republican, to clear the way for him who has been an apt scholar in the school of aristocracy. From what has been said relative to Jackson and Burr, we can boldly draw the conclusion: as long as the General believed that Burr's views only extended to the Spanish territory, he treated him with that respect with which one gentleman should treat another. But the very instant he ascertained that his intentions ware treasonable, he took the most efficient means to stop him in his new course. He writes immediately to Claiborne, and informs him of his danger. He addresses a letter to the President of the U. S, in which he insinuates that he will be ready with an army of men whenever his country demands his assistance. If the reader still believes Jackson guilty, we can only say that, proof, good and substantisl proof will not convince him.

Mr. JOHN HARRIS.

The execution of this man seems to have excited the sympathies of the coalition to an astonishing degree. They say they lament the loss of a fellow creature—a Reverend Baptist preacher sacrificed to the inhuman fury of an ambitious man. If they truly sympathize in the death of Harris, we have only to say, that the more tender parts of their nature are brought into action at a very distant period, and that their indulgence in fits of anguish and despair are extraordinary indeed, even so much that men of candour and truth suspect their sincerity, and allege the cause to almost any thing else but correct motives and goodness of intention. When we reflect on the execution of Harris, on the time when it was done, on the reasons for which it was done, and on the approbation of the deed by our country, and now witness the feeble efforts of the friends of J. Q. Adams to array it before the people of the U. States as an act of cold-blooded murder; we say; before the same people who more than 13 years ago approved of it, we must confess that we are astonished at their palpable foolishness, that we are surprised to find a deed approbated by the whole country at the time of its commission, now brought before the very same country for the purpose of electioneering against the man to whom we all owe so much. What are we to think of this? An action of that kind in private life would stamp its perpetrator with ignominy and the scorn of its neighbourhood. Do the friends of the administration think that the people of this country will be gulled by them, the advocates of an aristocrat? No. Their liberties are too dear, their government is too sacred. An admiring country at this day applauds Gen. Jackson for the execution of this man Harris. But a few there are (as there always will be in a country like ours,) who, thinking to excite the indignation of the different religious denominations, select this out from the history of the last war, and say it was a cold-blooded murder. Why do they say so? Why do they call it murder at the distance of 13 years from its commission? We answer to delude the Baptist denomination, those good and unsuspecting people of our country. Hence they call him the Reverend Mr. Harris—the Reverend Baptist preache: —a martyr to the cruel and vindictive spirit of an ambitious man. We are persuaded that if the Baptists knew the real character of this "martyr," they would, influenced by virtuous motives disclaim him as an enemy to his country and as a hypocrite in religion. They would indignantly blot out the word "Reverend," prefixed to his name by the coalition, and leave it to go down to posterity with their contempt and abhorrence heaped upon it.

Col. G. C. RUSSELL, who was the superintendent of Harris's execution, and who now is an administration man, being asked his opinion of Harris by Maj. A. L. CAMPBELL, in a letter from that gentleman, dated July 29, 1827, answers thus:

"Harris was a sort of preacher of that denomination called Baptists. He was in profession a saint, and in reality (under such a garb of sanctity, with great pretentions and knowledge,) a mischievous man enough amongst more ignorant people than himself."

Here we have the character of the worst of men from a source that cannot be contradicted. Under the holy garb of religion, his actions were so mischievous that in the course of time they became too glaring to be longer concealed, and he was arraigned before an offended country to suffer that punishment due to his crimes. The Baptists certainly cannot sympathize for the man who thus degraded their profession. They may pity him as a fellow creature launched into an awful eternity with all his sins, but they must condemn his principles, and sanction his final end, because of his wickedness. From this description of his private life, let us advert to his conduct as a soldier. How did he stand in that respect? As an enemy to his country. History tells us that he even carried around among the soldiers a muster roll for the purpose of exciting mutiny among them, and to obtain their subscriptions to desert from the army—that "he assembled with others, some days previous to the 20th September, at the bake-house, tore it down, and threw it into the river; that on the 18th September, at night, they went to the bullock pen, and killed as much beef as would last six or eight days, and divided it into different messes, & paraded next morning: that on the 19th, he assembled with others at the Commissary's store, broke open the door, and robbed it of as much flour and whiskey as was deemed sufficient for the journey, and marched off on the morning of the 20th, at day-light; Col Pipkin endeavoured to get them to leave their arms, under the expectation that he could then have the mutineers marched to Head Quarters,—but they retained them.—Harris was arrested in the Cherokee [illegible] tion, and sent in Irons to Fort Jackson; [illegible] which fully appeared on the trial of [illegible] turbulent and misguided men, and [illegible] these people seek to mislead the unle[illegible] ed, by recourse to fraud and falseho[illegible] These are the crimes to which the laws [illegible] our country prefix the punishment of de[illegible] pursuant thereto Harris was sentenced [illegible] his fellow soldiers to be shot, and Jack[illegible] at the distance of 300 miles was called [illegible] to sanction the sentence. He done so, [illegible] the traitor was shot accordingly. Col. R[illegible] sell, in speaking of the ringleaders of w[illegible] Harris was one, in his letter above quo[illegible] says, "So long as they hoped for life, [illegible] alleged as an excuse their pretended b[illegible] that no law existed to hold them, to ser[illegible] more than three months—However, be[illegible] their execution they abandoned this exc[illegible] as they knew better."

Now we would ask, Why is all this [illegible] cry about poor Harris—the Reverend B[illegible] tist preacher, as the administration men [illegible] him. All must answer viva voce that it i[illegible] delude the unwary and unsuspecting Bapt[illegible] to wean them from Jackson, and to ind[illegible] them to support Adams. If that den[illegible] ination will suffer themselves to be thus [illegible] ed by these designing men, we can only [illegible] that they are not sufficiently active in pr[illegible] into the secret crevices of fraud and de[illegible] tion.

The wife of Gen. Jackson is emphatic[illegible] a Baptist in the strict sense of the wo[illegible] The Rev. Dr. ELY, of Philadelphia, s[illegible] "Mrs. Jackson is an eminently pious wo[illegible] and has sustained this character for a[illegible] a quarter of a century. On the subje[illegible] baptism, I believe she is a Baptist, and [illegible] been immersed. I have heard no evil sai[illegible] her, by those who know her, unless it be[illegible] that she prefers a prayer meeting to a pa[illegible] and this will not sink her in the estimatio[illegible] any who do not forget their religion in t[illegible] politics." Yet this lady is brought be[illegible] the world, and her character traduced, by [illegible] very same men who lately have got up th[illegible] Monumental Handbills about the six mu[illegible] men for the purpose of touching the feel[illegible] of the Baptists and other religious deno[illegible] nations, and to induce them to vote for [illegible] ams at the next Presidential Election. [illegible] shall conclude by saying, beware of de[illegible] tion—beware of wolves dressed in sh[illegible] clothing!

* By the 7th article of the Rules and A[illegible] cle of War, "Any officer or soldier who [illegible] begin, excite or join in any mutiny or s[illegible] tion, in any troop or company in the ser[illegible] of the U. States, or in any party, post deta[illegible] ment, or guard, shall suffer death, or s[illegible] other punishments, as, by a Court Mar[illegible] shall be inflicted." By the 8th article, a si[illegible] lar penalty is awarded, where any officer [illegible] soldier "does not use his utmost endeavou[illegible] suppress a mutiny, or, coming to the kno[illegible] edge of an intended mutiny, does not with[illegible] delay, give information therof to his co[illegible] manding officers." And, by the 20th arti[illegible] the crime of desertion, is punishable by de[illegible] or such other punishments, as by sentence [illegible] a Court Martial shall be inflicted."

KENTUCKY ELECTION.

The following are all the returns [illegible] the state of the polls, in twenty counti[illegible] which had been received when the latest [illegible] counts left Kentucky:

Counties.	Metcalfe.	Barry
Mason	848	463
Fayette	857 majority
Woodford.	428	842
Bourbon	814	681
Garrard	707	87
Clarke	635	336
Montgomery	311	280
Nicholas	269	362
Jefferson	768	949
Franklin	277	377
Scott	310	71
Owen	128	299
Shelby	674	471
Anderson	68	261
Henry	356	431
Boone	223	151
Madison	300 majority.
Jessamine	412	397
Brachen	100 majority.
Fleming	60 do.
	7,982	6,189

It will be seen, says the U. S. Telegra[illegible] that Barry is ahead of Metcalfe in Nichol[illegible] the county in which the latter resides; a[illegible] to sum up the whole in a few words, the r[illegible] turns received give the best exhibit wh[illegible] the coalition is able to make in Letche[illegible] Clarke's and Metcalfe's districts; while [illegible] have yet to hear from Moore's, Wickl[illegible] Lecompte's, McHatton's, Chilton's Yance[illegible] and Lyon's districts.

Upon reviewing the whole ground, o[illegible] confidence of success is confirmed.

THE NEXT PRESIDENT.

The best authentic information from [illegible] parts of the Union, seems to settle this gr[illegible] question beyond a shadow of doubt that t[illegible] People's candidate, ANDREW JACKSON [illegible] will be elected by an overwhelming majori[illegible] The following is a statement which we co[illegible] fidently believe will be found to vary but [illegible] tle from the actual result:

	Jackson.	Adams.	Doubtful.
Pennsylvania	28
Virginia	24
New-York	29	7
N. & S. Carolina	26
Tennessee	11
Georgia	9
Maryland	7	3	1
Alabama	5
Indiana	5
Mississippi	3
Missouri	3
Illinois,	3
Delaware	3
New-Jersey			8
Ohio			16
Kentucky			14
Louisiana			5
New-Hampshire			8
Maine	3	6
Massachusetts		15
Connecticut		8
Vermont		7
Rhode-Island		4
	159	50	52

131 votes constitute a choice. Now, alth[illegible] we believe Gen. Jackson's chance for [illegible] doubtful votes as good as Mr. Adams', if [illegible] give them to the latter, Old Hickory w[illegible] still have a majority of 28 votes over Mr. Adams. As to the votes which we have given as certain for Jackson—There is not so much danger of his losing one of them as there is of Mr. Adams' failing to get all those allowed him; and should the legislature of N. York alter their electoral law, as the Adams men of Massachusetts changed theirs, Jackson will get the whole vote of that state, which will swell his majority to 35 votes.

CORRUPTION.—UNDENIABLE.

It is well known that Daniel P. Cook was a member of congress from the state of Illinois, at the time that the last presidential election was decided in congress. Mr. Cook being the only member from that state, had one vote at his disposal; through some inexplicable reason, and in opposition to the declared will of his constituents. Mr. Cook gave this vote for Mr. Adams, which made him president of the United States. The state of Illinois was decidedly for General Jackson; and at the next election Mr. Cook was turned out of congress for his infidelity, and General Duncan elected in his place. Last spring, the retrenchment committee of congress accidentally got wind that Mr. Cook had been sent, by Mr. Adams, on a secret mission to Cuba, and received a sum of the public money for the same. The committee called on Mr. Nourse, register of the treasury, to know if Mr. Cook had received any of the public money for his services on a secret mission, and the register stated that he had not by the public books. The committee then addressed a letter to Mr. Clay, secretary of state, for information on the subject. Mr. Clay returned for answer, that he would neither admit nor deny that Mr. Cook had been paid for a secret mission; but stated that he had "the authority of the president for saying, that he would make to the committee a confidential communication in relation to the expenditure," if they desire it. The committee declined receiving such a communication, as it would bind them to keep the subject a secret for ever. The committee then summoned several gentlemen to appear before them, and among them, Mr. Barton of the senate, Mr. Letcher of the house, and Mr. M'Lean the post master general. It was established by the evidence of these gentlemen, that Mr. Cook expected the appointment of minister to Columbia, in South America, but he was disappointed in that, Mr. Adams not daring to nominate him to the senate; but that the president appointed him on a secret mission to Cuba, for which he was to receive FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS, fifteen hundred dollars of which was paid him in advance! This sum was to be paid to Mr. Cook, in addition to the pay allowed him in returning home, as member of congress, from Washington to Illinois, by way of New York. and New Orleans, of eight dollars for every twenty miles travel. Mr. Cook at the time of this wonderful mission, and for some months previous had been unable to attend to business from the consumption, and besides knew nothing of the Spanish language. He sailed from New York the last of April, 1827, by the way of Cuba and New Orleans, and arrived at his home in Illinois, about the first of June, performing the whole of his journey and mission in the space of forty days, although an invalid, for which he is paid FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS of the people's money, at the same time that he received pay as a member of congress!! We can conceive this transaction to be nothing less than a very bungling case of corruption, by using the public funds for private purposes; and a shameful and unblushing prostitution of every thing honest and sacred. It may be considered a picture of the manner by which John Q. Adams obtained power, the means used to keep possession of that power, is not very dissimilar.

"He that stands upon the slippery place,
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up."
Poughkeepsie Telegraph.

THE SIX MILITIA MEN.

If the Coalitionists are sincere in their weaping and wailing over the dead bodies of the six mutineers, who suffered for their violations of the law, why do they not howl over the fate of the 86 men, who, (all but 3) were shot to death during the war, by different officers, for similar offences? According to the records of the war department, 86 men were 'shot to death,' viz:

15 by order of General Izard
2 by order of general Cadwallader
9 by order of general Lewis
4 by order of general Wilkinson
19 by order of general Gaines
4 by order of general Bloomfield
6 by order of general Scott
11 by order of general Dearborn
5 by order of general Courtney
1 by order of general Pinckney
1 by order of Mr. Madison
1 by order of Mr. Monroe
1 by order of Governer Tompkins
1 by order of general Brown
5 by order of general Chandler
4 by order of general Hampton

Is Mr. Madison a murderer? Is Mr. Monroe a murderer? Is General Scott a murderer?—Is General Gaines a murderer? Were all these murderers? Generals McArthur, Harrison and Macomb also had their men 'shot to death' for similar offences. Were they also murderers?—Citizen.

Nashville, July 22.

DOCT. J. L. ARMSTRONG.

As the castigation which this man recently received, from the hands of a son for a slanderous attack on a deceased father, will, doubtless, be made the subject of many sage reflections by the Coalition prints, we have thought proper to furnish our readers with a brief statement of the circumstances attending the transaction. The statement may, we think, be relied on, as it is drawn up from the letter of an eye-witness.

Wm. Gilchrist Esq. and Mr. M. Gilchrist, his brother, having learned that Doct. Armstrong, in a communication then in the press, had charged their deceased father with having been a "tory in the revolutionary war," rode to the residence of the Doctor, on Wednesday last, accompanied by two other gentlemen, for the purpose of obtaining his signature to a certificate which they had previously prepared. Mr. Gilchrist then informed Doct. Armstrong that any newspaper attack on himself or brother would have been disregarded, but that his slander on a deceased parent could not be passed over. Doct. Armstrong attempted an explanation, but Mr. Gilchrist insisted on his signing the certificate. What followed cannot be better told than in the words of our correspondent:

* * * * * * * * "At the mention of certificate, the Doctor, in a hurried tone of voice, said, "I'll have nothing to do with it," and broke ground like a quarter horse, hallooing, murder! murder! murder! The two Mr. Gilchrists broke after him, and Col. , who had also been invited to ride out, and myself trotted down the hill after them.—The Doctor fell, in his flight, three times before Mr. Gilchrist overhauled him; not forgetting, at each fall, and between them, in every jump, to cry out, help! murder! &c. with a truly lamentable and tremendous voice. His last fall was a great one, he fell full length into Duck river, when the water flew at least ten feet high. At the river Mr. Gilchrist boarded him and gave him one of the most genteel flagellations I ever saw."

Our motives for publishing the circumstances related above cannot be misconstrued. It is important to shew, that Doct. Armstrong has been punished, not for any thing he may have said or written about General Jackson, or the Presidential election, but for an attack upon a deceased person. He has received from the hands of Messrs. Gilchrists, a wholesome flagellation, for a base and unmanly attack on the character of their deceased father. [Nashville Republican.

Look At This!!

Another Bargain.—A correspondence between Oliver Heartwell, Canandaigua, and John Quincy Adams, President of the United States, on the subject of connecting the presidential question with anti-masonry, is secretly circulated by the partisans of Mr. Adams, in several of the western counties, with a design to promote his election. A copy of his correspondence has been placed in our hands.

Heartwell, in his letter to the President, urges him to declare whether or not he is a mason, and concludes by saying:—"I feel very cordially disposed to support your re-election should I hear you never had been contaminated with the useless trumpery of masonry: and you may be assured that in case you have not been so unfortunate as to join that society (masonry,) very much can and will be done in this section of the state in your behalf, UPON THAT GROUND."

Mr. Adams accepts the proffer, in these terms:—"I state that I am not, never was, and never shall be a free mason."

Mr. Adams requests that publicity may not be given to his letter through the newspapers; but his partisans circulate it secretly wherever they can possibly hope to gain a convert by it. And for this purpose the proffer was made and this reply returned. We are free to confess our astonishment that the President of this Republic can condescend to the use of such means to promote his own election.
Albany Argus.

COFFIN HANDBILLS.

This ridiculous piece of imposture, which the Adams party have resorted to in their desperation, is happily ridiculed by Mr. Daniel of Kentucky, in his speech in reply to Burgess, of Rhode Island, on the Tariff. Mr. Daniel, after laughing at the attempts of the Government Journal, at Washington, to show that he was an illiterate man, continues in the following happy vien of satire.—

"They (the Adams party) have many distinguished schoolmasters among them, who are now engaged teaching their pupils the difference between militia men when called into service, and a regular soldier. To each branch of the liberal arts and scenes, a professor has been assigned. The mechanical arts are flourishing in the land. The making of coffins has been brought to the highest grade of perfection. I am told that in Pennsylvania the tin pedlars have their carts full. I expect daily to see a petition presented to this House, by the manufacturers of this article, praying that an impost be laid on imported coffins. (Here Mr. Daniel was handed a coffin handbill, which he spread before the House.) This exhibition of coffins, Mr. Speaker, is a very serious affair. The criminal, who is condemned to be hung for some offence against the laws of his country, has his coffin made before the day of execution, and rides on it to the gallows This administration has taken the hint and provided themselves with eighteen! upon which they are now riding as on so many hobbies. They surely lack taste. It would have been the last hobby that I should ever have mounted to ride into popular favour. It is a very serious matter to be lugging coffins through the country, with the hope of scaring sickly women and cowards!

"When the yellow fever was raging in Norfolk, some years ago, a Yankee got a notion into his head that he would make a fortune by carrying on a trade in this article.—He accordingly provided himself with a cargo of coffins in Boston, and set out for the former place. When he arrived, as was the custom, he had the auction bell rung all over the city, proclaiming he had coffins for sale. The terror produced by this "last suit," was said to have occasioned several deaths. The citizens at length, became enraged at the impudence of this coffin pedlar, and he soon found it necessary to decamp before he had disposed of his novel cargo. It is believed that the poor fellow was ruined by the speculation; and I am apprehensive that a similar fate awaits this administration.

"When we see a coffin, we are naturally led to inquire who is dead? When this handbill was displayed in Pennsylvania, such an inquiry was made. The answer was, that no one was dead, but that the Administration was dying. (Here Mr. Russel, of Ohio, said he would submit to the chair, whether Mr. D. was in order. The Chairman stated, that Mr. D. must confine himself to the question.) Mr. Daniel said, as the gentleman from Ohio had got alarmed at the coffins, & as he (Mr. D.) would not designedly injure the nerves of any gentlemen in the house, he would drop the subject, and return to the remarks of his friend from Rhode Island." Balt. Rep.

From the Albany Argus.

A curious case for Administration Lawyers.

JOHN A. KING, it will be recollected, received about $1,500 from the treasury of the United States, without any right and against all law: and the attorney general will probably be soon employed to prosecute for its recovery. King intends, it is intimated, to set off against this claim of the United States a reasonable compensation for his services and expenses in attending the two Coalition conventions in this state, and for "raising the administration standard." He also claims to set off the amount of an outfit and the expenses of the mission in search of a Coalition candidate for governor. In this last charge the right to receive pay for constructive journies is involved. When the committee of search, with their warrant from the Utica convention, arrived at Saratoga Springs, they were informed that the defendant named in said warrant had gone to Lake George. Although the committee did not go thither for him, King claims an allowance for a constructive journey to Lake George, on the authority and practice of John Q. Adams—the consummate diplomatist, to draw money from the treasury of "a weak and penurious government."

It is rumoured, with how much truth we know not, that Storrs and Burges are retained, and have given written opinions in favour of all the claims of the chairman of the committee of search. It is believed that Judge Thompson will not resign his Judgeship until these interesting questions are all disposed of.
MOOT POINT.

LOUISIANA.

Bulletin Extraordinary!!!—Mr. Adams defeated on his own chess board—so it is.—Louisiana so essential to the success of Mr. Adams, has certainly gone against him. The election of Judge White over Mr. Livingston, was trumpetted forth, by all the Adams presses, as sure as a gun, that the whole State had declared for Adams. But what is the fact? guns miss fire, explode too soon for execution, and sometimes grow like paddy's gun, from a pistol to a cannon. The Adams men, missed fire—their gun exploded too soon—and it grew from a pistol to a cannon —ha! ha! ha!—poor dear folks, how queer they look since it is ascertained—that Mr. Brent has been defeated by a Jackson man—that Mr. Gurley has been most certainly in a doubtful state—and that a majority in both branches of the Legislature are decidedly in favour of Jackson and are determined to elect Mr. Livingston to the United States Senate—"sour grapes" now, gentlemen. We do not claim the whole of the State, say the Solomons of their party. The Southern mail being detained we present to our readers an extract from the Louisiana Advertiser. Since this article was written we saw a letter from New Orleans, stating that further returns left Gurley's election doubtful and gave a majority in both Houses for Jackson. Our readers will recollect that this State has always been set down as certain for Mr. Adams. That in a late calculation made by an Adams paper at Nashville, it was so set down among the 108 certain votes for Mr. Adams—that this statement was admitted to be a candid one, and adopted with additions by the Adams men generally. Now these 5 votes are doubtful at least, and the strong presumption is, that Jackson will get them although not at all essential to his success. But we have a remark to make which we beg the people to bear in mind—it is at the last election out of 17 States South and West of New York, Adams got but seven votes, at the present one he will get no more.

"Mr. Livingston has lost his election—so too has Mr. Brent, the rank, implacable enemy of General Jackson. Mr. Gurley is re-elected by a majority of some thirty or forty votes, in a district in which the Adams party are admitted by themselves to be in a lean minority—a district comprising nine parishes, which have elected 14 members of the house of representatives, 12 of whom are decidedly in favour of Gen. Jackson.

As to the Senate—Randall from Ascension and another Jackson member from Concordia are chosen in the place of two Adams men. This body last year contained a majority of four in favour of the administration—this year the majority is reduced to ONE and that one doubtful.

In the house of representatives, last year, there was a majority of eighteen in favour of the administration. This year there is a clear majority of two in favour of Jackson.' [Del. Gazette.

From the Milton (N. C.) Gazette.

JACKSON IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The "signs," in this State, are becoming more and more favourable to "Old Hickory." The sentiments of several companies in different counties have lately been expressed, and we now state a few received by the last papers:

	Jackson.	Adams.
Martin county	114	1
Northampton	61	12
Franklin	111	7
Montgomery	238	8
Cumberland	215	11
Richmond	49	56
Wake	69	25
Rushford	556	16
Rockingham	197	60
Haywood	520	00
Anson	54	15
Mecklenburg	149	17
Wilkes	260	8
Burke	185	1
	2846	157

From the Poughkeepsie Telegraph.

"The probability of the election of General Jackson is most alarming," exclaimed an Adams electioneerer, to an aged farmer. Yes, replied the old farmer, it is truly "alarming;" but not to us farmers, nor to those who wish for a prudent and economical administration of the government. I'll tell you, however, to whom Gen. Jackson's election is indeed "alarming,"—

To John Q. Adams, because he cannot then buy up votes, and pay for them out of the contingent fund—nor squander the public money upon his flatterers and followers.

It is "alarming" to Henry Clay, because then his intrigues and management will come to an end; and instead of being electioneering about the country, and at the same time drawing seventeen dollars a day from the people, he will have to live by his profession.

It is "alarming" to all the office holders, and to the leeches upon the Treasury at Washington.

It is "alarming" to John A. King, because he will have to pay back the $5,258 45, that Mr. Adams gave him out of the treasury, in violation of all law and justice.

It is "alarming" to John H. Pleasants, because he would not get $1,940, for carrying despatches to Brazil, when he went to London

It is "alarming" to Jesse Brown, because he would not get $3,178 88 for boarding Indians.

It is "alarming" to Moritz Furst, because he would not get $1000 for taking the President's likeness.

It is "alarming" to all the hired libellers through the Union, because their services would be at an end, and they could no longer draw upon the contingent fund.

I add, that the election of Andrew Jackson is truly "alarming" to the above individuals. But to the people of the United States—those who pay the taxes, and desire an honest and economical administration, like that of Jefferson's—his election is ardently desired. The people will never consider it "alarming" to have a reform of the abuses and waste of the public money at Washington. Nor will they fear to trust their liberties in the hands of him who has so often periled his life for their security. "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends."

Mr. Barbour, our new minister to England, embarked on Friday last from New York, for Liverpool. This is the third mission to England under the present reign; notwithstanding which, our important relations with that government have been left much of the time to the guidance of a mere secretary of a minister.—Albany Argus, August 6th.

From the U. S. Telegraph.

HENRY CLAY'S APOLOGY.

TUNE—"Comin' thro' the rye."

If a body meet a body,
Going to the West,
May'nt a body, sick of bargain,
Take a little rest?
Of eating barbacues and dinners,
Who so fond as I?
Besides, the doctors all advise
To throw my bus'ness by.

If a body catch a body,
At intrigue and trade,
Should a body blame a body,
If a body's paid?
Politics have their prices,
I have mine they say;
But all the clerks they smile at me,
When drawing extra pay.

If a body write a body,
Need a body tell,
Or show a body's letter, which
Would prove the bargain well?
When Johnny his proposals made
Oh how could I deny,
His friends all suing to me,
With tears in their eye.

If a body hear a body,
At a dinner, pray
For famine, war, and pestilence,
What would you have 'em say?
If Jackson's chosen President,
Despite our every lie,
The de'il may take the nation then,
And what the deuce care I?

ERRATA.—In the 2nd column of the 2nd page of last week's Herald we gave an extract from Eaton's life of Jackson. In the 8th line from the bottom of this extract occurs the word 'father,' instead of which read 'brother.'

QUERCUS requests the Editor of the Herald to make the following corrections of errors which occurred in his last communication The errors are immaterial, though as Q. is a friend to truth, even immaterial points should be set right. Instead of 'Mr. Stephens of Kent,' read 'Mr. Stephens of Queen Anne's.' Instead of '3 delegates from Kent,' read '2 from Kent and 1 from Queen-Anne's.' In the enumeration of the counties on the Eastern Shore opposed to the R. R. appropriation, Q. Anne's is mentioned One of the delegates from Q. Anne's, viz. Mr. Stephens, voted for the R. R. appropriation.

Baltimore Prices Current.

Aug. 15, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $6 a 6.50; superfine Howard st 5.00 a 5.12½; city mills 4.87; Susquehanna, 4.37½ a 4.50; WHEAT, best red .95 a 1.00; best white 1.10 a 1.15—CORN, .33 a .35; OATS .20 a .22

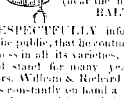
LIFE OF GEN. JACKSON
FOR SALE AT
Messrs. Hooper & Irving's Store, Salisbury

JESSE HUNT,
(Successor to W. & R. HALL)



Saddle, Harness,
AND
Trunk-Maker,
No. 127 Market Street,
(near the new City Hotel,)
BALTIMORE,

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public, that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old established stand for many years occupied by Messrs. William & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a
Large and General Assortment of Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks, Vehicles, Saddlebags, Collars, Military Equipments, &c.
of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail, on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this or any other city.
August 19th, 1828. 1f

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.
EBENEEZER ANDERSON.
August 19 ws

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, at the suit of William Kibble against Isaac Surmon, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one house and lot, containing one acre, more or less, known by the name of Hog Neck, and situated on Wicomico river, about 3 miles from its head; also two beds, one loom, one gun, one sein, two cows, two hogs, and one yearling, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 9th of next September, on the premises to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.
JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
August 19 ws

JOB PRINTING,
SUCH AS
Handbills, Cards, Blanks,
PAMPHLETS, &c.
Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms,
At the Office of the Village Herald.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Mary A. St[illegible] William Miles her guardian, and by [illegible] 6 writs of Fieri Facias issued by [illegible] non, a justice of the peace [illegible] county, to wit: one at the suit of [illegible] ler, executor of Samuel M[illegible]; 1 do [illegible] Riggin, administrator of [illegible] Riggin; 2 do. Roland Bevins; 1 do. James Stewart; 1 do. Robert Lankford; by virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by William Cos[illegible], a justice of the peace in and for said county, at the suit of Richard H. Sampson, use of [illegible] Sampson, use of Burton Cannon, [illegible] above against Henry I. Riggin and [illegible] rected, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: two head of horses, 2 yoke of oxen, 4 head of cattle, 20 head of hogs, 25 head of sheep, 6 feather beds and furniture, 1 corner cupboard, 1 clock, 1 sideboard, 1 desk, 1 walnut table, 1 pine do. 1 stand, 1 lot of earthen ware, 1 dozen chairs, 1 safe, 2 trunks, 1 lot of knives and forks, 1 grindstone, 1 hand mill, 1 wheat cart, 1 carriage, 1 wheat fan, 1 lot of casks, 1 cider mill, 1 crosscut saw, 1 hand do. 3 ploughs, 3 harrows, 3 axes, 1 lot of iron, 150 bushels of corn, more or less, 11 stacks of fodder, more or less, 1 lot of flax, 2 pair of and-irons, 3 ox yokes, 3 chains, 6 hives with bees, 1 lot of tin ware, 1 lot of queens ware, 1 looking glass, 2 guns, part of a tract of land called Panther's Den, 1 do. Allen's Vale, 1 do. Lonely Glade, containing 179 acres, more or less, all of the above property, I shall sell at the court house door in Princess Anne, on TUESDAY the 9th day of next SEPTEMBER, between the hours of 1 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.
JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
August 19th, 1828. ws

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.

Somerset County Orphans' Court.

Aug. 12th, 1828.

ON application of MARCELLUS JONES, Exr of KEZIAH JONES, late of Somerset county, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in the Village Herald, printed at Princess Anne.

True copy. Test,
JAMES POLK, Reg'r of Wills
for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order

Notice is hereby given,

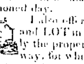
That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of KEZIAH JONES, late of said county, deceased,—All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 26th of February next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 12th of Aug. 1828.
MARCELLUS JONES,
Exr of K. Jones, dec'd.
August 19, 1828 k

Notice to Creditors.

THE creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause, if any they have, why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.
McKIMMEY PORTER.
Salisbury, Aug 19 mol

TO LET—At Public Vendue.

ON WEDNESDAY the twenty seventh INSTANT, at three o'clock, P. M. I shall offer TO LET to the highest and best bidder, for the ensuing year, the FARM late the property of Samuel Heath, dec'd. and now occupied by David Barkley.



ALSO, on the same day, will be offered to let for the ensuing year the farm now occupied by John Powel. The above farms are situated between 2 and 3 miles distant from Princess Anne. The terms will be made known on the above mentioned day.

I also offer for RENT a HOUSE and LOT in Princess Anne, formerly the property of Mrs. Mary Milleway, for which application can be made to me at any time.
JOSEPH BARKLEY.
August 12 mm

SALE FOR CASH.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of James Polk, esq. against capt. Lee P. Harcum, I shall expose to public sale on Tuesday the 2d day of September next, at the Court House door in Princess Anne, between the hours of one and two o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit: a part of a tract of land called "White Hall," containing 500 acres more or less, one negro man Stephen, one negro woman Ritty, one do. Leah, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, of the said Harcum, to satisfy the above writ with all the costs.
ROBT. STEWART late Shff
August 12, 1828. mw

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court, & to me directed at the suit of John W. Jones for the use of Henry Adams against Josiah D. Jones, I have seized and taken the following property in execution, to wit: one schooner called the Franklin of 40 tons burthen, and 2 head of horses, which I shall proceed to sell at the Court house door, on Tuesday the 2nd day of September, between the hours of 1 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above writ,
JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
August 12, [illegible]

WANTED.

I want to hire a COLOURED WOMAN, of good character, who understands cooking and house work in general. [illegible] I will give [illegible] Enquire at the Village Herald office, July 22

From the Boston Statesman.

THE DIRGE OF THE MARINER.

Air, "M'Lean of Dunnegan."

Good-night to our shipmate!
In silence he's sleeping,
And ocean's white surges
Above him are sweeping—

Above him are sweeping
The waves which he feared not,
When tost by the tempest,
And succour appeared not—

When succour appeared not,
And peril hung o'er us
To deeds fraught with danger,
He ventured before us—

He ventured before us
In terror's commotion;
Our bulwark in danger,
Our guide on the ocean—

Our guide on the ocean!
Earth's sorrows encumber,
His spirit no longer,
And calm be his slumber—

Yes, calm be his slumber
Beneath the blue billow,
Unbroken and quiet,
And soft as his pillow.

From the Baltimore Republican.

SONG.

Air—Le Petit Tambour.

Hail to the Chief of the free,
Who gained us victory;
And who "can write,
As well as fight,"
For the cause of Liberty;
Whether on Freedom's shore,
'Midst cannons' hostile roar,
Or pen to wield—
He's Freedom's shield,
In Council or in War.

CHORUS.

Hail to the Chief of the Free,
Who gained us Victory,
And who "can write,
As well as fight,"
For the cause of Liberty.

Who on the roll of fame,
Shall bare so black a name,
As he who'd dare,
From him to tear,
The justice of his claim?
None but the villian—slave—
The forger—tool—the knave—
No! none but he Could rob the Free,
The generous, and the brave.
CHORUS—Hail &c.

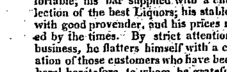
Then raise your voices high,
Let JACKSON be your cry—
Let Freemen sing,
'Till earth shall ring,
And echo reach the sky:
None but the brave and free,
Shall Freemen's rulers be—
Tho' lies assail—
"Truth shall prevail,"
And guard our Liberty.

CHORUS.

Hail to the Chief of the Free,
Who saved our Liberty—
With Freedom's band
We'll shake the land,
With shouts for Old Hickory.
H.

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.



THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's obt. servant.

WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.

Cambridge, June 3 1828.

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers.

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers.
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel-Covers
100 Butter Prints

100 groce of Lamp Wick, assorted sizes, Spiggots and fossets, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs, and hydrants, shoe, sweeping, dusting and other brushes, sifters, muddlers, and lime squeezers, fancy and common bellows, pound, half pound and and quarter pound Butter Prints, of various patterns, fishing lines and rods, butter bowls and trays, baskets, wash and cake boards twine, and cord, patent taps, humming and common tops, nests of sugar boxes and tubs, boot & shoe blacking, towel rollers, potato and turnip mashers, rolling pins, carpenters' or joiners' chalk lines, spoons and paddles, trenchers, crabbing and cabbage nets.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101½ Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.

Baltimore, 6th mo. 24.

IN CHANCERY,

SOMERSET COUNTY COURT,
MAY TERM, 1828.

ORDERED, That the sales of the real estate of Peter Dashiell as made and reported by William W. Handy, Trustee for the sale of said estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shown by the second day of the next term of this court;—Provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess-Anne once a week for three weeks successively before the said day.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.

True copy. TEST,
GEO. HANDY, Clk.

July 29, 1828. wk

SINCLAIR & MOORE,

Pratt-St. Wharf, Baltimore,

HAVE in store—Millet, Lucerne, early Corn, bunch, pole & soup Beans, a large assortment for planting, and garden seeds generally.

PLOUGHS,

Amongst which are the much approved self-sharpening point Plough—By turning and reversing said point, the share lasts much longer than the cast share of any other plough, in as much as the point is of steel, and when worn bevelling it is sharpened, if turned over. The CULTIVATORS made by Sinclair & Moore, pulverize the ground more effectually, and much deeper than the old fashioned there hoed kind—and by the use of these in the culture of corn, it will save nearly two-thirds of the ploughing.

ALSO, Socket Shovels, Scythes, Mattocks and Picks, with handles;—spring steel Hay and Manure Forks, WHEAT FANS, & GRAIN CRADLES, with best Waldron Scythes; Garden Tools generally; Wove Wire for Seives, and Mill Screens.

☞They have received from on board the brig Hyperion, capt. Forbes, just from Liverpool, a quantity of grain and grass Scythes, (Waldron's prime) Sickles, Malleable trace Chains; Straw and Hay Knives; Grass Hooks, and Garden Tools, amongst which are turnip and other Hoes; Edging Tools, budding and pruning Knives, &c. &c.

☞For the greater convenience of those who use our PLOUGHS in Somerset, we have appointed JOHNSTON & SUDLER, of Princess-Anne, our agents for the sale of them, who will constantly keep a supply of the different kinds at our prices.

June, 1828. S. & M.

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC;

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne, consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER,

Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne, Md.

FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber is desirous of disposing of his real estate, being and lying in Worcester county, Md. and situated on Dividing Creek. The landed estate consists of 2000, or more acres. The improvements are a dwelling house and out buildings with a good SAW and GRIST MILL, both in excellent order; also a young orchard. About 100 acres of the land is in a good state of cultivation.

There is, on one part of the above property, an abundance of Iron Ore, which would warrant the erection of a Forge, and prove an object of value to a purchaser acquainted with, and calculated for, such an undertaking.

The terms of sale will be—one third down, and 3 years for the payment of the balance. For further particulars apply to

JOHN MORRIS.

April 22

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt-Street,
BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.
And a general assortment
Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. mw

PROPOSALS

For publishing in Hagerstown, Md. a Weekly Newspaper, under the title of

The Hagerstown Mail.

The Mail will convey "news from all nations"—particularly those most interesting to our own country, and will be conducted so as to give early and correct information of public affairs generally; of political occurrences in the different states; of the rise and fall of American produce in our principal cities, and the prices in foreign markets.—

The political principles of this paper will be as purely Republican as those contained in the Declaration of Independence, and the Rights of the People shall be at all times zealously, firmly and fearlessly supported, whoever may be in power. The Establishment is intended to be a permanent one, and as such every endeavor will be used to render it a first rate country paper deserving public patronage.

With regard to the Presidential question which now agitates the whole Union, the Mail will decidedly and openly advocate the election of ANDREW JACKSON. And when it is considered that there is only one press in Baltimore, and only one between Baltimore and Cumberland that espouses his cause, it will readily be allowed that in so large an extent of country there is room for at least another—more particularly as all the other presses in this rich, and populous country, where he has so many disinterested friends, are against him; the times too emphatically demand the establishment of such a press, for at no period of our political history have such unfair and unjustifiable means been resorted to, in order to destroy the character of a public man, as have been within the last year to injure the well-earned fame of the Hero of New Orleans, and merely because he is a candidate before the people for a high and important office—although he was brought out by the people themselves; but the Mail will never leave him until he arrives at Washington, and receives from the hands of the people, the honors justly due to one whose whole life in peace and in war has been devoted to his Country's Liberty, Welfare and Happiness.

Terms of Subscription.

For a single paper Three Dollars a year: But this may be discharged by Two Dollars paid in advance, or Two Dollars and Fifty cents in Six Months—Any person obtaining Ten subscribers and becoming responsible for the money shall have a paper gratis.

Hagers-town, May 13—July 1

EMIGRATION TO LIBERIA.

NOTICE.

THE Managers of the American Colonization Society give notice, that they are ready to receive applications for the conveyance of free people of color to the colony of Liberia.

In all cases, the age, sex, and professions of the applicants must be mentioned.

Applicants from the State of Maryland must be prepared to offer the affidavit of some free white person, to their having actually resided within the State of Maryland for 'twelve months' previous to the period of emigration.

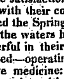
Applications may be made in Baltimore, to Hon. Judge Brice, Charles Howard Esq. of John E., John H. B. Latrobe Esq., or Charles C. Harper Esq., Agents of the Society.

BARREN CREEK SPRINGS.

THE SUBSCRIBER

Begs leave to inform his friends & the public,

That his HOUSE is now open



FOR THE RECEPTION OF VISITERS.

An anxious solicitude to promote the comfort of those who are in pursuit of health, pleasure, or business, has induced him to make such arrangements as will enable him to give ample satisfaction to those who may favour him with their company. By those who have visited the Springs, during the present season, the waters have been pronounced more powerful in their effects than hitherto experienced—operating in many cases, as a purgative medicine: Those valuable effects, in conjunction with its chalybeate properties, which are acknowledged to be unsurpassed by any waters in the world, present a powerful inducement to such as are already assailed by disease, and to those who are desirous to avoid the bilious diseases of the climate.

Persons who are inclined to try the efficacy of the waters may rest assured that every accommodation shall be provided to render them happy and comfortable; and the charges shall be apportioned to the pressure of the times.

The public's humble servant,

CHARLES LEARY.

N. B. Travellers, generally, particularly the passengers of the steam-boat Maryland, will find this an easy and commodious stage, after the arrival of the boat at Cambridge. (being only four miles distant from Vienna.) Here they will be certain to meet with the purest and best Waters of the peninsula, and a Table supplied with the best accommodations the country can afford—on the most reasonable conditions.

July 29. mku

IN CHANCERY,

12TH JULY, 1828.

ORDERED, That the sale of the real estate of William Waters, made and reported by the Trustee, Marcellus Jones, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause be shewn to the contrary on or before the 12th day of September next, provided a copy of this order be inserted once in each of three successive weeks, in one of the newspapers published in Somerset county, before the 12th day of August next. The report states the amount of sales to be $601 25.

True copy. TEST,
RAMSAY WATERS,

July 22, 1828. Reg. in Chan.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess-Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.

August 5. jf

PUBLIC SALE.

IN pursuance of an order of Somerset county Court, passed at May Term, 1828, the undersigned, or a majority of them, will sell on THURSDAY the 28th INSTANT, at Major Leary's tavern, at Barren Creek Springs, in said county, on a credit of twelve months—

All the REAL ESTATE of

LEVIN RUSSELL,

Late of said county, deceased, which was lately valued by the undersigned. The purchaser, or purchasers, to enter into bond with approved security to the heirs of said Russel for their respective proportions.

TUBMAN BEDSWORTH,
ZACCHEUS LLOYD,
BEACHAM ACKWORTH,
JAMES BOUNDS,
WILLIAM TWILLEY,

August 5—ft? Commissioners.

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess-Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

LEVIN H. POWELL.

July 8 ww

FOR RENT,

For the ensuing year, that FARM which was formerly the property of William Tilghman, dec'd, situated on the head of Back Creek. For terms apply to JAMES STEWART.

July 22, 1828. kw

☞NOTICE.

A PLANTER who desires to procure some SLAVES for his own service, will give the best prices in cash, for a few of both sexes, between the ages of 12 and 25 years. Those who have such to dispose of will please apply at Col. Dashiell's Tavern, immediately

Princess-Anne, August 4.

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year, the Houses now occupied, one by Mrs. Mary Ballard, and the other by Joseph S. Colgan, in the town of Princess-Anne. For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

July 15, 1828. k

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phœbus.

For terms apply to JAMES POLK.

June 3, 1828. wk

STOP THE RUNAWAYS.

ABSCONDED on the 23d day of July, THREE NEGROES; one negro woman named Easter, aged about 45 or 50 years, and two negro men; one by the name of Bob, dark mulatto, about 19 years old, and the other by the name of Harry, very black, about 23 years old. We will give a reward of 25 dollars if taken in the county; if either taken so much in proportion; and if taken out of the county or state, we will give 45 dollars, if secured so that we can get them again, or if either taken up so much in proportion.

THOMAS BELL,
HOPKINS WINDSON.

Nanticoke Point, July 29. vk

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.

Somerset County Orphans Court.

July 8th, 1828.

§§§§§§§§§§ ON application of Sarah Da-
§§SEAL.§§ shiell, Administratrix of John Da-
§§§§§§§§§§ shiell, (negro) late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that she give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in the Village Herald, printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test,

JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of JOHN DASHIELL, late of said county, deceased.—All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 29th of January next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 8th of July, 1828.

SARAH DASHIELL,
Adm'trix of John Dashiell, dec'd.

July 15, 1828. k

Coulbourn's C'r'k Camp Meeting

RULES.

1. This meeting will commence on Thursday the 21st inst. and will end on the following Tuesday.

2. All persons intending to erect tents must come prepared, as no timber of any description will be allowed by the managers to be cut on Mr. Coulbourn's land.

3. Nothing of any kind will be allowed to be sold within the limits prescribed by law.

4. There will be a tent kept under the direction of the managers for the accommodation of persons from a distance; likewise provision will be made for horses.

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; pound, half and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking; patent and common Taps; lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners' Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets,

Baltimore, 8th mo 4th.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset County Court and to me directed, at the suit of William T. G. Polk, administrator of Samuel Polk, against George Porter, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called White Chapel, containing 263 acres, more or less, part of a tract of land called Mount Sham, containing 1 acre, more or less; one negro boy Ebin, 1 negro woman Esther, 2 yoke of oxen, 3 head of horses, 3 cows, and 1 still, taken as the property of said Porter, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 2nd of September next, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock, P. M. at the court-house door in Princess-Anne, to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 12, 1828.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed: two at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'rs. of Thomas Byrd against Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and 1 other at the suit Hannah Hearn, Ex'x. of Wm. Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right, interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised, by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present, occupied by L. D. Collier, also one other occupied by William S. Disharoon, also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esquire's Mills, it being the office of the said Elijah; also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson & Levi Cathell, of a certain Absalom Phipps; also a dog case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Waller, Esq. in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 6th of September next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 12. m

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of 2 writs of Venditioni Exponas, one at the suit of Zadock Long use of William Roach, the other at the suit of Jeremiah Y. Dashiell, and by virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias, one at the suit of Samuel Brown, one at the suit of Jeremiah Y. Dashiell use of George W. Dashiell, 1 at the suit of George Jones survivor of George and Robert Jones, all issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed against Levin W. Ballard, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit, all the right and title of the said Ballard to part of a tract of land called Dashiell's Lot, containing 332 acres, more or less, part of Sandy Ridge and Fitzwaters, containing 156 acres more or less; one tract of land called Moore & Cascet, which the said Levin W. Ballard purchased of his father Levin Ballard, containing 134 acres, more or less; also 300 bushels of wheat, more or less; 4 yoke of oxen, and 2 colts which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 2d of September next, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. at the court-house door, in Princess-Anne to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 12.

NOTICE.

THE Levy Court of Somerset County will receive Proposals in writing on Tuesday the 26th day of August next, in reference to a Standard Bearer, in compliance with the late act of Assembly relating to Weights and Measures. Applicants will hand in their proposals on that day.

By order,
GEO. HANDY, Clk.

July 29. km

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks,

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
CA. SA.'s before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
WARRANTS.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., AUGUST 26, 1828. NO. 22.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

...Dollars a year, if paid in advance; ...50 if paid within six months; or $3 if ...d within six months.

...ubscriptions paid within 30 days af...vering the first number, (of the year ...ed for,) will be considered in ad...

...ubscription will be taken for less ...e year.

...aper will be discontinued (unless at ...or's discretion,) until all arrearages ...d off; and a failure to notify a discon...e, previous to the expiration of the ...bscribed for, will be invariably con...as a new engagement.

...apers sent by mail will be subject to ...e, to be paid by the subscribers.

...ERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, ...inserted three times for $1, and 25 ...r every subsequent insertion; those ...ng a square in the same proportion. ...ersons advertising must limit the ...insertion, otherwise their advertise...ill be continued and charged accord...

All communications addressd to the ...ust come POST PAID.

...ead, Pause, and Reflect.

...s very gratifying to me to receive ...ackson's opinions on all subjects—be...I have the utmost confidence in the ...ss of his judgment, and purity of his ...ns."

JAMES MONROE."

...friendship for Gen. Jackson, and the ...proofs of confidence and regard I ...ven him, while President, forbid my ...any part in the ensuing presidential ...."

JAMES MONROE.

..."recollection of the public relations ...h I stood to Gen. Jackson, while Pre...and the proofs given to him, of the ...stimation in which he was held by ..."

JAMES MADISON.

...n. Jackson is a clear headed, strong...d man, and has more of the Roman in ...an any man now living."

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

...n. Jackson justly enjoys in an emi...degree the public favour; and of his talents and services, no one entertains a ...or more respectful opinion than my..."

JOHN Q. ADAMS.

..."officer whose services entitle him to ...hest rewards, and whose whole career ...en signalized by the purest intentions ...e most elevated purposes."

JOHN Q. ADAMS,
When Secretary of State and Defender of Gen. Jackson.

...wards that distinguished Captain (An...ackson) who has shed so much GLORY ...country, whose renown constitutes so ...portion of its moral property, I never ...never can have, any other feelings than ...of the most profound RESPECT and ...utmost kindness."

HENRY CLAY.

...llowing is from the Albany Daily Ad...ser, (now an Adams paper,) of 1824: ...e following eulogium upon the charac...Gen. Jackson is taken from ex-president ...oe's Tour" published in 1819, before ...was an idea of Gen. Jackson's becom...candidate for the presidency. Let the ...ents of the hero look at this and hide ...hamed faces.

..."ANDREW JACKSON, command...hief of the division of the south; the ...nt found a MAN fit for any emergency ...TATESMAN, cool and dispassionate—...DIER, terrible in battle and mild in ...—a PATRIOT, whose bosom swells ...e love of country:—in fine, a man, ...like we scarce shall look upon again.'"

...be recollected that Gen. Jackson was ...ne time (1824) the candidate of the ...us party for Vice President, being ...considered by that party as the man ...t qualified by worth and services, to be ...ciated in the government with Mr. Ad...The Rochester Telegraph of 1824, ...ished his name under its editorial head ...a considerable time—And the Adams ...y generally, from Maine to Georgia, ...orted him for Vice-President, until it ...me evident that the people preferred ...for the presidency. The following, a...g other similar allusions, is found in ...Rochester Telegraph of 1824—then, ...w an Adams paper;

...e letters which are published to day ...Mr. Monroe and Gen. Jackson on high ...onourable ground; from which they ...k down upon Walter Lowrie "more in ...than in anger." The letter of Gen. Jack...ll endear him still more to the Ameri...eople. The sentiments contained in it ...rthy of the best Roman that ever lived ...are the sentiments of THE BEST A...CAN THAT EVER LIVED. The ...s of King Caucus will fail in their at...to destroy such a man. Gen. Jackson, ...hom the mantle of WASHINGTON ...o have fallen, is secure of the affections ...atitude of his country."

...bsequent paragraph is contained in a ...raphical sketch of Gen. Jackson, by ...ERT WALSH, Esq. an Adams man, and ...r of the Philadelphia Gazette:

...e copious despatches which Gen. Jack...d occasion to write to the government, ...ng his campaigns and official proceed...his numerous addresses to his troops, ...e statements and arguments, which the ...s preferred against his official conduct, ...lled him to publish for his justification, ...altogether, form a sizeable volume.—...are marked by great fluency and ener...expression; cogent reasoning; apt re...to general principles, and the utmost earnestness and apparent rectitude of intention. He writes nervously and perspicuously and he speaks with facility and force."

Extract of a letter from Andrew Stevenson, Esq. dated Saratoga Springs, July 31.

"Your letter of the 24th, reached me today at this place, and I hasten to answer and thank you for it. I had seen, before I received your letter, the first publication of the Whig, and I am indebted to you for the second, containing the certificate of Mr. ——. I need not, my dear sir, express to you my surprise and mortification at this whole proceeding; the manner in which it has been gotten up, and the use which has been made of it. You were right in supposing that I have been strangely misunderstood or misrepresented in this business: and I hasten to put you in possession of the facts. I do not know that it is at all necessary that I should do this, but I am unwilling to sit down quietly under such imputations, without, at least, an unqualified disclaimer on my part. As to the declaration ascribed to me in the certificate of Mr. ——, (separated as it is from the other parts of the conversation,) I have been grossly misunderstood by him; and take leave to say, that if it was intended by the publications which have been made, to convey the impressions to the public, that there is, or ever has been any design, or wish, or understanding on the part of the friends of General Jackson, (known to me,) to separate, or endanger the Union, in consequence of Mr. Adams' re-election or Gen. Jackson's defeat, I pronounce the whole a base calumny!— What Mr. —— may have supposed, or understood me to say, is one thing: what I meant to say, and did say, is another. It is true that he heard me conversing upon the subject of the Presidential election; and I have no doubt that I did, in the course of the conversation, express the opinion: "That the re-election of Mr. Adams, under existing circumstances, was to be deprecated, and deeply deplored, as a National calamity. That such an event would, in my opinion, go very far to impair the confidence of the American People in our free institutions; and that measures would, in all probability, ensue from his Administration, and that of his successor, which in time might endanger the peace and tranquility of the Union. That principles and doctrines had already been avowed by Mr. Adams, and some of his political friends, which, if followed out to their consequences, would justify these fears and apprehensions. That the election of General Jackson would, on the contrary, produce the happiest results." Farther than this, I am very sure, I did not go. It is exceedingly probable, that Mr. —— did not hear the whole of these remarks: and, of course has stated the general proposition which he understood me to express—stripped of all the circumstances which were intended to explain that proposition. The sentiments I then uttered, I now repeat. That I expressed any opinion at that time, or at any other, which could in the remotest degree, justify the impression, that in case Mr. Adams should be re-elected, there was any intention, or understanding, or wish, on the part of Gen. Jackson's friends (so far as I am informed) to unite in any scheme to pull down the Union, or disturb the peace and tranquility of the Nation, is wholly untrue! Such a charge cannot, I should hope, be credited by any candid and unbiased mind; and I am sure it is not believed by many of those who trumpet it forth! My opinions and feelings upon the subject, as you well know, are at war with any thing like Disunion and Revolution: and I flatter myself that there has been nothing in my past life, which could give colour, much less justify, such an imputation upon my character and honour. There is no man living, who has a deeper and more abiding feeling of attachment and devotion to the Union than myself; nor one who would sooner scorn to let the storms and strifes of party hurry him into any scheme against its peace and tranquility! Whatever my feelings and attachment to my party and political friends may be, and I admit they are very strong, (for it is impossible in this country—indeed it is not in the nature of man to expect that we should enjoy the blessings of our free institutions, without the existence of parties,) I can never suffer myself to forget, that party is for a day—the Constitution and union of my country forever! I have acted upon these principles—and when I cease to do so, I shall be willing to be stigmatised as false—not only to my country, but the peace of the Nation. However ardent I may be as a politician, and whatever difference of opinion may exist between us, as to measures or men, my first wish is, and always has been, to see all parties and sections of the country uniting, sincerely, and devotedly in the solemn duty of cherishing love for the Union, and a spirit of mutual forbearance, conciliation, and respect, for one another. I regard our confederated association, as the safest barrier against dangers from without, and the Holy Ark that is to shelter us against the tempests from within—and next to the Liberty of my country, I value its Union!

These, my dear sir, as you very well know, are my sentiments; and he is unworthy of the name of American, and the Liberty he enjoys, who entertains a less exalted attachment to our happy and glorious Confederacy! It is under the influence of these feelings and sentiments, that I am opposed to those who are now in power—and advocate the election of Andrew Jackson: And in his elevation, I feel a proud and patriotic trust, that the peace, prosperity, and happiness, of my country may be most effectually promoted."

"SIX MILITIA MEN."

The Government knew before three months of the term for which the "Six Militia men" were called into service, that Gov. BLOUNT had ordered Gen. Jackson to call them out, and that Gen. JACKSON had called them out for SIX months. If the President disapproved it—if he didn't know that it had been done in virtue of authority from the War Department deposited in Gov. Blount, why didn't he order them to be DISCHARGED? Give the people all the facts, and these questions will suggest themselves to their minds. But the Coalitionists hold back, garble, and suppress the facts.—Balt. Rep.

SUPPRESSION OF THE TRUTH.

Why did the Adams men, who concocted, prepared, and published the famous spurious pamphlet, on the subject of the execution of the "Six Militia Men," which they call an "Official Record," omit the Pay Roll, which shows that the Tennessee militia of which the "Six" were a part, were paid for SIX months, and the Muster Roll, which shows that they were mustered into service for SIX months? They were afraid of the Truth.—Why didn't they publish the Report of the Committee on Military Affairs? They were afraid of the force of its clear exposition and sound argument.

In the Report of the Committee too, it is asserted that Governor Blount ordered Gen. Jackson to call out these men for SIX months, and that General Jackson did call them into service for SIX months, and the Committee promised, in said report, to procure, and did afterwards procure, the orders of Governor Blount and that also of Gen. Jackson, which put it beyond all doubt, that these militia men were called out for SIX months, and that they knew they were called out for that term of service. These were facts, which the manufacturers of the spurious Documents didn't wish the people to see.—Balt. Rep.

Address of Thos. P. Moore, of Ky.

TO HIS CONSTITUENTS.

[We solicit the attention of our readers to the following extracts from Mr. Moore's address, which are highly illustrative of the measures of the present administration.]

The Hon. J. S. Barbour, a talented member of Congress from Virginia, stated in a speech upon the floor of the House of Representatives, that the expenditures of the last three years of Mr. Monroe's Administration and the first three years of Mr. Adams' for the same objects were as follows:

Mr. Monroe's Administration,	24,822,459 74
Mr. Adams'	33,507,767 18
Excess of the latter,	8,685,307 44

For this enormous increase of publick expenses, there is no visible cause. We have had no wars, no insurrections, nothing to augment so greatly the demands on the publick treasury. But on looking at the accounts rendered by the several departments, there is no difficulty in comprehending the whole matter. All old abuses are retained and many new ones introduced. In almost every ramification of the government, from the highest place to the lowest, there has been a considerable increase of expense. Put all these together, not only in the public offices at Washington but throughout the Union in all the details of the governmental machine, and the sum of small items making up the aggregate of millions. I shall give you a few particulars which are well authenticated, and from these you can draw a just conclusion as to the honesty and economy of the present administration.

In the department of State there are two more clerks than there were in the last administration, and yet Mr. Clay has paid more than $15,000 for extra clerk hire.

Some of the clerks in the publick offices are permitted, at their discretion to purchase all sorts of books for their own amusement or instruction, without the slightest reference to the business of the people, and charge the price to the publick. In this manner, there have been paid in the last three years, in the Department of State alone, at least $3,159!

To gratify the Heads of Department and their clerks, or perhaps to encourage certain editors, in support of men in power, there have been paid, during the last three years, in the several departments, for newspapers alone, the following sums:

Department of State,	1,633 25
War,	1,165 20
Treasury,	2,776 73
Navy,	624 43
	6,199 61

This is exclusive of near $1,000 paid to H. Niles, Esq. in the Department of State, for his Register.

The expenses in the State Department, over which, the Secretary has a discretionary control, have in the last three years, exceed ed those of the preceding three, no less than $14,536 36.

The money expended for secret service in Mr. Monroe's administration of eight years, was $4,130; while in Mr. Adams' first three years it is $12,324 67, of which $365 01, was expended in 1827.

What was done with this money? It will be remembered that Mr. Cook, of Illinois, gave the vote of that state to Mr. Adams, contrary to the will of the people, for which they turned him out at the next election.—For this sacrifice of himself, he thought he was entitled to be next minister to Columbia, and applied for that appointment. Mr. Cook himself said, that Mr. Clay told him it would not do, as the people would look upon his accepting such an office, after voting for Mr. Adams as evidence of corruption; to which he promptly replied, "Mr. Clay you ought to have thought of that before you accepted the office of Secretary of State." Not daring to reward Mr. Cook openly, they appointed him secret agent to Cuba, and paid him, it is said 5,500 dollars out of the secret service money! His appointment and the receipt of one thousand dollars before he set out, was fully proved before the Committee on Retrenchment. Thus was that secretly done which Messrs. Clay and Adams dared not do openly, and Mr. Cook received pecuniary compensation out of the people's money for giving them a President contrary to their will!

I cannot conceive what use our government had for a secret Agent in Cuba; and it is impossible to imagine what could then have made such an agency necessary. Mr. Cook was in bad health, could not speak Spanish, and was there hardly a month. Whatever cloak may be thrown over the transaction, the people cannot believe otherwise, than that he was thus rewarded for his vote in the Presidential election!

It was then declared to be inexpedient to send a minister to Columbia; but, at the late session of Congress, after General Harrison was disappointed in not receiving the appointment of Major General, it suddenly became proper to send a minister to that Republick, and the General received the appointment! It is thus that the money and the offices of the people are used to pay for and purchase political support.

Mr. Clay offered to make to the Committee a confidential communication about the money supposed to have been paid to Mr. Cook; but as they desired nothing which they would be bound to conceal from the people, they refused to receive it. Since Mr. Cook's agency was no longer a secret, what possible reason could there be for not telling the people how much money was was paid to him?

The expense of hiring messengers to carry despatches to our ministers in foreign countries, has enormously increased of late years, without any known cause. It has been as follows,

For 1822 it was	375	For 1825 it was	4,727 68
1823	3,822	1826	9,131 99
1824	2,630	1827	5,026 12
	6,827		18,885 79

For the first three years of Mr. Adams, it has been almost three times as much as for the last three of Mr. Monroe. The pay allowed for this service is enormous, and some of the items of the accounts very extraordinary. I will give a few specimens. John H. Pleasants was employed to carry despatches to Buenos Ayres and Rio Janeiro, and the following is his account as paid.

Department of State

To John H. Pleasants,	Dr.
To this sum for voyages out and home,	900
To actual expenses in travelling, expenses and board from the time of leaving Richmond, on the 19th April 1825, to the 28th May of the same year, in which interval I was seeking from Baltimore to Boston the means of getting to Buenos Ayres,	247
To expenses of my return from New-York to Richmond,	97
To per diem allowance at 6 dollars from the 19th April to the 22d August, is 126 days inclusive,	756
Approved, H. Clay, 7th Dec. 1826.	19.40

From this account who would doubt, that Mr. Pleasants went to Buenos Ayres? Yet he never did. He sailed from New-York in a vessel bound for that port, met a ship going to Antwerp, gives his despatches to the Captain of the Buenos Ayres' vessel, and went on board of the Antwerp ship; met another going to Liverpool; went on board and landed in England. Spending some weeks there, he returned to the United States, in a letter from Liverpool dated July the 7th he gives Mr. Clay his reasons for abandoning his despatches.

"The Cabin," says he, "not fifteen feet square, was destined to accommodate in a voyage which would occupy from 60 to 90 days, 25 passengers. The quantity of these individuals was in no respect  by their respective qualities; they were for the most part mechanics emigrating to that country, and the filth of their person and obstreperous  of their deportment, was by no means correspondent to the republican respectability of their profession. When the horrors of sea-sickness were superadded to the other painful circumstances attending my situation my sufferings became greater than I can describe. Deprived of every comfort, with not ten feet square for exercise, a pestilential air and most offensive smell pervading every part of the ship, and even without the most common medicines, I assure you, sir, that death would have been a welcome visiter. I was seized with a high fever, and in ten days reduced, in my own opinion, and that of those around me, to the brink of the grave." Who does not pity Mr. Clay's poor, delicate messenger thus made sick by the company of "filthy mechanicks?"—Doubtless, many of his "obstreperous" companions would have borne his despatches at one tenth of the price, and with ten times the fidelity that this delicate gentleman did. No sooner does he go out of this 'filthy' company than he begins to recover, gets back from "the brink of the grave," and on the first July finds himself in Liverpool, well enough in his own language, to devote a few weeks to the purpose of 'seeing the country.'

By this account it will be perceived, that he was paid 900 dollars for his voyages out and home, twice as much as they could have cost, even if performed in good faith. Besides, his coming home was from England, not from Buenos Ayres. He arrived in Liverpool on the 1st July, and was paid $6 per day to the 22d of August. Of course he was paid for at least seven weeks while he was in England "seeing the country" for his own pleasure!

This account forms a pretty good parallel for that of J. Q. Adams, who received $1,566 54 for a constructive journey, when his own account showed that he had made a real journey over the same ground for $886 86.

All these gentlemen messengers are paid at the rate of six dollars per day, in addition to all other travelling expenses. Now, there are among my constituents, thousands of hardy Hickory freemen, who would render their service for a third of the money, and never desert their charge to get out of the society of a few merry mechanicks.

In the account of one G. Watkins, I see the following items.

Post chaise and pair from Liverpool to London at two shilling sterling per mile,	$97 68
Expenses on the road,	10 00
	$107 68

Now, this is in style! What merry fellow would not have his post chaise instead of getting into the mail stages, if he could make the people pay for it? In coming back, this same gentleman took the stage, and his bill was as follows:

Mail coach from London to Liverpool,	$25
Expenses on the road,	5
	$30

So it cost him more than three times as much one way as it did the other, over the same road; but as the people paid the money, it was not worth while to dispute his account!

Our rulers have not only got into the habit of sending messengers to carry despatches abroad, when they could be sent just as safely and at a fourth of the expense, by captains of ships or passengers; but they have commenced sending them from one part of our own country to another, where the public mails are constantly running. In these accounts I see the following items:

To W. Slade, for bearing despatches to New-York,	$100
F. C. Baker, for bearing despatches to Norfolk, to Mr. Miller,	40
G. E. Ironside, for carrying despatches to Mr. Gallatin, at New-York,	85
T. L. Thorton, carrying despatches to Mr. Lawrence, New York,	85
C. Goodrich, bearing despatches to Mr. Wheaton, New-York,	60

Cannot the government trust its own mails? I have no doubt these despatches would have gone just as safely, and it is probable more speedily, by this mode of conveyance. But by giving the letters to a friend, the Heads of Departments enable them to draw their travelling expenses, and often a snug little sum besides out of the public Treasury.

Out of the contingent fund for foreign intercourse, a lawyer's fee of $500 has been paid to the Attorney General, for appearing in the case of the United States against Gooding in the Maryland District. For attending to the business of the government, this officer is paid a salary of $3,500. Besides, when Congress gives a certain sum of money to the Executive to pay the expenses of foreign intercourse, what business have they to fee lawyers with it?

There have been abuses in the expenditure of the money appropriated to the support of foreign missions in more respects than one.

W. B. Rochester, was paid something like $1000 as salary, in the capacity of Secretary to the abortive Panama mission, while he was electioneering for the office of Gov. of N. York.

Rufus King, the persecutor of the Irish, was appointed minister to England in pursuance of Mr. Adams' written pledge that he would not neglect the federalists in his appointments, whence he returned in one year; pocketing an outfit of 9,000, a salary of $9,000 and how much more for return and contingences I know not. Albert Gallatin was then sent to the same court, under an express understanding it is believed, that he should stay but one year. He also pocketed his $9,000 outfit, $9000 salary, and I know not how much more for return and contingencies. James Barbour is now sent out with his $9,000 outfit. Here is $27,000 paid for outfits of ministers to England in about three years. An outfit was also paid to John A. King, as charge d'affaires at the same court, amounting to $4,500, and I suppose a like sum to the person left in possession of the papers by Mr. Gallatin. This will make $36,000 paid for outfits to that court in about three years! In the name of economy, could not the President find some person well qualified for this station, who would consent to hold it at least four years? A step of this kind would have saved no less than $27,000

The amount paid to John A. King, is not only exorbitant, but unlawful. He was Secretary of Legation to his father, Rufus King. After Mr. King had notified the President of his intention to return, and after Mr. Gallatin had been appointed his successor and was on his way to receive him, he started home, leaving his son in custody of the papers for sixty-two days before Mr. Gallatin's arrival. For this, John A. King was paid $4,500 as outfit, and $758 15 as salary, making in all $5,258 15: this is at the rate of eighty-eight dollars per day!!

But he was not by law, entitled either to outfit or salary, as charge d'affares. An act of Congress, passed in 1810, expressly provides that no person shall be entitled to outfit or salary as charge d'affaires, unless he shall be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the senate, and then allows an outfit only on going from the United States. John A King was not so appointed, nor did he go from the United States. The payment made to him, therefore, was as unlawful as it was exhorbitant. So glaring is this case, that the Committee on Retrenchment have recommended that he be sued and compelled to refund the money.

In one instance it was proved before the Committee, that a Clerk in the Treasurer's office, for whom Congress appropriated a salary of $1,700, had rendered no service whatever for one year: that during the first quarter, he received his whole salary; but after that, he was paid at the rate of $800 only, and the balance was arbitrarily divided among the other Clerks, thus increasing their salaries above the sums fixed by Congress. Thus sinecures are introduce, and an arbitrary control assumed over money appropriated by the representatives of the people.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 26, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory." Jefferson.

"Whose services to this nation, entitle him to its HIGHEST REWARDS."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

We are authorized to announce

Thomas Bayly,
John C. Wilson, jr.,
Anthony B. Bennett, and
John J. Davis, Esq'rs.

as Candidates to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

The "Six Militia-Men."

We insert, in our paper of to-day, the Report of the committee of Congress on Military affairs, in relation to the execution of the Six Militia-Men. This document places the subject in so strong and forcible a light that the candid can no longer entertain a doubt as to the legality, and the propriety, of the execution of these men. It will be seen that they were regularly drafted, and mustered into service, for the term of SIX months—That before the expiration of THREE months they were guilty of MUTINY and DESERTION—That they were tried by a court martial, according to law, and were by the court sentenced to death. The mutiny, desertion, trial and execution of these men took place at Mobile, while Gen. Jackson was at New Orleans; a distance of between two and three hundred miles from Mobile. General Jackson could consequently only be acquainted with the affair by the representations of others. These men had been tried and condemned by their fellow soldiers; men who had heard all the testimony for and against them; men who had witnessed what distraction their conduct had occasioned in the camp; men who had observed their behaviour on the trial, and who saw that unless an example was made of the ringleaders of the mutiny, nothing but ruin, disaster and defeat awaited the army. But how is Gen. Jackson censurable for the execution of these men? They were not tried by him, but were tried by a court martial. The only thing he could have done, would have been, to have pardoned them. That he had a right to pardon them is not disputed; and so has the Governor of Maryland a right to pardon the most flagitious murderer. He has a right to open the doors of the penitentiary and to empty upon society all that flood of iniquity of which it has been the duty and employment of our courts of justice, for many years, to rid the state. But it is a power given to the governor not to be exercised without good and sufficient grounds. The governor of Maryland never pardons a convict without a recommendation from respectable persons, and seldom without a recommendation from the court which condemned him. Gen. Jackson was placed in precisely the same situation in relation to the six militia-men. He had a power to pardon them, but there was no recommendation for a pardon. Nay, the court saw no mitigating circumstances in their favour, and positively refused to interpose between them and the sentence of the law.—These six militia-men were ringleaders of the mutiny, and consequently were the proper persons to be made an example of. The rest of the mutineers, amounting to nearly two hundred, having been seduced from their duty by these six, were recommended by the court to Gen. Jackson for clemency, and were consequently pardoned.

Who is so well prepared to say whether the public safety required that these men should be made a public example of as the officers and soldiers in the army. That mutiny plainly showed that there was not only discontent, but treason, among the troops—It became necessary to check it in the bud. This became the more necessary as it was evident from the hostile attitude of the British forces, that a desperate effort was meditated by the enemy to retrieve the losses they had sustained in the battle of New Orleans. At this crisis of fearful apprehension was it not of the utmost consequence to the safety of the nation, as well as to the very being of the army, that the strictest order should be observed, even though it could not be enforced but by a rigid discipline? Without order and discipline what is an army? If the soldiery are permitted to fall into drunkenness and debauchery, to disobey the command of their officers, to desert and return at pleasure, nothing but total ruin can ensue.—Ancient, as well as modern, history affords no instances of the military success of any nation where the army was not under a rigid discipline. Unless discipline be strictly enforced, the sober, the virtuous, and the brave, must occasionally fall victims to the sword of the enemy by the vice, the folly, and the treachery of the dissolute. But if the six militia-men were improperly executed, why did we not hear something about it before Gen. Jackson was proposed for President? And why did John Quincy Adams say that "Gen. JACKSON's whole career had been signalized by the purest intentions and most elevated purposes"?

Congress—House of Representatives.

TENNESSEE MILITIAMEN.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the committee on Military Affairs, to which the subject had been referred, made the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the documents communicated by the Secretary of War, in obedience to the call of this House, of the 16th of January, relative to the proceedings of a Court Martial, which commenced its sitting at or near Mobile, on the 5th of December, 1814, for the trial of certain Tennessee Militiamen, together with the correspondence between the Governor of that State and the Secretary of War, respecting the length of service of militia drafts of that State, during the late war, report:

That, by the reference of these papers to your Committee, they have been unable to place any other construction on your order, than, that it was the intention of the House, that they should examine the same, and determine whether all the documents had been communicated, or were on file in the Department, necessary to a true understanding of the case to which the call for these documents is applicable; and, if any were wanting, to ascertain in what manner the deficient papers could be supplied; and, in reporting upon the nature of the transactions, which these papers disclose, to determine whether the legislative interference of Congress be necessary, as to any amendment, either of Rules and Articles of War, or the laws governing the militia of the United States.

In the discharge of this duty, your Committee will proceed succinctly to state to the House, the character of the documents transmitted by the Department of War; the periods and events to which they are applicable; the law and public exigency under which the Governor of Tennessee, during the last war, ordered out the militia drafts of that State, for the common defence of our country; and, lastly, the crimes and offences committed by a portion of the militia drafts so ordered out, which produced a necessity for the examples which were made, and which are disclosed in the proceedings of the Court Martial, convened at or near Mobile, on the 5th of December, 1814.

The first criticism to which the correspondence transmitted, in obedience to the order of this House, by the Department of War, is liable, is the numerical classification, made by that Department, of the letters composing this correspondence.

The Secretary of War has transmitted twelve letters, which passed between the then Secretary, General Armstrong, and Governor Blount. Instead of commencing the series with the letter first in date, by which the inducement would be shown for the reply, this order is inverted and the series commences with a letter from the Secretary of War, of the 3d of January, 1814, marked No. 1; and his letters are continued to No. 5. It so happens, that the first letter in date, is as low down as No. 6, Gov. Blount's of the 10th of December, 1813; and the second letter in date, is No. 7—Governor Blount's of the 24th of December, 1813; to both of which, the letter of the 3d of January, 1814, of the Secretary of War, is an answer.

Your Committee believe that this arrangement of the correspondence, is calculated to lead to serious misapprehension; that a reader, not very attentive to a comparison of dates, would suppose that the letter of the 3d of January, 1814, referred to such militia drafts as were to be made in that year, when it was exclusively applicable to the drafts which had been made in 1813, for the prosecution of the Creek war, and which were admitted to have been executed but for three months. The injustice which, by a confusion of dates, would be done, even by possibility, to the parties concerned in the transactions of the militia drafts of Tennessee, which were made for six months in 1814 by applying the letter of the Secretary of War, of the 3d of January, 1814, to subsequent drafts for six months, instead of those which were made in 1813, for three months, has induced the Committee so to arrange the correspondence, that the leading letter, in the series, should come out first, and the subsequent letters follow in the natural order of their respective dates. This obviously just classification being observed it will be perceived, that the letter of the 3d of January, 1814, has no bearing upon the drafts of militia, which were afterwards made for six months, in the progress of that year, by the Governor of Tennessee, of which the regiment under the command of Col. Pipkin composed a part.

A perusal of the correspondence just recited of the muster rolls of the different companies of Col. Pipkin's regiment, and the proceedings of the Court Martial which was convened "at Mobile, on the 5th December, 1814, for the trial of certain Tennessee militiamen," present upon their face the following enquiries:

1st. Whether the Governor of Tennessee, had the power to order out detachments of the militia of that State for a six months' tour of service?

2dly. Whether Col. Pipkin's regiment was so ordered out, and in conformity with such authority?

3dly. Whether the soldiers of the regiment, who were arraigned for certain crimes and offences before "a Court Martial, which convened at Mobile on the 5th December, 1814," were legally tried; and whether the commanding General, approving the proceedings of that Court properly exercised the power and discretion vested in him by law?

In relation to the first branch of the enquiry it will be proper to premise, that, on the 10th of April, 1812, in anticipation of the war about to take place, Congress passed an act, which will be found in the 4th vol. of the Laws of the United States, page 406; which authorizes the President "to require the different executives of the states to organize their respective proportions of 100,000 militia, and to call into service the whole, or a part of these quotas; which detachments were not compelled to serve longer than six months, after they arrived at the place of rendezvous." This act was an enlargement of the act of 1795, which restricted the service of the militia, when called out by the authority of the United States, to three months.

The act of the 10th of April, 1812, expired by its own limitation on the 10th of April, 1814. On the 11th of January, 1814, whilst, however, this law was in full force, the then Secretary of War, Gen. Armstrong, wrote the letter, numbered 2 in the documents, to Governor Blount, which authorizes him "to supply, by militia drafts, or by volunteers, any deficiency which may arise in the militia division under the command of Major General Jackson, and without referring on this head to this Department;" and further informs Gov. Blount that "it may be well that your excellency consult general Pinckney on such occasions, as he can best judge of the whole number necessary to the attainment of the public objects."

This letter, in the opinion of your committee, vested plenary power in Gov. Blount, until it was revoked, either by express orders, or by peace, to call out such militia drafts as, in his discretion, he might think necessary "for the attainment of the public objects," under the existing laws.

On the 18th of April, 1814, 4th vol. Laws of the United States, page 703, sec. 8, Congress enacted "that the militia, when called into the service of the U. States, by virtue of the before recited act, may, if, in the opinion of the President of the U. States, the public interest require it, be compelled to serve for a term not exceeding six months after their arrival at the place of rendezvous, in one year. This law was to continue in force during the war.

After the passage of this act, it does not appear that the President revoked the power which he had given to Gov. Blount, by virtue of the letters of the Secretary of War, of the 11th and 31st of January, 1814; but he seems to have been willing, from his silence, coupled with the notorious fact of Gov. Blount's continuing to order out militia drafts, under the discretionary authority of those letters, to consider that such drafts as Gov. Blount should order out, were, in his opinion, required "by the public interest."

And, your committee think, that this proposition may be put more affirmatively, to wit: that it was the "opinion of the President that the public interest did require" that Gov. Blount should, under the advisement, or by the requisitions of Gen. Pinckney, have the power to order out militia drafts, either for three or six months, as the exigencies of the service should render necessary, "without referring, on this head," to the President for special directions.

This deduction they consider irresistible and conclusive, and that there was nothing in the act of April 18th, 1814, which prevented the President from expressing his opinion, through general instructions, to the Executive of a State, whose orders for militia drafts, under such discretion, should, de facto and de jure, be the opinion of the President, "that such drafts were required by the public interest."

This inference, your committee moreover believe, if they thought it necessary to go into such an investigation, might be sustained by the cotemporary constructions which were given to this clause in the act of April, 1814, in the actual discretion which was vested in the Executives of several of the States.

2dly. Your committee are now brought to enquire, whether Col. Pipkin's regiment was ordered out for six months, and in conformity with the above cited authority? It appears, by the muster rolls, that this regiment was regularly inspected, and mustered into service for six months, to wit: on the 20th of June, 1814; and that, consequently, their term of service expired on the morning of the 20th of December, 1814. In the absence of all other proof, these records are to be considered as the highest evidence, not only of the fact, but of the legal presemption, that the muster and inspection were made with requisite authority.

But it is a circumstance of public and indisputable notoriety, and one which belongs to the history of the country, that Col. Pipkin's detachment was mustered into service expressly for six months, by virtue of an order of Gov. Blount, dated the 20th of May, 1814; a certified copy of which, your committee have taken steps to procure, that it may be placed on the files of this House, with the documents from the war department.

This order recited that the draft was made in compliance "with the requisition of Major General Pinckney, and in furtherance of the views of Government by a latitude given to him (Gov. Blount) by the War Department, in regard to calls for men to act against the Creeks." This draft was ordered to rendezvous on the 20th of June, 1814, at Fayetteville, Tennessee; and formed the identical detachment of one thousand men, who were afterwards placed under the command of Col. Pipkin, and stationed in the summer and autumn of that year, at the posts in the Creek country. And by reference to Gov. Blount's letter of the 19th Oct. 1814, (No. 11,) it will be seen that he specially reported this regiment of one thousand men, to the Secretary of War, as in service for six months; from which fact, the inference is inseparable, that the President considered it as legally in service, or it was the bounden duty of the Secretary to have ordered their immediate discharge; which it no where appears that he ever did. If, therefore, any confirmation was wanted for the original authority by which the draft was made for six months, your committee consider that Gov. Blount's report of the 19th of October, and the implied sanction of the President, incontestibly furnish it.

3dly. Whether the soldiers of Col. Pipkin's regiment, who were arraigned for certain crimes and offences before a Court Martial, which convened at Mobile, on the 5th December, 1814, were legally tried; and whether the commanding general, approving the proceedings of this Court properly exercised the power and discretion vested in him by law?

By reference to the proceedings of the Court Martial in question, it will be seen, that two commissioned officers and about 200 non-commissioned officers and privates of Col. Pipkin's regiment were tried for the most serious offences which can be committed in the military service of the country.

That these offences first consisted in "exciting and causing a mutiny;"—secondly, in the commission of an actual mutiny, accompanied by circumstances of aggravated robbery and spoliation of the public stores; and, thirdly, in the crime of desertion.

The two first of these offences, to wit: "exciting and causing a mutiny," and actually committing mutiny, "by forcing the guard, and seizing the commissaries' storehouse and stores at Fort Jackson, were committed, the first, before the 19th of September, 1814; and before even three months' service of this detachment had expired. That some of the mutineers were deluded into a belief that they were about to be wrongfully detained in service, beyond the term for which they were legally drafted, your committee think not improbable; and those who were thus likely to be deluded, the court recommended to the clemency of the commanding General, who, it appears pardoned them; and that all the rest of the mutineers and deserters were condemned to trivial punishments, neither affecting life nor limb, excepting six of the ringleaders, to wit: David Morrow, a sergeant in captain Strother's company, Jacob Webb, John Harris, Henry Lewis, David Hunt, and Edward Linsey, privates in Col. Pipkin's regiment, who were found guilty either of causing, or exciting a mutiny, before the 18th of September, 1814, or committing a mutiny, or deserting whilst on post, before the 19th of September, 1814, and suffered death in consequence.

By an examination of the trials of these six ringleaders, it will be seen, that they were prominently guilty, either of "exciting and causing a mutiny," or of being the leaders of a mutiny; the first before, and the last on, the 19th of September, 1814; and that John Harris, to whose name such remarkable notoriety has been attached, was engaged some time prior, "in causing and exciting a mutiny," by carrying even a muster roll of mutiny and desertion throughout the camp, to procure the names of those who were willing, and would pledge themselves to commit these crimes.

To these facts your committee will now apply the law. The act of 1795, provides "that the militia in the service of the United States shall be governed by the Rules and Articles of War." By the 7th article of the Rules and Articles of War, "any officer or soldier, who shall begin, excite, or join in any mutiny or sedition, in any troop, or company in the service of the United States; or in any party, post, detachment, or guard, shall suffer death, or such other punishments, as, by a Court Martial, shall be inflicted." By the 8th article, a similar penalty is awarded, where any officer or soldier "does not use his utmost endeavours to suppress a mutiny, or, coming to the knowledge of an intended mutiny, does not, without delay, give information thereof to his commanding officer." And, by the 20th article, the crime of desertion is punishable "by death, or such other punishments, as, by "sentence of a Court Martial shall be inflicted.

These facts and these principles, furnish a complete vindication of the court, whose painful duty it was to condemn six of their fellow-citizens to a severe and ignominious punishment.

But if all the reasoning of your Committee was absurd and valueless as to the fact, that these men were rightfully in service for six months, and it were even admitted that they were drafted but for three months, the proceedings of the Court would stand without spot, blame or legal impeachment. As the crimes for which these unfortunate human beings suffered death, were committed before three months of their term of service had expired; and by the 12th section of the act of the 18th April, 1814, which was then in full force, and which provides, "that any commissioned officer, musician, or private, of the militia of the United States, may be tried and punished for the same, although his term of service may have expired, in like manner as if he had been actually in the service of the United States;" it is, therefore, obvious that these men could be legally detained for trial and punishment, even if they could have been considered as in service but for three months.

That they had a fair and impartial trial, your committee see no reason to doubt, and the mere fact of their jurors being their own officers, fellow-citizens, and, probably neighbours, secured the presence of that sympathy which leads to the most merciful interpretation (where it is just to apply it) of the conduct and motives of others.

That General Jackson, commanding in chief, in the Military Division, in which these events transpired, properly exercised the power and discretion, vested in him, by law, by approving the proceedings of this Court, your committee, likewise, perceive no reason to doubt. It is true, that they were approved on the 22d of January fourteen days after the victory of the 8th, by which the enemy had been repulsed from the Mississippi. But the General was, at this time, ignorant of the pacification at Ghent; and, moreover, must have been apprised that a part of the enemy had gone round, and had concentrated his forces, in the neighbourhood of Mobile, in that very vicinity where these outrageous acts of insubordination, mutiny, and desertion, had taken place. That such a concentration of the enemy's forces, is a fact beyond all dispute, as on the 11th of February, Fort Boyer was attacked and captured.

The Commanding General must, also, have known that it was on volunteer or militia drafts the defence of the southern coast would rest; whilst the flagrant mutinies and desertions in the campaign of 1813, of the militia drafts of that year, must have admonished him of the necessity of striking a severe, yet salutary, example in the minds of those who were liable to be mislead.

Although the clemency of the General was not invoked by the Court, it is true, he might have pardoned these victims of their own crimes; but there are occasions when mercy is but another name for weakness: when even a severe and unalterable firmness, in the discharge of our duty, is the most perfect justice we can render to our country.

The examples of this stern and enlightened justice, are scattered throughout the pages of History, not for the abhorrence, but the respect of mankind; they are found, not only in the most instructive morals which the lessons of antiquity afford, but they illustrate the incomparable services of him, who was, and ever will be venerated, as "the Father of our country."

In conclusion, your committee will barely remark, that as the acts of 1812 and expired, the one by its own limitation the other by the termination of the w see nothing in the transaction, which been their duty to examine, from its close, which calls for the legisla terference of this House in the shape amendment to the Rules and Articles or to the existing laws governing the whilst in the service of the U. States.

From the Doylestown (Pa.) Demo

DAYS OF YORE.

The administration prints are still engaged in endeavouring to mislead the lic mind respecting Gen. Jackson's p and particularly that part of it which to his conduct during the late war. W therefore thought it but justice due the acter of Gen. Jackson to lay before the some sketches of the history of our c in order to show how far that great has become the victim of malicious p tion.

It is well known to those who are ac ed with the history of the American tion, that Gen. Washington and the under his command, pursued the m handed measures which, in the end, ated the independence of the count finally gained them the lasting grat every friend to American freedom. W have before us a proclamation issued Washington, from head-quarters, town, New Jersey, in the winter of 1 which he orders "That all found guilty sertion, shall be punished with deat Marshall's Life of Washington stat while the army was quartered here, tions for desertion were frequent. A broke out at Fort Schuyler,* in the S New York, in the year 1780, and th of the men of that garrison marched body. Being pursued by order of Gen. ington, 16 of them were overtaken, of the sixteen were instantly killed. year 1781, one hundred and sixty of troops mutined. The American Howe, with a considerable force, was to take methods for reducing them to ence. Convinced that there was no m between dignity and servility but c and that no other remedy could be without the deepest wound to the servi determined to proceed against them cision. Gen. Howe marched from Ki about midnight, and by the dawning had his men in four different positions, vent the revolters from making their Every avenue being secured, Col. was sent to them, with orders to par mediately without arms, and to mar particular spot of ground. Some hes appearing among them, Col. Sproat a rected to advance, and only five m were given to the mutineers to comp the orders which had been sent them. had its effect; and they, to a man, without arms to the appointed ground officers gave a list of the leaders of volt, upon which Gen. Howe desired select three of the greatest offender court martial was immediately held these three, and they were unanimous tenced to death. Two of them were ed on the spot, and the executioners lected from among the most active in tiny. It should be recollected, that al riods to which we have referred, the can army was in the most distressed tion; many of the men were kept in beyond the periods for which they gaged to serve—no pay, and scarce clothing, and this too, in an inclement And what rendered their condition st wretched, they were kept on scanty ance of provision. The English were ing every artifice in their power to the American soldiers to desert—pr them all the arrearages of pay due the American government, if they ly join the British standard; and, if sired it, an exemption from military It is not strange, then, taking the sufferings of the army into conside that both mutinies and desertions we quent. But, notwithstanding all thi how prompt the American officers punishing disobedience of orders. year 1779, the whigs and tories had a and bloody conflict in South Carolin former were commanded by Col. P and the latter by Col. Boyd. The tori defeated with great slaughter, and a of them fell into the hands of the vic Seventy of them were tried and con to death: the sentence, however, carried into effect upon more tha ten of them. The residue were pa on condition of their joining the A standard. In the year 1780, Colonel Campbell and Cleveland, with a bod merican volunteers, attacked a stro of British and tories commanded Ferguson, on the top of King's m near the confines of North and South lina. Col. F.'s force was defeated, loss of 225 in killed and wounded, prisoners. Ten tories who had surre were immediately hanged by the conq In the year 1781, a body of Americ troops, under the command of Gen. and Col. Lee, had another most bl gagement with about 350 tories in No rolina, commanded by Col. Pyles. In tion the tories were completely beat nearly the whole of their force wa killed or made prisoners. The conque this occasion hung a great number most obnoxious among the vanquish

While Gen. Greene lay with his the neighbourhood of Camden, South lina, in 1781, he ordered eight of hung in one day for desertion. Th very salutary effect, and in a great prevented the evil practice for a time. In the same year, the British mericans had an engagement at Court-house; Gen. Stevens, the com of the Virginia militia, posted forty at equal distance, about 20 paces in of his militia brigade, with orders down every man who should leave hi General Greene also pursued the same with the militia in his southern cam and in obedience to these orders, se the deserting militia were put to instan A short time after the battle at Springs, General Greene detected a c acy in his camp; and after making an gation into the affair, twelve of the ers were put to death. He took this order to ensure that subordination so essentially requisite for the govern an army. We might enumerate many similar cases, but we do not conceiv cessary. What we have already amply sufficient to give colouring high-handed and malicious pe which has been dealt out against General Jackson, respecting the six militiamen."

Before we proceed further, let us inquire who are they who have been so assiduously labouring to sear the laurels of our Hickory? Why, it is a knot of political intriguers who are daily lapping in the treasury porridge—fattening on the "wages of sin," and Swiss like, fighting the battles of those who pay them best. But what has been the result of the investigation instituted by this pensioned corps? Why, that in a military service of more than six years, Gen. Jackson has sanctioned the execution of only six men; and during this time he had under his command, at different periods, more than thirty thousand men. We cannot but wonder that the number of executions should have been so small, when we take into consideration the numerous desertions and frequent mutinies with which he had to contend. But what were these six men executed for? Was it for desertion? No, Gen. Jackson never sanctioned the execution of a man for desertion only—these men suffered for mutiny—mutiny of the most daring and outrageous nature; for menacing the lives of their officers—encouraging desertion—burning down the bake house—shooting the beeves—breaking open the military chests—pillaging the public stores, and finally jeopardising the whole military establishment at Fort Jackson. Such were the crimes which these "wolves in sheep's clothing" expiated with their lives. One hundred and eighty men who deserted at the same time, were brought back and sentenced to have their wages stopped and their heads shaved, as a punishment for their bad conduct; But Gen. Jackson promptly remitted the sentence. What a noble example! How benevolent and humane! Not willing to punish his fellow beings, (though richly merited,) further than the public good absolutely demanded. Now, we ask the candid to observe how prompt the officers of our revolutionary army were in punishing every breach of duty: let them also bear in mind the distress and poverty of that period, which would naturally incline soldiers to become restive. Then let them view the military life of Gen. Jackson, and see how completely all his steps are justified by examples which have been set by the purest patriots, whose conduct has never been called in question. We invite inquiry into this man's character—we challenge scrutiny—the more it is examined into, the more heart-rending will be the groans of the pensioned "Ebony" corps, and the more signal our "Hickory" triumph.

SPIRIT OF '76.

*For the truth of our statement we refer the Reader to Ramsey's History of the American Revolution.

†See the life of Gen. Greene.

In order to present a complete expose of the baseness of the Coalition charges against Gen. Jackson, and their inconsistency, we republish the following article:

THE SIX MILITIA MEN.

If the Coalitionists are sincere in their weeping and wailing over the dead bodies of the six mutineers, who suffered for their violations of the law, why do they not howl over the fate of the 86 men, who, (all but 3) were shot to death during the war, by different officers, for similar offences? According to the records of the war department, 86 men were 'shot to death,' viz:

15 by order of General Izard
2 by order of general Cadwallader
9 by order of general Lewis
4 by order of general Wilkinson
19 by order of general Gaines
4 by order of general Bloomfield
6 by order of general Scott
11 by order of general Dearborn
5 by order of general Courtney
1 by order of general Pinckney
1 by order of Mr. Madison
1 by order of Mr. Monroe
1 by order of Governer Tompkins
1 by order of general Brown
5 by order of general Chandler
4 by order of general Hampton

Is Mr. Madison a murderer? Is Mr. Monroe a murderer? Is General Scott a murderer?—Is General Gaines a murderer? Were all these murderers? Generals McArthur, Harrison and Macomb also had their men 'shot to death' for similar offences. Were they also murderers?—Citizen.

BE ON YOUR GUARD!!

MORE TRICKS!!

We notice in "The Marylander," of the 16th instant, the following notice:

LIFE OF GEN. JACKSON.

☞ Just published and for sale at the printing office of "The Marylander," "A True and Impartial History of the Life and Services of General Andrew Jackson." This work is compiled from the most authentic sources, and reference made thereto for every leading fact—It is printed in a cheap form, so that its contents may be the more extensively disseminated—As a book of reference it will be found very convenient to the politician at the present moment—The demand which it has already obtained, will probably soon exhaust the present edition, it not being very extensive. Price, 6¼ cents single copy, 50 cents per dozen, $4 per hundred, or $32 per thousand. August 13th. 1828.

It becomes our duty to inform our friends that there is no reliance to be placed on the statements in this new publication. It is true we have not read the work, but that it should be for sale at the office of the Marylander—a paper got up by the Coalition to support their faltering cause, and that it should be for sale for the enormous sum of Six and a Quarter Cents! are of themselves sufficient indications of its character and value. There is not a doubt but it was written with a view to political purposes, and not with a design to give the world just and correct views of the character and services of Gen. Jackson.

OHIO.

A GOOD SIGN.—The Ohio People's Press, says—"John Sloane, the celebrated Coalition Commissary General of Calumny, has actually "BACKED OUT," and is afraid to stand a poll for Congress, in the district which he has so shamefully misrepresented. The election of Doctor McCook, the Jackson candidate, is placed beyond doubt."

LOUISIANA!

From the West Jersey Observer.

"Dont halloo before you are out of the Woods."

The Adams men have been making a great noise for the last week, about what they have called a great triumph in Louisiana.—They have cried out Hail Sister Louisiana!!! as though they thought the election depended upon the 5 votes of that State. They have clapped their wings and crowed as loud and lustily, as any little banty on the dung hill. And after all, in the language of the honest Hibernian, they have GAINED a LOSS.

Mr. BRENT, the most decided advocate of ADAMS and the enemy of General Jackson, is DEFEATED; and Mr. GURLEY, the other ADAMS candidate, only succeeded by a majority of 40 or 50 votes. The State Legislature, in which last year the Adams party had a majority of 12, the JACKSON PARTY have now a decided majority and will elect a JACKSON SENATOR.

Poor fellows, beaten in every quarter and almost desperate, they seized upon the crumb of comfort from New Orleans, and resolved to make the most of what little good news they could find, without waiting to ascertain its truth. They have enjoyed a week of boasting and much good may it do them.

We have just seen an extract from the N. Orleans Argus, of 25th ult. which says, that Overton's (the Jackson candidate's) majority over Brent (the Adams candidate) in the whole district is 459. The Adams candidate Gurley received a majority of only 42 votes over Saunders, the Jackson candidate.

The Louisiana Advertiser says, the Adams men rejoiced greatly about Louisiana, when they heard that Livingston (who has been absent from the state about 3 years,) was defeated: but since they have learned that Brent was also defeated, that Gurley owed his election to Jackson men, and that the Jackson party had a majority in the State Legislature on joint ballot—and will elect Livingston to Congress—they have become quite testy and snappish about it.

Such is the result of the "POLITICAL VICTORY" about which the Ebony editors "HUZZA'D" so much! Why don't they publish it?

KENTUCKY ELECTION.

The returns of the election in this state, as far as received, give Metcalfe a majority of 2055. The Richmond Enquirer says, "From the returns already received it is established that the Opposition [Jackson party] has gained seven Representatives in the State Legislature. This goes to show, (as we shall satisfactorily prove in our next, when we expect to give the entire returns,) that local politics and local politics alone, prevented the election of the Jackson candidate.

From the U. S. Telegraph, August 20.

INDIANA.

The Journal of this morning claims Messrs. Test and Jennings as the candidates of the administration party, and if Governor Ray* should happen to be elected, he too will be their candidate.

We learn that Mr. Test, in a letter to a friend in this [Washington] city, says that he is elected, by about 2000 votes.

He, however, does not place his election to the account of the Presidential question.

As to Mr. Jennings we wish the administration much joy of his election. After claiming him, it will not surprise us if the election of Gen. Jackson himself should be claimed as an administration triumph.

*Mr. Ray was a friend of the administration, but consented after he had announced himself as a candidate for re-election to the office of Governor, to be considered a Jacksonian.—Balt. Repub.

From the Philadelphia Gazette.

INDIANA.—The friends of Andrew Jackson only six weeks before the election took up Dr. Canby as their candidate for Governor, as they could not trust the political principles of Mr. Ray, who also run as a Jackson candidate. By a gentleman who arrived this morning direct, we learn that Dr. Canby was far ahead of both the other candidates in every county that had been heard from, and every county heard from had elected Jackson members of the Legislature.

ILLINOIS.—The election in this state terminated on the 6th inst. The Illinois Corrector, printed a few days before the election, says—Local politics and personal feelings will commingle in the contest. The principal subjects controverted in the papers are the public lands and the location of a Penitentiary. One party wishing the the Penitentiary located on the Mississippi, &c.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Mr. Zieber,

I have just received a Coffin Hand-Bill and am desirous that this type of the death of the present administration should have general circulation in this county. Can you spare the time, during the ensuing week, to publish 4 or 500 copies? Custom reconciles many hardships and it would be magnanimous to habituate the coalitionists in this district to their doom. A few of these Coffin Hand-Bills have been in the county a month or so, but have only been shewn by the Master Spirit of the Coalition, and a few of his Satellites, to gull and deceive honest men.

Qui fit Mæcenas?

Note.—If the author of the above communication will furnish us with the hand-bill he speaks of we will preserve it for exhibition—Admittance 12½ cents, children half price—and the proceeds shall be applied to the replenishing of the Contingent Funds of our national Government, as we deem it highly essential that some means should be resorted to, to replenish those departments.

Ed. V. Herald.

CAN ANY DOUBT WHAT FOLLOWS?

[From the Del. Gazette.]

To the Methodists of Delaware.—We ask the particular attention of that portion of our citizens who are of the Methodist profession to the letter below. We are averse to the mingling of Religion with politics in any shape, but we cannot permit the religious feeling of any set of christians to be abused without undeceiving them, where that is in our power. The friends of Mr. Adams grossly violated the well established character of the Methodists, by asserting that at their late convention at Pittsburg, nearly three fourths of the Convention were in favour of Adams. The Reverend Moses Crume, and several others of that body over their own signatures, disavowed this statement. We have now the letters of two more of the Methodist Clergy who attended the Pittsburg Conference and submit this testimony in favour of General Jackson to you without comment.—

"Most of the Methodists in the State of New Hampshire personally knew the Rev. Joseph A. Merrill; and to all such, the following statement is just as conclusive as would be a personal knowledge of the facts it contains.

"St. Johnsbury, Vt. July, 1828.

"Dear Sir—I write for the purpose of sending to you a very valuable extract of a letter from the Rev. Joseph A. Merrill of Boston, to N. Rix, jr. Esq. in Littleton, N. H. It will be recollected that Joseph A. Merrill was a member of the Pittsburg Conference, which has been so basely libelled by the administration papers.

"Mr. Merrill says, "I will here state some circumstances which I have learned from cources most creditable, respecting General Jackson's private character. Being in Pittsburg, Pa. at the General Conference, in May last, I made very particular enquiry of the delegates from Tennessee and Kentucky, who were personally acquainted with Gen. Jackson, and found that in every instance he was spoken of as a man of great intelligence, honour, and integrity; and by the Clergy; who are men capable of judging, and incapable of dissembling, (as I believe) he is held in high consideration for his abilities and generous American feelings and views. I will give you an extract of a letter from a venerable Clergyman not far from seventy years of age, who has had an acquaintance with Gen. Jackson for many years, to whom I applied for information respecting Gen. Jackson's private character.

"In compliance with your request respecting Gen. Jackson's private character, I will say, and what I say, I think is the opinion of all religious people, who are intimately acquainted with him, I have lived near him for forty years. During my long acquaintance, I have found him an honest and intelligent man, a highminded, honourable man; a good neighbour and a true American. He is a true friend to the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, and holds the faith that is considered orthodox by all the reformed churches. His house is, and has long been a comfortable home for the weary minister, who calls upon him. He does not profess to be an experimental christian, but believes that no man can get to Heaven without being changed by grace.

Signed, JAMES GUINN.

"The Rev. Mr. Guinn informed me that multitudes entitled, to the fullest credit, could and would if called upon corroberate his statement."

"Thus we have testimony from Gen. Jackson's neighbours which will refute the slanders of the Coalition. Please to let Mr. Savage hear or read the above extract, and do all the good you can with it.

Yours with respect, &c.

A. K. BURNHAM.

Cyrus Barkley, Esq.
Lisbon, New-Hampshire."

MISSISSIPPI.—A letter from a friend of Mr. Adams at Monticello, in the state of Mississippi published in the American of last evening, says that "the opposition ticket will probably prevail" in that state "mostly on account of the personal acquaintance of many of the citizens with Gen. Jackson." This is no doubt a fair statement of the case. It is precisely because that the people of Mississippi know the worth of Gen. Jackson, that they are in favour of raising him to the Presidency. The prejudices which prevail against him in some parts of the union are owing to an ignorance of his real character.

N. Y. Even. Post.

"The sublime association of heroic virtue and national gratitude."—Governor Clinton's Toast.

The near and dear relations of George Washington Custis to the father of our country, procured for him the enviable office of executor of the last will and testament of that great man. His wife, it seems, was not less alive to the merits of public benefactors and disinterested patriots. During the heat of the last presidential election—when all that could be urged against Gen. Jackson had been conspicuously exhibited to the public gaze—when the vials of envy, malice and corruption had emptied upon his devoted head—this distinguished lady, in language literally written in LETTERS OF GOLD, presented to him, who, next to her reverend ancestor, had "filled the measure of our country's glory," a "tribute," fresh from the tomb of Mount Vernon—and La Fayette was the bearer.

"Washington, Feb. 22, 1825.

"The birth day of Washington is a fit time for a tribute of respect to him, whose glorious achievements place him next to the father of our country.

On this day, I present to General Jackson, a ring of the hero's hair, of the colour it was when he led our soldiers to victory—it was made in this city, and of American gold.

Wear it in remembrance of him who was first in the hearts of his country, and of her who gives it to you with her best wishes for your health and happiness.

ELIZA W. CUSTIS.

To General Jackson.

To which Washington's 'next friend" replied in the following language—

"Washington, Feb. 22, 1825.

"My dear Madam,

By the hands of our mutual friend, General Lafayette, I have had the extreme satisfaction of receiving a ring containing the hair of Gen. Washington, which you have done me the honour to present. Believe me, I shall retain and wear it with the greatest pleasure. I will wear it in remembrance of your kind opinions expressed towards me, and of the illustrious and reverend man, the recollection of whose virtues and disinterested patriotism, non can ever be unmindful of. Could the present you tender me, be at all increased in value, it would be by the consideration, that its presentation has been thro' one who devoted himself in early life to the service of this happy country, and who was the friend and associate of our beloved Washington.

I pray you to accept my kind wishes for your health and prosperity in life.

With great respect, and regard, I am your most obedient servant.

ANDREW JACKSON.

Mrs. E. W. Custis."

And this is the murderer—the adulterer—the traitor—of the Adams Conventions and Addresses!

We will, next week, if possible, present the correspondence accompanying the presentation to Gen. Jackson of Washington's pocket telescope, used during the revolutionary war, and also of his pistols, as appropriate evidences of the sincere affection which the descendants of one illustrious Military Chieftain bear to another.

Signs of the Times

From the Ithica (N. Y.) Journal.

"DEMONSTRATION."

A good natured, worthy Adams man, (such kind of Adams men, by the bye, are about as scarce as white black birds)—accosted us the other day: "You're gone! Louisiana is against you; you will lose Kentucky; you will lose Ohio, Delaware, and New Jersey—depend on't Jackson is down." "Not so fast," we replied: "these states have not gone for Adams yet: but admitting that we lose them all—let us sit down and demonstrate the result by figures." We did so: and our Adams friend conceides to us, at once, the following votes for Jackson:

Pennsylvania,	28
Virginia,	24
North-Carolina,	15
South-Carolina,	11
Georgia,	9
Alabama,	5
Tennessee,	11
"How many shall we take in New-York?"
"Why, say	20
"In Maryland?" "Take	5
"Mississippi?"—"Take it."	3
"Illinois?"—"No."	*00
"Missouri?"—"No."	*00
"Indiana?"—"Why, since Gov. Ray's conversion, you must take it."	5

"No more?" "No; you may possibly get more, but I'll not concede you another one."

"Why, this is close shaving; but we've got 136

"One hundred and Thirty-Six?—Why, you've ELECTED JACKSON, after all!" "'Tis even so, my sweet fellow; and we shall get at least twenty more votes than you have allowed us. You're gone! The PEOPLE are against you: and all your abuse of Jackson and his friends, all the noise and bustle you make, is only 'kicking against the pricks!'"

*These two states, choosing three electors each, by general ticket, may be deemed certain for Gen. Jackson.

25,586 Dollars!

This enormous sum of money was paid by the Adams Governor and Council of Maryland, to eight political favourites for recording the Chancery Docket, a work of about 18 months occasional writing. This would be an average of more than 3000 dollars for each man.

Five of them, however, received upwards of 3,900 dollars each; and the clerk of the Council was allowed the immense sum of

4117 Dollars,

For superintending the work, which, added to his salary for 18 months, being 2250 dollars, makes the astonishing sum of

6367 Dollars,

Allowed to Thomas Culbreth, Clerk of the Council of Maryland, for 18 months service. And yet the people of Maryland are asked to keep in power an administration that thus lavishes the public money upon favourites. Will the people of this county or state give countenance to such bold extravagance?—Will they support such a profligate administration in power, and thereby seal the bankruptcy of their own state treasury? Surely they will be awake to their own interests and honour. Citizen.

The 'Citizen' might have added the sum of Five Hundred Dollars, given to Mr. Littleton Dennis Teackle, 'tis said for superintending Primary Schools!! which do not benefit Somerset, if they do, any other county, to the value of one cent.

☞ The farms advertised for rent on our last page, by Mr. J. Barkley, will be let on the premises, on the day mentioned.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed two at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'rs of Thomas Byrd against Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and 1 other at the suit Hannah Hearn, Ex'x. of Wm. Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right, interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by L. D. Collier; also a house and lot occupied by Amelia Nicholson; also one other occupied by William S. Disharoon; also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esquire's Mills, it being the office of the said Elijah; also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson & Levi Cathell, of a certain Absalom Phipps; also a clock & case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Waller, Esq. in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 20th of September next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 26. m

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

[Communicated.

A public meeting will be held near the house of George Waller (between Spring Hill and the Delaware line,) on Friday the 5th of September, and on the next day, Saturday, at Sharptown. The candidates for the general assembly are expected to attend.

A meeting will also be held at the house of Capt. Jacob Cullen, in the lower district, on Saturday the 13th of September—when the candidates for the assembly and the electeral college for President of the U. States are expected to be present.

[COMMUNICATED.]

DIED, at Salisbury, on the 22nd instant, NANCY STEVENSON TODD, daughter of Mr. George Todd, aged 17 months and 4 days.

Call'd from a world of wo,
A joyless life soon past—
Rapt by death's angel, now,
Oh, sound she sleeps, and fast!

Hand of th' enfranchized dead,
Ills never visit thee!
No death thy bowers can tread,
Each spirit there is free.

Mourn not thine absent child
Cloth'd in a robe of white,
In purer robes serene
Now stands she, in God's sight.

Trouble, sin and death
Invade her soul no more.
Rest in God she finds—
Ever she 'll adore!

DOCTOR L. W. BALLARD,

HAVING removed to Princess-Anne, and established himself in the line of his business, respectfully tenders his professional services to the citizens of Princess-Anne and its vicinity. His office is the next door above Mr. Harding's store, where, or at Col. Dashiell's Hotel, he may be found ready to give his prompt attention to any call from his friends for medical assistance.

August 26, 1828. mfl

REGIMENTAL ORDERS.

THE 25th Regiment Maryland Militia are ordered to meet at the usual place of parade, near the Upper Ferry, on Friday the 26th day of September, for review and inspection. The line will be formed precisely at 10 o'clock A. M.

By order of Col. Geo. A. Dashiell,
GEO. L. AIRES, Adj.

August 18, 1828. ffl

BATTALION ORDERS.

August 19, 1828.

IN obedience to Regimental Orders the commanding officers of companies attached to the First Battalion of the 25th regiment M. M. will cause the companies under their respective commands to meet at the regimental parade ground, on FRIDAY the 26th of SEPTEMBER, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. as the line of review and inspection will be formed at 11. The commander of this patriotic corps confidently expects that the companies attached thereto will give, upon this occasion, a general attendance, and that the officers will appear in full uniform.

ROBT. STEWAT, Lt. Col.
1st Bat. 25th Reg. M. M.

SHERIFF's SALE.

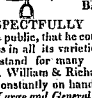
BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, at the suit of William Kibble against Isaac Sermon, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one house and lot, containing one acre, more or less, known by the name of Hog Neck, and situated on Wicomico river, about 3 miles from its head; also two beds, one loom, one gun, one sein, two canoes, two hogs, and one yearling, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 9th of next September, on the premises to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 19 ws

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. HALL,)



Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk-Maker,

No. 127 Market Street, (near the new City Hotel,) BALTIMORE,

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public, that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old established stand for many years occupied by Messrs. William & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a

Large and General Assortment of

Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks, Veleices, Saddlebags, Collars, Military Equipments, &c.

of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail, on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this or any other city.

August 19th, 1828. 1*

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess-Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

EBENEZER ANDERSON.

August 19 ww

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks,

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
CA. SA.'s before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas.
WARRANTS.

POETRY.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

RHAPSODIES. No. I. Canto I.

I.

I want to write: 'tis no uncommon want,
(If one might judge from every day's Newspapers,)
So many seem disposed, that if they can't,
'Tis not because they don't burn mid-night tapers;
But their productions are so very gaunt,
And their dull authors cut such sleepy capers,
That there's no doubt, those very things they should do
Are left undone, to show you what they would do.

II.

"Qui fit Mæcenas?" which in English means,
"What fits Mæcenas?" a grubbing hoe or Homer?
'Tis hard a man don't know which way he leans,
When on the public stage he's a new-comer,
But from Experience that sad school he gleans
His first self-knowledge, in life's sultry summer.
Most men mistake their talents altogether—
Some tug at law, who should be tugging leather.

III.

Now I myself do sometimes itch to rhyme,
Yet when I try, I find myself mistaken;
So then I say, perhaps my muse, this time,
... still asleep, and has not yet awaken:
... it is I pass away my prime,
My books of law neglected and forsaken—
... all means to make myself a Poet,
... scar'd, lest I should fail & others know it.

IV.

I try once more, and then if I should fail
In making my addresses to the muses,
... the trade And then I swear to rail,
With all the rage, which wounded pride excuses,
Against all rhymes. I'll swear that verse is stale,
All Poets mad, Apollo now refuses
To inspire Poetry. But I'll be a critic,
And solve all things, by th' art, call'd analytic.

V.

Critic or Poet, I shall proceed to write,
And publish, in the 'Herald,' my effusions:
(For I would sooner have them bid in night,
Than seen amidst those Lies and base delusions.
Which make the 'Iris' odious to the sight,
And fill our county with such fell confusions.
The 'Iris' should be 'Lie-ris,' on my conscience—
'Tis fill'd with Lies, abuse and such-like nonsense.

VI.

I said I meant to write; and so I do,
But whether 'twill be witty, light or serious,
I can't precisely tell, neither can you.
Light, perhaps should I become delirious;
Witty, should I get drunk; but grave as Drew* Should I want wine. But "wine is deleterious,"
So say some Parsons; but St. Paul advises
A little sometimes; who th' advice despises?

VII.

But now 'tis time to stop this first essay,
Which by the by, I'll call my introduction:
And in my next, I'll prove as clear as day,
By arguments call'd logical induction,
That —— Just now my lamp's fast fading ray
Has grown so dim, that I receive instruction
To stop just here. This is confounded hard—
No time to grumble. Yours, the HICKORY BARD.

*A theological writer.

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's obt. servant.

WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.

Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

EMIGRATION to LIBERIA.

NOTICE.

THE Managers of the American Colonization Society give notice, that they are ready to receive applications for the conveyance of free people of color to the colony of Liberia.

In all cases, the age, sex, and professions of the applicants must be mentioned.

Applicants from the State of Maryland must be prepared to offer the affidavit of some free white person, to their having actually resided within the State of Maryland for twelve months' previous to the period of emigration.

Applications may be made in Baltimore, to Hon. Judge Brice, Charles Howard Esq. ... E., John H. B. Latrobe Esq., or ... Harper Esq., Agents of the Society

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Mary A. Stewart by William Miles her guardian, and by virtue of 6 writs of Fieri Facias issued by Burton Cannon, a justice of the peace for Somerset county, to wit: one at the suit of Levin Tyler, executor of Samuel Milborn; 1 do. Isaac Riggin, administrator of Noah Riggin; 2 do. Roland Bevins; 1 do James Stewart; 1 do. Robert Lankford; by virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by William Coston, a justice of the peace in and for said county, at the suit of Richard H. Sampson, use of James Sampson, use of Burton Cannon, all the above against Henry I. Riggin and to me directed, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: two head of horses, 2 yoke of oxen, 4 head of cattle, 20 head of hogs, 25 head of sheep, 6 feather beds and furniture, 4 corner cupboard, 1 clock, 1 sideboard, 4 desk, 1 walnut table, 3 pine do. 4 stand, 1 lot of earthen ware, 1 dozen chairs, 1 safe, 2 trunks, 1 lot of knives, and forks, 1 grindstone, 1 hand-mill, 1 wain cart, 1 carriage, 1 wheat fan, 1 lot of casks, 1 cider mill, 1 crosscut saw, 1 hand do. 3 ploughs, 3 harrows, 3 axes, 1 lot of iron, 150 bushels of corn, more or less; 14 stocks of fodder, more or less, 1 lot of flax, 2 pair of and-irons, 3 ox yokes, 3 chairs, 6 hives with bees, 1 lot of tin ware, 1 lot of coopers' ware, 1 looking glass, 2 guns, part of a tract of land called Panther's Den, 1 do. Allen's Vale, 1 do. Lonely Glade, containing 179 acres, more or less, all of the above property, I shall sell at the court-house door in Princess-Anne, on TUESDAY the 9th day of next SEPTEMBER, between the hours of 1 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 19th, 1828. wp

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.

Somerset County Orphans Court.

Aug. 12th, 1828.

[SEAL.] ON application of MARCELLUS JONES, Ex'r. of KEZIAH JONES late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in the Village Herald, printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test.

JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of KEZIAH JONES, late of said county, deceased.— All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 29th of February next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 12th of Aug., 1828.

MARCELLUS JONES,

Ex'r of K. Jones, dec'd.

August 19, 1828. k

Notice to Creditors.

THE creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause, if any they have, why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

McKIMMEY PORTER.

Salisbury, Aug. 19 mfl

TO LET—At Public Vendue.

ON WEDNESDAY the twenty-seventh INSTANT, at three o'clock, P. M. I shall offer TO LET to the highest and best bidder, for the ensuing year, the FARM late the property of Samuel Heath, dec'd. and now occupied by David Barkley.

ALSO, on the same day, will be offered to let for the ensuing year the farm now occupied by John Powel. The above farms are situated between 2 and 3 miles distant from Princess-Anne. The terms will be made known on the above mentioned day.

I also offer for RENT a HOUSE and LOT in Princess-Anne, formerly the property of Mrs. Mary Milleway, for which application can be made to me at any time.

JOSEPH BARKLEY.

August 12. mm

SALE FOR CASH.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of James Polk, esq. against capt. Lee P. Harcum, I shall expose to public sale on Tuesday the 2nd day of September next, at the Court-House door in Princess-Anne, between the hours of one and two o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit. a part of a tract of land called "White Hall," containing 509 acres more or less, one negro man Stephen, one negro woman Ritty one do. Leah, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, of the said Harcum, to satisfy the above writ with all the costs.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

August 12, 1828. mw

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court, & to me directed at the suit of John W. Jones for the use of Henry Adams against Josiah D. Jones, I have seized and taken the following property in execution, to wit; one schooner called the Franklin of 40 tons burthen, and 2 head of horses, which I shall proceed to sell at the Court house door, on Tuesday the 2nd day of September, between the hours of 1 and 3 o'clock P. M to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Sff

August 12. wp

WANTED.

I want to hire a COLOURED WOMAN, of good character, who understands cooking and house work in general. To such a one I will give liberal wages. Enquire at the Village Herald office. July 22

IN CHANCERY,

SOMERSET COUNTY COURT,

MAY TERM, 1828.

ORDERED, That the sales of the real estate of Peter Dashiell as made and reported by William W. Handy, Trustee for the sale of said estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shown by the second day of the next term of this court;— Provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess-Anne once a week for three weeks successively before the said day.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.

True copy. Test,

GEO. HANDY, Clk.

July 29, 1828. wk

SINCLAIR & MOORE,

Pratt-St. Wharf, Baltimore,

HAVE in store—Millet, Lucerne, early Corn, bunch, pole & soup Beans, a large assortment for planting, and garden seeds generally.

PLOUGHS,

Amongst which are the much approved self-sharpening point Plough—By turning and reversing said point, the share lasts much longer than the cast share of any other plough, in as much as the point is of steel, and when worn bevelling it is sharpened, if turned over. The CULTIVATORS made by Sinclair & Moore, pulverize the ground more effectually, and much deeper than the old fashioned three hoed kind—and by the use of these in the culture of corn, it will save nearly two-thirds of the ploughing.

ALSO, Socket Shovels, Scythes, Mattocks and Picks, with handles;—spring steel Hay and Manure Forks, WHEAT FANS, & GRAIN CRADLES, with best Waldron Scythes; Garden Tools generally; Wove Wire for Seives, and Mill Screens.

☞They have received from on board the brig Hyperion, capt. Forbes, just from Liverpool, a quantity of grain and grass Scythes, (Waldron's prime) Sickles. Maleable trace Chains; Straw and Hay Knives; Grass Hooks, and Garden Tools, amongst which are turnip and other Hoes; Edging Tools, budding and pruning Knives, &c. &c.

☞For the greater convenience of those who use our PLOUGHS in Somerset, we have appointed JOHNSTON & SUDLER, of Princess-Anne, our agents for the sale of them, who will constantly keep a supply of the different kinds at our prices.

June, 1828. S. & M.

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER,

Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne, Md.

FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber is desirous of disposing of his real estate, being and lying in Worcester county, Md. and situated on Dividing Creek. The landed estate consists of 2000, or more acres. The improvements are a dwelling house and out buildings with a good SAW and GRIST MILL, both in excellent order; also a young orchard. About 100 acres of the land is in a good state of cultivation.

There is, on one part of the above property, an abundance of Iron Ore, which would warrant the erection of a Forge, and prove an object of value to a purchaser acquainted with, and calculated for, such an undertaking.

The terms of sale will be—one third down, and 3 years for the payment of the balance. For further particulars apply to

JOHN MORRIS.

April 22 kd

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street.

BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

Also,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. wm

BARREN CREEK SPRINGS.

THE SUBSCRIBER

Begs leave to inform his friends & the public,

That his HOUSE is now open

For the Reception of Visiters.

An anxious solicitude to promote the comfort of those who are in pursuit of health, pleasure, or business, has induced him to make such arrangements as will enable him to give ample satisfaction to those who may favour him with their company. By those who have visited the Springs, during the present season, the waters have been pronounced more powerful in their effects than hitherto experienced—operating in most cases, as a purgative medicine: Those desirable effects, in conjunction with its chalybeate properties, which are acknowledged to be unsurpassed by any waters in the world, present a powerful inducement to such as are already assailed by disease, and to those who are desirous to avoid the bilious diseases of the climate.

Persons who are inclined to try the efficacy of the waters may rest assured that every accommodation shall be provided to render them happy and comfortable; and the charges shall be apportioned to the pressure of the times.

The public's humble servant,

CHARLES LEARY.

N. B. Travellers, generally, particularly the passengers of the steam-boat Maryland, will find this an easy and commodious stage, after the arrival of the boat at Cambridge, (being only four miles distant from Vienna.) Here they will be certain to meet with the purest and best Waters of the peninsula, and a Table supplied with the best accommodations the country can afford—on the most reasonable conditions.

July 29. mku

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers.

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers.
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 Butter Prints

100 groce of Lamp Wick, assorted sizes, Spiggots and fossets, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs, and hydrants, shoe, sweeping, dusting and other brushes, sifters, muddlers, and lime squeezers, fancy and common bellows, pound, half pound and and quarter pound Butter Prints, of various patterns, fishing lines and rods, butter bowls and trays, baskets, wash and cake boards twine, and cord, patent taps, humming and common tops, nests of sugar boxes and tubs, boot & shoe blacking, towel rollers, potato and turnip mashers, rolling pins, carpenters' or joiners' chalk lines, spoons and paddles, trenchers, crabbing and cabbage nets.

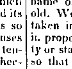
The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,

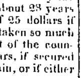
No. 101½ Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.

Baltimore, 6th mo. 24. vro

STOP THE RUNAWAYS.



ABSCONDED on the 23d day of July, THREE NEGROES; one negro woman named Easter, aged about 45 or 50 years, and two negro men, one by the name of Bob, dark mulatto, about 19 years old, and the other by the name of Harry, very black, about 23 years old. We will give a reward of 25 dollars if taken in the county; if either taken so much in proportion; and if taken out of the county or state, we will give 45 dollars, if secured so that we can get them again, or if either taken up so much in proportion.



THOMAS BELL,
HOPKINS WINDSON.

Nanticoke Point, July 29. vk

PUBLIC SALE.

IN pursuance of an order of Somerset county Court, passed at May Term, 1828, the undersigned, or a majority of them, will sell, on THURSDAY the 28th INSTANT, at Major Leary's tavern, at Barren Creek Springs, in said county, on a credit of twelve months –

All the REAL ESTATE of

LEVIN RUSSELL,

Late of said county, deceased, which was lately valued by the undersigned. The purchaser, or purchasers, to enter into bond with approved security to the heirs of said Russel for their respective proportions

THOMAS BELSWORTH,
ZACCHEUS LLOYD,
BEACHAM ACKWORTH,
JAMES BOUNDS,
WILLIAM TWILLEY,

August 5—tl Commissioners

☞NOTICE.

A PLANTER who desires to procure some SLAVES for his own service, will give the best prices in cash, for a few of both sexes, between the ages of 12 and 25 years. Those who have such to dispose of will please apply at Col. Dashiell's Tavern, immediately Princess-Anne, August 4.

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; pound, half and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking; patent and common Taps; lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,

No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets,

Baltimore, 8th mo 4th.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.

August 5. jfi

IN CHANCERY,

12th July. 1828.

ORDERED, That the sale of the real estate of William Waters, made and reported by the Trustee, Marcellus Jones, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause be shewn to the contrary on or before the 12th day of September next, provided a copy of this order be inserted once in each of three successive weeks, in one of the newspapers published in Somerset county, before the 12th day of August next. The report states the amount of sales to be $601 25.

True copy. Test,

RAMSAY WATERS,

July 22, 1828. Reg. in Chan.

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year, the Houses now occupied, one by Mrs. Mary Ballard, and the other by Joseph S. Colgan, in the town of Princess-Anne For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

July 15, 1828. k

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phœbus.

For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

June 3, 1828. wk

FOR RENT,

For the ensuing year, that FARM which was formerly the property of William Tilghman, dec'd. situated on the head of Back Creek. For terms apply to JAMES STEWART.

July 22, 1828. kw

SHERIFF's SALE.

By virtue of 2 writs of Venditioni Exponas, one at the suit of Zadock Long use of William Roach, the other at the suit of Jeremiah Y. Dashiell, and by virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias, one at the suit of Samuel Brown, one at the suit of Jeremiah Y. Dashiell use of George W. Dashiell, 1 at the suit of George Jones survivor of George and Robert Jones, all issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed against Levin W. Ballard, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right and title of the said Ballard to part of a tract of land called Dashiell's Lot, containing 332 acres, more or less; part of Sandy Ridge and Fitzwaters, containing 156 acres more or less; one tract of land called Moore & Casret, which the said Levin W. Ballard purchased of his father Levin Ballard, containing 134 acres, more or less; also 300 bushels of wheat, more or less; 4 yoke of oxen, and 2 colts which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 2d of September next, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. at the court-house door, in Princess Anne to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 12.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset County Court and to me directed, at the suit of William T. G. Polk, administrator of Samuel Polk, against George Porter, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called White Chapel, containing 263 acres, more or less, part of a tract of land called Mount Sham, containing 1 acre, more or less; also one negro boy Ebin, 1 negro woman Esther, 2 yoke of oxen, 3 head of horses, 3 cows, and 1 still, taken as the property of said Porter, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 2nd of September next, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock, P. M. at the court-house door in Princess-Anne, to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 12, 1828.

NOTICE.

THE Levy Court of Somerset County will receive Proposals in writing on Tuesday the 26th day of August next, in reference to a Standard Bearer, in compliance with the late act of Assembly relating to Weights and Measures. Applicants will hand in their proposals on that day.

By order,

GEO. HANDY, Clk.

July 29. km

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks, PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms.

At the Office of the Village Herald.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., SEPTEMBER 2, 1828. NO. 23.

ANDREW JACKSON.

HIGH AUTHORITIES.

Those who attempt to sully the fair fame of the great and good Jackson, by the most shameful falsehoods and slanders, insult the judgment and veracity of Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and even their idols Clay and Adams. Mark now what Mr. Jefferson said of Gen. Jackson, after his splendid career in the Southern country. At a dinner given to the General in the autumn of 1815, at Lynchburg, Va. Mr. Jefferson gave the following toast in compliment to Gen. Jackson.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory."

Mr. Jefferson often said to his son-in law, Thomas M. Randolph—That "Gen. Jackson was an honest, sincere, firm, clear headed, and strong-minded man, of the soundest political principles, which he KNEW well, from having observed his conduct while a Senator of the U. S. while he was Vice-President himself."

Mr. Jefferson also said of the General—

"Be assured that Gen. Jackson has more of the ancient Roman virtue, more of that devoted feeling which in the love of country forgets self, than any man living."

Hear also what the illustrious Madison says of Gen. Jackson, when last February he refused to serve as an elector in favor of Mr. Adams:

"The recollection of the public relations in which I stood to Gen. Jackson, while President, and the proofs given to him, of the high estimation in which he was held by me, &c." JAMES MADISON.

Hear also what Mr. Monroe said on the same occasion:

"My friendship for Gen. Jackson, and the strong proofs of confidence and regard I have given him, while President, forbid my taking any part in the ensuing presidential election." JAMES MONROE.

Again,

"It is very gratifying to me to receive Gen. Jackson's opinions on all subjects—because I have the utmost confidence in the soundness of his judgment, and purity of his intentions JAMES MONROE."

And again,

☞In ANDREW JACKSON, commander in chief of the division of the south, the president found a man fit for any emergency —a STATESMAN, cool and dispassionate— a SOLDIER, terrible in battle and mild in victory—a PATRIOT, whose bosom swells with the love of country:—in fine, a man, 'whose like we scarce shall look upon again.'"

Monroe's Tour.

Mark also what John Q. Adams said of Gen. Jackson before the General was taken up by the people to put down said John Q. Adams—

"Gen. Jackson justly enjoys in an eminent degree the public favour; and of his worth, talents and services, no one entertains a higher or more respectful opinion than myself." JOHN Q. ADAMS.

Again,

Gen. Jackson—" Whose whole career has been signalized by the purest intentions and the most elevated purposes, and whose services to this nation entitle him to its highest rewards."

☞On the 5th of April, 1822—a date subsequent to that of all criminal acts now imputed to him by the vindictive aristocracy— JOHN Q. ADAMS, of his own mere motion, deliberately expressed the foregoing opinions of Gen. Jackson, in a letter to Don Joaquin d' Anduaga, the Spanish minister. No man in the country then was better acquainted with the public acts of Andrew Jackson than Mr. Adams, and few men better understood his conduct as a man. It is a sufficient answer to all the libels poured forth on Gen. Jackson by the Adams party, that John Q. Adams, at a time when he was a disinterested witness, has borne solemn testimony that Andrew Jackson, in his "whole career," has been actuated by the "PUREST INTENTIONS and the most ELEVATED PURPOSES."

Hear also what Henry Clay said of Gen. Jackson in his speech in Congress on the Seminole war—

"Towards that distinguished Captain (Andrew Jackson) who has shed so much GLORY on our country, whose renown constitutes so great a portion of its moral property, I never had. I never can have, any other feelings than those of the most profound RESPECT and of the utmost kindness."

HENRY CLAY.

These are the deliberately recorded opinions of Gen. Jackson by men who know the General well, and whose judgment and sincerity the Adams men will hardly pretend to question.

Remember likewise, that the nephew of the immortal WASHINGTON, [G. Washington Custis, the author of the "Recollections,"] presented to Gen. Jackson, on the 8th of January, 1824, the Pocket Telescope of Washington, on which occasion he told the general the Telescope was willed

"TO THE MOST WORTHY."

Remember also, that on the same day Col. Mercer presented to Gen. Jackson the Pistols which the immortal Washington carried in the war of the Revolution. They were the same Pistols which general Lafayette had presented to Washington about 50 years before; and in presenting them the Legatee of Washington said, they could not be better disposed of than by transferring them to

"The Successor of Washington!"

Mark! he calls Jackson the Successor of Washington!

Remember too that the late Gov. Clinton of New York said that the character of Jackson and the love of the people towards him, was

"The sublime association of heroic virtue and national gratitude."—Governor Clinton's Toast.

Remember too, that Mrs. Eliza W. Custis, the amiable and lovely consort of G. W. Custis, evinced her admiration and gratitude, and that of the ladies of the United States, for the character and services of the chivalric Jackson by presenting to him, thro' Gen. Lafayette, a RING, containing the hair of the immortal Washington, accompanied by the following complimentary note, actually written in Letters of Gold:

"Washington, Feb. 22, 1825.

The birth day of Washington is a fit time for a tribute of respect to him, whose glorious achievements place him next to the father of our country.

On this day, I present to General Jackson, a ring of the hero's hair, of the colour it was when he led our soldiers to victory—it was made in this city, and of American gold.

Wear it in remembrance of him who was first in the hearts of his country, and of her who gives it to you with her best wishes for your health and happiness.

ELIZA W. CUSTIS.

To General Jackson.

It will be recollected that Gen. Jackson was at one time (1824) the candidate of the Adams party for Vice President, being then considered by that party as the man most qualified by worth and services, to be associated in the government with Mr. Adams.' The Rochester Telegraph of 1824, published his name under its editorial head for a considerable time—And the Adams party generally, from Maine to Georgia, supported him for Vice-President, until it became evident that the people preferred him for the presidency. The following, among other similar allusions, is found in the Rochester Telegraph of 1824—then, as now an Adams paper:

"The letters which are published to day place Mr. Monroe and Gen. Jackson on high and honourable ground, from which they can look down upon Walter Lowrie "more in sorrow than in anger." The letter of Gen. Jackson will endear him still more to the American people. The sentiments contained in it are worthy of the best Roman that ever lived —they are the sentiments of THE BEST AMERICAN THAT EVER LIVED. The minions of King Caucus will fail in their attempts to destroy such a man. Gen. Jackson, upon whom the mantle of WASHINGTON seems to have fallen, is secure of the affections and gratitude of his country."

The subsequent paragraph is contained in a biographical sketch of Gen. Jackson, by Robert Walsh, Esq. an Adams man, and editor of the Philadelphia Gazette:

"The copious despatches which Gen. Jackson had occasion to write to the government, detailing his campaigns and official proceedings; his numerous addresses to his troops, and the statements and arguments, which the charges preferred against his official conduct, compelled him to publish for his justification, would altogether, form a sizeable volume.— They are marked by great fluency and energy of expression; cogent reasoning; apt reference to general principles, and the utmost earnestness and apparent rectitude of intention. He writes nervously and perspicuously and he speaks with facility and force."

"The fact is, that ninety nine hundredths of the PEOPLE believe that Gen Jackson acted on every occasion for the good of his country, and success universally crowned his efforts. He has suffered more hardships and encountered higher responsibilities than any man living to serve us."

HEZEKIAH NILES.

Veteran Editor of the Weekly Register, Baltimore.

"He (Jackson) can write as well as fight— he has won laurels which even the immortal Washington might have envied."

ISAAC MUNROE.

Editor of the Baltimore Patriot, an Adams paper.

Now, listen to the opinion of Mr CRAWFORD, as expressed in a letter, written a few weeks since to a political friend of Gen. Jackson. "I think with you, that the ... believe ... who should be President ... the last man in the United States ... would wish to ... I am one of the People's ... express their choice. To ... the General he says—"You do me justice in supposing I am with you in the struggle ... making in relation to the Presidential Election though I am informed, by letters from Washington that I have written a letter to Mr. ... approving of Mr. Adams' administration. But, I am confident, his name is mentioned but once in the letter, and then, only to say, that he is destined to unergo the fate that befel his father."

From the American Sentinel.

We copy into our paper of to day, the resolutions adopted in congress, in relation to the services of General Jackson to his country; they are taken, with the remarks connected with them from the very able address adopted at Harrisburg, on Friday last, by the friends of Jackson.

The following resolutions will be found among the laws of the United States, adopted in February, 1815:

"Resolved, By the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled,—That the thanks of congress, be, and they are hereby given to MAJOR GENERAL JACKSON, and through him, to the officers and soldiers of the regular army, of the militia, and of the volunteers under his command, the greater portion of which troops consisted of militia and volunteers, suddenly collected together, for their uniform gallantry and GOOD CONDUCT, conspicuously displayed against the enemy, FROM THE TIME OF HIS LANDING BEFORE NEW ORLEANS, UNTIL HIS FINAL EXPULSION THEREFROM; and particularly for their valor, skill & good conduct, on the 8th of January last, in repulsing, with great slaughter, a numerous British army of chosen veteran troops, when attempting, by a bold and daring attack to carry by storm, the works hastily thrown up for the protection of New Orleans; and thereby obtaining a most signal victory over the enemy with a disparity of loss, on his part, UNEXAMPLED IN MILITARY ANNALS.

"Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to cause to be struck, a gold medal, with devices emblematical of this splendid achievement, and presented to Major General Jackson, as a testimony of the high sense entertained by congress of his JUDICIOUS and distinguished conduct on that memorable occasion.

"Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to cause the foregoing resolutions to be communicated to MAJOR GENERAL JACKSON, in such terms as he may deem best calculated to give effect to the objects thereof."

This testimony, fellow citizens, we take to be conclusive. Here are the members of the senate and house of representatives of the United States, with all the transactions at New Orleans fresh in their recollections, voluntarily tendering the thanks of the nation to the hero of that period. Can such evidence of his worth be affected by the hired desperadoes who are at present assailing him in all quarters, because his elevation now by the people would put down the employers of his assailants, never again to rise into power.

Thus, fellow citizens, we have shown you that the man whose life is pronounced by the present men in power, to have been from his cradle to the present moment, marked with deeds of "violence and blood," of "dissipation and vice the most heinous," stood high in favour with our republican presidents, and his most prominent public acts were approbated by the congress of the nation.— In addition to these remarks of public esteem, he has been elected by the people to the most important stations within their gift. He was a member of the convention that formed the constitution of Tennessee. He was frequently elected a member of the legislature of that state. He was a member of congress and twice elected by the legislature of his own state to the senate of the Union; in which body he resigned his seat in 1825, in consequence of his having been again nominated for the presidency, believing that it did not comport with the pure spirit of our free institutions for a member of congress to be a candidate for the presidential chair, when his election might, under the constitution, devolve upon that body.

JACKSON AT HOME.—Gen Jackson now stands before the people with the unanimous recommendation of the Representatives of the people of Tennessee in the Legislature of that State, where he has been the framer of their Constitution—the Attorney General—Representative in Congress —a Senator of the U. States—a Judge of the Supreme Court—again a Senator of the U. States, and the Commander of the Militia of the State. These are honours that John Q. Adams has never been able to obtain from his State, and an unanimous recommendation for the Presidency, he cannot obtain from our House of Representatives. At the last Presidential Election, Jackson obtained in Tennessee, a State nearly as populous as Massachusetts, and much larger, 20,197 votes, Adams had 216—Clay none. In Massachusetts there were thrown against Adams at the last election 6646 votes. Thus where there were 100 votes against Jackson in Tennessee, there were more than a thousand against Adams in Massachusetts. Now facts are stubborn things, and figures do not lie, and these facts and figures show that Jackson has more friends at home where he is best known, than Adams has. They show moreover the falsehood of all the atrocious slanders of the coalition, against this illustrious patriot, for if Andrew Jackson were a despot, a tyrant, a bad man, he would not have received every honour which his own State could confer upon him; the people of that State would not have voted for him, almost unanimously, and he would not stand before the nation, as he now does nominated for the Presidency by the unanimous vote of the House of Representatives of Tennessee.

Boston Statesman.

Effect of the Coalition Calumnies.—We find in ... National Republican ... the following manly letter from Col. William B. Cassiday:

Mr. Anderson,—Having seen a statement in the Ohio Republican, that the friends of Jackson had appointed an Administration man marshal of the day, at the late anniversary celebration, I take the liberty of informing the Editor who penned the paragraph, and all others whom it may concern, that I am no Adams man. It is true that at one time I did intend to vote for Mr. Adams; but when I witness the daily slanders and abuse heaped upon the head of a venerable man, whose name will be forever dear to all true Americans, and of whom Mr. Adams himself when not in his way to office, has spoken in the highest terms, I can no longer go with a party whose endeavours seem to be to raise the favourite candidate to office, not so much upon his merit, as upon the ruins of the reputation of his illustrious opponent. I shall if living next October give my vote to General Andrew Jackson. WM. B. CASSIDAY.

This shows what we have always believed to be the case, that the "abominable lies" propagated by the Coalition hirelings against Jackson, only serve to increase the numbers and exertions of his friends—The "war, pestilence and famine" violence against Jackson and his friends—the avowed determination of the Coalition partisans, to be 'as personal and abusive' as possible, and to "annihilate heaven and earth sooner than fail of carrying their point," are fast opening the eyes of all the Adams men to the disposition, character, and designs of their leaders.

From the (Md.) Bond of Union.

☞LABOURERS AND MECHANICS!!

I beg leave to recommend to your consideration the following "patriotic" expression of Judge Todd:

"If we reflect what class of persons support General Jackson, we find, that they are the SEDIMENT AND SCUM of society—of persons without ANY refinement or education.— of TURNPIKERS, DAY LABOURERS, Hirelings, common MECHANICS, VAGABONDS and FOREIGNERS, who are accustomed to WAR AND OPPRESSION.— Many, yes, the larger portion support him thro' VENGEANCE—on the contrary, the present Administration is supported by the most enlightened, scientific and distinguished Americans, who possess knowledge and judgment to know what is right."

Can you after perusing the above, support the present Administration? Can you countenance the clandestine means which constitute the last resort of the tottering combination? No! I trust you will not support that man, whose menial has uttered such a contemptible sentiment. The voice of an injured and insulted people will proclaim to the world, that their political opinion is not to be tampered with. Do they call CRAWFORD, CALHOUN, VAN BUREN, McDUFFIE, and the late DE WITT CLINTON, and a host of other worthies, the "scum and sediment" of society? Are the Artists and Architects of this country "common mechanics?"— Be not deluded! Your own interest is at stake, and when you ruin that, farewell to our happy country. Can you stand silently and be branded with the appellation of the "scum and sediment" of society? Evince to the world, now gazing with eagerness to the close of the approaching Presidential election, that the spirit of free suffrage which animated your forefathers, glows with redoubled vigor, in your patriotic bosoms. CURRAN.

IRISHMEN!—look at this.—On the 4th July, when your hearts were bounding high in holy unison with your adopted brothers, and blessing the hour that gave birth to America as a nation, a party of Vermonters, residing near Upper Canada, part Britons, part Yankees and part Canadians, assembled to celebrate the day, and among other toasts, the following complimentary one was drunk:

By Captain Prescott—The Jackson party —composed of disappointed desperadoes of America, and runaway FILTHY Irishmen.

Does this toast need a comment? No!—it has no parallel and bears on the face of it, its own ignoble commentary But let the Captain, as well as his toast be remembered, whether with indignation or pity we care not a whit, but let the Irishmen remember them.

Truth Teller

NEW HAMPSHIRE.—We receive the most gratifying assurances from friends in all parts of this republican state, upon whose judgment we can rely, that the Jackson electoral ticket will prevail. The Administration are making the most desperate efforts to save themselves in this state But in vain, the democrats of the country are aroused, and the swelling current of feeling in favour of Jackson—the republican candidate for the Presidency, cannot be stayed by all the contrivances of the Coalition New Hampshire can now hardly be considered as a doubtful state, so great has been of late the increase of the friends of General Jackson, who, at the last election almost won the victory.—Boston Statesman, Aug 16.

Mr. Clay convicted by Himself.

In Mr. Clay's Address published at Washington last winter, we find the following—

☞"Here then is an unbroken chain of testimony; commencing early in October, 1824, and extending to nearly the end of the year, establishing beyond all controversy, my fixed and unwavering determination NOT to vote for General Jackson. This testimony stands unquestioned, and, with truth, cannot be opposed ...

Hear the other side.

The Hon. T. P. Moore of Kentucky who was the warm personal and political friend of Mr. Clay up to the period of the Presidential election in the House of Representatives, and who is a man whose character for veracity and integrity is as high as that of Mr. Clay or any other man living, says—

"... In that month [October, 1824,] Mr. Clay, Mr. Trimble, Mr. Clay's A. Wickliffe, myself, and perhaps several other members of the Kentucky delegation, casually met at Frankfort during the session of the Court of Appeals There Mr. Clay, for the first time, expressed to me an apprehension that he should be excluded from the House of Representatives; and observed, with seeming carelessness of manner, that it would be best for us, in that case, to remain uncommitted as to our second choice."

After my arrival in the city, [of Washington] I was confined to my room by indisposition. While in this situation, Mr. Clay called, and after the usual civilities, told me, in emphatic terms, that he had little doubt he was excluded from the House of Representatives, and that all "WE" (meaning the Kentucky delegation in Congress) had now to do was to hold ourselves uncommitted, as to our second choice," declaring, "that WE could vote for EITHER of the candidates, and justify ourselves to our constituents"☜

General Floyd, of Virginia, a gentleman of whom Mr. Pleasants of the Richmond Whig, in the last number of his paper, speaks as "respectable, highly respectable," and who is, indeed, known to be a gentleman of as high character as any in the country, says—

☞"That in a conversation which he held with Mr Clay in the city of Washington, in the latter part of December, 1824, or in the month of January, 1825, Mr. Clay said to him, "When I take up the pretensions of Mr. Adams, and weigh them, and lay them down —then take up the pretensions of General Jackson, weigh them, and lay them down by the side of those of Mr. Adams—I never was as much puzzled in all my life, as I am to DECIDE BETWEEN THEM."☜

What becomes then of the, "fixed and unwavering determination NOT to vote for General Jackson," which in the extract we have given above from his address, Mr. Clay says he had come to 'early in October, 1824.'

But this article is headed 'Mr Clay convicted by himself,' and we therefore will show —not only what he has said, but also, written; which contradicts the extract which we have made from his last winter's Address. In his celebrated letter to BLAIR, of Ky. under date of 8th January, 1825, (mark the date!) Mr. Clay says—

☞"The time has now arrived when I must begin to think seriously for whom I am to vote."

Will you be so good then, Mr. Clay, as to reconcile these contradictions? Will you deny that you said what Mr. Moore and Dr. Floyd say you said? Will you deny you wrote to BLAIR what we have said above you did write to him? If you do not deny these, you stand convicted of acting a part, which justly subjects you to any, the worst suspicions and justifies the belief of the charge of a corrupt BARGAIN. You have never dared to deny what Messrs. Floyd and Moore say, and you have never dared to publish your letter to BLAIR, although you know it is said to contain what we have stated above.

Balt. Rep

THE WEBSTER PLEDGE.

The N. Y. American confesses that it has a copy of the letter addressed by Mr. Oliver Heartwell of Canandaigua, to Mr. Adams, asking him whether or not he was a mason, and of Mr A's reply, "that he was not."— Why does the American equivocate? Why not at once say, that Mr. H. observed to Mr. A that it would be for his own good to give the reply—and that Mr. A. not content with saying that he was not a Mason, added he never would be? And does this mode of electioneering become the President of the U. S.?

Further light is also recently shed upon the subject of the Western Pledge. We commend the two articles from the N. Y. Evening Post, to the reader's especial attention. Captain Stockton and Mr Thompson (his brother in law) are brought forward to testify on the occasion—and new names are given of those who are acquainted with the facts and also the interference made by Mr. Adams is now specified. There is no doubt about the matter. Such a pledge was given— and is one upon the parties concerned, it was used to promote J. Q. Adams' Election.

We understand the following are the facts in relation to N. Jersey.—that Mr. Southard went into that state soon after the election and there made assurances to Mr. Stockton and other Federal gentlemen, that the Government would be administered on liberal principles, and no difference would be made between Federalists and Republicans in appointments to office. They replied that Mr. Adams had already deceived them, and was not to be trusted. Mr. S. to satisfy their doubts, then mentioned the Webster letter, and assured them of the pledge it contained —and this not once, but often, in public meetings with Federal gentlemen, and at private houses, and at the particular request of Mr. Stockton, he took his (Stockton's) carriage and went into Huntingdon county and elsewhere to assure certain distinguished Federal gentlemen of the favourable intentions of the Cabinet towards them. This movement produced the revolution that soon after followed in favour of the Administration. Whilst Mr. S. was in New Jersey or about the time, it is said that a gentleman (the name we know) who was personally very intimate with Mr. Webster, had an interview with ... Washington and that to him Mr. Webster confirmed the statement. Mr. Webster even rose from his chair, unlocked his escritoire, and produced the letter. We understand Mr. Webster added that the affair had proceeded so far that the persons in whose favour the pledge was to be first redeemed, were designated viz. Mr. Mason of N. H. Mr. Hopkinson of P. and Mr. Stockton of N. J.

Now, are these men fit to rule over us?— And how could the President of the U. S. so far stoop as to say that there was no sort of foundation for the story?

Richmond Enquirer.

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATE

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 2, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory."—Jefferson.

"Whose services to this nation, entitle him to its HIGHEST REWARDS."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

We are authorized to announce
Thomas Bayly,
John C. Wilson, jr.
Anthony B. Bennett, and
John J. Davis, Esqrs.
as Candidates to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

We are informed that the Hon. LEWIS McLANE, of the Senate of the U. S. from the state of Delaware, will be at Laurel in Sussex county, on Friday the 12th inst. and will address the people on the important subject of the respective qualifications of Mr. Adams and Gen. Jackson for the Presidency of the U. States.

This information was very gratifying to us, as the fullest reliance may safely be placed on the accuracy and candor of Mr. McLane's statements. Mr. McLane has for many years sustained the highest character as a gentleman and statesman, not only in his native state, but on the floor of Congress and throughout the U. States.

KENTUCKY.

The Baltimore Republican says—

"The friends of the administration cry out faintly, that the election of Metcalfe is a triumph of their party in Kentucky. Pshaw! gentlemen, the majority is too small. Your friends in Kentucky know that there is a Jackson majority in the state—they know that the Jackson party could not be rallied on Barry—that his vote has fallen far short of Jackson's strength. Why, let the Adams men but look back to what their own papers in Kentucky said just before the election, and there they'll find that the Adams editors not only admitted, but in fact asserted that the Jackson party would not rally on Barry. Now, the Frankfort Commentator is a leading and decided Administration paper, and just before the election, that paper said—

"The Argus is very earnest in exhortations to the Jacksonmen, to vote for Major Barry for governor. It is evident that Mr. Kendall sees and feels that the party will not unite upon that gentleman, a fact which he attempts to conceal, by declaring that he has not yet heard of the first Jackson man who will vote for Metcalfe. This may be true, yet some such there are, and the number in the state is considerable, and Mr. Kendall very well knows, that there are many decided Jackson men, who will not vote for Barry, hence his honest exhortations. But they will not; they cannot do it—they have been opposed to him in all things heretofore, and they will not sacrifice every thing of principle and feeling to this single incidental question. They have long known Major Barry as a thorough going relief man, &c. &c.

"The Jackson party in Kentucky, it gives us pleasure to say it, contains a host of citizens, who never can be induced to give their suffrages, to elevate such a politician to the highest office in the state."

And, in this the Editor of the Commentator spoke the truth, as may be seen from the following—

The Kentucky Reporter of the 19th gives the entire returns from Madison county, as follows:

Metcalfe,	1280	Barry	548
Underwood,	1178	Breathitt,	440
Harris, (R.)	1445	Smith, (R.)	1077
Caperton,	1190
Daniel,	1128

Here it will be seen that while Mr. Smith, who was an Old Court Jackson man, received 1077 votes, Barry received only 548.

If we add the votes given to Harris, Caperton, and Daniel together, and divide the product by 3, we have 1252 as the average of administration votes given to those candidates. Deduct 1252 from 1280, and it will appear that Metcalfe received 28 votes more than the average administration vote. If we deduct the 1077 votes given to Mr. Smith, from the average vote given to his opponents, it would appear that the Administration majority in Madison was only 175, whilst Mr. Metcalfe's majority over Mr. Barry is 732.—It would thus appear that in the single county of Madison there were 557 Jackson votes given for members of the Legislature, who refused to vote for Mr. Barry. The same result is seen in other counties. In Jessamine, Metcalfe received a majority of 71 votes, yet Cunningham, the Jackson candidate, was elected to the legislature by a majority of 66. In Boone, Metcalfe had a majority of 269 votes; yet Balsley, the Jackson candidate to the legislature was elected by a majority of 95 votes over Gaines, the administration candidate, making a difference in these three counties, of 557 votes in Madison,

137 votes in Jessamine,
364 votes in Boone,

1058 Jackson loss in these counties.

The Cincinnati Gazette of the 19th August, an Adams paper and edited by the infamous HAMMOND, says—

"Metcalfe is elected Governor. The majority is less than 1500. The Senate is equally divided, and the house Jackson by a majority of 5 or 6."

When Charles Hammond admits that the Senate is equally divided, it is fair to presume that there is a Jackson majority. Our accounts from Kentucky leave no doubt of it. When Hammond too, admits 5 or 6 majority in the House, it is not unreasonable to suppose there are 10 or 16, and such we believe, will turn out to be the fact.

[Edit. Balt. Rep. Aug 27.

The U. S. Telegraph of Monday evening says—"We have received no returns since our last, except some corrections of former returns, which reduce Metcalfe's majority to 1216. Our returns for Lieutenant Governor are not so full as those for governor, but we have enough to convince us that Mr. Breathitt, the Jackson candidate, is elected. The Senate and House of Representatives are favourable to Jackson beyond a doubt."

Gales and Seaton, in their paper of yesterday, say—"the majority obtained by Mr. Metcalfe is comparatively small, it is true, but it is decisive." Ha! ha! ha! "Decisive." Yes! it is decisive. Bless us! how chap-fallen the Adams men hereabouts look.

From the Cincinnati Republican.

Illinois.—Gen. Duncan, a warm supporter of the people's candidate for President, is re-elected Representative in Congress from Illinois. Gen. Duncan, it will be recollected, was brought forward by the people of that state to supersede the late Mr. Cook, who voted for Mr. Adams in Congress contrary to the will of his constituents, and subsequently received a large sum of the people's money from Messrs. Adams and Clay, and for which the Secretary refused to account to the Committee on Retrenchment, appointed by Congress to enquire into the expenditure of the public treasury.

Missouri.—Mr. Pettis, the Jackson candidate, is elected Representative in Congress from Missouri, over Mr. Bates, the present member. Mr. Bates was elected by the Jacksonians to supercede John Scott, who gave the vote of Missouri to Mr. Adams in defiance of the will of his constituents, as shown by the ballot boxes. Scott was subsequently appointed by the administration to examine certain land offices, at eight dollars per day and eight dollars for every 20 miles travel,—but is effectually disgraced in the eyes of the people. Mr. Bates sent in his adhesion to the coalition, and for this he has been sentenced to stay at home after the next session.

We present to our readers the following returns from Indiana, and Illinois, as far as they have been received. U. S. Telegraph.

ILLINOIS ELECTIONS.—For Congress.

	Duncan. For Jackson.	Forquer. For Adams.
Fayette,	144	63
Bond,	135	129
Montgomery,	166	43
Shelby,	211	55
Clay,	81	00
Marion,	102	13
Clinton,	160	79
Washington,	74½	45
Jefferson,	215	33
St. Claire,	250 maj.
Monroe,	80 do.
Tazewell,	27	44
	1695	504
	504

Maj'y. for Duncan, 1191

INDIANA.—Boone, the Jackson candidate for congress is elected by 267 votes—And late accounts say, Dr. Canby, the Jackson candidate is elected Governor.

Fallacy of the Coalition Calculations. Mr. Adams' friends calculate upon his re-election, by means of a junction of his forces and Clay's. Now let us look at this for a moment. Give Mr. Adams all he got before, [which he will not get]—give him all Clay got, [which Mr. A. will not get.] What then?—he is not elected. Mr. Adams obtained 84 votes, Mr. Clay 37, total 121, and he wants ten votes, 131 being necessary for a choice. All Crawford's strength is now thrown into Jackson's scale, and Adams and Clay's whole force is not a match for Jackson's. But so far from Adams holding his own he will lose the one vote which he got in Illinois, where they now vote by General ticket, and where they turned out Cook, for voting for Adams. He will not have the vote which he had the last time in Delaware. In New York it is hardly worth while to stop to count his loss—he is up a tree, he has nothing to expect but blank ballots, which will never again give him the vote of a State. What can Mr. Adams expect to get from those States which supported Mr. Clay? Missouri turned out Scott for voting for Adams. Kentucky turned most of Clay's accomplices out and sent eight Jackson men to Congress to four Clay men. Ohio is perhaps doubtful, but the chances are greatly in favour of Jackson. The sum and substance of the matter is—New York will make up every loss which Jackson had sustained from the ninety nine votes, with which he starts and which he obtained the last time, and the votes of Virginia and Georgia which no one denies to him, will certainly elect him. He has besides all his chances of getting votes in Kentucky, Missouri, Ohio, New Hampshire and Maine, in some of which he is morally certain of success, and, in all of which there is an excellent prospect in his favour.

Boston Statesman.

From the American Sentinel.

"Is the chair empty? is the King dead?"
"The empire unpossessed?"

The seat of government is deserted—and the President and his Cabinet have fled from their posts. The election as it approaches, brings with it such a certainty of defeat, as goads the holders of the public purse to desperation. The overwhelming popularity of Jackson in the West, has terrified Mr. Clay, he drops his diplomatic papers, and swift as meditation, he sweeps to Kentucky to superintend in person, the election of his friend Metcalfe. Mr. Adams, more weary, assumes mildness, leaves his post, and by "easy stages" perambulates New England, exhibits his person to quell the insurrection which is becoming formidable among his barronies in the North. The Secretary of War has scarcely subscribed his oath of office, before he is off in a tangent to manage New York. Mr. Southard, that great stickler for the Alien Law, is hourly expected in New Jersey, desperately determined to "Send out more horses, skour the country round;

"Hang all who talk of fear."

Every mail brings intelligence, that on the other hand the people are up and doing, that they are of the [illegible] constitutional right to say who shall execute the laws of the land, and dismiss this travelling cabinet, who with 150 dollars per day of the people's money in their pockets, neglect their duties of office, leave the vast concerns of this great nation, unprotected, to electioneer through the country like village politicians for themselves. There is something rotten in their cause.

JOHN WOODS.

From the (Ohio) People's Press.

The attention of our readers is called to the statement of Samuel H. Miller, of this county, in this day's paper, extracted from the Dayton Herald. Capt. Miller is well known here, as a man of character and veracity, and there can be no doubt that he has given a true and minute detail of the facts in the case of John Woods, which the Administration papers are trying to turn to the disadvantage of General Jackson. We shall presently shew that the bug-a-boo stories about the six militia men, are as little entitled to notice as the case of John Woods. Where is the necessity of law, if it is never to be complied with—and where is the safety of an army in time of war, if soldiers were permitted to mutiny and desert with impunity, without examples being made to deter others? It was a common practice in Ohio during the last war, &c. Gen. McARTHUR HAD THREE MEN SHOT IN CHILLICOTHE at one time, all of them much less deserving death than Harris. General HARRISON HAD THREE MEN SHOT AT SENECA—and we were present when three others were condemned to death at Franklinton, under Gen. Harrison's approval. We saw all the apparatus of death which John Binns has described with so much affected pathos, in the case of those executed at Mobile—the grave dug, the coffins placed on the margin of each grave, the white caps over the eyes of the culprits, who were kneeling on their coffins, &c. &c. and no one thought any thing of the whole ceremony, more than the common customs of military discipline. One, whose name was Fish, was shot, and the other two pardoned. Not a murmer has been heard against Generals Harrison and McArthur, for doing what they believed to be their duty, according to the laws which they had sworn to support—nor would one word have been said against Gen. Jackson, if he had not the imprudence to permit his name to be used as a candidate for the Presidency.

TO A CANDID PUBLIC.

Perceiving a false statement from the Kentucky Reporter (which has been extracted into the columns of Truth's Advocate,) in relation to the execution of John Woods, a militiaman, I deem it a duty I owe to the public to give a true statement of the facts connected with the transaction.

The plain truth is as follows. John Woods deserted from his post, and started for home. On his way he was met by a company of men on their march to join the army. Woods on seeing them, hurried from the path, and sought concealment in a cane brake. He was taken, however, and brought back to camp, where he was tried for desertion, found guilty, and condemned to be shot. For this offence he was PARDONED by Gen. Jackson, and on promises of future subordination he was returned to his duty. In about two or three weeks afterwards, Woods was again placed on guard. On a certain morning, he stuck his bayonet in the ground—hung his cartouch box on the but of his gun, and deserted his post—on pretence of going to his tent for breakfast. In passing the lines, he arrived at Major ——'s tent, (I forgot the Major's name.) The Major asked Woods where he was going. Woods replied, to get his breakfast. The Major advised Woods very strongly to return to his post—observing that he would soon be relieved—and offering him some corn bread and meat, told him that if he did not return to duty, he would certainly be taken; but Woods persisted in his determination, and would not return.

About this time, the officer of the day came up, and having heard a part of the conversation, turned to the lines and enquired who commanded that company? The Captain answered "I do." The officer of the day then told him to send a guard, and take John Woods to a Provost guard; where he was tried by a Court Martial and a second time found guilty, and condemned to be shot.—When the day arrived for the execution of the sentence of the Court Martial, General Jackson came to the place of execution and delivered a discourse which affected every heart, but that of the hardened Woods. By this time disaffection prevailed among several of the militia men. Woods in particular was very turbulent. General Jackson offered Woods his pardon a second time, on condition that he would serve his country like a true and faithful soldier, but Woods defied the General and Court Martial too; and swore with an oath that they dare not execute the sentence of the Court Martial. After many unavailing efforts to persuade Woods to conform to subordination, pointing out to him the consequences resulting to the army for such conduct, and Woods still remaining stubborn and irreclaimable—and swearing the Court Martial dare not execute their sentence—the General turned his horse and rode off, and Woods was shot before my own, and the eyes of the whole army.

SAMUEL H. MILLER.
Green County, Ohio, Feb. 21, 1828.

JOHN WOODS.—The following paragraph from the Western Intelligencer, will shew what effect the frightful and lamentable stories, circulated by the coalition prints, in relation to John Woods have produced on his neighbours:—Nashville Republican.

Another instance of the effect of Dr. Armstrong's writing in Bedford County.

At an election for Staff Officers in Colonel Whinnery's regiment, on yesterday, at the house of Jordon C. Holt, Esq. there were present about 300 men. The vote was taken on the Presidential question, when there appeared for Jackson, about 300, and for Adams not one.

This is the immediate neighbourhood in which John Woods resided when he joined the army. If then he was inhumanly murdered, as charged by the Adamites, why are all these people for Jackson?

$305,790 Dollars.

This immense sum of money has been drawn from the Treasury of the U. States by John Q. Adams, and yet he has had the hardihood to call the [illegible] murder [illegible] been received of the people's money [illegible] of FORTY DOLLARS A DAY [illegible] those who support him [illegible] upon the public purse.

Six Wagon loads of Silver!

It has been said that John Q. Adams has got from the public treasury of the U. S. by fair and by foul means, altogether as much as Six horse wagon loads of Silver Dollars. Let us see whether this is true.—305,790 dollars, weighing each one ounce, would amount to 19,111 pounds. Allowing 3000 lbs. to each team, it would make Six wagon loads and a half, [illegible] any man may make it for himself. Think of this when you go to vote, ye who are opposed to high taxes and a waste of the public money. Remember, about Nine Tons or six wagon loads of silver, paid to John Q. Adams—yet Adams is not satisfied.

From the Delaware Gazette.

ON THE PRESIDENCY.

I have stated that Mr. Adams was a minority candidate both in the electoral colleges and in the House of Representatives. I will now show you that my assertion is true. There are two hundred and sixty-one electoral votes given in at the electoral colleges at the time of electing a President, of these Mr. Adams received but 84, leaving a majority of 99 votes against him in the colleges. The constitution provides that if no one receives a majority of all the electoral votes, that the three highest shall be returned to the House of Representatives and that the House shall choose one of them President. The object of the constitution is simply this. To make the President of the United States the choice of a majority of the whole people of the United States. Mr. Adams received in the House of Representatives out of two hundred and twelve members, but eighty-seven votes, and as they represented thirteen states, he was elected agreeably to the forms of the constitution. When its spirit was entirely violated, as you will see thus—each member of Congress represents 40,000 people—

Multiply	40,000
By	87
And it gives	3,480,000
Now multiply	40,000
By	125
And it makes	5,000,000
Now deduct from this	3,480,000
And it shows a majority of	1,520,000

Against the election of John Quincy Adams at the election as represented in the House!! But if we carry this vote of this to the true ratio of calculation we will find that sixty six members of Congress made him President! Thus:

Maine has	7	Rep'ves, 1	could give her vote
N Hampshire	6	do	4	do
Massach'tts	13	do	7	do
Rhode Island	2	do	2	do
Connecticut	7	do	4	do
Vermont	5	do	3	do
New York	34	do	18	do
Maryland	9	do	5	do
Kentucky	12	do	7	do
Ohio	14	do	8	do
Louisiana	3	do	2	do
Illinois	1	do	1	do
Missouri	1	do	1	do
			66

Let us turn again to the vote each received in the electoral colleges, and calculating forty thousand to each representative this being the ratio of representation according to the act of Congress and see how the people were disposed to these men—we will begin with Mr. Adams—he received the following vote in each state, viz:—

Maine	9 votes representing	280,000
N. Hampshire	8	240,000
Massachusetts	15	520,000
Rhode Island	4	80,000
Connecticut	8	240,000
Vermont	7	200,000
New York	26	982,222
Maryland	3	68,181
Louisiana	2	48,000
Illinois	1	13,333
Delaware	1	13,333
	84 elect. votes rep'ng	2,714,089

Andrew Jackson received upon the same basis of calculation—

New York	1 vote representing	37,777
New Jersey	8	340,000
Pennsylvania	28	1,040,000
Maryland	7	220,000
N. Carolina	15	520,000
S. Carolina	11	360,000
Tennessee	11	360,000
Louisiana	3	72,000
Mississippi	3	40,000
Indiana	5	120,000
Alabama	5	120,000
Illinois	2	26,666
	99 elect. votes rep'ng	3,165,533
	Deduct those of Mr. Adams,	2,715,069
	Majority for Jackson	450,464
	To this may be added the votes given to Crawford and Clay, which may be stated at	2,529,398
	Majority	2,979,862

Clearly shewing that between Jackson and Adams in the Electoral Colleges there was according to our Congressional Representation—a majority of four hundred and fifty thousand four hundred and sixty-four people against Adams—That between Adams and Jackson and Crawford in the House of Representatives, There was a majority against Adams of one million five hundred and twenty thousand people, and that in the electoral Colleges, there was a majority connecting the votes of Crawford, Clay and Jackson, against Adams of two millions nine hundred and eighty nine thousand, eight hundred and sixty-two People!!!! with this immense vote against him John Quincy Adams was made President—sixty six members of congress actually setting at nought 2,989,862 People! If you can tolerate these things, then does the fundamental principle of our Government go for nothing—a minority rules a majority. The few govern the many, and there is an end of every principle belonging to republicanism—what would you have said of a candidate who had received but five votes in the colleges, had been elected by a vote of thirty one members of Congress over an opponent who had received 130 votes wanting but one of a majority of the whole number, and receiving one hundred and eighty-one votes of members of Congress in the House? would you have been satisfied with such a constitutional election?

DICKINSON.

ADAMS' ECONOMY.

[illegible] the Baltimore Republican [illegible] the friends of Mr. Adams have boldly asserted that his administration has been the most economical that ever was in this country. [illegible] comparison between the expenditures of the three years of his administration and the three last years of Mr. Monroe's administration.

MONROE. Current expenditures exclusive of Military pensions and the payment of the Public Debt.		ADAMS. Current expenditures exclusive of Military pensions and the payment of the Public Debt.
1822	$7,679,744 14	1825	$10,249,529 18
1823	8,008,596 [illegible]	1826	11,505,722 44
1824	9,[illegible]	1827	11,[illegible]
Total	[illegible]	Total	33,[illegible]
	Deduct Monroe's from Adams'		[illegible]
	Leaves		$8,635,907 [illegible]

Thus it appears, that Mr. Adams, in the first three years of his administration, expended more than Mr. Monroe did in the three last years of his administration, more than EIGHT MILLIONS and a half of dollars. These sentiments come from the books of the departments at Washington—they come from the records of the government, and cannot be denied. What has been the cause of this enormous increase of expenditures? Both of these periods during which they occurred were in times of peace. In what way has Mr. Adams spent in three years EIGHT MILLIONS six hundred and eighty thousand dollars more than Mr. Monroe did in the same space of time? The people of this country will be curious to hear this question answered. Will any friend of the present "economical" administration answer it? He would if he could.

From the Philadelphia Mercury.

JACKSON ELECTED.

By the vote of 1824,	99
Virginia, certain	24
Georgia	9
A majority of it	132
Add New York	30
Delaware	3
	165
Necessary to Election	131
Majority	34
Add Kentucky	14
Ohio	16
Majority	64

Hence the coalition use the arts of the highwaymen to escape their doom—and perpetrate every crime, because they cannot increase their danger or avert their defeat.

New Hampshire is announced as certain for the Hero and Farmer of Tennessee.

From the Bedford (Pa.) Gazette.

The Editor of the Lancaster Intelligencer, after an absence of several weeks has returned home. In giving a short account of his travels, he says: "The farmer having been peculiarly blessed with not only an abundance of hay and grain, but also unusually fine weather to cut, secure and haul it in, and the appearance of good summer and fall crops, will soon have time to devote his accustomed attention to his newspapers. The numerous sentiments given, and feelings expressed, on the 4th of July, must convince every one, that all our citizens partake in the common interest and vast importance of the approaching election. The news, however, is to the friends of the people and the rights of man, of the most cheering character. Go where you will, and the people are the firm and zealous friends of the Washington of our day. True it is, that among those, 'who are above the dull pursuits of civil life,'—who can afford to ride about—to spend hour after hour in the taverns, or at the corner of the streets, to talk politics, distribute coffin handbills, &c. there are several who vociferously shout the praises of Adams and Clay—but go among the people—pass the hay field—go to a public vendue or any general assemblage of citizens, and put the question—Who are you for? and you scarcely hear a voice but what is for Jackson."

Having while from home been in the State of New York, we were not a little amused with hearing the manner in which the Coalition are endeavouring to keep up the spirits of their friends and their tottering, hopeless cause. They there tell you "We have it from the most indubitable authority—from gentlemen of the first respectability at Harrisburg and Lancaster, that Pennsylvania will certainly be for the administration!" and it is asserted, and persisted in, as though they believed it. And yet, what man here, who has a regard for character and veracity could assert it. Is there a candid man here, who will not say that the majority in Pennsylvania for Jackson, will exceed 25,000? and is it not generally believed and expected to be nearer 50,000!!! We shall next week present what will be the probable result of the vote in each State, according to the best information received. There is, we assure our friends, now no reasonable doubt of the election of our candidate. The fourth of March, 1829, promises to be a proud day for America.

ADAMS IN GEORGIA.—The Savannah Mercury, an administration print, candidly acknowledges the weakness of the Adams party in the State of Georgia. A recent number of that paper, referring to the vain attempts now making, to get up an administration electoral ticket, says "We most sincerely hope that no additional ticket will be formed; it can answer no other purpose than to give additional bitterness to the strife of parties, and prevent a return of those feelings of mutual respect and good will which is an object so desirable among all true friends of the Union. An effort to elect an Adams electoral ticket must end in mortification and defeat. Mr. Adams has numerous, intelligent, warm and active friends—but they cannot control the votes of the State. The People are for Jackson; they are grateful for his past services; they admire his splendid achievements; they revere his upright and unyielding character; he is decidedly their favourite, and they will vote for him."

Plain Dealing.—In the extract from T. P. Moore's address published in our last No. we observed, when it was too late to correct it, a considerable error. In that part relating to the secret service we say, of which $555.01 was expended in 1827, it should be, of which $8,958.01 was expended. An error of which pleased our opponents, no doubt [illegible]

COMMUNICATIONS.

TO THE HONEST VOTERS OF SOMERSET COUNTY.

Fellow Citizens,

In Mr. Teackle's address to the citizens of Somerset county, he has taken especial notice of the License Law, and although he does not claim the credit of introducing the bill, yet he says it is substantially in accordance with a proposition that he had previously made for that purpose [illegible]

[illegible] exposed for sale or BARTER, shall open, keep or use, any booth, stall, shop, store, warehouse or other building, enclosure, VESSEL, or any other [illegible] or part of any house, building or other [illegible], for the purpose of selling by wholesale or retail, or bartering any salted provisions, grain, meal, flour, or TIMBER, without first obtaining a license in the manner prescribed by this act. And according to the [illegible] section of this law, offenders shall forfeit and pay the sum of $50, one half to the informer, and the other half to the state. And [illegible] 9th section, it is enacted, that any person who shall be convicted of a breach of any of the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined or imprisoned, or both, at the discretion of the court before whom he or she shall be thereof convicted.

Without torturing the plain grammatical meaning of the phraseology of this law, any man, and every person, may plainly perceive that salted provisions, grain, meal, and TIMBER, are laid under the identical same restrictions by the act, that dry groceries and spiritous liquors are!!! Let me ask Mr. Teackle, if I were to sell a hogshead of Molasses, Rum or Whiskey, 20 yards of cloth, calico or domestic, [illegible] by wholesale, or retail any of these [illegible], I should not be guilty of a breach of the provisions of this act, and subject myself to its penalty? If I should, let me then ask Mr. Teackle to point out to the people, the discriminating section or clause, that would exempt me from the penalty of this law, if I were to let a poor man who labours for me, have ten pounds of pork or bacon, a hundred herrings or a bushel of meal, or a pound of grain, in payment for his labour, I being not the grower or maker of the [illegible]. If there be no discriminating clause, (and I know there is none) I should subject myself as clearly to the penalty of the law, as if I were to buy and sell spiritous liquors, or any other kind of merchandise.

It is well known, that at least one half of the salted provisions, and a large portion of the grain, meal and flour consumed in this county, are purchased. And many persons who purchase these articles, have mechanics and labourers employed, and have been in the habit of supplying many of them with these articles for the use of their families. It is also well known that a man who had mechanics or labourers employed, (say for instance in the building of vessels, &c.) could supply them with spiritous liquors without license and without subjecting himself to any penalty under the former law. But now these [illegible] advantages are wickedly and [illegible] wrested from them, without the aid [illegible] the revenue of the state.

TIMBER is also an article of merchandise, the buying and selling of which is placed by this law under the same restrictions that spiritous liquors are, and a man owning a vessel, has no more right to buy and sell a vessel load, or any part of a load, of any sort or description of TIMBER, than he has to buy a vessel load or any part of a vessel load of spiritous liquors without license. [illegible] such a law as Mr. Teackle would have prepared [illegible] to be the poor man's friend. [illegible] this law [illegible] Mr. Teackle's description of it in his address. But since he has contradicted himself in the same paragraph, and since he evidences a wish to impose his views of the law upon the people as being in accordance with those of the State's Attorney, as communicated in his official intercourse with the grand juries, and since I am convinced that he was not authorized to make any such deduction from any thing communicated to the grand juries by the State's Attorney, I feel satisfied that every candid man will agree with me, not only as it respects my views of this law, but also in respect to my views of Mr. Teackle's intention in giving such a false, deceptive and partial colouring to it, which was in my humble opinion, to gull and deceive the uninformed. An admirable friend to the poor man, truly!

I have said that Mr. Teackle has contradicted himself in his address with respect to the license law, and I am sure that any person who possesses the power of compounding ideas sufficient to tell that two and two make four, can plainly perceive it. He says, "a main object of this enactment was to avoid a continuance of those shameful evasions of existing laws which were notoriously practised in certain places to the injury of the honest traders, and the detriment of the revenue." The last sentence in that part of his address relating to the license law, reads as follows:—"They [the people] will clearly perceive that the law relates to established traders, and that no person can be made amenable for any breach of its provisions, whose occupation does not plainly come within the spirit, as well as the letter, of it." In the first of these sentences he says a main object was to avoid the evasions of former laws, by those who were not regular traders. In the last he says no person can be made amenable for any breach of its provisions except the ESTABLISHED TRADER!! Wonderful!!

In another place he speaks of the true intent and meaning of this law. This is absolutely ridiculous, in a man of his pretended knowledge. Penal Statutes are explained according to their literal meaning, wills, &c. according to their intent and meaning. It is one prerogative of the Legislature to enact laws, it is another to explain and give them meaning.

I will now conclude by asking the honest voters of Somerset, if they are so regardless of their "unalienable right," as to vote again for men, who have so egregiously abused the confidence once reposed in them, as to sanction by their vote, such a statute as this license law?—For men, who never think of the poor man, but when that eventful first Monday in October reminds them of the want of his vote? Does not your own plain sense tell you, that if LITTLETON D. TEACKLE, ALEXANDER DONOHO, and Henry J. S. Gibbons had had the interest of the POOR MAN at heart, they would not have voted for this obnoxious law.

The people's humble servant,
COMMON SENSE.

August 28, 1828.

To the Editor of the Village Herald.

Being a citizen of Somerset [redacted] one of your subscribers, and feeling [redacted] in the politics of the day, I have [redacted] pology ventured to address you [redacted]. My own history has nothing to [redacted] matter, nor is it important to you or the public who or what I am; but as the Adams men have seen fit to denounce the friends of Gen. Jackson as enemies to decency and good order, I think I may be allowed this once to say of myself, that I am a friend to morality in public as well as in private life. I am inclined to think that with all their boasting about decency and decorum the Coalitionists hold a theory of morality to be deduced neither from the works of Plato, Seneca, nor the still more refined works of my lord Chesterfield. This opinion is very well sustained by the recent occurrence mentioned in the Herald of the 12th ult. I allude to the public harrangue of Mr. Alexander Donoho, an Adams candidate for the Legislature, in which he denounced Mrs. Jackson as a "damned w——e."

When I first read this article in your paper I confess I was shocked. Had this unkind expression been uttered over one of those hogsheads of Whiskey to which you have alluded in several of your papers, I should not have been so much surprised, but when I learned that the observation was made upon the public stand before a considerable audience, I knew not where to find its apology.

I have since become indebted, however, to the production of a writer who signs himself "Justice," and which made its appearance in the Iris of the 26th ult. for an explanation of Mr. Donoho's remark. The writer seems willing to extenuate Mr. Donoho's offence if not to justify him. He says, "the language escaped from Mr. Donoho under circumstances which threw over it the veil of palliation"—"he thinks there was a degree of imprudence in it, but not of criminality or baseness which your paper of the 12th ult. fixed upon it. He says "Mr. Donoho was bullied into the remark by several individuals of the opposition." But I have yet to learn from what source the writer draws the principle that it is a palliation of Mr. Donoho's offence to vent upon a pious female, who has nearly attained her seventieth year, a Billingsgate epithet of abuse because he had altercations with several individuals, and these too of his own seeking. I hope, Mr. Editor, that for the future we shall not hear any more talk of the Coalitionists being the exclusive friends of decency, decorum and good order, since the Somerset Iris, a press got up expressly to put the public in possession of their views and sentiments, has undertaken to vindicate Mr. Donoho's conduct.

I am very respectfully your ob't. serv't.
JUVENAL.

Sept. 1, 1828.

We understand that Mr. Clay was in the court house yard a large portion of the time during the late election in Fayette county, shaking hands and conversing with the voters as if he had been a candidate himself.—Is this the business for which the people pay him near SEVENTEEN DOLLARS per day? Did Madison or Monroe, or even John Q. Adams, while Secretary of State, quit their business, go home, mix with the crowd on election days, endeavouring to influence the voters, all this while drawing a salary from the treasury?—Frankfort Ky. Argus.

[COMMUNICATED.]

Mr. Zieber—Many enquiries have been lately made regarding the day on which the Electoral Election takes place, with a view of satisfying those enquiries you will please state that the day designated by the Constitution of Maryland for that purpose is the Second Monday of next November.

Yours, &c. A Subscriber.

Sept. 2, 1828.

Superintendent of Primary Schools.

[From the Village Herald of July, 1827.]

"This being an appointment unknown to the Constitution, WITHOUT SALARY, and NOT CONNECTED with the POSSESSION of the SCHOOL MONEY, it cannot be CALLED an OFFICE of PROFIT or TRUST, nor interpose a disability to my further services as your delegate.
"LITTLETON D. TEACKLE."

Maryland Legislature.

House of Delegates, Dec. Sess. 1827.

Resolved, by the General Assembly of Maryland, that the Treasurer of the Western Shore be and he is hereby authorized and required, to pay to Littleton Dennis Teackle, or his order, $500.00, in full compensation for his services and expenditures as Superintendent of Public Instruction.

[See Journal of Proceedings of House of Del. December Sess. 1827, page 518.

[COMMUNICATED.]

TO THE CITIZENS OF DORCHESTER COUNTY.

At a time when the welfare and resources of our state require the exertions of every individual to secure them,—When taxes levied on every species of property, are resorted to, to satisfy our civil lists, &c. behold! a new party dating its birth, by proxy, on the 14th of last July, endeavours by its affected brilliancy, to dazzle your eyes, and when thus blinded, to prostrate you to its own views. Fellow citizens, this is a time which demands your serious attention. It is a time when you should come forth in "bold relief," and declare that you will not suffer yourselves to be led by a party who call loudly for Adams men to represent you, and who proscribe the friends of the Hero of New Orleans—the second saviour of his country. Is this equity? Is this justice? This new party boldly asserts, that it has selected the best and most suitable men to represent you. But hear their reason for so doing. They say that such a course will destroy the old parties which have heretofore existed, and they impliedly say, it will destroy the Jackson party in this county. This is what they so much desire, and in order to effect it, they dictate to you fellow citizens, for whom you shall vote—Yes! in "secret conclave" they say such men shall be the representatives of this county! Thus smothering the free will of our citizens, at the same time they endeavour to put down the Jackson party, and to suppress the native genius and talent of our county. Then I suppose we shall have a diplomatic corps, who will rifle our Treasury of its contents, as was done the last session of our Legislature. $500.00 were liberally bestowed on Mr. Teackle as superintendent of primary schools, [redacted]

G. Brown	do	3,869 48
Isaac Hines	do	3,889 26
Henry Hobbs	do	3,858 54
Joseph Mayo	do	3,890 40
Thos. Culbreth for superintending the work		5,117 26
Henry Hobbs for recording platts		976 00
Joseph Mayo for indexing		100 00
		$25,586 26

This enormous sum was lavished on political friends for only 18 months' service. But the amount given to Thos. Culbreth, clerk of the Council demands our attention. That gentleman receives $15,00.00 per year, as Clerk of the Council—Still the Executive and Council bestowed on him this sum in addition to his salary. Thus, my fellow citizens, your money was expended in consequence of a great neglect of duty in your public servants. When these items appear in print one would suppose the treasury full to overflowing. But it is not so. Before the Adams Governor was elected it was, but now it is bankrupt.

But to return; Can we suffer ourselves to be gulled by men who are endeavouring to wrest from us one of our dearest rights, viz: the selecting of our own men to represent us. No. We want none to dictate to us. We are of age to act, and on the 1st Monday of October will declare by our votes that we will have no Caucus to reign over us. If the pretext used by this new party for the purpose of amalgamating the old Federal and Democratic parties was to support four men, to represent the county in the next Legislature: If this had been their true and only object, why did they not give a general call to both Jackson and Adams men. Then the foregoing ticket might have been formed satisfactory to all, viz: J. Steele as a democrat, Dr. Jackson as a federal, for the Upper districts, and Wm. M. Robinson and James Patterson, (of T. P.) for the Lower districts. In the selection of the above named gentlemen we should have found men whose known integrity and honor are equivalent to that zeal which they would have evinced to serve their fellow citizens. Among these gentlemen we also should have found men of both parties. But this would not suit that "secret conclave," the Cambridge Caucus, whose only object was to prostrate the cause of the People. It would not suit one or two individuals in Cambridge, who hold offices for life. O, no! they understand exactly the value of a fat office. They know the farming business is dull, and will not afford them an annual income of $2000; very good reasons truly for supporting men friendly to their own views, and as "birds of a feather flock together," they are very good reasons for supporting Mr. Adams. He has been in search of an office for life, these many years, but has not yet obtained one. The little fish beat the big fish.

JAMES MADISON.
Hungo River, Dorchester c'y.
August 26, 1828.

The following appeared among the casual selections of one of our exchange papers.

"Truth is clothed in white—but a lie comes in all the colours of the rainbow."

Who wants to bet 250 or $500?

Mr. Zieber—

Having seen a statement in a late Iris, as to the result of the Presidential election which gives to Mr. Adams 175 votes—Gen. Jackson 85 certain votes, and the remaining 53 votes doubtful, I deem it proper to notice the warranted statement of the Iris by offering the following bets, in support of my opinion. I am credibly informed that there are some of the voters in the Lower district, who hold out the idea that Jackson will not receive many, if any, more electoral votes throughout the U. S. than are allowed by the truthful Iris.

Now, sir, I take the Iris' statement, for which the editor says he has a warranty, and offer the following bets to any one who will stake the cash, or give his bond with good security—to wit: 25 or $50, at the option of the other party, that Mr. Adams will not get 175 votes—the like sum that he will not receive 168 votes—the like sum that he will not get 158 votes—the like sum that he will not get 148 votes—the like sum that he will not get 138. I will then take Gen. Jackson's side, and bet the like sum he will get 138 votes—the like sum that he will get 148 votes—the like sum that he will get 158 votes—the like sum that he will get 168 votes—the like sum that he will get 178 votes.

If the editor of the Iris calculates on deceiving the good people of this county, by his outrageously false statement, he will be as unequivocally deceived himself, as he will be in the result of the Presidential election.

One of the Voters of Somerset county.

Sept. 1, 1828.

We are authorized to give the real name of the above proposer, upon the application of some one to take up the bets, who will give assurance that he is in earnest.—Ed.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

[Communicated.

A public meeting will be held near the house of George Waller (between Spring Hill and the Delaware line,) on Friday the 5th of September, and on the next day, Saturday, at Sharptown. The candidates for the general assembly are expected to attend.

A meeting will also be held at the house of Capt. Jacob Cullen, in the lower district, on Saturday the 13th of September—when the candidates for the assembly and the electoral college for President of the U. States are expected to be present.

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year, the FARM at present occupied by Mr. Peter McGee. It adjoins the farm of Mr. William Porter. For terms apply to the subscriber.

HETTY DISHAROON.
Princess-Anne, Sept. 2

NOTICE.

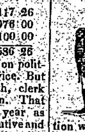
THE subscriber being extremely desirous of closing his business, once more gives notice to those indebted to him, that unless their accounts are settled in the course of the present month, he will be compelled to adopt a legal process without respect to persons.

SEVERN TEACKLE.
Princess-Anne, Sept. 2.

FOR SALE, and on a moderate [illegible]
[illegible] Ogle G[illegible] For further information apply at the office of the Village [illegible]
Sept. 2, 1828. mw.

BATTALION ORDERS.

Sept. 2, 1828.



IN obedience to Regimental orders the commanding Officers of Companies attached to the Second Battalion of 25th Regiment M. M. will cause the companies under their respective commands to meet at the regimental parade ground, on FRIDAY the 26th of September, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. as the line of review and inspection will be formed at 11. The commander of this patriotic corps confidently expects that the companies attached thereto will give, upon this occasion, a general attendance, and that the officers will appear in full uniform.

ANTHONY B. BENNETT, Maj.
2nd Bat. 25th Reg. M. M.
Sept. 2. wm

ATTENTION!

THE PRINCESS-ANNE TROOP OF HORSE will meet at Col. Dashiell's hotel, in Princess-Anne, (without uniform,) on Saturday the 13th instant, at ten o'clock A. M. precisely. By order of the Capt.

WM. M. JONES, O. S.
Sept. 2 km

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Josiah Gibbons vs. Levin Ballard, sen. I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one tract or part of a tract of land called Moore & Cassett, containing 180 acres, more or less, negroes Isaac, Mingo, Isaac Junior, Dover, John, Joe, George, Hezekiah, Theodore, John, Esther, Martha, Letty, Matilda, and Bridget, the goods and chattels lands and tenements of said Levin, which I shall proceed to sell at the court-house door, in Princess-Anne, on the 23d inst. between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above writ.

GEO. DASHIELL, late Shff.
September 2. ftm

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Thomas Jones of Thomas use of Samuel Polk, use of Dr. James Wilson, vs. Levin Ballard, sen. I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: One tract of Land called Moore & Cassett, 180 acres, one negro man called Peter, one do. Toby, one do. Joshua, one do. Littleton, the goods and chattels lands and tenements of the said Levin, which I shall proceed to sell at the court-house door in Princess-Anne, on the 23d inst. between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above named writ.

GEO. DASHIELL, late Shff.
Sept. 2. ftm

PUBLIC SALE.

WILL be sold at public sale, on the 20th instant, the HOUSE belonging to the estate of Robt. Moreton, deceased, and known by the name of the Sand-Flea Store-House. The terms of sale will be made known on the day of sale. The sale to commence at 1 o'clock P. M. By order of the Orphans Court of Somerset county.

BENJAMIN I. JONES, Adm. of Robt. Moreton, dec'd.
Sept. 2 mw

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset County Court and to me directed, at the suit of John J. Davis use of James H. Handy against Mitchell Alphy, and John S. Evans, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: Fifty acres of land, more or less, known by the name of Acworth's Delight, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 23d of September next, at the Court-House door, in Princess-Anne, to the highest and best bidder, for cash. Sale to take place between 12 and 3 o'clock P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Sept. 2, 1828. tj

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, to wit: George Handy administrator of Wm. Fleming, use of James Wilson against Levin Ballard, sen. Severn Teackle use of James Wilson against Levin Ballard, sen. and James Wilson adm. of George J. Jones use of James Wilson against Levin Ballard, sen. will be sold the following property, to wit: a tract or parcel of land called "Moore & Cassett," containing 180 acres, more or less; one other tract or part of a tract called 'Brothers Agreement,' 80 acres, more or less; one negro woman Leah and children, and one boy Spencer, one boy Nathan, one ditto Isaac, one ditto Nathan, which property has heretofore been by me under writs of fieri facias, and which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 23d of September, inst. at the court-house door, between the hours of 12 and 3 to the best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.
Sept. 2, 1828. mw

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court, and to me directed, to wit: Edme Ducatol vs. Levin W. Ballard, Severn Teackle vs. Levin W. Ballard and James Wilson adm. of George J. Jones use of James Wilson vs. Levin W. Ballard will be sold the following property, to wit, one horse and gig, two head of other horses, four beds and furniture, 10 head of cattle, three yoke of oxen, and all the said Levin's right, title, interest and estate in and to part of a tract of land called Dashiell's Lot, containing [illegible] acres, more or less, which property has been heretofore levied on by me under writs of Fieri Facias, and which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 23d of September, inst. at the Court House door, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. for cash, to the best bidder, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.
Sept. 2 mw

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.
Somerset County Orphans Court.
Aug. 26th, 1828.

§§§§§§§§§§ ON application of SEVERN
§§SEAL.§§ MISTER, Ex'r. of RICHARD
§§§§§§§§§§ EVANS, late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in one of the papers printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy, Test.
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of RICHARD EVANS, late of said county, deceased—All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th of March next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 26th of Aug., 1828.

SEVERN MISTER,
Ex'r. of R. Evans, dec'd.
Sept. 2, 1828. k

NOTICE.

ALL persons indebted to the estate of Richard Evans, deceased, by bond, note or open account, are hereby requested to make payment to the subscriber on or before the 15th day of October next, otherwise he will be obliged to pursue a legal course to compel the same.

SEVERN MISTER, Ex'r. of
R. Evans, dec'd.
Sept. 2, 1828. mfl

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of William Williams, Esq. against Jesse Walter, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all that part of a tract of land called Lebanon, part of a tract of land called Venables' Pretention, part of a tract called Troublesome, containing 249 acres, more or less, 1 black mare, 1 old gig, 4 yoke of oxen, 4 milch cows, 7 head of cattle, 18 head of sheep, 23 head of hogs, 6 beds and furniture, 2 timber carts, 2 wain do., 1 set black smith's tools, household and kitchen furniture; also, by virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias, issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Levin Wilson, against Jesse Walter I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: 1 negro man named Joshua, 1 lot of lumber & boards containing 50,000, more or less, sundry farming utensils, as the property of said Walter, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 23d of inst. between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. at the court-house door, in Princess-Anne, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Sept. 2.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞All communications addressed to the editor must come POST PAID.

DOCTOR L. W. BALLARD,

HAVING removed to Princess Anne, and established himself in the line of his business, respectfully tenders his professional services to the citizens of Princess-Anne and its vicinity. His office is the next door above Mr. Harding's store, where, or at Col Dashiell's Hotel, he may be found ready to give his prompt attention to any call from his friends for medical assistance.

August 26, 1828. mfl

REGIMENTAL ORDERS.

THE 25th Regiment Maryland Militia are ordered to meet at the usual place of parade, near the Upper Ferry, on Friday the 26th day of September, for review and inspection. The line will be formed precisely at 10 o'clock A M.

By order of Col. Geo. A. Dashiell,
GEO. L. AIRES, Adj.

August 18, 1828. 2d

BATTALION ORDERS.

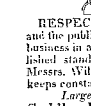
August 19, 1828.

IN obedience to Regimental Orders the commanding officers of companies attached to the First Battalion of the 25th regiment M. M. will cause the companies under their respective commands to meet at the regimental parade ground, on FRIDAY the 26th of SEPTEMBER, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. as the line of review and inspection will be formed at 11. The commander of this [illegible]tic corps confidently expects that the pat[illegible] companies attached thereto will give, upon this occasion, a [illegible]neral attendance, and that the officers will appear [illegible] in full uniform.

ROBT. STEWART, Lt. Col.
1st Bat. 25th Reg. M. M.

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. HALL,)



Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk-Maker,

No. 127 Market Street, (near the new City Hotel,) BALTIMORE,

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public, that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old established stand for many years occupied by Messrs. William & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a

Large and General Assortment of

Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks, Velcices, Saddlebags, Collars, Military Equipments, &c.

of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail, on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this or any other city.

August 19th, 1828. 1*

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed; two at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'r.s of Thomas Byrd against Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and 1 other at the suit Hannah Hearn, Ex'x of Wm. Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right, interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by L. D. Collier; also a house and lot occupied by Amelia Nicholson; also one other occupied by William S. Disharoon; also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esquire's Mills, it being the office of the said Elijah; also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson & Levi Cathell, of a certain Absalom Phipps; also a clock & case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Waller, Esq. in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 20th of September next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 26. m

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald Office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks,
FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
C. I. S.A.'s before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas.
WARRANTS.

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's obt. servant.
WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.

Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Mary A. Stewart by William Miles her guardian, and by virtue of 6 writs of Fieri Facias issued by Burton Cannon, a justice of the peace for Somerset county, to wit; one at the suit of Levin Tyler, executor of Samuel Milborn; 1 do. Isaac Riggin, administrator of Noah Riggin; 2 do. Roland Bevins; 1 do James Stewart; 1 do. Robert Lankford; by virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by William Coston, a justice of the peace in and for said county, at the suit of Richard H. Sampson, use of James Sampson, use of Burton Cannon, all the above against Henry I. Riggin and to me directed. I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: two head of horses, 2 yoke of oxen, 4 head of cattle, 20 head of hogs, 25 head of sheep, 6 feather beds and furniture, 1 corner cupboard, 1 clock, 1 sideboard, 1 desk, 1 walnut table, 3 pine do. 1 stand, 1 lot of earthen ware, 1 dozen chairs, 1 safe, 2 trunks, 1 lot of knives, and forks, 1 grindstone, 1 hand-mill, 1 wain cart, 1 carriage, 1 wheat fan, 1 lot of casks, 1 cider mill, 1 crosscut saw, 1 hand do. 3 ploughs, 5 harrows, 3 axes, 1 lot of iron, 150 bushels of corn, more or less; 14 stocks of fodder, more or less, 1 lot of flax, 2 pair of and-irons, 3 ox yokes, 3 chairs, 6 hives with bees, 1 lot of tin ware, 1 lot of coopers ware, 1 looking glass, 2 guns, part of a tract of land called Panther's Den, 1 do. Allen's Vale, 1 do. Lonely Glade, containing 179 acres, more or less, all of the above property, I shall sell at the court-house door in Princess Anne, on TUESDAY the 9th day of next SEPTEMBER, between the hours of 1 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 19th, 1828. wp

SHERIFF's SALE.

By virtue of 2 writs of Venditioni Exponas, one at the suit of Zadock Long use of William Roach, the other at the suit of Jeremiah Y. Dashiell, and by virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias, one at the suit of Samuel Brown, one at the suit of Jeremiah Y. Dashiell use of George W. Dashiell, 1 at the suit of George Jones survivor of George and Robert Jones, all issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed against Levin W. Ballard, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right and title of the said Ballard to part of a tract of land called Dashiell's Lot, containing 332 acres, more or less; part of Sandy Ridge and Fitzwaters, containing 156 acres more or less; one tract of land called Moore & Cascet, which the said Levin W. Ballard purchased of his father Levin Ballard, containing 131 acres, more or less; also 500 bushels of wheat, more or less; 4 yoke of oxen, and 2 colts which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 2d of September next, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. at the court-house door, in Princess Anne to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 12.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, at the suit of William Kibble against Isaac Surmon, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one house and lot, containing one acre, more or less, known by the name of Hog Neck, and situated on Wicomico river, about 3 miles from its head; also two beds, one loom, one gun, one sein, two canoes, two hogs, and one yearling, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 9th of next September, between the hours of ten and 12 o'clock A. M. on the premises to the highest & best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 19 ws

SALE FOR CASH.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of James Polk, esq. against capt. Lee P. Harcum, I shall expose to public sale on Tuesday the 2nd day of September next, at the Court House door in Princess-Anne, between the hours of one and two o clock P. M. the following property, to wit: a part of a tract of land called "White Hall," containing 509 acres more or less, one negro man Stephen, one negro woman Betty, one do. Leah, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements, of the said Harcum, to satisfy the above writ with all the costs.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

August 12, 1828. mw

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street.
BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.
And a general assortment
Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.
DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD
Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. wm

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court, & to me directed at the suit of John W. Jones for the use of Henry Adams against Josiah D. Jones, I have seized and taken the following property in execution, to wit; one schooner called the Franklin of 40 tons burthen, and 2 head of horses, which I shall proceed to sell at the Court-house door, on Tuesday the 2nd day of September, between the hours of 1 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Sff.

August 12. wp

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset County Court and to me directed, at the suit of William T. G. Polk, administrator of Samuel Polk, against George Porter, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called White Chapel, containing 263 acres, more or less, part of a tract of land called Mount Sham, containing 1 acre, more or less; also one negro boy Ebin, 1 negro woman Esther, 2 yoke of oxen, 3 head of horses, 3 cows, and 1 still, taken as the property of said Porter, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 2nd of September next, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock, P. M. at the court-house door in Princess Anne, to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, S'ff.

August 12, 1828.

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; pound, half and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking; patent and common Taps; lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets.

Baltimore, 8th mo 4th.

SINCLAIR & MOORE,

Pratt-St. Wharf, Baltimore,

HAVE in store—Millet, Lucerne, early Corn, bunch, pole & soup Beans, a large assortment for planting, and garden seeds generally.

PLOUGHS.

Amongst which are the much approved self sharpening point Plough—By turning and reversing said point, the share lasts much longer than the cast share of any other plough, in as much as the point is of steel, and when worn bevelling it is sharpened, if turned over. The CULTIVATORS made by Sinclair & Moore, pulverize the ground more effectually, and much deeper than the old fashioned there hoed kind—and by the use of these in the culture of corn, it will save nearly two-thirds of the ploughing.

ALSO, Socket Shovels, Scythes, Mattocks and Picks, with handles; —spring steel Hay and Manure Forks, WHEAT FANS, & GRAIN CRADLES, with best Waldron Scythes; Garden Tools generally; Wove Wire for Seives, and Mill Screens.

☞They have received from on board the brig Hyperion, capt. Forbes, just from Liverpool, a quantity of grain and grass Scythes, (Waldron's prime) Sickles, Malleable Trace Chains; Straw and Hay Knives; Grass Hooks, and Garden Tools, amongst which are turnip and other Hoes; Edging Tools, budding and pruning Knives, &c. &c.

☞For the greater convenience of those who use our PLOUGHS in Somerset, we have appointed JOHNSTON & SUDLER of Princess-Anne, our agents for the sale of them, who will constantly keep a supply of the different kinds at our prices.

June, 1828. S. & M.

EMIGRATION TO LIBERIA.

NOTICE.

THE Managers of the American Colonization Society give notice, that they are ready to receive applications for the conveyance of free people of color to the colony of Liberia.

In all cases, the age, sex, and professions of the applicants must be mentioned.

Applicants from the State of Maryland must be prepared to offer the affidavit of some free white person, to their having actually resided within the State of Maryland for twelve months previous to the period of emigration.

Applications may be made in Baltimore to Hon. Judge Brice, Charles Howard Esq. of John E., John H. B. Latrobe Esq., or Charles C. Harper Esq., Agents of the Society.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess-Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.

August 5. jfi

BARREN CREEK SPRINGS.

THE SUBSCRIBER
Begs leave to inform his friends & the public,

That his HOUSE is now open

FOR THE RECEPTION OF VISITERS.

An anxious solicitude to promote the comfort of those who are in pursuit of health, pleasure, or business, has induced him to make such arrangements as will enable him to give ample satisfaction to those who may favour him with their company. By those who have visited the Springs, during the present season, the waters have been pronounced more powerful in their effects than hitherto experienced—operating in most cases, as a purgative medicine. Those desirable effects, in conjunction with its chalybeate properties, which are acknowledged to be unsurpassed by any waters in the world, present a powerful inducement to such as are already assailed by disease, and to those who are desirous to avoid the bilious diseases of the climate.

Persons who are inclined to try the efficacy of the waters may rest assured that every accommodation shall be provided to render them happy and comfortable; and the charges shall be apportioned to the pressure of the times.

The public's humble servant,
CHARLES LEARY.

N. B. Travellers, generally, particularly the passengers of the steam-boat Maryland, will find this an easy and commodious stage, after the arrival of the boat at Cambridge, (being only four miles distant from Vienna.) Here they will be certain to meet with the purest and best Waters of the peninsula, and a Table supplied with the best accommodations the country can afford—on the most reasonable conditions.

July 29. mku

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers.

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reedmakers.
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 Butter Prints

100 gross of Lamp Wick, assorted sizes. Spiggots and fossets, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs, and hydrants, shoe, sweeping, dusting and other brushes, sifters, muddlers, and lime squeezers, fancy and common bellows, pound, half pound and and quarter pound Butter Prints, of various patterns, fishing lines and rods, butter bowls and trays, baskets, wash and cake boards twine, and cord, patent taps, humming and common tops, nests of sugar boxes and tubs, boot & shoe blacking, towel rollers, potato and turnip mashers, rolling pins, carpenters' or joiners' chalk lines, spoons and paddles, [illegible], crabbing and cabbage nets.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101½ Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.

Baltimore, 8th mo. 4 ww

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.

Somerset County Orphans Court.

Aug. 12th, 1828.

[SEAL] ON application of MARCELLUS JONES, Ex'r. of KEZIAH JONES late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in one of the papers printed at Princess Anne.

True copy, Test,
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order

Notice is hereby given,

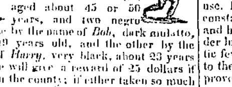
That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of KEZIAH JONES, late of said county, deceased.—All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 29th of February next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 12th of Aug., 1828.

MARCELLUS JONES,
Ex'r of K. Jones, dec'd.

August 19, 1828. k

STOP THE RUNAWAYS.



ABSCONDED on the 23d day of July, THREE NEGROES; one negro woman named Easter, aged about 45 or 50 years, and two negro men, one by the name of Bob, dark mulatto, about 19 years old, and the other by the name of Harry, very black, about 23 years old. We will give a reward of 25 dollars if taken in the county; if either taken so much in proportion; and if taken out of the county or state, we will give 45 dollars, if secured so that we can get them again, or if either taken up so much in proportion.

THOMAS BELL.
HOPKINS WINDSON.

Nanticoke Point, July 29. vk

Notice to Creditors.

THE creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause, if any they have, why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

McKIMMEY PORTER.

Salisbury, Aug. 19 mfl

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year, the Houses now occupied, one by Mrs. Mary Ballard, and the other by Joseph S. Colgan, in the town of Princess Anne. For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

July 15, 1828. k

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phœbus.

For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

June 3, 1828. wk

FOR RENT,

For the ensuing year, that FARM which was formerly the property of William Tilghman, dec'd. situated on the head of Back Creek. For terms apply to JAMES STEWART.

July 22, 1828. kw

☞NOTICE.

A PLANTER who desires to procure some SLAVES for his own service, will give the best prices in cash, for a few of both sexes, between the ages of 12 and 25 years. Those who have such to dispose of will please apply at Col. Dashiell's Tavern, immediately.

Princess-Anne, August 4.

WANTED.

I want to hire a COLOURED WOMAN of good character, who understands cooking and house work in general. To such a one I will give liberal wages. Enquire at the Village Herald office, July 22

FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber is desirous of disposing of his real estate, being and lying in Worcester county, Md. and situated on Dividing Creek. The landed estate consists of 200 or more acres. The improvements are a dwelling house and out buildings with a good SAW and GRIST MILL, both in excellent order; also a young orchard. About 100 acres of the land is in a good state of cultivation.

There is, on one part of the above property, an abundance of Iron Ore, which would warrant the erection of a Forge, and prove an object of value to a purchaser acquainted with, and calculated for, such an undertaking.

The terms of sale will be—one third down and 3 years for the payment of the balance. For further particulars apply to

JOHN MORRIS.

April 22 kd

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess-Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

EBENEZER ANDERSON.

August 19 ww

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC.

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumption, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1828.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught that "our first attention should be engaged in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. in perfection. In consequence of a [illegible] combination of the most valuable herbs, it becomes a balsam of superior value, heals the injured parts, opens the pores, composes the disturbed nerves, allays, in manner of an annodyne; consequently [illegible] obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly in its use. It promotes expectoration, which is constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a [illegible] account of this disease in all its stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of proprietor, in red ink.

Offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER,

Nov. 20, 1827. Princess Anne.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks,
PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed on moderate terms,
At the Office of the Village Herald.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., SEPTEMBER 16, 1828. NO. 25.

John Quincy Adams an Enemy TO THE RIGHT of TRIAL BY JURY.

U.S. SENATE, Feb. 4, 1801.

A motion was made to agree to the following section in relation to trials by jury, in "the bill for erecting Louisiana into two territories, and making provisions for the temporary government thereof."

"Section 7. All free white male persons, who are house keepers, and shall have resided one year at least, in said Territory, shall be qualified to serve on grand or petit juries in the courts of the said Territories: and they shall, until the legislature thereof shall otherwise direct, be selected in such manner as the judges of Courts, respectfully, shall prescribe, so as to be most conductive to an impartial trial, and to be the least burdensome to the inhabitants of the Territory."

On the question to agree to the motion, it passed in the affirmative—Yeas 21, Nays 7. Those who voted in the negative, were Messrs. ADAMS, Bradley, Hillhouse, Olcott, Pickering, Plumer, and John Smith. See senate journal, vol. 3. p. 251, 2.

"The right of trial by a jury of twelve impartial fellow citizens, is one of the most ancient and valued prerogatives in our law. It has been the palladium of English liberty, and its guardian of our lives and property.—It is one of the blessings brought by our ancestors to these shores, to which all are entitled—the high and low, the rich and poor, the bond and free. The deprivation of this right was one of the grievances complained of in the Declaration of Independence. Yet this sacred privilege Mr. ADAMS intended to withhold from our newly adopted brethren of Louisiana, by voting against the law giving them that prerogative, and prescribing a mode of carrying it into effect.

Mr. Adams' vote in favour of the SLAVE TRADE.

Another clause inserted into the bill making provision for the temporary government of Louisiana, provides that—

"It should not be lawful for any person or persons to import or bring into the said Territory, from any part or place throughout the limits of the United States, or cause or procure to be so imported or brought, or knowingly to aid or assist in so importing or bring, any slave or slaves,' &c.

On motion to adopt the clause JOHN QUINCY ADAMS voted against it. It was carried however—yeas 21, nays 7 Those who voted in the negative were Messrs. Adams, Baldwin, Bradley, Ellery, James, Jackson, of Georgia, and Smith. See senate journal, first session, 8th Congress, 162.

" One of the accusations in the Declaration of Independence, against the King of England, was that he encouraged the Slave Trade. And yet before the generation which adopted that Decleration had passed away, we see a candidate for the Presidency, supported by a considerable party, who did the same thing as was charged against the King of England." Such was the language of John Binns, in 1824; and had we supposed a more pertinent remark could have been made, we should not have copied it. But oh! the virtue of "treasury pap!" John Binns has tasted it, and is now the prostitute lick spit and feculent drudge of the man he once reviled. Yet conduct like this, in such men as Binns, ought not to surprise us. We have fallen on evil times; and higer than he has set the example."—Steubenville (Ohio) Ledger.

Let the Poor Man look at the following Picture!

GENERAL JACKSON AND THE RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

General Jackson having been represented by his enemies as inimical to Universal suffrage, the Nashville Committee, (appointed at a public meeting for the purpose of detecting and exposing the numerous falsehoods circulated against him,) published an Address, which contained the subjoined paragraph, noticing this charge.—The gentlemen who signed the address, and whose names are attached to the extract stand among the most respectable citizens in this country. One of them is brother to our present Minister to France, another (Mr. Campbell) was late minister to Russia.

"It is alleged that Gen. Jackson when a member of the Tennessee Convention voted for a property qualification in a voter. This the Committee positively assert is UNTRUE. It is notorious that he advocated the provision adopted in the Constitution of our State which secures the Right of Suffrage to every free man."

John Overton, chr'n.	Robert Foster
G. W. Campbell	Wm. L. Brown
John Catson	Robert White
Thomas Claiborne	Joseph Philips
Daniel Graham	Wm. B. Lewis
Jesse Wharton	Edward Ward
Alfred Balch	Felix Robertson
John Shelby	Josiah Nicholl
Wm. White	John M'Nairy.

It is thus put beyond all doubt that General Jackson when a member of the Convention which formed the Constitution of Tennessee, advocated and voted for that provision of it which secures to every freeman the right of suffrage, without requiring any PROPERTY QUALIFICATION.

But what has been the conduct of Mr. Adams on this subject? He has, upon the bill to erect Louisiana into two territories voted —not only for a PROPERTY QUALIFICATION, but for other provisions of that bill, hostile to our republican institutions, and at war with every principle of free government. This, we shall show by testimony, which cannot be called in question—by the JOURNALS of the U. States Senate; the RECORDS of the Nation. ☞We refer all, who wish to be satisfied on this subject, to the Journal of the U. S. Senate, Vol. 3, page 354.☜ They will there find that while Mr. Adams, was a member of the Senate, an amendment containing the following provision, was offered, upon the second reading of the bill to erect Louisiana into two territories, and that JOHN QUINCY ADAMS voted in a minority of FIVE in favour of all these provisions.

We insert here an extract from the Journal of the Senate.

"Friday, February 18th, 1807—on the second reading of the bill to erect Louisiana into two territories, an amendment was offered containing the following provisions:

1st. That no person shall be eligible to a seat in the territorial legislature, unless he own ONE HUNDRED ACRES of LAND, or a house and lot in the city of New Orleans.

2d That no person shall be QUALIFIED to vote for a representative unless he owned FIFTY ACRES OF LAND.

3d. That the Governor of the territory should have power to prorogue the legislature.

4th. That he should have power to dissolve it.

5th. That he should have power to negative all the bills passed by the legislature.

Thus while we have completely cleared General Jackson from the charge which has been falsely circulated against him—that he had voted in favor of a PROPERTY QUALIFICATION, we have convicted John Quincy Adams, by the records of the country, of having voted for a property qualification, and in favour too, of giving to the Gov. of the Territory of Louisiana the odious and dangerous and kingly power to NEGATIVE any bill the Legislature might pass—to prorogue the Legislature and even to DISSOLVE it whenever he pleased.

We do not ask any man to take these statements upon our credit, but invite all to refer to the Journals of the Senate, and see for themselves.—Balt. Rep

UNITARIANISM!

From the West Jersey Observer.

Mr. Johnson—For the information of those professors of religion who are supporting the re-election of J. Q. ADAMS, I have collected from good authorities, the following epitome of Unitarianism.

Unitarians deny the DIVINITY of JESUS, object to his worship, and have expunged his name as the SON of GOD, from their service. They deny his existence previous to his birth, and assert, that he is NOT the SON of GOD, but the son of Joseph and Mary—that he was a man like other men, subject to like accidents and infirmities, and in nothing different from Mosses and the other prophets. They do not believe in his atonement for the sins of men, but rest their belief in future happiness, on the efficacy of their own works, and atonement for their sins by their own sufferings ☞ They deny the existence and agency of the Devil—the spirituality and separate existence of the soul and the eternity of future punishment!

In the language of Dr. Priestly, one of their most eminent writers, they say, "We shall all finally meet, we only require different degrees of discipline, suited to our different tempers, to prepare us for final happiness," thus avowing that all is objectionable in Universalism, without even attributing to Jesus, the credit of their salvation.'

The Universalists deny the eternity of future punishment, and assert that all mankind will finally be saved, but rest their hopes on the efficacy of the atonement made in the suffering and death of Jesus. If then we condemn their doctrines as absurd and wicked, how much more earnestly ought we to oppose the spread of that sect, which adopts all its errors and rejects its only recommendation—its reliance on the divine atonement.

The openly avowed Deist attacks the doctrine of Christianity unsuccessfully, because the moral sense of the community revolts at the idea of giving up the religion of our selves and of our fathers. Its truth, its value, and its efficacy in restraining the evil propensities of our nature within bounds, and in improving and cherishing our social and reasonable faculties, have made too strong an impression on the minds of men, whether professors of religion or not, to allow them in any considerable number to be carried away by open attempts of the Infidel. But under the assumed garb of Christianity, the Unitarian approaches you by stealth, and while preaching about religion, robs you of your faith in Jesus, and thus takes from you the great corner stone of the Church, for without Christ—without the help of a Divine and infinite atonement the whole system of Christianity is a dream—an idle delusion. Take away from Jesus Christ his divinity, his character of God, The Mediator, and you destroy the whole beauty and value of the Gospel plan of salvation.

Now when we reflect that this sect of miscalled Christians are rapidly increasing—that they have already become in a measure the prevailing society in some of the New England states, and are fast spreading themselves throughout the Union, and that the rapidity of their growth may be attributed to the fact of their claiming amongst their advocates, many of the great and learned men of the age, professors in some of the colleges, officers of high standing and even the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, it is time for real christians to ask themselves what they can do towards arresting its progress. They give their money towards sending the gospel to the Heathens and dispelling the darkness and delusions of Paganism, and they do well, but here is an enemy to their cause and a powerful and insidious one in their very midst. Can they do nothing towards checking the rapidity of its advances?

Fashion and respectability—high standing of its members, and the countenance of the people, does much towards advancing the propagation of errors—reflect then, before you give your sanction to this dangerous doctrine, by voting for the re-election of Mr. Adams. If from conscientious and proper motives, you believe you cannot give your vote for Andrew Jackson, DO NOT BY YOUR VOTE, help to make respectable and powerful, that sect from which Christianity has more danger to apprehend than from the combined forces of all its other enemies.

CUMBERLAND.

July 31st, 1828.

THE ELECTIONEERING CABINET.

The open and barefaced electioneering of Mr. Adams and his Secretaries, we cannot account for upon any other principle than that they see their case is desperate—that having violated the public will in the onset, they may as well set public opinion at defiance.

When before the country was cursed with the present administration, was the spectacle presented to this Republican people, of the President's and the Secretaries' of the Chief Departments of the government making annual tours through the country for the purpose of electioneering? The histories of all former administrations will be searched in vain for a parallel. Washington, John Adams, Jefferson, Madison and Monroe furnished no "precedent" for the present disgraceful system of Adams and Clay, which is an outrage upon the freedom of elections, and an insult to the good sense of our people.

What would have been thought of WASHINGTON, if he had traversed the country making Ebony and Topaz speeches? What would the people have thought of his Secretary, Mr. Jefferson, if he had laid aside the dignity of his character and of his office, and, neglect his public duties, had come among them praying for "War Pestilence, and Famine" rather than his rival John Adams should be elected President?

How disgusting to every sober, unpassioned, reflecting man, must be the present spectacle which is presented to the people of the United States and of the world! The President riding through the country, from Washington to Quincy, on horseback in a round-jacket and jockey-cap for effect, and his servile presses announcing it along the whole line as an evidence of his Republican simplicity. A late English paper announces that the King had recently appeared at an evening party "in a black cravat." We could not but smile at the importance given to this trivial circumstance. We cannot smile however, for we are utterly disgusted, when we see it gravely announced in this Republican country, in what sort of dress the President appeared.—King George appeared "in a black cravat," says the English paper, and King John, (for these people who attach importance to such matters, are ready for a King) says the American paper, "appeared in round jacket and jockey cap, nankeen pantaloons, silk stockings and pumps." ! !

The President, we are told too, "travels unattended except by his son." Wonderful! truly unassuming! Then, he really was not escorted by a train of Nobles? Bless us! what a plain Republican! Balt. Repub.

From the Frankfort Argus.

JACKSON AND DECATUR.

Last year a story was forged by John Binns representing that Gen. Jackson went to the capitol during the proceedings in the Senate in relation to the Seminole war and took his stand in the anti chamber of the Senate for the purpose of chastising Mr. Eppes, then a senator from Virginia. The tale was garnished off with all that profanity which it suits the knaves of the day to put into the mouth of the General, accompanied by a detail of disgusting particulars. This story has, long since, like multitudes of its brothers, been proved to be a forgery. A copy of the following elegant letter from the interesting widow of our naval hero, voluntarily written to General Jackson, has been placed in our possession. We publish it not so much to prove the falsehood of the oft refuted forgery, as to prove the estimation in which Gen. Jackson was held by Commodore Decatur and shew the abandoned villainy of the miscreants who called upon the ghosts of the illustrious dead and put lies into their mouths to destroy him. Read, people of America, and then say what punishment those men deserve who represent Commodore Decatur as having become the enemy of Jackson on account of his violence.

MRS. DECATUR TO GEN. JACKSON.

"George Town, Jan. 22, 1828.

"My Dear General: You must have seen so much of the prevailing spirit of misrepresentation, that I flatter myself you do not attach any credit to the sentiments which have been ascribed to my beloved husband in relation to yourself; for I hope it is unnecessary for me to say that his lofty nature was incapable of duplicity. And when I recollect the unbounded gratitude and admiration he invariably expressed for your services and character, I can have no hesitation in saying that whoever has attributed to him a different sentiment, either totally misunderstood him, or totally misrepresented him. I have no doubt, that you yourself must recollect his undisguised indignation at the attack made upon your character in the Senate, and his repeated declaration that it was more derogatory to the nation than to you; that your fame was recorded in millions of grateful hearts, and could not be effaced by the misrepresentations of a few prejudiced or vindictive partisans. And I perfectly remember his anxiety that you should make a tour to the north, and afford the nation an opportunity to testify its gratitude for your services; and that he was delighted beyond measure at the greetings which cheered you at every stage of your journey, viewing it as a complete triumph over your enemies in the Senate.—And I verily believe, that if there was one individual in the U. States more grateful than the rest for your services and sacrifices, it was my beloved and lamented husband, for he was so ardently devoted to his country that he felt every act that contributed to her glory on prosperity, as a benefit conferred upon himself, &c. &c. S. DECATUR.

Major General Andrew Jackson.

From the Kentucky Argus.

VICTORY!

The Jackson forces in the late election have fought the battle of the 23d December. If they have not destroyed the enemy, they have put them to a stand and given them a foretaste of the 8th of January defeat which awaits them in November. The Ebonies feel themselves defeated. The tone of exultation they assume in their newspapers is all affectation. They exhibit in their countenances nothing but a consciousness of weakness and defeat. They know that Old Hickory has been assailed by every tempest which their demoniac fury could raise, and that he hath withstood the whole with boughs unbroken and a trunk unshattered. When unfeeling miscreants attempted to bow his mighty head by tugging at the vine which, for almost forty years, has clung to him for support and protection, he may have felt an inward pang; but he has withstood it all, and stands in the strength of conscious integrity, a beacon of hope to the nation. His enemies have not been equally unsuccessful in their attacks upon his friend Major Barry. Though no man's inferior in virtue and patriotism, he had not taken such root in the people's affections and could not so successfully withstand the tempest of lies which incessantly beat upon him. He is victorious even in defeat.—His masterly eloquence has roused the people to a vindication of their rights, and tho' lied out of the chief magistrary, he sees his labours rewarded in the election of a Jackson Lt. Governor, Senate and House of Representatives. We know, it was his desire to arouse his countrymen to a sense of their danger which induced him to be a candidate, and having done that, he need not regret the loss of a thankless office. He has entitled himself to the gratitude of Kentucky and the nation, and in the triumph of correct principles which is speedily to resound through the continent, he will not be forgotten nor left unrewarded.

It is amusing to see how hard the Ebonies now labour to prove that all their calumnies against Major Barry before the election had no effect!

Did they not falsely charge him with being hostile to the occupant laws? Yes.

Did they not charge him with hostility to the settlers on Green river and below the Tennessee? Yes.

Did they not get from Swigert's office copies of a little execution which had been paid and circulate it privately to injure or destroy him? Yes.

Did they not charge him with making fraudalent transfers of his property and cheating his creditors? Yes.

Did they not charge him with dishonest conduct towards the Bank of the U. States? Yes.

Did they not charge him with voting for the compensation bill and receiving double pay when a member of Congress? Yes.

Did they not charge him with filling two incompatible offices at the same time? Yes.

Did not John Green and Many more of them call on old Court men to vote against him because he was a new Court judge, and had a claim on the treasury for a balance of his salary, &c.? Yes.

Did they not get up against him almost as many charges, having nothing to do with the Presidential question, as Metcalfe has got majority of votes, and solemnly and seriously urge them all? Yes.

Yet, now they tell the world that these charges had not the slightest effect; that it was the presidential question and that only, which decided the election! If this be true, what fools they were to spend so much time and money in getting up and circulating their false charges against him!!

But they know better. These local charges did defeat his election. They know it, and in that knowledge read the doom which awaits them in November.

Look at them. Last year the people at the August election elected seven Jackson men and five Adams men to Congress. This was no test, they said, but the elections to the legislature were. All their presses told the nation that they had a majority of 10, 15 or 20 in the House of Representatives. What said the Argus? We stated that they had a majority of two in the Senate and that according to our information, the House of Representatives was equally divided. Well, that house voted three days at [illegible] before they could elect a Speaker. In the election of public printer, that house was again divided, 50 to 50, and the Senate gave a majority of 3 against us, 1 Jackson man being absent.—Now, they dare not claim a majority in either house; but they pare down our majority to a very small number. Dana and Holeman do not agree; but both are wrong. One of them puts Gist of Montgomery as elected, when Glover has a majority of eight votes and has a certificate. Both of them, we believe, claim Barlow of Monroe county, Gatewood of Oldham, Burden of Butler and Davis of Ohio, as Adams men or neutrals. They both know better. From the information of the Sheriffs we know that Barlow and Burden are Jackson men; Gatewood told us so himself since the election; and of Davis we are authorized by himself to say, he does not belong to them. In all party votes, they will find a dead majority of FOURTEEN against them in the House of Representatives.

Last year we carried seven Congressmen out of 12. Afterwards we elected an 8th. From a majority of two in the Senate against us, we have two in our favour. From an equal vote in the House of Representatives, we have gained a majority of fourteen! We have elected a Jackson Lieutenant Governor by a majority of 1,087. Yet, because the Ebonies by 1000 lies, have beat our candidate for Governor 609 votes, they shout victory, and say the state is sold to Adams! Well, well! Dana said, that in last year's battle they had an advantage of more than 8000. All they claim in this second engagement is 609. By the rule of three, how will they come out in the third battle? Can you tell, Dana? Or you, Holeman? Or any of your gang?

The votes given to our two candidates are more than were given to theirs by 478; but probably the fairest test is between Mr. Barry and Mr. Underwood They are both lawyers, both labouring under charges relative in the occupant laws and other things, although Underwood's burden was much the lighter.

Whole vote for Barry	38,331
" for Underwood	36,454
Jackson majority,	1,877

That was the year old Burgoyne was taken; in November we will take Cornwallis. Let the Ebonies figure and calculate; we will show to demonstration in November that Kentucky is for Old Hickory by a majority of about 6000.

From the N. Y. Enquirer.

THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

Deception, as to the state of parties in any city or state, can never be productive of any positive benefit. Sooner or later the ballot boxes will unfold the secret, and those who have played off a wilful deception on the people, cannot expect their confidence in future. An opinion has for some time prevailed that this violent struggle for the Presidency must be decided in this state. It may be so: but from the recent appearance of things in the western states, we do not believe that the contest will be so very close, as to bring the decision to this state. At all events, the journals friendly to the present administration, have uniformly claimed 24 electoral votes in this state—they have seldom varied from this estimate, and it has been scrupulously adhered to, in order to produce effect elsewhere. It is a gross deception, and we shall show it to be so.

The old republican party has been in a majority since the war. In some instances they have lost their candidates for Governor, but carried both houses. When the Bargain was consummated, which brought Mr. Adams into the Presidential chair, the republican friends of Governor Clinton united with the old democratic party, in support of General Jackson. This separated a party which consistently declared for Mr. Adams—and left the friends of Gen. Jackson with more than two thirds of the State. This was manifested by the following Senatorial returns, at the last election:

District	Candidate	Votes
1st District.	Schenck, (Jackson)	14,843
	Sharpe, (Adams)	9,536
2nd	Todd, (Jackson)	11,893
	Pierson, (Adams)	6,797
3d.	Warren, (Jackson)	13,049
	Gibbard, (Adams)	10,485
4th.	Sanford, (Jackson)	16,730
	Throop, (Adams)	6,012
5th	Benton, (Jackson)	13,229
	Ford, (Adams)	9,779
6th & 7th.	Wheeler, } (Jackson)	16,659
	Throop, } (Jackson)	13,183
	Thompson, (Adams)	9,252

In the six contested districts, last year, we had thirty thousand majority. In the 6th and 8th there was no opposition to the regularly nominated republican candidates. What has arisen to change the force of this majority!—We are, if possible, better organized, and more powerful. We have no local question to divide us—no old nor new court party.—The candidates will be voted for on the ground of Jackson and Adams. How then is it possible, with a Jackson majority of 30,000 in the State, that Mr. Adams can obtain 24 votes? It is a sheer deception of the Adams men, and meant to operate on other states. Their friends in New Jersey are reporting every where that Adams will obtain 24 votes, when it is reduced to a moral certainty, that he cannot obtain ten votes in the whole state.

BETS!!

In the V. Herald of the 9th inst. a bet, either of $250 or $500 was offered, to any person who might feel disposed to bet against Jackson's election, as there stated. It has not been taken up.

A bet is offered in the Cincinnati Republican, and has been offered for some time, of $1000 that Jackson will get the vote of OHIO; $1000 that he will get the vote of KENTUCKY; $1000 that he will get the vote of INDIANA; and $3,000 that he will be elected President of the U. States.

A bet of $500 is offered in the Baltimore Republican that Gen. Jackson will receive a majority of the electoral votes of the state of Maryland.

THE PEOPLE'S RIGHTS AND THE LAWS OF MARYLAND UNITED.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 16, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory." Jefferson.

"Whose services to this nation, entitle him to its sincerest gratitude."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

We are authorized to announce Thomas Bayly, John C. Wilson, jr., Anthony B. Bennett, and John J. Davis, Esq'rs. as Candidates to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

A most remarkable letter appeared in the Iris of the 9th inst. addressed to Mr. Brown, and which, for the better information of the public, we shall copy verbatim & literatim:

Mr. Brown,—

I should like to know if the Orphan's court have the power to order executors, or administrators, to publish their notices in the Village Herald, as they have done, and whether we may not print them in your paper if they prefer it.

Is it not enough to excite the risibles of any man acquainted with Mr. George Brown that he should have been resorted to for information on law points? In truth, he never was resorted to by any man wanting information, and who was in his senses at the time of the application. It is not on this Brown's account that we notice the preceding communication, but to vindicate Mr. Carroll, who is one of the Judges of the Orphans Court, and on whom the attack is indirectly made. If any person entertain a doubt of the impartiality of the Orphans Court in relation to this matter, let him examine the orders of the Court and their dates, or the records in the Register's office, and he will have his doubts removed—for it will be seen that all the orders, for advertising, since the establishment of the Iris, have been that the advertisement shall be published "in one of the papers printed at Princess-Anne."

We feel thankful to the public for the patronage we have received in that line, but must, in justice to ourself, and the Orphans Court, deny that this patronage has been acquired by coercive orders of the Court.—We clearly see through the design of Mr. Teackle in this publication, for we really do not believe that Mr. George Brown is adequate to the design. But we are perfectly willing that the character of Mr. Carroll, for integrity, and assiduous attention to business, should be submitted to the consideration of a people who know him as well as he is known in this district.

Another word respecting "Geo. Brown": we shall in future consider him to be in the hands of L. D. Teackle what the pointer is in the hands of the assassin—a mere tool—and treat him accordingly.

To the Editor of the Village Herald.

It affords me pleasure to give you the cheering news from the meeting at Laurel, Del. on last Friday. The Hon. Mr. M'LANE addressed the people, in a strong, clear, candid and impressive manner. Nothing can exceed the popularity of this gentleman in Sussex—His opinions have great weight, and were he before the people himself, the whole county would, as heretofore, go in mass for him—He spoke of his personal acquaintance with Gen. Jackson, and of the high regard he entertained for him, and in a very able manner refuted the slanders circulated against him. There was a large concourse of persons present who listened attentively to him, and with feelings of the strongest admiration—Those best qualified to judge of the sentiments of the peop'e, thought there was a majority in favour of Gen. Jackson of four or five to one.

A Bystander.

SIGNS—North District.

We have before us two letters which we cannot insert entire. We will however extract the following signs. The company commanded by captain Gordy recently met in Johnson's district, W. C. when a vote was taken which stood thus:

Jackson	57	Adams 24

This is a capital sign. Our correspondent observes—"The neighbourhood was considered almost entirely for Adams—in fact, the captain (who is a Jacksonian) was unwilling to take the vote for fear of being beaten." The company commanded by Capt. Eli Dale met in the Teppe district on the 20th inst. when 42 full voters present. Three in favour of Adams were requested to step 4 paces forward—24 advanced, and 7 remained—An Adams man then said (to the non plus) he doubted the order. It was reversed, and 5 stepped forward and 07 remained.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

KING CAUCUS.

In our anticipations of the movements of the Ebony men, in the last Herald, we were a good deal right, and a little wrong.

A CAUCUS was indeed held, but it seems the rumour of discarding one, and taking up another candidate, was unfounded in truth. We gave it as mere rumour, and consequently were not responsible for its truth or falsehood. But in the material point, in relation to the holding of a CAUCUS, for the purpose of DICTATING to the people, for whom they shall give their votes we were perfectly correct.—Yes, fellow citizens, a few men assembled together, in Princess Anne, on Tuesday the 9th of this month, and selected four men, for you to send as delegates to the next legislature of Maryland.

For fear, you, the high minded citizens of Somerset, might not coincide with their views, the aforesaid caucus men have appointed twelve men, in each Election district, to regulate you, in your suffrages, and secure the success of their ticket.—This is, in Truth, adding insult to injury—After stealing your rights in an attempt to dictate for you, under the plea of recommending to you four men, as your delegates, they further attempt to enforce that dictation, by the gratuitous appointment of twelve OVERSEERS, in each Election district, to direct a free and intelligent people, in the exercise of the most prominent right, guaranteed to them, by representative government.

A few individuals met together in Princess Anne, and tell the people of Somerset they must vote for Messrs. Teackle, Done, Gibbons, and Donoho, to represent them in their legislative councils. Out of nine gentlemen, who are candidates for the Legislature, a picked few, select three four; some of whom are men, whom the people should never trust again. For them, who require but little penetration to perceive, that Mr. Teackle, has been the projector of this scheme, the Great Master Spirit of this Ebony circle. He knows full well, if the people are left in the quiet exercise of their judgment, he will be discarded, for his baltlesness, from their confidence, and sink into merited oblivion. This is the great secret why he is such a violent partisan of the present administration, and ruthless defamer of the Farmer of Tennessee—to wit, he wishes to create a debt of gratitude on the part of the adherents to the administration, in other words, he wishes such a course of conduct, to be a BRIBE for the votes of administration men. This is passing strange. If it be made a party question, we would advise the Adams men to bring out honest men, in whom the people have confidence. We are inclined to think better even of the Adams men in Somerset, than to suppose they can be ruled by a caucus of any man's or any men's selecting, much less by a CAUCUS whose Master Spirit is L. D. Teackle. Let the people keep wide awake, and when they see men suddenly become very friendly who have been long personal and political enemies, they may well suspect that a Coalition is formed to cheat them out of their rights. A word to the wise is sufficient.

NO DICTATOR.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

TO THE HONEST VOTERS OF SOMERSET COUNTY.

Fellow Citizens,

A very modest, and unassuming writer, under the signature of "Vindex," in the Somerset Iris of the date of the 9th inst. thinks it a duty, he owes to the public, to vindicate some of the official acts of our Delegates, and to present you, "honestly and fairly," with a few remarks, relative to the license law, "against which" he says, "not a voice among us is heard," save that "of the Jacksonians." This, he conceives to be "a consideration of some moment, that should be well weighed by all of us" And "would he well weighed by all of us" And "would here remark, that this is absolutely, a consideration that should be well weighed; for it appears to smell strongly of the old leven of DICTATION, that from the year 1801 until 1819, in our county, spread a veil over all the faults of its partisans until our Treasury was emptied, and a tax imposed to defray the ordinary expenditures of Government—It is truly alarming, that the friends of the coalition appear to have sacrificed at the shrine DICTATORIAL POWER, all of their objections to men and measures, which they once conceived so very obnoxious to their interests, and now appear to fancy music in the chains, that are prepared to fasten on their necks the yoke of a Princess-Anne JUNTO. The contagion has spread its baneful influence from the city of Washington, and now in Somerset, we see corruption exhibited in "bold relief," in the union of men, who have never yet reposed a misplaced confidence!! in Vindex HONEST in this assertion? If he is, I shall expect him to vindicate Mr. Teackle's votes for the canal and Rail Road appropriations—his impositions, respecting the Primary Schools, and Messrs. Teackle, Donoho and Gibbons' votes for taxing the Farmers of Somerset, with the expense of removing the obstructions from Monokin River, for the sole benefit of a few merchants in Princess Anne, and the watermen of Monokin. Also their votes for the removal of obstructions from Barren, Rewash, Quantico and Wetipquin creeks, at the expense of the county. If he refuses to do this after his broad assertion, I shall deem him an accomplice of Mr Teackle's, in playing off his tricks of ledgerdemain, upon the honest voters of Somerset.

Vindex has affected much surprise at finding an article arrayed against the license law, signed Common Sense.? And every chord of his sympathy appears to resound with lamentation and pity, because the writer selected so injudicious a signature—Perhaps, in the great exuberance of his wisdom, he has conceived that the writer should have written under the common signature of Vindex, because the wisdom displayed in writing such a law, all operations of which are to bind posterity, would be found sufficiently sensible to the common purposes, and I think it does not require an uncommon stretch of common sense, to have discovered, that the writer was vastly departed from the dictates of common sense, and made an attempt by a course of unbridled reasoning, to palliate the perpetration, and elucidations of the design, nature and practical effect of this law, given by Mr. Teackle, in the Easton Gazette. My pen will have spoken of the law as it really is. Mr. Teackle gave no exposition and elucidation of this law; for all that he has said relating to it is a mere sophism, and I am truly sorry that Vindex has not penetration enough to see it, or honesty enough to acknowledge it.

Vindex believes me to have fallen into an error, and thinks I considered the license law in the light of a property tax. In this he is greatly mistaken, and I am at a loss to conceive how he could draw any such conclusion from any part of my essay—I had before me the Bill of Rights and knew that fines, duties or taxes may properly and justly be imposed, or laid, with a political view for the good government and benefit of the community. But I do contend, that the present license law, taken as literally it cannot be for the good government and benefit of the community, because it is too unequal in its exactions, and operates with a partial view to the ease of the people, in the enumeration of articles of merchandise to be restricted. But Vindex says, the present law "really is an equalization of taxation between the poor and the rich, so far as that equalization is applicable, under a license system of taxation," and he justifies his opinion by comparing the present law with the late law, which compelled the poor man, to some cases, to pay double the amount of tax that the rich paid, and according to his position, this species of taxation is equalized when the poor man pays no more than the rich. I think there are few poor men but will understand Vindex.

He also says, "the present system is bottomed upon the principle of equitable comparative equalization of taxation" between the rich and the poor, and he not only admits the action of the kind would possibly admit," and asserts that the present law does contain a principle of taxation as nearly equalized a proposition, is entirely gratuitous, and destitute not only of the principles, of common sense, but of common honesty.

Notwithstanding the changes that Vindex fancied he has happily rung upon my signature, I have still the honour of being the people's most obedient and humble servant.

COMMON SENSE.

* Vindex must have studied Rhetorick under Mr. Teackle or Geo. Brown.

Just so—A few days since we had the pleasure of hearing several gentlemen conversing on the presidential question, when one of them observed that the Coalition reminded him of a rattle-snake, the head of which was cut off—smarting and enraged, it rattles away, although its power is gone.

INDIANA.

Our latest accounts of the contest in this state between Boon, the Jackson man, and Blake, the Adams man for Congress, are taken from the Terre-Haute Advertiser, of the 23d August, an Adams paper published at Terre-Haute, Indiana. The paper gives the result of the election in all the counties—making Boon's majority 77. We believe at the former election when Blake was elected, he beat Boon only by 64 votes. Jackson's majority in the district according to Mr. Blake's own recent acknowledgements, is at least 2,000.

Balt. Repub.

"THE WEST."

In Illinois the election has gone in favour of the Jackson candidate by nearly 5000 majority.

In Missouri the Jackson candidate has beat the Adams candidate from 8 to 4000. Mississippi the Jackson ticket has succeeded by a majority of upwards of 6000. In Indiana RAY has been elected Governor by declaring himself a Jacksonian, while Moore, the Adams candidate, is far behind both Canby and Ray! Two Jackson members of Congress, Boone and Jennings, are elected, and as far as heard from, a majority of the Jackson legislature is Jacksonian. In Kentucky a Jackson Lt. Governor, Jackson Senate, and House of Representatives.

MISSISSIPPI.

In the late election for a member of Congress, with (Jackson) and (Adams) on the ticket, there were three candidates, viz. Messrs. Hinds and Dickson (Jacksonian) and Bingaman, (Adams) and Mr. Haile, the late representative, who, tho' not a candidate, received a considerable number of votes. The following table will show the immense majority of the Jackson party.

Hinds (Jackson)	4426
Dickson (Jackson)	2496
Hale (Jackson)	1407
	8,839
Bingaman (Adams)	1,930
	6,419 Jackson maj.

"Re-action," we think, can hardly bring up the Adams party in Mississippi. As Billy Black says, "Do you give it up?" Ib.

INDIANA.

From the Annotator of August 16, we copy the following results:

Ray, 12,687—Canby, 10,000—Moore, 8,792 Representatives to State Legislature—Jackson 54, Adams 7.

In Somerset County Court,
MAY TERM, 1828.

James Wilson v. Arnold E. Waters.

ORDERED, by the court, that the sale of the real estate of Arnold E. Waters, as made and reported by James Wilson, Trustee for the sale of said real estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shown by the second day of the next term of this court, provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess Anne once a week for three successive weeks before the said day. The Trustee reports the amount of sales to be $3400.

ARA SPENCE.
WILLIAM TINGLE.
True copy.
GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Sept 16 mm

Philadelphia Sunday morning 5 o'clock, Sept. 7, 1828.

DAVIS & GARRETT'S EXTENSIVE
EXHIBITION OF WAX FIGURES,
Representing the Principal Characters in the American Revolution.

John Sergeant, Samuel Eyre, Lawrence Keyes, C. C. Biddle, and Joseph P. Norris, Esquires, Aides of an Address adopted at the Jackson Election in Philadelphia, July 4th.

Gentlemen—In the speech of Mr. Hopkinson, to which, in our last letter, we took the freedom to refer, that gentleman very forcibly said, that the sense of a people is not to be ascertained from "the intemperate address of self-called meetings, or the more intemperate harangues of inflamed and soulless orators." It would, indeed, be a plain proposition, "that no people could be applied without the deepest pain, to any conduct, which had been pronounced against them with decision. General Jackson, marched from Kingwood about midnight, with the dawn of the next day, he was in his four different positions, to avert the revolts from making their escape, and actually being seized, the colonel of the Jersey line was sent to them, with orders immediately to parade without delay, and to shoot the first man who should attempt to escape. Such disposition appearing among the colonel's men, was directed to advance and fire upon the mutineers, if they refused to comply with the orders which had been given. This had its effect, and they were all taken, arms to the number of about ninety-four. The Jersey officers gave a list of the leaders of the revolt, upon which the general ordered a court martial for the greatest offenders. A field court martial is generally held upon these three, and there were sentenced to be shot, and actually shot, three of them were executed on the spot, and the executioners were selected from among those who had joined in the mutiny. The disparagement of any person has ever sanctioned."

In such a course consistent with the character of Jackson, from the first to the last of his life, any of you would venture to pursue? Is there any one of you, even the chairman of your address, who would advise the person with vanion and deliberate murder? If any of you believe, that any murders had been committed, would you consider it a solemn duty to pursue the offender?

Upon what principle, then, is it, that you justify your address? Upon what principle you would not dare, or that you would blush to do, as private men? Would you not feel yourselves an object of contempt, if you, upon to substantiate before a jury, the foul crimes, you impute to General Jackson before the public? But, gentlemen, "the people" you are safe, because conscious vigilance is a shield sufficiently ample to protect General Jackson from your assaults—the people of this country has already refused to censure him, and you really were not aware of the extent of your power, when you made the attack.

For our own part, we entirely acquit all of you, except your chairman, of responsibility for your address, we do not believe, that your chairman expected, any of you under stood its real character, and we shall be able to show, that your chairman himself, either did not believe, what he has now, when inflamed, written, or that if he did believe it, he has been grossly abused the confidence placed in him by this district.

The third branch of your address embraces occurrences subsequent to the peace of 1815 with the Indian and Spanish settlements in Florida. Adams (President) and Monroe (Secretary of State—so John Daniel Dr Tompkins—so was De Witt Clinton—so is Layfayette. Nay, we have the authority of Mr. Clay himself, of that very Mr. Clay who is now travelling about to persuade the people to re-elect Mr. Adams. Mr. Clay, in 1824, signed a masonic address to the people in favour of a United States Grand Lodge, and himself and Chief Justice Marshall, and other prominent masons, were appointed a committee of correspondence. The following quotations are from Mr. Clay's address:

"The antiquity of the Masonic Society, extending so far beyond all other human associations, seizes the attention, and the mind is naturally impressed with the high interests for an institution, transmitted to us thro' the long train of an hundred ages. Time, which destroys all perishable institutions seems to have consolidated the pillars of this moral temple. We contemplate the long catalogue of excellent men, who have been ranked by the supporters of masonry and the ornaments of human nature; and we say, almost unconsciously, that the present generation is not all its lights, must not tarnish the name of an institution consecrated by so many circumstances calculated to endear it to the mind of a good man."

* * * * * * * *

"The foundation of Masonry is fixed in the social feelings and best principles of the human mind. Its maxims are the lessons of virtue, reduced to their practical application. It stands opposed to sprdidness, to a jealous or revengeful temper, to all the selfish and malevolent passions, it encourages the highest motives of patriotism, the most expanded philanthropy and consecrates all its precepts to reverence to a Divine Creator, and good will to man."

To the disgrace of the Author of the address, he has been active in the work of fanning the Morgan excitement into a flame, for political objects.

In conclusion, we declare, that a more open, shameful, and corrupt attempt at electioneering, as the above letter of Mr. Adams offers, has never been made, since the public functionary, who had the least principle and self-respect—and it ought to deprive him of every good man's vote.

Washington's Opinion of Jackson.

It has been frequently denied by the Adams party, that Gen. Washington ever approved Gen. Jackson to any office. This, with many other falsehoods, vanishes before the truth. Here is a copy of a commission signed by General WASHINGTON himself—which we present it to our readers, let any one judge, then, what Mr. CHARLES J. INGERSOLL, means, when he speaks of Jackson, as a man of no political reputation, and pronouncing a funeral eulogium on Judge Peters, of the value of Gen. Washington's recommendation:

"To have been rewarded, for these "public services and others, by a commission signed by Washington, who "never patronized the undeserving, is "substantial recommendation."

Such was the language of Mr. C. J. Ingersoll at a meeting of the bar of Philadelphia, August 23, 1828, called to pay a last tribute of respect to the memory of Judge Peters—Washington never patronized the undeserving."

The following is the form of the commission given by Washington to Andrew Jackson.

"The district south of the Ohio was erected under an act of Congress, of May 26, 1790. Jackson was appointed under it.

Balt. Repub.

George Washington, President of the United States of America:

To all who shall see these presents, greeting:

"Know ye, that reposing special trust and confidence in the integrity, ability, and learning of Andrew Jackson, of Nashville, in the district south of Ohio, I have nominated, and, by and with advice of the Senate do appoint him Attorney for the United States in the district aforesaid. U. S. south of the river Ohio; and authorize and empower him to execute and perform all those things to the office belonging, and to have and to hold the same, together with all the power, privileges and emoluments thereto of right appertaining, unto him the said Andrew Jackson, during pleasure of the President of the United States for the time being, and to receive such fees as have caused these letters to be made, and the seal of the United States thereunto affixed.

"Given under my hand at the city of New York, the twelfth day of August, in the year of our Lord, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine.

(Signed.)
G. WASHINGTON.

MR. JEFFERSON'S OPINION OF ANDREW JACKSON.

"He (Mr. Jefferson) considered "that it IMPORTUNATE for the country that Gen. "Jackson was likely to be fit for public life for ever; he was so much a man of the people; he hope left of avoiding the dangers early about to arise out of the broad ground on new ground of the Gen. Washington and the American Gen. "shipping of murders! We have no hesitation in expressing our opinion that they were

Upon what principle, then, is it, that you justify your address? Upon what principle you would not dare, or that you would blush to do, as private men? Would you not feel yourselves an object of contempt, if you, upon to substantiate before a jury, the foul crimes, you impute to General Jackson before the public? But, gentlemen, "the people" you are safe, because conscious vigilance is a shield sufficiently ample to protect General Jackson from your assaults—the people of this country has already refused to censure him, and you really were not aware of the extent of your power, when you made the attack.

For our own part, we entirely acquit all of you, except your chairman, of responsibility for your address, we do not believe, that your chairman expected, any of you understood its real character, and we shall be able to show, that your chairman himself, either did not believe, what he has now, when inflamed, written, or that if he did believe it, he has been grossly abused the confidence placed in him by this district.

The third branch of your address embraces occurrences subsequent to the peace of 1815 with the Indian and Spanish settlements in Florida. Adams (President) and Monroe (Secretary of State—so John Daniel Dr Tompkins—so was De Witt Clinton—so is Layfayette. Nay, we have the authority of Mr. Clay himself, of that very Mr. Clay who is now travelling about to persuade the people to re-elect Mr. Adams. Mr. Clay, in 1824, signed a masonic address to the people in favour of a United States Grand Lodge, and himself and Chief Justice Marshall, and other prominent masons, were appointed a committee of correspondence. The following quotations are from Mr. Clay's address:

"The antiquity of the Masonic Society, extending so far beyond all other human associations, seizes the attention, and the mind is naturally impressed with the high interests for an institution, transmitted to us thro' the long train of an hundred ages. Time, which destroys all perishable institutions seems to have consolidated the pillars of this moral temple. We contemplate the long catalogue of excellent men, who have been ranked by the supporters of masonry and the ornaments of human nature; and we say, almost unconsciously, that the present generation is not all its lights, must not tarnish the name of an institution consecrated by so many circumstances calculated to endear it to the mind of a good man."

* * * * * * * *

"The foundation of Masonry is fixed in the social feelings and best principles of the human mind. Its maxims are the lessons of virtue, reduced to their practical application. It stands opposed to sprdidness, to a jealous or revengeful temper, to all the selfish and malevolent passions, it encourages the highest motives of patriotism, the most expanded philanthropy and consecrates all its precepts to reverence to a Divine Creator, and good will to man."

To the disgrace of the Author of the address, he has been active in the work of fanning the Morgan excitement into a flame, for political objects.

In conclusion, we declare, that a more open, shameful, and corrupt attempt at electioneering, as the above letter of Mr. Adams offers, has never been made, since the public functionary, who had the least principle and self-respect—and it ought to deprive him of every good man's vote.

In Somerset County Court,
MAY TERM, 1828.

James Wilson v. Arnold E. Waters.

ORDERED, by the court, that the sale of the real estate of Arnold E. Waters, as made and reported by James Wilson, Trustee for the sale of said real estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shown by the second day of the next term of this court, provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess Anne once a week for three successive weeks before the said day. The Trustee reports the amount of sales to be $3400.

ARA SPENCE.
WILLIAM TINGLE.
True copy.
GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Sept 16 mm

"Ye Patriots of America,
Who for your country fall,
Your names shall live in fame,
Your ashes shall be all."

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 16, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory." Jefferson.

"Whose services to this nation, entitle him to its sincerest gratitude."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

We are authorized to announce Thomas Bayly, John C. Wilson, jr., Anthony B. Bennett, and John J. Davis, Esq'rs. as Candidates to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

A most remarkable letter appeared in the Iris of the 9th inst. addressed to Mr. Brown, and which, for the better information of the public, we shall copy verbatim & literatim:

Mr. Brown,—

I should like to know if the Orphan's court have the power to order executors, or administrators, to publish their notices in the Village Herald, as they have done, and whether we may not print them in your paper if they prefer it.

Is it not enough to excite the risibles of any man acquainted with Mr. George Brown that he should have been resorted to for information on law points? In truth, he never was resorted to by any man wanting information, and who was in his senses at the time of the application. It is not on this Brown's account that we notice the preceding communication, but to vindicate Mr. Carroll, who is one of the Judges of the Orphans Court, and on whom the attack is indirectly made. If any person entertain a doubt of the impartiality of the Orphans Court in relation to this matter, let him examine the orders of the Court and their dates, or the records in the Register's office, and he will have his doubts removed—for it will be seen that all the orders, for advertising, since the establishment of the Iris, have been that the advertisement shall be published "in one of the papers printed at Princess-Anne."

We feel thankful to the public for the patronage we have received in that line, but must, in justice to ourself, and the Orphans Court, deny that this patronage has been acquired by coercive orders of the Court.—We clearly see through the design of Mr. Teackle in this publication, for we really do not believe that Mr. George Brown is adequate to the design. But we are perfectly willing that the character of Mr. Carroll, for integrity, and assiduous attention to business, should be submitted to the consideration of a people who know him as well as he is known in this district.

Another word respecting "Geo. Brown": we shall in future consider him to be in the hands of L. D. Teackle what the pointer is in the hands of the assassin—a mere tool—and treat him accordingly.

To the Editor of the Village Herald.

It affords me pleasure to give you the cheering news from the meeting at Laurel, Del. on last Friday. The Hon. Mr. M'LANE addressed the people, in a strong, clear, candid and impressive manner. Nothing can exceed the popularity of this gentleman in Sussex—His opinions have great weight, and were he before the people himself, the whole county would, as heretofore, go in mass for him—He spoke of his personal acquaintance with Gen. Jackson, and of the high regard he entertained for him, and in a very able manner refuted the slanders circulated against him. There was a large concourse of persons present who listened attentively to him, and with feelings of the strongest admiration—Those best qualified to judge of the sentiments of the peop'e, thought there was a majority in favour of Gen. Jackson of four or five to one.

A Bystander.

SIGNS—North District.

We have before us two letters which we cannot insert entire. We will however extract the following signs. The company commanded by captain Gordy recently met in Johnson's district, W. C. when a vote was taken which stood thus:

Jackson	57	Adams 24

This is a capital sign. Our correspondent observes—"The neighbourhood was considered almost entirely for Adams—in fact, the captain (who is a Jacksonian) was unwilling to take the vote for fear of being beaten." The company commanded by Capt. Eli Dale met in the Teppe district on the 20th inst. when 42 full voters present. Three in favour of Adams were requested to step 4 paces forward—24 advanced, and 7 remained—An Adams man then said (to the non plus) he doubted the order. It was reversed, and 5 stepped forward and 07 remained.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

KING CAUCUS.

In our anticipations of the movements of the Ebony men, in the last Herald, we were a good deal right, and a little wrong.

A CAUCUS was indeed held, but it seems the rumour of discarding one, and taking up another candidate, was unfounded in truth. We gave it as mere rumour, and consequently were not responsible for its truth or falsehood. But in the material point, in relation to the holding of a CAUCUS, for the purpose of DICTATING to the people, for whom they shall give their votes we were perfectly correct.—Yes, fellow citizens, a few men assembled together, in Princess Anne, on Tuesday the 9th of this month, and selected four men, for you to send as delegates to the next legislature of Maryland.

For fear, you, the high minded citizens of Somerset, might not coincide with their views, the aforesaid caucus men have appointed twelve men, in each Election district, to regulate you, in your suffrages, and secure the success of their ticket.—This is, in Truth, adding insult to injury—After stealing your rights in an attempt to dictate for you, under the plea of recommending to you four men, as your delegates, they further attempt to enforce that dictation, by the gratuitous appointment of twelve OVERSEERS, in each Election district, to direct a free and intelligent people, in the exercise of the most prominent right, guaranteed to them, by representative government.

A few individuals met together in Princess Anne, and tell the people of Somerset they must vote for Messrs. Teackle, Done, Gibbons, and Donoho, to represent them in their legislative councils. Out of nine gentlemen, who are candidates for the Legislature, a picked few, select three four; some of whom are men, whom the people should never trust again. For them, who require but little penetration to perceive, that Mr. Teackle, has been the projector of this scheme, the Great Master Spirit of this Ebony circle. He knows full well, if the people are left in the quiet exercise of their judgment, he will be discarded, for his baltlesness, from their confidence, and sink into merited oblivion. This is the great secret why he is such a violent partisan of the present administration, and ruthless defamer of the Farmer of Tennessee—to wit, he wishes to create a debt of gratitude on the part of the adherents to the administration, in other words, he wishes such a course of conduct, to be a BRIBE for the votes of administration men. This is passing strange. If it be made a party question, we would advise the Adams men to bring out honest men, in whom the people have confidence. We are inclined to think better even of the Adams men in Somerset, than to suppose they can be ruled by a caucus of any man's or any men's selecting, much less by a CAUCUS whose Master Spirit is L. D. Teackle. Let the people keep wide awake, and when they see men suddenly become very friendly who have been long personal and political enemies, they may well suspect that a Coalition is formed to cheat them out of their rights. A word to the wise is sufficient.

NO DICTATOR.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

TO THE HONEST VOTERS OF SOMERSET COUNTY.

Fellow Citizens,

A very modest, and unassuming writer, under the signature of "Vindex," in the Somerset Iris of the date of the 9th inst. thinks it a duty, he owes to the public, to vindicate some of the official acts of our Delegates, and to present you, "honestly and fairly," with a few remarks, relative to the license law, "against which" he says, "not a voice among us is heard," save that "of the Jacksonians." This, he conceives to be "a consideration of some moment, that should be well weighed by all of us" And "would here remark, that this is absolutely, a consideration that should be well weighed; for it appears to smell strongly of the old leven of DICTATION, that from the year 1801 until 1819, in our county, spread a veil over all the faults of its partisans until our Treasury was emptied, and a tax imposed to defray the ordinary expenditures of Government—It is truly alarming, that the friends of the coalition appear to have sacrificed at the shrine DICTATORIAL POWER, all of their objections to men and measures, which they once conceived so very obnoxious to their interests, and now appear to fancy music in the chains, that are prepared to fasten on their necks the yoke of a Princess-Anne JUNTO. The contagion has spread its baneful influence from the city of Washington, and now in Somerset, we see corruption exhibited in "bold relief," in the union of men, who have never yet reposed a misplaced confidence!! in Vindex HONEST in this assertion? If he is, I shall expect him to vindicate Mr. Teackle's votes for the canal and Rail Road appropriations—his impositions, respecting the Primary Schools, and Messrs. Teackle, Donoho and Gibbons' votes for taxing the Farmers of Somerset, with the expense of removing the obstructions from Monokin River, for the sole benefit of a few merchants in Princess Anne, and the watermen of Monokin. Also their votes for the removal of obstructions from Barren, Rewash, Quantico and Wetipquin creeks, at the expense of the county. If he refuses to do this after his broad assertion, I shall deem him an accomplice of Mr Teackle's, in playing off his tricks of ledgerdemain, upon the honest voters of Somerset.

Vindex has affected much surprise at finding an article arrayed against the license law, signed Common Sense.? And every chord of his sympathy appears to resound with lamentation and pity, because the writer selected so injudicious a signature—Perhaps, in the great exuberance of his wisdom, he has conceived that the writer should have written under the common signature of Vindex, because the wisdom displayed in writing such a law, all operations of which are to bind posterity, would be found sufficiently sensible to the common purposes, and I think it does not require an uncommon stretch of common sense, to have discovered, that the writer was vastly departed from the dictates of common sense, and made an attempt by a course of unbridled reasoning, to palliate the perpetration, and elucidations of the design, nature and practical effect of this law, given by Mr. Teackle, in the Easton Gazette. My pen will have spoken of the law as it really is. Mr. Teackle gave no exposition and elucidation of this law; for all that he has said relating to it is a mere sophism, and I am truly sorry that Vindex has not penetration enough to see it, or honesty enough to acknowledge it.

Vindex believes me to have fallen into an error, and thinks I considered the license law in the light of a property tax. In this he is greatly mistaken, and I am at a loss to conceive how he could draw any such conclusion from any part of my essay—I had before me the Bill of Rights and knew that fines, duties or taxes may properly and justly be imposed, or laid, with a political view for the good government and benefit of the community. But I do contend, that the present license law, taken as literally it cannot be for the good government and benefit of the community, because it is too unequal in its exactions, and operates with a partial view to the ease of the people, in the enumeration of articles of merchandise to be restricted. But Vindex says, the present law "really is an equalization of taxation between the poor and the rich, so far as that equalization is applicable, under a license system of taxation," and he justifies his opinion by comparing the present law with the late law, which compelled the poor man, in some cases, to pay double the amount of tax that the rich paid, and according to his position, this species of taxation is equalized when the poor man pays no more than the rich. I think there are few poor men but will understand Vindex.

He also says, "the present system is bottomed upon the principle of equitable comparative equalization of taxation" between the rich and the poor, and he not only admits the action of the kind would possibly admit," and asserts that the present law does contain a principle of taxation as nearly equalized a proposition, is entirely gratuitous, and destitute not only of the principles, of common sense, but of common honesty.

Notwithstanding the changes that Vindex fancied he has happily rung upon my signature, I have still the honour of being the people's most obedient and humble servant.

COMMON SENSE.

* Vindex must have studied Rhetorick under Mr. Teackle or Geo. Brown.

Just so—A few days since we had the pleasure of hearing several gentlemen conversing on the presidential question, when one of them observed that the Coalition reminded him of a rattle-snake, the head of which was cut off—smarting and enraged, it rattles away, although its power is gone.

INDIANA.

Our latest accounts of the contest in this state between Boon, the Jackson man, and Blake, the Adams man for Congress, are taken from the Terre-Haute Advertiser, of the 23d August, an Adams paper published at Terre-Haute, Indiana. The paper gives the result of the election in all the counties—making Boon's majority 77. We believe at the former election when Blake was elected, he beat Boon only by 64 votes. Jackson's majority in the district according to Mr. Blake's own recent acknowledgements, is at least 2,000.

Balt. Repub.

"THE WEST."

In Illinois the election has gone in favour of the Jackson candidate by nearly 5000 majority.

In Missouri the Jackson candidate has beat the Adams candidate from 8 to 4000. Mississippi the Jackson ticket has succeeded by a majority of upwards of 6000. In Indiana RAY has been elected Governor by declaring himself a Jacksonian, while Moore, the Adams candidate, is far behind both Canby and Ray! Two Jackson members of Congress, Boone and Jennings, are elected, and as far as heard from, a majority of the Jackson legislature is Jacksonian. In Kentucky a Jackson Lt. Governor, Jackson Senate, and House of Representatives.

MISSISSIPPI.

In the late election for a member of Congress, with (Jackson) and (Adams) on the ticket, there were three candidates, viz. Messrs. Hinds and Dickson (Jacksonian) and Bingaman, (Adams) and Mr. Haile, the late representative, who, tho' not a candidate, received a considerable number of votes. The following table will show the immense majority of the Jackson party.

Hinds (Jackson)	4426
Dickson (Jackson)	2496
Hale (Jackson)	1407
	8,839
Bingaman (Adams)	1,930
	6,419 Jackson maj.

"Re-action," we think, can hardly bring up the Adams party in Mississippi. As Billy Black says, "Do you give it up?" Ib.

INDIANA.

From the Annotator of August 16, we copy the following results:

Ray, 12,687—Canby, 10,000—Moore, 8,792 Representatives to State Legislature—Jackson 54, Adams 7.

In Somerset County Court,
MAY TERM, 1828.

James Wilson v. Arnold E. Waters.

ORDERED, by the court, that the sale of the real estate of Arnold E. Waters, as made and reported by James Wilson, Trustee for the sale of said real estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shown by the second day of the next term of this court, provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess Anne once a week for three successive weeks before the said day. The Trustee reports the amount of sales to be $3400.

ARA SPENCE.
WILLIAM TINGLE.
True copy.
GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Sept 16 mm

Superintendent of Primary Schools.

(Copied from the Wilmington Herald of July, 1827.)

"This being an appointment unknown to the Constitution, WITHOUT SALARY, and NOT CONFERRED with the POSSESSION of the SCHOOL-MONEY, it cannot be CALLED an OFFICE of "PROFIT" or "TRUST," nor impose a disability to "my further services as your delegate."

"LITTLETON D. TEACKLE."

Maryland Legislature.

House of Delegates, Dec. Sess. 1827.

Resolved, by the General Assembly of Maryland, that the Treasurer of the Western Shore, be and he is hereby authorized and required, to pay to Littleton Dennis Teackle, or his order, $500.00, in full compensation, for his services and expenditures as Superintendent of Public Instruction.

[See Journal of Proceedings of House of Del. December Sess. 1827, page 518.

Baltimore Prices Current.

Sept. 12, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $6 a

POETRY.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Addressed to Mrs. A—. W—r, of Georgia.

I lov'd thee, when in early life,
Thou sportedst in thy mother's arms—
When innocence, and beauty's strife,
Were seen amidst thy budding charms.

Time has roll'd round, and beauty's bloom,
Has bursted on the raptur'd sight;
And many hearts have felt full soon
The pow'r of beauty's with'ring blight.

In Southern climes thou hast been rear'd,
Far, from thy early Friend—
And other friends thy love have shar'd,
Thine, with their hopes and wishes blend.

But in thy heart, there still is found,
Unwither'd, fresh, and green—
Disinterested love, profound—
On memory's brightest sheen.

Thou hast return'd, a blooming Bride,
In all the loveliness of truth,
Thy love, thy hopes, thy bosom's pride,
Now, centre in that happy youth.

Oh! may the kindly dews of Heav'n
Descend, and make thy bliss complete;
And may those joys divine be given,
To consecrate thy soul for Heav'n,
And make thy exit sweet.

LEONTINE.

Washington, D. C. Sept. 2, 1828.

[COMMUNICATED.]

A PUZZLE.

There is a monarch of renown,
Has many subjects in the town:
He is a prince of mighty fame,
If you would wish to know his name,
Take the second vowel and the third,
With five placed in the middle,
Five hundred in the front must ride,
And fifty ends the riddle.

STANZAS.

BY R. H. WILDE, ESQ.

My life is like the summer rose,
That opens to the morning sky,
But ere the shades of evening close,
Is scattered on the ground to die:
Yet on that rose's humble bed,
The sweetest dews of Night are shed—
As if she wept such waste to see—
But none shall weep a tear for me.

My life is like the autumn leaf,
That trembles in the moon's pale ray;
Its hold is frail, its date is brief,
Restless, and soon to pass away!
Yet ere that leaf shall fall and fade,
The parent tree shall mourn its shade—
The winds bewail the leafless tree,
But none shall breathe a sigh for me.

My life is like the prints, which feet
Have left on Tampa's desert strand;
Soon as the rising tide shall beat,
All trace will vanish from the sand;
Yet as if grieving to efface
All vestige of the human race,
On that lone shore loud moans the sea,
But none, alas! shall mourn for me.

IMPROMPTU.

On hearing Miss Stephens sing Handel's divine song of "Angel's ever bright and fair."

Whilst you invoke the angel's care,
In notes so soft, so sweet, so rare,
We tremble lest you should be heard,
And they should take you at your word,
In heaven the angels are not few,
But earth has only one like you.

TIME KILLED IN HIS TURN.

"Curse on this fiddling," cried old Dad,
To Ned his over tuneful lad;
"You lose your time, you idle lout."
"No, sir; my time I keep throughout."
"Pshal you keep time! kill time, you mean,"
Mutter'd the father, full of spleen.
"Kill him?—well, sure, sir, I'm no zany,
For killing him who's killed so many."

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞ Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞ Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞ Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞ All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; pound half and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking; patent and common Taps; lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets,

Baltimore, 9th mo 16th

FOR SALE, and on a moderate Credit,

A good second-hand Ogle GIG. For further information apply at the office of the Village Herald.

Sept 2, 1828. mw

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset County Court and to me directed, at the suit of John J. Davis use of James H. Handy against Mitchell Alphy, and John S. Evans, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: Fifty acres of land, more or less, known by the name of Acworth's Delight, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 23d of September next, at the Court-House door, in Princess-Anne, to the highest and best bidder, for cash. Sale to take place between 12 and 3 o'clock P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Sept. 2, 1828. tj

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court, and to me directed, to wit: Edme Ducatel vs. Levin W. Ballard, Severn Teackle vs. Levin W. Ballard and James Wilson adm. of George J. Jones use of James Wilson vs. Levin W. Ballard will be sold the following property, to wit: one horse and gig, two head of other horses, four beds and furniture, 10 head of cattle, three yoke of oxen, and all the said Levin's right, title, interest and estate in and to part of a tract of land called Dashiell's Lot, containing 332 acres, more or less, which property has been heretofore levied on by me under writs of Fieri Facias, and which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 23d of September, inst. at the Court-House door, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. for cash, to the best bidder, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

Sept. 2 mw

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, to wit: George Handy administrator of Wm. Fleming, use of James Wilson against Levin Ballard, sen. Severn Teackle use of James Wilson against Levin Ballard, sen. and James Wilson adm. of George J. Jones use of James Wilson against Levin Ballard, sen. will be sold the following property, to wit: a tract or parcel of land called "Moore & Casset," containing 130 acres, more or less; one other tract or part of a tract called 'Brothers Agreement,' 80 acres, more or less; one negro woman Leah and children, and one boy Spencer, one boy Nathan, one ditto Isaac, one ditto Nathan, which property has heretofore been by me under writs of fieri facias, and which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 23d of September, inst. at the court-house door, between the hours of 12 and 2 to the best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

Sept. 2, 1828. mw

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Thomas Jones of Thomas use of Samuel Polk, use of Dr. James Wilson, vs. Levin Ballard, sen. I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: One tract of Land called Moore & Cassett, 130 acres, one negro man called Peter, one do. Toby, one do. Joshua, one do Littleton, the goods and chattels lands and tenements of the said Levin, which I shall proceed to sell at the court house door in Princess Anne, on the 23d inst. between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above named writ.

GEO. DASHIELL, late Shff.

Sept. 2. tfm

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Josiah Gibbons vs. Levin Ballard, sen. I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one tract or part of a tract of land called Moore & Cassett, containing 130 acres, more or less, negroes Isaac, Mingo, Isaac Junior, Davy, John, Joe, George, Hezekiah, Theodore, John, Esther, Martha, Letty, Matilda, and Bridget, the goods and chattels lands and tenements of said Levin, which I shall proceed to sell at the court-house door, in Princess Anne, on the 23d inst. between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above writ.

GEO. DASHIELL, late Shff.

September 2. tfm

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of William Williams, Esq against Jesse Walter, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all that part of a tract of land called Lebanon, part of a tract of land called Venables' Pretention, part of a tract called Troublesome, containing 219 acres, more or less, 1 black mare, 1 old gig, 4 yoke of oxen, 4 milch cows, 7 head of cattle, 18 head of sheep, 29 head of hogs, 6 beds and furniture, 2 timber carts, 2 wain do., 1 set black smith's tools, household and kitchen furniture: also, by virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias, issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Levin Wilson, against Jesse Walter I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: 1 negro man named Joshua, 1 lot of lumber & boards containing 50,000, more or less, sundry farming utensils, as the property of said Walter, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 23d of inst. between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. at the court house door, in Princess Anne, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Sept. 2.

Notice to Creditors.

THE creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause, if any they have, why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

McKIMMEY PORTER.

Salisbury, Aug. 10 mtl

PUBLIC VENDUE.

I will offer for sale, on Monday the 29th of this month, at my late residence, on Wicomico Creek, the following property, to wit: HORSES, HOGS, OXEN, and COWS, and other CATTLE, together with the Implements of Husbandry belonging to the farm. Terms of Sale—A credit of 6 months on all sums of $5, and over, the purchasers giving note with approved security, bearing interest from the day of sale. For all sums under five dollars the cash will be required. Sale to commence at 10 o'clock A. M.

LEVIN W. BALLARD.

Sept. 9, 1828 tmfl

For Rent,

For the ensuing year, a House and Lot in the village of White-Haven, at present occupied by Edward U. Blake. For terms apply to.

MARCELLUS JONES.

Sept. 9, 1828.

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year, the FARM at present occupied by Mr. Peter McGee. It adjoins the farm of Mr. William Porter. For terms apply to the subscriber.

HETTY DISHAROON.

Princess-Anne, Sept. 2

NOTICE.

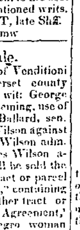
THE subscriber being extremely desirous of closing his business, once more gives notice to those indebted to him, that unless their accounts are settled in the course of the present month, he will be compelled to adopt a legal process without respect to persons.

SEVERN TEACKLE.

Princess-Anne, Sept. 2

BATTALION ORDERS.

Sept. 2, 1828.



IN obedience to Regimental orders the commanding Officers of Companies attached to the Second Battalion of 25th Regiment M. M will cause the companies under their respective commands to meet at the regimental parade ground, on FRIDAY the 26th of September, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. as the line of review and inspection will be formed at 11. The commander of this patriotic corps confidently expects that the companies attached thereto will give, upon this occasion, a general attendance, and that the officers will appear in full uniform.

ANTHONY B. BENNETT, Maj
2nd Bat. 25th Reg. M. M

Sept. 2. wm

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's old, servant.

WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.

Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

BARREN CREEK SPRINGS.

THE SUBSCRIBER

Begs leave to inform his friends & the public,

That his HOUSE is now open

FOR THE RECEPTION OF VISITERS.

An anxious solicitude to promote the comfort of those who are in pursuit of health, pleasure, or business, has induced him to make such arrangements as will enable him to give ample satisfaction to those who may favour him with their company. By those who have visited the Springs, during the present season, the waters have been pronounced more powerful in their effects than hitherto experienced—operating in most cases, as a purgative medicine; Those desirable effects, in conjunction with its chalybeate properties, which are acknowledged to be unsurpassed by any waters in the world, present a powerful inducement to such as are already assailed by disease, and to those who are desirous to avoid the bilious diseases of the climate.

Persons who are inclined to try the efficacy of the waters may rest assured that every accommodation shall be provided to render them happy and comfortable; and the charges shall be apportioned to the pressure of the times

The public's humble servant.

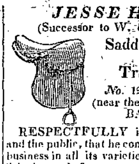
CHARLES LEARY.

N. B. Travellers, generally, particularly the passengers of the steam boat Maryland, will find this an easy and commodious stage, after the arrival of the boat at Cambridge, (being only four miles distant from Vienna.) Here they will be certain to meet with the purest and best Waters of the peninsula, and a Table supplied with the best accommodations the country can afford—on the most reasonable conditions.

July 20. mku

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. HALL,)



Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk-Maker,

No. 127 Market Street, (near the new City Hotel,) BALTIMORE,

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public, that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old established stand for many years occupied by Messrs. William & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a

Large and General Assortment of

Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks, Veleices, Saddlebags, Collars, Military Equipments, &c.

of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail, on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this or any other city.

August 19th, 1828. 1*

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed: two at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'r.s of Thomas Byrd against Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and 1 other at the suit Hannah Hearn, Ex'x. of Wm. Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right, interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by L. D. Collier; also a house and lot occupied by Amelia Nicholson; also one other occupied by William S. Disharoon; also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esquire's Mills, it being the office of the said Elijah; also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson & Levi Cathell, of a certain Absalom Phipps; also a clock & case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Waller, Esq. in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 20th of September next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

August 26. m

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street. BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. wm

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.

Somerset County Orphans Court.

Aug 26th, 1828.

§§§§§§§§§ ON application of SEVERN §SEAL.§§ MISTER, Ex'r of RICHARD §§§§§§§§§ EVANS, late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in one of the papers printed at Princess Anne.

True copy. Test,

JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of RICHARD EVANS, late of said county, deceased.—All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 29th of March next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 26th of Aug. 1828.

SEVERN MISTER.

Ex'r of R. Evans, dec'd.

Sept. 2, 1828. k

NOTICE.

ALL persons indebted to the estate of Richard Evans, deceased, by bond, note or open account, are hereby requested to make payment to the subscriber on or before the 15th day of October next, otherwise he will be obliged to pursue a legal course to compel the same.

SEVERN MISTER, Ex'r. of R. Evans, dec'd.

Sept. 2, 1828. tmfl

FOR RENT,

For the ensuing year, that FARM which was formerly the property of William Tilghman, dec'd. situated on the head of Back Creek. For terms apply to JAMES STEWART.

July 22, 1828. kw

☞ NOTICE.

A PLANTER who desires to procure some SLAVES for his own service, will give the best prices in cash, for a few of both sexes, between the ages of 12 and 25 years. Those who have such to dispose of will please apply at Col. Dashiell's Tavern, immediately

Princess-Anne, August 4.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess-Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.

August 5. jfl

FOR SALE.

THE subscriber wishes to dispose of a small FARM with all of its improvements, situated on Deal's Island; the place where Keziah Jones, dec'd. formerly resided. The terms of sale may be ascertained by applying to Mr. William Wallace, who resides on said Island. If not sold at private sale by Wednesday the 5th day of November, it will on that day be offered at Public Sale, to the highest and best bidder. The terms will be made known on the day of sale.

MARCELLUS JONES.

Sept. 9, 1828.

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

EBENEZER ANDERSON.

August 19 ww

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phoebus.

For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

June 3, 1828. wk

PUBLIC SALE.

WILL be sold at public sale on the 20th instant, the HOUSE belonging to the estate of Robt Moreton, deceased, and known by the name of the Sand-Flea Storehouse. The terms of sale will be made known on the day of sale. The sale to commence at 1 o'clock P. M. By order of the Orphans Court of Somerset county.

BENJAMIN I. JONES, Adm. Robt. Moreton, dec'd.

Sept. 9 nuw

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumption, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Diseases of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following.—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify, that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health. I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease, and in preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, it, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life, ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extracts from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. carried in perfection. In consequence of all the combination of the most valuable herbs, it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores, composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs, which constitute the disease, particularly in its use. It promotes expectoration, which is constantly called for, and whilst it does and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a description of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of proprietor, in red ink. Offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER,

Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne.

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks,

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
C. I. SA's before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas.
WARRANTS.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks, PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms, At the Office of the Village Herald

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., SEPTEMBER 23, 1828. NO. 26.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

TO PHILANTHROPOS.

Comparison between Gen. Jackson and Caius Marius.

The fairest means of judging of merit, is to view it personified in the characters of distinguished individuals. We form our opinion from the actions of men, and, by this criterion we decide whether those who aspire to patriotism have any solid claim to it.—If, therefore, a man has signalized him and evinced the purity of his character, by his actions, it is not only injustice to the individual, but also an insult to virtue and principle, to endeavour to stain him with the vilest of crimes, and the shafts of malice must, inevitably, recoil on the character of the calumniator. These remarks I conceive to be highly applicable to an effusion of falsehood from your pen against the great soldier, whose eminent services none ever treat otherwise than with the most profound gratitude, except those who are unacquainted with his merits, through misrepresentation, or those by whom it would be a disgrace to be esteemed. Hope you will take no offence, Mr. Philanthropos, if a little minute examination is applied to the comparisons which you allege against this peaceful farmer, and to your literary, historical information.

In tracing the parallel between Jackson & Marius, you say, that they both lived under a republican government and had to rise by their own exertions. "For Marius, like Jackson, was obscurely born." Now, this means, either that you reprobate a man's rising by his own exertions or his being obscurely born. Would you have him to inherit his character? If you would, there would only be certain families which could ever attain to distinction. Do you intend to blame such a situation, and to place this to the number of Gen. Jackson's faults or 'crimes' that he has risen by his own exertions from obscurity. This is wherein his greatness consists. We may fairly think that you do blame him for this: he... in the whole comparison between Jackson and Marius you do not mention one of the former's good qualities, and hence we are justified in believing that your whole 'effusion' is intended for a delineation of his faults. You would, then, have an aristocratical greatness; a few of the nobility of the nation, executing all our honours and lording it over the people, thereby wresting from us the civil liberty which we set forth as the basis of our rights in declaring ourselves independent States. By this principle, we should never have heard of the blacksmith, Gen. Nathaniel Greene, the waggoner, Gen. Morgan, and the greater part of our revolutionary worthies. Gen. Jackson considers it an honour to have either the vote or the esteem of one who holds such principles. A... you say, "Marius was fierce and untractable when in authority—the like is said of Gen. Jackson." And at what time and by whom has this been said? It was never mentioned before he became a candidate for the presidency of our country, except by private enemies, and now it is trumpeted forth by political reprobates, in order to annihilate his prospects. If you mean by fierce and untractable, that Gen. Jackson is superior to the designs of depraved political leaders, you say rightly; but if you mean that he is barbarous, and cruel, you are mistaken, in the light of your own conscience. Gen. Jackson's character has always been remarkable for sternness and resolution of purpose; his judgment is not formed of matters without mature deliberation, and this is the reason why he has seldom changed his purposes, when they may have been fixed;—there is the same pre-eminent feature in the character of Washington.

In the next place, Jackson, say you, "is said to have a very imperfect education."—Gen. Jackson's writings, says Mr. Walsh, are marked with great fluency and energy of expression and cogent reasoning. He writes nervously and perspicuously and speaks with fluidity and force. Refer to his address at New Orleans, last winter, and see whether his critick has penned the truth; recollect the education of an eminent lawyer must require, and then say, whether your belief has any foundation, except in prejudice. But here follows something a little remarkable. You say that Jackson, in having slaughtered the Seminoles, is like Marius when he cleared the Farther Spain of robbers, thereby, in the force of your comparison, making the Seminoles robbers. And still you impute this to Jackson as a fault. Is it a crime to destroy robbers, as you say the Seminoles were? If not, why do you condemn Gen Jackson, and not praise it as a meritorious action? It is immaterial whether you condemn him or not, since he has been honourably acquitted by the Congress of the United States, and by some of the most virulent of his present opponents, among whom stands conspicuously the name of JOHN SERGEANT. "Was Jackson," continues your effusion, "ever known to shine, except in the field?" What do you mean by shining? Do you mean to ask, sir, if he has a smooth, ruby face, and is attired in his gold lace coat, chapeau and sword, or do you take the word in the signification which Horace first attached to it—a man of such distinction as is supported by merit and proceeds from true greatness?—Gen. Jackson has distinguished himself otherwise than in the field. War is not his proper sphere; but that noble glow of patriotism, which reigns triumphant over his bosom, has been enabled, by natural endowments, to exercise itself, both in the field and at the bar—his motto has been, "CEDANT ARMA TOGAE, CONCEDAT LAUREA LAUDI." His conduct shows, that it was at his country's necessitous demand that he assumed the sword, and, in wielding that sword, he used that policy and discretion which prove the deep knowledge which he must have acquired in his profession. Do you censure Gen. Washington for appointing Gen Jackson attorney of the United States for the district south of the Ohio? Would Washington appoint a man who was unworthy to fill this arduous office? And does it not require eminent abilities to discharge this responsible trust, which was so closely connected with the welfare of our country and cause of justice? Upon the same ground you condemn Mr. Monroe for appointing Gen. Jackson Governor of Florida, or you say that Gen. Washington and Col. Monroe were incapable of judging of the merits of men. Let us pass over your notice of Harris and Jackson's conduct towards the Legislature of Tennessee, as they would surpass the limits of this paper, and go to Gen. Jackson's conduct at the inauguration of Mr. Adams. You absolutely blame the General, because he treated Mr. Adams with politeness. None, you say truly, were more prompt, nor more smiling in their congratulations than Gen. Jackson. General Jackson has ever been represented as a perfect gentleman, by all who have seen him; his manners are said to be the most prepossessing, by his openness and real urbanity, without the smallest tincture of affectation. It is, therefore, perfectly consonant to his character that he should offer his unfeigned salutations to his fellow-candidate. This is prompted by his conduct as a gentleman, as well as the high situation in which he was then placed. There is another reason for the General's treatment to Mr. Adams—Mr. Henry, a member of Congress from Ky. in a private letter, states the different feelings which were evinced at the inauguration of the President, towards Mr. Adams and Gen. Jackson. Some considerable applause was given to the President when he entered the room, but when Jackson entered three loud cheers welcomed his approach. He saw still, that he was the favourite of the people, and by these noble feelings he was prompted to offer to the President that courteous salutation which his hospitality dictated. But this is the last circumstance in the life of this great man, which I could have believed that the venom of political depravity would have prompted one to blame!

"Inter arma, leges silent! the General's law at New Orleans and other places has clearly proved his adoption of this principle." No one ever denied this, but every one denies the impolitick effects of this act. It was the only means of saving the city. And it would have been the height of fatuity to suffer the city to be surrendered merely for the sake of the formality of adhering to the written law. That the civil is always the superior power, is dangerous doctrine, and pronounced such by Mr Jefferson. The salus populi, says Mr. Jefferson, is the supreme rule and paramount maxim. He says, however, it is idle for one to contend that there are not ... this generation ... the good of the public of ten requires that the written laws should be contravened; but still, says he, this cannot be done without risk; but it should often be done, relying on purity of motive and the indulgences and generosity of the people. A... gain, you say that Gen. Jackson threatened to enter the Senate chamber and cut off the ears of Senators!! Open and wilful misrepresentation deserves to be noted and exposed in broad terms, and this is pronounced a deliberate falsehood on the authority of the following facts; The debate in the Senate, on Jackson's conduct in the Seminole war, says the Nat. Intelligencer, was not held at the time that the charge alleges Jackson to have made this threat. Mr. Binns says that Decatur carried his lady to witness the ceremony of the adjournment of the Senate, and this was the time that the affair happened. If Decatur had been concerned in the difference which is attributed to him, most certainly, Mrs. Decatur would have been apprized of it, as she accompanied her husband. Yet this lady, in a beautiful and accomplished letter, assures Gen. Jackson that it there was one individual more grateful for his services than the rest of mankind, it was her beloved husband; and, at the same time, tells him that her husband entertained no such feeling towards him as such conduct would import. Gen. Call, one of Jackson's aids at the time, also denies the very semblance of any such thing. The other instances, which you say, shew Jackson's incompetency to the office to which he now aspires in "high relief," should be noticed, were it not that they are so comprehensive as to occupy too long a space. In fine, nothing new nor original has been attempted; the charges against Gen. Jackson are old and have been reiterated, altho' they were intended to assume a novel character by comparing a true patriot with a misera ble tyrant.

A FRIEND OF MAN.

September 18, 1828.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

MARK THE SEQUEL!!

Among a number of the dernier resorts of the coalition, published in the last Iris, is one yclept "GROG BILL." We give it as our deliberate opinion that this ought to have been the last subject for a man to meddle with, who has brought from Baltimore to this county, TWO HOGSHEADS OF WHISKEY, without a license. Yes, it is the last subject about which Mr. Teackle ought to say one word—for it is not a twelvemonth since he so inveterately opposed the practice of Treating, that, in enumerating the evils resulting from that practice, he overlooked the ungentlemanly trick of leaving a grog bill unpaid, and exclaimed—"it generates debauchery, and all the miseries of the black catalogue of every heinous vice and immorality—and yet it is said some are willing to uphold it!! Can this be true? Credat judas? Can those be found who will raise their heads and advocate so vile a practice?" &c. But now it appears Mr. Teackle sees no "grog drinkers," as he last year called those who attended and partook of treats—he "advocates" no "sensual influence" to gain votes: Oh no! he brought two hogsheads of Whiskey to this county for the purpose of ——— what was Whiskey made for? But to return to the bill above alluded to. Although we have seen nothing to satisfy us that the statement is correct, we believe there was some expense of the kind incurred while Jackson held the office of Commissioner to receive possession of Florida; and that our readers may see and judge for themselves, we shall present the bill with some remarks by the Western Argus—

From the Iris.

"GROG BILL.—The Jackson party accuse the present enlightend [enlightened !!! we suppose by poring over "Edmondson's Heraldy and Caton's Peerage, and the Laves and Portraits of eminent Englishmen" which cost this republican nation $115 00! under Adams] administration of extravagance.—Look at this—

9 gallons Brandy, at $2 50	$22 50
271 do Madeira Wine at $5	137 50
193 do old Whiskey at 75 cts	14 92½
6 boxes of Claret at $12	72 00
2 do small bottled at $12	26 00
1 cask Porter, 8 doz at $3 50	28 00
1 dozen Syrup	8 00
1 do Noveau	8 00
3 bottles Bitters	3 00
	$314 62½"

"A pretty round sum in about 3 months," exclaims the Iris writer—ay, almost equal to one third the cost of J. Q. Adams' Portrait, which was paid for by the people's money—It is also stated that Jackson received at the same time a salary of $5000 as Governor of Florida. This is utterly false. His salary as Governor did not commence until his duty as Commissioner ceased.

On receiving possession of Pensacola, he gave an entertainment to the Spanish officers, as is the custom in such cases, all which the editors of the Journal (who first brought forward this charge) well knew; yet they represent the wine and other articles procured for that entertainment, as purchased for the General's own table?

Moreover these accounts all passed the inspection of Mr Adams himself, while Secretary of State, were approved by him and upon his approval paid? Yet Mr. Adams blast the general. If they were wrong or exhorbitant, how came Mr. Adams to allow them? The money was not going into his own pocket, like the double outfits, salaries, contingencies and expenses of constructive journies upon the Ghent Mission. There is no doubt, that he cheated the Government for his own benefit; but would he do it for the benefit of General Jackson, when it was to bring nothing into his own pocket? The friends of Mr. Adams are as impudent as Old Ebony or they would not dare to present General Jackson's accounts, as passed by Mr. Adams, to disparage the old soldier before the people. But, "JACKSON has done the States SOME SERVICE and they know it."

[From the Philadelphia Sentinel]

To John Sergeant, Manuel Eyre, Lawrence Lewis, C. C. Biddle, and Joseph P. Norris, Esquires—Authors of an Address adopted at the Administration town meeting of the 7th July.

You know, gentlemen, that, in the defensive speech, delivered by Mr. Clay, on the 12th July, 1827, at Noble's Inn, near Lexington, he said:

"No one has contended, that the proofs should be exclusively those of eye witnesses, testifying from the sense, positively and directly to the fact—political, like all other offences, may be established by circumstantial, as well as positive evidence: but, I do contend, that some evidence, be it what it may, ought to be exhibited."

Undoubtedly the doctrine and the sentiment, thus expressed, are correct and, unless evidence of some kind exists, Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay have been treated as cruelly as Gen. Jackson has been. Whether evidence, that does exist, is sufficient to produce conviction, is a question which every just man will determine for himself: it is enough for us, sentinels appointed by our fellow-citizens, that the evidence is sufficient for our own conviction, and justifies our calling upon them, as we do, to arouse and right themselves.

We have endeavoured to make others think as we do, by the circumstantial evidence, which Mr. Clay says is sufficient; and, we proceed with further proof, part of it of a character which may be called specific:—

To this fact, we ask particular attention, that, often as Mr. Clay has spoken, and much as he has written, to exculpate himself, he has never pretended, that he supported Mr. Adams, on account of any confidence in his principles or respect for his merits: if he had any such apology to offer, he would certainly have presented it: on the contrary, he seems to have studiously avoided every thing of that kind; and to have desired the world to suppose, that he had chosen the least of two evils. Thus, when at Noble's Inn, he could not evade this delicate point, he said: "That I had some objections to Mr. Adams, I am ready freely to admit, but these did not weigh a feather, in comparison with the great and insurmountable objections long and deliberately entertained against his competitor."

This admits all we ask for our argument, that Mr. Clay did not vote for Mr. Adams on account of any merits on his part, but as the least obnoxious of two obnoxious persons.

But, before we draw conclusion from this position, let us see, whether what Mr. Clay thus said, in July 1827, was true?

Gen. Floyd, long a distinguished member of Congress from Virginia, and in 1824, a friend of Mr. Crawford as President, whilst at Washington, in April last, addressed on the 4th of that month, a letter to Gen. Van Ness, of that city, which was soon after published by the latter: it contained this statement—that in the month of January, 1825, or late in December, 1824, whilst the election of President was before the House of Representatives, he called on Mr. Clay to ascertain his determination as to Mr. Crawford—that Mr. Clay said it would not do to elect Mr. Crawford, as his health was bad. "He," Mr. Clay, (says Gen. Floyd) "then went on to state, in the course of that conversation, and I think in these words—When I (Mr. Clay) take up the pretensions of Mr. Adams, and weigh them, and lay them down—then take up the pretensions of General Jackson, weigh them, and lay them down by the side of those of Mr. A., I never was so much puzzled in all my life, as I am to decide between them."

That Mr. Clay made this declaration about one short month before the election took place, was thus publicly avowed by General Floyd, in April 1828, at Washington city; Mr. Clay was on the spot and has never ventured either to deny or explain: then it is true, that Mr. Clay, one month before the election, absolutely, and with the precision of a vender of diamonds, weighed the pretensions of Mr. Adams and Gen. Jackson, and found them so exactly balanced, that he could not say which was the heaviest—Yet in July, 1827, he said at Noble's Inn, that the scale of Mr. Adams did not contain a feather, in comparison with the enormous weight of Gen' Jackson's! he said in Jan. 1825, that he was never before so puzzled, as he was then, between Mr. Adams and Gen. J.—yet in July, 1827, he said that his objections to General Jackson had, long prior to the election, been deliberately entertained!

You know, gentlemen, that the contradictory stories even of an ignorant and friendless prisoner are often accepted by juries, as emphatic indications of guilt: we pray you, therefore, to reconcile if you can, the contradicting statements of an acute lawyer and influential man, Mr. Clay.

Our position, observe, is, that Mr. Clay has never pretended, that he voted for Mr. Adams ... than that he ... persons. In this view of the matter, what position would a man, with pure intentions, have taken? It was said at the time of the election, at Washington, and we think truly, that the vote of New York had been long doubtful—that Gen. Van Rensselaer's was the casting vote of that state—that he had to choose, as Mr. Clay had, between two obnoxious persons—that he voted under the exercise of powerful influences, concentrated to the end—that he merely voted, and even then wept! How was it with Mr. Clay—did he stand proudly aloof? did he drop into the ballot box a ticket wet with his tears? did he throw himself upon the dignity of his station of speaker, and calmly await the result? did he resolve to retain his post of honour, and falsify the predictions, which in his 'card' he pronounced "infamous?" did he refuse of live under a man, in whose favour he could not utter a word—against whom he had uttered the public voice? far from it—he became the partisan of Mr. Adams, and by secret manage ment secured the vote of Mr. D. White of Kentucky, if not that of other members.

Now, if Mr. Clay, standing, as he pretended he did, between two persons equally objectionable, had, like Gen. Van Rensselaer, voted for Mr Adams, and done no more, he would have been censured, because he voted against the spirit of our institutions, and the declared wishes especially, of Kentucky: but there are many worthy persons, who would have defended him, and claimed some latitude for what Mr. Clay called his conscientious scruples. But, when he rushed into the first office in the state, as soon as his own influence had given to Mr. Adams the power to confer it, what honest and rational man could doubt the sinister nature of the motives of the parties?

... But, gentlemen, let us again suppose, that Mr. Clay really had no alternative be that Mr. Clay really had no alternative between two obnoxious persons—that he was compelled to vote for one of them—and that, as the least obnoxious, he supported Mr. Adams; we particularly beg you to answer this question .... was Mr. Adams in such a dilemma? Why did he appoint Mr. Clay? Had he a choice of evils? Had he not millions of men, from whom to chose the person he preferred to all the rest? Had he no old associates or new friends, no persons with claims upon him for former services? Could he find but one man in the union fit for secretary? Had he not given a pledge to Mr. Webster to confer offices upon the heads of the two parties numerically? Had he not taken from the treasury, army and navy, persons claiming to be republicans? Was there no merit in Mr. Hopkinson, Mr Everett, Mr. Webster Mr Johnston, Mr. Stockton, Mr. Sergeant, &c. &c. of the other party? Why, then, we ask, did Mr. Adams give the highest office in his gift to the person, who, of all men, had done the most to blast his political prospects? Why, above all his friends, did he select Mr. Clay, after having drawn the portrait of him, which ... in the book of the fisheries? If it is true, as "Wayne" says it is, and Mr Adams ... to Com. Porter seems to prove, that Mr. Adams is vindictive, how did it happen, that he not only quickly pardoned Mr. Clay's manifold offences, but conferred upon him the most signal advantages?

In short, gentlemen, we ask your own frank opinion, whether, if Mr. Adams had been elected, by the electors, he would have conferred on Mr. Clay the first place in his cabinet? And, if he would not have done so, then we ask you, why he did appoint him, when elected by the House of Representatives?

In the fifth letter, to which we reluctantly extend this enquiry, we shall close our remarks on this topic.

Respectfully, yours, &c.

JOS. WORRELL,
WM. DUNCAN,
WM. BOYD,
HENRY TOLAND,
JOHN WURTS,
WM. J. DUANE,
WM. J. LEIPER,
CHARLES S. COXE,
THO. M. PETTIT,

Committee of Correspondence for Philadelphia, appointed by the Republican Convention, assembled at Harrisburg, Jan. 8, 1828.

Aug. 1st, 1828.

"The conduct of Mr. Clay, prior to the election, indicated his sense of error, or intended error. Mr. Kremer's letter first publicly complained, but that did not appear until January 31—yet, Mr. Clay in his letter to Judge Brooke, January 28, said, he expected to be assailed by malice, but would "view its effusions without emotion:" how did he know that he would be assailed? Again—Mr Kremer said, "it is now, (January 26) ascertained to a certainty that Henry Clay has transferred his interests to J. Q. Adams;" on seeing this, Mr. Clay, three days after he said he would hear accusation without emotion, denounced Mr. Kremer's letter a forgery, and its author accountable to him, according to "the laws of honour." As to the parade of enquiry that followed, what did it mean? Mr. Clay required Mr. Kremer to prove in January two occurrences, that could not take place until February 9th.

It is remarkable, that, much as Mr. Kremer's letter was noticed, nothing was said of letters written by Mr. Adams' friends: a letter, of which the annexed extract formed a part, was written at Washington on the very day on which Mr. Kremer's letter was written, (Jan. 26,) and was published at New York on the day Mr Kremer's was published in Philadelphia, (Jan. 31,)—it was published in an administration paper, the Commercial Advertiser. It presents a vivid picture of scenes in the capital of a republic; as was well said at the time, men of the River Raisin and of the Hartford convention, ... words of Gen. Floyd—"No Mr. Chairman our liberties are not to be endangered by a successful military chieftain—it is here, in this capital, on this floor, that our liberty is to be sacrificed, and that by the hollow, treacherous eloquence of some ambitious, proud, aspiring demagogue."

Extract of a Letter, dated Washington, January 26, 1825.

"What I wrote you last, as a rumor, has been converted into certainty; Mr. Clay and all his friends have formally gone over to the Adams standard. The knowledge of this event has produced a strong sensation throughout all the political circles, and given intensity to the contest. The hall of representatives resembled a bee hive, when the bees are preparing to swarm, the next morning after the Clay movement was known; The hum of voices conversing in an under tone, was like the sound of the ocean before a gathering storm. All the avenues and sofas were filled with groups, telling or enquiring the news; and calculating the consequences; some say all doubt is now over; others still predict a long struggle. It is curious to observe the new grouping of faces: Men who were seldom seen together, are now arm in arm; or busily whispering over letters or newspaper articles. Mr. Clay appears cheerful, talks much, and has the air of a man relieved from a burden!"

LOOK ON THIS PICTURE.

We ask the attention of our readers to this portrait of the American Cincinnatus: we find it in the Enquirer.

The Adams men are in a rage at calling Andrew Jackson the "Tennessee Farmer." They were as little pleased when we spoke of the gallant General, and the more glorious victory of New Orleans; it was then military chieftainism—military usurpation, blood, carnage, bombs, and congreve rockets. Now we have closed the campaign. We show them the gallant warrior on his spacious and well cultivated farm. A straw hat covers those white locks bleached by the midnight dews in the tented field—a coat of plain homespun made on his farm, is substituted for the uniform, gorget and golden epaulets. He carries in his hands a small pruning knife, with which he trims his young trees and bushes—he watches his reapers in the field—he sees his cattle fed and foddered—his lambs sheared and pound'd—his cows milk'd and stabled—his hay raked into mows—his oats and wheat thresh'd—his cider press'd—his fruits gathered—and when the "curfew tolls the knell of parting day," he repairs to his fireside and is surrounded by his friends and neighbours, and the evening closes in rational and improving converse. This is the picture of the Tennessee Farmer—it is the picture of Andrew Jackson, as he now is. Such a man who can follow the plough, or follow his enemy as occasion may require, who has plain and practical sense and sound experience in affairs of government, who has honesty as his land mark, and decision as his guide, even such a man will the people take from his farm and make him President of the U. States.

wherein he acknowledges that the "document (above spoken of) was in his hands," and that he "showed it to several individuals." What say you now Mr. Sewer?

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATE

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 23, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory." Jefferson.

"Whose services to this nation, entitle him to its HIGHEST REWARDS."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

We are authorized to announce
Thomas Bayly,
John C. Wilson, jr.,
Anthony B. Bennett, and
John J. Davis, Esq'rs.
as Gandidates to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

The decree has gone forth!

Such appears to be the fact with respect to the Coalition concern, That whatever may be brought forward by the Jackson prints, and however well attested, they will unblushingly give it a downright denial—and farther, That they will neither confine themselves to probabilities nor try to confute the charges brought against the administration, but unsparingly use the most mean and execrable artifices to despoil the Old Farmer's fame, as well as to deny any thing their party may have put forth which now redounds to their injury. By this course they will still more effectually destroy the character of the press. But, as they are conscious of defeat they care not. Hence, if you tell them that they have said so and so, they reply:—'Tis a vile sinuosity—no administration paper has ever asserted any thing of the kind. Prove, to them, by testimony undenied and undeniable, the charges brought against them, and you'll hear them cry out:—This is audacious, 'tis persecution!! the low ribaldry of the Jackson presses, &c. &c. Give the Adams papers incontrovertible replies and refutations to their falsehoods [illegible] the alarm, or "the kicking of the opposition;" yes, the kicking! this is the language of the diplomatic editors who lay exclusive claims to "order and decency."—But deign them no reply and they 'll immediately tell you that their fabrications are unanswerable!!

The desperateness of the Coalition is most strikingly exhibited by the low and pitiful means employed by most of the administration editors, to sustain a little longer a faint hope of success. No undertaking is too daring—no falsehood too gross, for them. They engage in the one with apparent delight, and utter the other with impunity. But there are times when the disgust of the people at the vituperation of the hired minions of power becomes so palpable that it is even seen by these libellers themselves. In proof of this we would refer to the infamous statement by C. Hammond and others, trying to prove Gen. Jackson to be a mulatto. Hammond obtained a number of certificates, for this purpose, numerous copies of which were printed and privately circulated, until one of the Coalitionists, a landlord, in Ohio, from over-zeal recklessly showed the base statement to a true Jacksonian. This friend of the Hero obtained a copy of it, and it was, as it should have been, forthwith published to the world to exhibit in bold relief the "decency"—or rather, the depravity of Hammond & Co.—We are not certain that Hammond ever published this fabrication in any of his newspapers—but we have several copies of the charge and certificates, and also we believe a certified copy of the conversation which took place between the aforesaid landlord & the Jacksonian. Yet, notwithstanding all this, Teackle's last Sewer contains an unfounded declaration that the above story was got up by some Jackson editors!! Ineffably unprincipled as this LIE is, its author is not without a kind of apology—the frenzy of party desperation excuses him. Had he entertained a hope of gaining a solitary vote for the administration by this charge, we doubt not, he would have connived at it.

Another piece of consummate folly is the emanation of a glaring ☞Beware!!! from that prolific source of scandal and defamation, Teakle's Sewer. His calling a certain pamphlet, signed John Robb, said to be in circulation, "an imposing attempt," "insidious" and "deceptive," is wholly gratuitous. We have taken means to ascertain something more on this subject.

☞Since putting the above in type we have received a copy of a letter by C. Hammond,

Quantico true to herself!

At a meeting of citizens of Somerset county, at Quantico, on last Friday, (the 19th inst.) it was proposed to take a vote on the presidential election, when there appeared

For Jackson 70 For Adams 5

PROPERTY QUALIFICATION.

The complete refutation of the charge of Jackson's having been in favour of a property qualification has been published and republished scores of times—yet, we notice in Teackle's last Sewer, a repetition of this charge, in an extract from the Commentator, which would be well calculated to deceive the unwary did it not contain the following sentence:

"And every freeman being an inhabitant of any one county in the state, six months immediately preceding the day of election shall be entitled to vote for members of the general assembly, for the county in which he shall reside."

[Tennessee Cons. Art. III. ¶1.]

BETS!—We have seen an article in the last Iris copied from that misnomer, the Marylander, offering bets to the amount of $400. The piece is dated "26th Aug. 1828." Why did'nt the Master Spirit of the Sewer tell his readers that some Jacksonian had the assurance to take up the bet by ten o'clock on that day. Guess that comfort was too cold!

Another of the Master Spirits's articles is about Coffin (ominous) Handbills. This appears as a "communication," signed "Remembrancer." Poor fellow! he seems not to have remembered the meaning of the term "city," or, what is worse, don't know that Princess-Anne is none. Can't think him entitled to credit in either case. Query. Is not the whole piece a plagiarism?

Another article, designed to show that Jackson did'nt spell several words correctly when writing in the bustle of a camp, is signed——what, do you think? Dictionary? No. Wisdom? No; "COMMON SENSE"!! Ar'nt he prodigiously larn'd?

Washington and Jackson.

We perceive that one of Mr. Adams' Officials—the National Journal, has denied that Gen. Jackson was appointed Attorney General by WASHINGTON. We expect to see this denial at large in Teackle's Sewer of this morning, and hence regret that we have not room, in this paper, to show this denial is utterly unfounded in fact. We shall, however, in our next paper present conclusive proof that Jackson was appointed Attorney General, and that too by Gen. WASHINGTON.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Double Dealing of L. D. Teackle.

I have had, in my possession, for several [illegible] legerdemain of L. D. [illegible] is not generally known, and which I did intend to have laid beforre the public, at an earlier date; but from some accident or unforeseen disappointment, it has been defered, from time to time. But as it is never too late to do good, and as the information is absolutely important to make a still plainer impress upon the character of this political cheat, I shall forthwith submit it fairly and justly, to the calm and deliberate consideration of the people of Somerset.

According to the 37th article of the Constitution of Maryland, no delegate of the Assembly shall hold or execute any office of profit or trust; and according to the 39th Article of the said constitution, If any delegate to the Assembly, shall hold or execute any office of profit during his acting as delegate to the Assembly, his seat, on conviction thereof in a court of Law, by the oaths of two credible witnesses, shall be void, and he shall suffer the punishment for wilful and corrupt PERJURY, or be banished the state forever, or be disqualified forever, from holding any office or place of trust or profit, as the court may adjudge. It was in reference to these provisions of the constitution, that Mr. T., the Superintendent of Primary Schools, wrote, when he published, that the appointment of said Superintendent, was 'WITHOUT SALARY,' and could not be called an office of PROFIT or TRUST, nor interpose a disability to his being your delegate. Hence the opinion went forth, that Mr. Teackle was performing the duties of Superintendent, without any expectation of reward.

But mark the sequel. After Mr. T's. election, he continued to be Superintendent of Primary Schools, until the time arrived for his taking his oath of office. Here we see his cunning manœuvres. Intending to carry in an account for SERVICES, and expenses, as Superintendent, and knowing in that case, the appointment would be deemed an office of "PROFIT," and also knowing, in that event, not only his seat would be void, but himself subject to serve punishment, he RESIGNS his place as Superintendent, PREVIOUS to his taking the oath of office. No doubt there was an understanding between Teackle and Gov. Kent, that the appointment should not be filled, until after the legislature adjourned. For during the session of the legislature, the office of Superintendent was kept vacant, and as soon as the legislature adjourned, Mr. T. petitioned to the Governor and council again for the appointment and obtained it. This is double dealing upon a large scale—According to this, a man may hold an office of profit until he goes to the legislature, resign it, before he takes his oath, receive his reward for the time he held the office, and after the session closes, be re-appointed to the same office—If this course of things, is not in direct contrariety to the Spirit of the constitution, if it be not a most shameful evasion of a most salutary provision in that instrument, I know nothing of the matter.

The Superintendent of public Instruction has not, in my opinion, having received a reward for his services, any right to a seat in the legislature. Under present circumstances his, is an uncertain Salary, and he, as a member of the legislature, has it, in his power to make many corrupt bargains, and receive the reward of his treachery, under the head of services as Superintendent.—I have now before me, a letter from a member of the committee on claims, dated Sept. 8, 1828, in which he says, (speaking of the allowance to Mr. Teackle) "his claims amounted to a much larger sum, than was allowed him by the committee. The sum, allowed, was in part as a SALARY, and the balance for expense of printing."

Thus we learn, that the CLAIMS of Mr. T. were much larger, than $500.00. He does not complain that his expenses were not covered by $500.00; if they were, what was the balance of "a much larger sum," to liquidate, if it was not to liquidate the claim for personal services? And still he says, he disclaimed any wish to be compensated for personal services. The report of the Com. on claims says, that the claim consisted of two parts, 1st. for expense of printing &c. and 2ndly for SERVICES &c. and the resolution to pay Mr. T. $500.00, stated that it was for SERVICES and expenses. Still the Superintendent says he disclaimed any wish to be compensated for personal services.

Whether the services, of which the committee speak, were personal or constructive, we are left to conjecture; the gentleman himself says they were constructive. The fact is he was compensated for his expenses and also for his SERVICES, and consequently, is not entitled to a seat in the legislature, as will be proved should it come to the test, of which there is little anticipation. For the people have been so often and so frequently imposed upon by L. D. Teackle, that, from every disposition manifested they are determined to abandon him to his fate. I shall pursue this subject in next week's paper, should nothing intervene to prevent it.

QUERCUS.

Sept. 23, 1828.

TO THE PEOPLE.

Fellow Citizens—In the administration address to which we are replying by letters, addressed to its authors, great stress is laid upon the conduct of Gen. Jackson, in undertaking to act against, or without law, at New Orleans especially—this objection was noticed in our eleventh letter, and we should have presented with that letter, the papers, which we now lay before you, if they had been in our possession. We offer them now, & ask for them your particular consideration.

The first is a letter from the late President JEFFERSON, written in 1810, the principles of which are most remarkably applicable to the emergencies in which Gen. Jackson was called to act five years afterwards—those principles, unless sound in themselves, could not be rendered so even by so high an authority as Mr. Jefferson—upon a dispassionate consideration of them, however, they will be found in accordance with the patriotism of him who acted upon them, as well as of him who sanctioned them.

The second is the patriotic and appropriate speech, delivered by Mr. C. G. Ingersoll, the representative of this city in Congress, in 1815, when thanks and a gold medal were unanimously voted to Gen. Jackson. The spirit of this address was, at the time, [illegible] the same spirit, which animates a large majority of the people, and will ensure the triumph of their cause. (The speech is omitted by us for want of room.—Ed. Herald.)

The Athenians, who sacrificed Aristides for the sternness of his virtues, who allowed Miltiades to perish in prison for a sum less than the cost of one of their dramatic exhibitions, and who permitted the greatest philosophers to be murdered under the mask of devotion to the gods, were already prepared for the yoke of the thirty tyrants. It cannot be the desire or the interests of Americans, to imitate the example of a degenerated people. We cannot conceal from ourselves the fact, that the age, in which we live, is pregnant with political good or evil to mankind; the course of events is only checked in Europe; to this country, the eyes of all liberal men are directed—for the sake of our fame and our prosperity, let us beware of solemnly sanctioning by our votes, the success of a corrupt combination—let us beware of sacrificing a man whose life has been devoted to the service of his country.

JOS. WORRELL,
WM. DUNCAN,
WM. BOYD,
HENRY TOLAND,
JOHN WURTS,
WM. J. DUANE,
WM. J. LEIPER,
CHARLES S. COXE,
THO. M. PETTIT,
Committee of Correspondence for Philadelphia, appointed by the Republican Convention, assembled at Harrisburg, Jan. 8, 1828.

Aug. 29, 1828.

MR. JEFFERSON'S OPINIONS.

To Mr. J. B. Colvin.

Monticello, Sept. 20, 1810.

Sir: Your favour of the 14th, has been duly received, and I have to thank you for the many obliging things respecting myself which are said in it. If I have left in the breast of my fellow citizens a sentiment of satisfaction with my conduct in the transaction of their business, it will soften the pillow of my repose through the residue of life.

The question you propose, whether circumstances do not sometimes occur which make it a duty in officers of high trust to assume authorities beyond the law, is easy of solution in principle, but sometimes embarrassed in practice. A strict observance of the written laws is doubtless one of the high duties of a good citizen; but it is not the highest. The laws of necessity, of self preservation, of saving our country when in danger, are of higher obligation. To lose our country by a scrupulous adherence to written law, would be to lose the law itself, with life, liberty, property, and all those who are enjoying them with us; thus absurdly sacrificing the end to the means. When, in the battle of Germantown, Gen. Washington's army was annoyed from Chew's house, he did not hesitate to plant his cannon against it, although the property of a citizen. When he besieged York Town, he levelled the suburbs, feeling that the laws of property must be postponed to the safety of the nation. While that army was before York, the Governor of Virginia took horses, carriages, provisions, and even men, by force, to enable that army to stay together till it could master the public enemy; and he was justified. A ship at sea, in distress for provisions, meets another having abundance, yet refusing a supply, the law of self-preservation authorizes the distressed to take a supply by force.—In all these cases the unwritten laws of necessity, of self preservation, and of public safety, control the laws of meum, and tuum. Further to exemplify the principle, I will state a hypothetical case. Suppose it had been made known to the Executive of the Union in the autumn of 1808, that we might have the Floridas for a reasonable sum, that that sum had not indeed been so appropriated by law, but that Congress were to meet within three weeks, and might appropriate it on the first or second day of their session. Ought he, for so great an advantage to his country, to have risked himself by transcending the law, and making the purchase? The public advantage offered, in this supposed case, was indeed immense; but a reverence for law, and the probability that the advantage might still be legally accomplished by a delay of only three weeks, were powerful reasons against hazarding the act. But suppose it foreseen that a * would find means to protract the proceeding on it by Congress, until the ensuing Spring, by which time new circumstances would change the mind of the other party. Ought the Executive, in that case, and with that foreknowledge, to have secured the good to his country, and to have trusted to their justice for the transgression of the law? I think he ought, and that the act would have been approved. After the affair of the Chesapeake, we thought war a very possible result. Our magazines were illy provided with some necessary articles, nor had any appropriations been made for their purchase. We ventured, however, to provide them, and to place our country in safety, and stating the case to Congress, they sanctioned the act.

To proceed to the conspiracy of Burr, and particularly to Gen. Wilkinson's situation in New Orleans. In judging this case we are bound to consider the state of the information, correct and incorrect, which he then possessed. He expected Burr and his band from above, a British fleet from below, and he knew there was a formidable conspiracy within the city. Under these circumstances, was he justifiable, 1st. in seizing notorious conspirators? On this there can be but two opinions; one, of the guilty and their accomplices; the other, that of all honest men. 2d. Sending them to the seat of government when the written law gave them a right to trial in the territory? The danger of their rescue, of their continuing their machinations, the tardiness and weakness of the law, apathy of the Judges, active patronage of the whole tribe of lawyers, unknown disposition of the juries, an hourly expectation of the enemy, salvation of the city, and of the Union itself, which would have been convulsed to its centre had that conspiracy succeeded; all these constituted a law of necessity and self-preservation and rendered the salus populi supreme over the written law. The officer who is called to act on this superior ground, does indeed risk himself on the justice of the controlling powers of the Consti[illegible] incur that risk. But those controlling powers, and his fellow-citizens generally, are bound to judge according to the circumstances under which he acted. They are not to transfer the information of this place or moment to the time and place of his action; but to put themselves into his situation. We know here that there never was danger of a British fleet from below, and that Burr's band was crushed before it reached the Mississippi. But Gen. Wilkinson's information was very different, and he could act on no other.

From these examples and principles, you may see what I think on the question proposed. They do not go to the case of persons charged with petty duties, where consequences are trifling, and time allowed for a legal course, nor to authorize them to take such cases out of the written law. In these the example of overleaping the law is of greater evil than a strict adherence to its imperfect provisions. It is incumbent on those only who accept of great charges, to risk themselves on great occasions, when the safety of the nation, or some of its very high interests are at stake. An officer is bound to obey orders; yet he would be a bad one who should do it in cases for which they were not intended, and which involved the most important consequences. The line of discrimination between cases may be difficult; but the good officer is bound to draw it at his own peril, and throw himself on the justice of his country and the rectitude of his motives.

I have indulged free views on this question on your assurances that they are for your own eye only, and that they will not get into the hands of news writers. I met their scurrilities without concern, while in pursuit of the great interests with which I was charged; but in my present retirement, no duty forbids my wish for quiet.

Accept the assurances of my esteem and respect.

TH. JEFFERSON.

INDIANA.—The Balt. Republican of the 17th inst. says—It is no longer denied by the Adams papers (see D. Patriot of yesterday) that Boon, a Jackson candidate for Congress, in Indiana, has beaten Blake, the Adams candidate, by a majority of 17 votes.

Jennings, who is also elected from that state, is claimed as an Adams man; but independent of the evidence of his votes in Congress during the last session, which ought to make our opponents cautious how they claim him, we have the very best reason to say he is NOT an Adams man.

Test, the other member elected, is an Adams man, who when the election of President came on in the House of Representatives in 1825, thought he ought to be "guided by the will of his constituents," and voted for Jackson, although he, himself, preferred Adams. His election now is the reward of his fidelity to his constituents then, and we doubt not Mr. Test himself will admit that he owes his election to the Jackson party.

"ANOTHER LIE NAILED TO THE COUNTER.

Governor Shulze.—The Richmond Whig contains an extract of a letter, which the editor of that paper says, was written by a gentleman of much intelligence in this city. Amongst other wild sp[illegible] the writer communicates his infor[illegible] specting Pennsylvania, in which [illegible] "Gov. Shulze has expressed his de[illegible] ion that Adams will get the State." [illegible] saw this letter in the Richmond W[illegible] also appears in the Harrisburg St[illegible] Wednesday, we were informed [illegible] in Washington, that a Mr. Cox, of [illegible] had made a similar declaration [illegible] Gov. Shulze; asserting positiv[illegible] Governor had so expressed him[illegible] presence of him, Mr. Cox. The [illegible] this paper resides next door to the G[illegible] and has an opportunity of conver[illegible] him daily. As soon as we received th[illegible] information from Washington, we [illegible] on the Governor, and apprized h[illegible] declaration which had been attribut[illegible] In reply, he promptly assured [illegible] "never had made such a declarati[illegible] Cox, or any other person! And tha[illegible] not so express himself, because it w[illegible] opposition to his opinion!" The Gov[illegible] taken a neutral position on the pr[illegible] question, and it is singular indeed [illegible] silence must be metamorphosed [illegible] pressed opinions" that he never en[illegible] Our own opinion always has been [illegible] Shulze should have taken a stand [illegible] party, in favour of Gen. Jackson—[illegible] politicians have advised a neutr[illegible] The Governor, therefore, will take [illegible] the contest; but on the election d[illegible] lives, he will vote with his party fo[illegible] Jackson and John C. Calhoun.

Penn. Re[illegible]

[Communi[illegible]

Extract of a letter from an Adams ge[illegible] to a Jackson friend of this count[illegible]

Philadelphia, Sept. [illegible]

"In my travels, I passed the old m[illegible] of J. A. [John Adams] at Quincy [illegible] find within a ¼ of a mile of his resi[illegible] most superb Unitarian Church, new[illegible] pleted, built of the granite of J. Q. A[illegible] Quincy Adams'] land, and presented [illegible] to erect the church.—About 5 week[illegible] the remains of the old man were d[illegible] under that church."

THE CONTRAST.

John Q. Adams is dressed with [illegible] cap and tassels, short jacket, ☞ sil[illegible] ings, Nankeen pantaloons, and yellow [illegible] co pumps!!!

The Farmer of Tennessee appear[illegible] ed in cloth manufactured on his own [illegible]

Which shows the most friendship [illegible] "American System," plain substantial [illegible] spun, or Nankeen from China and [illegible] stockings from France? "Actions spe[illegible] er than words."—Poughkeepsie Obser[illegible]

Buying votes.—We know an Adam[illegible] who says he will give ten dollars t[illegible] Jackson man who will vote the Adams [illegible] He acknowledges that he has not $10[illegible] own to spare; but he states that fo[illegible] ten he lays out in that way, he will [illegible] twenty. Should any one doubt the [illegible] his having made this statement, we can [illegible] it on being called upon.—Del. Gaz.

A Sign.—One of the Adams [illegible] didates for Elector in Tenne[illegible] has recently been defeated fo[illegible] office of Constable, for whic[illegible] was a candidate.

We have shown that Mr. [illegible] was appointed Secretary of S[illegible] as a reward for his vote ma[illegible] Adams President.

We have proven that Cook [illegible] gave the vote of Illinois to Ada[illegible] was rewarded with $5,500 out [illegible] the public treasury, under the fr[illegible] olous pretext of services he perf[illegible] med, during one month, while o[illegible] secret mission to the Island of C[illegible] ba, for what purpose no one kno[illegible]

We have established the fact [illegible] Scott, who gave the vote of M[illegible] souri to Adams, and who was tu[illegible] ed out of office by his constituen[illegible] for grossly misrepresenting th[illegible] wishes, was rewarded with an o[illegible] fice of no importance at the en[illegible] mous salary of $8 per day.

It is admitted, by Clay himse[illegible] that Pleasants, the editor of a vi[illegible] lent paper in Richmond, Va. [illegible] ceived nearly $2,000 as bearer [illegible] despatches to South America, whi[illegible] he was in England exploring th[illegible] country for his own gratification. Besides these, the report of the re[illegible] trenchment committee, appoint[illegible] by congress, discloses numerous o[illegible] ther instances, in which the publi[illegible] money has been wasted and appli[illegible] ed to corrupt purposes. After thi[illegible] can any man conscientiously doub[illegible] the corruption of the present ad[illegible] ministration? If he does, it is hi[illegible] own fault; for if he would discar[illegible] his prejudices, and give the subjec[illegible] an attentive and impartial investi[illegible] gation, he must come to the con[illegible] clusion that this administration, be[illegible] yond all former examples in thi[illegible] country, is grossly corrupt. If the friends of Adams and Clay refuse to open their eyes, in order to see the existing corruption, posterity will adjudge them guilty of encouraging it. [Phil. Gaz.

Baltimore Prices Current.

Sept. 19, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $6 a 7.00; superfine Howard-st. 5.00 a 5.12½; city mills 5.00; Susquehanna, 5.00 a 5.06; WHEAT, best red .90 a .95; best white 1.00 a 1.15—CORN, .32 a .34; OATS .19 a .21

☞We recommend to the readers attention the following very remarkable account of the destruction of one of Gen. Jackson's slaves. Independently of its being one of the most desperate rencounter we have ever seen upon paper, the description it affords is a striking evidence of the humanity, good temper, and sagacity of Jackson. It places him in a new and very favourable light before the public. It lifts the curtain of his private life, and shows him engaged in one of the most interesting offices, which can attach to a Citizen of the slave-holding states. And yet strange to tell, we have seen sly and dark allusions made by Erwin, Hammond, &c. to this incident as one of those which are calculated to tarnish the character of Andrew Jackson.—R. Enquirer.

From the Nashville Republican.

Franklin, Tenn. August 9th, 1828.

Gentlemen; I have just received a note of yesterday, from a member of the Nashville Committee, requesting me, as the Attorney prosecuting in behalf of the state of Tennessee, to furnish, through your paper, to the public, a statement of the circumstances attending the death of Gilbert, a slave, lately the property of Gen. Andrew Jackson. In compliance with that call, I will now make known to the public every incident accompanying that affair to which any importance can be attached.

Upon the 29th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1827, Maj. Wm. B. Lewis informed me, that during the preceding day, Gilbert, a slave of Gen. Jackson's had been killed by his Overseer, and that the General had written to the Coroner of the county and had requested him to hold an inquest over Gilbert's body; and that it was the wish of the General that I should attend the examination; he also informed me that the Coroner and the Jury were then on their way to the Hermitage. I told him I would attend, and started there as soon as I could with convenience; but before I reached there, the Jury had acted upon the matter and had pronounced that Gilbert had been killed by Ira Walton, his Overseer, in his necessary self-defence, and that Walton had been released from custody. The jury and witnesses had not dispersed when I arrived, and some of the company, in the presence of all, judging correctly of the object of my visit, proceeded to relate to me the evidence given to them upon that occasion. The witnesses were men of unquestionable truth, and the jury was composed of several gentlemen of liberal education, and all of them were men of good sense and of great respectability. The testimony detailed to me, under the circumstances just mentioned, was in substance, the same with that contained in the affidavit of Ira Walton, the Overseer, which I have carefully examined, and is as follows:

"I, Ira Walton, state, that upon the 29th day of August, 1827, whilst living with Gen. Andrew Jackson in the capacity of Overseer, I was under the necessity of killing Gilbert, a slave, the property of Gen. Jackson. The circumstances attending the affair are as follows:—Gilbert was a very strong, stout man, possessed of a most violent and ungovernable temper and disposition, with many other faults. He frequently runaway and stayed out until he would be apprehended and bro't home. On all previous occasions Gen. Jackson had forgiven him for these offences, without chastisement, upon his promises of better behaviour: which, so far from reforming him, had made him much worse and more difficult to be controlled. About the 1st of June, 1827, he again runaway. Upon the 27th of August, of that year, he was brought home, as I believe, by a Mr. McCullough, tied, late in the evening. That night Gen. Jackson called to see Gilbert, who again petitioned the General for forgiveness, to which the General replied, that he had deceived him so often by promises that he could not trust to his promises any longer, and left him. That night the Gen. named to me, that he had told Gilbert that he should be whipped, but, upon reflection, he then believed he would not have him whipped, and said I must take him to Nashville in the morning, tied as he was, tell his character, and sell him for whatever he would command at auction. I gave it as my opinion that this would not do; for several of his negroes had been injured by indulgence, and that if some examples were not made I could not control them—that Gilbert was the most insolent slave he owned, and therefore the most fit subject for punishment. The General then remarked that I was correct, and told me to take him away from the house next morning and whip him moderately with small rods. Early next morning I started with Gilbert, tied, for a distant field, where the slaves were at work, and where I intended chastising him moderately, according to the directions of Gen. Jackson. In going to this field it was necessary for me to pass through a body of woodland. There was with myself and Gilbert a small boy about ten years old. Shortly after we entered the woods I directed the boy to climb a hornbean sapling near the small path we travelled, and break me a few switches, which he accordingly did. At this time, whilst the boy was breaking the switches, Gilbert, who was walking before me, came to an abrupt crook in the road around the end of a log—he passed around, I followed at the distance of about four or five yards behind; when he had passed the end of the log he came facing me upon the opposite side, having disengaged one of his arms from the rope, both of which had been tied but loosely before him around the wrists, without being confined to his body—he made a sudden spring, seized me by the breast with both hands and jerked me across the log—as I was rising he picked up a chunk of wood and struck me across the head, which felled me to the ground—he then jumped on me, and, as I have before stated, he was a very stout, heavy man, and being but small and not very strong, he proved an overmatch for me. Gilbert having the purchase with both hands, then commenced beating and choking me most violently, and would, I have no doubt, killed me had I not drawn my dirk and stabbed him. After making several thrusts with my dagger it was knocked from my hand from eight or twelve inches beyond the reach of either of us.—I called the boy who accompanied us to pick it up—Gilbert was extending his arm to grasp it, the boy however succeed. Gilbert then commanded the boy to hand it to him: being much wearied, and suffering by his violence, ordered the boy to plunge the dirk into him—the boy stabbed him in the fleshy part of his thigh. I then ordered him to stab him in the side—as the boy advanced Gilbert threw out one of his feet against him; the boy by the violence of the blow, was thrown off to a considerable distance and fell—Gilbert then swore he would kill the boy if he did not keep off. Gilbert was now laying with his whole weight across my breast. I extended one of my arms under his, rather around his body, and ordered the boy to place the handle of the dirk in my hand—he did so—I then gave Gilbert a stab in the hollow of the back, which caused him to change his position by placing one knee on each side of my waiste, when he again seized me by the throat with one hand and with the other endeavouring to take the dagger from me. I made several thrusts to stab him in the belly, but finding the dirk bent nearly double, I threw it as far from me as possible and made another effort to rise, but found I had not sufficient strength; I then drew up my feet for the purpose of kicking him from me—he caught me by the anchels and rose up with my feet in his hands, throwing the weight of my body on my neck, endeavouring to double me backwards. Whilst in this situation I drew from my pocket a small knife, and by a powerful exertion extricated one of my feet from his hold—he then let go the other and fell again with the weight of his body upon my breast, trying to take the knife out of my hand, which I kept out of his way until he came with his body upon mine—I then threw my arm around his neck and tried to cut the great artery; and without touching it, did cut a deep gash in the back and side of his neck. He then got up, stepped off about two paces, turned with his face towards me, stood erect extended his arms, with clenched hands and distorted features, (whilst I arose and sustained myself with much difficulty,) with his eyes steadfastly fixed, he gave me the most horrible look for about five or six minutes—then walked about ten or fifteen steps, trotted at a rapid pace about thirty yards more, again walked slowly in the direction of a thicket in the grove for a few more paces, then stopped suddenly and changed his course towards the Hermitage, & after going that direction about ten steps, in a slow walk stopped and lay down. I had by this time sufficient strength to walk, and went where Gilbert lay; when with the same rope, which was still swagging to one of Gilbert's hands, I put his other through the running noose that had confined it previously, and drew his hands together as they had been tied before. Soon after this was done the negroes from the field come, having been informed by the little boy, who had become alarmed at the struggle, and in the mean time run to the field for assistance. I then despatched a servant for Gen. Jackson and returned to the place of combat to pick up my dirk and a few articles which had fallen from my pocket during the struggle. Whilst here the General came up and enquired what was the matter—being informed in as few words as possible, he asked me to send for a physician; I told him from appearances I apprehended it would be unnecessary, as I thought no physician could save him—the General said, "whilst life remains there is hope;" and ordered that Dr. M'Corkle should be sent for immediately. Gilbert was then carried to the General's house, where Mr. M'Corkle arrived in a short time, but was unable with all his exertions to relieve or save him. For the few hours that Gilbert survived the wounds he sullenly refused to say to his master or myself any thing in relation to the fatal rencounter, although frequently enquired of by Gen. Jackson, and requested to relate the circumstances. Gilbert talked freely when spoken to on any other subject whilst he lived. After hearing all the testimony, and seeing the wounds and bruises that had been inflicted upon me by Gilbert, I was justified by the Coroner's inquest which sat on the occasion. The next day after this acquittal I was discharged by Gen. Jackson from his employ. Gen. Jackson subsequently had me prosecuted for the murder of his servant Gilbert, of which I was acquitted by the Grand Jury of Davidson Circuit Court, thereby liberated from the custody of a Sheriff.

IRA WALTON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me a justice of the peace for the county of Williamson, this 8th day of August, 1828.

WM. SMITH, J. P.

There were no legal witnesses present at the rencounter; but Walton stated to me—to Maj. Francis B. Ogden, of New Jersey, and Mr. Samuel Hays, on the aforesaid 29th of August, the day after the affair happened, the circumstances substantially the same as contained in his affidavit above. Maj. Ogden and Mr. Hays were witnesses before the jury of inquest hereinafter mentioned. This statement of Walton's was strongly confirmed by bruises and other evidences of great violence exhibited by his person; and the account of Joe, the small boy, corresponded with the foregoing statement. He was a very smart and intelligent boy, who was taken aside by the jury, as had been previously done by Gen. Jackson, and carefully examined about the whole. The jury confided in the statement of Walton, because it was uniformly the same, and strictly corroborated by the statement of the boy Joe. Walton's person afforded just such evidence as might be expected from his statement, and the surrounding objects, such as the path, the Horn Bean tree the switches, and the ground itself furnish striking evidence of a long, continued and severe struggle. Under these circumstances the jury rendered the verdict already mentioned.

After the jurors and other neighbours had gone home, Gen. Jackson asked me to walk with him to the place where the unfortunate affair took place. During our walk he remarked to me that the jury was composed of men of first rate character and intelligence; that they had investigated the affair with great care and circumspection; that he did not find any fault with their decision; that it was probably right—that he had no doubt but that many of Walton's statements were true, and that if Walton gave him the fatal stab during the scuffle in the path, it was a strong case of justifiable homicide; but that he had entertained some doubts of the correctness of some parts of Walton's account of the affair. About this time we arrived at the spot where the main scuffle took place; he said "I will explain to you my views of this matter: After Walton had sent the boy to break the switches from the Hornbean, instead of keeping his eyes upon Gilbert, was looking at the boy upon the tree, and directing him about switches; that Gilbert, who was a man of strong sense and of determined character, the manner he turned the corner of that log, he discovered Walton's attention withdrawn from him to the boy Joe, and at the same time he became roused by seeing the instrument of correction breaking from the tree; in an instant seized the opportunity of recking his vengeance, or making his escape, and Walton was jerked down across the log almost as quick as thought." He further stated that he was not satisfied that Gilbert's hands were untied during any part of the scuffle; that if his hands had been untied, and his object had been vengeance, that such was the disproportion of bodily strength, that after having jerked Walton down under him, he would have killed him, and Walton could not have used upon him either a dirk or any other weapon: that if his object had been an escape, that he would then have moved off with impunity. He further stated, that Gilbert was tied when he came to him exactly as he was the preceding evening, and that Gilbert with his hands tied before him with the advantage of having Walton down, would be able to kill him, provided there was no weapon used by either party. That in addition to all this, he doubted whether there was time for all the things that had been stated; that the mortal wound was in the back, and that he did not think that a small, feeble, short-armed man like Walton being underneath Gilbert, could reach over his back and stab with sufficient force to penetrate into the lungs; that he could not help thinking but when Gilbert was stuck badly he disengaged himself from Walton and run; and that Walton pursued, and as he ran overtook him and gave him the fatal stab where he then lay; but that these things were matter of conjecture, and that he might be mistaken; he stated that Walton was an honest man, and he had found him to be a man of industry and truth; but that he could not help doubting whether it might not be a case of manslaughter by strict law, and wished me to think of the matter. His suggestions struck me with great force, and I promised to consider further of the matter.

Upon the next day Gen. Jackson addressed me a letter, of which the following is a copy:

Hermitage, August 30, 1827.

Sir—You have been already apprised of the unfortunate affair which took place on my farm on the day before yesterday, in relation to the death of Gilbert, who was slain by Ira Walton, my overseer.

"You have also been apprised that a jury of inquest has been held over his dead body, by the Coroner of the county; and that the jury reported that Walton killed him "in his own defence." I communicated to you yesterday, all the facts relative to that unfortunate event. I wish to know of you, from the statement of the facts I have detailed, whether you think, from a consideration of them, there has been such a violation of the laws as requires a further prosecution of the matter.

"I have discharged Mr. Walton from my service; he remained here until released by the finding of the jury, since which he has been going at large. If you should be of opinion, from the consideration of the case, that he should be held to answer at the next circuit court, let me know as soon as your convenience will permit. I have no wish to prosecute Mr. Walton should you think justice does not demand it; but being the guardian of my slave, it is my duty to prosecute the case so far as justice to him may require it; therefore, submit the matter to your consideration, as attorney prosecuting for the government for your advice on the premises.

I am very respectfully,
Your most obedient servant,
ANDREW JACKSON.

Andrew Hays, Esq. Attorney General, Nashville Tenn."

To which I returned the following answer:

Nashville, Aug. 31, 1827.

Dear Sir—I have received yours of the 30th inst. and have given that attention to the matters therein contained, which their importance require. You are fully aware that the finding of the jury, commanded by the coroner, is no bar to the further prosecution of the offence; the finding is a prima facie evidence of the innocence of Mr. Walton. But my opinion is, from the full consideration of the evidence, that there exists a considerable doubt as to the absolute necessity of killing the slave Gilbert, at the time that he received the mortal blow. Although he behaved very much amiss, it would seem to me that the distance of the place where he was found, from the place where the scuffle took place, as well as from the place of the wound in Gilbert's back, afford a strong presumption that he was stabbed in the back whilst running, and not in the first scuffle; and although other circumstances, which induce me to think that it is not a case of justifiable homicide, is, that his hands were tied; and I do not believe they ever were untied.—The rule of the law is, that if the homicide is ever brought home to a delinquent, the onus probandi of the circumstances of excuse or justification, are imposed upon him. Without an expression of any positive opinion of his guilt of innocence, (which would be improper in me at present) I have no hesitation in saying, that I think that public justice, as well as your duty as a master and guardian of your slave, require that you should have Mr. Walton before the circuit court to answer a bill of indictment for the death of Gilbert. Yours, &c.

Very Respectfully,
ANDREW HAYS.

General Andrew Jackson, Hermitage.

In pursuance of the direction contained in my answer, Gen. Jackson caused Walton to be again arrested, and he was bound over to appear at the November term of the circuit court of Davidson County, at which term of the said court, I prepared an indictment for murder, and sent it with the witnesses before the Grand Jury—Gen. Jackson being the prosecutor marked upon the back of the bill.—After the Jury had heard the evidence and before they had acted finally upon the bill, I went to their room and instructed them, that if they should be of opinion that it was a case of murder to find it to be a true Bill; but that if they should be of opinion that the offence was manslaughter, I would make the necessary alterations in the bill to describe that offence, but that if they thought it a case of excusable homicide, to say "not a true bill." I was very particular and careful to draw the example to the Grand Jury, the distinction and difference in law between manslaughter and justifiable homicide in self defence; and after considering of the case two days, the Grand Jury brought into court the bill of indictment, endorsed by the foreman, "Not a true Bill," and the prisoner was then discharged from further prosecution.

ANDREW HAYS Attorney Gen'l for the 7th Solicitorial District of Tennessee.

To the Editors of the Nashville Republican & State Gazette.

POLITICAL TREES.

Many of the supporters of Gen. Jackson for the Presidency, have devoted the hickory tree to him; and others, the friends of the administration have in like manner selected the oak as typical of Mr. Adams; and we may expect that, at many places of voting, these trees, torn from the forest, will be planted in the ground, as rallying points for the adverse parties.—[Bunker Hill Aurora.]

It is said that the Adams men have selected the oak as typical of Mr. Adams, in allusion to the restoration of Charles the second of England, who eluded the vigilance of his republican pursuers by concealing himself in an oak tree.

In the old English primer is the following couplet—

The Royal Oak it was the tree
That saved his royal Majesty.

The Adams men could not have made a more happy and appropriate selection.

Boston Statesman.

NEUTRALS.

To such of our fellow citizens as are looking coolly at the conflict now going on, we say, if you approve the doctrine of safe precedents, and wish the President to elect his successor, and the people have no voice in the matter; if you believe that the President has a proscriptive right to a re-election; if you believe that our present Chief Magistrate was fairly elected, by a majority of the people; if you believe that he has any authority for squandering the public money in electioneering for himself and his minions; if you believe that his administration has been strictly economical,—vote for John Quincy Adams. But, on the other hand, if you are satisfied that his elevation to the office he now holds was the result of bargain, intrigue and management; that he has used the treasures of the public chest unlawfully; that his administration has been characterized by folly and extravagance; that he has stooped to the lowest extreme of meanness and hypocrisy, by meddling with local excitements for political purposes—then give your vote to the man of the people's free, unbiassed choice. Such a one you will find in Andrew Jackson, the Hero, Patriot and Statesman.

BETS! BETS!!

The following bets are, and have been for some time, offered in Pennsylvania.—They have been published throughout the Union, but no offer has been made to take them up.

Chester County, Aug. 7, 1828.

Messrs. P. Hay & Co.—It would seem that the Adams men, since their late frolic at the Valley Forge, consisting of citizens from 6 counties, besides many from your city, [Philadelphia] are apparently more extravagant if possible in their calculations as to the presidential election, than they were prior to their frolic.

Now, in order to test the sincerity of those brawling gentry, I wish you would publish the following, and hold yourselves responsible to carry them into effect. I will be in your city on Monday the 12th inst. prepared to deposite the amount in the State Bank at Camden, viz.

50 dollars that the Jackson electoral ticket will have a majority in Pennsylvania.

50 dollars that the Jackson electoral ticket will have a majority of 5000;
50 dollars do 10,000;
50 dollars do 15,000;
50 dollars do 20,000;
50 dollars do 25,000;
50 dollars do 30,000;

50 dollars that I will name 3 counties which will give the Jackson electoral ticket a greater majority than the Adams electoral ticket will receive in all the counties in which it may have majorities.

50 dollars that Adams will not be re-elected, if he should even get the vote of Kentucky and Louisiana.

50 dollars that Jackson will get 18 votes in New York.

50 dollars that Adams will not get 51 votes in New England.

50 dollars that Jackson will get the vote of Ohio.

50 dollars that the city of Philadelphia will give a majority for the Jackson electoral ticket, and 500 dollars that J. Q. Adams will not be re-elected President of the United States, at the ensuing election.

A Democrat of '98.

Superintendent of Primary Schools.

[From the Village Herald of July, 1827.]

"This being an appointment unknown to "the Constitution, WITHOUT SALARY, "and NOT CONNECTED with the POS- "SESSION of the SCHOOL-MONEY, it "cannot be CALLED an OFFICE of "PROFIT "or TRUST," nor interpose a disability to "my further services as your delegate. "LITTLETON D. TEACKLE."

Maryland Legislature.

House of Delegates, Dec. Sess. 1827.

Resolved, by the General Assembly of Maryland, that the Treasurer of the Western Shore, be and he is hereby authorized and required, to pay to Littleton Dennis Teackle, or his order, $500.00, in full compensation, for his services and expenditures as Superintendent of Public Instruction.

[See Journal of Proceedings of House of Del. December Sess. 1827, page 518.

ELECTION.

Notice is hereby given, That an Election will be held in the several election Districts of Somerset county, on Monday the 6th day of next October, for the purpose of choosing Four Delegates to represent the county in the next General Assembly of Maryland.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Sept 16, 1828. tem

MR. JEFFERSON'S OPINION OF ANDREW JACKSON.

☞He [Mr. Jefferson] thought "that it was FORTUNATE for the country that Gen. Jackson was likely to be fit for public life four years after; for in HIM seemed to be the ONLY hope left of avoiding the dangers manifestly about to arise out of the broad construction now again given to the Constitution of the United States, which effaced all limitations of powers, and left the General Government, by theory altogether unrestrained." Mr. Jefferson often said, that he [Jackson] was an HONEST, SINCERE, FIRM, CLEAR-HEADED and STRONG-MINDED man, of the SOUNDEST POLITICAL PRINCIPLES, which he knew well, from having observed his conduct whilst a Senator of the United States, when he was Vice-President himself. ☞He had no doubt, that if Gen. Jackson should be brought into office, to correct the alarming tendency towards formidable and otherwise irremidable evils, beginning to develope themselves in the administration of the General Government, he would be entirely faithful to that object.

[Gov. Randolph's Letter.

☞NOTICE.☜

ON WEDNESDAY the 22*nd of next OCTOBER, will be offered at PUBLICK SALE,* at the Storehouse occupied by Nathaniel Slawson, in the town of VIENNA, if not sold before at private sale,

An elegant assortment of DRY GOODS, with a suitable supply of GROCERIES,

laid in on the best terms, and adapted to the season. Any person wishing to purchase at private sale, may be accommodated by applying to Dr. C. Stanford. Terms of sale will be made known on the day of sale.

NATHANIEL SLAWSON.

Vienna, Sept. 23, 1828.

SEPTEMBER 16TH, 1828.

In the Levy Court of Somerset C'y.

ORDERED, that JAMES MARSHALL, the keeper of the Standards of Weights and Measures, attend at the several places following for the purpose of fulfilling the duties of his appointment, viz:

13th & 14th Oct.	at	Princess-Anne
15th	do	Upper Trapp & Forktown
16th & 17th	do	Salisbury
20th	do	Barren Creek Springs
21st	do	Sharptown
22nd	do	Bacon Quarter
24th & 25th	do	Quantico
27th & 28th	do	George Collins' Store
29th	do	Moreton's Store on Nanticoke
30th & 31st	do	White-Haven
1st November	at	Levin Leatherbury's store
3d	do	Newman's store
4th	do	Ford's store
6th	do	Done's store on Back cr'k.
7th	do	Jamestown
11th	do	Stevens' Ferry
12th	do	Rehoboth
13th & 14th	do	Roach's store.

Per order,
GEO. HANDY, Clk.

Sept. 23 mil

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Col. George Handy for the real estate of Robert Sasser, against George Jones and Robert Jones, executors of Charles Jones, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—all Charles Jones' right and title to a house and lot in the town of Princess-Anne, No. 29, occupied by the Rev. William Quinn which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 14th of October at the court house door in Princess-Anne, to the highest and best bidder, for cash. Sale to take place between 12 and 3 o'clock P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Sept. 23 mil

SPLENDID VIEWS OF AMERICAN SCENERY.

On FRIDAY, the 10th of OCTOBER, 1828, will be published by T. K. GREENBANK, No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia, a volume of splendid views of American Scenery as follows—

1—A view of Beck's Shot Tower, on the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia, and adjacent scenery;
2—A view of the Light House in Long Island Sound, with the adjacent scenery;
3—A view of York on Lake Ontario, with the fortifications;
4—Characteristic Scenery on the Hudson River;
5—View of New London, Connecticut, with the adjacent scenery;
6—View of Lemon Hill, near Philadelphia, the seat of Henry Pratt, Esq.
7—The tomb of Washington, at Mount Vernon.
8—View at the Great Bend of the Susquehanna.
9—View of the Upper Falls of Solomon's Creek, Luzerne county, Pa.
10—View of the Lower Falls of Solomon's Creek.
11—View of the Cattskill Mountains, from the Hudson.
12—View of Fort Niagara, on Lake Ontario, from the Light House on the British side.

These Views are executed in the best style of Philadelphia engraving, from drawings made upon spot. Each plate will be accompanied by a full and accurate description thereof, so as to make it perfectly intelligible to every person.

The work will be printed and issued to subscribers in the first style, on superior paper, and with a handsomely printed cover, and delivered to subscribers at the very low price of One Dollar per copy. Flexible covers will be used for country subscribers, so that they can be safely sent by mail.

☞Any gentleman, postmasters and others who will interest themselves to procure ten subscribers and remit $10 to the Editor, shall receive twelve copies. From the very flattering patronage already received (1200 subscribers having put down their names) this volume will probably be succeeded by another, as soon as other plates can be engraved. All orders from the country will be promptly attended to.

Address, T. K. GREENBANK,
No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia.

Sept. 16 mm

POETRY.

THE ENFRANCHISED.

Thou has burst from thy prison,
 Bright child of the air,
Like a spirit just risen
 From its mansion of care.

Thou art joyously winging
 Thy first ardent flight,
Where the gay lark is singing
 Her notes of delight;

Where the sunbeams are throwing
 Their glories on thine,
Till thy colours are glowing
 With tints more divine.

Then tasting new pleasure
 In summer's green bowers,
Reposing at leisure
 On fresh open flowers.

Or delighted to hover
 Around them to see
Whose charms, airy rover!
 Blow sweetest from thee;

And fondly exhaling
 Their fragrance, till day
From thy bright eye is falling
 And fading away.

Then seeking some blossom
 That looks to the west,
Thou dost find in its bosom
 Sweet shelter and rest;

And there dost betake thee
 Till the darkness is o'er,
And the sunbeams awake thee
 To pleasure once more.

[COMMUNICATED.]

Answer to the Puzzle in our last paper.

Take E and I first, that arrangement is clear,
 Then let V or five thus intervene—EVI
Let D stand in front and L bring up the rear,
 And, we find 'tis the DEVIL you mean.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞ Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞ Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞ Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞ All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; pound, half and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking; patent and common Taps; lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets,

Baltimore, 9th mo 16th.

In Somerset County Court,

MAY TERM, 1828

James Wilson v. Arnold E. Waters.

ORDERED, by the court, that the sale of the real estate of Arnold E. Waters, as made and reported by James Wilson, Trustee for the sale of said real estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shewn by the second day of the next term of this court; provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess-Anne once a week for three successive weeks before the said day. The Trustee reports the amount of sales to be $3400.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.

A true copy. TEST.
GEO. HANDY, Clk.

Sept 16 mm

PUBLIC SALE.

IN pursuance of an order of Somerset county court, passed at May Term, 1828, the undersigned or a majority of them, will sell on the premises, in said county, on FRIDAY the 10th of next OCTOBER, at ten o'clock A. M. on a credit of twelve months—

All the REAL ESTATE of

LEVIN RUSSEL,

Late of said county, deceased, which was lately valued by the undersigned. The purchaser or purchasers, to enter into bond with approved security to the heirs of said Russel for their respective proportions.

TUBMAN BEDSWORTH,
ZACCHEUS LLOYD,
BEACHAM ACKWORTH,
JAMES BOUNDS,
WILLIAM TWILLEY.
Commissioners.

Sept. 16

FOR SALE, and on a moderate Credit,

A good second-hand Ogle GIG. For further information apply at the office of the Village Herald.

Sept. 2, 1828. mw

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset County Court and to me directed, at the suit of John J. Davis use of James H. Handy against Mitchell Alphy, and John S. Evans, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: Fifty acres of land, more or less, known by the name of Acworth's Delight, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 23d of September next, at the Court-House door, in Princess-Anne, to the highest and best bidder, for cash. Sale to take place between 12 and 3 o'clock P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Sept. 2, 1828. tj

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas, issued out of Somerset county court, and to me directed, to wit: Edme Ducatel vs. Levin W. Ballard, Severn Teackle vs. Levin W. Ballard and James Wilson adm. of George J. Jones use of James Wilson vs. Levin W. Ballard will be sold the following property, to wit: one horse and gig, two head of other horses, four beds and furniture, 10 head of cattle, three yoke of oxen, and all the said Levin's right, title, interest and estate in and to part of a tract of land called Dashiell's Lot, containing 332 acres, more or less, which property has been heretofore levied on by me under writs of Fieri Facias, and which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 23d of September, inst. at the Court-House door, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. for cash, to the best bidder, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

Sept. 2 mw

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, to wit: George Handy administrator of Wm. Fleming, use of James Wilson against Levin Ballard, sen. Severn Teackle use of James Wilson against Levin Ballard, sen. and James Wilson adm. of George J. Jones use of James Wilson against Levin Ballard, sen. will be sold the following property, to wit: a tract or parcel of land called "Moore & Casset," containing 130 acres, more or less; one other tract or part of a tract called 'Brothers Agreement,' 80 acres, more or less; one negro woman Leah and children, and one boy Spencer, one boy Nathan, one ditto Isaac, one ditto Nathan, which property has heretofore been levied on by me under writs of fieri facias, and which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 23d of September, inst. at the court-house door, between the hours of 12 and 2 to the best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

Sept. 2, 1828. mw

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Thomas Jones of Thomas use of Samuel Polk, use of Dr. James Wilson, vs. Levin Ballard, sen. I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: One tract of Land called Moore & Cassett, 130 acres, one negro man called Peter, one do. Toby, one do. Joshua, one do Littleton, the goods and chattels lands and tenements of the said Levin, which I shall proceed to sell at the court-house door in Princess Anne, on the 23d inst. between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above named writ.

GEO. DASHIELL, late Shff.

Sept. 2. fm

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Josiah Gibbons vs. Levin Ballard, sen. I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one tract or part of a tract of land called Moore & Cassett, containing 130 acres, more or less, negroes Isaac, Mingo, Isaac Junior, Dover, John, Joe, George, Hezekiah, Theodore, John, Esther, Martha, Letty, Matilda, and Bridget, the goods and chattels lands and tenements of said Levin, which I shall proceed to sell at the court-house door, in Princess-Anne, on the 23d inst. between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above writ.

GEO. DASHIELL, late Shff.

September 2. fm

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of William Williams, Esq against Jesse Walter, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all that part of a tract of land called Lebanon, part of a tract of land called Venables' Pretention, part of a tract called Troublesome, containing 249 acres, more or less, 1 black mare, 1 old gig, 4 yoke of oxen, 4 milch cows, 7 head of cattle, 18 head of sheep, 28 head of hogs, 6 beds and furniture, 2 timber carts, 2 wain do., 1 set black smith's tools, household and kitchen furniture; also, by virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias, issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Levin Wilson, against Jesse Walter I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: 1 negro man named Joshua, 1 lot of lumber & boards containing 50,000, more or less, sundry farming utensils, as the property of said Walter, which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 23d of inst. between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. at the court-house door, in Princess Anne, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff

Sept. 2.

Notice to Creditors.

THE creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause, if any they have, why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

McKIMMEY PORTER.

Salisbury, Aug. 19 mm

PUBLIC VENDUE.

I will offer for sale, on Monday the 29th of this month, at my late residence, on Wicomico Creek, the following property, to wit: HORSES, HOGS, OXEN, and COWS, and other CATTLE, together with the Implements of Husbandry belonging to the farm. Terms of Sale—A credit of 6 months on all sums of $5, and over, the purchasers giving note with approved security, bearing interest from the day of sale. For all sums under five dollars the cash will be required. Sale to commence at 10 o'clock A. M.

LEVIN W. BALLARD.

Sept. 9, 1828 mfl

For Rent,

For the ensuing year, a House and Lot in the village of White-Haven, at present occupied by Edward U. Blake. For terms apply to.

MARCELLUS JONES.

Sept. 9, 1828.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, Isaac Dickerson use of George Jones and Robert Jones, Executors of Charles Jones against George Crockett and George Matthews, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—1 yoke of oxen, part of a tract of land called Stave-Yard, containing 45 acres, more or less; part of a tract half marsh, name not known, containing 126 acres, more or less; which property has been heretofore levied on by me under writs of Fieri Facias, and which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 30th inst. at the Court House door, at the hour of 1 o'clock P. M. for cash, to the best bidder to satisfy the above mentioned writs and county levy and officers' fees for the years 1825, 1826 and 1827.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

Sept 16 mm

BATTALION ORDERS.

Sept. 2, 1828.

IN obedience to Regimental orders the commanding Officers of Companies attached to the Second Battalion of 25th Regiment M. M will cause the companies under their respective commands to meet at the regimental parade ground, on FRIDAY the 26th of September, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. as the line of review and inspection will be formed at 11. The commander of this patriotic corps confidently expects that the companies attached thereto will give, upon this occasion, a general attendance, and that the officers will appear in full uniform.

ANTHONY B. BENNETT, Maj.
2nd Bat. 25th Reg. M. M.

Sept. 2. wm

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages

THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The publics obt. servant.

WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.

Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

BARREN CREEK SPRINGS.

THE SUBSCRIBER

Begs leave to inform his friends & the public,

That his HOUSE is now open

FOR THE RECEPTION OF VISITERS.

An anxious solicitude to promote the comfort of those who are in pursuit of health, pleasure, or business, has induced him to make such arrangements as will enable him to give ample satisfaction to those who may favour him with their company. By those who have visited the Springs, during the present season, the waters have been pronounced more powerful in their effects than hitherto experienced—operating in most cases, as a purgative medicine; Those desirable effects, in conjunction with its chalybeate properties, which are acknowledged to be unsurpassed by any waters in the world, present a powerful inducement to such as are already assailed by disease, and to those who are desirous to avoid the bilious diseases of the climate.

Persons who are inclined to try the efficacy of the waters may rest assured that every accommodation shall be provided to render them happy and comfortable; and the charges shall be apportioned to the pressure of the times.

The public's humble servant,

CHARLES LEARY.

N. B. Travellers, generally, particularly the passengers of the steam boat Maryland, will find this an easy and commodious stage, after the arrival of the boat at Cambridge, (being only four miles distant from Vienna.) Here they will be certain to meet with the purest and best Waters of the peninsula, and a Table supplied with the best accommodations the country can afford—on the most reasonable conditions

July 29. nilm

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. HALL,)

Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk-Maker,

No. 127 Market Street, (near the new City Hotel,) BALTIMORE,

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public, that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old established stand for many years occupied by Messrs. William & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a

Large and General Assortment of

Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks, Veleices, Saddlebags, Collars, Military Equipments, &c.

of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail, on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this or any other city.

August 19th, 1828. 1*

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street. BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. wm

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.

Somerset County Orphans Court.

Aug. 26th, 1828.

ON application of SEVERN MISTER, Ex'r of RICHARD EVANS, late of Somerset County, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased, and that the same be published once in each week for three successive weeks in one of the papers printed at Princess Anne.

True copy, Test.
JAMES POLK, Register of Wills for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above Order

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of Somerset county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of RICHARD EVANS, late of said county, deceased.—All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 29th of March next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 26th of Aug., 1828.

SEVERN MISTER,
Ex'r of R. Evans, dec'd.

Sept. 2, 1828. k

NOTICE.

ALL persons indebted to the estate of Richard Evans, deceased, by bond, note or open account, are hereby requested to make payment to the subscriber on or before the 15th day of October next, otherwise he will be obliged to pursue a legal course to compel the same.

SEVERN MISTER, Ex'r. of
R. Evans, dec'd.

Sept. 2, 1828. ull

Constable's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by Burton Cannon, a justice of the peace in and for Somerset county, at the suit of Francis A. Boyer, use of Joseph Richards, use of Levin Wilson, use of Littleton U. Dennis vs. William King of Wm. I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—two yoke of oxen, and all the right, title and interest of said King, in and to a lot of ground near Punching-Landing, Somerset county—which I shall proceed to sell, on the premises, on Wednesday the 8th of next October, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above named writ.

JOSEPH RICHARDS.

Sept. 16 mm

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court, and to me directed, Thomas Goddard against Elijah Culver, I have seized the following property, to wit—All the said Elijah's right, title, interest and estate in and to part of a tract of land called Marris's Lot, containing 140 acres more or less, which property has heretofore been levied on by me, under a writ of Fieri Facias, and which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 30th inst at the Court House door, at the hour of 1 o'clock P. M. for cash, to the highest and best bidder, to satisfy the above mentioned writ and county levy and officers' fees for the years 1825, 1826 and 1827.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

Sept. 16 mm

FOR RENT,

For the ensuing year, that FARM which was formerly the property of William Tilghman, dec'd. situated on the head of Back Creek. For terms apply to JAMES STEWART

July 22, 1828. kw

☞ NOTICE.

A PLANTER who desires to procure some SLAVES for his own service, will give the best prices in cash, for a few of both sexes, between the ages of 12 and 25 years. Those who have such to dispose of will please apply at Col. Dashiell's Tavern, immediately

Princess-Anne, August 4.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess-Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.

August 5. jfi

FOR SALE.

THE subscriber wishes to dispose of small FARM with all of its improvements, situated on Deal's Island, the place where Keziah Jones, dec'd. formerly resided. The terms of sale may be ascertained by applying to Mr. William Wallace, who resides on said Island. If not sold at private sale before Wednesday the 5th day of November, it will on that day be offered at Public Sale, to the highest and best bidder. The terms will be made known on the day of sale.

MARCELLUS JONES.

Sept. 9, 1828.

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess-Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

EBENEZER ANDERSON.

August 19 ww

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phœbus.

For terms apply to JAMES POLK.

June 3, 1828. wk

NOTICE.

THE subscriber being extremely desirous of closing his business, once more gives notice to those indebted to him, that unless their accounts are settled in the course of the present month, he will be compelled to adopt a legal process without respect to persons.

SEVERN TEACKLE.

Princess-Anne, Sept. 2

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following.—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. which in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for, and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER.
Princess-Anne, Md

Nov. 20, 1827.

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
C. A. S. A's before supersedeas,
Do. do after supersedeas.
WARRANTS.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks, PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed on moderate terms,

At the Office of the Village Herald

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., SEPTEMBER 30, 1828. NO. 27.

☞ PRINCESS-ANNE CAUCUS, &c.

The following is a notification to —— ——* Esq. from the Chairman of the Princess-Anne Caucus, that he had been appointed one of the Committee of Vigilance for Tyaskin & Nanticoke District. It is very much in the form and style of a regular commission issued by the Governor and Council to civil or military officers. Thus we see the Adams men are not willing to trust their candidates to the People, but have determined to forestall public opinion. A few wealthy aristocratic men met in Princess-Anne, on Tuesday the 9th of September, and actually appointed OVERSEERS, or a committee of vigilance, which is the same thing, in every district in the county, to oversee the Elections. The meaning of "Vigilance," is, to Watch. These Overseers, then, are to WATCH, and see that the People Vote for the Princess-Anne Caucus Candidates. If this is the way Elections are to be governed,—if a few wealthy Aristocrats are to meet in Princess-Anne, and dictate to the County, Elections had as well be abolished. It is unfortunate for the Caucus, however, that some of the men who were appointed are not of the Royal Family, but real Friends of civil Liberty, and have declined acting under commissions issued from such a source, among whom is the worthy gentleman to whom the following commission, and accompanying proceedings, were sent. No one can doubt for a moment that the proceedings of this Caucus are repugnant to Republican principles, and nothing can be more humiliating to a Freeman, than the idea of having the dear and inestimable Right of Suffrage trampled upon, in this high handed way.

The principle of the Adams party, in using COERCIVE MEASURES at the ensuing Election, is also fully exposed in the circular, printed on this sheet, from Wm. Chambers, chairman of the Adams Caucus in Queen Anne's. Taking the proceedings of these two Caucuses together, it can leave no doubt on the mind of a candid man, that there is a regular design, by the Adams party in the State, to OVERAWE the Elections.

A VOTER.

* We omit the name out of respect to the gentleman to whom the commission was directed and sent.

[THE FOLLOWING IS A COPY OF THE COMMISSION.]

PRINCESS-ANNE, September 9, 1828.

TO Esquire,

BE IT KNOWN, That, reposing especial confidence in your prudence and patriotism, you have been appointed a member of the COMMITTEE OF VIGILANCE for the district; and you are respectfully requested to EXERT YOUR BEST ENDEAVOURS, and all your honourable influence, in support of the cause of Civil Liberty and Social Order; and more especially for effectuating the object contemplated by the accompanying proceedings.

Given under my hand the day and year above written.

By order. LEVIN POLLITT, chairman.

Test, GEO. L. AYRES, Secretary.

[HERE FOLLOW THE PROCEEDINGS.]

At a meeting of sundry voters of Somerset county, convened at the house of Col. George Dashiell, from each of the several election districts, the following proceedings were unanimously adopted.

Whereas the Jackson party in this state, have, in their late circular, avowed their determination to elect delegates hostile to the present administration, and to take the state into their own holy keeping: therefore, resolved, that it be recommended to the friends of administration in this county, that, since nothing is left to them but to resist this party (who, though a minority in the state, have yet avowed their plan of action, at the next October election, to be one of exclusion) they use all fair means to counteract their opponents, and to sustain the cause of the administration, by preventing the state government from falling into hostile hands.

Resolved, that, inasmuch as the loss of the October election, in our county, might secure the ascendency of the Jackson party in the state government, the administration men in the county ought to take the most efficient means of co-operation, in trying to elect administration delegates to the next legislature.

Resolved that the following gentlemen be appointed committees of vigilance in their respective districts, that is to say, for BARREN CREEK, Levin Evans, Robert Venables, jr. Jesse Walter, William Philips, Shiles Crocket,* Job Allen, John Lowe, Samuel Gordon, Charles Venables, Levin Crocket, James T. Bennitt, Henry Kennerly, Thomas Bird. For WILLIAMS TOWN, Caleb Kennerly, Joshua Hitch, Robert Dashiell, Elijah C. Johnson, Samuel Williams, Elijah Christopher, Peter Bell,* Joshua Humphreys, William Evans, Joseph Humphreys, William Hopkins, George Hopkins of Wm. For WEETIPQUIN, John D. Adams, George L. Ayres, Elias Robertson, Samuel White, Thos. J. Ayres, Levin Whinright, James Mc C. Fontaine, Joseph Adams, Wm. Moore. For the TRAPPE, Peter Collins, Lemuel Collins, Noah Rider, Henry Banks, Samuel T. Bounds, Andrew Adams, Thos D. Batham, Thomas Williams, John Fields, Alexander Hastings, John Whayland. For PRINCESS ANNE, Matthias Miles; William Miles, of S. Meshack Miles, Levin Bishop, George Parsons, Nehemiah Pollitt, Ware C. Pollitt, John Pollitt, David Barkley, Thomas Newman, Benjamin Simpson, Henry Riggin, Levin Pollitt, Alexander Jones, Littleton Harris, Elliott Kirwan, Adam Rencher, James Webster, Levin Leatherbury, Isaac Gibbons, John Leatherbury, John Fountain, John Robertson, Samuel Dryden, Samuel G. Holbrook. For DUBLIN, Levin Wilson, Littleton Sturgiss, Hancock Shreves, Marshall McDaniel, Peter McGee, Robert W. Swan, Thomas Atkinson. For DAMES QUARTER, Joshua Thomas, Travers Daniel,* William Wallace, Severn Mister, Gabriel Webster, Charles Wallace, Samuel Ford, John Kelly, Lambert W. Hyland, William Newman, Henry Newman, Robert Patterson, Isaac Newman. For BRINKLEY'S Henry Fountain, John S. Handy, James Lawson, Seth Wilkins, Joseph B. Brinkley, Thomas Marshall, Littleton D. Muddox, Thomas Sterling, John H. Cahoon, Edward Coulbourn, Henry S. Handy, William Miles of William, Henry Ward, Dickson Daugherty, Levi Daugherty, Obed Riggin, Henry Thomas, Isaac Taws, George Davy, Nehemiah Walston, Wm. H. Whittington, Josiah Johnson, William Dorsey, Capt. William Miles, Solomon Evans, Robert Cluff, John Tyler, (Smiths Island) James Smith, Nicholas Jones, Theophilus B. White, Isaac Riggin, John W. King M. D., Stephen Horsey.

Resolved, That each member of the committees of vigilance be presented with a printed notification of their appointment.

By order, LEVIN POLLITT, Chairman.
GEORGE L. AYRES, Secretary.

Princess Anne, Sept 9, 1828.

* These are Judges of elections.

Note.—Should any person doubt the genuineness of the foregoing commission and proceedings, he may see the original, with the signatures of the chairman and secretary, at the office of the Village Herald.—Ed. Herald.

☞ In the following Circular from the Queen Anne's Caucus the People may still farther acquaint themselves with the true character and principles of those who profess to be "friends of the Administration." What think ye, Freemen of Maryland? Has it indeed come to this—that you cannot be trusted to exercise the right of suffrage without being "kept in view," and Watched, by the Adams Overseers commissioned by the aristocratic wealthy Few, who assemble in caucuses to interfere with and prevent the free expression of the public will? Let the ballot boxes at the next Election teach these haughty Dictators that you are not yet so servile as they would have you be.

Dear Sirs, Centreville, July 19th, 1828.

You were appointed at a county meeting of the friends of the administration held in this town in May, eighteen hundred and twenty-seven; a Committee of Vigilance for your district, and being uncertain whether you have ever been informed of the appointment. We beg leave now to notify you of it, and at the same time to solicit your co-operation and unremitting exertions to the duties which will be required of you. It is probably not unknown to you that our opponents are daily making, privately as well as publicly, the most strenuous efforts, and unless we meet them in a correspondent manner, shewing an imposing front, and a bold determined courage, we may be defeated, although we believe that a great majority of the people of the county and electoral district are with us. The importance of securing the delegates to the assembly in October, is so obvious and known to possess so powerful a bearing on that which is to follow in November, that we think it unnecessary to dwell on that subject, we would however remark, that four gentlemen of undoubted abilities and unquestionable integrity have been selected by the general committee, for the promotion of whose election, the friends of the administration have pledged themselves to give their individual and united support.

It is proposed and will become a part of your duty to endeavour to discover the political sentiments of every voter in your district, to take down the names of all, designating for whom they intend to vote, the objections of those opposed to the re-election of Mr. ADAMS and the cause of those objections; on the other hand, you are to acquaint yourselves with the reasons of those who prefer Gen. JACKSON, and endeavor to put them right. The list of persons so made out, to which you will add all voters deemed doubtful, and to whom GREAT and POINTED attention must be paid, is to be given in to the chairman of your district committee, or to the secretary with whom each committee man is frequently to communicate during the canvass, whose duty it will be to report their communications personally, together with all other information to the Corresponding Committee at Centreville, every other Saturday in August. The chairman of the district committee, and the secretary must urge upon the several committee men, the necessity to see that all voters known to be favorable, and those who may be deemed DOUBTFUL, BE FURNISHED WITH THE MEANS OF CONVEYANCE, to the polls and when there KEPT IN VIEW by the persons who convey them UNTIL THEY HAVE VOTED; each committee man to be as active and industrious as possible on the day of election, a part of whom, the MOST POWERFUL, both in PERSONAL STRENGTH and COURAGE, not less than six, must be appointed to stand constantly at the polls for the purpose as well of defending the rights of our friends, as to object to illegal voters, many of whom, particularly young men, nearly of age, will no doubt be pushed forward.

The chairman and secretary ought immediately to add to your number of committee men, at least twenty, or more if necessary—taking them out of every neighborhood in the district; and also taking care to select as many young and active men as possible. We beg leave also to recommend to the chairman and secretary to have frequent and PRIVATE meetings, taking always such precautions that we may get completely and fully organised before those in opposition to us are AWARE OF WHAT WE ARE ABOUT. We cannot close this communication without urging it as of the UTMOST importance that this and all other matters connected with our arrangements should be kept ENTIRELY TO OURSELVES, at any rate until the ORGANIZATION of our PLANS is fully matured. When you get well under way, sub-committees would essentially, we think, aid our cause, they might then be formed for each neighborhood under the direction of the chairman and secretary of the district committee.

The Committee of Correspondence will give all the aid in their power in furnishing political papers and documents as they may be wanting. We beg leave also to impress on you the policy of a calm and temperate department towards those on whom you wish to make an impression, believing likewise that with those who are our determined adversaries, the same line of conduct is the preferable one to pursue. We feel assured that you fully appreciate the cause in which we are engaged, and consider it of such vital importance to the existence of our Republican Institutions, that your exertions will be used, and your ingenuity exercised to insure success.

We are with great esteem, very respectfully, your most obedient servants,

WILLIAM CHAMBERS, Chairman,
Committee of Correspondence.

☞ The editor of the Eastern Shore Whig has an original copy of the above circular which will be shown should any one question its genuineness—So also the editor of the Balt. Republican.

Bargains! Bargains!! Bargains!!!

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS'

FIRST BARGAIN

of recent date, was with HENRY CLAY for the votes of the Western members of Congress, when the last Presidential election devolved on that body. That Bargain has been PROVED upon him. Circumstances had left but little doubt of it before, but since the publication of Amos Kendall's Letter V. every shadow of doubt has disappeared, it is clear and indisputable. Indeed, neither Mr. Clay nor any of those editors who support him (and are supported by him) have even ventured to reply to this last letter of Mr. Kendall. How could they? The testimony is conclusive. Mr. Clay's own letter to Mr. Blair, which discloses the bargain, in this letter of Mr. Kendall, is brought up in testimony against him! Hence, the silence of Mr. Clay and his partisans about it. They have never even noticed that Mr. Kendall's Letter V. has been published. They cannot affect to treat this charge with contempt, because Mr. Clay himself has acknowledged its force, by the repeated powerful efforts which he has made to extricate himself from it. He has made various attempts to put it down—has bullied and swaggered, and written and spoken, and the evidences have multiplied upon him. Now, therefore, when it has assumed a shape so much more imposing than ever, it would be ridiculous for Mr. Clay to affect indifference. It, perhaps, may be prudent for him to be silent—seeing that he cannot falsify the charge now, without falsifying his own letter to Blair.

Mr. ADAMS' second bargain was with Daniel Webster for the votes of the Federal members of Congress. Of this BARGAIN we believe the public ask no further proof. It has been virtually admitted by Mr. Walsh and a miserable attempt made by him to justify it.

Mr. ADAMS' third BARGAIN, it seems, was with one OLIVER HEARTWELL, an anti-mason, of the state of New York.—Our readers are all aware that in some of the Western counties of New-York, there is, and has been for sometime, a great excitement and hostility against the society of Free Masons. This Oliver Heartwell writes to Mr. Adams, to ascertain from him whether he is a Mason or not, or, to use his own language, whether he has been "so unfortunate as to have joined that society," and plainly tells him if he has not, that "very much can and will be done in this [that] section of the state in your [his] behalf, UPON THAT GROUND." But we give an extract from his letter, as follows:

"I have reflected upon the propriety of writing you directly for some time past, and have finally concluded that it is undoubtedly my duty to make this inquiry. I conclude, you will most cheerfully give me an answer I am satisfied with your administration, and shall feel very cordially disposed to support your re-election, should I learn that you have never been contaminated with that useless trumpery, Masonry.

"You may be assured, that in case you have not been so unfortunate as to have joined that society, very much can and will be done in this section of the state in your behalf, upon that ground."

"Your Excellency's very humble serv't.
OLIVER HEARTWELL."

Mr. Adams snaps at the offer, and hastens to assure Heartwell that he is not, never was, and never SHALL be a Freemason.

He begs Oliver not to publish it, or rather, "not give publicity to this letter." As Oliver circulated manuscript copies of it and has been doing so ever since April last, we presume he understood Mr. Adams to mean "not to give publicity to this letter" in the newspapers, and we dare say Oliver rightly understood his "Excellency," for we doubt not that Adams was eager to reap the full benefit of this anti masonic excitement, and was afraid to offend the masons by letting them see this "and never SHALL be a Freemason." One of Oliver's copies however, got into the newspapers, which forced him "to give publicity" to the letter, and thus, the whole BARGAIN has been exposed.

It is useless to spend time in depicting this arch hypocrite John Q. Adams. He stands sufficiently exposed by the bare relation of these facts, and we publish the following answer to Heartwell's letter and leave Freemasons and every body else, to apply the proper terms to such disgraceful conduct.

Here is the answer:

Washington, 19th April, 1828.

Oliver Heartwell, Esq.
Canandaigua, N. Y.

SIR:—In answer to your inquiry, in your letter of the 31st ult. I state that I am not, never was, and never shall be, a Freemason.

I give you this answer in the spirit of friendly return to the kindness with which you have made the inquiry. But, unwilling to contribute, in any manner, to that excitement produced by the mysterious abduction, and too probable murder of Wm. Morgan, I request you not to give publicity to this letter. The deep and solemn feeling which pervades the community on this occasion, is founded in the purest principles of human virtue and of human rights. In the just and lawful pursuit of a signal vindication of the laws of nature and of the land, violated in his person, which has been undertaken and is yet in progress, with the authority and co-operation of your Legislature, I hope and trust that the fellow citizens of the sufferer will temper, with the spirit of justice, the reparation of her wrongs, with the infliction of every penalty, and ... abstain from visiting upon the innocent the misdeeds of the guilty. I am, with respect your fellow-citizen.

J. Q. ADAMS.
Baltimore Republican.

MR. JEFFERSON'S OPINION OF ANDREW JACKSON.

☞ He (Mr. Jefferson) thought "that it was FORTUNATE for the country that Gen. Jackson was likely to be fit for public life four years after; for to HIM seemed to be the ONLY hope left of avoiding the dangers manifestly about to arise out of the broad construction now again given to the Constitution of the United States, which effaced all limitations of powers, and left the General Government, by theory altogether unrestrained." Mr. Jefferson often said, that he (Jackson) was an HONEST, SINCERE, FIRM, CLEAR-HEADED and STRONG-MINDED man, of the SOUNDEST POLITICAL PRINCIPLES, which he knew well, from having observed his conduct whilst a Senator of the United States, when he was Vice President himself. ☞ He had no doubt, that if Gen. Jackson should be brought into office, to correct the alarming tendency towards formidable and otherwise irremediable evils, beginning to develope themselves in the administration of the General Government, he would be entirely faithful to that object.

[Gov. Randolph's Letter.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 30, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory." Jefferson.

"Whose services to this nation, entitle him to its HIGHEST REWARDS."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

We are authorized to announce

Thomas Bayly,
John C. Wilson, jr.,
Anthony B. Bennett, and
John J. Davis, Esq'rs.

as Candidates to represent Somerset county in the next House of Delegates of Maryland.

Candidates for Worcester County.

Stephen Roach,
Samuel R. Smith,
Francis A. Boyer,
Levin Hitch.

In our last we adverted to a glaring notice published in Teackle's Sewer of the 16th inst. and stated that we had taken means to ascertain some information respecting the handbill spoken of in the notice. The same is republished in that paper of the 23d, and, in order that our readers may have still farther evidence of the depravity of its author, we will here insert the impious notice, and then establish its falsity:

[FROM THE IRIS.]

☞BEWARE!! !☜

An imposing attempt to bolster the character of the MILITARY CHIEFTAIN in the shape of an insidious handbill signed JOHN ROBB, is in circulation—we shall endeavour to obtain a copy of this deceptive document, with a view to apply an antidote to its artful effusions of political poison in the mean time, WE WARN THE PUBLIC TO BEWARE.

We think it necessary to say that this advertisement is as similar to that of the Iris as our types could make it. Let the reader bear in mind, that it was ushered forth by the man who says, he speaks in the boldness of Truth!!!

In return to our enquiries concerning the genuineness of the document referred to in this unfounded production of the Master Spirit's brain, we received the following satisfactory letter, to which we annex the one therein alluded to. The Rev. Mr. Robb, of Baltimore, is a gentleman of high respectability, and of undoubted veracity. "It would be idle," says a friend of ours in a letter, "for me to testify to the character of Mr. Robb. Suffice it to say, any thing he says is believed here, [in Baltimore,] and may be relied on any where, for besides being a most respectable member of society he is a pious and much revered member of the Methodist Church." We would also add that a respectable administration man of this place, whose sentiments of the Rev. Mr. Robb accord with the above, has examined the original of the following letter, and, being acquainted with his hand writing, pronounced it genuine.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 23d, 1828.

John S. Zieber, Esq.

DEAR SIR—A gentleman of this city called on me, to know (in your name,) if I was the author of a letter bearing date the 28th of August, 1828, and addressed to a friend of truth and religion in Cecil county, and which I have since seen published in the Delaware Patriot, and U. S. Telegraph. I do, sir, avow myself to be the author of that letter; and also of another bearing date the 2nd of Sept. in substance the same, and published in a handbill headed "A calm Appeal," and I pledge my reputation for the truth of their contents, and defy any honourable man, whatever may be his political sentiments, and who is as well acquainted with Gen. Jackson as I am, to contradict them over his proper signature.

Respectfully, your ob't. serv't.

JOHN ROBB.

[Here follows the letter above referred to]

Baltimore, Sept. 2d, 1828.

Dear Sir, I am informed that some of our religious friends in Cecil, are desirous of obtaining correct information of Gen. Jackson's character, from some one who has a personal knowledge of him. Nothing I can assure you, would induce me to enter into the political warfare, carried on with so much heat and violence, but I conceive it my duty, when information is requested, to give it, and as far as practicable, correct the erroneous impressions made injurious to the General's reputation. It is to be lamented that men will engage in attempts to destroy the hard earned reputation of one among the purest patriots our country can boast, and propagate charges which it appears to me they cannot possibly believe and that merely for political effect. I was an officer in the 7th regt. U. S. Infantry, during the war, and stationed in the south.—My acquaintance with General Jackson, commenced in 1814, on his arrival in New Orleans, as commander in chief of the 7th military district. I have seen him in the tented field, planning the defence of his country. I have seen him in the battle hot, breasting the attacks of the invaders of our soil, whose watch word and countersign, was beauty and booty. I have seen him in the hour of victory, (like the good Samaritan,) alleviating the afflictions and binding up the wounds of a fallen enemy. I have seen him crowned with laurels in the presence of thousands, by the beauty of New Orleans, whom he saved from the the licentiousness of a brutal soldiery. I have seen him in the gay and fashionable circles of life, divested of the habiliments of his profession, the delight of admiring hundreds; in all of which situations I have seen him the same brave, noble, generous, high minded, philanthropic Andrew Jackson, and among the most amiable men, I ever knew. Never was a man's character more grossly misrepresented; it requires only, to know him, to admire and love him. I know him well, and of his moral worth amiable disposition, pleasing and agreeable manners, I I have a right to speak. He has been charged with being proverbial for his profanity. Upon this charge, for myself, I can say, I have been near his person and within hearing, during some of the most difficult and trying times, and I pledge you my honour, I never heard him utter an expression that could give offence to the most delicate ear.

Respectfully your obedient serv't.

JOHN ROBB.

Such, then, fellow citizens, is the testimony of one who knows Gen. JACKSON—Yes, of one who says he knows him well. And it is, too, the testimony of one whose veracity is attested by those who are inimical to the elevation of Gen. Jackson to the Presidency. Is there then any one who will be so presumptuous as to deny its correctness? We think candid men will admit its truth: But, the hired minions of a corrupt administration will, and may, rail against and revile the Old Farmer of Tennessee—they may assail him with all the malignity of which their malice is susceptible, but their poisoned arrows will all fall harmless at his feet: Truth—mighty TRUTH will finally prevail, and Jackson will be our President.

AN ADAMS MEETING!!

To the Editor of the Village Herald,

MR. ZIEBER,

I must apprise you of a great Adams meeting, intended to be held clandestinely at Rider's Mills, alias Toney Tank, Somerset county, Md., on the 25th inst. A letter had been previously written to a gentleman in Princess-Anne, that he might apprise the Adams candidates, and those only, of the meeting. The Jackson men did not find out, until the day of meeting, that such a thing was on foot; but having accidentally got a hint of it they repaired to the spot, and towards the close of the day, a vote was taken on the Presidential question, when lo! at this grand Adams meeting there were

For ADAMS 12, For JACKSON 51

"THE ORPHANS COURT."

From the feverish remarks in Teackle's last Sewer, 'tis plainly perceptible that he made himself too busy and now wishes to BACK OUT. Having, without any just reason, maliciously charged the Orphans Court with illegal procedure, the poor fellow now flies to an old advertisement to prove that he had some ground to go upon!!! An old advertisement to prove the charge of the Sewer!! Prodigious! Why, the man ought to have a patent right for making discoveries! But "drowing flies will catch at straws."

Before the Iris was got up here the Orphans Court advertisements were directed 'to be printed in the V. Herald,' and to save labour we always kept them standing; hence, when we received a new advertisement it was only necessary to alter the types for the names. The names too were all we asked for when any person brought us an order to advertise. After the establisment of the Iris we unthoughtedly continued this practice, till the young gentleman who writes in the Register's office kindly informed us of the error, whereupon we immediately made the necessary correction, as may be seen by examining the advertisement dated 12th Aug.

So we again say, let the Master Spirit of the Sewer examine the original orders, or the records of the Register's office, and he 'll find that he has been guilty of an ungentlemanly—unprincipled fabrication.

CORRECTIONS.

In the proceedings of the Caucus which appear on our first page there is an omission of the following names, for Weetquin, viz. James E. Robertson, John Turner, George Walter, jr. John Dougherty, Matthias Dashiell, Stephen Whinright; And among the names for Princess-Anne is Levin Bishop—it should be Levi.

☤ ☤ ☤ ☤ ☤

Imposition!—Slander Exposed!!!! Beware!!—Be on your Guard!!!

Something very much like this may be expected in the next Iris—For it appears that since the exposition of the secret proceedings of the PRINCESS-ANNE CAUCUS, the Adams leaders have become alarmed, and would fain persuade men that it was not a Caucus they held! But why didn't they tell people so before now? The appellation has been applied to the aristocratical meeting more than once in this paper—Why was no umbrage taken at it then? O! all things were going on snugly. The people had not seen the commissions which were sent out, authorizing men to OVER SEE & WATCH them. But, unfortunately for King Caucus, some of those to whom commissions were sent, are republicans at heart, and nobly refuse to act under such new fangled authority. Hence the disclosure of the designs of the FEW who would rule the many—or, to be a little more diplomatic, PALSY THE WILL of the PEOPLE.—Having been thus exposed they now say it was no Caucus. But the People know better, they are not blind but see—it was a CAUCUS, a real CAUCUS, and nothing but a CAUCUS.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

In pursuing the investigation of the allowance to Mr. Teackle, for the superintendency of public instruction, in addition to the evidence of a member of the committee on claims, contained in my last, I think the report itself, of that committee, establishes, beyond doubt, the position, that a part not only of the sum allowed, but of the sum claimed, by Mr. Teackle, was for "PERSONAL SERVICES." That the reader may be satisfied with the correctness of my opinion, I will quote the part of the report to which I refer in the following words:

"The claim in question consists of two branches, to wit: First, for cost of printing and paper for the various advices and instructions necessary for carrying into effect the act of December session, 1825, ch. 162. Second, For SERVICES in correspondence and in constructing and distributing throughout the state, the requisite forms and regulations, and in preparing the annual report, required by the act to establish the primary schools, and sundry incidental charges and expenditures, including stationary, postage, &c.'

The only record that can be found of the character of Mr. Teackle's CLAIM is this report, yet this is sufficient to stamp Mr. Teackle's statement, "that he disclaimed, before the committee, any wish to be compensated for personal services," with positive falsehood. The report of the committee states explicitly that the second branch of Mr T.'s claim as presented by himself, was for SERVICES; not only for services, but for services of a SPECIFIC nature; namely, for services in correspondence, in constructing and distributing forms and regulations, and for services in preparing the annual report. If these be not personal services, the words have no specific meaning. So we are not, as we stated in our last, left to conjecture, for upon examining the committee's report, which was not then before us, we found the matter satisfactorily explained. He declares that he disclaimed any wish to be compensated for personal services, and the committee declare that one specific branch of his claim was for personal services. Either the committee have made a false statement of the character of his claim, or Mr. Teackle has wilfully and deliberately made a false declaration, both in his printed address, and in his oral addresses before the people.

[Our correspondent continues by stating that, at the request of a member of the Council, the Clerk of the committee on claims had searched the archives of the state for copies of papers pertaining to Teackle's claim as presented to the committee, but that the papers relating thereto had been withdrawn! He then goes on in relating some other dark acts in Teackle's legislative career, which our limits will not enable us to insert—Editor.]

But let the People BEWARE—Let them not, in the indulgence of their unbounded GENEROSITY, hug a VIPER to their bosom. Let them examine, calmly, dispassionately and deliberately, the public conduct of L. D. Teackle, and draw in justice to themselves, a line of demarkation between what is persecution, and what is a just exposure of POLITICAL DEPRAVITY.

QUERCUS.

Sept. 29th, 1828.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

TO THE HONEST VOTERS OF SOMERSET COUNTY.

Fellow Citizens,

It is not from a cacoethes scribendi, that I have heretofore, or do now, make my appearance before you. But it is from an honest conviction that it is a duty, I owe the publick, to lend my feeble aid, in the detection and exposure of impositions and frauds attempted to be practised upon them, by some of the politicians of the day: who from the disposition they have manifested, with regard to the license law, would sooner annihilate, right, reason, and truth, together with every thing moral, and divine—yea "Heaven and earth," than fail in accomplishing their designs.

There is a writer in the Somerset Iris, who appears to be disposed to yield the utmost stretch of his talents, as a cats paw for Mr. Teackle to use, in the clearing away of the filth and rubbish which always adheres to aspiring demagogues, who would wish to ride into office, over the heads of honest men, by deception and fraud.

Vindex says the very bearing of this license law justifies Mr. Teackle's construction: that is, that the law relates to none but ESTABLISHED TRADERS, and none but such, can be made amenable for any breach of its provisions; and like a lawyer, who being cut off from every fair argument, eagerly graps a mere subterfuge, and makes a desperate effort to exculpate his guilty client, his whole hope of success rests upon one word—for the purpose &c. Yet he thinks it "exceedingly difficult for words more fully and completely to establish Mr. T.'s construction, than those of the law." Without casting any reflection on the 'sagacity' of Vindex, or his honest convictions to the contrary, I beg leave to differ from him, and do believe, that any man who is fit to represent this county, could have drafted a section, more susceptible of Mr. T.'s construction.

Although Vindex has gone to the utmost verge of sophism, to support Mr. T.'s construction; yet he has made a tacit acknowledgment that Mr. T.'s construction is false. He admits that a person who purchases 50 yards of domestic and sells or barters one yard without license, would be amenable for a breach of the provisions of this law—although, he might never sell another yard in the whole course of his life. But says he, the buying with the intention to sell, would constitute the person an established dealer!! about as much as my making a shaft to a carriage, would constitute me an established CARRIAGE MAKER. And although "no words are of so general an import, that there are not exceptions to their meaning"—yet the wood ESTABLISHED has too special, and unyielding an import, to be bent to Mr. T.'s deceptive purpose.

Vindex contends that it agrees with sound policy, and the common principles of equity, to place salted provisions, grain, meal, flour and TIMBER, under the same restrictions with spirituous liquors, and calls on me to shew substantial reasons why they should not be. This I have done before; but I now will repeat them again. My reasons are substantially these—Because it is OPPRESSIVE to the POOR. And because this oppression, does not add one single cent to the revenue of the state. To oppress, for revenue, is bad enough—but to oppress for no other purpose than to drive a monopoly of trade into the shops of retailers; a portion of which was justly enjoyed by another portion of the community, is no better than wanton cruelty; and should be resisted by every honest freeman and for this reason:—the principle is tyranical. It would be right and proper to make established dealers in these articles pay license; but there is not one single established dealer (that I know of) on the Eastern Shore, whose stock is composed exclusively of these articles—Therefore this restriction is on the "transactions of accommodation which general usage and common custom have always" heretofore "sanctioned in society."

Vindex says he cannot see any contradiction in Mr. T.'s clear exposition of this law; and the reason is very evident; words have no special meaning with him. ESTABLISHED, means any thing, or nothing, a ton of hay, or a cart load of turnips.

Vindex might as well undertake to pass himself on the community for Mr. Teackle, as to pass Mr. T.'s statements for his own. "It appears to have been the design of the law," says he, "1, a simplification of pre-existing complications. 2 A comparative equalification of rates. 3 The avoidance of evasions And 4. The improvement of the revenue!!!! Well done Vindex—Then follows a statement four and alone on supposition, which carries on its very front the foulest fraud: and throws the progress of all of its ramifications, bears the strongest marks, of low cunning, and high deceptive manœuvring: the conclusion of which is a preposterous libel on common sense.

Vindex says I have been guilty of 'presumption and arrogance,' in saying, it was ridiculous, in a man of Mr. T.'s pretended knowledge, to say his construction of this law, was the true intent and meaning—of it. This joined to a following sentence—to wit: It is one prerogative (of a legislature) to enact laws; it is another to explain and give their meaning—he, from the ex-cogitative powers of his fertile imagination, has conjured into a contradiction. I will endeavour to make myself more intelligible to Vindex—When the late license law was enacted, its provisions required all venders of dry goods, not the growth or manufacture of the United States, to take out a license. A large number of retailers were presented in this county; for a breach of its provisions, and perhaps forty, or fifty, or more bills, found against them, I was in the court, and heard the cases argued—the Council for the traversers, argued that it devolved upon the State to prove the articles vended, were not the growth or manufacture of the United States. The States Attorney argued, that it was evident that this was not the true intent and meaning of the law; inasmuch as fixing the onus probandi on the State, would make null, and void, the law: and that it was evident that the intention of the enactors of this law, was that it should yield a revenue to the State. The opinion of the court was, that before the jury could find for the state—the state must prove the goods sold, to be of foreign growth, or manufacture. The States attorney appealed from the decision of the county court, and the court of appeals, confirmed the opinion of the county court. The consequence was, the next legislature amended the law, so as to make it the duty of the vender to prove the goods sold to be the growth or manufacture of the United States.

I heard Judge Martin deliver the opinion of the court, and as well as I recollect it was in substance this—that it was the prerogative of Legislatures to make laws—It was the prerogative of courts of justice, to explain, and give them meaning—and that penal statutes must be explained according to their technical meaning and not according to that which the enactors might have intended. That in such cases, courts of justice, possessed no power to correct the blundering of Legislation.

Vindex has substantially conceded, all that I have contended for, and the only differences between us are the meaning of the word established, and that he thinks salted provisions, grain, meal, flour and timber, should be placed under the same restrictions with spirituous liquors. I have expressed my opinion to the contrary; and beg leave to say I hope without arrogance or presumption;—that no man can be properly called a CHRISTIAN, or even a friend to MORAL POWER who would preach this doctrine.

In conclusion, I would remark—softly—seriously—friendly—and candidly—that it ill comports with the high character of a .... of the ...... to descend from the sacred dignity of the , and become the ready tool of a noisy faction, and daub 'with untempered mortar,' so unjust a system of taxation as this defective LICENSE LAW.

The people's humble servant,

COMMON SENSE.

P. S. Some of the 'secret managers' of the Iris, pretend to have a great deal of penetration, in discovering the writer of Common Sense. 'Common Sense' has not changed hands; but the essays, under that signature were written by a man, upwards of thirty years of age, whom I presume they would hardly call 'a certain youth.'

A CAUTION.

The friends of General Jackson are cautioned against a trick, which it is understood, is to be the dernier resort of the Ebonies, when they find all their other machinations to fail. It is understood that about the time of the election, or so near it that the report cannot be contradicted, one simultaneous movement will be made throughout the United States. It will be reported that GENERAL JACKSON is DEAD!!!

We trust, that all the Jackson papers throughout the Union will publish the above.

John Quincy Adams' Letter to Levitt Harriss.

Ghent, 16th November, 1814.

Dear Sir, I have just now the pleasure of receiving your favour of 14-26 October and am happy to learn from yourself, the confirmation of your recovery; of which, and of illness, I had a few days since been informed by a letter from my wife.

Near the close of the month of August, it was our expectation that the negotiation here would have terminated in a very few days. It soon after became apparent that the intention of the British government was to keep it open, and to shape its demands according to the course of events in Europe and America. The policy still continues to pervade the British Cabinet, Nothing decisive is yet known to them to have occurred, either at Vienna, or the other hemisphere, and accordingly they temporize still. Unless something should happen to fix their waverings pretensions and purposes it will belong to the American government alone to bring our business to a point. This on their part would certainly be an honourable and spirited course of conduct, and I should have no doubt of its being pursued, if "the desire of peace were not paramount to every other consideration."

The occurrences of the war in America have been of a diversified nature. Success have alternately attended the armies of both billigerents; and hitherto have left them nearly where they were at the commencement of the campaign. It has been, on our part, merely defensive, with the single exception of the taking of Fort Erie, with which it began. The battles of Chipewa and Bridgewater, the defence of Fort Erie on the 15th of August, and the naval action on Lake Champlain on the 11th Sept. have redounded to our glory as well as to our advantage; while the loss of Washington the capitulation of Alexandria and of Washington county, Massachusetts, and of Nantucket, have been more disgraceful to us than injurious. The Defence of Baltimore has given us little more to be proud of than the Demonstration against it has afforded to the enemy—Provost's retreat from Plattsburg has been more disgraceful to them than honourable to us; and Wellington's veterans, the are eater Brisbane, and the fire brand Cockburn, have kept the rawest of our militia in countenance by their expertness at running away: The general issue of the campaign is yet to come, and there is too much reason to apprehend that it will be unfavourable to our side. Left, by a concurrence of circumstances unexampled in the annals of the world, to struggle alone and friendless against the colloss l power of Great Britain—fighting in reality against her for the cause of all Europe, with all Europe coldly looking on, basely bound not to raise in our favour a helping hand, secretly wishing us success, and not daring so much as to cheer us in the strife; what could be expected from the first series of this unequal conflict, but DISASTER and DISCOMFITURE to us?!

Divided among ourselves, more in passion than interest, with half the Nation SOLD by their PREJUDICES and IGNORANCE to our enemy, with A FEEBLE AND PENURIOUS GOVERNMENT, with five frigates for a navy, and scarcely five efficient regiments for an army how can it be expected that we should resist the mass of force which that gigantic power has collected TO CRUSH US AT A BLOW?!!

This too, in the moment he has chosen to break through all the laws of war, acknowledged and respected by civilized nations, under the false pretence of retaliation, Cochrane has formally declared the determination to destroy and lay waste all the towns on the sea coast which may be assailable. The ordinary horrors of war are ... and mercy in comparison with what British vengeance and malice have denounced upon us. We must go through it all—I trust in God we shall rise triumphant over it all—but the first shock is the most terrible part of the process, and it is that which we are now enduring. The Treaty ... boot the beginning of next month from Bordeaux; your despatches by Mr. Forbes will go in her, if we get them in time. I have heard heard nothing from Nesselrode. The Congress at Vienna has scarcely yet opened—but all the important arrangements are made, and there is no doubt that the termination will be pacific.

"I am with high regard and consideration, dear sir, your very humble and obedient servant, JOHN QUINCY ADAMS."

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Matthias Dashiell vs. Sarah Hyland, I have seized and taken in execution all her right and estate in and to a tract, or part of a tract, of land, called St. Peter's Neck, containing 96 2-5 acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell on the 14th of next October, at the court house door in the town of Princess-Anne, between the hours of 1 and 5 o'clock, P. M to the highest and best bidder to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Sept. 30 ts

[From the Philadelphia Sentinel.]

...n Sergeant, Manuel Eyre, Lawrence ...s, C. C. Biddle, and Joseph P. Norris, ...ires—Authors of an Address adopted ... Administration town meeting of the 7th

...lemen:—We now refer to evidence ...cific character?

... have already shown, that about a ... before the election, Mr. Clay told ... Floyd, that he was puzzled, which to ... Gen. Jackson or Mr. Adams. On ... January, one month before the election ... Clay wrote to his confidential friend ... tucky, Mr. F. P. Blair, giving him a ... tion of the political scenery at Wash... at that time: he tells Mr. Blair, that ... Clay) must now seriously think, for ... he would vote, thus confirming what ... Floyd says, and contradicting what ... lay said July 12, 1827—he tells Mr. ... al the friends of the several candi... garded him as umpire, and address... as such:—Thus; then, we have Mr. own account of what the friends of ... ndidate said—If any friend of Gen. ... had made any corrupt overture, ... y would have carefully stated it: but ... of alliance came from that quarter; ... friends of Gen. Jackson said might ... with pride and honour before the ... people—not so the declaration of Mr. ... friends:

... friend of Gen. Jackson," says Mr. ... says to me—my hopes are upon you ... disappointus—our partiality was ... next to the hero—you know the ... we all have for a western president." ... could have been more manly than ... is an appeal to the public spirit of ... y—it reminds him of all that he had ... said about a western president—it ... ... do not disappoint us,' as if ... was feared: But it gave no cara... Mr. Crittenden wished Mr. White to ... General Jackson, that he would f... Mr. Clay's views of office—and Mr. ... disappoint the west.

... different was the appeal of Mr. Ad... friends: he touched the chord which, ... opinion, led Mr. Clay captive:—

... friend of Mr. Adams (says Mr. Clay) ... to me "with tears in his eyes,' and ... Mr. Adams has always had the ... respect for you, and the highest ad... for your talents; there is no station, ... you are not equal: you were un... ly the second choice of New Eng... and I pray you to consider, whether ... the good and your own future inter... not distinctly point out the course ... you ought to pursue."

... is Mr. Clay's own account, of the ... made to him one month before the ... what further might have been said ... for conjecture: what is here ad... to have been is sufficiently gross: did ... tell the weeping envoy, that he ... such intimations an insult? did ... him, upon what authority, he knew ... Mr. Adams opinions of his tal... competency? did he tell him, that ... views could not influence his vote? ... may have ascertained, for aught ... that the envoy spoke from the ... but he does not pretend that he was ... least offended; on the contrary, patri... and personal honour seem to have ... overlooked! instead of publicly ... ing this corrupt overture, Mr. Clay ... his friends!! And he thus tells Mr. ... result of the conference.

... friends entertain the belief, that their ... towards me will, in the end be ... by so bestowing their votes." ... not say, that, by voting for Mr ... the honour of the country, the wel... the west, or the purity of the repub... be accomplished—he does not say ... so bestowing their votes, danger ... Military Chieftain would be averted, ... says, that by voting for Mr. Adams, ... wishes of his friends towards himself, in the end, be more likely to be ac... ed, than by voting for any body ...

... were the kind wishes entertained by ... were they to see him still in the ... chair, or soon after in the cabinet, ... the end in the presidency? Does not ... heart of every honest reader ... question? Does not the voice of ... people reply in scorn?

... are not left to conjecture: the ... of Mr. Clay tell us explicitly what ... wishes" were:

... that Mr D. White, a member ... from Kentucky, was only in... not decided, 'to bestow his vote;' ... was all important: Mr. Clay, there... to tell Mr. Blair in his letter of ... 1825—

... representative (Mr. White) is in ... or with us in these sentiments, ... know his respect for your opinion, ... if you concur in our views, that ... write to him, by return of mail, to ... him in his inclinations. Show this ... alone."

... we see "the plot thickens"—the ... Mr. D. White never fancied, that he ... to receive instructions from ... all the way to Kentucky, to be ... by return mail Mr. Blair showed ... letter to Mr. Crittenden; and on ... of January Mr. Blair and Mr. Crit... wrote long letters to Mr. White, as if ... selves spontaneously, and as his ... constituents!!

... tells him, that he, Mr. Blair, be... Kentucky to be for Jackson, and that ... of the Legislature, requesting ... from Kentucky to vote for him, ... with the public sentiment: but, that ... of congress, at Washington, must ... was the best course, as they ... elect a president, but an adminis... Mr. Blair then hints, that General ... might desire to favour Mr. Adams ... Mr. Clay, and therefore unless ... Jackson would give earnest now, that ... his vote into the western (Mr. ... scale, it would be better to vote for ... He also tells Mr. White that ... ature of Kentucky would not have ... members from the state in con... vote for Gen. Jackson, if they had ... that Mr. Adams would make Mr. ... tary of State!

... it is considered that this letter was ... desire of Mr. Clay, and that it ... an application to Gen. Jackson to ... of what he would do—who can ... between Mr. Markley and ... and Gen. Jackson—and Gen. ... reply?

Mr. Crittenden's letter is equally to the purpose—he, too, prefers Gen. Jackson to Mr. A., provided Mr. Clay be made Secretary; but if General Jackson will not make Mr. Clay Secretary, then he prefers Mr. Adams, with Mr. Clay Secretary, to Gen. Jackson without Mr. Clay—he also assures Mr. White, pressed at Washington by Mr. Clay and his "friends," and, as he honestly supposed by his constituents spontaneously writing to him, gave up his scruples and decided the vote of Kentucky. He thus, (June 1828) describes his situation Feb. 1825—

"When I gave my vote for Mr Adams, I did it under the firm persuasion, from information I had received through many intelligent gentlemen in my district, that I was voting in strict conformity with the will of my constituents." "As I have often heretofore frankly avowed, I now state, that I voted for Mr. Adams, with a view to Mr. Clay's future prospects to the presidency."

What can be clearer than this!

The nature of the "kind wishes" of Mr. C's friends, is further fully made known by those friends themselves. Mr. Trimble, one of the representatives from Kentucky, has said, that he "voted for Mr Adams because it was distinctly ascertained that he would make Mr. Clay Secretary of State.' —Mr. F. Johnson another friend and member, said he voted for Mr. Adams to get Mr. Clay made Secretary of State." Gen. Metcalfe, another friend and member, whose election as governor we believe Mr. Clay is now in Kentucky to promote, said, they "could not possibly get Mr Clay made Secretary without voting for Mr. Adams."

We are, gentlemen, utterly at a loss to conceive what further proofs than these, any honest and intelligent persons can require. Mr. Clay admits that circumstantial evidence is sufficient to establish what his object was, what his means to effect it were, and whether he effected it or not?—Have we not given more than circumstantial proof? May we not contend, that the evidence given is that of "witnesses testifying from the senses?" Has not Mr. Clay himself confessed—1. that personal advantages were held out to him—2 that he consulted his friends—3 that his friends concurred with him as to the propriety of so voting as to attain those advantages—4. that he wrote secretly to get the constituents of a hesitating member to concur in their views?—is it not clear, 5. the letters to the wavering member were written—6. that the vote of Kentucky was thus carried—7. that Mr. Clay was made Secretary, and put in the road of succession?

Now, gentlemen, if we have erred in facts, or argument as we are entirely unconscious of it, we ask you to point out any mistake that we may have made—no doubt you will consider it your duty to do so; but if you cannot point out any error, then we submit to the public, whether you were or were not correct, in stating that the charge against Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay, is "an exploded calumny."

Respectfully yours' &c.

TO THE PEOPLE.

We have thus, fellow-citizens, by arguments, by facts, and by the testimony of Mr. Clay himself and his friends, endeavoured to prove, to the satisfaction even of our opponents, that the election of Mr. Adams and the appointment of Mr. C. were the result of a corrupt understanding between the parties: if we have not satisfied our opponents, can you, who are dispassionate, entertain a doubt? many facts and arguments remain unnoticed, which we did not deem essential to the development of the truth: the inclination and the ability, of Mr. Clay to intrigue, are proved by his own letters, now before the public eye. In his letter to Mr. Kendall, of April 16, 1820, he avows his agency at that early day—describes an abortive caucus, and says if it had recommended a candidate, he would have had a majority! this, he says, is on the authority of well informed friends: in another letter to the same person, dated March 18th, 1824, he says, that his friends believe, if he enters the house, no matter with what associates, he will be elected! and then he says, "my friends have every motive for a vigorous, animated, and persevering exertion"—who can doubt the intense avidity for power, of the man, who thus descends to intrigues and excitements, that would disgust you, if witnessed on the part even of a constable seeking re-election? Who can doubt that Mr. Clay calculated, if he entered the house, to defeat all his associates?

Behold, what a contrast those intrigues of Mr. Clay present to the conduct of General Jackson. No one ever heard of his intriguing—no one ever saw him entering the lists, like a gambler at a horse race, calculating his chances, with fair play or foul! Is it possible that the American people can close their eyes against such light as this—are they enamoured or charmed to approve what must inevitably destroy them?

Let us apply, what Mr. Clay says could be effected, if he got into the house, to what was done there, after his exclusion, and there can exist no doubt as to the means taken to effect the elevation of Mr. Adams: Mr. Cook alone held the vote of Illinois; Mr. Scott held the vote of Missouri; Mr. White's vote decided Kentucky; Mr. Warfield's vote decided the vote of Maryland, and General Van Rensselaer's that of New York. You have seen how Mr. White was secured: We have no doubt that Maryland and New York were gained by a written pledge from Mr. Adams, to give offices to federalists numerically with republicans. Mr. Cook and Mr. Scott had a power equal to the sixty votes of New York and Pennsylvania! Mr. Cook had been in favour of Mr Clay as President—his state, Illinois, voted for Gen. Jackson, yet in Congress Mr. Cook voted for Mr. Adams! His constituents dismissed him for doing so, and then the administration gave him five thousand dollars for a service, the nature of which has never been disclosed, and in the performance of which, if ever performed, Mr. Cook was not engaged above one month! Mr. Scott represented Missouri—he pledged himself, before he was elected to Congress, to vote for Gen. Jackson; if he had not done so, he could not have been elected; yet, in congress, he gave the vote of Missouri to Mr. Adams! His constituents dismissed him, and then the administration gave him an office, of inspector of land offices?

If these facts do not establish the existence of corruption, we confess we are utterly at a loss to know, to what else than corruption such acts can be attributed! we see two needy individuals wielding in Congress an influence equal to that of the great states of New York and Pennsylvania—we see them giving that influence in direct opposition to the will of the States they represent—we see them dismissed with scorn for doing so—and we see them then receive the wages of their service, from the men they elevated!

When you reflect upon such scenes as these—when you naturally desire to see the constitution so amended, as to shut up the avenues to corruption, which you see wide open—the fact is all-important, that the Administration has hitherto resisted every attempt to amendment.

It is therefore, not merely Mr. Adams' re-election, that you are now called on to resist, but the election of Mr. Clay as his successor—nay, it is the establishment of a system, subversive of your rights and degrading to your honour; and when such is the stake bear in mind that you hold not only your own happiness, but the destiny of posterity in your hands, so far as you can affect them—nor is this all—you are accountable to mankind for institutions, given to your care, as models for the world.

Respectfully, yours, &c.

JOS. WORRELL,
WM. DUNCAN,
WM. BOYD,
HENRY TOLAND,
JOHN WURTS,
WM. J. DUANE,
WM. J. LEIPER,
CHARLES S. COXE,
THO. M. PETTIT,

Committee of Correspondence for Philadelphia, appointed by the Republican Convention, assembled at Harrisburg, Jan. 8, 1828.

Aug. 1, 1828.

☤ ☤ ☤ ☤ ☤ ☤ ☤

We beg leave also to recommend to the chairman and secretary to have frequent and PRIVATE meetings, taking always such precautions that we may get completely and fully organised before those in opposition to us are AWARE OF WHAT WE ARE ABOUT. We cannot close this communication without urging it as of the UTMOST importance that this and all other matters connected with our arrangements should be kept ENTIRELY TO OURSELVES, at any rate until the ORGANIZATION of our PLANS is fully matured.—Adams Circular.

Bless us! how very secret these Adams men are.—Think ye, they are after any thing good? Does honesty require all this secrecy? No! Mark what it was, they were so anxious to keep "entirely" to themselves. The following which is another extract from the same Circular, exposes it—they meant to prepare themselves to take possession of the Polls and to bully and' beat away opposition. Your secret's out, gentlemen, and you'll be met at the Polls, where if you behave yourselves civilly and properly, you'll be treated in like manner—the rest, you know.

But for the other extract to which we have alluded: "The chairman of the district committee, and the secretary must urge upon the several committee men the necessity to see that all voters known to be favorable, and those who may be deemed DOUBTFUL, BE FURNISHED WITH THE MEANS OF CONVEYANCE, to the polls and when there KEPT IN VIEW by the persons who convey them UNTIL THEY HAVE VOTED; each committee man to be as active and industrious as possible on the day of election, a part of whom, the MOST POWERFUL, both in PERSON, STRENGTH and COURAGE, not less than six, must be appointed to stand constantly at the polls * *

A high opinion indeed, these Adams men must have of the freemen of Maryland, that they think, that the vote of every man, who has not made up his mind, or is 'doubtful' as they call it, can be bought by furnishing "with the means of conveyance to the polls!" a freeman's vote to be bought for a short ride in a horse cart!! Take care, gentlemen, that you are not bit! Mind! or you may furnish "the means of conveyance to the polls" to some Jackson men, who may vote for the Old Hero, and laugh at you for your folly, while you will be able to say nothing, lest your attempt at the fraud be made more public.

But we suppose that if after giving one of these 'doubtful' gentlemen a ride to the polls, he should, notwithstanding he is 'KEPT IN VIEW,' offer to vote his own mind, one of the six 'POWERFUL' gentlemen at the polls will just knock my doubtful over! Balt. Republican.

☞ The Circular containing the above extracts is printed on the first page of this paper.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.

A strong administration man of respectability, and property, in Salisbury; offered to bet the other day, one hundred dollars, to five dollars, that General Jackson would be elected.

If the Adams men wish it, the name of the gentlemen will be given.

September 30.

"Great re-action;—Pennsylvania for the Administration!!!"

The whole corresponding committee appointed by the friends of the administration for Ridgeberry township, Brandford county, Pa. have deserted the ranks of the Usurper, and arrayed themselves on the side of the people. They declare that they "are in favour of the election of Andrew Jackson to the presidency." 'Pon honour this is a good sign—Centre Democrat.

"The gall'd Jade winces."

He could no longer bear to see the publication of the extravagant salary received by him in connexion with what he said a year ago. He says we use large BLACK figures to tell how much he received for services and expenditures which never benefitted this county to the amount of one cent. Astonishing! "BLACK figures"!! Why, no colour could have been more appropriate to record any thing concerning L. D. Teackle. But, the man must be craz'd, for he insinuates that some people can't tell the difference between $500.00 and $5000. Here is evidence that the people want a Public Instructer. Littleton Dennis Teackle 's the man. Huzza! Send him to the Legislature again, and if he be not apppointed PRESIDENT of the FISCAL BANK he'll stand a good chance for anotner sum of $500.00 of the People's money.

Superintendent of Primary Schools.

[From the Village Herald of July, 1827.]

"This being an appointment unknown to "the Constitution, WITHOUT SALARY, "and NOT CONNECTED with the POS "SESSION of the SCHOOL MONEY, it "cannot be CALLED AN OFFICE of "PROFIT "or TRUST," nor interpose a disability to "my further services as your delegate.

"LITTLETON D. TEACKLE."

Maryland Legislature.

House of Delegates, Dec. Sess. 1827.

Resolved, by the General Assembly of Maryland, that the Treasurer of the Western Shore, be and he is hereby authorized and required, to pay to Littleton Dennis Teackle, or his order, $500.00, in full compensation, for his services and expenditures as Superintendent of Public Instruction.

[See Journal of Proceedings of House of Del. December Sess. 1827, page 518.

Baltimore Prices Current.

Sept. 26, 1828

FLOUR—white wheat family, $7 a 8.00; superfine Howard st 6.00 a 6.25; city mills 5.75; Susquehanna, 5.50 a 5.75; WHEAT, best red 1.20 a 1.25; best white 1.25 a 1.35—CORN, .38 a .40; OATS .20 a .22

MARRIED, on the 24th inst. by the Rev. Mr. Wm B. Snead, the Rev. MATTHEW SORIN, of the M. E. Church, to Miss MARIA ROBERTSON, of this county.

On the 10th inst. by the same, Mr DAVID JONES to Miss EMELINE WHITE, both of this county.

Recently, in Milford, the Rev. Mr. SMITH to the Rev. Miss ELLIS M. MILLER. This is an extraordinary circumstance, two preachers married together, and not Quakers, but Methodists.

Thus she hath done as I am told,
The Bible doth require;
In other words, she 's tried her gold
In Matrimony's fire

That the command might be obeyed,
(Ah, there 's all the pith!)
She didn't like the Miller's trade,
So turned to be a Smith

FOR SALE, and on a moderate Credit,

A good second hand Ogle GIG For further information apply at the office of the Village Herald.

Sept. 2, 1828. tnw

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. ..., a justice of the peace, and to me directed two at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'rs of Thomas Byrd against Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and 1 other at the suit Hannah Hearn, Ex'x. of Wm. Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right, interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by L. D. Collier; also a house and lot occupied by Amelia Nicholson; also one other occupied by William S. Disharoon; also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esquire's Mills, it being the office of the said Elijah; also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson & Levi Cathell, of a certain Absalom Phipps; also a clock & case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Walker, Esq. in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 20th of September next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

September 30. ts

PUBLIC SALE.

PURSUANT to an order of the Orphans Court of Somerset county the subscribers will offer at Public Sale, on Wednesday the 15th of next October, at the late residence of Henry White, of Dames Quarter,) late of Somerset county, deceased, all the PERSONAL ESTATE of the said deceased, (negroes & legacies excepted,) consisting of

Horses, Cattle, Sheep, Hogs, Household and Kitchen Furniture, Farming Utensils, the one-half of two Schooners, one Scow, several Canoes, Vessel-Rigging and Sails, and many other articles too tedious to be mentioned.

The terms of sale will be, a credit of six months for all sums over five dollars, to be secured by the purchaser or purchasers giving bond or bonds to the subscribers, with approved security, bearing interest from the day of sale—For all sums under five dollars the cash will be required. The sale will commence at 10 o'clock A. M. and will continue from day to day until the whole of the property is disposed of.

No property will be suffered to be removed until the terms of sale are complied with.

ALCEY WHITE,
EDWARD FOWLER,
Adm. c. w. a of H. White, dec'd.

Dame's Quarter, Sept. 30

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.

Somerset County Orphans Court.

Sept. 23d, 1828.

[SEAL.] On application of Edward Fowler and Alcey White, Adm's. c. w. a. of Henry White late of Somerset county, deceased: It is ordered by the court, that the said administrators give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the estate of the said deceased, and that the same be published once a week for three weeks, in one of the newspapers printed at Princess Anne.

True copy. TEST.

JAMES POLK, Reg. W. S. C.

This is to give Notice,

That the subscribers have obtained from the Orphans court of Somerset county in Maryland, letters of administration cum testamento annexo, on the personal estate of Henry White (of Dame's Quarter) late of Somerset county, deceased; All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof to the subscribers, or one of them, on or before the first day of October, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and twenty nine; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under our hands this 23d day of September, Anno Domini 1828.

ALCEY WHITE,
EDWARD FOWLER,
Adm's. c. w. a. H. White, dec'd.

Sept 30 nm

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of two writs of Fieri Facias issued by William Whayland, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, at the suit of Isaac H. Price against George P. Jones, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit. Part of a tract of land known by the name of Anderson's Invention, containing 45 acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs, at the court-house door on Tuesday the 14th of next October, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Sept 30 ws

Dissolution of Partnership.

The PARTNERSHIP of Wm. & Geo. Riall is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will in future be conducted by Riall & Hopkins. It is expected that all persons indebted to the late firm will come forward and make payment to Riall & Hopkins, otherwise their accounts will be placed in the hands of Thomas Jones for collection.

Sept 19, 1828. nm

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers,

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers
300 Neste Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 dozen Butter Prints

200 groce of Lamp Wicks, assorted sizes; Spckets and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels kegs and hydrants; sweeping, shoe, scrubbing, dusting, white-wash, weavers and other Brushes; scale bed & sacking Cords; plough Lines; coarse and fine Twine, Weavers Slays or Reeds; woolen, cassinet, cotton and hand Shuttles; cotton and wool Cards; fancy and common Bellows; Fishing Tackle; lamp and candle Wick; corn Brooms and Whisks; market and close Baskets, long and short Brush Handles, Lemon Squeezers Rolling Pins, Potatoe Mashers, ... towel Rollers; wash & cake Boards, sieves, tubs clothes Pins; humming and common Tops; Sifters; box and cake Blacking; butter Bowls; Trays, Spoons and Paddles; Trenchers; crabing and cabbage Netts.

The above artiels are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART.

No. 101 1-2 Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.

Baltimore, 9th mo 30th

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court, and to me directed, Thomas Goddard against Elijah Culver, I have seized the following property, to wit—All the said Elijah's right, title, interest and estate in and to part of a tract of land called Morris's Lot, containing 120 acres more or less, which property has heretofore been levied on by me, under a writ of Fieri Facias, and which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 30th inst. at the Court House door, at the hour of 1 o'clock P. M. for cash to the highest and best bidder, to satisfy the above mentioned writ and county levy and officers' fees for the years 1825, 1826 and 1827.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

Sept. 17 tdm

POETRY.

[From the Morning Courier.]

SONG.

Come hand to hand before we part,
And though too soon they sever,
Yet fear it not, for heart to heart
Will cling, and cling forever:
Though half the earth
Should intervene,
And all its worth
Should steal between.
They'll never, never snap the chord
Which binds thy soul to mine;
For aye, as in this hour adored,
My thoughts shall all be thine.

We've loved too long, and loved too well
To break the heart-chain now;
And here I print the signet spell
Upon thy snowy brow.
And never may
The stranger dare
To steal away
Its impress there.
Though other ties we soon may sever,
And other friends be all forgot;
May blighted hopes be mine forever,
When I can live and love thee not.

PRIZE POEM.

The committee appointed for the purpose of examining the numerous productions forwarded to the editor of the New-York Mirror and Ladies' Literary Gazette in consequence of his advertisement, offering one hundred dollars for articles adapted to the objects of his paper, have awarded the sum of thirty dollars to W. C. Bryant, of this city, for the following poem, which was considered the best presented to them.

N. Y. Statesman.

A NOON SCENE.

The quiet August noon is come,
A slumberous silence fills the sky,
The fields are still; the woods are dumb,
In glassy sleep the waters lie.

And mark yon soft white clouds, that rest
Above our vale, a moveless throng;
The cattle on the mountain's breast,
Enjoy the grateful shadow long.

Oh how unlike these merry hours
In sunny June, when earth laughs out,
When the fresh winds make love to flowers,
And woodlands sing and waters shout,

When in the grass sweet voices talk,
And strains of tiny music swell
From every moss cup of the rock,
From every nameless blossom's bell.

But now, a joy too deep for sound,
A peace no other season knows
Hushes the heavens, & wraps the ground—
The blessing of supreme repose.

Away! I will not be to day,
The only slave of toil and care!
Away from desk and dusk away!
I'll be as idle as the air.

Beneath the open sky abroad,
Among the plants and breathing things,
The sinless, peaceful works of God,
I'll share the calm the season brings.

Come then, in whose soft eyes I see
The gentle meaning of the heart,
One day amid the woods with thee,
From men and all their cares apart.

And whereupon the meadow's breast,
The shadow of the thicket lies,
The blue wild flowers thou gatherest
Shall glow yet deeper near thine eyes.

Come—and when amid the calm profound
I turn those gentle eyes to seek,
They, like the lovely landscape round,
Of Innocence and peace shall speak.

Rest here beneath the unmoving shade,
And on the silent vallies gaze,
Winding and widening till they fade
In yon soft ring of summer haze.

The village trees their summits rear
Still as its spire; and yonder flock,
At least in those calm fields, appear
As chiseled from the lifeless rock.

One tranquil mount the scene o'erlooks—
There the hushed winds their Sabbath keep,
While a near hum, from bees and brooks,
Comes faintly like the breath of sleep.

Well might the gazer deem, that when,
Worn with the struggle and the strife,
And heart sick at the wrongs of men,
The good forsake the scenes of life.

Like this deep quiet, that awhile
Lingers the lovely landscape o'er,
Shall be the peace whose holy smile
Welcomes him to a happier shore.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞ Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞ Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞ Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞ All communications addressed to the editor must come post paid.

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS.

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; pound, half and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking; patent and common Taps; lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,

No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets.

Baltimore, 9th mo 16th.

In Somerset County Court,

MAY TERM, 1828.

James Wilson v. Arnold E. Waters.

ORDERED, by the court, that the sale of the real estate of Arnold E. Waters, as made and reported by James Wilson, Trustee for the sale of said real estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shewn by the second day of the next term of this court; provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess Anne once a week for three successive weeks before the said day. The Trustee reports the amount of sales to be $3400.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.

A true copy. TEST.
GEO. HANDY, Clk.

Sept 16 mm

PUBLIC SALE.

IN pursuance of an order of Somerset county court, passed at May Term, 1828, the undersigned or a majority of them, will sell on the premises, in said county, on FRIDAY the 10th of next OCTOBER, at ten o'clock A. M. on a credit of twelve months—

All the REAL ESTATE of

LEVIN RUSSEL,

Late of said county, deceased, which was lately valued by the undersigned. The purchaser or purchasers, to enter into bond with approved security to the heirs of said Russel for their respective proportions.

TUBMAN BEDSWORTH,
ZACCHEUS LLOYD,
BEACHAM ACKWORTH,
JAMES BOUNDS,
WILLIAM TWILLEY.

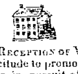
Sept. 16 Commissioners.

BARREN CREEK SPRINGS.

THE SUBSCRIBER

Begs leave to inform his friends & the public,

That his HOUSE is now open



FOR THE RECEPTION OF VISITERS.

An anxious solicitude to promote the comfort of those who are in pursuit of health, pleasure, or business, has induced him to make such arrangements as will enable him to give ample satisfaction to those who may favour him with their company. By those who have visited the Springs, during the present season, the waters have been pronounced more powerful in their effects than hitherto experienced—operating in most cases, as a purgative medicine: Those desirable effects, in conjunction with its chalybeate properties, which are acknowledged to be unsurpassed by any waters in the world, present a powerful inducement to such as are already assailed by disease, and to those who are desirous to avoid the bilious diseases of the climate.

Persons who are inclined to try the efficacy of the waters may rest assured that every accommodation shall be provided to render them happy and comfortable; and the charges shall be apportioned to the pressure of the times.

The public's humble servant,

CHARLES LEARY.

N. B. Travellers, generally, particularly the passengers of the steam-boat Maryland, will find this an easy and commodious stage, after the arrival of the boat at Cambridge, (being only four miles distant from Vienna.) Here they will be certain to meet with the purest and best Waters of the peninsula, and a Table supplied with the best accommodations the country can afford—on the most reasonable conditions.

July 29. tolu

Notice to Creditors.

THE creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause, if any they have, why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

McKIMMEY PORTER.

Sailsbury, Aug. 19 mll

For Rent,

For the ensuing year, a House and Lot in the village of White-Haven, at present occupied by Edward U. Blake. For terms apply to.

MARCELLUS JONES.

Sept. 9, 1828.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Col. George Handy for the real estate of Robert Sasser, against George Jones and Robert Jones, executors of Charles Jones, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—all Charles Jones' right and title to a house and lot in the town of Princess-Anne, No. 29, occupied by the Rev. William Quinn which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 14th of October at the court house door in Princess Anne, to the highest and best bidder, for cash. Sale to take place between 12 and 3 o'clock P. M

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff

Sept. 23 mll

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess-Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.

August 5. jfi

FOR SALE.

THE subscriber wishes to dispose of small FARM with all of its improvements, situated on Deal's Island, the place where Keziah Jones, dec'd. formerly resided. The terms of sale may be ascertained by applying to Mr. William Wallace, who resides on said Island. If not sold at private sale before Wednesday the 5th day of November, it will on that day be offered at Public Sale, to the highest and best bidder. The terms will be made known on the day of sale.

MARCELLUS JONES.

Sept. 9, 1828.

Notice to Creditors.

The creditors of the undersigned are hereby notified to appear in Somerset county court, in Princess Anne, on the 1st Saturday after the third Monday in November next, to shew cause if any they have why he should not be entitled to the benefit of the insolvent laws of Maryland.

EBENEZER ANDERSON.

August 19 ww

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phœbus.

For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

June 3, 1828. wk

NOTICE.

THE subscriber being extremely desirous of closing his business, once more gives notice to those indebted to him, that unless their accounts are settled in the course of the present month, he will be compelled to adopt a legal process without respect to persons.

SEVERN TEACKLE.

Princess-Anne, Sept. 2

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. while in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for: and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the [illegible] and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER,

Nov. 20, 1827. Princess Anne, Md

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks.

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
C. I. S. I.'s before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas.
WARRANTS.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks, PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms,

At the Office of the Village Herald.

ELECTION.

Notice is hereby given, That an Election will be held in the several election Districts of Somerset county, on Monday the 6th day of next October, for the purpose of choosing Four Delegates to represent the county in the next General Assembly of Maryland.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Sept 16, 1828. tem

☞NOTICE.☜

ON WEDNESDAY the 22nd of next OCTOBER, will be offered at PUBLICK SALE, at the Storehouse occupied by Nathaniel Slawson, in the town of VIENNA, if not sold before at private sale,

An elegant assortment of DRY GOODS, with a suitable supply of GROCERIES,

laid in on the best terms, and adapted to the season. Any person wishing to purchase at private sale, may be accommodated by applying to Dr. C. Stanford. Terms of sale will be made known on the day of sale.

NATHANIEL SLAWSON.

Vienna, Sept 23, 1828.

SEPTEMBER 16TH, 1828.

In the Levy Court of Somerset C'y.

ORDERED, that JAMES MARSHALL, the keeper of the Standards of Weights and Measures, attend at the several places following for the purpose of fulfilling the duties of his appointment, viz.

13th & 14th Oct.	at	Princess Anne
15th	do	Upper Trapp & Forktown
16th & 17th	do	Salisbury
20th	do	Barren Creek Springs
21st	do	Sharptown
22nd	do	Bacon Quarter
24th & 25th	do	Quantico
27th & 28th	do	George Collins' Store
29th	do	Moreton's Store on Nanticoke
30th & 31st	do	White-Haven
1st November	at	Levin Leatherbury's store
3d	do	Newman's store
4th	do	Ford's store
6th	do	Done's store on Back cr'k.
7th	do	Jamestown
11th	do	Stevens' Ferry
12th	do	Rehoboth
13th & 14th	do	Roach's store.

Per order,

GEO. HANDY, Clk.

Sept. 23 mll

SPLENDID VIEWS

OF

AMERICAN SCENERY.

On FRIDAY, the 10th of OCTOBER, 1828, will be published by T. K. GREENBANK, No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia, a volume of splendid views of American Senery as follows—

1—A view of Beck's Shot Tower, on the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia, and adjacent scenery;
2—A view of the Light House in Long Island Sound, with the adjacent scenery;
3—A view of York on Lake Ontorio, with the fortifications;
4—Characteristic Scenery on the Hudson River;
5—View of New London, Connecticut, with the adjacent scenery;
6—View of Lemen Hill, near Philadelphia, the seat of Henry Pratt, Esq.
7—The tomb of Washington, at Mount Vernon.
8—View at the Great Bend of the Susquehanna.
9—View of the Upper Falls of Solomon's Creek, Lazerne county, Pa.
10—View of the Lower Falls of Solomon's Creek.
11—View of the Cattskill Mountains, from the Hudson.
12—View of Fort Niagara, on Lake Ontario, from the Light House on the British side.

These Views are executed in the best style of Philadelphia engraving, from drawings made upon spot. Each plate will be accompanied by a full and accurate description thereof, so as to make it perfectly intelligible to every person.

The work will be printed and issued to subscribers in the first style, on superior paper, and with a handsomely printed cover, and delivered to subscribers at the very low price of One Dollar per copy. Flexible covers will be used for country subscribers, so that they can be safely sent by mail.

☞ Any gentleman, postmasters and others who will interest themselves to procure ten subscribers and remit $10 to the Editor, shall receive twelve copies. From the very flattering patronage already received (1200 subscribers having put down their names) this volume will probably be succeeded by another, as soon as other plates can be engraved. All orders from the country will be promptly attended to.

Address, T. K. GREENBANK,

No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia.

Sept. 16 mm

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Fratt Street. BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. wm

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL.

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stag[e]

THE Subscriber continues to keep handsome establishment, a few doors [from] his old stand, in a very central part of town, where he is prepared at all times [for] the reception of travellers, and others [who] may please give him a call. His [house is] well furnished; the rooms private and [com]fortable; his bar supplied with a choice [se]lection of the best Liquors; his stables [supplied] with good provender, and his prices regu[lat]ed by the times. By strict attention [to] business, he flatters himself with a con[tinu]ation of those customers who have been [li]beral heretofore, to whom he gratefully [ac]knowledges himself indebted.

The publics obt. servant,

WM. C. RIDGAW[AY]

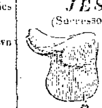
N.B. His Hack runs to the Cam[bridge] wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland [on] her arrival from Baltimore every Tues[day and] Friday evening. Also for the conveya[nce of] passengers from his house to the boat [on her] departure every Wednesday and Sat[urday] morning, free of charge. He has, for the [ac]commodation of persons who are going [to] Baltimore, rented a private stable with [a] grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purp[ose of] taking at livery horses at a low price, [which] shall be regulated by the price of gra[in] &c. he is prepared at all times with [hor]ses and carriages, for the conveya[nce of] Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C.

Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. HALL)



Saddle, Harnes[s] AND Trunk-Maker,

No. 127 Market St[reet] (near the new City [Hall]) BALTIMORE,

RESPECTFULLY informs his f[riends] and the public, that he continues the Sa[ddlery] business in all its varieties, at the old [estab]lished stand for many years occup[ied by] Messrs. William & Richard Hall, whe[re he] keeps constantly on hand a of warranted materials and workm[anship] which he will sell at wholesale or re[tail] as reasonable terms as can be afforded [in this] or any other city.

Large and General Assortment of

Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Tr[unks,] Veleices, Saddlebags, Colla[rs,] Military Equipments, &c.

August 19th, 1828.

STATE OF MARYLAND, S[C.]

Somerset County Orphans C[ourt,]

Aug. 26th, [1828.]

{SEAL} ON application of S[EVERN] MISTER, Exr. of R[ichard] EVANS, late of Somer[set coun]ty, deceased, it is ordered that he give the [notice] required by law, for creditors to ex[hibit their] claims against the said deceased, and [that the] same be published once in each [week for three] successive weeks in one of the papers [printed] at Princess Anne

True copy. Test.

JAMES POLK, Register of [Wills] for Somerset county.

In compliance with the above [order]

Notice is hereby given,

That the subscriber, of Somerset co[unty, hath] obtained from the Orphans Court of [Somer]set county, in Maryland, letters of adm[inistra]tion on the personal estate of R[ICHARD] EVANS, late of said county, d[eceased.] All persons having claims against [the said] deceased, are hereby warned to ex[hibit the] same, with the vouchers thereof, to [the sub]scriber, on or before the 25th [of March] next, they may otherwise by law be [excluded] from all benefit of the said estate. [Given under] my hand this 26th of Aug. 1828.

SEVERN MIST[ER,]

Exr. of R. E[vans.]

Sept. 2, 1828. k

NOTICE.

ALL persons indebted to the [late] Richard Evans, deceased, by [note or] open account, are hereby requ[ested to make] payment to the subscriber on or [before the] 15th day of October next, other[wise he will] be obliged to pursue a legal cour[se to com]pel the same.

SEVERN MISTER E[xr.]

R. E.

Sept. 2, 1828.

Constable's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri F[acias issued] by Joshua C[...] a justice of t[he peace] in and for Somerset county at the s[uit of] [...]s A. Boyer, use of Joseph Rich[...] Levin Wilson, use of Littleton [...] William King of Wm. I have s[ei]zed in execution the following [property, to] wit—two yoke of oxen, [...] and interest of said [...] in [...] ground near Pouching Landi[ng,] county—which I shall proceed to [sell on the] premises, on Wednesday the 8th [of Oc]tober, between the hours of 12 and [...] P M. to the highest and best bidde[r] to satisfy the above named writ.

JOSEPH RI[...]

Sept. 16

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of sundry writs of [Venditioni] Exponas issued out of Somerset co[unty court] and to me directed, Isaac Dicker[son, use of] George Jones and Robert Jones, [executors] of Charles Jones against George [...] and George Matthews, I have seiz[ed and ta]ken in execution the following pr[operty, to] wit—A yoke of oxen, part of a tr[act] called Stave-Yard, containing [...] [...] part of a tract of land [...] known, containing 126 acres, [...] which property has been here[tofore ...] by me under writs of Fieri Facias [...] I shall proceed to sell on Tuesd[ay ...] inst. at the Court House door, at [...] 1 o'clock P. M. for cash, to the [highest bidder] to satisfy the above mentioned [...] county levy and officers' fees for [...] 1825, 1826 and 1827.

ROBT. STEWART, [...]

Sept 16

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1828. NO. 29.

From the [Harrisburg] Pennsylvania Reporter

SIX MILITIA MEN.

A true account of the Six Militia Men, by the Rev. Mr. Paine, who was called upon by themselves to attend them during their confinement and execution.

The Central Committe of Pennsylvania, understanding that the Rev. Mr. PAINE, of the State of New York, was on a visit to his father-in-law, Archibald M' Allister Esqr. of this county, and that he had held the appointment of Chaplain in the army under General Jackson, at the very time and place of the execution of those six misguided and unfortunate militiamen, whose punishment has been so unrighteously seized upon by the hirelings of the present administration, to excite public feeling and blast the reputation of one of the greatest heroes and patriots known to the country or the world: and believing from the situation in which Mr. Paine stood both with the officers and soldiers of the army at that time, that he would be led to a most intimate and perfect knowledge of all the facts which transpired on that occasion, they were induced to address him with the following letter, requesting such information on the subject as he might possess. Most fortunately for the friends of truth and injured virtue, in this section of the country, Mr. Paine does possess a full knowledge of the whole affair, from the first transgression of the six mutineers, until they breathed their last in expiation of their guilt, drawn from his personal observation on the spot, and his official duties as a christian, in prayer with them, from the time of their sentence until their execution; and has consented to detail the facts relative to the whole transaction. Mr. Paine is a clergyman belonging to the society of Methodists, of unexceptionable general character, and has few superiors in genuine christian piety. He is a man who has no interest inducing him to relate any thing but that which is strictly true, and no other motive for his doing it than that which ought to excite every good man to the same thing, a desire to stop the mouth of calumny by a propagation of the truth. The indignation Mr. Paine felt on learning how much the whole of that solemn transaction had been misrepresented and falsified by designing men for the very worst of purposes. Let the people read Binn's forged letter signed John Harris, the numerous "coffin," and monumental "handbills," which are circulating in every part of the country, without the authority of a respectable name, and the infamous publication originated by Binns, signed "an eye witness," and then read the statement of the Rev. Mr. Paine, who was the last earthly comforter of the men, whose death has caused these enormous outrages upon truth and justice. Let the people we pray, carefully read these papers, and we feel assured that they will turn with shuddering abhorrence from the depravity which has made such bold attempts to deceive them. We lay the correspondence before the public, as follows.

LETTER TO MR PAINE.

Harrisburg, Sept 12th, 1828

Rev. Mr. Paine,

Sir—Without the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with you, we take the liberty of addressing you upon a subject which now deeply interests the freemen of this country, and with which, we are informed you are well acquainted.

For the last twelve months an incessant volley of slander has been levelled against the public and private character of General Jackson, who is now emphatically the candidate of the people for the presidency of the United States. The accusation against this great man, most relied upon by his enemies, is the charge that he inhumanly and illegally caused to be executed six unoffending militia men, at the head of whom stood a man called John Harris. We have been informed, sir, that you held an honourable post in Jackson's army, during the whole of the campaign embracing the period in which these men were executed, and that you have a full knowledge of the whole transaction.—The general committee of Pennsylvania, therefore, respectfully ask you to give a full statement of the facts involved in the trial and execution of these men, according to your knowledge, formed from actual observation.

We plead, sir, an excuse for thus troubling you, the great interest taken by the people of Pennsylvania, in the momentous struggle which now agitates the union. We plead, sir, the slandered reputation of one of our most distinguished citizens, a patriot and a christian, who has "filled the measure of his country's glory" to overflowing. We plead, sir, the character of that bleeding libelled country, and her military glory. Thus actuated, we trust you will pardon an intrusion upon your other avocations; and believing you venerate the character of the slandered Jackson, because you know the man, we have no doubt but you will cheerfully raise your voice in support of injured virtue.

We tender our hearty good wishes for your happiness, and remain individually, very respectfully, your friends and obedient servants,

C. Blythe, S. Douglas,
Alexander Mahon, S. C. Stambaugh,
Francis R. Shunk, John C. Bucher,
N. B. Wood, Joel Bailey,
Samuel Pool, S. D. Franks,
Robert Harris,

General committee of Correspondence.

Fort Hunter, Sept. 16, 1828.

Gentlemen,—Your letter of the 12th inst. addressed to me, is now before me to which I beg leave to reply. In matters of a political nature I have my opinion of principles and men, by which I hope always to regulate my conduct as an individual—but I wish to avoid taking any part in the electioneering strifes that precede our popular elections, as far as I can consistent with duty. The floods of corrupt and moral depravity that are sometimes exhibited on these occasions are very afflicting to a thinking mind—and perhaps there never was an instance in which moral corruption appeared in stronger features than on the present. It would seem as if we were freed from all restraint human or divine, and were at liberty to break forth in floods of calumny, detraction and dissimulation; in which, we may employ the most serious subjects. This game is played off too on our beloved country, in one of its most solemn public acts, that of choosing its chief ruler. And although I have every reason to object to any enlistment in such a strife, yet I can feel no objection to state such facts as have come within my knowledge in relation to the subject upon which you call my attention. In complying with your request I wish to confine myself to a statement of facts and not a statement of opinions—and this I would confine chiefly to the execution of the "six militia men," alluded to in your letter. On this subject I have seen a letter written by Col. Gilbert C. Russell to Maj. J. L. Campbell, dated July 29th, 1827, to which I beg leave to refer you. From the knowledge I obtained in the army of that transaction I know of no material point on which I do not feel authorized to corroborate Col. Russell's statement. Col. Russell was commander of the 3d regiment of U. S. Infantry, but commanded a brigade of militia to which I belonged at the time of the execution. In reference to the particular fact stated by Col. R. relative to the time for which the "six militia men" were mustered, I would say that they were raised and mustered into service for the term of six months—and these men themselves most certainly understood it so. In relation to the mutiny and desertion, these men did in violation of all order and at the expense of the authority of the army on the 19th of September, as I understood, one day before the term of three months had expired, killed the beeves of the army, broke open the stores of provision, provisioned themselves and marched off on the next day, as if they would take it upon themselves to be judges of the law, and in defiance of the authority of the army, go their own way! And I would also add that they were arraigned, tried and condemned by a court martial, as it is stated in the letter of Col. R.

There can be no doubt but that the above facts stand in the light they are here represented. They were so understood in the army, and I never heard of an opinion in contradiction of them—and I think I had as good an opportunity to have heard it, if there had been a dissenting opinion, as any man in the army. The nature of my situation and duty were such as necessarily associated me with all classes of men from the highest in command to the poorest wounded and sick soldier in the Hospital—and it was my privilege and duty to be on terms of familiarity with the men which the discipline of the army would not extend to officers of the line. It was important that the men should be free to open their minds to me without embarrassment, and vent to me their most secret distresses; that I might advise, sympathise with, or console as the case might require. Yet with all the familiar intercourse it was my lot to have with the members of the army, I do not remember to have heard any opinion expressed contrary to the one above; and censuring in the remotest degree, the conduct of Gen. Jackson—nor did I ever hear a murmur that any thing had been transacted in an unfair manner on their trial, or that, there was any injustice in their sentence. In this statement I include the opinions of the unhappy sufferers themselves, for it was my lot to attend them at the most trying time and on the most solemn occasion. I was the chaplain called on by themselves to attend them, to which request each individual signed his name to wit—John Harris, Henry Lewis and others, being six militia men and one regular. At this trying period, when the unhappy men should have stated to me every circumstance upon their mind, and which they wished to express before they left the world, I do not recollect to have heard the least suggestion that injustice had been done them.

I would now state the particulars of their execution. Some [illegible] days previous to the day of execution, an officer from Fort Charlotte at Mobile, brought me a written request from seven criminals in the Fort viz: John Harris, Henry Lewis and others, six militia men and one regular, signed by each one in his own hand writing, desiring me to visit them, which I regularly attended to from that day to their death, instructing, exhorting and praying with them. But a few days before their execution, a brigadier Gen. T. came to me, requesting me, in his own name and in the name of other officers of the army, by whose desire he came, to draw a petition for the reprieve of those men, if it could be done consistent with the safety and authority of the Army, saying it was the opinion of the officers that it would be the most proper for me to be the author of such a petition. I accordingly commenced writing, as soon as I could get a moment from other duties.—But Gen. T. soon returned, and told me it would be of no use to write, for the officers on further considering the case, were satisfied it could not be done consistent with the safety and due subordination in the army. There was therefore, no alternative but that they must suffer the penalties of the violated law. I then discontinued writing and renewed my labours with the criminals. In consequence of this opinion of the officers, no application within my knowledge was made to Gen. Jackson, who was then at New Orleans, from 2 to 300 miles from Mobile, for the reprieve of these men.

At the same time that these six men were convicted, there were upwards of one hundred persons convicted and sentenced to various punishments for being concerned in this mutiny, some of these were on account of palliating circumstances, recommended to Gen. Jackson by the court martial for pardon—and I believe in every instance in which there was a recommendation for pardon, a pardon was granted.

The sum of what I feel authorized to state is this. The guilt of these men did not exist in the opinion of the court martial only; but in the mind of the whole army. And the sentence of the court martial was the necessary sentence of the law, expressed by the whole army, for aught I ever learned; and from aught I ever saw or heard, I could infer nothing else, but that the whole army, officers and soldiers, and the condemned with the rest, supposing that the confirming of the proceedings of the court martial was an imperious duty on Gen. Jackson.

But their guilt having been shown, the sentence of the law having been pronounced, and the demands of the law against them having been published by the confirmation of the sentence; officers were ready to say, if this will suffice, and if the safety of the army and the honour of its laws can be received by this, and [illegible] of mercy these men could be saved, it was a most desirable thing. Hence the application to me to draw a petition. But when they became satisfied it could not be done with a due regard to the safety and subordination of the army, the [illegible] of the officers still appeared in their readiness to forward me in the discharge of my solemn duty in behalf of these men's souls. And I have endeavoured to shew, from my intercourse with these our unfortunate fellow-men, in their last moments, that the last wishes of he at my concerning them was not in vain, for God left us not without a hope in their death. I have thought it proper to advert to their religious feelings, on account, of the connexions of the deceased into whose hands this may fall. Thinking it proper that they should have a clear statement of the prospects of these men in their last moments.

I have thought it most barbarous to sport with their feelings as some statements have seemed to do, which I have met with. They seem to make use of the dead and the agonies of the dying, in the most wanton manner, to insult the feelings of the living.

As to court martials I seldom spent a moment at one whilst in the army. It was not my place. It was business that belonged to other men, and I had my own duties to attend to: of all men in the world, it least becomes a preacher of the gospel to interfere with the authority of an army. they would be the most dangerous men if they did so.—Men might be led into improprieties in the most inconsiderate manner by their means. The very common argument would be the preacher would not knowingly lead us into any thing wrong, and he is more capable of judging of that which is right, than we are. But instead of this, a chaplain filling his own place and faithfully attending to his own duty, is one of the most important members of an army. If it is proper for one, to attend to the bodies of the men in an army, what must a chaplain be, whose business it is to attend to men's souls? Gen. Jackson was sensible of this, and never went on an expedition, either great or small, from the commencement to the close of the war, without his chaplains, with nearly all of whom I was acquainted. They were generally men of strict piety, most zealous in the cause of religion. It seemed to be Gen Jackson's object, in all departments, to select men who were most decidedly what they professed to be, and who would attend to their own duties, without interfering with the duties of others. This will appear in the following anecdote. When the battle was about to commence at New Orleans, on the 8th of January, on which was to turn the fate of the place, two chaplains with whom I was well acquainted, willing to do any thing they could at the trying time, came to the General and said, "what shall we do?" Pray every minute said the General. And as the chaplains have told me, if ever one of his orders were attended to, that was, for they were in prayer to God every minute whilst that battle was fighting.

I would only add, that we were expecting a general engagement with the British every hour when the execution of the militiamen took place.

In making the above statements, I have endeavoured to set every thing in the clearest light I could, as I understood the facts at the time of their transpiring. Yet I had to do it from memory, without the help of papers, in consequence of my absence from home. And now respectfully submit them to the committee.

Your obedient Servant,

SELA PAINE.

Now my reflecting and patriotic countrymen, I would seriously ask you—If the Court Martial, which consisted of the BROTHER SOLDIERS, AND NEIGHBOURS of these guilty men—DID NOT recommend them to PARDON: If the other officers, and the WHOLE ARMY in fact, as we are told by the pious Minister of the Methodist church, the Rev. Mr. Paine, after their trial and condemnation, COULD NOT, CONSISTENT WITH THE SAFETY AND DUE SUBORDINATION OF THE ARMY," recommended them to pardon How then could General Jackson, consistent with the DUTY HE OWED HIS COUNTRY; and the army which he commanded, have dared to interfere with the due administration of the penalties of the VIOLATED LAW.

John Quincy Adams' Letter to Levitt Harris.

Below, the reader will find the noted letter of John Q. Adams to Levitt Harris, written at the most gloomy period of the late war. It was after reading this letter, that an individual [illegible] there are two parties in the United States, that cannot support John Q. Adams with propriety, to wit: the Republicans and the Federalists!" We ask every republican, every devoted lover of his country, to read this letter, then lay his hand upon his heart, and ask whether he thinks the true spirit of patriotism animates the bosom that could dictate such a letter at such an epoch We ask every federalist, every devoted lover of his country, to read the same letter, and ask himself whether the man that could secretly write it, and stigmatise the whole federal party with being "sold to the British by their prejudices and their ignorance," is entitled to the support of federalists.

Will the Republicans support the cold-blooded despiser of our glorious struggle for independence? Will the Federalists support the cold blooded despiser of the second struggle for independence? They cannot with any degree of consistency. Let any man read it, ponder it over, and contemplate the cold, philosophic indifference which pervades it, the sneering manner in which he stigmatises as "feeble and penurious" a government, on the spoils of which he has fattened all his life—and then decide whether such a man has any claim to the support of either federalists or democrats:—Frederick Citizen.

Ghent, 16th November, 1814.

Dear Sir, I have just now the pleasure of receiving your favour of 14 26 October and am happy to learn from yourself, the confirmation of your recovery; of which, and of illness, I had a few days since been informed by a letter from my wife.

Near the close of the month of August, it was our expectation that the negotiation here would have terminated in a very few days. It soon after became apparent that the intention of the British government was to keep it open, and to shape its demands according to the course of events in Europe and America. The policy still continues to pervade the British Cabinet. Nothing decisive is yet known to them to have occurred, either at Vienna, or the other hemisphere, and accordingly they temporize still. Unless something should happen to fix their wavering pretensions and purposes it will belong to the American government alone to bring our business to a point. This on their part would certainly be an honourable and spirited course of conduct, and I should have no doubt of its being pursued, if "the desire of peace were not paramount to every other consideration."

The occurrences of the war in America have been of a diversified nature. Success have alternately attended the armies of both belligerents; and hitherto have left them nearly where they were at the commencement of the campaign. It has been, on our part, merely defensive, with the single exception of the taking of Fort Erie, with which it began. The battles of Chipewa and Bridgewater, the defence of Fort Erie on the 15th of August, and the naval action on Lake Champlain on the 11th Sept. have redounded to our glory as well as to our advantage; while the loss of Washington the capitulation of Alexandria and of Washington county, Massachusetts, and of Nantucket, have been more disgraceful to us than injurious. The Defence of Baltimore has given us little more to be proud of, than the Demonstration against it has afforded to the enemy.—Prevost's retreat from Plattsburg has been more disgraceful to them than honourable to us; and Wellington's veterans, the fire-eater Brisbane, and the fire brand Cockburn, have kept the rawest of our militia in countenance by their expertness at running away: The general issue of the campaign is yet to come, and there is too much reason to apprehend that it will be unfavourable to our side. Left, by a concurrence of circumstances unexampled in the annals of the world, to struggle alone and friendless against the collossal power of Great Britain—fighting in reality against her for the cause of all Europe, with all Europe coldly looking on, basely bound not to raise in our favour a helping hand, secretly wishing us success, and not daring so much as to cheer us in the strife; what could be expected from the first issues of this unequal conflict, but DISASTER and DISCOMFITURE to us?"

Divided among ourselves, more in passion than interest, with half the Nation SOLD by their PREJUDICES and IGNORANCE to our enemy, with A FEEBLE AND PENURIOUS GOVERNMENT, with five frigates for a navy, and scarcely five efficient regiments for an army how can it be expected that we should resist the mass of force which that gigantic power has collected TO CRUSH US AT A BLOW?!!!

This too, in the moment he has chosen to break through all the laws of war, acknowledged and respected by civilized nations, under the false pretence of retaliation, Cochrane has formally declared the determination to destroy and lay waste all the towns on the sea coast which may be assailable. The ordinary horrors of war are mildness and mercy in comparison with what British vengeance and malace have denounced upon us. We must go through it all—I trust in God we shall rise triumphant over it all—but the first shock is the most terrible part of the process, and it is that which we are now enduring. The Transit will probably sail about the beginning of next month from Bordeaux; your despatches by Mr. Forbes will go in her, if we get them in time. I have heard heard nothing from Nesselrode. The Congress at Vienna has scarcely yet opened—but all the important arrangements are made, and there is no doubt that the termination will be pacific.

"I am with high regard and consideration, dear sir, your very humble and obedient servant. JOHN QUINCY ADAMS."

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATIS.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, OCT. 14, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory." Jefferson.

"Whose services to this nation, entitle him to its HIGHEST REWARDS."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties:

Thomas K. Carroll.

Maryland Election Returns,

For October, 1828.

JACKSON.			ADAMS.
Worcester County.
F. A. Boyer	1086	J. Mitchell	927
S. Roach	1044	Hopkins	918
S R. Smith	1026	J. Powell	899
L. Hitch	988	J. Williams	875
D. Richardson	53
Somerset County.
Four Adams men, as published in our last paper.
Dorchester County
Hardcastle	743	Phelps	893
Douglass	701	Eccleston	743
Jackson	570	Wright	742
Ennalls	532	Steele	741
Williams	304	Keene	294
Jones	157
Talbot County
Henrix	558	Hughlett	790
Nabb	537	Denny	755
Harrison	507	Spencer	735
Webb	576	Millis	730
Caroline County
Keene	572	Burchenal	672
Brown	507	Hardcastle	628
Thawley	490	Pearson	623
Manship	372	Willis	594
Culbreth	169
Queen Anne's
Grason	666	Turpin	641
Wright, 3d	644	Roberts	633
Oldson	632	Nicholson	630
Sudler	637	Earickson	631
Kent County
Harris	502	Gsborne	539
Scott	490	Campbell	538
Frisbie	486	Hynson	515
Ringgold	466	Brown	502
Cecil County
Evans	1055	Henderson	909
Giles	1042	Pennington	954
Townsend	1025	Thomas	996
Mercer	996	Physic	898
Harford County
Hope	1233	Williams	1076
Johns	1223	Alderson	1066
Sutton	1160	Chauncey	944
Smithson	1152	Bradford	943
Baltimore County
Turner	2652	Somerville	1505
Price	2641	Philpot	1473
Showers	2463	Snowden	1417
Ely	2644	Hillen	1367
Baltimore City
M'Mahon	4385	Tiernan	4012
Steuart	4303	Richardson	3923
Anne Arundel County.
Sellman	1070	Stewart	1219
Linthicum	1070	Hood	1213
Warfield	1068	Kent	1188
Matthews	1049	Stocket	1140
Annapolis City.
Crabb	158	Watkins	153
Anderson	148	Wells, jr.	149
Calvert County
Parran	320	Beckett	560
Wales	247	Billingly	537
Bower	254	Turner	548
		Smith	425
St. Mary's County.
The four Adams candidates are elected.
Charles County.
Stonestreet	571	Chapman	735
McPherson	532	Mitchell	728
Thompson	529	King	705
Queen	500	Rogerson	693
Prince George's County
Somerville	716	Semmes	765
Peach	701	Gantt	748
Snowden	682	Duvall	731
Brooke	638	Beall	692
Montgomery County
Peters	769	Gaither	1008
Lansdale	762	Gittings	1017
Dunlop	730	Lee	970
Griffith	704	Hughes	973
Frederick County
Thomas	2989	Kemp	3291
Lorentz	2960	Shriver	[illegible]
Shriver	2977	McPherson	3285
Snyder	2946	Bowlus	3282
Washington County
Yoe	1540	Neill	1506
Shafer	1626	Tidball	1428
Beatty	1556	Bowles	1458
Miller	1590	Gabby	1416
Allegheny County
This county remains to be heard from.

RECAPITULATION.

Counties	Jackson	Adams
Baltimore city	2	0
Annapolis	1	1
Baltimore county	4	0
Anne Arundel	0	4
Frederick	0	4
Harford	4	0
Prince Georges	1	3
Cecil	3 one tie	0
Kent	0 one tie	3
Charles	0	4
Montgomery	0	4
Washington	4	0
Dorchester	1	3
Talbot	0	4
Calvert	0	4
Caroline	0	4
Queen Anne's	3	1
Somerset	0	4
Worcester	4	0
St. Mary's	0	4
Allegheny, not heard from.	27	47
In the Senate there are from the E. Shore	4	2
W. Shore	6	3

From the Baltimore Republican of Oct. 8.

☞Our state elections as far as heard from show FOUR electoral votes certain for Jackson.

The true majority of the Jackson over the Adams party in this city, as evidenced by the election of Delegates to the State Legislature, is 462. The Adams party said it was not more last year, and yet they are fools or knaves enough, to say, now, that they decreased our majority. For our own parts, we doubt not the real Jackson majority is much more than 462 in the city. But this is enough to secure the district.

NEW-YORK.

☞The election of charter officers for the city of Albany, on Tuesday last, resulted in the complete success of the Jackson ticket by an average majority of four hundred and eighty-eight votes!

The Albany Daily Advertiser, an Adams paper, says—"The cannon from Clinton Hill was sounding the triumph of Jacksonism: when this paper went to press.

B. Statesman, Oct. 4.

GLORIOUS VICTORY!!

We have BEATEN the Coalition in PHILADELPHIA! ADAMS and CLAY have been driven from the last inch of ground they had in Pennsylvania—JOHN SERGEANT, the Panama Minister's district is no longer for the Administration! This was all they had in old Pennsylvania, and THEY HAVE LOST IT! Binns and the rest of them, bragged just before the elections that the Adams party would carry the day, and gave our friends warning that they would do so—that we might not say we were taken by surprise. We HAVE BEATEN THEM! A friend who was at Philadelphia when the election took place, and did not leave there till after the result was made known, tells us the Adams party have given up the ship.

Where JOHN SERGEANT, Mr. Adams' Panama Minister was elected to Congress last year, we have beaten them by a GLORIOUS MAJORITY.—B. Republican.

What strangers mean when they speak of Philadelphia, that is, the city and other incorporated districts, has given to the Jackson inspectors, an aggregate majority of almost three thousand votes. This is the majority in the town of Philadelphia,—the city and its different liberties, northern and southern.

From the country parts of the county, we have no returns except from Kingsessing and Bustleton. In the former we have carried our Inspectors by a majority of 16. In Bustleton no opposition was made to our ticket. Both were decidedly Federal districts. We hope the Federalists of Pennsylvania will yet redeem their character, and shew that they have not approved of the means taken to injure the noble minded Jackson.

Phil. Gaz.

In the first Congressional District, the majority for the Jackson Inspectors is about 1000.

In the second district (which is at present represented by Mr. Sergeant) the majority for Jackson Inspectors is 526.

In the third district, the Jackson majority is overwhelming.—Ib.

The vote for Inspectors yesterday, in the city of Philadelphia, fell short only seventy one of the heaviest vote ever given at a general election.

There is a great parade of sympathy, a great weeping and wailing in the ebony prints about the six mutineers, but nobody has heard of a cent having been given to their families by these benevolent Adams men. One tenth part of the money spent by the Adams men in printing Coffin Handbills and other trash, would have made the children of these Adams patriots comfortable for life—Boston Statesman.

Strange—but true!—John Binns, an Adams editor in Philadelphia, denounces the Federalists as Monarchists! And in the same paper publishes a ticket, composed partly of Federalists, to which he asks the support of the people! Hence, if Binns speak truth, the people are solicited to support Monarchists!! Admirers of the principles of Washington and Hamilton, what think you of this? What think you of the party that upholds such doctrine?

TO THE PEOPLE.

Now is the time to ACT, and secure yourselves and your posterity from the YOKE! The MEN IN POWER have combined to prevent the PEOPLE from INTERFERING IN ELECTIONS—and Mr. Adams and Mr. Clay aver that they are not fit Judges of who ought to be President—that the HIGHER ORDER of POLITICIANS are alone qualified to choose the President—that the SUCCESSION of the Secretary of State, WITHOUT ANY ELECTION is the only SAFE PLAN for them—that FARMERS and MECHANICS bad better attend to their business and leave politics to the DEMAGOGUES at Washington. [See National Intelligencer for 1827.]—P. Mer.

THE QUESTION, now at issue between the People and the Higher Order of Politicians, is one of so vast and important a character, that we feel bound to recur to it, for the information and benefit of the public. It is not simply the election or non-election of the Hero of New Orleans. But it is properly, whether the Government shall become one of OFFICIAL SUCCESSION IN THE PERSON OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, without the efficient intervention of the Right of Suffrage. Excluding from the question, therefore, all consideration of the merits and demerits of Mr. Adams, let us enquire, whether the doctrine proclaimed by Mr. Clay, as a SAFE PRECEDENT, is worthy of confirmation, by the acquiescence and support of a free and enlightened people; who fought through seven years of an arduous Revolution, to resist the IMPLIED POWER of TAXATION, in a Government which they acknowledge themselves bound in all other respects to obey; of a people who have sacrificed hundreds of millions to repel the coercive payment of a HALF-PENNY IMPOST—and who boast themselves the freest and noblest on earth.

Whatever may be the objections that exist against Mr. Adams, they become light and frivolous, in comparison with the importance of the PRINCIPLE of SUCCESSION involved in his pretensions. Mr. Adams' election would necessarily annihilate the agency of the People in the Government—Mr. Clay would of course succeed him: and whoever the latter thought fit to ADOPT as HIS HEIR would follow in the LINE of INHERITANCE. Is such a SYSTEM compatible with liberty? Is such a routine of Government worthy of a people who are free and sovereign? Truly not. The Declaration of our Fathers, that all men are equal, commands us to resist a system which arrogates exclusive power to a chosen Few of the higher order of politicians! Let us look back to ROME and VENICE to see how the tyranny of an oligarchy ground the people in the dust. Let us remember the "DECEMVIRS," and the 'TEN'—the 'DIRECTORY' of France, and the 'THIRTY' of Athens—ib.

TO THE POLLS.

The hour is coming, when every freeman will be called upon to record his vote, on the greatest question that has agitated this country, since the 4th of July, 1776. The end of all our political controversy is on the day of election! It is at the polls we consummate all our exertions, and terminate our patriotism!—On that day, let no friend of Liberty—Jackson and our Country absent himself from the place appointed to receive and record his vote, as he values the rights of a freeman, and would shun the yoke of a slave. Although the election of General Jackson is certain, still it ought to be our pride and our boast, to give him a brilliant majority in every district! We should be satisfied with nothing, as long as there is a chance of adding one vote to our list, for the VETERAN SOLDIER of the revolution; the last survivor of that glorious epoch, for whom we can ever record our votes, as the successor and parallel of George Washington.

To animate us in this contest, we have all, that of right, is dear and precious to man, to contend for—all that of wrong, that can be endured and suffered by a people—all prospects of success, that can give the colour of certainty to the future, and convert a contingency into the realization of a present blessing. We have TWO THIRDS of the States of the Union, engaged as allies in the same holy cause. NEW YORK, always a giant in the cause of Republicanism and the people, now comes to our aid with the colossal force of 36 Electoral Votes. NEW JERSEY follows with her steady and firm phalanx of republican patriots. NEW HAMPSHIRE is on the eve of setting to her sisters a glorious example of entire devotion to Jackson and the people. PENNSYLVANIA never quailing in times of peril, offers her eight and twenty Electoral Votes to swell our majority. Then follows old VIRGINIA, firm and true, steady and warm, zealous and efficient, and next to Pennsylvania, expands our triumphant forces by the herculean weight of her four and twenty votes. To her, we may add NORTH CAROLINA, strong and true to the Jefferson School—SOUTH CAROLINA, fierce, bold, and determined in the cause of liberty and right. GEORGIA, never wanting when the constitution is infringed, the country in danger, or her character traduced—OHIO, steady, brave, & resolute in the cause of freedom and public virtue—KENTUCKY, valiant, free, fearless, & independent—TENNESSEE, as devoted to her country, as the Spartans of old—and like them, ever ready to fight, suffer—live on black broth—and die for liberty and their native land. These States, combined with their younger sisters of the WEST and SOUTH, all act in concert with us on this great question; and promise to limit the number of the votes of the Usurper, to the wretched aggregate of sixty-one.

In such a case as ours, we require no new excitement to impell us to discharge our duty to our country. The name and virtues of Jackson are sufficient. It is only necessary, that we refresh our minds with a view of the sacred character of the cause we are engaged in, to rally every genuine republican voter to the Polls.—Ib.

ABNER LACOCK.

The old story which has been so often denied and refuted, that Gen. Jackson threatened to cut off the ears of this noted personage, has been recently revived, new modelled, and again ushered before the public.—Formerly, after Commodore Decatur's death, he was the witness of the Coalition, they deeming it more safe to appeal to the dead than the living. But since Mrs. Decatur has come forth to rescue the reputation of her gallant husband, from such a polluting connection, they have been compelled to get up other proof. A Mr. John Sullivan of Baltimore, has written a letter to the public, in which he averts that he heard Gen. Jackson threaten to "cut off the scoundrel's ears."—This Mr. Sullivan has not sworn to this statement—We place no reliance on any statements coming from the Administration party, for they are discredited witnesses, knowing to have been guilty both of forgery and perjury, to injure Gen. Jackson; and we are not without our fears that they may add to those crimes, that of murder! for the elder Adams has laid it down as a maxim, that a great family would sooner annihilate heaven and earth, than fail of carrying their points.

We are surprised that the Administration party have not proved more. They can prove any thing, with their willing and suborned witnesses. The same party, proved quite satisfactorily, (to themselves) in times gone by, that Thomas Jefferson, whom John Quincy Adams called the Islam of Democracy, and whom Josiah Quincy moved in Congress to impeach, was an infidel, a low debauchee, a coward and a traitor. And there are at this day, thousands upon thousands of that same party who yet religiously believe in the truth of all those charges. The same party proved that Governor Sullivan stole a horse; and with the official sanction of the Legislature of Massachusetts, they also proved that Great Britain had impressed only one hundred and fifty-seven American seamen, when it was well known that at that moment she held more than two thousand of our brave tars in bondage. They are never at a loss to prove the most infamous crimes against any republican, however spotless his character; and they seek to give a force to their falsehoods, by a hypocritical profession to all the religion of the country. But in this affair of Mr. Lacock's, let us look a little both to him and his story, and then to the consistency of these dear lovers of Congressional privilege.

Abner Lacock's son was an army contractor in the Seminole war. The contract was obtained through the influence of Abner, who was in the U. States Senate, from Pennsylvania; and it has been strongly suspected that Abner was secretly, (as he could not legally be openly,) concerned in the contract, as young Lacock appeared more solicitous to secure the profits of the job, than the comfort of the troops. The provisions were not furnished in season, and were of bad quality. General Jackson, who always paid particular attention to the comfort of his troops, and the good of the service, rejected the bad rations and procured good ones in their stead, at the expense of the contractor. For this act against young Mr. Lacock, old Mr. Lacock bore General Jackson sore hatred, and availed himself of his official influence as Senator to the United states, to add greater force to the calumnies he put forth against Gen. Jackson, in the report on the Seminole war. The Senate of the United States expressed their opinion of Mr. Lacock in rejecting the report; and the State of Pennsylvania approved of this decision in an equally tangible shape, by electing Mr. Lacock—to private life. For ten years the sea of oblivion has covered him, and would have covered him for ever, had not the Administration pulled him up by the ears, and pressed him into their service, to vindicate the outraged privileges of the Senate!—It is singular, however, that they should be so shocked at this threat of Gen. Jackson, even if it were made, which is yet unsupported by credible proof; for they support Mr. Clay, who actually shot at, and attempted to kill John Randolph, a Senator from Virginia, for words spoken in debate under the protection of the constitution. Mr. Clay is Mr. Adams' prime minister—his head servant as it were—a part of the executive branch of the government; and yet Mr. Adams, who is bound by his oath which is registered in Heaven, to protect the Constitution, protects the man who violates it. Admitting, for the sake of argument, the charge against Gen. Jackson to be true, the Adams men have nought to say, for they supported Gen. Jackson for Vice President in 1824, when the charge, if true at all, was as true then as now. Besides, Gen. Jackson in making the remark, only expressed the indignation of an individual citizen against Mr. Lacock, whom he believed was prostituting his official station for the purpose of revenging private injuries. In the case of Mr. Clay, it was an open and daring attempt of the executive to bully down the freedom of debate in the highest Legislative branch of the government; an attempt which has so far been sanctioned by Mr. Adams, that he still retains the perpetrator of the outrage in his Cabinet. Not only this, but Mr. Clay is applauded in resolves by the warm-headed partisans of Adams in the Legislature of Massachusetts—in Mr. Everett's own convention in Middlesex—by the citizens of Rhode Island, and in many other places. Verily, the inconsistencies of the Adams men exceed, if possible, their dishonesty.—B. Statesman.

Certifiers and their Certificates.—We perceive that a Mr. John Sullivan, of this city has come out with a certificate of something which he heard General JACKSON say at a private social party, and this very important document is put into a handbill for circulation! The name of our respected friend Mr. Hugh Boyle, which was in the certificate as published in the newspapers, is omitted in the handbill—we presume because he did not choose to have his name used for such a purpose.

Mr. Sullivan is the proper judge of his own actions, and we shall not, at present, say any thing more on this subject than this—that we feel confident the character of Gen. JACKSON is above his reach.

[Bal. Rep.]

A convention consisting of 34 delegates, one from each Congressional district, held at Herkimer, New York, reported in favour of the nomination of MARTIN VAN BUREN for governor, and ENOS T. THROOP for lieut. governor. And the report was unanimously accepted by the convention.

We saw a coffin handbill the other day almost as big as a barn door. It had no less than seventeen coffins on it, this is almost three apiece for each of the militiamen.—What a pity it is that such things were not about in old Arnold's time. It would have been so grateful to his feelings to see how some of his countrymen venerate the memory of traitors. Hereafter the soldier who seeks for immortality, must mutiny, plunder and desert, in the face of the enemy, instead of fight and expose his life, and the Adams men will bear him with huzzas, up to the very temple of fame.—[Trenton Emporium.]

A Damper.—Mr. Solomon Clarke, of Nashville happening in Lexington a short time since, was introduced to Henry Clay, who accosted him to this effect: "Pray Mr. Clarke, in case of General Jackson's elected, what offices will he confer upon Col. Benton and his friend Tom Moore?" "Gen. Jackson is not in the habit of making appointments to office before his election!" returned Clarke.—Hes Bal.

Contents of the American Farmer

Of October 10, 1828.

On Shoeing Horses, with explanatory cuts; & on the Criteria of the Qualities of Horses for various purposes, from London's Encyclopedia, of Agriculture; an Address delivered before the Agricultural Society of S. Carolina, by Elias Horry; on the Pounding of Rice; On steam Engines for Draining Lands, enquiry as to the price of Engines; Sugar Lands of Louisiana; Wheat produced in France; Cotton crop in Tennessee;—Extract of a letter from Talbot county; Roman Apricots and Nectarines; Cochineal Insect introduced into Europe; to Destroy Worms and Bugs in Trees; a portable Ice House; to preserve Hams; Butter making; Rideau canal in Canada; Mauch Chunk Railway; Chesapeake and Ohio Canal; Inquiries for Pedigrees; Pedestrianism; Singular Race; Refining Sugar; Recovery of Drowned Persons; Editorial, Underwood's Pump, with a cut; Prices of country produce.

NOTICE.

THE Trustees of the Poor of Somerset county will meet on Friday the 14th of next November, at which time an OVERSEER of the Poor will be elected to serve for the year 1829. Persons wishing that situation will make known their proposals to some member of the Board on or before that day.

By order,
JAMES WILSON, clerk.
Oct 14 wm

Twenty-Five Cents Reward

RANAWAY from the subscriber about the end of last September, an indented apprentice to the Tailoring business, named JOSHUA H. SMITH. All persons are cautioned against harbouring, or trusting him, at their peril; and any person who will apprehend and deliver him to me, shall have the above reward, but no charges paid.

DAVID VANCE.
Salisbury, Oct. 14, 1828 wm

War, Pestilence, and Famine."

This horrible imprecation, this ific curse invoked upon his ntry, by an ambitious man in bitterness of disappointed amon, would seem to mean more n it at first wore the appearance From menaces in various quars, it seems to be the intention of desperate men on the side of Usurper, TO ATTEMPT THE E OF GEN. JACKSON, in case of election to the Presidency. We t before thought that our abus country had reached the lowest nt of degradation, in the impi calumnies heaped upon the d of this great man. We did conceive it possible that a low depth of infamy remained, into ich these national paricides ld fall; and we adduce, as some dence of our superior virtue o our antagonists, that we did even in imagination, prefigure horrible deed that is now threaed against the great benefactor ur country! Whatever disgrace er excesses of the usurpation ty have brought down upon the erican name and nation, is obred and belittled to nothingness, this gigantic, this horrible enory. The intended Chief Magiste threatened with MURDER!! e man who, next to Washing, has done the state *most ser*e:—the man whose only crime he great love the people bear —the unbounded confidence country reposes in him—the vent gratitude felt and manifest for his patriotism, by the lovers the rights of man! For this—for virtue, his talents, his glory, his ularity—is he menaced with SSASSINATION! Dark hints ominous insinuations have been some time thrown out, in the st dissolute and abandoned of hireling journals of the usurpan; but an OPEN AVOWAL of so rid a crime, was as little to have en expected, as it is difficult to alize. But the menace has come th! The intended MURDER of drew Jackson is proclaimed;—d the party that makes it stands ered with a mantle of infamy ich ages of virtue and penitence, d a life of remorse and atonent, cannot wipe away! The ve*threat* has plunged the Republic o irredeemable disgrace.—To ve it said and sung among the spots of Europe, that we cannot ercise the rights of freemen witht resorting to vices, crimes and lence that prove our fitness for vitude, and cast a blemish upon e freedom that we boast, the inpendence that we abuse.

The threat is execrable—the ed would be fraught with damtion to our name, our liberties, r virtue, our happiness. Civil r—bloodshed—discord—anar, and revolution would be among e least horrors that would follow ch a heart appalling deed. The ple curse of Mr. Clay would be blessing in comparison to the ghtful train of evils that would low such a deed. Neither time r space could see the end of that rific tragedy.

To what dreadful lengths AMTION will go, to accomplish its rposes, is here exhibited with alst as much dramatic effect as Shakspeare's Macbeth! The pas of history are crowded with exples of bloody atrocity, wrought this master passion of the soul; s demon of the heart of man:—t no instance on record exceeds e enormity of this sameful, this rocious menace; a menace, which maintain originated with Mr. ay in his "war, pestilence, and mine" speech; and which ever ce abounded in the columns of prostituted journals of the coion! [Phil. Mer.

LOOK AT THIS!!

The Adams party have not been sparing heir abuse of the friends of Gen. JACKN, and we have heard many a street ner orator of their party, very few reves himself from a downright blackguard, uth it quite fluently about the violence vulgarity of the Jacksonians. They pride mselves on being all members of "good iety," and speak with good self complacency about their character for good order and sobriety, and all that. Now, we ask them to read the following, which we copy from the Philadelphia Gazette.—Balt. Rep.

We would not publish a communication of the following description, on anonymous authority, but having enquired into particulars, and being convinced of the truth of the statement, we give it a place. Mr. Clay, Jr. not confining his threats of violence to Gen. Jackson, but extending them to those who may take any notice of his conduct, there may be some risk in making this publication. As he makes these threats publicly, at one of the principal hotels, the city authorities can judge for themselves what measures should be taken. The names of several respectable citizens who vouch for the truth of this statement have been left at this office.

Phil. Gazette.

Philadelphia, Sept. 26, 1828.

Messrs. Editors—

I think the administration will now cease to charge the Jackson party with the cut-throat system, when it is a fact which can be proven that the son of the Hon. H. Clay did this day swear most bitterly and solemnly, that before Jackson should be President of the United States he would BLOW THE DAMNED OLD RASCAL'S BRAINS OUT HIMSELF, and that he felt warm and spoke warm, and swore warm and would fight warm, and he would be damned if he did not whip some eight or ten of those damned Editors.

Yours,
A VIRGINIAN.

People of Maryland! when you go to the polls, on the 10th of next November, bear in mind:

1; That your political rights have been bartered away by Adams and Clay in their famous bargain for office;

2; Remember that the ridiculous abortion, called the Panama Mission, pretendedly to improve the moral condition of the Catholics of South America, cost the people 80,000 dollars, without yielding any return;

3; Remember that Rufus King and his son J. A. King were allowed about 14,000 dollars of the people's money, for "a pleasant excursion to England."

4; Remember Albert Gallatin was then appointed in their place, and after pocketing 9,000 dollars outfit and 9,000 dollars salary, quietly returned home, after "a pleasant excursion to England."

5; Remember, in the mean time the Colonial trade was lost by our able diplomatists!

6; Remember James Barbour is now sent out with an outfit of 9,000 dollars salary, for "a pleasant excursion to England."

7; Remember that the French colonial trade has been lost by our able diplomatists! which loss, with that of the British colonial trade is the cause of the low price of agricultural products;

8; Remember that the gallant Com. Porter has been driven from the country, by our haughty and overbearing President;

9; Remember that the state of Georgia has been threatened with a military attack by our haughty and overbearing President;

10; Remember the Secretaries have been scouring the country from Kentucky to Massachusetts, under salaries of five and 6,000 dollars of the people's money, on pleasant excursions for their health—innuendo, to electioneer for the corrupt coalition;

11; Remember that the public business has been shamefully neglected, and the interests of the country, abroad especially, unattended to.

12; Remember that Theodore W. Clay, son of Henry Clay, was paid 1205 dollars for bearing despatches to Mexico. "What a pleasant excursion to Mexico"!!

13; Remember that in the Department of State alone 16,000 dollars have been paid for extra clerk hire.

14; Remember that 1000 dollars have been paid out of the public founds to Moritz Furst for taking President Adams' Likeness.

15; Remember that 215 dollars have been paid for blacking Indians' Boots and Shoes Hurra for the public Shoe Blacks—the people pay the piper!

16; These and hundreds of other instances of extravagance and foolery will account how it is that the Coalition have spent more than eight millions of dollars more of the public money than was expended in Monroe's administration.—Citizen.

The Philadelphia Mercury says, "We last week published Mr. Livingston's Speech delivered at Harrisburg; characterized by elevated views, pure patriotism, and classic eloquence. Mr. Livingston is one of those sterling and now venerable patriots, whose wisdom, character and attainments, would do honour to any cause. A conspicuous whig in the terrific struggle of '98, he is still a devoted friend to the rights of the people, and the purity of government in 1828. Then he was a champion of Mr. Jefferson—now he is as much or more a friend of Gen. Jackson. Yet Mr. Livingston is a distinguished civilian; a man profoundly read in the laws and the constitution of his country; and a jurist of the first celebrity;—familiar with international principles and laws. How does it happen that he should be in favour of Gen. Jackson? Because he well knows that Jackson is not a military man, exclusively imbued with the spirit and discipline of camps!—Because he knows him to be an exemplary and elevated citizen, endowed with talents, integrity and patriotism; and well qualified to redeem a great people from a state of political degeneracy.

The objections against Jackson are confined to his high handed measures as a military chieftain; his suspension of the habeas corpus, his arrest of Hall, &c. &c. All these are admirably exposed and ridiculed as absurd, by Mr. Livingston, in the following happy strain:—

"But it was not enough to snatch from us the honours we had already won. The means of acquiring them in future must be destroyed; every power exercised by a commander in the defence of the country must be called an offence; every act of discipline must be considered a violation of personal liberty; mutiny, desertion, insubordination of every kind must go unpunished, at the hazard of being proclaimed a tyrant & murderer. The wretch who, when called upon to defend his country in the hour of extreme danger meanly abandons his post, and sets the authority of his officer at defiance; the three times pardoned deserter; the instigator and associate of the savage who butchers unprotected women and children; the savage himself who executes this work of destruction, are all held up to public commiseration, as suffering martyrs, because they were made to pay the penalty of their crimes. Let these charges have their effect; let our candidate lose his election on these grounds, who will dare to enforce discipline or exercise any powers necessary for the defence of his country—For where is there one that may not be called an invasion of civil rights? If he encamp his army in the highway, he obstructs its free use! If he turn aside into a neighbouring field, it is a trespass! If he burn a house to save a retreat, it is arson! If he seize provisions to feed his famished troops, it is robbery! If he punish a deserter, it is murder! If he prevent judges, and lawyers, and sheriffs from taking his sentinels from their posts, by writs of habeas corpus, it is a violation of constitutional rights! And if he will not suffer a printer in a besieged town to publish intelligence to the enemy, and excite disobedience in his camp, it violates the sacred liberty of the press.—The only mode for those who hold this doctrine is to contrive some means by which they may clear the country of an invading enemy by a writ of forcible entry, and make him give up his posts by an ejectment. The objections against our candidate on this ground, are too absurd even for ridicule, and show that the authors of them despise the understandings of those to whom they are addressed."

From the N. H. Patriot.

To the Methodists of New Hampshire.

It was not my intention to address myself to any particular denomination of Christians. But as the most barefaced misrepresentations have been, and are resorted to by the panders of a venal administration, in order to seduce a numerous and powerful portion of the community from their republican brethren, I have deemed it proper to expose and refute the falsehood, and unmask the slanderer. It is not strange, my respected fellow-citizens, that a man whose chief praise from his own people is that he has been an untiring abuser of your sect and your most worthy members, should now have the effrontery to cajole and flatter your ministers, and throw upon your whole body the defilement of his praise? It is not strange—for, that man is Jacob B. Moore, and in this crisis, he considered your suffrages as of the utmost importance to his cause, while with the supporters of a corrupt administration generally, he dreads the sternness of your republican virtue; a man avowedly opposed to your religious tenets, and who, notwithstanding his present efforts to entrap your influence and votes, sneers at your doctrine and its professors. He has even represented your ministers as electioneering at their conferences, and has gone so far as to give the result of a pretended balloting at a general conference, in which his candidate received a majority. Now I have the authority of some of the most respectable clergymen of that highly respected body for affirming, that the whole statement is a sheer fabrication, and that so far as their political sentiments were made known they were decidedly in favour of Gen. Jackson. This holds true both of the general and local conferences. It is also true that your brethren of the South and West are Jacksonians almost to a man. But I do not wish you to be guided by the opinions of others; I wish you to compare the characters of the two candidates for the Presidency. And now, upon the authority of the men themselves, I state, and challenge contradiction to my statement, that every member of the Tennessee delegation to the General Conference was in favour of General Jackson, and declared their knowledge of the purity of his life and conduct. You have the further testimony of many good men and great men, of your denomination, bearing witness to the purity and excellence of Gen. Jackson's character. Most of you have probably seen the letter of the venerated Guinn, a neighbour of the Hero of New Orleans—and who is he? Why he is a methodist clergyman of forty years standing, and from a very long and intimate acquaintance with Gen. Jackson, he pronounces him a man of excellent character. You have been told too, that the cause of Jackson, was sustained solely by the enthusiasm of a noisy, unprincipled, and huzzaing populace; but look at the recent evidence of regard for religious institutions in John Quincy Adams, who upon the Sabbath day, accoutred in the cap and jacket of a jockey at the races, anticipated the speed of his carriage and galloped onward from Providence amidst the clamor of orthodox hurras! It is needless to say any thing of his political course, for you must be convicted by documents before the public, of its great and utter profligacy. With regard to his private character, I shall for the present be silent. It is sufficient, that it must greatly suffer by a comparison with Gen. Jackson's. The calumnies against the Hero have been refuted again and again; but the same charges are repeated. I have given you, as proofs of the goodness of his character, the evidence of men whom you know, and in whose word you may place unlimited confidence. But look around you in this quarter and see on what political ground your oldest and best men range themselves. Where is your venerable and excellent Bishop Hedding? Where are Brodhead, Hoit, Merrill, Haskell, John Adams, French, Storrs, Kinsman, Howe, Stickney, Kellum, Isaac Bonny, Lamb, Chase, Muffit, and Lewis Bates? Why, on republican ground, firm friends of Gen. Jackson. I would not intimate by this that they take an active part in political discussion; for (to their honour be it said) they are zealously engaged in setting forth the tremendous concerns of another world.

Does not the name of John Broadhead head the Jackson Republican ticket for Congress? Yet against him, and against Joseph A. Merrill, two of your oldest, most able, and respected preachers, has Jacob B. Moore poured out the vials of his gall and slander. Was there ever a lisp uttered to the disadvantage of these men before they were attacked in the N. H. Journal? Remember then, that John Broadhead, (a name known and dear to your connexion from Maine to Virginia,) was abused most shamefully, and his character most groundlessly assailed in the leading administration paper in this State. So in the same print you find the veracity of Joseph A. Merrill questioned merely because he had obtained and made known the triumphant evidence of Gen. Jackson's good moral character. Thus you see, that the very men who wish to render you their tools in voting for the Adams ticket, are the most deadly opposers to the welfare and respectability of your denomination. I again repeat that I should not have made a separate address to you, had not attempts been made to deceive you in the administration papers; for I deprecate any union of religion with politics. But when I see you addressed week after week, your influence solicited, and the most shameful means resorted to, to give you a wrong impression of Jackson's character, and the views of your brethren in other States, I deem it my duty to tear asunder the veil of duplicity and falsehood and show you the truth; AND I WILL DO IT.

JOHN HAMPDEN.

WHAT THINK YE OF IT?

At the recent election, in the State of Maine, the towns of Minot, Sebago, Harrison, Otisfield, and Bridgton, in this county, gave an aggregate majority of federal votes, 298. But neither of these towns belong to this Electoral District. Consequently, when the votes of these towns are deducted from the aggregate votes of the county, so as to leave only the votes of those towns which constitute the Electoral District, a majority of 49 votes remains against the administration ticket. The vote of the Electoral District may be set down for Jackson. We say so, not because we believe it at all essential to Jackson's election, but because the prospect of it is fairer than the Adams Ticket. Mark our words.—Eastern Argus.

From the Philadelphia Sentinel.

Messrs. Hay & Co.—You are authorized to make the following bets—

$500 that Jackson will receive a majority of the electoral votes at the ensuing election for President.

$100 that he will get the vote of Louisiana.

$100 that he will get the vote of Kentucky.

$100 that he will get the vote of Ohio.

$100 that he will get the vote of Indiana. and $100 that the Jackson electoral ticket in Pennsylvania will have a majority of 20,000 votes over the Adams ticket.

N. B. The money to be deposited in the States Bank at Camden, on 12 hours notice.

A.

JOHN RANDOLPH.

During some period of Mr. Randolph's political career, he had the ill fortune to offend a coxcombish young fellow, who determined to avenge himself by offending the Roanoke Orator on the first opportunity that occurred. At length the opportunity presented itself, when the young sprig, meeting Randolph on the pavement, walked up to him very impudently and said, "I never give the way to a d—n—d rascal." Mr. Randolph immediately pulling off his hat and making the gentleman a low bow, replied, "Well, sir, I always do," and gave him the pavement.

Stick to your Candidate.—A Jackson and an Adams man met the other day—"Hurra for Jackson," said the first. "Hurra for the Devil," said the spunky coalitionist—"Very well, (retorted the Jackson man,) you stick to your candidate and I'll stick to mine."

Emporium.

A CAUTION.

The friends of General Jackson are cautioned against a trick, which it is understood, is to be the dernier resort of the Ebonies, when they find all their other machinations to fail. It is understood that about the time of the election, or so near it that the report cannot be contradicted, one simultaneous movement will be made throughout the United States. It will be reported that GENERAL JACKSON is DEAD!!!

We trust, that all the Jackson papers throughout the Union will publish the above.

Baltimore Prices Current.

Oct. 10, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $7 a 7.75; superfine Howard-st. 5.75 a 6.00; city mills 5.75; Susquehanna, 5.50 a 5.75; WHEAT, best red 1.10 a 1.15; best white 1.20 a 1.30—CORN, .38 a .40; OATS .22 a .24

THE SOMERSET HOTEL

FOR  SALE.

This large Establishment
IN PRINCESS-ANNE, Md.
Now occupied by Col G. Dashiell, is for Sale.

It is commodious in every respect, and in good repair. There is no house on the Eastern Shore better patronized than this. Persons inclined to purchase will apply to

J. C. WILSON, Sen.

⁂ Letters post paid will be attended to.
Oct 14 wm

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by Isaac Denson, a justice of the peace, in and for Somerset county, and to me directed at the suit of George A. Porter vs. William Smith, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit:—one house and lot, containing one acre more or less, and known by the name of Mount Han; also one yoke of oxen, one lot of lumber, and one cart, which I shall proceed to sell, at the court-house door, on Tuesday the 4th of next November, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Oct 14 ws

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court & to me directed, at the suit of Elizabeth Hurley against John S. Evans, I will offer at public sale on Tuesday the 4th day of next November, at the court-house door in Princess-Anne between the hours of one and two o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit. The farm whereon the said Evans now resides, containing 280 acres, more or less,—also 1 negro David, 1 do. Peter, 1 do. George 1 do Alfred, 1 woman Margaret, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of the said John, to the highest bidder for cash to satisfy the above claim and costs.

ROBERT STEWART, late Shff.
Oct 11 wm

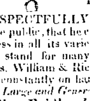
Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Henry K. Long use of John U. Dennis against Tubman Jones, I will offer at public sale on Tuesday the 4th day of next November, at the court-house door, between the hours of one and 2 o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit. 220 acres of land, more or less, by the name of Second Addition to Hogg's Quarter, the lands and tenements of the said Tubman, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above claim and costs.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.
Oct 11 wm

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. Hall,)



Saddle, Harness,
AND
Trunk-Maker,
No. 127 Market Street,
(near the new City Hotel,)
BALTIMORE.

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public, that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old established stand for many years occupied by Messrs. William & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a

Large and General Assortment of Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks,
Valeices, Saddlebags, Collars,
Military Equipments, &c.

of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail, on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this or any other city.

August 19th, 1828 1*

FOR RENT.

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phœbus.

For terms apply to
JAMES POLK.
June 3, 1828. wk

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street.
BALTIMORE.

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,
Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.
And a general assortment
Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD
Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. wm

POETRY.

A NEW SONG.

Tune, "Tid-re-I."

The Republicans have made a set,
To drive me from my palace O!
But with my travelling cabinet,
I dare their utmost malice O;
About my billiards, cards and chess,
Why, what a cursed rout they've made,
But I shall loo them all I guess,
So cut and shuffle—who 's afraid?

The people think, as well they may,
I gained my place so lucky O,
By bargain made with Henry Clay,
Who sold me all Kentucky O;
With slang, whang and barbecue,
In buying votes we drive a trade,
As well as playing brag and loo—
So deal the cards—come, who's afraid?

Of Pennsylvania's folks I'm sure,
They follow Rush so kindly O;
This makes to me the place secure,
Which Jackson seeks so blindly O,
For Rush can smile, cajole and coax 'em,
Pallaver, flatter, and persuade,
With empty promises can hoax 'em—
So hoax 'em, coax 'em—who 's afraid?

The Old Dominion, too, I trust,
Will follow empty barrel O,
Or I will tread her in the dust
Because of Father's quarrel O;
As empty barrels make most noise,
(Which Barbour at the dinner said,
And proved it by his own sweet voice,)
We'll speak in thunder—who's afraid?

The Jarseys too, I have and hold,
Because I keep their Sammy O,
In office—tho' he 's bought and sold,
And oft has tried to dearn me O;
Yet he will scribble fawn and prattle,
And slander Jackson if he's paid—
Will trot about, and tittle tattle,
So let's keep moving—who's afraid?

The Eastern folks by right are mine,
The Western bow to Harry O;
With him they whiskify and dine,
Quite proud his yoke to carry O—
And he transfers to me his stock,
For which I pay so much per head,
Of Hessians thus I gain a flock,
So buy them all—come, who's afraid?

Since eating is the modern way,
To rise to highest station O;
There's none can equal Harry Clay,
In this his great vocation O;
For he can with his swallow pipe,
Eclipse the man who beat ('tis said)
"The butcher's dog at eating tripe,"
Then all is safe—come, who's afraid?

We've nought to do, to gain our cause,
But travel round, harrangue and dine O;
To stretch our mouths and wag our jaws,
And swill and gormandize like swine O;
Then eat like wolves and drink like fish,
And beat "Old Swillemberg, the Jade,"
In emptying every jug and dish,
So here's a bumper—who's afraid?

[Republished, by request]

RECEIPT for TOMATO KETCHUP.

—Half a Gallon—

As this is the season for making the best condiment for fish or steak that ever pantry was furnished with, I send the following receipt to the American Farmer.

Take—1 gallon skinned tomatoes,
4 table spoonsful of salt,
4 do do of black pepper,
2 do do of alspice,
8 pods of red pepper,
3 table spoonsful of mustard.

These articles ground fine and simmered slowly in sharp vinegar, in a pewter basin 3 or 4 hours, and then strained through a wire sieve and bottled close. It may be used in two weeks but improves by age. Those who like the article may add, after the simmering is over, and the ingredients somewhat cooled, two table spoonsful of the juice of garlick. So much vinegar is to be used as to have half a gallon of liquor when the process is over. To my taste this is superior to any West India Ketchup that I have ever met with, and it is withal an excellent remedy for dyspepsia.

COUSIN TABITHA.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

From an abstract printed in the Christain Journal, it appears that the total number of members in the several Conferences of the United States and Canada, by the minutes of 1828, is, 421,105

Total last year,	381,997
Increase this year,	39,108
Travelling Preachers,	1642
Last year,	1576
Increase this year,	66

The estimate for the Canada Conference is that of 1827—The increase, therefore, is that of the United States Conference alone.

From a Philadelphia paper.

NEW COACH.

Our enterprising fellow citizens of the Citizens' Line, are constructing a coach to run between Bordentown & Washington, which will alarm the citizens of New Jersey, if they should happen to see it before they are apprised of its nature. It is calculated for 50 passengers, two regular stories high, and is to run upon four wheels 17½ inches broad, and to be drawn by 12 horses commanded by postillions. The baggage will follow in the rear on one broad wheel of about 40 inches: the whole machine will thus form a roller to flatten and smooth the road over which it passes. It is in a state of considerable forwardness and will be exhibited as soon as the trimmers and painters finish their operations.

VILLAGE HERALD.

Terms of Subscription:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞ Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞ Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

Advertisements, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞ Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞ All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

TO RENT,

FOR the ensuing year, my part of the HOUSE and FARM, on Monokin, whereon Mr. Robert Waters now lives. Possession to be had on New-Year's day, 1829.

I forewarn any person or persons, occupying or cultivating my part of said farm, without my leave.

Also, my part of the house and lot, whereon Mrs. Sally Ward now lives, adjoining said farm. For terms apply to

ELISHA E. WHITELOCK, Near Showhill,
or to
TEACKLE TOWNSEND,
Oct. 7 1828. Princess-Anne.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, the state of Maryland at the instance and for the use of Zadock Long surviving obligee of Jesse King use of Whittington King vs. William Fleming, I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for cash at the court-house door in Princess-Anne, on Tuesday the 28th day of October inst. at the hour of one o'clock, a tract of land late the property of said William Fleming, called Fleming's Security, containing 800 acres, more or less, lying and being in my bailiwick to satisfy the costs and charges on the said execution.

GEORGE DASHIELL, late Shff.
October 7.

A List of Letters.

Remaining in the Post-Office at Princess-Anne, Md. on the 1st of October, 1828.

B—Davis Bracken, John P. Brereton, Thomas Baily, George W. Bounds, Thomas B. Brereau, Spencer Brooks (negro.)
C—William D. Crocket, Sarah Cox, John Calaway, Lewis Caton, Capt. Geo Card, Henry R. K. Coston.
D.—Henrietta Dashiell 2, Alex. Donoho 2, Henry J. Dennis.
H—Village Herald 2, Revil Hayman, Maria Handy.
J—John Jones, Thomas Jones of Thos. Elizabeth Jones, John H. Jones of Chas. Somerset Iris.
K—Robt. J. H. King, Planner H. King, Capt. Kelly, Mrs. Anne King.
L—Littleton Long, Robert Leatherbury.
M—Thomas Martin, Sarah R. Maddux, Daniel Miles, Mary Anne Miles.
P—John Powell, Mrs. M. Powell, Isaac Price, Jacob Parks, Charles Parks.
R—Rev. Noah Riley.
S—Somerset Lodge 2, James D. Smith.
W—William White of Thos. 2, Samuel L. Wilson, Julia Anne Waters, Rev. Dr. F. Waters, Lotty Wilson.
Y—John Young.

WM. W. JOHNSTON, P.M.
Oct. 6.

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers,

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 dozen Butter Prints

200 groce of Lamp Wicks, assorted sizes; Spickets and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels kegs and hydrants; sweeping, shoe, scrubbing, dusting, white-wash, weavers and other Brushes; scale bed & sacking Cords; plough Lines; coarse and fine Twine, Weavers Slays or Reeds; woolen, cassinet, cotton and hand Shuttles; cotton and wool Cards; fancy and common Bellows; Fishing Tackle; lamp and candle Wick; corn Brooms and Whisks; market and close Baskets, long and short Brush Handles; Lemon Squeezers, Rolling Pins, Potatoe Mashers; Mulders; towel Rollers; wash & cake Boards; shovels, tubs clothes Pins; humming and common Tops; Sifters; box and cake Blacking; butter Bowls; Trays, Spoons and Paddles; Trenchers; crabing and cabbage Netts.

The above artiels are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART.
No. 101 1 2 Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.
Baltimore, 9th mo 30th

☞NOTICE.☜

ON WEDNESDAY the 22d of next OCTOBER, will be offered at PUBLICK SALE, at the Storehouse occupied by Nathaniel Slawson, in the town of VIENNA, if not sold before at private sale,

An elegant assortment of DRY GOODS, with a suitable supply of GROCERIES,

laid in on the best terms, and adapted to the season. Any person wishing to purchase at private sale, may be accommodated by applying to Dr. C. Stanford. Terms of sale will be made known on the day of sale.

NATHANIEL SLAWSON.
Vienna, Sept 23, 1828.

FOR SALE, and on a moderate Credit,

A good second-hand Ogle GIG. For further information apply at the office of the Village Herald.

Sept. 2, 1828. 3aw

PUBLIC SALE.

PURSUANT to an order of the Orphans Court of Somerset county the subscribers will offer at Public Sale, on Wednesday the 15th of next October, at the late residence of Henry White, of Dames Quarter,) late of Somerset county, deceased, all the PERSONAL ESTATE of the said deceased, (negroes & legacies excepted,) consisting of Horses, Cattle, Sheep, Hogs, Household and Kitchen Furniture, Farming Utensils, the one-half of two Schooners, one Scow, several Canoes, Vessel-Rigging and Sails, and many other articles too tedious to be mentioned.

The terms of sale will be, a credit of six months for all sums over five dollars, to be secured by the purchaser or purchasers giving bond or bonds to the subscribers, with approved security, bearing interest from the day of sale—For all sums under five dollars the cash will be required. The sale will commence at 10 o'clock A. M. and will continue from day to day until the whole of the property is disposed of.

No property will be suffered to be removed until the terms of sale are complied with.

ALCEY WHITE,
EDWARD FOWLER,
Adm. c. w. a. of H. White, dec'd.
Dame's Quarter, Sept. 30

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Matthias Dashiell vs. Sarah Hyland, I have seized and taken in execution all her right and estate in and to a tract, or part of a tract, of land, called St. Peter's Neck, containing 96 2-3 acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell on the 14th of next October, at the court-house door in the town of Princess-Anne, between the hours of 1 and 3 o'clock, P. M to the highest and best bidder to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Sept. 30 h

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess-Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.
August 5. jñ

In Somerset County Court,

MAY TERM, 1828.

James Wilson v. Arnold E. Waters.

ORDERED, by the court, that the sale of the real estate of Arnold E. Waters, as made and reported by James Wilson, Trustee for the sale of said real estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shewn by the second day of the next term of this court; provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess-Anne once a week for three successive weeks before the said day. The Trustee reports the amount of sales to be $5400.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.
A true copy TEST.
GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Sept 16 mm

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; pound, half and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking; patent and common Taps; lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets.
Baltimore, 9th mo 16th.

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.
Somerset County Orphans Court.

Sept. 23d, 1828.

[SEAL.] On application of Edward Fowler and Alcey White, Adm's. c. w. a. of Henry White late of Somerset county, deceased: It is ordered by the court, that the said administrators give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the estate of the said deceased, and that the same be published once a week for three weeks, in one of the newspapers printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy. TEST,
JAMES POLK, Reg W. S. C.

This is to give Notice,

That the subscribers have obtained from the Orphans court of Somerset county in Maryland, letters of administration cum testamento annexo, on the personal estate of Henry White (of Dame's Quarter) late of Somerset county, deceased; All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof to the subscribers, or one of them, on or before the first day of October, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and twenty-nine; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under our hands this 23d day of September, Anno Domini 1828.

ALCEY WHITE,
EDWARD FOWLER,
Adm's. c. w. a. H. White, dec'd.
Sept 30 mm

ELECTION.

Notice is hereby given, That an Election will be held in the several election Districts of Somerset county, on Monday the 10th day of next November for the purpose of choosing one ELECTOR of President and Vice-President of the United States.

Joshua Brattan, Shff.
Nov. 7, 1828.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Col. George Handy for the real estate of Robert Sasser, against George Jones and Robert Jones, executors of Charles Jones, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—all Charles Jones' right and title to a house and lot in the town of Princess-Anne, No. 29, occupied by the Rev. William Quinn which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 14th of October at the court house door in Princess-Anne, to the highest and best bidder, for cash. Sale to take place between 12 and 3 o'clock P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Sept. 23 mft

Dissolution of Partnership.

The PARTNERSHIP of Wm. & Geo. Riall is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will in future be conducted by Riall & Hopkins. It is expected that all persons indebted to the late firm will come forward and make payment to Riall & Hopkins, otherwise their accounts will be placed in the hands of Thomas Jones for collection.

Sept 19, 1828. mm

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of two writs of Fieri Facias issued by William Whayland, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, at the suit of Isaac H. Price against George P. Jones, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit. Part of a tract of land known by the name of Anderson's Invention, containing 45 acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs, at the court-house door on Tuesday the 21st of next October, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Sept 30 ws

September 16th, 1828.

In the Levy Court of Somerset C'y.

ORDERED, that JAMES MARSHALL, the keeper of the Standards of Weights and Measures, attend at the several places following for the purpose of fulfilling the duties of his appointment, viz.

13th & 14th Oct.	at	Princess-Anne
15th	do	Upper Trapp & Forktown
16th & 17th	do	Salisbury
20th	do	Barren Creek Springs
21st	do	Sharptown
22nd	do	Bacon Quarter
24th & 25th	do	Quantico
27th & 28th	do	George Collins' Store
29th	do	Moreton's Store on Nanticoke
30th & 31st	do	White-Haven
1st November	at	Levin Leatherbury's store
2d	do	Newman's store
3th	do	Ford's store
4th	do	Done's store on Back cr'k.
6th	do	Jamestown
7th	do	Stevens Ferry
12th	do	Rehoboth
13th & 14th	do	Roach's store.

Per order,
GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Sept. 23 mil

For Rent,

For the ensuing year, a House and Lot in the village of White-Haven, at present occupied by Edward U. Blake. For terms apply to

MARCELLUS JONES.
Sept. 9, 1828.

FOR SALE.

THE subscriber wishes to dispose of small FARM with all of its improvements, situated on Deal's Island, the place where Keziah Jones, dec'd. formerly resided. The terms of sale may be ascertained by applying to Mr. William Wallace, who resides on said Island. If not sold at private sale before Wednesday the 5th day of November, it will on that day be offered at Public Sale, to the highest and best bidder. The terms will be made known on the day of sale.

MARCELLUS JONES.
Sept. 9, 1828.

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's obt. servant.
WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.
Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

SPLENDID VIEWS OF AMERICAN SCENERY.

On FRIDAY, the 10th of OCTOBER, 1828, will be published by T. K. Greenbank, No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia, a volume of splendid views of American Scenery as follows—

1—A view of Beck's Shot Tower, on the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia, and adjacent scenery;
2—A view of the Light House in Long Island Sound, with the adjacent scenery;
3—A view of York on Lake Ontorio, with the fortifications;
4—Characteristic Scenery on the Hudson River;
5—View of New London, Connecticut, with the adjacent scenery;
6—View of Lemon Hill, near Philadelphia, the seat of Henry Pratt, Esq.
7—The tomb of Washington, at Mount Vernon.
8—View at the Great Bend of the Susquehanna.
9—View of the Upper Falls of Solomon's Creek, Luzerne county, Pa.
10—View of the Lower Falls of Solomon's Creek.
11—View of the Cattskill Mountains, from the Hudson.
12—View of Fort Niagara, on Lake Ontario, from the Light House on the British side.

These Views are executed in the best style of Philadelphia engraving, from drawings made upon spot. Each plate will be accompanied by a full and accurate description thereof, so as to make it perfectly intelligible to every person.

The work will be printed and issued to subscribers in the first style, on superior paper and with a handsomely printed cover, and delivered to subscribers at the very low price of One Dollar per copy. Flexible covers will be used for country subscribers, so that they can be safely sent by mail.

☞ Any gentleman, postmasters and others who will interest themselves to procure subscribers and remit $10 to the Editor, shall receive twelve copies From the very flattering patronage already received (1200 subscribers having put down their names) the volume will probably be succeeded by another, as soon as other plates can be engraved. All orders from the country will be promptly attended to.

Address, T. K. GREENBANK,
No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia.
Sept. 16 mm

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught that "our first attention should be engaged in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extracts from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. reduced to perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores, composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an anodyne; consequently removes obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly necessary to use. It promotes expectoration, which is constantly called for; and whilst it clears and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of proprietor, in red ink. Is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER,
Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne.

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.
ALSO,
A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks.
FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas.
Do. do. after supersedeas.
Ca. Sa's before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas.
WARRANTS.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS
Handbills, Cards, Blanks,
PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms,
At the Office of the Village Herald

POETRY.

A NEW SONG.

Tune, "Tid-re-I."

The Republicans have made a set,
To drive me from my palace O!
But with my travelling cabinet,
I dare their utmost malice O;
About my billiards, cards and chess,
Why, what a cursed rout they've made,
But I shall loo them all I guess,
So cut and shuffle—who 's afraid?

The people think, as well they may,
I gained my place so lucky O,
By bargain made with Henry Clay,
Who sold me all Kentucky O;
With slang, whang and barbecue,
In buying votes we drive a trade,
As well as playing brag and loo—
So deal the cards—come, who's afraid?

Of Pennsylvania's folks I'm sure,
They follow Rush so kindly O;
This makes to me the place secure,
Which Jackson seeks so blindly O.
For Rush can smile, cajole and coax 'em,
Pallaver, flatter, and persuade,
With empty promises can hoax 'em—
So hoax 'em, coax 'em—who 's afraid?

The Old Dominion, too, I trust,
Will follow empty barrel O,
Or I will tread her in the dust
Because of Father's quarrel O;
As empty barrels make most noise,
(Which Barbour at the dinner said,
And proved it by his own sweet voice,)
We'll speak in thunder—who's afraid?

The Jarseys too, I have and hold,
Because I keep their Summy O,
In office—tho' he 's bought and sold,
And oft has tried to dearn me O;
Yet he will scribble fawn and prattle,
And slander Jackson if he's paid—
Will trot about, and tittle tattle,
So let's keep moving—who's afraid?

The Eastern folks by right are mine,
The Western bow to Harry O;
With him they whiskify and dine,
Quite proud his yoke to carry O—
And he transfers to me his stock,
For which I pay so much per head,
Of Hessians thus I gain a flock,
So buy them all—come, who's afraid?

Since eating is the modern way,
To rise to highest station O;
There's none can equal Harry Clay,
In this his great vocation O;
For he can with his swallow pipe,
Eclipse the man who beat ('tis said)
"The butcher's dog at eating tripe,"
Then all is safe—come, who's afraid?

We've nought to do, to gain our cause,
But travel round, harrangue and dine O;
To stretch our mouths and wag our jaws,
And swill and gormandize like swine O;
Then eat like wolves and drink like fish,
And beat "Old Swillemberg, the Jade,"
In emptying every jug and dish,
So here's a bumper—who's afraid?

[Republished, by request.]

RECEIPT for TOMATO KETCHUP.

—Half a Gallon—

As this is the season for making the best condiment for fish or steak that ever pantry was furnished with, I send the following receipt to the American Farmer.

Take—1 gallon skinned tomatoes,
4 table spoonsful of salt,
4 do do of black pepper,
2 do do of alspice,
8 pods of red pepper,
3 table spoonsful of mustard.

These articles ground fine and simmered slowly in sharp vinegar, in a pewter basin 3 or 4 hours, and then strained through a wire sieve and bottled close. It may be used in two weeks but improves by age. Those who like the article may add, after the simmering is over, and the ingredients somewhat cooled, two table spoonsful of the juice of garlick. So much vinegar is to be used as to have half a gallon of liquor when the process is over. To my taste this is superior to any West India Ketchup that I have ever met with, and it is withal an excellent remedy for dyspepsia.

COUSIN TABITHA.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

From an abstract printed in the Christain Journal, it appears that the total number of members in the several Conferences of the United States and Canada, by the minutes of 1828, is,

	421,105
Total last year,	381,997
Increase this year,	39,108
Travelling Preachers,	1642
Last year,	1576
Increase this year,	66

The estimate for the Canada Conference is that of 1827—The increase, therefore, is that of the United States Conference alone.

From a Philadelphia paper.

NEW COACH.

Our enterprising fellow citizens of the Citizens' Line, are constructing a coach to run between Bordentown & Washington, which will alarm the citizens of New Jersey, if they should happen to see it before they are apprised of its nature. It is calculated for 56 passengers, two regular stories high, and is to run upon four wheels 17½ inches broad, and to be drawn by 12 horses commanded by postillions. The baggage will follow in the rear on one broad wheel of about 40 inches; the whole machine will thus form a roller to flatten and smooth the road over which it passes. It is in a state of considerable forwardness and will be exhibited as soon as the trimmers and painters finish their operations.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞ Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞ Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞ Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞ All communications addressed to the editor must come POST PAID.

TO RENT,

FOR the ensuing year, my part of the HOUSE and FARM, on Monokin, whereon Mr. Robert Waters now lives. Possession to be had on New-Year's day, 1829.

I forewarn any person or persons, occupying or cultivating my part of said farm, without my leave.

Also, my part of the house and lot, whereon Mrs. Sally Ward now lives, adjoining said farm. For terms apply to

ELISHA E. WHITELOCK,
Near Showhill,
or to
TEACKLE TOWNSEND,
Oct 7 1828. Princess-Anne.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, the state of Maryland at the instance and for the use of Zadock Long surviving obligee of Jesse King use of Whittington King vs. William Fleming, I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for cash at the court-house door in Princess-Anne, on Tuesday the 28th day of October inst. at the hour of one o'clock, a tract of land late the property of said William Fleming. called Fleming's Security, containing 800 acres, more or less, lying and being in my bailiwick to satisfy the costs and charges on the said execution.

GEORGE DASHIELL, late Shff.
October 7.

A List of Letters.

Remaining in the Post-Office at Princess Anne, Md. on the 1st of October, 1828.

B—Davis Bracken, John P. Brereton, Thomas Baily, George W. Bounds, Thomas B. Brereen, Spencer Brooks (negro.)
C—William D. Crocket, Sarah Cox, John Calaway, Lewis Caton, Capt. Geo Card, Henry R. K. Coston.
D.—Henrietta Dashiell 2, Alex. Donoho 2, Henry J. Dennis.
H—Village Herald 2, Revil Hayman, Maria Handy.
J—John Jones, Thomas Jones of Thos. Elizabeth Jones, John H. Jones of Chas. Somerset Iris.
K—Robt. J. H. King, Planner H. King. Capt. Kelly, Mrs. Anne King.
L—Littleton Long, Robert Leatherbury.
M—Thomas Martin, Sarah R. Maddux, Daniel Miles. Mary Anne Miles.
P—John Powell, Mrs. M. Powell, Isaac Price, Jacob Parks, Charles Parks.
R—Rev. Noah Riley.
S—Somerset Lodge 2, James D. Smith.
W—William White of Thos. 2, Samuel I. Wilson, Julia Anne Waters, Rev. Dr. F. Waters, Lotty Wilson.
Y—John Young.

WM. W. JOHNSTON, P. M.
Oct. 6.

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers,

80,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 dozen Butter Prints

200 grose of Lamp Wicks, assorted sizes; Spickets and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels kegs and hydrants; sweeping, shoe, scrubbing, dusting, white-wash, weavers and other Brushes; scale bed & sacking Cords; plough Lines; coarse and fine Twine, Weavers Slays or Reeds; woolen, cassinet, cotton and band Shuttles; cotton and wool Cards; fancy and common Bellows; Fishing Tackle; lamp and candle Wick; corn Brooms and Whisks; market and close Baskets, long and short Brush Handles; Lemon Squeezers Rolling Pins, Potatoe Mashers; Mulders; towel Rollers; wash & cake Boards; shovels, tubs clothes Pins; humming and common Tops; Sifters; box and cake Blacking; butter Bowls; Trays, Spoons and Paddles; Trenchers; crabing and cabbage Netts.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART.
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.
Baltimore, 9th mo 30th

☞NOTICE.☜

ON WEDNESDAY the 22nd of next OCTOBER, will be offered at PUBLICK SALE, at the Storehouse occupied by Nathaniel Slawson, in the town of VIENNA, if not sold before at private sale.

An elegant assortment of DRY GOODS, with a suitable supply of GROCERIES,

laid in on the best terms, and adapted to the season. Any person wishing to purchase at private sale, may be accommodated by applying to Dr. C. Stanford. Terms of sale will be made known on the day of sale.

NATHANIEL SLAWSON.
Vienna, Sept 23, 1828.

FOR SALE, and on a moderate Credit,

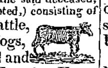
A good second-hand Ogle GIG. For further information apply at the office of the Village Herald.

Sept. 2, 1828. 3aw

PUBLIC SALE.

PURSUANT to an order of the Orphans Court of Somerset county the subscribers will offer at Public Sale, on Wednesday the 15th of next October, at the late residence of Henry White, of Dames Quarter,) late of Somerset county, deceased, all the PERSONAL ESTATE of the said deceased, (negroes & legacies excepted,) consisting of

Horses, Cattle, Sheep, Hogs,



Household and Kitchen Furniture, Farming Utensils, the one-half of two Schooners, one Scow, several Canoes, Vessel-Rigging and Sails, and many other articles too tedious to be mentioned.

The terms of sale will be, a credit of six months for all sums over five dollars, to be secured by the purchaser or purchasers giving bond or bonds to the subscribers, with approved security, bearing interest from the day of sale—For all sums under five dollars the cash will be required. The sale will commence at 10 o'clock A. M. and will continue from day to day until the whole of the property is disposed of.

No property will be suffered to be removed until the terms of sale are complied with.

ALCEY WHITE,
EDWARD FOWLER,
Adm. c. w. a. of H. White, dec'd.
Dame's Quarter, Sept. 30

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Matthias Dashiell vs. Sarah Hyland, I have seized and taken in execution all her right and estate in and to a tract, or part of a tract, of land, called St. Peter's Neck, containing 96 2-3 acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell on the 14th of next October, at the court-house door in the town of Princess-Anne, between the hours of 1 and 3 o'clock, P. M. to the highest and best bidder to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Sept. 30 h

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess-Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.
August 5. jft

In Somerset County Court,

MAY TERM, 1828.

James Wilson v. Arnold E. Waters.

ORDERED, by the court. that the sale of the real estate of Arnold E. Waters, as made and reported by James Wilson, Trustee for the sale of said real estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shewn by the second day of the next term of this court; provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess-Anne once a week for three successive weeks before the said day. The Trustee reports the amount of sales to be $5400.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.
A true copy. TEST.
GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Sept 16 mm

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; pound, half and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking; patent and common Taps; lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets,
Baltimore, 9th mo 16th.

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.
Somerset County Orphans Court.

Sept. 23d, 1828.

[SEAL.] On application of Edward Fowler and Alcey White, Adm's. c. w. a. of Henry White late of Somerset county, deceased: It is ordered by the court, that the said administrators give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the estate of the said deceased, and that the same be published once a week for three weeks, in one of the newspapers printed at Princess-Anne.

True copy. TEST,
JAMES POLK, Reg. W. S. C.

This is to give Notice,

That the subscribers have obtained from the Orphans court of Somerset county in Maryland, letters of administration cum testamento annexo, on the personal estate of Henry White (of Dame's Quarter) late of Somerset county, deceased; All persons having claims against the said deceased are hereby warnnd to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof to the subscribers, or one of them, on or before the first day of October, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and twenty-nine; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under our hands this 23d day of September, Anno Domini 1828

ALCEY WHITE,
EDWARD FOWLER,
Adm's. c. w. a. H. White, dec'd.
Sept 30 mm

ELECTION.

Notice is hereby given, That an Election will be held in the several election Districts of Somerset county, on Monday the 10th day of next November for the purpose of choosing one ELECTOR of President and Vice-President of the United States.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Nov. 7. 1828.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Col. George Handy for the real estate of Robert Sasser, against George Jones and Robert Jones, executors of Charles Jones, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—all Charles Jones' right and title to a house and lot in the town of Princess-Anne, No. 29, occupied by the Rev. William Quinn which I shall proceed to sell on Tuesday the 14th of October at the court house door in Princess-Anne, to the highest and best bidder, for cash. Sale to take place between 12 and 3 o'clock P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Sept. 23 mft

Dissolution of Partnership.

The PARTNERSHIP of Wm. & Geo. Riall is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will in future be conducted by Riall & Hopkins. It is expected that all persons indebted to the late firm will come forward and make payment to Riall & Hopkins, otherwise their accounts will be placed in the hands of Thomas Jones for collection.

Sept 19, 1828. mm

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of two writs of Fieri Facias issued by William Whayland, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, at the suit of Isaac H. Price against George P. Jones, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit. Part of a tract of land known by the name of Anderson's Invention, containing 45 acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs, at the court-house door on Tuesday the 21st of next October, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Sept 30 ws

SEPTEMBER 16TH, 1828.

In the Levy Court of Somerset C'y.

ORDERED, that JAMES MARSHALL, the keeper of the Standards of Weights and Measures, attend at the several places following for the purpose of fulfilling the duties of his appointment, viz.

13th & 14th Oct.	at	Princess-Anne
15th	do	Upper Trapp & Forktown
16th & 17th	do	Salisbury
20th	do	Barren Creek Springs
21st	do	Sharptown
22nd	do	Bacon Quarter
24th & 25th	do	Quantico
27th & 28th	do	George Collins' Store
29th	do	Moreton's Store on Nanticoke
30th & 31st	do	White-Haven
1st November	at	Levin Leatherbury's store
3d	do	Newman's store
3th	do	Ford's store
4th	do	Done's store on Back cr'k.
6th	do	Jamestown
7th	do	Stevens Ferry
12th	do	Rehoboth
13th & 14th	do	Roach's store.

Per order,
GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Sept. 23 mtl

For Rent,

For the ensuing year, a House and Lot in the village of White-Haven, at present occupied by Edward U. Blake. For terms apply to

MARCELLUS JONES.
Sept. 9, 1828.

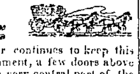
FOR SALE.

THE subscriber wishes to dispose of small FARM with all of its improvements, situated on Deal's Island, the place where Keziah Jones, dec'd. formerly resided. The terms of sale may be ascertained by applying to Mr. William Wallace, who resides on said Island. If not sold at private sale before Wednesday the 5th day of November, it will on that day be offered at Public Sale, to the highest and best bidder. The terms will be made known on the day of sale.

MARCELLUS JONES.
Sept. 9, 1828.

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.



THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's obt. servant.
WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.
Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

SPLENDID VIEWS
OF
AMERICAN SCENERY.

On FRIDAY, the 10th of OCTOBER, 1828 will be published by T. K. GREENBANK, No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia, a volume of splendid views of American Scenery as follows—

1—A view of Beck's Shot Tower, on the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia, and adjacent scenery;
2—A view of the Light House in Long Island Sound, with the adjacent scenery;
3—A view of York on Lake Ontorio, with the fortifications;
4—Characteristic Scenery on the Hudson River;
5—View of New London, Connecticut, with the adjacent scenery;
6—View of Lemon Hill, near Philadelphia, the seat of Henry Pratt, Esq.
7—The tomb of Washington, at Mount Vernon.
8—View at the Great Bend of the Susquehanna.
9—View of the Upper Falls of Solomon's Creek, Luzerne county, Pa.
10—View of the Lower Falls of Solomon's Creek.
11—View of the Cattskill Mountains, from the Hudson.
12—View of Fort Niagara, on Lake Ontario, from the Light House on the British side.

These Views are executed in the best style of Philadelphia engraving, from drawings made upon spot. Each plate will be accompanied by a full and accurate description thereof, so as to make it perfectly intelligible to every person.

The work will be printed and issued to subscribers in the first style, on superior paper and with a handsomely printed cover, and delivered to subscribers at the very low price of One Dollar per copy. Flexible covers will be used for country subscribers, so that they can be safely sent by mail.

☞ Any gentleman, postmasters and others who will interest themselves to procure ten subscribers and remit $10 to the Editor, shall receive twelve copies From the very flattering patronage already received (1200 subscribers having put down their names) the volume will probably be succeeded by another, as soon as other plates can be engraved. All orders from the country will be promptly attended to.

Address, T R GREENBANK.
No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia
Sept. 16 mm

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extracts from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. which in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an anodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER.
Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne.

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks.

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas.
CA. SA.'s before supersedeas,
Do do. after supersedeas.
WARRANTS.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks, PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms,
At the Office of the Village Herald.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS ANNE, MD. TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1828. NO. 32.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

TO CASSIUS.

[illegible]

Sir, I am glad to see that you have at last given to the world those bright abilities which have so long lain dormant. It is, indeed, greatly to be deplored, that the public has not, before this, had the means of being enlightened by the brilliant coruscations of your genius; but, as lofty genius does not stoop to trifles, I am much flattered at your signal condescension, in deigning to notice a production of my pen, as such conduct induces me to believe it must have some merit. I have determined to elicit more light from your luminous pen on this dark, doubtful and benighted world. Towering as your genius is, it will certainly elevate itself higher and still higher, according to the demand made on it. But, sir, let us come to the point. My communication, by the kind pass of the Editor, appeared in the Herald of the 23d Sept. Yours to the Iris is dated Sept. 26th, and yet you say to me, in your "lucid memoirs," "I think it is a pity you should pass unnoticed, since you have exerted yourself to attract some portion of public attention." Now, sir, how did you know that Philanthropos would not reply to my piece? Your assertion was made 3 days after my communication was issued in the Herald and before Philanthropos could have had an opportunity of answering it in the Iris. By the date of your piece it was written at that time, although it did not appear until the middle of the present month. I demand, sir, how you arrived at this knowledge? It must have been by consulting with Philanthropos. This shows the intrigue and underdealing with which you commenced this your undertaking. Be assured, sir, as you request that I will take no offence at your "undertaking," that I will never refuse a fair construction to any thing proceeding from him. However humble the source may be, provided the norma loquendi by which it is measured be truth and justice. But I am constrained to say that you have not adhered to this rule: you have affixed forced constructions to the facts contained in my communication: you have wrested sentences from their connexion and you have interpreted others in a manner contrary to their intention and even your own impression of their meaning. For the substantiation of these charges, I invite a candid comparison of the three pieces which have appeared in the Herald and Iris on this subject, and submit to the decision of justice and the public the rectitude of the following:

I purpose to establish, in the first place, that the essay of Philanthropos was intended not as a minute parallel between the two characters attempted to be illustrated, but a partial similitude between their crimes and delinquencies. In proof of this I demand why did not P. delineate the nobler features in the characters of the two men, if he intended to embrace their virtues as well as their faults? Livy and Plutarch (from the latter of whom P. copied his character of Marius) tell us that Marius was almost unexampled for his courage, fortitude and indefatigable perseverance in toils and labours. Every one who has the least regard for justice and truth will concede the same principles to be eminently displayed in Jackson. Marius was indulged with more public trusts than any of his predecessors, with a solitary exception (Rutilius Rufus,) although in many instances he managed the affairs of his offices badly. Jackson has also been peculiarly favoured by the people or their representatives, and his opponents, among whom you rank P., contend that he has, like Marius, abused every office which he has held. Philanthropos lends a passing glance at this, but he tells us that he refers to the fact that Marius and Jackson "courted the people by attentions for popular motives; hence you cannot avoid admitting that P. did not allude to the favours formerly conferred on them by their country, but to other favours which they were soliciting. And how shall we account for these inexcusable omissions, the most conspicuous traits of the resemblance? The conclusion is too striking to be eluded. Again, hear your own words, "Philanthropos does not believe Jackson qualified to fill the Presidential chair. He dares to publish his belief to the world, and for this he has been charged with an inclination to establish an aristocracy in our country."—Thus you unwittingly concede the identical conclusion that you are endeavouring to avoid, viz. that your protegé was "publishing to the world his belief," &c. Again, you say, "Our country has indeed fallen from her high estate, if a man cannot freely express his opinion of and objection to a candidate for a public office, without being branded with the name aristocrat." Now, sir, it was only in the instance of P.'s censuring Jackson's obscure birth, that I accused him of aristocratick principles and you say "a man cannot freely express his objection to a candidate for a public office without being branded with the name of aristocrat," by which you discovered to an unprejudiced mind, that you believed P. in this very instance expressing his objections to Jackson. I have taken two sentences from different parts of your "undertaking," without [illegible] advantage by suppressing the connexion. I would not misrepresent you. Cassius, I appeal to the justice of impartial [illegible] and invite, nay challenge them, to peruse your undertaking, not as I quote it, but as it appeared in the Iris, and then say whether [illegible] misrepresentation or [illegible] your declarations to an unreasonable extent. From the premises [illegible] author was representing Jackson's [illegible] OBSCURITY OF BIRTH not excluded, [illegible] emphatically included, I conclude (also, [illegible] imputes the [illegible] objection to Jackson's elevation to the Presidential chair [illegible]

[illegible] now notice your wilful perversion of the meaning of my sentences, thereby eluding the trouble that it would have cost you to answer them favourably to your side, except by prevarication. You affect to understand me as alluding to husbandry, when I enquire of P. the reason why he has not drawn a parallel of the virtues as well as the vices of the subjects of his effusion. You are well aware that Andrew Jackson has been called the Farmer of Tennessee by hundreds of papers in this country. But, sir, I can neither applaud your ignorance on the one hand, nor your ingenuity on the other, in this instance. If you are ignorant of these facts, I treat that ignorance with contempt in one who aspires to what you do, in your "lucid memoirs." Nor will any ingenuous mind admire your ingenuity; the veil is too thin, and instead of praising it as witty, I reject it as the pitiful apology and contemptible resort of one who was inadequate to his undertaking. We will pass over the great digression which you have made, for you seem to have written of every thing but that which ought to have employed your attention. I design to notice those things only which require particular observation. We come, then, to your remarks on Jackson's education. Here, sir, you commence by an assertion as unfounded as it is base. You attribute to me an attempt "to establish the fact that Gen. Jackson's education is PERFECT"!! And where did you find this? I contended, as I do yet, that Gen. Jackson's education is that of an eminent lawyer; that war is not his proper sphere, nor his profession. What man's education is perfect? Did you ever hear of that personage? Think, sir, of the unlimited sense of this word, of the endless variety of subjects with which one must be absolutely acquainted before his education is perfect, and you must say, in spite of your learning, that no mortal can aspire to such proficiency. But, sir, I demand the proof of my attempting to establish what you ascribe to me, and the establishment of your assertion that Jackson is not the author of the letters to which his name is subscribed. You assert that the diversity of their style proves them to be the composition of different persons!! Wonderful discovery! And would not the authors of those writings inform the world of the true source of them, if that were the truth? That emulation which fires every human bosom would impel them to grasp, with avidity, at the prize bestowed on these documents and strip the PATRIOT SOLDIER of his adventitious honour. The writings of Jackson, as your own partisans acknowledge, all bear the same cogent style throughout and are remarkable for the same aptitude of expression and fluency of diction.—This is granted by Mr. Munroe of the Balt. Patriot and Mr. Walsh. It is scarcely probable that Robert Walsh, the first critick of our country, would hazard such compliments as he lavishes on Jackson, without indubitable testimony of their veracity; for by doing this, it is evident, he would endanger his own reputation. But, sir, one of the surest marks of the depravity of your cause is, that what one of you grants, another clings to with desperation. Division, anarchy and anomaly are the conspicuous characteristicks of your passioned and prejudiced faction. Assertion is the substitute of sound reason, not that there are not individuals enlisted in your ranks, who are capable of solid argument, and, therefore, your partisans have the "odds most fearful" in displaying their abilities. Again, "to write well is only one constituent of a good education"!! How truly original are your remarks! How much you resemble Cassius of old!

> "He reads much,
> He is a great OBSERVER and he looks
> Quite through the deeds of men."

It has always been said that a good writer is one who reduces to practice all the principles and constituents of education. Education, in its most unlimited sense, means, as we all know, formation of manners; but in the present instance you were speaking of that department of it which belongs to letters. What you say is, then, absurd; it exposes your ignorance as well as your vanity. You might have said, with infinitely more propriety, that a good education is only one constituent of a good writer. Again, you say, "you contend that P. condemns J. for quelling the insurrections of the Seminole Indians." "You are not so ineffably foolish as to believe any such thing." With regard to my belief, sir, I will interpret for myself; the truth might be adulterated by passing thro' your hands. But I will state the reasons that induce me to believe that P. condemned J. for this action of his life. I might here urge the first consideration in this paper, viz. that the whole was intended as a delineation of J.'s faults. But I omit this and resolve it in a more satisfactory manner. Every one knows that J.'s proceedings in the Seminole War have caused great excitement, whether pretended or real, among his opponents; this was the case with P.; it was not the simple fact of his subduing the Indians to which he alluded, but his conduct during that service, and, by a miserable analogy, as the most which he has instituted are, he says that J. resembles Marius in his expulsion of the robbers from Spain. Why did not your nursling deny it, if I misrepresented his meaning?

I now invite your attention to another of your base attempts to stifle the connexion of my communication. Hear yourself—"But the great dexterity with which he wielded the sword prove the 'deep knowledge which he must have acquired in his profession.'—What profession?" You cite this as an instance of my inconsistency and I will show it to be an instance of your depravity. I was speaking of J.'s profession, as a Lawyer, as will appear by reference to the original, which could not possibly have escaped your observation. You prefix some remark and then conclude the sentence with my words. By the former part of this sentence you force away the true connexion of the passage, and to give it an air of ingenuousness, subjoin an extract from the original. By these manœuvres you make it appear that I was speaking of J. as a military character and calling this his profession, when, indeed, as will be seen by the construction, I adduced, in proof that war was not his proper sphere, the policy and discretion (not dexterity) with which he conducted the civil matters, incidental to the arduous duties both of body and mind, which he has often had to encounter. Look at the original! "His conduct shows that it was, at his country's necessitous demand he assumed the sword, and in wielding that sword, he used that policy and discretion which prove the deep knowledge which he must have acquired in his profession" (law.) Such dealing as you have practised here, sir, is indeed worthy of your cause; but is inconsistent with the station which you occupy in life; it is abusing and disgraceful to dignity, and revolting to true honour.

You are pleased to denounce me as a self-constituted critick! Do you mean by this that I have not received a commission from some faction? You say rightly, then—But this is new doctrine to me; that no one can act in the enjoyment of his liberty without being "instituted" into orders by the higher powers! Has not every one the liberty of action? If not to what authority must we resort to derive this privilege? It is unnecessary for me to advert to your refined rhetorick, your lucid logick and your sonorous periods, like the delicious musick of an old carriage wheel; these are too remarkable to demand animadversion. I only wish you to bear in mind, in your future UNDERTAKINGS, the requisitions of dignity, justice and truth; liberality I do not ask at your hands; sterling justice shall be the arbiter and truth the guide of whatever notice I may be coerced to take of you hereafter. This quibbling, this introduction of foreign circumstances, by no means incidental or necessary, except to divert the attention from the true subject, I most heartily deprecate, and hope that, whenever I am fairly foiled, I may have the generosity to yield the palm.

A FRIEND OF MAN.

Oct. 28th.

Cassius promised in his 'undertaking' to continue his 'undertakings' and for this reason his 'undertaking' was not overtaken in the next Herald after his 'undertaking' appeared. I regret that I could not meet all his offspring at once, as it is very probable they will not all bear the same features.

[From the Albany Argus.]

A REPLY to the ADDRESS of GEN. PETER B. PORTER AND OTHERS, to the Republican citizens of the State of New-York.

PART II. No. 5.

Short as my sketches have been, they must be condensed. Although prolixity is fashionable, yet it is tedious; and I well know, Gen. Porter, that your time is precious. You have the western counties of New York to overlook, as well as the War Department. I will lead you for a short time into the field of diplomacy, a field not so "spirit stirring" indeed as the field of battle, but yet as you now are a cabinet minister, and not a "military chieftain," you may glean something of value even there.

The boasted diplomacy of our diplomatic statesmen,—that wonder-working diplomacy, which was to operate on our prosperity like the philosopher's stone, and compel by its magical virtue all other interests to yield to ours; which by the force of its logic was to coerce nations into a sense of justice for our benefit,—what has it produced?

The Panama Mission is universally acknowledged to have been a miserable failure.

That accomplished negotiator and statesman, Heman Allen, has returned to Vermont, to renew his old avocations, and to exercise his diplomatic and equestrian talents in a traffic in which as much shrewdness is sometimes required, as in adjusting the terms of a bargain between two nations.

Our imperial sister Brazil, has plundered and captured our vessels, imprisoned our sailors and our merchants, and her government has openly and grossly insulted our minister; and our government, scorning to be outdone by a royal one, has insulted him too!

Mr. Brown has made no impression on the stubborn injustice of the court of France, —the claims of our citizens on that nation are as far from adjustment as ever; and the politeness of our minister has induced him to yield to the wishes of the French government, when they signified to him that the discussion of the claims was unpleasant!

With Holland, Denmark and Naples, our claims are so old that they have been forgotten. Kit Hughes cannot stimulate the sluggish memory of the Dutch,—and Henry Wheaton will ascertain, from a continued denial of justice, that "there is something rotten in the state of Denmark." The dominions of [illegible] "the two Sicilies" have been [illegible] with as much precipitation as they were by the emperor Caligula, when he saw the flames and heard the bellowings of Mount Etna.

The persuasive eloquence, and irresistible suavity of Gen. Dearborn, having proved ineffectual in obtaining a commercial treaty from his most faithful majesty, the commerce with Portugal, like the price of stocks, when there are none in the market, is nominal.

Spain has no minister here, or if she has, he never appears at Washington, while ours at her court, submits to the most humiliating practices required by Spanish etiquette.

While Phineas L. Tracy, and other friends of the administration, are quarrelling with the free masons in this state, our minister at the court of Mexico is quarrelling for them. Are American masons more obnoxious than Mexican masons? Or have the administration adopted the "masterly train" of Cardinal Richelieu's politics, which induced him to exterminate the Protestants in France, whilst he sustained them in Germany.

An ancient and infirm gentleman was sent to Great Britain to negotiate on affairs of the first importance, without instructions. Mr. Canning was in the north of England, and the other ministers at their country seats.—He went to Cheltenham, and returned to America. Another was sent to an English court, who, less fortunate than Owen Glendower, had never given his tongue that helpful ornament," the English language, but spoke a dialect as disagreeable to an English ear, as was that of the "metre ballad-monger" to the air of Hotspurn. He played his part, received his outfit and his salary, and returned. Minister to France, minister to England, he has done nothing, it is presumed that he has the capacity to do every thing. On his return, new honours and new appointments await him. Again the treasury "opes it ponderous doors." He caries the cap of Fortmantus.

Worse than Rufus King and Albert Gallatin, that "sweet creature of bombast," the third envoy of this administration to the British court, can not do. He may not do better.

The colonial trade has been lost, in consequence of the meddling vanity of the administration. Had it not been for their interference, the legislation of Congress would have given us all that it was practicable to obtain. But diplomacy—diplomacy—was preferred to legislation. The colonial trade was offered to us under some restrictions by act of parliament. An act of congress was prepared and introduced into the senate to reciprocate the provisions of the act of parliament; but the senate were told that the administration preferred to negotiate, and in consequence of this intimation the affair was relinquished. The offer of Great Britain was neglected. The American minister offered the terms which had been previously rejected. The British minister shut the door of negotiation in his face, and issued an order in council, interdicting the West India trade to the United States.

The northwest company still occupy the nortwest coast. On our northeastern border, within our own boundaries, our people are imprisoned, and the British flag announces to American citizens that they are British subjects! and the last hope of saving this proud republic from dismemberment, rests on the justice, candour and independence of the Russian autocrat!

The St. Lawrence, in which a tenancy in common was proudly claimed, still continues to roll his waters to his synonymous gulf, under no other flag than that of his royal majesty.

Equally unfortunate with our foreign, has been our domestic negotiations. Secretary Barbour, assisted by the able advice of the President and all his cabinet, has been completely overreached by the half-breed Cherokee Vans. Two treaties made with the Creeks, both of which are of doubtful authority: [illegible] supreme laws of the land—a strip [illegible] not worth $5000, bought twice over [illegible] $500,000—Georgia dissatisfied, denying the validity of the last treaty, and claiming the first—a quasi declaration of war issued by the administration against a sovereign state of the confederacy—an Indian chief murdered according to Indian law—Chilly McIntosh as triumphant in diplomacy as in love—are glorious evidences of the skill of the President and his cabinet in Indian diplomacy.

MR. ADAMS' WEALTH.

It is said that Mr. Adams is a man of great wealth—having many hundreds of thousands of dollars. We have no doubt of it. He has received from the People FOUR HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS, and by one speculation made by him in Russia, with the public money, he made twenty thousand dollars. What a contrast does he form to his predecessors in the Chief Magistracy, in this respect! Jefferson died insolvent; he spent every cent in the service of his country. Madison greatly impaired an immense estate. Monroe, at the expiration of his term of office, was worth nothing. But the Yankee is worth half a million. Even Henry Clay, badly as we think of him, has not filled his pockets with the public money.

There is no other instance in the history of our country of a man's making so much money out of the people. Hamilton, Ames, Clinton, and all other public men, ruined themselves from devotion to their country.

Emp.

THE MILITARY CHIEFTAIN.

[From the Platsburgh Republican.]

We have often said that Gen. Jackson has given more proofs of practical republicanism and moderation in pursuit of office than any man now living, and we have referred to numerous authentic events in the history of his life to prove it. The refusal to appear at the court of an emperor was one of the most brilliant of these instances, and to bring that truly republican act more fully before the people, we will here publish his own words in refusing the embassy to Mexico, during the usurpation of Iturbide in 1822.

The following is the passage—

"From the present revolutionary state of Mexico the appearance of an AMERICAN envoy, with credentials to the TYRANT Iturbide, might add to his strength, and thereby aid him in riveting the chains of despotism upon that country, which of right ought to be free. To be the instrument to tyranny, however innocent on my part, I could not reconcile to my feelings. With these views and other reasons which I have communicated to Mr. Monroe, I have declined accepting the mission to Mexico."

Citizens reflect upon this act. An embassy refused: $9,000 outfit, and $9,000 salary rejected, rather than injure the cause of liberty even in a foreign country, by appearing at the court of an usurper! Has liberty at home any thing to fear from such a man?—Can the advocates of John Q. Adams shew a parallel act? Can they shew one instance in the whole course of his life, from boyhood to old age, in which he has lost an opportunity of basking in the sunshine of royal and imperial company?

CABINET EXTRAVAGANCE.

☞ The administration of Mr. Adams has been the most wasteful and extravagant.—More money has been spent under it for the same objects, than under any administration since the revolution.

The expenses of Mr. Clay's Department of State for the three years of the present administration, have exceeded those of the last three years of Mr. Monroe's administration, one hundred and forty-five thousand one hundred and thirty-six dollars!

In the War Department for the same time, they have exceeded those of the previous administration, one million six hundred and twenty-seven thousand one hundred and seventy-five dollars!

The whole expenditures of the three years of Mr. Adams' administration have exceeded the last three years of Mr. Monroe, for the same objects, EIGHT MILLIONS Six Hundred and Eighty-Five Thousand Three Hundred and seven dollars.

The contingent expenses have more than doubled. In Mr. Clay's department, during the last three years, have been 5090—for the last three years of Mr. Monroe's administration, they were 2780 dollars. For the last four years of Gen. Washington's administration, the entire "contingent expenses" of the executive departments, amounted to less than 17,000 dollars per year. The first four years of Mr. Jefferson's administration, they were less than 20,000 dollars per year. The first four years of Mr. Madison's administration, they were about 30,000 dollars per year. Under Mr. Adams for the first two years they have amounted to 77,454 dollars per year and the year 1827 to 89,[illegible] dollars! Being nearly three times as much as Mr. Madison.

Mr. Monroe expended 4,180 dollars as secret service money, in eight years. Mr. Adams expended 9000 dollars in one year, and 12,824 dollars in three years.

Albany Argus.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.
Princess Anne, Md.
TUESDAY, NOV. 4, 1828.

THE PEOPLE'S TICKET.

For President.

ANDREW JACKSON.

"Honor and gratitude to the man who has filled the measure of his country's glory."—Jefferson.

"Whose services to the nation entitle him to its highest rewards."—J. Q. Adams.

For Vice President.

JOHN C. CALHOUN.

For Elector of President and Vice President of the U. S. for the District, composed of Worcester, Somerset, and part of Dorchester counties.

Thomas K. Carroll.

WELL DONE OHIO!

From the Muskingum [Ohio] Messenger.

[illegible] Of October the 25th.

Ohio Triumphant!!

UNEXPECTED, BUT PLEASING INTELLIGENCE!!!

EIGHT Jackson Representatives out of the Fourteen, from the State of Ohio, certainly elected!

In the first District, Findley, the JACKSON candidate, is re-elected by a majority of 2500, over Este, the Adams candidate.

In the second District, James Shields (JACKSON) is elected over John Woods, (Adams,) by a majority of 1700.

In the third District, Crane (Adams) is elected by a majority of one or two hundred only. This district it is believed, will go for Jackson at the election for electors of president—Judge Crane being a very old and respectable resident of the District, and his opponent but little known.

In the fourth District, Vance, (Adams) is re-elected, over Alexander, (Jackson,) by 2000 majority.

In the fifth District, Russell, (JACKSON) is re-elected by a majority of 2500, over Collins (Adams.)

In the 6th District, Creighton, (Adams) is re-elected over Wallace, (Jackson) by a majority of about 550.

In the 7th District, Vinton, (Adams) is re-elected, by a majority of 14 or 1500, over Houser (Jackson.)

In the eighth, Stanbery, (JACKSON) re-elected, by a majority of about 1500, over Minor, (Adams.)

In the 9th, Irvin, (JACKSON,) is elected, by a majority of 1055 over Beecher (Adams.)

In the 10th, Kennon, (JACKSON,) is elected, by a majority of about 150, over Davenport (Adams.)

In the 11th, Goodenow, (JACKSON) is elected by a majority of about 500 over Wright, (Adams.)

In the 12th, Thompson, (JACKSON,) is elected by a handsome majority, probably 1000 over Sloane, (Adams.) In this district four candidates were running.

In the 13th, the Adams candidate is no doubt elected, by a majority of about 2500.

The election in the 14th is doubtful. In this district, there were three Adams candidates, and one for Jackson, but it is believed the majority for Adams in the district is about 1500 or 2000.

It will be seen by casting up the above majorities in the several congressional districts in this State, (which it is believed, from the best information, that is received at this place is pretty correct) that the Jackson electors will certainly have a large majority—the vain boastings of the Adams "Coffin handbill" party, to the contrary notwithstanding.

[illegible] from the above unexpected and highly gratifying results of the elections in Ohio, it appears that the Jackson men have obtained a most signal victory, which has put the Coalition in a great flurry, and they are now endeavouring, (by suppressing returns, &c.) to persuade the people that the Adams candidate for governor is elected, and that the state will go for Adams. This may be so. But Jackson will be elected, let Ohio go for whom it pleases.

We never calculated on Ohio's going for Jackson—but from the late [illegible] as far as we have [illegible] seriously be[illegible] that Gen. Jackson stands a fair chance of receiving the electoral vote of that state than Mr. [illegible] We are also inclined to [illegible]

[illegible] Campbell [illegible] because [illegible] we have [illegible] give him a [illegible] the coalition editors do not publish the whole of the returns favourable to Jackson which they certainly must have received, and which go to prove that Ohio will not give her electoral vote to the bargain and sale candidate.

The following is a statement of the entire returns from Ohio, as received, taking the administration reports as true, and supplying the counties which Messrs. Gales & Seaton and the 36 editors of the Journal have omitted.

	Campbell.	Trimble.
Richland	1011	758
Butler	2582	846
Warren	1420	1358
Hamilton	3884	2261
Brown	1570	525
Higland	200 maj.
Jefferson	1833	1530
Harrison	1170	1192
Belmont	1917	1998
Perry	1065	802
Guernsey		30 maj.
Morgan	100 maj.
Monroe	100 do.
Muskingum		900 maj.
Fairfield	900 maj.
Licking	1791	1665
Columbiana		464 maj.
Portage	1484	1418
Ross	1449	1715
Knox	800 maj.
Wayne	1542	756
Pickaway	1087	871
Washington	493	868
Adams	1065	246
Trumbull	961	1755
Starke	1147	1138
Marion	214	270
Cayahoga, in part,	150	750
Meigs		330
Jackson		262
Lawrence		100
Scioto		266
Geauga	12	1214
Coshocton	922	628
Tuscarawas	598	761
Huron	446	973
Clermont	1605	888
Clark	425	987
Champaign	378	944
Franklin	699	1080
Greene	817	828
Logan	106	517
Delaware in part	242	565
Miami		242
Preble		500
Darke	300
Mercer	100
Shelby	150
Holmes	350
	36,082	33,836
	33,836
Campbell's maj.	2,246

From the Xenia [Ohio] People's Press.

Tremendous Defeat!

There never was a party in the U. States, so greatly disappointed, so completely astounded, as the Administration men in Ohio! ☞ One of their leading Editors, Mr. Dunlavy of Lebanon, (not overburdened with candor,) says—

"On the whole, the Jackson ticket has succeeded much beyond our calculation, and if the strength of the parties is tested by the election, the vote of the western part of Ohio, will be in favour of General Jackson."

☞ A few of the Adams editors pick up courage enough to say that their ticket received 8000 majority in the Western Reserve, Ohio!! Suppose we grant it—the Jackson ticket had upwards of 10,000 majority before the returns from that part of the state were received—Why dont they publish this?

JOHN C. WRIGHT OF OHIO.

If the Jackson party in Ohio had done nothing more at the recent election than turn out this venemous toad of the Coalition, they would have gained a triumph, and entitled themselves to the gratitude and respect of their countrymen. Flippant, insolent, and irresponsible, he was a sort of safety valve of the Coalition party in Congress, thro' which they let off the gall and bitterness and vulgarity and calumnies of their party. Without character himself, he was the virulent assailant of all who had any, and rioted in abuse of that great man, at whose shadow even his cowardly spirit would have started. He has been hurled from his seat in Congress by a virtuous and indignant people, and however he may hereafter flourish as a village politician in Steubenville, we hope, for the credit of the people of the district lately *mis*represented by him, for the credit of our species, he is doomed never to rise higher again.—Baltimore Republican.

JOHN SLOANE, of Ohio.

This is the man who is damned to fame, as the tool put forward to charge General JACKSON with the murder of the Six Militiamen. The existence of one so degraded [illegible] the language [illegible]

[illegible] the [illegible] members of Congress from Ohio, who were most conspicuous in their opposition to Gen. JACKSON. The consequence is, that they have all four, been dismissed by the PEOPLE. It is a fair inference that if the other members from that state had pursued the course of these four, they too would have been turned out, or, at least, their majorities reduced.—Ib.

☞ New Coalition Fabrications.

LOOK OUT

FOR LYING HANDBILLS!!!

Three have already appeared—The first is a deceptive statement of the votes given at the last Presidential election. Let none be deceived—But let all remember how Scott and Cook, and Warfield, and Clay, through corrupt bargaining and bribery bartered away the votes of their several states.

The second is a barefacedly unprincipled attempt to persuade people that Jackson wants a standing army!!! Did the followers of John II. think about old John Adams' standing army when they invented this new story? They surely could not have been thinking about the letter which Jackson addressed to Dr. W. Dickson, in 1801, to ascertain his principles before he would vote for him. The following is one of the questions contained in that letter—

"Have you always been and are you now opposed to standing armies in times of peace?"

But there is a fact to be related which will not confer much honour on the party who require such a tool as Dr. Gideon Humphreys, who is the chief fabricator of this villanous charge. It is this, the N. Y. Courier contains a triumphant refutation of the charge in question, and a document signed by John P. C. M'Mahon, a Surgeon in the United States Army, which, among other things contains the following—

"Whenever a falsehood is to be protruded on the world, with the face of innocent plausibility, the Doctor's talent is acknowledged on all hands to stand unrivalled. * * *

A sense of respect for public opinion compels me to adduce a few of the most prominent causes for entertaining the opinion I do of Dr. G. Humphreys, viz: Lying, Calumny, Violation of the Laws of Honour and Hospitality, and disgraceful Intercourse with a Female Slave * * *

J. P. C. M'MAHON.

The Albany Argus remarks—

Such are the weapons of the Administration. Such are the means by which they attempt to retain their ill-gotten power. Since the calumnies upon Thomas Jefferson, and the hawking about of the Porcupine falsehoods, the system had fallen into disease. It has been a part of the plans of the present Cabinet to revive it. None have pushed it farter. Abandoned by honest supporters—bereft of argument and reason, and even of hope—they resort to the meanest devices and the most disreputable tricks. Verily, their reward is at hand.

Another infamous handbill, issued from some unknown press, containing a number of base and villanous statements, signed 'Jesse Benton,' has also been put in circulation for the purpose of injuring Gen. Jackson's election. The people however, will know how to estimate the works of a desperate coalition, put in circulation on the eve of the election, merely for political effect. Jesse offers himself to be shot on the public square! Poor soul! He must want a coffin handbill to perpetuate his memory. Is it not enough, in these refined times, that young Master Clay has promised to shoot Gen. Jackson? Let the "order and decency" gentry read the following from the American Sentinel—

Philadelphia, Sept. 26, 1828.

Messrs. Editors—

I think the administration will now cease to charge the Jackson party with the cut-throat system, when it is a fact which can be proven that the son of the Hon. H. Clay did this day swear most bitterly and solemnly, that before Jackson should be President of the United States, he would BLOW THE DAMNED OLD RASCAL'S BRAINS OUT HIMSELF, and that he felt warm and spoke warm, and swore warm and would fight warm, and he would be damned if he did not whip some eight or ten of those damned Editors. Yours,

A VIRGINIAN.

It is a marked sign, and ominous of the fate which awaits the coalition, as a just retribution, for their calumnies, that Philadelphia, the residence of the forger Binns, and the scene of his inventions, has given an unprecedented vote against him and his [illegible] new fabrications and the coffin handbills. The gain in the city and county of Philadelphia since the last election, [illegible] all the efforts of Binns and his associate calumniators is about 2000. The majority for the Jackson ticket is now nearly 5000.—Albany Argus.

[illegible] the Editor of the Steubenville Herald can [illegible] the truth, that Mr. Adams cannot be elected.

GROSS NEGLECT.

A ship has lately arrived at Norfolk from Rio Janeiro, with the humiliating intelligence that capt. Biddle, the commander of the American squadron at Rio, was discharging his men, the term of their service having expired, and had laid up his ship there. Some of the crew have already arrived in the United States, and the remainder are expected home soon. It is also said that capt. Biddle's bills on the Navy Department for the support of the squadron have been returned protested for NON-PAYMENT. This is a case of the grossest neglect of public duty on the part of the President and his cabinet, which requires a public examination and the strictest scrutiny by the representatives of the people in congress. Where is the Secretary of the Navy, and what is he doing, that he has not attended to this business? Shameful to relate, he has left his post of duty and gone to New Jersey where he is ELECTIONEERING for the re-election of his master John Q. Adams. There never has been a time since the general government was first organized, when a total change in the administration was so absolutely necessary. —Nat. Repub.

In time of Mr. Jefferson, the tools of the elder Adams declared that "in case of his success, the houses dedicated to the worship of God would be burnt, and the Bibles destroyed." Many honestly believed that they would be deprived the privilege of reading the Scriptures, and mingled their honest tears of grief with the crocodile tears of those that excited their alarm. But the same trick—under the guise of six militiamen, coffin handbills and negro pamphlets—will not now produce the same effect. The people very correctly say, "if the hirelings of the elder Adams would lie about Jefferson, those of the younger Adams will lie about Jackson."

[Poughkeepsie Observer.

To the Editor of the N. Y. Enquirer.

Sir—I wish to propose several questions to the intelligent observers of events in this country, the point and tendency of which, will be readily perceived.

1. Have any means been pursued by the Department of the Navy at Washington to ascertain, or apprehend the piratical cruiser which boldly boarded and plundered a vessel (the Shenandoah of Georgetown, D. C.) within the waters of the United States, viz. the Capes of Virginia?

2. What has become of the squadron, designated by the Department to protect our commerce in the West India seas, and gulf of Mexico?

3. Does not the accomplishment of the object, for which that squadron is maintained, at great expense to the nation, require imperiously, that cruisers should be kept continually out, and as little as possible in port?

4. Is it compatible with official duty; moral obligation; a nice sense of honor; the security of the public weal, or private interest, for the head of the Navy Department to be absent from his post at an important crisis; especially, when from the absence of nearly all other heads of Department, there is no other responsible person on whom the discretionary powers of his office may devolve?

5. Whether the inauguration oath of the President, that he will enforce the execution of the laws of the Union, has not been violated in his own absence, and that of the secretaries, inasmuch as thereby a virtual if not positive neglect of duty must necessarily have resulted?

QUERIST.

☞ Notwithstanding the Adams gentry have repeatedly asserted that Gen. Jackson disregards the laws of our land, yet, in the face of the following Article of War, they abuse and vilify him for having approved the just sentence of the court martial condemning the Six Militia-Men!

☞ Art. 89. Every officer authorized to order a general court martial, shall have power to pardon or mitigate any punishment ordered by such court, Except the SENTENCE OF DEATH, or the cashiering of an officer"!!! ☜

CAUTION!

☞ On the eve of the late delegate election there appeared a certain handbill which was falsely said to have been issued from this office. We therefore now caution the public against regarding any handbill, or extra, which may appear previous to the approaching election, as having emanated from this office unless it bear the Village Herald imprint.

[illegible] "another Desperate [illegible]" [illegible] contained an extract from [illegible] Chillicothe [illegible] about 600 miles. This beats Munchausen all hollow! But the funniest part of the article is, the Adams men believe the correspondence true and think their candidate for governor in Ohio is elected.

Another Trick.—The editors of the Intelligencer, in their Bulletin of the 28th ult. made a fitting error of 2,356 in the addition of the votes which they claim for Trimble! This is another way to gain an Adams Victory!

We would now seriously ask, if the Adams candidate for governor in Ohio were elected, would the Coalition editors resort to such low tricks to deceive their readers?

War, Pestilence, and Famine Ticket.

For President,

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS,

Whose administration for the first three years of his term, has cost the country

$ 8,685,307 14,

more than the three preceding years of Mr. Monroe's administration.

Who has received from the treasury of this country, for his services SIX WAGGON LOADS OF SILVER!!!

Who drove from his door and threatened to horsewhip RICHARD NAGLE, an old soldier of the revolution, merely for soliciting a few shillings to enable him to return to his friends.

Who drove the gallant Com. PORTER from the service of his country, for gloriously defending her rights and chastising the insolence of her foe.

Who disregards the Sabbath by dressing in silk stockings, Nankin pantaloons, short jacket and riding cap, and causing cannon to be fired, thus disturbing the silence and good order of the day, and setting an evil and unwholesome example before others.

Who encourages gambling by keeping in his own house a billiard table, and other implements of gaming.

Who patronizes duelling, by retaining in his place Henry Clay, after he had challenged and fought a Senator for words uttered in debate.

Who by his blunders, has nearly destroyed the commerce of the United States.

Whom Henry Clay denounced as artful sophist—a clumsy negociator—and a vindictive man; with views too erroneous—feelings too sectional, and temper too vindictive for a chief magistrate of a free people and

Who obtained the Presidency by a corrupt bargain with this same Henry Clay.

Troy, N. Y. Budget.

PENNSYLVANIA.

We have received returns from 45 counties in this state which give the following

Majority for Jackson, 39,522

Bible Society.

THE several Agents of the Somerset Bible Society are informed that they will receive Bibles and Testaments to supply the destitute in their neighbourhoods upon application to the agent, Mr. William Done—and those who have collected any funds to aid in purchasing the books, will pay them to the same gentleman.

Nov 4 [illegible]

 The Orphans Court of Somerset county will sit on Tuesday the 18th instant.

BILL IN EQUITY.

In Somerset County Court at MAY TERM, 1828.

William Collins, Adm'r. of Stephen Collins, vs.

Daniel Dykes, Henry Moore & Sally his Wife, Isaac Ward and Mary his Wife, John Fuller and Sally his Wife, and Peggy Sturgis, heirs of Stephen Dykes

Notice

IS hereby given, that in pursuance of a decree of Somerset county court in the above cause, I will sell on TUESDAY the 25th of NOVEMBER, [inst.] at public sale to the highest and best bidder, on the premises, near Rehoboth, all the real estate of Stephen Dykes, deceased, for the payment of his debts. The terms of sale are a credit of 12 months from the day of sale—the purchaser or purchasers to give bond or bonds to the trustee for the payment thereof, with security to be by him approved, bearing interest from the day of sale. Upon the payment of the purchase money with interest, and not before, I will in pursuance of the said decree execute a deed or deeds to the purchaser or purchasers conveying all the right and title of the said Stephen Dykes to the said real estate.

I hereby notify the Creditors of the said STEPHEN DYKES,

To file with the Clerk of Somerset county court their claims against his estate, with the vouchers thereof, within six months from the day of sale aforesaid.

STEPHEN DYKES, Trustee.

Nov 30, 1828 [illegible]

NOTICE.

ALL Persons indebted for Officers' Fees for 1827, [illegible] and those indebted for County [illegible] payment for the same, as longer indulgence cannot possibly be given. My deputies have orders to close the collection of said fees and county [illegible] without delay. [illegible]

JOSHUA BRATTAN,

Oct 28 [illegible] Sheriff & Collector, S. C.

[illegible] HENRY CLAY'S NEW [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Foreign relations have been overlooked, and something relating to our domestic [illegible]

The Secretary of State has made war on printers and senators—(to use a diplomatic phrase,) he has placed himself in an attitude hostile to the freedom of the press and the freedom of speech. He has sought the life of a senator for words spoken in debate, and he has taken away the appointments of printers, not only for their comments on the measures of the administration, but also for refraining from all comment. He has declared he would have no neutrals, and has established a system of petty tyranny over the press, productive of incurable opposition or shameless servility. The contingent fund has been employed in jobbing, and wasted in gratuities for pretended services—such as paying to a secretary of legation, left for a few weeks in a foreign country as a charge, $4500 contrary to the express provision of an act of congress; and to an administration printer $1050 for conveying despatches from the department of state to Buenos Ayres, who went to England and sent his dispatches by a ship master. He has practised an open, gross, unprecedented system of Electioneering. He has travelled the country in all directions, "dining whenever asked and making speeches," praising himself, and abusing his political opponents, invoking upon his country the deepest curses, and insulted the throne of Heaven by demanding "war, pestilence and famine," in preference to the constitutional election of Gen. Jackson as President.

The former Secretary of War, has taken his share of the labour by circulating the forgeries of John Binns.

The President too, has tried his hand at "the game," and the Baltimore speech and toast will never be forgotten as long as Topaz continues to sparkle and Ebony to wear the hue of darkness. Neither will his speech when he "coost his duddies to the wark," invoked Bishop Berkley, and struck his spade against a hickory root, be forgotten, as long as this great state shall remember her lamented and beloved son the departed Clinton, as associated with the mightiest work of the age. When the prostrated statues of Pompey had been reared by Caesar, Cicero exclaimed that "Caesar had firmly fixed his own." But the Erie canal and its projectors and advocates were forgotten by the President of the United States, when he presided over the ceremonial which attended the commencement of the second great national work. But the printers of the administration have not forgotten them. One of them has had the sudacious wickedness to say that the Almighty, to favour the cause of the administration, and to frustrate the election of Gen. Jackson, had in the midst of his greatness and usefulness, stricken De Witt Clinton with death! Great God of Heaven!—and has it come to this! Is it possible that such blasphemious arrogance can be tolerated by a moral people? The poet puts this question in the mouth of a saint:

> "And shall my weak unknowing hand,
> Presume thy bolts to throw,
> And deal damnation round the land,
> On all I judge thy foe?"

And shall an infamous administration printer be permitted to insult the memory of a man who has effected so much to promote the grandeur of this state? The republican party have on many occasions resolutely opposed the views of Mr. Clinton—they have done so from good motives and justifiable ends:—but in the bitterest excitement,—the fiercest rage of party animosity—such a sentiment would have been received with horror by all; and when "this eminent citizen was withdrawn," they stood with his friends around his grave, and their tears were mingled. Shall such a wretch be permitted to insult the throne of God by pretending to say that he knows on whom his judgments fall, and to mark out the wise and the good as special objects of Almighty wrath! And yet I dare to say that this wretch (whoever he is,) should this administration again succeed, will, (if he does not now,) print the laws "by authority" under their appointment.

The partisans of the administration in congress have been multiplying their calls for information, and ransacking the dusty files of the war department, to prove, that Gen. Jackson thirteen years ago approved the sentence by which six soldiers out of three hundred were condemned to death for the threefold crime of robbery, mutiny and desertion, and the Secretary of War, unable to fasten a single imputation of illegality to General Jackson's proceedings, endeavoured by a transposition of papers, to produce a false impression.

Documents have also been called for, having no connexion with any proposed legislative measures, because Gen. Jackson some fifteen or sixteen years since, wrote a letter to a senator of Tennessee, commenting with much severity, on the conduct of an Indian agent, who had refused to permit citizens of Tennessee to pass through the Choctaw country, by the only route by which the settlements in the lower parts of the state of Mississippi could be reached, and who had prevented the progress of a lady and arrested her servants.

They have appealed to the sympathies of the people by sending "the six coffin slanders" through the country to a miserable feeling of unhallowed compassion for felons convicted of foul crimes!

Melancholy, but not singular, has been the fate of Gen. Jackson. Where he has conferred the greatest benefits, he has experienced the deepest ingratitude. "Inveterate indeed must be the rancour of those who still continue to pursue, with accusations of violated law and military tyranny, the hero who saved their capital,—their property—their lives—their wives and daughters from dishonour—their laws and liberties from destruction."

In the masonic dispute, the President has really tried the effect of double and treble [illegible]

[illegible] diplomacy. Mr. Rufus [illegible] who had previously [illegible] the [illegible] over his recollection [illegible] that it was not Mr. Adams [illegible] friends whose imitation he had [illegible] Mr. Adams (it is said) has assured [illegible] that but for an accident he would himself have been a mason, and that he had the highest respect for an institution which had been honoured with the fellowship of Washington, Franklin, Fayette, and Clinton, and he has written to Mr. Oliver Heartwell (who had stipulated to support him on the sole ground that he was not a free mason) that he was, and never was and never should be a free mason, and requested that the correspondence should not be disclosed—why? He was equally anxious to secure the masonic support. If by entering a lodge he could secure the greatest number of votes, he would contaminate himself with the useless frumpery of masonry "to-morrow." If most could be gained by the other course, he would "cry havoc, and let slip the dogs of war" upon all the masons in the United States! But he imagines that he has the dexterity to make either party believe that he is friendly to them, and hostile to their adversaries.

The same diplomacy has been practised with respect to the religious opinions of the President. As much as any one do I detest the practice of appealing to the partialities or antipathies of any religious sect for, or against candidates for public office. Our constitution recognises no sects, and political support on the grounds of sectarian belief is repugnant to its spirit, but yet no honest man attempts to conceal his religious opinions and in some countries and in some ages, they have avowed in sight of the flames which were kindled for the punishment of heresy. True it is, that the high feeling which sustains the martyr cannot be expected in Mr. Adams, but yet one would think that he would not be afraid of avowing, in this country his sentiments. No penal fires are here kindled, to purify the land of heresy.—With some, he is a Unitarian; with others, he is one of the orthodox. He publicly attends the Unitarian church, hears the preacher, pays the preacher, and denies that he is a Unitarian. When his religious opinions are brought up to obtain the political support, and his Unitarianism is denied to gain the votes of the Presbyterians, Catholics and other sects who adhere to the doctrines of the Ancient Church, his conduct deserves a remark. "Tis true, (says the Virginia Intelligencer) that Mr. Adams in Washington, has gone occasionally to hear an eloquent Unitarian preacher, whose sermons were generally much approved by orthodox christians. When the preacher was going to preach his Unitarian doctrines, he gave previous notice, and then Mr. Adams did not go to hear him. On the contrary, Mr. A. has declared to persons, who have asked him privately that he never was a Unitarian. His declaration has been confirmed by his acts." So, the conscience of Mr. Adams was so sensitive, that he required a special notice, lest his ears should be shocked with Unitarian doctrines! What a poor spirited soldier of the gospel must the preacher have been to have submitted to such an insult. A note must be despatched to the palace on each Sabbath. "Sir, I should be happy to see you at church this day—I shall not preach Unitarianism:" or, "Sir, I am fearful your feelings will be wounded if you attend my preaching this morning, as I shall preach against the Trinity." Such mean servility in one who professed to preach the gospel, is unaccountable, except on the ground, that his wages were taken from the "contingent fund of the state department!" Was a similar notice extended to the orthodox, who were so delighted with the sermons of the Rev. Mr. Little?

The Unitarian who has heard Mr. Adams deny that he was a Unitarian, cannot be produced; and yet I doubt not that he has made the denial imputed to him. Neither have I any doubt that he would profess a reverence for the doctrines of the Catholics, Presbyterians and Baptists, and all other sects, on the same day if thereby he could gain a single electoral vote for President. In nothing is he faithful. He regards the interests, creeds and opinions of the different religious sects amongst christians, no more than the interests and opinions of the followers of the Grand Lama. The sects opposed to the Unitarians can give him the most votes, therefore it is, that he denies in private that he is a Unitarian!

> "If the De'il was Laird, Rob would be for being tenant."

So said honest Baillie Jarvie, and he "knew something of men.

Marshal's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for Maryland District, and to me directed at the suit of the United States against George Brown and William Williams, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one house and lot No. 19, in Princess-Anne, as the property of George Brown, and I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, the above mentioned property, on the 25th day of November, (inst.) between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. at the court-house door in Princess-Anne.

HUMPHREY HUMPHREYS,
Dep. Marshal Som. county.

Nov 4 mw?

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias issued by the clerk of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suits of Geo. Jackson use of Thomas Bayly and James Donoho use of Levin Walter against Alexander Donoho, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called King's Misfortune, part of another tract of land called Hog's Quarter, part of Richardson Hard Luck, all containing 345½ acres, more or less, negro boy Levin, negro woman Margaret, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder on Tuesday the 18th day of next November, at the court-house door in Princess Anne, for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs and costs. Sale to take place between the hours of 12 and 2 P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Oct 28 [illegible]

Baltimore Prices Current.

[illegible] Oct. [illegible] 1828.

[illegible]—[illegible] family $[illegible] [illegible] 6 50 a 6 [illegible] [illegible] 6 00 a 6 25. WHEAT, [illegible] 1 45, best white 1 45 a 1 50. CORN [illegible] OATS 22 a 24.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court & to me directed, at the suit of Peregrine Weatherly vs. Hewet Langsdale, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: 1 negro man Charles, 1 ditto Isaac, 1 ditto Harry, 3 head of horses and 1 carriage and harness, which I shall proceed to sell at the court-house door, in Princess-Anne, on Tuesday the 18th day of November, [inst.] at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Nov 4 ldc

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed at the suit of William Merick against Samuel Vincent, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called Plumton's Saltash, part of Milton, part of Smith's Meadow, part of Cordwinder's lot, containing 161¼ acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell at the court house door, in Princess-Anne, on Monday the 24th instant, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Nov 4 ldc

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed two at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'rs. of Thomas Byrd against Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and one other at the suit Hannah Hearn, Ex'x. of Wm. Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by L. D. Colier, also, a house and lot occupied by Amelia Nicholson; also one other occupied by William S. Disharoon; also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esquire's Mills, it being the office of the said Elijah; also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which said land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson & Levi Cathell, of a certain Absalom Phipps; also a clock and case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Waller, Esq. in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 22d of November next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Oct. 28. ldc

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Elizabeth Byrd & Geo. Maddux, executors of Thomas Byrd, against William Callaway, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: a tract or part of a tract of land called Esme's Conclusion, containing 841 acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writ, at the court-house door in Princess-Anne, on Tuesday the 18th day of next November, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Oct 28 ldc

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of two writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Lemuel P. Spence and Samuel Brown, executor of Stephen Disharoon, against Joshua Morris, I will offer at public sale on Tuesday the 18th day of next November, at the court house door in Princess-Anne, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit: a tract of land called Security, containing 213 acres, more or less; also 1 negro boy Bob, 1 ditto John, 1 horse, gig and harness, 2 yoke of oxen and 2 horses, the property of said Joshua, to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above claims with all costs accruing thereon.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

Oct 28 mm

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of James Polk vs. Lee P. Harcum, I will offer at public sale on Tuesday the 18th day of November next, at the court house door, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. the following property to wit: part of a tract of land called White Hall, containing 509 acres, more or less; 1 negro man Stephen, 1 negro woman Ritty, 1 ditto Leah, the property of said Harcum, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above claim with all costs accruing thereon.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

Oct 28 mm

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess-Anne, it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Porehouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.

August 5. [illegible]

Twenty Five Cents Reward.

RANAWAY from the subscriber, about the end of last September an indented apprentice to the Tailoring business, named JOSHUA H. SMITH. All persons are cautioned against harbouring or trusting him on the subscriber's [illegible], and any person who will apprehend and deliver him to me shall have the above reward, but no charges paid.

DAVID VANCE.

Salisbury, Oct. 14, 1828. wm

Dissolution of Partnership.

The PARTNERSHIP of Wm. & Geo. Riall is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will in future be conducted by Riall & Hopkins. It is expected that all persons indebted to the late firm will come forward and make payment to Riall & Hopkins, otherwise their accounts will be placed in the hands of Thomas Jones for collection.

Sept 19, 1828. mm

THE NEW-YORK

MEDICAL ACADEMY.

The happy effects of the Botanical System of Practice, more especially of late employ in the cure of diseases, are such as entitle it to a high rank among modern improvements. The opinion long entertained in its favour, by many of the judicious, a thorough experience has now demonstrated to be well founded; and with the number and variety of its salutary achievements, its reputation is daily increasing.

It must be evident, to every discerning mind, that the present prevailing practice of medicine, which rejects this botanical aid, is at variance with our nature and with our happiness. Mercury, the Lancet, and the Knife, are chiefly relied upon, by physicians and surgeons of the present day, for the removal of almost all the diseases incident to the human body, notwithstanding the effects of these deliterous agents, are evidently fatal to multitudes. Deeply impressed with these facts and with a view of reforming the science and parctice of medicine, an individual of this city in the year 1827, procured a lot of ground and erected a handsome and convenient edifice, for an Institution denominated the United States Infirmary, expressly for employing a reformed system of practice in the treatment of diseases; the remedial resources being chiefly derived from the productions of our own country.—The course of treatment adopted by this Institution was principally the result of near forty years experience of a distinguished medical reform; which course we are happy to state, has been crowned with signal success, and proved to a demonstration, that without mercury, that boasted champion of the MATERIA MEDICA, or other poisonous drugs, diseases generally may be cured by those more safe and salutary means, which the God of nature has so liberally scattered around us.

Animated by the past success, and with the hope of benefiting future generations, an irrepressible desire has been felt, that measures commensurate with the importance of the object should be taken, to promulgate this valuable system of practice, and thereby improve and reform the noble and important science of medicine.

After reflecting for years upon the most prudent and successful method of effecting so desirable an object, it has been deemed expedient to establish a MEDICAL SCHOOL, with competent teachers, where students may receive board and instruction until they are fully qualified to practice in the various branches of the healing arts upon the reformed system. We are now happy to announce, that a building for such an Institution has been erected, and (by Divine permission) will be opened in Nov. next, for the reception of Students.

The building is large and commodious, situated in Eldridge-Street, between Grand and Broom, and adjoining the present U. S. Infirmary. It is in a healthy and pleasant part of the city, and has been completed at a great expense.

The following branches will be taught:—

1. Anatomy.
2. Surgery.
3. Theory and Practice of Physic.
4. Midwifery, and Diseases of Women and Children.
5. Materia Medica and Practical Botany.
6. Chemistry and Pharmacy.

The benefits to be derived by an attendance at this institution, will, we trust, be duly appreciated by those who wish to acquire a correct knowledge of the healing art.—Here the student will be taught all the modern practice which is deemed necessary, in addition to the Botanical; and in consequence of his residing in the Institution, and pursuing a systematical course of studies, combining each of these departments, he may acquire a knowledge of both in less than one half the time, and with less than half the expense, that is required at other Medical Institutions.

There being an infirmary connected with the Academy, the students will have the benefit of Clinical practice, by which the experimental part of medicine will be acquired with the Theory.

Another advantage held out to the student is, that all those who conform to the rules and regulations of the school, and therefore finish their education, will have employment with a generous compensation, secured them by the institution, to disseminate the practice of medicine in different sections of the country.

There will be no specified time to complete a course of study; but whenever the student is qualified to pass an examination he will receive a Diploma, and this Diploma will have a decided advantage over every other, as it will enable the possessor to practice in every State in the Union without molestation.

REQUISITIONS.

The qualifications for admission into the School will be:—

1. A certification of a good moral character.—2. A good English Education.

TERMS.

The price of qualifying a person for practice will be $250, one half payable in advance; board (being an extra charge) will be $2 50 per week. Some provision is made for young men in indigent circumstances.

All communications addressed to the Superintendent of the United States Infirmary, on this Circular, (Post Paid) will receive attention.

W. BEACH.

U. S. Infirmary, Oct. 1, 1828. [illegible]

POETRY.

STANZAS.

From Moore's Popular National Airs.

"Fear not that, while around thee,
Life's varied blessings pour
One sigh of hers shall wound thee,
Whose smile thou seek'st no more.
No, dead and cold for ever
Let our past love remain,
Once gone, its spirit never
Shall haunt thy rest again.

Fear not that, while around thee,
Life's varied blessings pour,
One sigh of her's shall wound thee,
Whose smile now charms no more.
May the new ties that bind thee,
Far sweeter, happier prove,
Nor e'er of me remind thee,
But by their truth and love.
Think how, asleep or waking,
Thy image haunts me yet;
But now this heart is breaking,
For thy own peace forget.
Fear not," &c.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞ Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞ Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞ Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞ All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; pound, half and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking; patent and common Taps; lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets,

Baltimore, 9th mo. 28th.

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers,

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 dozen Butter Prints

200 groce of Lamp Wicks, assorted sizes; Spickets and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels kegs and hydrants; sweeping, shoe, scrubbing, dusting, white-wash, weavers and other Brushes; scale-bed & sacking Cords; plough Lines; coarse and fine Twine, Weavers Slays or Reeds; woolen, cassinet, cotton and hand Shuttles; cotton and wool Cards; fancy and common Bellows; Fishing Tackle; lamp and candle Wick; corn Brooms and Whisks; market and close Baskets, long and short Brush Handles; Lemon Squeezers Rolling Pins, Potatoe Mashers; Mulders; towel Rollers; wash & cake Boards; shovels, tubs clothes Pins: humming and common Tops; Sifters; box and cake Blacking; butter Bowls; Trays, Spoons and Paddles; Trenchers; crabing and cabbage Netts.

The above articls are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.

Baltimore, 9th mo 28th

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court & to me directed, at the suit of Elizabeth Hurley against John S. Evans, I will offer at public sale on Tuesday the 4th day of next November, at the court-house door in Princess-Anne between the hours of one and two o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit. The farm whereon the said Evans now resides, containing 230 acres, more or less.—also 1 negro David, 1 do. Peter, 1 do. George 1 do Alfred, 1 woman Margaret, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of the said John, to the highest bidder for cash to satisfy the above claim and costs.

ROBERT STEWART, late Shff.
Oct 14 wm

NOTICE.

THE Trustees of the Poor of Somerset county will meet on Friday the 14th of next November at which time an OVERSEER of the Poor will be elected to serve for the year 1829. Persons wishing that situation will make known their proposals to some member of the Board on or before that day.

By order,
JAMES WILSON, clerk.
Oct 14 wm

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas and two writs of Fieri Facias issued by the Clerk of Somerset county court to me directed at the suit of John J. Davis use of James H. Handy, also at the suit of James Gosles use of James H. Handy and John S. Crockett use of James H. Handy, executor of Sophia L. N. Davis, against John Taylor, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—Part of a tract of land called Warwick and part of a tract called Midfield, containing 219½ acres, part of a tract of land called James' Debate, 89 acres, part of Ralph's Venture, 12 acres; negro Eli, 1 do. George, 1 negro woman Polly, 1 do. Nancy, and Nancy and Sarah, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of said Taylor, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs, at the court house door in Princess-Anne, on Tuesday the 11th of next November, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Oct 21 tj

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by the Clerk of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Jesse Walter use of Edward Austin against Joseph T. Howard, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: a tract of land called Darby, 27½ acres; part of another tract of land called Corn Hill, 43 acres; one horse, two yoke of oxen, six head of cattle, two beds and furniture and all of his crop of corn and fodder on the ground, which I shall proceed to sell on the 11th of next November, at the court house door in Princess-Anne, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above named writ and cost.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Oct. 21. tj

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of two writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Peregrine Weatherly, and Susan his wife, Executors of Edward Austin, and Joseph Barkley against Robert Walter, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: one negro boy Sambo, 1 do. Harry, 1 do. Sandy, and one ditto Sampson, whom I shall proceed to sell at the court house door, in Princess-Anne, on the 11th of next November, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs and cost.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Oct. 21. tj

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by Isaac Denson, a justice of the peace, in and for Somerset county, and to me directed at the suit of George A. Porter vs. William Smith, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit:—one house and lot, containing one acre more or less, and known by the name of Mount Han; also one yoke of oxen, one lot of lumber, and one cart, which I shall proceed to sell, at the court-house door, on Tuesday the 4th of next November, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Oct 14 ws

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Isaac Beauchamp against the lands and tenements of James Smith, I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, at the court-house door in Princess Anne, on Tuesday the 11th day of next November, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. the following tracts or parcels of land, to wit: New Wood Hall and Hog Quarter, containing 142 acres, more or less; Marsh Land bought of Coston, containing 412 acres; Broad Oak, 123; and land bought of John Miles, supposed to contain 350 acres; more or less, lying in my bailiwick, to satisfy the debt, cost and charges due and charges to become due on said writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Oct. 21

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Elijah Christopher, trustee for the sale of the real estate of William Stanford, against Francis D. Nelson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—1 negro girl Leah, 1 boy George, 1 negro man Charles, 1 do. David, 1 do. Jack, 1 woman Lucy, 1 vessel now in the possession of captain Wm. Smith, part of a tract of land called Chance, and part of another tract called Monmouth, containing 215 acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell at the court house door in Princess-Anne, on the 11th of next November, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock, P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above named writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Oct 21 tj

ELECTION.

Notice is hereby given, That an Election will be held in the several election Districts of Somerset county, on Monday the 10th day of next November for the purpose of choosing one ELECTOR of President and Vice-President of the United States.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Nov. 7, 1828.

FOR SALE, and on a moderate Credit,

A good second-hand Ogle GIG. For further information apply at the office of the Village Herald.

Sept. 2, 1828. tf

MARYLAND,

Dorchester County Orphans Court, October 14th, 1828.

ON application of William Price, Administrator of James Hughes, late of Dorchester County, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased's estate, and that the same be published once in each week for the space of three successive weeks in the Cambridge Chronicle and Village Herald—papers selected by him.

In testimony that the foregoing is truly copied from the minutes of the proceedings of Dorchester county Orphans Court, I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of my office affixed, this 14th day of October, in the year of our Lord, 1828.

(SEAL)

WM. W. ECCLESTON,
Register of Wills for Dorchester county.

In obedience to the law and the order of the honourable Orphans court of Dorchester county,

This is to give Notice,

That the subscriber, of Dorchester county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of said county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of JAMES HUGHES, late of said county, deceased.—All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 23d of April next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 14th day of October, A. D. 1828.

WILLIAM PRICE, Adm'r. of Oct 21 James Hughes, dec'd.

THE SOMERSET HOTEL

FOR SALE.

This large Establishment
IN PRINCESS-ANNE, MD.

Now occupied by Col. G. Dashiell, is for Sale,

It is commodious in every respect, and in good repair. There is no house on the Eastern Shore better patronized than this. Persons inclined to purchase will apply to

J. C. WILSON, Sen.

 Letters post paid will be attended to.
Oct 14 wm

For Rent,

For the ensuing year, a House and Lot in the village of White-Haven, at present occupied by Edward U. Blake. For terms apply to.

MARCELLUS JONES.
Sept. 9, 1828.

FOR SALE.

THE subscriber wishes to dispose of small FARM, with all of its improvements, situated on Deal's Island, the place where Keziah Jones, dec'd. formerly resided. The terms of sale may be ascertained by applying to Mr. William Wallace, who resides on said Island. If not sold at private sale before Wednesday the 5th day of November, it will on that day be offered at Public Sale, to the highest and best bidder. The terms will be made known on the day of sale.

MARCELLUS JONES.
Sept. 9, 1828.

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Henry K. Long use of John U. Dennis against Tubman Jones, I will offer at public sale on Tuesday the 4th day of next November, at the court house door, between the hours of one and 2 o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit. 220 acres of land, more or less, by the name of Second Addition to Hogg's Quarter, the lands and tenements of the said Tubman, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above claim and costs.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.
Oct 14 wm

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street.
BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,
Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.
And a general assortment
Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. wm

A List of Letters.

Remaining in the Post-Office at Princess Anne, Md. on the 1st of October, 1828.

B—Davis Bracken, John P. Brereton, Thomas Baily, George W. Bounds, Thomas B. Brerean, Spencer Brooks (negro.)
C—William D. Crocket, Sarah Cox, John Calaway, Lewis Caton, Capt. Geo. Card, Henry R. K. Coston,
D.—Henrietta Dashiell 2, Alex. Donoho 2, Henry J. Dennis.
H—Village Herald 2, Revil Hayman, Maria Handy.
J—John Jones, Thomas Jones of Thos. Elizabeth Jones, John H. Jones of Chas. Somerset Iris.
K—cbt. J. H. King, Planner H. King, Capt. Kelly, Mrs. Anne King.
L—Littleton Long, Robert Leatherbury.
M—Thomas Martin, Sarah R. Maddux, Daniel Miles, Mary Anne Miles.
P—John Powell, Mrs. M. Powell, Isaac Price, Jacob Parks, Charles Parks.
R—Rev. Noah Riley.
S—Somerset Lodge 2, James D. Smith.
W—William White of Thos. 2, Samuel L. Wilson, Julia Anne Waters, Rev. Dr. F. Waters, Lotty Wilson.
Y—John Young.

WM. W. JOHNSTON, P.M.
Oct. 6

SPLENDID VIEWS OF AMERICAN SCENERY.

On FRIDAY, the 10th of OCTOBER, 1828, will be published by T. K. GREENBANK, No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia, a volume of splendid views of American Scenery as follows—

1—A view of Beck's Shot Tower, on the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia, and adjacent scenery;
2—A view of the Light House in Long Island Sound, with the adjacent scenery;
3—A view of York on Lake Ontario, with the fortifications;
4—Characteristic Scenery on the Hudson River;
5—View of New London, Connecticut, with the adjacent scenery;
6—View of Lemon Hill, near Philadelphia, the seat of Henry Pratt, Esq.
7—The tomb of Washington, at Mount Vernon.
8—View at the Great Bend of the Susquequehanna.
9—View of the Upper Falls of Solomon's Creek, Luzerne county, Pa.
10—View of the Lower Falls of Solomon's Creek.
11—View of the Cattskill Mountains, from the Hudson.
12—View of Fort Niagara, on Lake Ontario, from the Light House on the British side.

These Views are executed in the best style of Philadelphia engraving, from drawings made upon spot. Each plate will be accompanied by a full and accurate description thereof, so as to make it perfectly intelligible to every person.

The work will be printed and issued to subscribers in the first style, on superior paper, and with a handsomely printed cover, and delivered to subscribers at the very low price of One Dollar per copy. Flexible covers will be used for country subscribers, so that they can be safely sent by mail.

☞ Any gentleman, postmasters and others who will interest themselves to procure ten subscribers and remit $10 to the Editor, shall receive twelve copies. From the very flattering patronage already received (1200 subscribers having put down their names) this volume will probably be succeeded by another, as soon as other plates can be engraved. All orders from the country will be promptly attended to.

Address, T. R. GREENBANK,
No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia.
Sept. 16 mm

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER,
Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne, Md.

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.
ALSO,
A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks,

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
CA. SA.'s before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas.
WARRANTS.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks, PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms, At the Office of the Village Herald.

Contents of the American Farmer.

Of October 17, 1828.

On the Criteria of the Qualities of ... for various purposes, with explanatory cuts, from Loudon's Encyclopedia of Agriculture, concluded—An Address, delivered before the Agricultural Society of South Carolina, at its anniversary meeting, Aug. 19, 1828, by Elias Horry, concluded—Important Observations on the Preservation of Indian Corn from the Fly or Weevil; and corn houses, by Jams Carroll—Crops in the South—Second Annual Report of the President and Directors to the Stockholders of the Baltimore and Ohio Rail Road Company—Poetry, Unambitious Love—Hunting—On the Duty and Value of Punctuality—Instinct of Rats—Extraordinary Despatch—Receipes, Cure for the Croup, To make indelible Ink—Items of News—Prices, &c.

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. HALL,)

Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk-Maker,

No. 127 Market Street, (near the new City Hotel,) BALTIMORE,

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public, that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old established stand for many years occupied by Messrs. William & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a

Large and General Assortment of

Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks, Veleices, Saddlebags, Collars, Military Equipments, &c.

of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail, on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this or any other city.

August 19th, 1828.

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phoebus.

For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.
June 3, 1828. wk

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's obt. servant.

WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.

Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

STATE OF MARYLAND, SC.

Somerset County Orphans Court,

Sept. 23d, 1828.

On application of Edward Fowler and Alcey White, Adm's. c. t. a. of Henry White late of Somerset county, deceased: It is ordered by the court that the said administrators give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the estate of the said deceased; and that the same be published once a week for three weeks, in one of the newspapers printed at Princess-Anne.

(SEAL)

True copy. TEST.
JAMES POLK, Reg. W.

This is to give Notice,

That the subscribers have obtained from the Orphans court of Somerset county in Maryland, letters of administration cum testamento anexo, on the personal estate of Henry White (of Dame's Quarter) late of Somerset county, deceased; All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof to the subscribers, at or before the first day of April next, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and twenty nine; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. Given under our hands this 23d day of September, Anno Domini 1828.

ALCEY WHITE,
EDWARD FOWLER,
Adm's. c. t. a. H. White, dec'd.
Sept 30 mm

In Somerset County Court,

MAY TERM, 1828.

James Wilson v. Arnold E. Waters.

ORDERED, by the court, that the sale of the real estate of Arnold E. Waters, made and reported by James Wilson, Trustee, for the sale of said real estate, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary be shewn by the second day of the next term of this court; provided a copy of this order be inserted in a newspaper published in the town of Princess-Anne once a week for three successive weeks before the said day. The Trustee reports the amount of sales to be $3400.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE,
A true copy. TEST.
GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Sept 16

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1828. NO. 33.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if paid within six months.

☞ Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞ Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞ Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞ All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

COURSE OF EXCHANGE,

Cohen's Office, Baltimore, Oct. 23, 1828.

BANKS	pr. ct. dis.	BANKS	pr. ct. dis.
U. States Bank	par	Farmers bank and branches	1
Do Branches	par	Wilmington and Brandywine	½
MASSACHUSETTS		Commercial bank	1
Boston banks	1	Branch of do. at Milford	2
Other Mass. notes	2	Bank of Smyrna	1
RHODE-ISLAND		MARYLAND
Providence banks	2	Frederick c'y bank	½
Other R. Island notes	3	Havre-de-Grace	par
CONNECTICUT		Farmers bank at Annapolis	½
Middletown bank	1	Branches at Frederick & Easton	do
Phenix bank at Hartford	1	Hagerstown	do
Bridgeport bank	1	Westminster	do
Eagle bank of New Haven	no sale	Elkton	susp.
Hartford bank	1	DISTRICT OF COL.
NEW-YORK		Bk of Washington	½
N. Y. city banks (except Lombard)	par	Bk of the Metrop.	do
Albany	½	Patriotic bank	do
Other N. York notes	1	Central bank	do
NEW-JERSEY		Bk of Columbia	nom
...bank	no sale	Union bk Georget'n	½
Bank in Newark	1	Farmers & Mechanicks bank	do
Bank of N. Brunswick	1	Bk of Alexandria	do
...Co	1	Bk of Potomac	do
Farmers bank at Mount Holly	1	Farmers bk of Alexandria	do
Cumberland bk	1	Union bk of Alex'a	do
State bk Camden	1	Mechanics bk of Alexandria	do
At Elizabethtown	1	VIRGINIA
At N. Brunswick	1	Richmond & bran's	½
At Patterson	1	Bk of the Valley	do
At Trenton	no sale	Br at Leesburg	do
At Morristown	1	Br at Charlestown	do
Sussex bank	1	Br at Romney	do
PENNSYLVANIA		N W bank of Vir at Wheeling	3
Philadelphia banks	par	N. CAROLINA
Easton	½	State bk at Raleigh and branches	4
Germantown	do	Cape Fear	4
Montgomery county	do	Newbern	4
Chester "	do	S. CAROLINA
Delaware "	do	State banks generally	2
Lancaster bank	do	GEORGIA
Farmers bk of Lan'r	½	State bank	2
Harrisburg	½	Planters	2
Northampton	½	Augusta	2
Farmers bank of Bucks c'y	1	Darien	5
York bank	½	Augusta br Co	no sale
Chambersburg	½	KENTUCKY
Farmers bank at Reading	½	Bank of Kentucky & branches	no sale
Gettysburg	do	OHIO
Carlisle bk	½	Specie banks	3
Swatara at Harrisb'g	½	LOUISIANA
Pittsburg	2	Banks at N Orleans	3
Greensburg	3
Brownsville	4
DELAWARE
Bank of Delaware	½

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; pound, half and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking; patent and common Taps; lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets.

Baltimore, 10th mo. 11th.

FOR SALE.

THE subscriber wishes to dispose of small FARM, with all of its improvements, situated on Deal's Island, the place where Keziah Jones, dec'd. formerly resided. The terms of sale may be ascertained by applying to Mr. William Wallace, who resides on said Island. If not sold at private sale before Wednesday the 5th day of November, it will on that day be offered at Public Sale, to the highest and best bidder. The terms will be made known on the day of sale.

MARCELLUS JONES.
Sept. 9, 1828.

THE NEW-YORK MEDICAL ACADEMY.

The happy effects of the Botanical System of Practice, more especially of late employ in the cure of diseases, are such as entitle it to a high rank among modern improvements. The opinion long entertained in its favour, by many of the judicious, a thorough experience has now demonstrated to be well founded; and with the number and variety of its salutary achievements, its reputation is daily increasing.

It must be evident to every discerning mind, that the present prevailing practice of medicine, which rejects this botanical aid, is at variance with our nature and with our happiness Mercury, the Lancet, and the Knife, are chiefly relied upon, by physicians and surgeons of the present day, for the removal of almost all the diseases incident to the human body, notwithstanding the effects of these deliterous agents, are evidently fatal to multitudes. Deeply impressed with these facts, and with a view of reforming the science and practice of medicine, an individual of this city in the year 1827, procured a lot of ground and erected a handsome and convenient edifice, for an Institution denominated the United States Infirmary, expressly for employing a reformed system of practice, in the treatment of diseases; the remedial resources being chiefly derived from the productions of our own country.—The course of treatment adopted by this Institution was principally the result of near forty years experience of a distinguished medical reformer, which course we are happy to state, has been crowned with signal success, and proved to a demonstration, that without mercury, that boasted champion of the MATERIA MEDICA, or other poisonous drugs, diseases generally may be cured by those more safe and salutary means, which the God of nature has so liberally scattered around us.

Animated by the past success, and with the hope of benefiting future generations, an irrepressible desire has been felt, that measures commensurate with the importance of the object should be taken, to promulgate this valuable system of practice, and thereby improve and reform the noble and important science of medicine.

After reflecting for years upon the most prudent and successful method of effecting so desirable an object, it has been deemed expedient to establish a MEDICAL SCHOOL, with competent teachers, where students may receive board and instruction until they are fully qualified to practice in the various branches of the healing arts upon the reformed system. We are now happy to announce, that a building for such an Institution has been erected, and (by Divine permission) will be opened in Nov. next, for the reception of Students.

The building is large and commodious, situated in Eldridge-Street, between Grand and Broom, and adjoining the present U. S. Infirmary. It is in a healthy and pleasant part of the city, and has been completed at a great expense.

The following branches will be taught:—

1. Anatomy.
2. Surgery.
3. Theory and Practice of Physic.
4. Midwifery, and Diseases of Women and Children.
5. Materia Medica and Practical Botany.
6. Chemistry and Pharmacy.

The benefits to be derived by an attendance at this institution, will, we trust, be duly appreciated by those who wish to acquire a correct knowledge of the healing art.—Here the student will be taught all the modern practice which is deemed necessary, in addition to the Botanical; and in consequence of his residing in the Institution, and pursuing a systematical course of studies, combining each of these departments, he may acquire a knowledge of both in less than one half the time, and with less than half the expense, that is required at other Medical Institutions.

There being an infirmary connected with the Academy, the students will have the benefit of Clinical practice, by which the experimental part of medicine will be acquired with the Theory.

Another advantage held out to the student is, that all those who conform to the rules and regulations of the school, and there finish their education, will have employment, with a generous compensation, secured them by the institution, to disseminate the practice of medicine in different sections of the country.

There will be no specified time to complete a course of study; but whenever the student is qualified to pass an examination he will receive a Diploma, and this Diploma will have a decided advantage over every other, as it will enable the possessor to practice in every State in the Union without molestation.

REQUISITIONS.

The qualifications for admission into the School will be:—

1. A certification of a good moral character.—2. A good English Education.

TERMS.

The price of qualifying a person for practice will be $250, one half payable in advance; board (being an extra charge) will be $2 50 per week. Some provision is made for young men in indigent circumstances.

All communications addressed to the Superintendent of the United States Infirmary, on this Circular, (Post Paid) will receive attention.

W. BEACH.
U. S. Infirmary, Oct. 1, 1828.—28jll

FOR SALE, and on a moderate Credit,

A good second-hand Ogle GIG. For further information apply at the office of the Village Herald.

Sept. 2, 1828.

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. HALL,)

Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk-Maker,

No. 127 Market Street, (near the new City Hotel,) BALTIMORE,

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public, that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old established stand for many years occupied by Messrs. William & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a

Large and General Assortment of

Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks, Veleices, Saddlebags, Collars, Military Equipments, &c.

of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail, on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this or any other city.

August 19th, 1828. 1*

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's obt. servant.

WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.

Cambridge, June 3, 1828.

THE SOMERSET HOTEL

FOR SALE.

This large Establishment
IN PRINCESS-ANNE, MD.

Now occupied by Col. G. Dashiell, is for Sale,

It is commodious in every respect, and in good repair. There is no house on the Eastern Shore better patronized than this. Persons inclined to purchase will apply to

J. C. WILSON, Sen.

 Letters post paid will be attended to.
Oct 14 wm

For Rent,

For the ensuing year, a House and Lot in the village of White-Haven, at present occupied by Edward U. Blake. For terms apply to.

MARCELLUS JONES
Sept. 9, 1828.

NOTICE.

THE Trustees of the Poor of Somerset county will meet on Friday the 14th of next November, at which time an OVERSEER of the Poor will be elected to serve for the year 1829. Persons wishing that situation will make known their proposals to some member of the Board on or before that day.

By order;
JAMES WILSON, clerk.
Oct 14 wm

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers,

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 dozen Butter Prints

200 groce of Lamp Wicks, assorted sizes; Spickets and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels kegs and hydrants; sweeping, shoe, scrubbing, dusting, white-wash, weavers and other Brushes; scale bed & sacking Cords; plough Lines; coarse and fine Twine, Weavers Slays or Reeds; woolen, cassinet, cotton and hand Shuttles; cotton and wool Cards; fancy and common Bellows; Fishing Tackle; lamp and candle Wick; corn Brooms and Whisks; market and close Baskets, long and short Brush Handles; Lemon Squeezers Rolling Pins, Potatoe Mashers; Mulders; towel Rollers; wash & cake Boards; shovels, tubs clothes Pins: humming and common Tops; Sifters; box and cake Blacking; butter Bowls; Trays, Spoons and Paddles; Trenchers; crabing and cabbage Netts.

The above articls are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.

Baltimore, 10th mo 11th

SPLENDID VIEWS OF AMERICAN SCENERY.

On FRIDAY, the 10th of OCTOBER, 1828, will be published by T. K. GREENBANK, No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia, a volume of splendid views of American Senery as follows—

1—A view of Beck's Shot Tower, on the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia, and adjacent scenery;
2—A view of the Light House in Long Island Sound, with the adjacent scenery;
3—A view of York on Lake Ontario, with the fortifications;
4—Characteristic Scenery on the Hudson River;
5—View of New London, Connecticut, with the adjacent scenery;
6—View of Lemon Hill, near Philadelphia, the seat of Henry Pratt, Esq.
7—The tomb of Washington, at Mount Vernon.
8—View at the Great Bend of the Susquequehanna.
9—View of the Upper Falls of Solomon's Creek, Luzerne county, Pa.
10—View of the Lower Falls of Solomon's Creek.
11—View of the Cattskill Mountains, from the Hudson.
12—View of Fort Niagara, on Lake Ontario, from the Light House on the British side.

These Views are executed in the best style of Philadelphia engraving, from drawings made upon spot. Each plate will be accompanied by a full and accurate description thereof, so as to make it perfectly intelligible to every person.

The work will be printed and issued to subscribers in the first style, on superior paper, and with a handsomely printed cover, and delivered to subscribers at the very low price of One Dollar per copy. Flexible covers will be used for country subscribers, so that they can be safely sent by mail.

☞ Any gentleman, postmasters and others who will interest themselves to procure ten subscribers and remit $10 to the Editor, shall receive twelve copies. From the very flattering patronage already received (1200 subscribers having put down their names) this volume will probably be succeeded by another, as soon as other plates can be engraved. All orders from the country will be promptly attended to.

Address, T R. GREENBANK,
No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia.
Sept. 16 mm

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER.
Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne, Md

 The Orphans Court of Somerset county will sit on Tuesday the 18th instant.

MARYLAND,

Dorchester County Orphans Court, October 14th, 1828.

ON application of William Price, Administrator of James Hughes late of Dorchester County, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased's estate, and that the same be published once in each week for the space of three successive weeks in the Cambridge Chronicle and Village Herald—papers selected by him.

In testimony that the foregoing is truly copied from the minutes of the proceedings of Dorchester county Orphans Court, I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of my office affixed, this 14th day of October, in the year of our Lord, 1828.

(SEAL)

WM. W. ECCLESTON,
Register of Wills for Dorchester county.

In obedience to the law and the order of the honourable Orphans court of Dorchester county,

This is to give Notice,

That the subscriber, of Dorchester county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of said county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of JAMES HUGHES, late of said county, deceased.—All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 23d of April next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 14th day of October, A. D. 1828.

WILLIAM PRICE, Adm'r. of
Oct 21 James Hughes, dec'd.

Twenty-Five Cents Reward.

RANAWAY from the subscriber about the end of last September, an indented apprentice to the Tailoring business, named JOSHUA H. SMITH. All persons are cautioned against harbouring, or trusting him, at their peril; and any person who will apprehend and deliver him to me, shall have the above reward, but no charges paid.

DAVID VANCE.
Salisbury, Oct. 14, 1828 wm

Dissolution of Partnership.

The PARTNERSHIP of Wm. & Geo. Riall is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will in future be conducted by Riall & Hopkins. It is expected that all persons indebted to the late firm will come forward and make payment to Riall & Hopkins, otherwise their accounts will be placed in the hands of Thomas Jones for collection.

Sept 19, 1828. mm

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street.
BALTIMORE.

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,
Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.
And a general assortment
Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. wm

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of 3 writs of Fieri Facias issued by the clerk of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suits of Geo. Jackson use of Thomas Bayly and James Donoho use of Levin Walter against Alexander Donoho, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: part of a tract of land called King's Misfortune, part of another tract of land called Hog's Quarter, part of Richardson Hard Luck, all containing 345½ acres, more or less, negro boy Levin, negro woman Margaret, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder on Tuesday the 18th day of next November, at the court-house door in Princess Anne, for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs and costs—Sale to take place between the hours of 12 and 5 P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Oct 28 tj

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form, and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.
ALSO,
A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks,

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
CA. SA.'s before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas.
WARRANTS.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks, PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms, At the Office of the Village Herald.

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATIS.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, NOV. 11, 1828.

Electoral Election News.

MARYLAND.

RETURNS OF VOTES TAKEN, NOV. 10.

NINTH DISTRICT—Somerset County.

Districts.	For Jackson. CARROLL.	For Adams. DENNIS.
Princess Anne	120	220
Trappe	121	54
Dublin	82	71
Brinkley's	104	467
Dame's Quarter	39	84

Tyaskin, Williamstown, and Barren C. Springs districts—returns not received.

Worcester county, about 188 maj. for Carroll. Dorchester county not heard from.

VIRGINIA.

A letter from the E. Shore of Va states that the whole of the Northampton returns had been received, and stood thus;

For Jackson 90 For Adams 20

The whole of Accomack county not heard from; but as the Jackson ticket at Drummondtown has a majority of 15 votes, it is supposed that the Adams strength in the remaining part of this county will not be sufficient to overbalance the above, so that the cause of Jackson, Calhoun & Liberty will be triumphant even on the E. Shore of Va.

We have received farther returns from the strongest holds of Adams & Clay in Virginia, which give the Jackson ticket upwards of 1000 votes majority. Hence there can be no doubt that this state has given her 24 electoral votes in favour of Old Hickory.

PENNSYLVANIA.

'Twould be tedious to give a detail account of the overwhelming majorities, in favour of the People's candidates, which pour in upon us from this great and enlightened state—Suffice it to say, Jackson's cause will have a majority, when all the returns come in, it is now supposed, exceeding 50,000!! Thus Johnny Q. will have 28 votes against him in this "doubtful" state.

NEW YORK.

Wilmington, Nov. 7.

By a gentleman who left Philadelphia yesterday afternoon, we learn that accounts had been received at the Sentinel office, from New York, three hours before the closing of the polls, at which time upwards of 24,000 votes were polled, and it was confidently expected that the Jackson majority for Governor and Electors would be from 8 to 10,000. Bets were offered, by the Jackson men, in New York, on Wednesday, to almost any amount, that Jackson would receive 24 of the Electoral votes of the state.

Accounts had been received from Belmont county, in Ohio, in which the Jackson vote was considerably increased beyond that received at the General Election.

The accounts from New Jersey were such as to afford strong hopes that the Electoral vote of that state will be for Jackson.

Del. Gazette.

OHIO.

We have been permitted to make the following extract from a letter to a gentleman in this county, dated "Zanesville, Ohio, Nov. 1.

(EVENING.)

Sir—Full returns of this county (Muskingum) are just received, for Electors of President and Vice President, and we have gained 266 votes, and a like gain in the adjoining counties, far as heard from. The state is safe for Jackson."

Belmont County, Ohio, is politically Regenerated.

'We have met the enemy and they are ours.'

Gazette Office.

St. Clairsville, Nov. 1—6 p. m.

We have to announce to the public the cheering intelligence that Belmont county has given a majority to the Jackson Electoral Ticket.

In 1824, Jackson received only 164 votes. We have heard from 14 out of 15 townships, and the Jackson Ticket has received 2092—gain in 14 townships NINETEEN HUNDRED AND TWENTY-EIGHT VOTES. The returns so far as received stand thus—

For the Jackson Ticket,		2092
Adams	do	2080

The Township to be heard from will give the Jackson Ticket from 30 to 50 votes majority, so that Belmont, a county always claimed as certain for the administration, is now SURE for the good old Farmer of Tennessee. Our friends at a distance may now rest assured that the 16 Electoral votes of Ohio will be given for Andrew Jackson as President and John C. Calhoun as Vice-President of the United States. The friends of Old Hickory, in Belmont county, have crowned themselves with honour, and deserve the praise of every lover of liberty and equal rights.

☞We have seen a Baltimore Republican Extra printed last Saturday, giving Electoral Election returns from 7 counties in Ohio. These counties have given a majority to the Jackson electoral ticket, exceeding that of Mr. Campbell at the late Governor's election, by 2,689 votes. Thus we go in Ohio.

From the Maryland Gazette,
Annapolis, Nov. 6, 1823.

A Coroner's Inquest was held on Friday evening last, over the body of a man found drifted on shore at Belmont, about 2 miles below this city. From information collected by the jury, it appeared that the name of the deceased was Reucher; that he had sailed in the Dolphin, from which vessel it is conjectured, he was accidentally knocked overboard by the boom, on the 19th ultimo, and drowned. It is believed that he was from one of the lower counties of the Eastern Shore of this state. The pocket book and papers found in his pockets, are in the possession of the coroner, Mr Philip Clayton, of this city, who attended to the interment of the body. Baltimore.

An express has arrived in this city with the information that the British ports have been thrown open for the importation of foreign grain, &c. Flour and grain has already consequently taken a great rise in this market.

WINNEBAGO INDIANS.

Governor Cass, of Michigan, Major Forsyth and Capt. Kinsey, accompanied by a deputation of Winnebago Indians, to the number of fifteen men and one woman, have arrived in New York on their way to Washington. The singularity of this visit, being the first of the kind, we believe, from that remote and hitherto unmanageable tribe has attracted great attention, and brought together crowds of people. The tribe from which these men come, is situated on the Fox & Ouisconsin river, in the vicinity of the rich tract known as the Fever Mines. They have up to the present time entertained hostile feelings towards the United States, and have always felt the most perfect confidence in their ability to conquer any enemy to whom they might be opposed. Their tribe numbers about 1200 warriors, and they are so situated that they can after having committed depredations upon our territory, retreat into the interior where it would be very difficult to follow them, up the Ouisconsin, in doing which our troops would be continually liable to fall into ambuscades. The humane design of the present visit is to produce in the minds of these savages a conviction, by showing them the extent of our power, that it is in vain to contend against us; and that their true policy is to cherish peaceful intercourse with our people. A great effect has already been produced upon their minds, as their chief man, in a speech which he addressed to his companions at Utica, told them that it would be of no avail for them to attempt to overcome the whites who were evidently too strong for them—and that when they return home they had better make up their minds to live at peace with the white people of this country. They have been both surprised and delighted at what they have seen.

A Parody.

BY A NEWS-PRINTER.

"His face was long, and many a sigh heav'd he,
For, alackaday! his purse was quite emp ty!"

To dun, or not to dun? that's the question;
Whether 'tis better that the purse should Suffer (for lack of cash) by baneful emptiness,
Or, by a gentle dun, to fill it up.
To dun—to get the money—and be enabled
To live and pay our debts, 'tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wished. To dun, to be denied;
Denied with "call again"—ay, there 's the rub;
For, in that CALL AGAIN, what evils come,
What disappointment sore—chagrin and wo,
What time is wasted, and what shoes are worn
In consequence, must give us pain.
——————It is this
That makes so many debts not worth collecting—
'Tis this which sickens business to despair,
And keeps from honest labour its reward.
We don't forget our many, many friends;
To them a debt of gratitude we freely pay.
Buoy'd by their kindness, still our bark shall sail,
Enjoy the pleasing calm, nor dread the boisterous gale.

[COMMUNICATED.]

OBITUARY.—Died, on Saturday morning last Mr George W. Jones, of this county.

The deceased was taken ill at about eleven o'clock on Friday night, and departed this life on Saturday morning, reminding us that "In the midst of life we are in death."

Foreign News.

From the New York Enquirer.

By the arrival of the packet ship Silas Richards, Capt. Holdredge, from Liverpool, we have received London papers to the 24th, and Liverpool to the 25th September.

The Russians meet with great resistance from the Turks. In a sortie from Choumla the Turks had made themselves masters of three redoubts, and cut to pieces the Russians who defended them—General Wrede was killed.

The Turkish plan of campaign is said to be, to make constant and vigorous sallies from their fortresses, and thus oblige the Russians to divide their force.

The Emperor Nicholas, sailed from Odessa on the 2d of September, on his return to his army. Lord Heytsbury did not accompany or follow his Imperial Majesty. The other Ambassadors, who are military men, were to follow the Emperor in two or three days.

General Ivanoff is dead of the wounds he received.

The Grand Vizier left Constantinople on the 20th and was to proceed to Choumla direct, with 40,000 men.

The Sultan has sent a sabre of honour to Hussein Pacha, as a mark of his approbation of the Pacha's conduct.

The exiled Janissaries had returned and formed a conspiracy. It was discovered.—The standard of the prophet had not been displayed.

The French are sending a third expedition from Toulon. It was to sail between the 20th and 30th Semptember.

The ambassadors of France, England and Russia, have commenced their deliberations at Corfu. It is said they are about to quit Corfu for the seat of the Greek government, at the isle of Spezzia.

Ibrahim Pacha intends to fortify a camp between Coron and Modon. It is said that Ibrahim does not think of leaving the Morea, but intends to make resistance. He has provisions for six months. Admiral Codrington had gone to Alexandria.

The French liberal journals talk a great deal about the inactivity of the Duke of Wellington.

The Turkish bulletins state, that they have annihilated 50,000 Russians, and that the Krair of Russia (Czar) has fled to Codja Bay (Odessa.)

The news of the French expedition to the Morea has set the Divan in a fury; they compare the invasion to that of Egypt in 1798. There does, however, some difference exist, for the Treaty of the 6th July has been officially announced to the Divan.

The Porte insists that the successes of the Russians, in Asia Minor have not been so important as they announce; the Ministers speak of the march of troops from a great part of Aatolia against General Paskewitch, who will meet with an insurmountable resistance at Erzerum.

The disturbances in Bosnia, according to the Turks, begin to settle, and all Romelia is ready to oppose both the French and Russians. The English are favourably spoken of, as they continue always to regard them as Allies; we even believe that they have one or more secret agents established at Constantinople, and that a great personage will very speedily show himself in an official character at Pera.

The Emperor of Brazil has issued a proclamation to the Portuguese. He does not speak as their sovereign, but as the father of Donna Maria the second.

The Queen of Portugal was expected at Falmouth at the latest dates. Palmella and Itabayana were waiting for her. Valdez, the Governor of Madeira, had arrived at Falmouth.

A Russian loan had been contracted for in Amsterdam, for one million and a half sterling, with the house of Hope & Co.

The English Funds had been heavy, on the 22d Sept. with scarcely any variation in the price of Consols; 87 7-8 88 is the only quotation. Exchequer Bills, 76 77 1-2 India Bonds, 94 97. At three o'clock, Consols were quoted at 87 7-8 to 88

The Austria Bank Stock had advanced six per cent in one day. This rise was imputed to some new financial arrangement in contemplation.

The London papers are very warmly discussing the proposition whether England is suffering from a want of trade or not. They have great difficulty to come to a conclusion.

There was a great meeting of the proprietors of the bank of England on the 18th Sept. It was confidently expected that the charter would be renewed by the government.

Hunt wrote a letter to Mr. O'Connell, of Ireland, accusing the latter of improper conduct towards the radicals. Mr. O'Connell replied, and completely demolished the blacking orator.

The Manchester Guardian states, that there had been an improved demand in their market for manufactured goods. The German markets had taken off great quantities.

The harvest in Ireland had been tolerably fair and well got in.

LONDON, Sept. 23.

Twelve o'clock:—At Navarin the French have taken possession of the forts.

PEACE BETWEEN BUENOS AYRES AND BRAZIL.

We have been informed by a gentleman who came passenger in the steam boat from Norfolk, of the arrival of the ship Macedonia, in sixty days from Rio Janeiro, bringing accounts of actual conclusion of peace between Brazil and Buenos Ayres. Despatches giving information of this important event, have been forwarded to our government at Washington.

No other particulars had transpired when our informant left Norfolk.

A Midshipman from the Macedonian reports that the Banda Oriental was given up to the Buenos Ayreans.—Gazette.

Supply of Corn in Great Britain—The Liverpool Chronicle, mentions the reported early meeting of Parliament in this month as probable to take place on various accounts, of which the alarming deficiency of the harvest is the principal. The conviction of this deficiency is producing, it states, a serious rise in the price of grain, and a consequent increased difficulty among the labouring classes of obtaining subsistence. The deficiency is thought to amount to one-fourth, to which it must be added that the stock on hand at the commencement of the harvest, was smaller than was ever known. A much more important fact than either is, that England cannot, as in former years, obtain an immediate and extensive supply from the Continent, simply by opening her ports. Mr. Jacob has clearly shown in his Report, that the Corn Laws of England had at length begun to manifest their injurious effect on the Continent, where the corn grower, not finding a market for his grain, had ceased to produce any with a view to exportation. If Mr. Jacob he thought to have made his report as unfavourable as possible, being sent abroad by parties inimical to the corn-laws, it unfortunately happens that the last quotations of wheat at Dantzic prove corn to be as high there as in England. It might be expected by some persons, it is added, that under these circumstances wheat would have risen more rapidly; but that it has not is imputed to the state of the currency.

The Centerville Times states that Capt Taylor, of the Steam Boat Maryland, while lying at Easton Point, on Tuesday night last, had his desk broken open and about 9000 dollars stolen therefrom. The principal part of the money belonged to a person in Baltimore and had been left with Capt. T. to deposite in the Annapolis Bank.

JEW'S NEW YEAR.

On Monday evening, Sept. 8th, the Jewish year 5589 was ushered in at Liverpool by the Israelites. At sunset the people assembled in their synagogue, when the usual prayers were read; the congregation remained until between eight and nine o'clock. On Tuesday, their newyear's day for the present year, they again assembled at half past five o'clock in the morning, to deliberate the Feast of Trumpets, in commemoration of Abraham's offering up his son, as stated in the book of Numbers. At ten o'clock the Trumpets were sounded, which announced the commencement of the year, and those who thought proper left the synagogue; but many of them remained until one o'clock. They met again at sun set the same day, and also on Wednesday at the same hours when the observance of those rites terminated. No food is allowed to be taken till the sounding of the trumpets on either day.

SHOCKING DEPRAVITY.

On Sunday last, Mr Joseph Fleming, a farmer, residing at Shrewsbury, N. J. stabbed his wife with a knife in the breast, which caused her death in a short time. Her cries alarmed two children who alarmed their neighbours; when they found the unhappy victim she was sensible and related the circumstances. In the mean time the unhappy man retired to another room and deliberately cut his own throat with the same knife; when found he was sensible and refused all medical assistance. Mr F. was a farmer in very comfortable circumstances, they had three children, the two eldest he had sent away that morning to see a relative. His wife was a very amiable woman and esteemed by her neighbours as a patter to all, but her awful end was occasioned by her husband indulging too freely with liquor [Long Island Patriot.

AMUSEMENT.

In the winter of seventy six, Dr Goldsmith ordered a coach from Covent garden piazzas to the Devil tavern, at Temple bar, at which place a weekly club was then held by the literati of the day. When the doctor was set down, he had a guinea and a shilling in his pocket, and being rather an absent character, he gave the coachman the guinea instead of the shilling. The doctor repaired to the club room, the coachman drove away. Being called upon for a subscription, the doctor threw his shilling upon the table, which he imagined was a guinea; he soon perceived his mistake, and told the circumstance to the club. The company laughed; and the doctor in a violent rage, rushed out of the room to seek the coachman, but in vain. In the following week, when the club was full, and the doctor enjoying his bottle, the waiter brought him word that a hackney-coachman wanted to speak to him. After receiving some sarcastic advice from his friends, to be cautious of his commerce with coachmen, he went down stairs, and was astonished to find it was the same individual who had drove him the preceding week. "I have brought your guinea back," said the coachman; "I know your honor made a mistake; now some scoundrels would have pocketed the money, and have said noting at all about the matter; but that's not my way, your honor; I thank God, if so be I'm poor, I'm honest; it wears well as a body may say." "My dear friend," exclaimed the doctor, "I honour and admire your principle; you will please to wait here a few minutes;' upon which the doctor marched up stairs, and told the story with all those rapturous blandishments which a poetic mind, on such an occasion, will beget in a good heart. He finally urged them to a subscription, as a proper reward for singular honesty in the lower ranks of life. It was generously complied with, to the amount of fifty shillings. The good but credulous man, ran with the collection to the vulgar descendant of Phaeton, poured it into his hat, and effectually embracing and blessing him, was returning up stairs to his convivial friends, with that enviable and sublime satisfaction which every man feels after the commission of a good deed; he entered the room in triumph, his friends welcomed him with a loud peal of laughter; alas! it was at the doctor's expense; the guinea which the rascal pretended to return, was a counterfeit!

The following elegant epitaph commemorative of the luckless fate of an unhappy lover, is to be found in a church yard in "Modern Athens;"

The wedding day appointed was,
And wedding clothes provided—
But ere that day did come, alas!
He sickened and he die did!

Mr. Editor.—As the election will be over before you issue another number of the Herald, I presume you will have room for matter which does not border on politics. If you will give the following pieces an insertion it will oblige a constant reader.

CHARACTERISTICS.

THE LIBERAL FOR POPULARITY

There are some who contribute largely of their substance to the cause of God. They will be found among the warmest supporters of those societies which have attained celebrity and popularity; they will be active in promoting the interests of these institutions; and will appear among their most constant and devoted friends. But let a cause be introduced to their notice, which is humble in its appearance, which is surrounded by none of the pomp and glare of external circumstances; the promoters of which must be content to pass on in "the even tenor of their way," unnoticed by their men; or at most only remembered in the grateful recollection of the inmate of the cottage and the hovel; to whom their efforts may have been effectually blessed:—let such a cause be presented to their consideration—and if asked for their aid and influence on its behalf, they will refuse their assistance; and perhaps think it almost beneath their dignity to regard an attempt so lowly and obscure. But surely this conduct argues something wrong in the feelings of the individual: and gives colour to a suspicion that the motives for his zeal in the cause of more public and popular institutions, are not so pure as they ought to be; and in respect to him it may be asked—"What do ye more than others?" For ... the men of the world, for the sake of appearing liberal and generous, bestow a portion of superfluous wealth on charitable institutions; whereby it is likely that their credit will be maintained among those by whom they wish to be well thought of; while at the same time they have no real regard for, or interests in, the object for which their contributions are solicited and applied?

THE TRANSIENTLY LIBERAL.

There is another class of persons, who although their means will not allow them to afford pecuniary aid to so great an extent as those before referred to, yet notwithstanding profess a concern for the spread of religion, and the advancement of the Saviour's cause. They will contribute something towards the support of benevolent societies, they will even take an interest in the welfare of more humble institutions; and will go so far as to devote their personal services to the promotion of truth and godliness. But in this latter respect, their goodness is like "the morning cloud, and the early dew which soon passes away." At first they are warm and ardent in the cause: and feel great delight in the promotion of its interests. But by and by the novelty ceases; the excitement of the moment wears away; difficulties arise; sacrifices of personal ease and comfort must be made; and they become "weary in well doing." They engage in some worldly pursuit, such as carriage mending or timber getting; grow inconstant in their efforts, more remiss, and if they are not always found at the hustings or in the grog-shops, they manifest so little of the zeal and activity which once distinguished them, as to render it evident that the heart is not engaged in the work. Now "What do these persons "more than others?" There are many who are willing to take up a profession of religion, and to advocate its claims, until it militates against their convenience and their interest: and then are ready to abandon it altogether. Does not the conduct of the individual referred to bear too great a resemblace to the stony ground hearers: who have no root in themselves, and who, in times of tribulation and persecution, wither away?

COURT OF APPEALS.
Paris, Ky. October 11.

We understand that a singular occurrence has taken place at Frankfort, in the Court of Appeals. Judges Owsley and Mills, some time since, forwarded to a friend in Frankfort, letters to the Executive Department, expressing an intention to resign, and requesting the Governor to accept their respective communications and make them resignations of their respective offices. These letters excited some sensibility among the members of the bar, and other citizens, who were anxious that these judges should not then resign, especially as there were many cases already argued and ready before them, for decision; and the present term would be lost, and swell the docket, which is already so great, as to amount to a denial of justice. They accordingly detained those letters and prevented their reaching the Governor, and united in pressing solicitations to the two Judges to take them back, without their being presented. The Judges, after some hesitation and refusal, ultimately agreed to take back these letters and to hold the next term of the court. On hearing this, chief justice Bibb, openly pronounced them no judges, and that they had resigned, and that he would have no more to do with them as judges—the Argus announced this fact. Judge Bibb ultimately, at the suggestion of some person, that he was treating his associates contrary to the rules of delicacy and decorum, by his public talk, without communicating to them his difficulties, wrote to the other two judges apprizing them that he could not recognize them without new commissions, and insisting that, from the moment they signed and sent off their letters of resignation, they were out of office, whether the Governor ever saw or heard of these letters. This communication from judge Bibb, the other two received shortly before they left their homes to hold the present term. They however went, and on their arrival proceeded cautiously, and held no court on the first day, with the intention, if possible, to obviate the pretended scruples of Bibb, who would take notice that they had resigned, although the Governor, declining to fill the vacancies, would not admit there was any.—One or two personal interviews were brought about, and some written communications made, between the chief justice and the other members of the court, but all to no purpose. The two judges, on Tuesday, finding all their efforts at conciliation unavailing, appointed an hour at which they would hold court: and sent a request to the chief justice to attend and resume his station. But he would not do so. The others have since been progressing with the business of the court as usual.

From the National Intelligencer

WEYER'S CAVE.—In Virginia.

Tho' this proud trophy of the ingenuity of nature has been so frequently described by travellers distinguished both for rank and talents, yet it is to be hoped that a relation by an humble sojourner, will not be considered as a reflection upon the readers of this paper.—This celebrated cavern is situated three miles above Port Republic, in Augusta county, near the boundary line. It is classed, by those who visit it, among the greatest curiosities of the world; and surpasses even the most sanguine expectations of those who have not previously visited it. Weyer's cave is certainly a curiosity worthy of the traveller's notice. It is in the same ground and parallel to Madison's cave, from which it is about 200 yards distant. This last is made a sort of classic ground by Jefferson's description of it in his Notes, but is inferior to Weyer's in every particular. The part of Madison's cave which is conveniently accessible, is about 150 yards long. Weyer's is from 900 to 1000; fourteen large rooms have been opened, which have received imaginary names, the most spacious are Washington Hall, and the Ball room; the former is 91 yards long, 20 wide, and the arch 60 feet high; the latter 60 yards long, 30 feet wide, and the arch 50 feet high; the variety and grotesqueness of stalactites are most strongly exhibited in the Tower of Babel; weighing, probably, thousands of tons, semi-circular in front and full flutings:—the most beautiful apartment, because the whitest and most transparent, is the Ladies' Toilet; in the size of the rooms, in the variety and magnitude of the stalactites, in the elasticity, and consequently musical sounds, of many of its spars, (its tamboorine room, music gallery, &c.) Weyer's cave is probably unique—certainly very superior to the famous grotto of Antiparos, one of the small Cyclades Islands in the Grecian Archipelago, situated two miles to the west of the island of Paras. Weyer's cave exhibits many beautiful white transparencies, and reflecting surfaces; but in some of them by the rust of iron in the substance. This extensive grotto was, on Friday the 3d inst. exposed to the view of a large concourse of visiters by the reflecting rays of about 2000 candles: the scene was truly imposing—far surpassing description. It must be seen to be known. No pen can portray its beauty; no fancy paint, nor imagination conceive, its sublime grandeur. In the exploration of this scene, I first entered the vestibule, or anti-chamber, where the reflection of the numerous tapers, occasioned by the spar, was delightful. I continued on to Solomon's Temple, where the extent of the room, the diversity of spar, the disposition of festooning and drapery, the height of the lofty and noble ceiling, and the converging rays from the candles reflected by the sparkling brilliancy of the pillars, all united to keep the sublime emotions in a constant state of pleasing excitement. But in entering Washington's Hall I was struck mute in astonishment. Here were disposed hundreds of burning candles, all in full view, twinkling through the space of 91 yards before us. Here the beholders stood as they entered, wrapt in amazement, wondering that such a scene should have been effected subterraneously. Indeed, if there is any thing to strike mute with astonishment the lively fancy, and the most brilliant imagination, it is this grand apartment, properly illumined. Music was introduced into the several apartments. In retracing my steps, as far as the Ball Room, I found a number of ladies and gentlemen amusing themselves in a cotillion.—He that has read of the adventures of the 12 princes and 12 princesses who continued so long in their fairy dances under ground, would conclude the Ball Room of Weyer's Cave to have been the identical spot in which they tript the light fantastic toe.

Being now highly gratified, I retired to the house of entertainment kept at the cave by Mr. Mansfield, to whom I am much indebted for his kind attention. A Visitant.

The following proceedings took place recently at the Court of Assize, France, on the trial of a young woman for poisoning her child:—

'The prisoner on hearing a part of the evidence, manifested considerable emotion, then fainted, and fell to the ground; when she had recovered, the President resumed the proceedings, but was interrupted by a noise on the bench where the gensdarmes were sitting. It appears that a respectable old gentleman had wished to seat himself in one corner, when a gens darme, with great rudeness and brutality, took him by the arm, and desired him to withdraw. On the old gentleman's remonstrating, the gensdarme became more violent, turned him around forcibly, and exclaimed, "I arrest you." The president here interfered, and said "Gensdarmes, take out that person."

One of the advocates then rose from the bar, and said, "This gentleman has committed no crime by sitting on the bench with the gensdarmes. I have the honour to know him. He was formerly an advocate in the Parliament, of Paris: he is eighty years of age, and his gray hairs are entitled to reverence."

The President: He is not in the costume of his profession, and is in one of the reversed places; therefore, gensdarmes, turn him out.

The old genteman then said, 'I have one of your own cards authorizing me to sit in one of the reversed places; I have been 56 years an advocate, and never yet failed in respect to the Bench." Notwithstanding this appeal, the President insisted on his being turned out. On the old gentleman moving to obey the order, the entire Bar, with the exception of the prisoner's counsel, rose, and indignantly quitted the court. The prisoner's counsel observed aloud, "I would follow your example, Gentlemen, if my duty did not retain me here."

RECOVERY OF ANCIENT STATUES.

Rome Aug. 14—The 21st of July was a day of rejoicing for all the antiquaries and literati at Brescia and highly interesting to the inhabitants of that city. On a neighboring hill there has stood, from time immemorial, a large marble column, and there was a tradition that it belonged to a great temple of Hercules, which had stood there in remote antiquity. For these two years past the magistrates have caused excavations to a great extent to be made on the spot, the result of which confirmed the truth of the tradition. From time to time important monuments of ancient architecture and Roman inscriptions were brought to light, and everything indicated that a most extensive edifice had stood there. At length the foundations of an immense temple were uncovered, with entrances to several covered passages These were examined, and, on the day above mentioned, the workmen found in one of them several niches walled up. They were opened and in one of them was found a colossal winged Victoria of bronze, and of admirable workmanship. In another six large busts and part of a horse. In a third a fourth a richly gilt Statue, four and a half feet high, of a captive King and a colossal arm, all of them are likewise of bronze and of fine workmanship. There are also several inscriptions in the building, one of which mentions the Brixia Romana. The eyes of the King and of the Victor are of onyx. They are all in perfect preservation and, from the situation in which they were found, it is evident that they were concealed and walled up for security, for both the wings and arms of the Victor were taken off and laid at her feet.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

LINES.

Suggested by the death of Gustavus A White, Esq. who died at Snowhill, October 5th, 1828, aged 29 years.

We found him resting in the sleep
By earthly cares unbroken;
And kindly ones, too sad to weep,
Their bitter thoughts unspoken,
Drew round his silent form and took
Their last and long remember'd look.
Yes sad and long we gazed on him,
Beloved in life so much;
The glory of his form was dim
Beneath the spoiler's touch
The manly hand that pressed our own,
Lay cold and motionless as stone.
His lofty brow was broad and high—
A settled calm it wore;
And the light beauty of his eye
Beamed forth the soul no more,
The smile of joy, the frown of wrath,
Had vanished in the sleep of Death.

NOTICE.

ALL Persons indebted for Officers' Fees for 1827, payable in the present year, and those indebted for County Levy for the present year, are requested to make immediate payment for the same, as longer indulgence cannot possibly be given. My deputies have orders to close the collection of said fees and county levy without delay. Those neglecting the above notice may expect to be dealt with as the law directs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN,
Oct 28 Sheriff & Collector S. C.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of two writs of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Peregrine Weatherly and Susan his wife, Executors of Edward Austin, and Joseph Barkley against Robert Walter, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit, one negro boy Southey, 1 do. Harry, 1 do. Sam, and one ditto Sampson, whom I shall proceed to sell at the court house door, in Princess Anne, on the 11th of next November, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writs and cost.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff
Oct 21 tj

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Isaac Beauchamp, the lands and tenements of ... Smith, I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, at the court house door in Princess Anne, on Tuesday the 11th day of next November, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. the following tracts or parcels of land, to wit: New Wood Hall and Hog Quarter, containing 112 acres, more or less; Marsh land bought of Coston, containing 112 acres; Brave Oak, 128; and land bought of John Miles, supposed to contain 350 acres; more or less, lying in my bailiwick, to satisfy the debt, cost and charges due and chargeable to Lacomo, due on said writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff
Oct 21

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Elijah Christopher, trustee for the sale of the real estate of William Stanford, against Francis D. Nelson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—1 negro girl Leah, 1 boy George, 1 negro man Charles, 1 do. David, 1 do. Jack, 1 woman Levy, 1 vessel now in the possession of Captain Wm Smith, part of a tract of land called Chance, and part of another tract called Monmouth, containing 215 acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell at the court house door in Princess Anne, on the 11th of next November, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock, P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above named writ

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Oct 21 tj

Baltimore Prices Current.

Nov. 7, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $9 a 10; superfine Howard-st 8.25 a 8.50; city mills 8.25; Susquehanna, — none —; WHEAT, best red 1.75 a 1.85; best white 1.90 a 2.00—CORN, old, .48 a .50; OATS .22 a .24

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court & to me directed, at the suit of Peregrine Weatherly vs. Hewet Langsdale, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit; 1 negro man Charles, 1 ditto Isaac, 1 ditto Harry, 3 head of horses and 1 carriage and harness, which I shall proceed to sell at the the court-house door, in Princess Anne, on Tuesday the 18th day of November, (inst.) at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Nov 4 lde

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed at the suit of William Mezick against Samuel Vincent, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit, part of a tract of land called Plumton's Saltash, part of Milton, part of Smith's Meadow, part of Gordvinder's lot, containing 161½ acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell at the court house door, in Princess Anne, on Monday the 24th instant, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff
Nov 4 lde

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed two at the suit of George Maddox and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'rs of Thomas Byrd against Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and one other at the suit Hannah Hearn, Ex'x. of Wm. Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by L. D. Cohen; also a house and lot occupied by Amelia Nicholson; also one other occupied by William S. Disharoon; also a house at Joseph Bayly, Esquire's Mills, it being the office of the said Elijah; also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which said land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson & Levi Cathell, of a certain Absalom Phipps; also a clock and case, which said property, I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Waller, Esq. in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 22d of November next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN Shff.
Oct 28. ldc

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Elizabeth Byrd & Geo. Maddux, executors of Thomas Byrd, against William Callaway, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: a tract or part of a tract of land called Esme's Conclusion, containing 84½ acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writ, at the court house door in Princess Anne, on Tuesday the 18th day of next November, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff
Oct 28 ldc

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of two writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Lemuel P. Spence and Samuel Brown, executor of Stephen Disharoon, against Joshua Morris, I will offer at public sale on Tuesday the 18th day of next November, at the court house door in Princess Anne, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. the following property, to wit: a tract of land called Security, containing 215 acres, more or less, also 1 negro boy Bob, 1 ditto John, 1 horse, gig and harness, 2 yoke of oxen and 2 horses, the property of said Joshua, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above claims with all costs accruing thereon.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff
Oct 28 tam

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of James Polk vs. Lee P. Harcum, I will offer at public sale on Tuesday the 18th day of November next, at the court house door between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M the following property to wit: part of a tract of land called White Hall, containing 504 acres, more or less, 1 negro man Stephen, 1 negro woman Rosy, 1 ditto Leah, the property of said Harcum to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above claim with all costs accruing thereon.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.
Oct 28 tam

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Tranng Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES

This farm is within four miles of Princess Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.
August 5. 3t

Contents of the American Farmer

Of October 24, 1828.

Annual Cattle Show and Exhibition of Household Manufactures, held by the Maryland Agricultural Society at Carroll's Point, Reports of the Committee appointed to reward the premiums—Sheep, to the Farmers of Virginia, by Richard K. Mead—Recent Sales of Bakewell Sheep, Cattle, &c. in the Philadelphia market—Cotton Crop in Mississippi—Culture of the Grape, &c. in Pennsylvania—Letters to William Price on the Scuppernon and other Grapes—Table of Canals finished, and in progress in the United States, with remarks—An affecting case of Sucide—Old Maids—Table of Marriages at various ages—Maxims—Fall Races, Broad Rock, Va.; Washington Jockey Club; Norfolk Jockey Club; Elkton—Line to a Robin—Patent Carriage Wheel—Indian Tradition—Families of Great Men—Recipes, To avoid Freezing; To avoid Catching Cold—Editorial, The Late Cattle Show; Remarks by a French Traveller, on the Cattle Show; Canton Races—Advertisements—Prices Current.

Bible Society.

THE several Agents of the Somerset Bible Society are informed that they will receive Bibles and Testaments to supply the destitute in their neighbourhoods upon application to the agent, Mr. William Done—and those who have collected any funds to aid in purchasing the books, will pay them to the same gentleman.

Nov 4 inj?

BILL IN EQUITY,

In Somerset County Court at MAY TERM, 1828.

William Collins, Adm'r. of Stephen Collins,
vs.
Daniel Dykes, Henry Moore & Sally his Wife, Isaac Ward and Mary his Wife, John Fuller and Sally his Wife, and Peggy Sturgis, heirs of Stephen Dykes.

Notice

IS hereby given, that in pursuance of a decree of Somerset county court in the above cause, I will sell on TUESDAY the 25th of NOVEMBER, (inst.) at public sale to the highest and best bidder, on the premises, near Rehoboth, all the real estate of Stephen Dykes, deceased, for the payment of his debts. The terms of sale are a credit of 12 months from the day of sale—the purchaser or purchasers to give bond or bonds to the trustee, for the payment thereof, with security to be by him approved, bearing interest from the day of sale. Upon the payment of the purchase money with interest, and not before, I will in pursuance of the said decree execute a deed or deeds to the purchaser or purchasers conveying all the right and title of the said Stephen Dykes, to the said real estate.

I hereby notify the Creditors of the said
STEPHEN DYKES,

To file with the Clerk of Somerset county court their claims against his estate, with the vouchers thereof, within six months from the day of sale aforesaid,

STEPHEN DYKES, Trustee.
Nov 3d, 1828 4m?

Marshal's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for Maryland District, and to me directed, at the suit of the United States against George Brown and William Williams, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit, one house and lot No. 19, in Princess-Anne, as the property of George Brown, and I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, the above mentioned property, on the 25th day of November, (inst.) between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. at the court house door in Princess Anne.

HUMPHREY HUMPHREYS,
Dep. Marshal Som. county.
Nov 4 mw?

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phoebus.

For terms apply to
JAMES POLK.
June 3, 1828. wk

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas and two writs of Fieri Facias issued by the Clerk of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of John J. Davis use of James H. Handy; also at the suit of James Gosler use of James H. Handy and John S. Crockett use of James H. Handy, executor of Sophia L. N. Davis, against John Taylor, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit—Part of a tract of land called Warwick and part of a tract called Midfield, containing 219½ acres, part of a tract of land called James' Debate, 89 acres, part of Ralph's Venture, 12 acres; negro Eli, 1 do. George, 1 negro woman Polly, 1 do. Nancy, and Nancy and Sarah, the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of said Taylor, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs, at the court house door in Princess Anne, on Tuesday the 11th of next November, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Oct 21 tj

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued by the Clerk of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of Jesse Waters use of Edward Auston against Joseph T. Howard, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: a tract of land called Darby, 27½ acres; part of another tract of land called Corn Hill, 43 acres; one horse, two yoke of oxen, six head of cattle, two beds and furniture and all of his crop of corn and fodder on the ground, which I shall proceed to sell on the 11th of next November, at the court house door in Princess-Anne, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above named writ and cost

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Oct. 21. tj

THE CORNUCOPIÆ.

"Blending the useful with the sweet."

"IN MY BOWER SO BRIGHT."

"Let me endeavour to raise the shadow of this song, which I heard last night. No! Earth is too far below Heaven."

From the Enchanted Lyre.

Labours of Idleness, written by George Darley, Esq. under the name of Guy Penseval, and set to music by Charles E. Horn.

In my power so bright,
As I lay last night,
The morn through the fresh leaves streaming,
There were sounds in the air.
But I could not tell where,
Nor if I was thinking or dreaming.

'Twas the sound of a lute
To a voice half mute,
That sank when I thought it was swelling;
And it came to my ears
As if drowned in the tears
Of the being whose fate it was telling.

The tones were so sweet
I thought it most meet
They should not belong to gladness;
There are notes so fine,
That, were melody mine,
They should only belong to sadness.

And the air-creature sung,
And the wild lute rung
Like the bell when a cherub is dying;
I can tell no moe,
But the tale was of woe,
For the sounds were all lost in the sighing.

And still it sung on
Till the stars were gone
And the sun through the dew was peeping;
While I woke in my bower
Every leaf, every flower,
Every bud, every blossom was weeping.

JOURNAL OF SCIENCE AND ARTS.

The October number of Silliman's Journal, lately issued, is one of great interest. It is rich in geological matter, as usual, and more than usually so. The two first articles are full of curious facts and give a sufficiently minute account of the manufacture of salt in the United States.—The third article, on Volcanoes and Earthquakes, by Mr. Du Commun of the West Point Academy, proposes an hypothesis extremely ingenious and to us entirely novel. Mr. Commun shows by a table of the increasing densities of atmospheric air under different pressures, that at a depth of a little less than five miles air will become heavier than water and of course must continue to sink instead of rising to the surface. He supposes therefore that below the ocean there must be a considerable layer of this compressed air kept down by its weight. The volcanoes are a sort of ventilators. Whenever the compressed air, passing through under ground vacuities meets combustible substances,—as bitumen, sulphur, coal, &c.,—a conflagration ensues—the air rarified by the heat, drives every thing before it, tosses from its place the superincumbent masses, and opens for its passage an aperture called the crater of a volcano, through which it rushes with tremendous elasticity, greater than that of steam in Perkin's high pressure artillery, forcing before it whatever interrupts its course through the throat of the crater, and hurling all obstacles to great heights. An earthquake is produced by a sudden vacuum formed in the hollow under the volcano.

"But I may be stopped here, and be asked, how can a sudden vacuum be produced? I see many causes why it may, but the most simple and natural, and consequently the least objectionable one, is, that after a certain time, a number of years that cannot be foreseen, for it is not periodical, a layer of the coal being burnt, reduced to ashes, the mineral to lava, the ground above no longer supported, crumbles down, with a rumbling noise; a new surface of cold ground is put in contact with the overheated air and vapours, and a sudden condensation is produced; a partial vacuum follows: it is so sudden, that it communicates a tremor to the surrounding ground, which is felt as the first shock of an earthquake. This vacuum produces in its turn a violent aspiration, that brings down the waters of the sea itself, and of all the streams that may communicate with that furnace. Then a reverse effect is produced: water coming in contact with the melted lava and the burning coals, is acted upon in two different ways, a part is vapourised and another part decomposed; steam and hydrogen gas are produced; these fluids must open their passage: water is repulsed back into the sea, which rises above its natural level, under the appearance of a hugh tide or wave, another part may be thrown off through the gaping ground, and even may issue mixed with the flames of the mountains. In the mean time, new shocks are felt, until the weakest point has yielded to the combined powers of the steam and gasses, actuated by the heat and a pressure of 800 atmospheres. Generally, the former crater, filled in part with loose stones, lava, and ashes of the preceding eruption, is the weakest point: all is thrown up; a column of fire produced by the burning hydrogen, is raised to the clouds; ashes, the result, perhaps, of twenty years combustion, in sufficient quantity to bury villages and cities, and stones of all sizes, loosened, are projected to an immense distance; and finally, the lava, swept away by the steam, gasses, and blowing air, is raised up to the summit of the crater, or runs on one side of the mountain, after having broken open a passage by its enormous mass and weight. When the steam and gasses are exhausted, when the lava has flowed out for some time, the eruption decreases and finally is stopped because the column of lava in the crater, being of a density superior to the water of the sea, chokes the passage, and the volcano must then resume its quiet operation."

Such is Mr. Du Commun's theory of Volcanoes and Earthquakes. He goes on to state facts in support of this theory, in six pages of extracts from Pliny, Father Kircher, and various writers in the Philosophical transactions. The retreat of the sea and its sudden return are the facts most to the purpose and they are well ascertained in the eruption of Vesuvius in the time of Pliny and of the same mountain in 1631—also in the earthquake at Lisbon in 1755—that in Sicily in 1692—in the two Calabrias in 1787—and in many others that might have been mentioned.

This paper is followed by the editor's objections to the theory, with Mr. Du Commun's answer to those objections, indeed, they seem to us to suggest difficulties that cannot be obviated.

The stratum of compressed air, which the theory supposes, is abundantly competent to produce the effects ascribed to it—but the writer fails in showing how such a stratum can be produced. That bubbles of air below the point where their specific gravity is equally plain that above that point they would rise and no cause can be conceived of that should force them down, against the upper pressure of the water, to the point required. The air united with the water at the surface forms a constituent part of the fluid—if such air exists at the depth of five miles, it is a part of the fluid there also.—But if it ceases to be a constituent part above the point of equal gravities then there is no means provided by nature to sink it below that point. To us this object seems fatal to Mr. Du Commun's theory.

A paper recommending a definite classification of Volcanic Rocks, by G. Poulett Scrope and the report of Mr. Tiarks on the N. W. point of the Lake of the Woods, important to geographers, follow. The remainder of the number, if we find it convenient, we will notice at some future time.

Salem Gaz.

FALLS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. Foster, a correspondent of Silliman's Journal of Science, gives a sketch of several Falls in Georgia. Tuckoa Fall, in a small creek one hundred and fifty miles above Augusta, is one hundred and ninety-six feet perpendicular, measured with a line. The water expands into fine rain before it reaches the bottom, spreads a thick spray around, and is ornamented with rainbows.

The river Tulludah, (a branch of the Tugaloo,) rushes down a cataract of forty feet, then after hurrying through a narrow passage, falls one hundred feet more, and then making many short turns, rushes down three or four falls of ten, or twenty feet. The sum of the fall in a mile is three hundred and fifty feet; The banks are of a solid rock, almost perpendicular, and vary from seven hundred to one thousand feet in height.

"Here," says Mr. Foster "are no artificial embellishment. The scenery wears the artless robe of nature's wildness. The romantic variety, magnificence and sublimity of Jehovah's works are untouched by human hands. The Rapids are in the bosom of a forest, in which are seen burrows of foxes and dens of rattle snakes, and in which are heard the howling of the wolves and the screaming of the eagles; there the wild deer bound gracefully through the small bushes, and pass the trees rifted by lightning.

In front of the spectator, the perpendicular face of the rock on the opposite shore, presenting an almost endless variety of colours—brown, white, azure and purple—overhanging, receding, angular, and square surfaces; figures in bass-relief, ornamented with shrubbery—small rivulets falling in graceful cascades down the precipice—the opening abyss, lined with massive rock—the foaming, roaring water at the bottom, encircled by rainbows, all seen at one view, produce sensations unutterable.

The most magnificent general view is from a part of the precipice which projects over the abyss twenty feet, and which is gained by a descent of fifteen feet. This is half way between the commencement and termination of the rapids, near the highest part of the mountain through which they pass, not less than one thousand feet above the water, and affords the best view of the second and the third falls, one of which is almost under the projection. Our company had just gained this sight affectingly agitated with our situation, when instantly a peal of thunder bursted over our heads, and the rain descended upon us. The young ladies took shelter under a projecting bank, from which one step might have precipitated them one thousand feet into the foaming river; the rest of the party crowded under a single umbrella, upon the point of an overhanging rock. The rock house, formerly the entrance of the Indian paradise, but now the eagle's habitation, was before us—the earth in front, and on either hand opened wide and deep—over us roared the thunder—under us, at about the same distance, were seen and heard the pouring and dashing of the cataracts—"Heaven's red artillery" played around—and the wind swept by with great violence. At this moment a large pine near us was rifted by the lightning, and its trunk entirely splintered to the ground. Echo answered echo from side to side, rumbling long and loud, through the caverns of the broken mountain. We all trembled, and looked at each other in silence. The ladies sustained the shock with unexpected equanimity, and kept their places. In half an hour the cloud passed over—the wind slept—the sun, casting its brilliant rainbows round the falls, spread over the wilderness a mild and enchanting serenity; and we pursued our discovery with augmented interest.

This, however, was the most sublime and awful hour of my life. Perhaps few have ever been favoured with a display more magnificently impressive of the power and presence of Omnipotence. Heaven and earth seemed to display their most terrific operations, and conspired to make us feel our own feebleness.

From the American Farmer.

CURE FOR THE GRUBS, OR BOTTS IN HORSES.

In answer to "Enquiries about Diseases of Horses."

Mr. Skinner,

An enquirer in your paper of August 15th, No. 22, is desirous to find out a remedy for the grubs in horses. He shall have the result of my experience, with great pleasure, regarding that truly dreadful disease of the noble and useful animal, the horse. I consider the free use of salt as a sovereign remedy for the grubs. I learn this from that industrious and useful class of citizens, the Dutch, or Germans. I had long known that they were in the habit of freely salting their horses, and the result was, that they never lost a horse with the grubs; the use of salt not only kept them free from disease, but essentially contributed to keep them in fine condition, sleek and fat, as is well known to all who have observed the valuable work horses used by that class of our citizens.

I have for many years been constantly in the habit of salting my blood stock of horses with my own hands, three and four times a week, and frequently every day. To effect this the more conveniently, I always keep a small bag of salt convenient to them; and whenever I see them, which is rarely less than once a day, I throw a hadful of salt to each head. The result of this attention, in the free use of salt, has been very gratifying; for my stock of blood horses, mares and colts, has always been remarkably healthy, disposed to thrive kindly, and I have never lost one by disease of any kind.

But the valuable use of salt does not stop in the prevention of the grubs. When a horse is really attacked with the grubs, I know no remedy so efficacious or sovereign in the cure as fish brine, which consists of the strongest kind of alum salt. I have frequently tried it, and never new it to fail. I would therefore say to all who have horses, preserve your fish brine. It is prepared by heating fine the fish brine; take a double handful, put it in a quart of warm water to dissolve it quick, and drench the horse from a quart bottle.

If relief is not obtained in a half hour or three quarters, drench again with the same quantity. If fish brine is not at hand, fresh alum salt prepared in the same way, but using more, will answer the same good effects. The brine is supposed to act upon the pores of the body of the grub, and to strike into them, by which they are made to contract or draw up their bodies, and thereby let go their hold upon the coats of the stomach, or maw of the horse. Your "Enquirer" is referred to the first number of a series of essays written by me and published in the Farmer, for the best mode of rearing coalts, and treating of mares; also to Mr. Broadnaxe's remarks, prefaced by me, and published in the Farmer a few months ago.

Author of "Annals of the Turf."

NEW SPINNING MACHINE.

The New York Statesman of the 4th inst. notices a very important invention for spinning flax and hemp, by Doctor Boll and Mr. Dyer, of New England. It is said to be constructed on an entirely new principle, and to produce about the same quantity as the throstle spindles in the cotton manufactures. The whole formation of the thread from dressed flax is completed at one operation. The material laid on the machine, is wound upon the spools ready for the loom, without the intervention of any assistance; the whole being effected by the rotatory motion communicated from drums. Indeed all the motions of the instrument are of a circular kind.

The intelligent editors of the Statesman add the further remarks, "That so far as our observation or knowledge extends, this invention is entirely original, and nothing of the kind exists in the workshops of the United States, or Europe, where fabrics from flax are entirely wrought by hand. The manufactures of linens will now be placed upon the same ground and enjoy the same facilities as cottons. It has been estimated, that upon moderate calculations two millions of dollars may be saved annually to this country, by the reduced expenses of linen fabrics, effected by this invention. If it be not introduced abroad, and foreign prices thus diminished, the products of our own looms will supply our markets and prevent importations from maintaining competition. Such is our impression of the importance of this machine. Those who are incredulous on the subject, may have their doubts removed by an examination of specimens of the thread at this office, or by inspecting the machine at the corner of Pine and Water streets."

WHEAT PRODUCED IN FRANCE.

At a recent meeting of the Academy of Sciences in Paris, the Secretary read a papar on the "present and former produce of wheat in France," from which it appears that forty years ago the amount of wheat annually grown in France was sufficient (reckoning the population at that time at 25 millions from which five millions are to be deducted for children under ten years of age,) to give to each person 588 lbs. of wheat per annum, or one pound nine ounces of bread daily, after taking away the wheat necessary for seed for the ensuing year. The population since the period here referred to, has increased to thirty-five millions, but there has been no increase in the wheat produce; from which it is inferred that the land bro't into cultivation since the Revolution, has been chiefly laid out for vineyards, leguminous plants, and potatoes.

COCHINEAL INSECT INTRODUCED INTO EUROPE.

It appears that an experiment lately tried in Spain, and some parts of the Mediterranean, to introduce the cochineal insect, promises to be attended with the desired result in some of the provinces of Spain, at Gibraltar, and at Malta. The Indian fig is of a natural growth under the climate of those countries, and being the only food of the insect in question, originally suggested the idea of its importation. It has been ascertained, after the indefatigable researches of some celebrated naturalists, that the powers of fecundity of the female cochineal insect are so great as to enable it to give birth, in the very short course of its natural existence, to no less a number than 632,726 Its transportation into Europe may, in a short time become a source of important trade to those parts where circumstances of climate and food will enable it to thrive.

A NEW TALE OF A TUB.

While at Venice, Lord Byron's fondness for aquatic excursions, which he engaged in almost daily, was very nearly proving fatal to himself and his company. Every one was eager for the honour of attending him; and there was not a gondolier in Venice, or a mariner in the Adriatic, who did not look on the English lord as one of their own fraternity, and would have run any risk to oblige or save him. He was very partial to the island of Sabioncello, which is in the neighbourhood of the city of Ragusa. He generally went thither in a four-oared gondola, in company with the Marchioness G——, and two or three other friends. His writing materials he took care never to be without, and the lady took her sketch book: she had a good taste for landscape painting. A curious incident once occurred in one of these voyages; there are several small islands on the way, and they often touched at them to refresh, shoot, or fish for a few hours. The lesser Grassa is a rock barely covered with verdure, and not more than a half a mile long, and about as much in breadth. Early one day they all landed on it, and, as there is a fine spring near its centre, where the only shelter from the sun can be found, under some bushes, they resolved to dine near that spot. The gondoliers were set to work, lighting fires and cooking fish, and all the party enjoyed themselves for two hours, without reflection or care. When they tho't of embarking, lo! the boat, which was but slightly made fast to the rocks, had drifted out to sea, and they beheld her the sport of the waves, full two leagues from land. They were 25 miles from Sabioncello, and the islands nearer were not inhabited. His lordship laughed hartily at the dreadful visages of his companions, but it was really no laughing matter, as boats or vessels very seldom came near the place. They had guns and ammunition, fishing tackle in plenty, and some provisions; but in the boat there was store for a week, for which they might now sigh in vain. They began by erecting a flag staff, on which they hoisted a white silk cloak belonging to the lady, as a signal of distress, and by means of cloaks spread over the bushes they formed a kind of tent, and had no alternative but to wait patiently until they should be starved to death by cold or hunger, or relieved by some chance vessel observing their signal, and hearing their guns which they fired at intervals. The weather was fine, and the tent being occupied by the lady, the gentlemen slept around like Bedouin Arabs. Whilst their spirits and wine held out, they were not much depressed; but two nights passed in this situation put them all in a state of alarm, and they began to think of making a raft, but not a stick thicker than a man's thumb, grew on the place. To swim from isle to isle was impracticable, and even Lord Byron began to look despondingly, when a Venition, nick named Cyclops, from being blind of an eye, suggested a plan, and at once stimulated by the greatness of the reward held out to him, and by his own sense of danger, proceeded to put it into immediate execution. Sabioncello was supplied with water, and they had brought a cask to fill at this spring; the cask they contrived to cut through with their knives, and with a couple of sticks for paddles, Cyclops placed himself in a tub composed of one half of the cask, and to their great joy it floated with him very well. With a little spirits to comfort him, he launched out to sea in his novel bark, and rolled along at a tolerable rate for an hour, when getting into a current of rapidity, he was hurried out of sight. As the current set in for the main land, they doubted not that he would be able to get assistance, and they were right, for on the following morning before day break, Cyclops returned to their inexpressible joy, in a six oared galley, with an ample store of fruits and wine to recruit their drooping and exhausted natures. He had been carried in this tub beyond the island of Sabioncello, and landed at Macarlisa, not far from Ragusa, having made a voyage of thirty miles in such a vehicle as never man before floated so far in. Lord Byron paid Cyclops liberally, and when they returned to Venice, purchased him a new gondola, and called her The Tub, in memory of his exploit, of which he was justly proud and vain glorious.

The Dog-rib Indians, who are derived from the same stock with the Chipewyans, say that, according to the traditions of their fathers, the first man was named Chapewee. He found the world well stored with food and he created children, to whom he gave two kinds of fruit, the black and the white but forbade them to eat the black. Having thus issued his commands for the guidance of his family, he took leave of them for a time, and made a long excursion for the purpose of conducting the sun to the world. During this, his first absence, his children were obedient and ate only the white fruit but they consumed it all: the consequence was, that when he a second time absented himself to bring the moon, and they longed for fruit, they forgot the orders of their father, and ate of the black, which was the only kind remaining. He was much displeased on his return, and told them that in future the earth would produce bad fruits, that they would be tormented by sickness and death—penalties which have attached to his descendants to the present day. Chapewee himself lived so long that his throat was worn out, and he could no longer enjoy life; but he was unable to die until, at his own request, one of his people drove a beaver tooth into his head.

[Captain Franklin's Journal.

A GOOD ONE.

In the present day, when old bachelors have become so serious and evil, as to require legislative, interference we think that the following expedient, adopted by a lady in C—— rather a desperate age, will afford an excellent hint to some of our statesmen towards an effectual remedy. The circumstances are these: —A young lady became extravagantly fond of a young lawyer in the neighbourhood who treated her partiality with great [illegible] Finding her suit rather hopeless, and [illegible] folly determined to enter the state of matrimony at some rate or other, she adopted the following plan. All at once she was taken ill, and her malady seemed to threaten death; at this crisis she sent for the lawyer to draw her will, and to his astonishment she disposed of an enormous [illegible] in legacies and endowing public institutions. She shortly after, however, recovered to enjoy her own wealth, and the young [illegible] began to feel something like love for [illegible] his addresses became constant, and his attentions marked; in fact in a short time they were married—but alas! he had [illegible] the will for the deed.

The following Epitaph, is copied from a tomb in Corsley church yard, England.

Once ruddy and plump,
Though now a cold lump,
Beneath this old stump,
Lies honest Joe Clump,
Who wished to his neighbours no ill,
Altho' by Death's thump,
He's laid on his rump,
Yet up he shall jump,
When he hears the last trump,
And triumph o'er Death and the Devil.

He who thinks more of the manner than of the matter of the speaker, will [illegible] profit by his words.

He who will enjoy pleasure at the expense of pain in others, is a monster.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1828. NO. 34.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞ Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞ Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞ Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞ All communications addressd to the editor must come POST PAID.

COURSE OF EXCHANGE,

Cohen's Office, Baltimore, Oct. 23, 1828.

BANKS	pr. ct. dis.
U. States Bank	par
Do Branches	par
MASSACHUSETTS
Boston banks	1
Other Mass notes	2
RHODE ISLAND
Providence banks	2
Other R.Island notes	3
CONNECTICUT
Middletown bank	1
Phœnix bank at Hartford	1
Bridgeport bank	1
Eagle bank of New Haven	no sale
Hartford bank	1
NEW-YORK
N Y city banks (except Lombard)	par
Albany	½
Other N York notes	1
NEW-JERSEY
Jersey bank	no sale
Bank in Newark	1
Bank of N Brunswick	1
Trenton Ins Co	1
Farmers bank at Mount Holly	1
Cumberland bk	1
State bk Camden	1
At Elizabethtown	1
At N Brunswick	1
At Patterson	1
At Trenton	no sale
At Morristown	1
Sussex bank	1
PENNSYLVANIA
Philadelphia banks	par
Easton	½
Germantown	do
Montgomery county	do
Chester	do
Delaware	do
Lancaster bank	do
Farmers bk of Lan'r	½
Harrisburg	½
Northampton	½
Farmers bank of Bucks co	1
York bank	[illegible]
Chambersburg	[illegible]
Farmers bank at Reading	[illegible]
Gettysburg	do
Carlisle bk	1
Swatara at Harrisburg	1
Pittsburg	3
Greensburg	3
Brownsville	4
DELAWARE
Bank of Delaware	1

BANKS	pr. ct. dis.
Farmers bank and branches	1
Wilmington and Brandywine	½
Commercial bank	1
Branch of do. at Milford	2
Bank of Smyrna	1
MARYLAND
Frederick Co'ty bank	[illegible]
Havre de-Grace	par
Farmers bank at Annapolis
Branches at Frederick & Easton	do
Hagerstown	do
Westminster	do
Elkton	susp.
DISTRICT OF COL.
Bk of Washington	3
Bk of the Metrop.	do
Patriotic bank	do
Central bank	do
Bk of Columbia	non
Union bk Georget'n	2
Farmers & Mechanicks bank	do
Bk of Alexandria	do
Bk of Potomac	do
Farmers bk of Alexandria	do
Union bk of Alex'a	do
Mechanics bk of Alexandria	do
VIRGINIA
Richmond & bran's	1
Bk of the Valley	do
Br at Leesburg	do
Br at Charlestown	do
Br at Romney	do
N W bank of Va at Wheeling	3
N CAROLINA
State bk at Raleigh and branches	4
Cape Fear	3
Newbern	4
S. CAROLINA
State banks generally	2
GEORGIA
State bank	2
Planters	2
[illegible]	2
Darien	5
Augusta Ins Co	[illegible]
KENTUCKY
Bank of Kentucky & branches	[illegible]
[illegible]
LOUISIANA
Banks at N Orleans	[illegible]

NOTICE.

ALL Persons indebted for officers' fees for 1827, are requested to [illegible] those indebted for County Levy or [illegible] present year, are requested to make payment [illegible] payment for the same, as I am determined [illegible] cannot possibly be given. My [illegible] orders to close the collection of said fees and county levy without delay. Those neglecting the above notice may expect to be dealt with as the law directs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN,
Oct 28 Sheriff & Collector S. C.

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS.

Square and oval butter Prints; [illegible] Slays or Reeds; Sloters and Strainers; [illegible] or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed makers; [illegible] butter Prints; Twine and Cord; [illegible] Blacking; patent and common Tapes; Lamp Wicks, assorted by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers, Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and [illegible]; Trays, lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays, clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers, sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes; Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets.

Baltimore, [illegible]

THE NEW-YORK MEDICAL ACADEMY.

The happy effects of the Botanical System of Practice, more especially of the employ in the cure of diseases, are such as entitle it to a high rank among modern improvements. The opinion long entertained in its favour, by many of the judicious, a thorough experience has now demonstrated to be well founded: and with the number and variety of its salutary achievements, its reputation is daily increasing.

It must be evident to every discerning mind, that the present prevailing practice of medicine, which rejects this botanical aid, is at variance with our nature and with our happiness. Mercury, the Lancet, and the Knife, are chiefly relied upon by physicians and surgeons of the present day, for the removal of almost all the diseases incident to the human body, notwithstanding the effects of these deleterious agents, are evidently fatal to multitudes. Deeply impressed with these facts and with a view of reforming the science and practice of medicine, an individual of this city in the year 1827, procured a lot of ground and erected a handsome and convenient edifice for an Institution denominated the United States Infirmary, expressly for employing a reformed system of practice in the treatment of diseases; the remedial resources being chiefly derived from the productions of our own country.—The course of treatment adopted by this institution was principally the result of near forty years experience of a distinguished medical reformer, which course we are happy to state, has been crowned with signal success, and proved to a demonstration, that without mercury, that boasted champion of the MATERIA MEDICA, or other poisonous drugs, diseases generally may be cured by those more sure and salutary means, which the God of nature has so liberally scattered around us.

Animated by the past success, and with the hope of benefiting future generations, an irrepressible desire has been felt, that no exertions commensurate with the importance of the object should be taken, to promulgate this valuable system of practice, and thereby improve and reform the noble and important science of medicine.

After reflecting for years upon the most prudent and successful method of effecting so desirable an object, it has been deemed expedient to establish a MEDICAL SCHOOL, with competent teachers, where students may receive board and instruction until they are fully qualified to practice in the various branches of the healing arts upon the reformed system. We are now happy to announce, that a building for such an Institution has been erected, and (by Divine permission) will be opened in Nov. next, for the reception of Students.

The building is large and commodious, situated in Eldridge Street, between [illegible] and Broom, adjoining the present U. S. Infirmary. It is in a healthy and pleasant part of the city, and has been completed at great expense.

The following branches will be taught:—

1. Anatomy.
2. Surgery.
3. Theory and Practice of Physic.
4. Materia Medica and Botany.
5. Midwifery and Practical Botany.
6. Chemistry and Pharmacy.

The benefits to be derived by an attendance at this institution, will, we trust, be duly appreciated by those who wish to acquire a general knowledge of the healing art.—Here the student will be taught all the [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

There will [illegible]

REQUISITIONS.

The qualifications for admission into this School will be—

1. A certificate of good moral character.—2. A good English Education.

TERMS.

The price of [illegible] per session of [illegible] will be $250, one half in advance [illegible] [illegible] 50 per week. Some provision is made for young men in indigent circumstances.

All communications addressed to the Superintendent of the United States Infirmary, [illegible] Post Paid will receive attention.

W. BEACH.

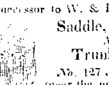
U. S. Infirmary, Oct. 1, 1828.—28t

FOR SALE, and on a moderate Credit,

A good second hand Ogle GIG. For further information apply at the office of the Village [illegible]

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. HALL.)



Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk-Maker,

No. 127 Market Street, (near the new City Hotel,) BALTIMORE.

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public, that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old established stand for many years occupied by Messrs. William & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a

Large and General assortment of

Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks, Valeices, Saddlebags, Collars, Military Equipments, &c.

of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail, on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this or any other city.

August 19th, 1828. 1*

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL,

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE Subscriber continues to keep that handsome establishment, known by his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors; his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have been so liberal heretofore, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The publics obt. servant,

WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam-Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the Boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. Vehicles, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, [illegible] stable with a large grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.

Cambridge, [illegible] 1828.

THE [illegible] HOTEL

FOR SALE.

[illegible] IN PRINCESS-ANNE, MD.

Now occupied by Col. G. [illegible]

It is commodious in every respect, and in good repair. There is no house on the Eastern Shore better [illegible] Persons inclined to purchase will apply to [illegible]

☞ Letters post paid will be attended to. [illegible]

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers,

30,000 Canes, suitable for Reed makers
200 Nests Sugar Boxes
250 Barrel Covers
[illegible] Butter Prints

[illegible] gross of Lamp Wicks, assorted sizes [illegible] Spickets and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels kegs and [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.

Baltimore, [illegible]

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of James Polk vs. [illegible] Hearon, I will offer at public sale on Tuesday the 18th day of November next, at the court house door, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. the following property [illegible] land called White Hall, containing [illegible] acres, more or less; [illegible] now in the possession of said Hearon, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above claim with all costs accruing thereon.

ROB. STUART late Shff.

SPLENDID VIEWS OF AMERICAN SCENERY.

On FRIDAY, the 10th of OCTOBER, 1828, will be published by T. K. GREENBANK, No. 61 Spruce street, Philadelphia, a volume of splendid views of American Scenery, as follows:—

1—A view of Beck's Shot Tower, on the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia, and adjacent scenery;
2—A view of the Light House in Long Island Sound, with the adjacent scenery;
3—A view of York on Lake Ontario, with the fortifications;
4—Characteristic Scenery on the Hudson River;
5—View of New London, Connecticut, with the adjacent scenery;
6—View of Lemon Hill, near Philadelphia, the seat of Henry Pratt, Esq.
7—The tomb of Washington, at Mount Vernon.
8—View at the Great Bend of the Susquehanna.
9—View of the Upper Falls of Solomon's Creek, Luzerne county, Pa.
10—View of the Lower Falls of Solomon's Creek.
11—View of the Cattskill Mountains, from the Hudson.
12—View of Fort Niagara, on Lake Ontario, from the Light House on the British side.

These Views are executed in the best style of [illegible] from drawings made upon spot. Each plate will be accompanied by a full and accurate description thereof, so as to make it perfectly intelligible to every person.

The work will be printed and issued to subscribers in the first style, on superior paper, and with a handsomely printed cover, and delivered to subscribers at the very low price of One Dollar per copy. Flexible covers will be used for country subscribers, so that they can be easily sent by mail.

Any gentleman, postmaster and others who will [illegible] to procure ten subscribers and remit $10 to the Editor, shall receive twelve copies. From the very [illegible] [illegible] already received [illegible] subscribers having put down their names, this volume will probably be [illegible] and the other plates can be engraved. All orders from the country will be promptly attended to.

Address, T. K. GREENBANK,
No. 61 Spruce street, Philadelphia.
Sept. 16 [illegible]

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC.

[illegible]

[illegible]

MARYLAND:

Dorchester County Orphans Court,
October 14th, 1828.

ON application of William Price, Administrator of James Hughes, late of Dorchester County, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased's estate, and that the same be published once in each week for the space of three successive weeks in the Cambridge Chronicle and Village Herald [illegible]

In testimony that the foregoing is truly copied from the minutes of the proceedings of the Orphans court for Dorchester county, I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of my office affixed, this [illegible] day of October in the year of our Lord, [illegible]

WM. H. ECCLESTON,
Register of Wills for Dorchester county.

In Compliance to the above order of the Orphans court for Dorchester county,

This is to give Notice,

That the subscriber of Dorchester county hath obtained from the Orphans Court of said county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of JAMES HUGHES, late of said county, deceased. All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the [illegible] [illegible]

WILLIAM PRICE, Adm'r.

Oct 21 [illegible]

Twenty-Five Cents Reward.

RANAWAY from the subscriber about [illegible] of last November, an indented apprentice to the Tailoring business, named JOSHUA H. SMITH. All persons are forewarned against harboring, or trusting him at their peril; and any person who will apprehend and deliver him to me, shall have the above reward, but no charges paid.

DAVID VANCE.

[illegible] 1828 [illegible]

Dissolution of Partnership.

THE [illegible] Burn & Co. [illegible] [illegible] Tho's Jones, or collection [illegible] 1828. [illegible]

E. T. J. WOODWARD.

[illegible] Street, BALTIMORE.

[illegible] his friends and customers that he [illegible] COMMISSION, [illegible] Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

[illegible]

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, [illegible] Wine, Brandy, Gin, [illegible] Spirits, [illegible] Chocolate, Spice, [illegible] together with every other article of [illegible]

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

[illegible] and Earthen Ware, &c.

A large general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY LINT OR GOOD WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

[illegible]

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the [illegible] court of Somerset county [illegible] [illegible] execution [illegible] [illegible] of a tract [illegible] Hog's Quarter, [illegible] [illegible] Princess Anne, [illegible] between the [illegible] P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

[illegible]

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald Office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of the most approved form, and a supply of [illegible]

BILLS OF SALE.

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrate Blanks,

[illegible]

C. E. [illegible] before supersedeas,

[illegible] supersedeas,

WARRANTS.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks,

PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly [illegible]

☞ The Orphans Court of Somerset county will sit on Tuesda[illegible]

[illegible]

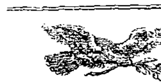
JOHNSTON & SUDLER.

Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne, Md

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, NOV. 18, 1828.



Jackson and Liberty.

Electoral Election News.

Proclaim the glad tidings o'er Land & o'er Sea, JACKSON has triumph'd--the PEOPLE are Free.

Maryland.

	Jackson.	Adams
1st, Charles, St Mary's and Calvert		1
2nd, Montgomery & Prince Georges		1
3d, Frederick, Washington and Allegany	2
4th, A. Arundel, Baltimore, Annapolis	2
5th, Baltimore county	1
6th, Cecil and Harford		1
7th, Kent and Q. Anne's		1
8th, Talbot, Caroline and part Dorchester		1
9th, Somerset, Worcester and part Dorchester		1
	5	6

This is Gov. Kent's "undivided front"!

Virginia.

The triumph of the Opposition in Virginia is complete. The majority against the Administration, judging from the returns before us, is unprecedented and overwhelming.--Never before has Virginia given such a tremendous vote at a Presidential election as at this; and never before has she given to any candidate for that office, not even to her own immortal Jefferson, such a majority as she has now given to ANDREW JACKSON. All the attempts of "practised statesmen," electioneering Judges, and venal presses, to win her from her allegiance to the Constitution, have proved vain and abortive—she has pursued "the even tenor of her way" unmoved by their frowns and unseduced by their blandishments. She has borne herself nobly in the present contest, and achieved new and imperishable laurels by the firmness and consistency of her course.

W. Virginian.

We have before us the Richmond Enquirer of last Tuesday, which gives the Virginia returns as far as heard from:

For Jackson 16676 For Adams 7339
7339

Present majority 9337

Pennsylvania.

The Philadelphia Sentinel contains returns from 86 counties of this state, which present the following result;

Jackson 90204 Adams 45722

Jackson's majority, 46482; and 15 counties, all for him, remain to be heard from.

New-York.

New-York, Nov. 12.

The game finished.---We are at last enabled to congratulate the friends of General Jackson on the result of the election in this state. By the boat of this morning we learn that Stuben has given the Jackson elector 1400 majority, and that Allegheny will add 200 more which secures that district. The returns from St. Lawrence county are not yet complete, but no doubt remains that the double district in the north has added two score electors, making altogether 20, which with the two to be chosen in the College, make TWENTY-TWO votes for General Jackson against [illegible] for Mr Adams. We have lost the Columbia district by about 10 votes; the Essex, Franklin, & [illegible] by about the same; Albany by a meagre majority, where our Governor has a small majority—Montgomery by about 100; indeed we may say that we have lost half a dozen electoral votes in this state by majorities amounting in the aggregate to about 1000 votes; while on the other hand we have given the following majorities to Jackson:

Suffolk and Queens	1 elector	268
Kings, Richmond and Rockland	1	910
New-York	3	5793
Westchester and Putnam	1	600
Orange	1	1471
Dutchess	1	1200
Ulster and Sullivan	1	2550
Delaware and Green	1	1850
Tompkins and Tioga	1	1667
Schenectady & Schoharie	1	1239
Herkimer	1	1000
Chenango and Broome	1	1500
Otsego	1	400
Cayuga	1	1856
Onondago	1	459
Stuben, Allegheny, &c.	1	1200
Jefferson, St. Lawrence, &c.	2	say 400
	20	24,353

Glorious Triumph.---Mr. Van Buren's majority, for Governor, over judge Thompson's, will not be much short of 40,000.

N. Y. Enquirer.

Maine.

We have received returns from ninety towns in Maine which give the Jackson ticket 8380 votes, and Adams 11054.

From the Eastern [Maine] Argus.

PORTLAND, Me. Nov. 4, 1828.

A STAR IN THE EAST!

	Jackson.	Adams
Cuberland District,	4213	4040

The foregoing embraces the returns complete from this Electoral District, by which it will be seen the Jackson electoral candidate, J. C. Churchill, is elected by a majority of 173 votes.

We cannot speak with confidence, but from information and partial returns received, there is a probability that Oxford District has also given us a Jackson Elector.

With great respect,

THOMAS TODD.

Indiana.

Extract of a letter to the Editor of the United States' Telegraph, dated Vavay, Ind. Nov. 4, 1828.

Sir-- I hasten to inform you that our Presidential Election is over; the result is this, Jackson 300; Adams 201. War, pestilence and famine, will once more be reduced to private life, and remain there until circumstances induce him to plot treason against our country, in the garrets of Lexington.—Adams may retire at mid-night, to Braintree, and fatten on the spoils, filched from our "weak and penurious government" Information from Ripley county, says that the Jackson ticket will have from 6 to 8 to one. This state will give from 1000 to 3000 for Jackson. We had considerable rain through the day, which will operate against us.

Ohio.

In the 52 counties heard from Jackson received 46845, Adams 44650
44650

2195 maj for Jackson.

Twenty-one counties to be heard from; all small except. Pickaway, which at the Gubernatorial election gave Campbell (the Jackson candidate) 200 majority.

The Baltimore Patriot, a rank Adams paper publishes the following:

"A letter from Zanesville says—Jackson will get the vote of Ohio by from 4 to 8000.

Kentucky.

Extract of a letter to the Editor of the U. S. Telegraph, dated

Lexington, Ky. Nov. 4.

Sir: It will probably be gratifying to you to hear something from our returns; in this county Adams' maj. last night was only 92 votes; upwards of 1400 were taken. At the August election, Metcalf's maj. in Fayette, the first day was upwards of 200 In Franklin county, where Barry's majority was 128 in August, Jackson's majority last evening was 291. In Clarke county, where Metcalf's majority was about 360 first day. Jackson was only 29 behind last night. In Jessamine where Barry was beaten 69 first day, Jackson's majority was 77 Monday night. In Madison, where Metcalf had 300 maj. first day, Jackson was 180 behind last night. In Scott our majority was 450 first night. In Garrand, where Barry received only 149, Jackson had 217 at Lancaster at dinner time, Monday. In Mercer where Barry's majority was 399 in August, Jackson was 700 ahead last night. In short, the Adams men have given him up, and we shall beat them at least 5000 in this state. Never were men so completely chap-fallen.

P. S. The vote at the court house, Lexington, last night was for Jackson 629
Adams 547

From the Frankfort Argus.

The following are the results of the vote for President and Vice-President, on the first day of the election, as far as we have heard:

	Jackson ticket.	Adams tickee.
Franklin county	543	283
Owen	407	76
Fayette	698	790
Scott	maj. 450
Woodford		maj. 77
Aderson,	maj. 270 at dinner.
Shelby		maj. 68
Jefferson	maj. 308
Harrison, (Cynthiana)	690	228
Mercer,	maj. 940
Bourbon, (Paris)	411	686

A letter from Paris says: "We shall beat them smartly at the precincts. To-night, in the county, we shall be about 150 behind with two-thirds of the votes taken."

Barry's majority in Franklin was only 128; in Owen 269; Metcalfe's majority in Fayette, 353, &c. Jackson's gain upon Barry's vote in the few counties heard from will probably be nearly enough to secure him the fourteen votes of Kentucky. "The Republic is safe."

From the Kentucky Gazette, Nov. 5.

GLORIOUS AND ANIMATING NEWS.

Jackson and Liberty are triumphant. The Coalition demolished, beaten, routed and defeated. Friends of Jackson and Freedom, you have won the victory. Your country is safe.

We received, last evening, the following returns:

Mercer county (official) majority for Jackson, 1st day at night, 698.

Harrison, at night, at Cynthia, 491.

Nicholas, at night, majority for Jackson 267. Precinct not included, which will give a maj. for Jackson.

Madison, at a close 1st day, maj. for Adams only 189. More than 1200 votes were taken.

Anderson, at the close 1st day, maj. for Jackson 308.

[We might add more returns to the above, but it is unnecessary, as we shall soon receive the entire vote of this state, which the Adams men no longer claim.]

Georgia.

Such is the unpopularity of Mr. Adams in Georgia that no electoral ticket has been formed for him in that state; but two Jackson tickets are running—the Troup Jackson ticket and the Clark Jackson ticket—each claiming to be par excellence the Jackson ticket.

The Adams men seeing this state of things, and knowing that they would stand no chance with a full ticket, have nominated only 2 electors, in hopes to slip them by the division in the Jackson ranks. They are Messrs. Burch and Murray, whose names will be found at the bottom of the Clark ticket.

We copy the following from the Savanah Republican of the 4th Nov.

'SIGNS' FROM CHATHAM COUNTY.

The election for electors of President and Vice-President was held in this city yesterday, and the votes were counted out this morning. The return which we give below will show that the Troup Jackson ticket was almost unanimously carried. It is due, however to the Clark party in this county to state that knowing themselves to be in the minority, and working for the same end, although through a different channel, with a magnanimity that is quite refreshing coming from such a source —joined heartily, and cordially in support of the Troup Ticket.

TROUP TICKET.
D. B. Blackshear,	391
A. S. Clayton,	387
Solomon Graves,	386
Jno. J. Maxwell,	387
J. Moore,	386
Oliver Porter,	388
R. R. Reid,	387
Wm. Terrel,	386
Jno. Rutherford,	387
CLARKE TICKET.
John Burnett,	6
John Cunningham,	5
John Hatcher,	5
Benj. Leigh,	5
Henry Mitchell,	7
Pitt Milner,	4
Dan'l Newnan,	16
Wm Penticost,	4
Jno. Stewart, Adamsite	7
JOHN BURCH,	90
THOMAS MURRAY.	91

Massachusetts.

The returns from 131 towns in Massachusetts, present;

For Jackson 4014 For Adams 18650

New-Hampshire.

	Jackson.	Adams.
In 91 towns	10846	11700

A letter from Portsmouth, says, "We had a tremendous struggle yesterday, and have succeeded. In this town there is a nett Jackson gain of 160. There is also an increase in every town we have heard from; and if the increase in the rest of the state corresponds with that of this vicinity, we shall get the state.

The Boston Statesman of the 8th instant says, The result of the election in this interesting state, indicates future, if it does not insure present victory to the Republican party."

We believe, however, that Adams electors are elected.

On the 19th of last August we presented our readers with an estimate of Electoral votes, in which we gave 159 certain for the People's candidate—Andrew Jackson. This was hooted at by the Coalitionists at the time. But what is the case now? Why the aspect of the Presidential election returns indicates that the persecuted old Friend of our Country will have more than 159 electoral votes.—We shall, in a week or two, review some of the predictions of those who impiously said "they spoke in the boldness of truth;"—☞Let the Necromancer and his 'Catspaw' look out!

Rumour says Uncle Sam's treasury pap has ceased to flow. Proof—The Baltimore Mud-Machine is defunct.

Shaking Hands.-- At a duel, the parties discharged their pistols without effect; whereupon one of the seconds interfered and proposed that the combatants should shake hands. To this the other second objected, as unnecessary; for, said he, their hands have been shaking this half hour

Bible Society.

THE several Agents of the Somerset Bible Society are informed that they will receive Bibles and Testaments to supply the destitute in their neighbourhoods upon application to the agent, Mr. William Done—and those who have collected any funds to aid in purchasing the books, will pay them to the same gentleman.

Nov 4 mj?

Nice Distinctions.—We have often been tickled at the reply of a smart boy, who burnt a bran new cap, and upon being asked, by his mother, who did it, said, he did not, the fire burnt it. We have now another instance of nice distinction, by a gentleman of this county, who previous to the late election repeatedly declared that if the Journal of Congress were shown to him, where it is recorded that John Q. Adams voted for property qualification in voters, he would never vote for him. It was done—But when the day for voting arrived the loyal subject of John II. was rather disinclined to keep his promise. He began to reason within himself, thus:—"I sometimes exhort and pray in public—I have [or ought to have] a tolerable character for veracity—I have given my word not to vote under such circumstances—yet, now I want to vote for Jonny Q.—What shall I do? ——— I have hit upon a plan, and I'll do it!" Thus saying, or thinking, he went and voted. But, upon being reminded of his pledge, he, with rather quivering lips, replied, "Why, I did n't vote for Adams—I voted for Mr. Dennis." Was not this Fox well skilled at making distinctions to save his character for veracity?

Co-Partnership Dissolved.—The Co partnership heretofore existing under the firm of Adams, Clay & Co. will be dissolved on the 4th of March next. All persons having demands against said firm, save and excepting John Binns (there being some dispute as to the actual number of Coffin Handbills delivered to our agents) and Charles Hammond, (who has failed to fulfil his contract in Ohio) are requested to present the same to the Kickapoo Ambassador, Washington City.—Boston Statesman.

Foreign News.

IMPORTANT FROM COLUMBIA.

Our attentive correspondents of the New York Mercantile Advertiser and the Gazette have transmitted to us the following intelligence.—Balt. Pat.

The packet brig Tampico, arrived at New York on Saturday, from Carthagena, having sailed on the 17th ult. She has brought information of an attempt having been made to assassinate Bolivar, who narrowly escaped being murdered in his palace, and concealed himself under a bridge for three hours, until his troops subdued the conspirators. The editors of the Mercantile Advertiser are indebted to Mr. Burrows, owner of the packet, for a Bogota paper containing the particulars of this occurrence and have subjoined a translation.

The private letters assert, that Santander and Padilla were at the head of the conspiracy—that their object, besides the death of Bolivar, was the elevation of the former to the Presidency. A great many arrests, and some executions had already taken place.

A letter from Carthagena of the 13th ult. says, "A few persons here have been arrested and imprisoned, on suspicion of having been concerned in the conspiracy."

A very respectable foreigner at Bogota, writes under date of Sept. 28th—"I am afraid the party against the government is very numerous and increasing throughout the country A measure recently adopted by the Executive, against the advice of Council, for stopping the payment of the dividends on British loans, is very unpopular."

Extract of a letter dated

CARTHAGE, Oct. 14.

"A Revolution broke out in Bogota on the morning of the 26th ult The artillery to a man, headed by an immense number of people in Bogota, many of whom were highly respectable, rose on that night, intent upon the murder of the Liberator and all his friends. One party marched to Bargas barracks and fired upon the soldiers with cannon, and a second party marched to the Granderos barracks, and a third to the Palace. The guard at the latter place was surprised and easily routed. Bolivar made his escape by a back window, and being followed by some armed men, he got under a bridge, where he remained up to the middle in water till they had passed. It was lucky for him, as it was the artillery crying out "Muerte el tyrannus Bolivar!" Hearing the cry of "Viva el Libertador" in the square he ran there and found it occupied by his friends, the Voijas. Col. Furguson was shot through the heart, in attempting to repel the attack made by the assailant on the palace. Col. Bolivar, (who was guard over General Padilla) was murdered in the same way by a party who broke into the house where he was.

"The bait held out to the soldiery who were of this faction, was the plunder of the British house if they succeeded.

"Bolivar has rewarded the regiment which defended the palace, and dispersed the conspirators by giving them 20,000 dollars and promoting their commander (Lieut. Colonel Whittle, one of his aids) to a full Colonel.

"We understand that six of the principal conspirators have been shot, and many more are likely to meet the same fate."

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

The packet ship Britannia, Capt. Marshall, and the ship Henry Kneeland, have arrived at New York from Liverpool. By these arrivals the Evening Post has received London papers to the 1st October, Lloyds' Lists to the same date, Liverpool papers to the 2d, and Dublin and Edinburgh papers to the 27th of September.

The London and Liverpool papers contain details of the late actions before Varna and Shumla. Official bulletins from the Russian army bring down the operations before the latter from the 7th to the 29th of August inclusive, and the operations before Varna from the 13th to the 31st of August. Of the siege of Shumla nothing new is stated, except that the Russians lost 163 killed and 424 wounded in an attack upon one of the three redoubts lately erected; that in an attack upon another redoubt they took six pieces of cannon; and that an onset had been made upon the left wing of the besieging army, which was repulsed after the Turks had taken one cannon, and occasioned a considerable loss in killed and wounded.

Batteries had been erected upon the sea coast, which keep up a fire on Varna, but the investment of that place on the south side does not seem to have been effected. A detachment was sent beyond the Liman for this purpose, but meeting with a superior Turkish force could not approach the place, and are still disjoined from the main army. On the 21st the Turks made a vigorous sally, but were repulsed with the loss of 500 men. It was in this affair that Prince Menzikoff was wounded. On the 26th Count Woronzow took the command of the army, and on the 31st two sallies made by the enemy were repulsed.

On the 30th of August, Admiral Greige sent two frigates, a sloop, and a cutter, under the command of Capt Kritzky, to destroy an arsenal formed by the Turks at Neada on the other side of Bourgas. Kritzky in spite of all vigorous opposition took all the Turkish batteries and having razed them to the ground, carried off twelve guns of the imperial calibre, spiked the remainder, or broke their carriages, and blew up the magazine, with all the ammunition and other stores. This exploit was performed in the short time of ten hours, and cost the Russians only one man killed and eight wounded.

A report of an intention on the part of the Russians to blockade the Dardanelles has occasioned a considerable panic in the money market. It has been said that the Russian minister has made a formal application to the English cabinet to sanction this proceeding, and it is also reported that a majority of the cabinet are against it. The report has neither been contradicted nor confirmed by authority The real object of the Russians is believed to be not a separate blockade of the Dardanelles, but a joint one enforced by the fleets of Russia, England and France.

There was a report in Paris on the 27th of September, that the son of Lord Heytesbury had arrived in Paris from Varna, having left that place on the 14 of September, and had brought intelligence of an attack made that very day on Varna by the Russians, who were defeated with great loss. The authenticity of this rumor is, however, doubted both in Paris and London.

It is confirmed that Ibraham Pacha had signed the Treaty for the evacuation of the Morea. A report prevailed at Paris, that the Porte was about to declare war against France.

The Queen of Portugal, Donna Maria de Gloria, has arrived in England in the Brazilian Frigate Imperatriz. She landed at Falmouth on Wednesday the 24th of September, and was received with great ceremony. She is described as a fine grown girl for her age, with light hair and pleasing features, and unusually fair for one of her nation. She was delighted with observing the great number of ladies and gentlemen who crowded round the frigate in boats to see her, and waved her handkerchief in acknowledgment of their cheers and obeisances. A nosegay of choice flowers tied with silver ribbon, was presented to her Majesty by Mrs Bull of Falmouth, a very proper personage, as it seems to us, to do the honors of Mr. John Bull's gardens to a foreign Princess. The Mayor and Corporation presented her an address. She answered in French, which she speaks fluently, thanking them in an easy and graceful manner, and on the whole it seemed to be admitted in all the accounts of the ceremony, that her Majesty behaved with great propriety.

A great excitement prevails throughout Ireland, which occasions no small anxiety, both to the Catholics and to the Government. In the south of Ireland assemblages of vast multitudes have taken place, and the leaders of the Catholic party are alarmed lest they may proceed to violence, or lest the government may find some pretext of committing violence upon them. A late meeting of the peasantry at Ballybay amounted to two hundred and fifty thousand people. In Tipperary assemblies of from ten to twenty thousand people have been held, regularly organised in a military manner, and marching to the sound of military music. Mr. Shiell, at a recent meeting of the Catholic Association, urged the necessity of discouraging these assemblies, and resolutions were adopted recommending that the people should abstain from them. In the mean time it is said that the British cabinet have had the subject under consideration, and that some additional regiments are to be sent to Ireland immediately. The London Courier of the 29th of September mentions a rumor, that orders for the arrest of Messr. Shiell and O'Connel had been sent off by Government on the Saturday previous, immediately after the breaking up of the Council.

[illegible]NALS.—The following brief sketch [of] Canals and Rail Roads, finished, commenc[ed], or intended, in the United States, [appea]rs to have been carefully made, and is [an ar]ticle of some value. It is copied from [Poulson's? or] Yeoman's Gazette, a paper printed [in] Boston.

Middlesex Canal.—This has been finished [an]d in operation for several years; its [lengt]h is 29 1-2 miles; it has 136 feet lockage and runs from Boston harbor to Chelmsford, Mass.

Blackstone Canal.—This undertaking [is] yet finished, but is in rapid progress. [Le]ngth is 45 miles, from Worcester, Ms [to Pr]ovidence, R. I.

Farmington Canal.—This is unfinished; [le]ngth 17 miles, from Northampton to [New] Haven, Ct.

Hudson and Erie Canal.—This is in [opera]tion; length 393 miles, from Albany to [Buffal]o, N. Y.

Champlain Canal—Completed; length [63 mi]les, from Albany to Whitehall.

Oswego Canall—Completed; length 38 [miles] from Salina to Oswego, connecting [the H]udson and Erie Canal with Lake Ontario.

Seneca Canal.—Completed; length 20 [miles] connecting the Seneca and Cayuga [lakes] with Hudson and Erie Canal.

Delaware and Hudson Canal.—Length [65 mil]es, from Delaware in Orange co. to the [Hudson ne]ar near Kingston.

Morris Canal—This is in progress, [len]gth 86 miles, from Easton to Newark.

Chesapeake and Delaware Canal—[Compl]eted; length 14 miles, from Delaware [t]o Chesepeake bay.

Port Deposite Canal.—Completed; 10 miles, from Port Deposite on the [Sus]quehannah to the Maryland line.

Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.—This [was be]gun on the 4th July last, when ground [was b]roken by the President of the United [States]. Its length 360 miles, from Georgetown to near Pittsburg, Pa.

Ohio State Canal—Unfinished; its [length] 306 miles, from Cleaveland on Lake [Erie t]o the Ohio at the mouth of the Sciota.

Miami Canal.—Unfinished; length [265 m]iles, from Cincinnati to the Maumee, [at t]he head of Lake Erie.

Lehigh Canal.—Unfinished: length 46 [miles] from Stoddartsville, on the Lehigh to [Easto]n, on the Delaware.

Little Schuylkill Canal—Its length [ ]les, from the mouth of Little Schuylkill [riv]er to the coal mines.

[Con]estago Canal.—Length 18 miles, from [Lanca]ster to the mouth of Conestago [creek].

Schuylkill Canal.—Finished; length [ ]iles, from Philadelphia to Mount Carbon.

Union Canal.—Finished; length 79 [miles] from Reading to Middletown.

Pensylvania Canal.—In progress; it [has] been commenced at both extremities [wi]th 296 miles. from Middletown to [Pittsbu]rgh.

The three last mentioned canals form [a line] from Philadelphia to the Ohio, at [Pittsbu]rgh, and may be considered parts of [on]e great enterprise.

Ohio and Erie Canal—In length 213 [miles] from Pittsburgh to Erie, on Lake E[rie].

Delaware Canal.—This will run from [Phila]delphia to meet the Delaware and Hud[son Can]al It has already been begun.

James and Kenhawha Canal.---This will [ru]n Richmond to Kenhawha.

Dismal Swamp canal.--Finished; length [ ]s, from near the mouth of James [river to] Albemarle Sound.

Louisville canal.---In progress; length 3 [miles a]round the rapids near Louisville Ken.

[S]antee canal---In progress; length 150 [miles f]rom Columbia by the Broad and Sa[ntee riv]ers to Cambridge, and from the San[tee to] Charleston.

Savannah and Altamaha canal-- Length [ ]s, from Savannah to Altamaha.

[The] preceding statement gives the names [of the] canals, which have been completed [by our] enterprizing countrymen. These ten [extend] a space of 747 miles. Eleven other [canals] have been commenced, some of which [will pr]obably be finished before the year closes. [Th]e whole distance, which the several [canals] now in progress towards completion [are exp]ected to extend, is 1644 miles. The [remain]ing seven, whose names and intended [direc]tions are given in the above list, are [calcu]lated to reach 430 miles. The total [length] which all these will reach, is 2821 [miles, ne]arly equal to the distance from this [t]o London.

[The] subject of Rail Roads has attracted [l]ess attention than Canals. But even [Rail R]oads have not been overlooked.

Quincy Rail Road has been a con[siderab]le time in operation, and far exceeds [expecta]tion. Its situation is about 8 miles [from B]oston; length 3 miles. The Mauch [Chunk R]ail Road has also been finished; [its length] is 12 miles. The Schuylkill West [ ] Rail Road has been begun; length [ ] In addition to these, projects have [been set a]foot, and some advances made to[wards] making Rail Roads from Boston to [ ]ce 42 miles; from Boston to the [ ] near Albany, 187 miles. There are [the] *Campden and Amboy; the Danville [and Pott]sville; the Columbia and Philadel[phia]; an*d the Baltimore and Ohio Rail [Road].

[Frank]lin Bank of New York.--The Hon. [ ]ent, receiver of the Franklin Bank [of New] York, has made an official report of [the sta]te to the Chancery Court, from which [it appear]s that its concerns have been most [shamefully] mismanaged, to apply the mildest [terms]; [it] is declared that "the stockholders [have not]hing; and in the best result, the [creditors] either as note holders or depositors, [will] receive fifty cents on the dollar--and [perhaps] not so much!"!!!

[The r]eceiver says that--"during several [years th]e minutes of the Board of Directors [were ke]pt in so slovingly and disorderly a [manner], that the history of the transactions [of the] Bank is left in great confusion. No [record a]ppears, even of the names of the [persons] who were elected Directors for the [year 18]22, or for the year 1826."

[N]orwich Falls, Conn the friends of [temper]ance have been so successful in their [efforts, t]hat only 1 the spirits has sold within [the ye]ar as in the preceding year.

ISAAC B. DESHA.

Extract of a letter from Thomas M. Duke, Esq. formerly of Washington, Kentucky, and now a resident of Texas.

San Felipe de Austin, July, 24, 1828.

"Isaac B. Desha, who was so long confined in Kentucky, for the murder of Baker, is now in confinement in this place on a charge of the same kind; the circumstances are these: Last April Desha arrived here on board the schooner Rights of Man, from New Orleans, in company with a man by the name of Thomas or John Early, of Brown county, Ohio, who visited this country, for the purpose of removing his family here.—Desha passed by the name of John Parker; they arrived in this town early in May, and remained only a few days here, and left this for San Antonio. When they left here Desha was without funds, and Early had a pretty smart sum with him. Desha arrived in San Antonio without Early, and spent money freely. On his return to this place I had him arrested, and have sent out men to-day to examine for the body of said Early. The evidence that I have been enabled to collect, as yet, is very strong against him, and I am very much afraid that he has murdered his companion. Yesterday he confessed to me, that he was Isaac B. Desha; but not until he had been identified by a gentleman in this country. I was satisfied in my own mind that he was Desha, from his family resemblance, and his breathing through a silver tube.—Kentucky Reporter.

The following is an extract of a letter from an undoubted source, dated San Felipe De Austin, in the Province of Texas August 13, 1828, --Isaac B. Desha is no more. He died in confinement in this village (San Felipe) on a charge for murdering his fellow-traveller on the La Bach river, between this place and San Antonio. He died the day before his trial was to have been had. The evidence of his guilt was circumstantial entirely, but of the strongest kind. The name of the gentleman who was murdered was —— Early."—Alabama Journal.

Shawneetown, (Ill) Sept. 27.

Squirrels.—We understand from the Farmers that great havoc is every where made and making by these mischievous animals—They were never seen in so great numbers before. A gentleman of veracity informed us a day or two ago, that he killed upwards of 400 in and about his field in one day, and the next morning they appeared as numerous as ever. They are seen constantly swimming backwards and forth across the Wabash, Ohio, and Mississippi rivers, and are killed by the boys and sportsmen, in great numbers at their landings. It is a new fact to us, in the natural history of these animals, that they should swim rivers from a mile to a mile and a half in width, but it is every day verified by the eyes of our inhabitants.

Female Industry.—An account is given in The Norwich, Ct. paper, of Cloth wove by the Thames Manufacturing company's mill, including the number of yards completed by three young women in six days, amounted to 3,303, or an average of 183 1-2 yards per day, by each of the girls. One of them wove 1,183, or 197 per day. It is stated to be nothing strange in that mill.

Lead Mines of Fever River.—The tract of country in which these mines are located, on the Upper Mississippi, extends, it is said, one hundred miles from north to south, and about fifty miles east and west—or into the interior of the river. They are probably the richest in the world. They are at present leased by the general government, and one tenth of their produce paid as a rent. But very partial discoveries, it is to be presumed, have yet been made of these immense treasures. In 1825, there were but 100 miners at work; in 1827 there were 1600.

Thoughts on Newspapers.

Newspapers are things that can be dispensed with--as costing money that might be saved. So is the schooling of our children--so, indeed are nineteenths of what it costs us to live. Almost any man might lay up money every year, if he would live on bread and water, and clothe himself in the cheapest manner he could; but what of that? Who would live like a brute, and die like a beggar, for the mere pleasure of saving money, which he cannot carry with him--tho' like a dead weight it may hang upon his soul at the last moment of his mortal existence! There are few such; five or ten in a million; and what wretched creatures are they! Most men, sensible that they must die, are disposed to enjoy a little of the fruits of their toils; and nothing is, perhaps, more necessary to the enjoyment of society, or self satisfaction in retirement, than a well informed and virtuous mind. It gives a zest to all things in prosperity, and is the best resource in adversity. Newspapers, although not always conducted with talents and respectability, are the best possible channels for obtaining an intercourse with the affairs of the world, and to implant desires in the hearts of youth for more solid readings, as they go on to maturity. In truth they are the great engine that moves the moral and political world, and are infinitely powerful to establish the character of a people, as well as to preserve their liberties; and cannot be so easily dispensed with as some persons believe, unless indeed, we think the trouble of self-government is too great, and agree to transfer the power of state to the few that are ready to use it for their own advantage. But this cannot be the will of the people of the United States; yet observing, however, the too general repugnance to reading, that (though it prevails less with us than in any other country,) it is the duty of those who feel the pleasure and the profit of it, to smooth the way to it; and afford every facility, that light and knowledge may be diffused. "An armed people and an unarmed magistracy," said Dickenson, "is the best guarantee of freedom." And while the body of the people read, reason and reflect while the press is free and liberally supported, the sword of the magistracy is pointless, except it be directed to execute the will of the people. How important, is it, then, that that will should result from an enlightened mind. [Niles.

ROSES.

Belles who rise soon and walk apace,
Steal roses from Aurora's face;
But when they yawn in bed till ten,
Aurora steals them back again.

From the Saturday Bulletin.

LUCK IN BATTLE.

Jacob Scout, or as he is familiarly called, "Cobe Scout," was a soldier in the Revolutionary army, and was commanded by General Wayne, the Chester county (Pa.) farmer. The night that Wayne retired at the Paoli, after the defeat at Brandywine, was cold, dark and rainy. The troops were all locked in the arms of sleep, their muskets at their sides. The countersign had been passed to the sentinels—it was "Here we come;" and they were watchfully pacing to and fro in front of the encampment. Vansant, a Bucks county regular, was one of them. A stranger approached him in the darkness of the night. Vansant dropped his musket to the charge, and ordered him to advance, and give the countersign. "Here we come," whispered the stranger at the bayonet's point, and here we come it was; for on the instant, Vansant was run through and pinned to the earth, and a detachment of British infantry and horse rushed past him to the tents. The countersign had been overheard by a woman when the guard was set at sun down, and immediately conveyed to the enemy.

Cobe Scout was sleeping in his tent when the groans of the dying around him broke his slumbers! Not a shot had been fired. The enemy with murderous precision, were working with the bayonet. He seized a sword in the confusion of the scene, and rushed out of the tent. His comrades overcome by numbers, and thrown into disorder by the attack, were hastening in crowds towards a fence in the rear of the encampment, over which to escape into the woods. The firing now began; and the cavalry were galloping among them trampling them down by dozens. The rush at the fence was dreadful. Whoever fell, fell to rise no more, for the horses' feet completed their destruction. As Cobe was making his way for the fence, a British horseman raised his sword to cleave our hero's head, but Cobe was before him.—He caught the blow upon his sword, and before the trooper could repeat it a lucky shot, whether from friend or foe is unknown, brought him gasping to the ground. Cobe's lucky genius suggested the means of instant preservation. He put his foot in the stirrup, and mounted into the saddle! In a moment he was out of reach of friend or foe.

The horse he had brought off was a noble animal. Its owner must have been an officer of rank for the trappings of his charger were rich and rare. The saddle was cushioned with silk and velvet, before it was slung a short blunderbuss, and a pair of silver mounted pistols; behind was a blue cloth valisse—the other trappings were equally valuable. In the valisse was found fine linen of various kinds, and a pocket book and four hugh horse shoes, brought out by the enemy to serve the wants of the cavalry, for each trooper's pack saddle was supplied with four of them. Cobe sold his horse for a good price, kept the shoes in trophy of his prowess, and rejoined the gallant Wayne.

Two years afterwards, Cobe and his old friend Vansant, now recovered from his wound, were fellow soldiers in the band that carried Stony Point by storm. That detachment was composed of the survivors of the Paoli—for Wayne knew he could depend upon them. They marched up at midnight—with fixed bayonets, without flints in their muskets. Silence was in all their countenances; their countersign, "Here we come, Paoli!" They marched onward under a murdering fire of musketry and grape; they halted not a moment, but carried death and victory before them. Cobe Scout will tell you that when he stepped into the fort it was ankle deep in blood.

As their General mounted the rampart a musket shot struck the upper part of his forehead, and injured his skull. The man is now in Bucks county who held his head while he was trepanned. Two years ago he applied for a pension, and made oath that he was a—pauper! He now gets 96 dollars a year. Such is national gratitude.

Cobe Scout now lives in Montgomery county. He is still healthy, but the infirmities of old age are creeping fast upon him. He used to glory in relating all he knew about the war; and indeed where is the veteran who does not? But age has palsied his faculties. The twilight of uncertainty, as Irving says, has already cast its shadows around him, and upon his actions and his name, the curtain of oblivion is about to descend forever.

COWARDS.

It has become quite the vogue, in our refined age, to brand every man with this appellation, who refuses, or exhibits any repugnance to fight a duel. According to the modern vocabulary, he is a coward who feels unwilling to make a target of his carcass, and put himself up to be shot at, for the price of a like privilege with regard to some other body. This fashion of two human beings planting themselves in opposite position at a certain measured distance, pointing towards each other a cylindrical tube, crammed with "villanous saltpetre," brimstone, charcoal, and pellets of lead, to be exploded by means of a spring at the hither end, to the manifest danger of whomsoever shall stand at the other end—was altogether unknown to Joshua, Xenophon, Hannibal, Julius Cæsar, and other cowards of yore; and demonstrates beyond all dispute, the superior courage, as well as refinement, of the present age of the world.—Boston Bulletin

Baltimore Prices Current.

Nov. 14, 1828

FLOUR—white wheat family, $0 11 a 11; superfine Howard-st. 9.25 a 9.25; city mills 8.50; Susquehanna, — none —; WHEAT, best red 1.95 a 2.00; best white 2.05 a 2.10—CORN, old, .62 a .65; new 55 a 60

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess-Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.

August 5. jft

For Rent,

For the ensuing year, a House and Lot in the village of White-Haven, at present occupied by Edward C. Blake For terms apply to.

MARCELLUS JONES

Sept. 9, 1828.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court & to me directed, at the suit of Peregrine Weatherly vs. Hewet Langsdale, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit; 1 negro man Charles, 1 ditto Isaac, 1 ditto Harry, 3 head of horses and 1 carriage and harness, which I shall proceed to sell at the the court-house door, in Princess Anne, on Tuesday the 18th day of November, [inst.] at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writ.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Nov 4 lde

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed at the suit of William Mezack against Samuel Vincent, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit, part of a tract of land called Plimton's Saltash, part of Milton, part of Smith's Meadow, part of Cordwinder's lot, containing 161½ acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell at the court house door, in Princess Anne, on Monday the 24th instant, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above mentioned writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Nov 4 lde

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Elizabeth Byrd & Geo Maddux, executors of Thomas Byrd, against William Callaway, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: a tract or part of a tract of land called Estoe's Conclusion, containing 845 acres, more or less, which I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, to satisfy the above mentioned writ, at the court house door in Princess-Anne, on Tuesday the 18th day of next November, at the hour of 2 o'clock P. M.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Oct 28 lde

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of two writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Lemuel P. Spence and Samuel Brown, executor of Stephen Disharoon, against Joshua Morris, I will offer at public sale on Tuesday the 18th day of next November, at the court house door in Princess Anne, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P M the following property, to wit: a tract of land called Security, containing 213 acres, more or less; also 1 negro boy Bob, 1 ditto John, 1 horse, gig and harness, 2 yoke of oxen and 2 horses, the property of said Joshua, to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above claims with all costs accruing thereon.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

Oct 28 tm

BILL IN EQUITY,

In Somerset County Court at

MAY TERM, 1828.

William Collins, Adm'r. of Stephen Collins,

vs.

Daniel Dykes, Henry Moore & Sally his Wife, Isaac Ward and Mary his Wife, John Fuller and Sally his Wife, and Peggy Sturgis, heirs of Stephen Dykes.

Notice

IS hereby given, that in pursuance of a decree of Somerset county court in the above cause, I will sell on TUESDAY the 25th of NOVEMBER, [inst.] at public sale to the highest and best bidder, on the premises, near Rehoboth, all the real estate of Stephen Dykes, deceased, for the payment of his debts. The terms of sale are a credit of 12 months from the day of sale—the purchaser or purchasers to give bond or bonds to the trustee, for the payment thereof, with security to be by him approved, bearing interest from the day of sale. Upon the payment of the purchase money with interest, and not before. I will in pursuance of the said decree execute a deed or deeds to the purchaser or purchasers conveying all the right and title of the said Stephen Dykes, to the said real estate.

I hereby notify the Creditors of the said

STEPHEN DYKES,

To file with the Clerk of Somerset county court their claims against his estate, with the vouchers thereof, within six months from the day of sale aforesaid.

DANIEL DYKES, Trustee.

Nov 3d, 1828 4m?

Marshal's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for Maryland District, and to me directed, at the suit of the United States against George Brown and William Williams, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit, one house and lot No. 19, in Princess-Anne, as the property of George Brown, and I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, the above mentioned property, on the 25th day of November, (inst) between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. at the court-house door in Princess Anne

HUMPHREY HUMPHREYS,
Dep. Marshal Som. county.

Nov 4 mw?

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phoebus.

For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

June 3, 1828. wk

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed two at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'rs. of Thomas Byrd against Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and one other at the suit Hannah Hearn, Ex'x. of Wm. Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by L. D. Cohee; also a house and lot occupied by Amelia Nicholson; also one other occupied by William S. Disharoon; also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esquire's Mills, it being the office of the said Elijah, also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which said land was purchased by the said Elijah C Johnson & Levi Cathell, of a certain Absalom Phipps; also a clock and case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Waller, Esq. in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 22d of November next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Oct. 28 1d c

Contents of the American Farmer

Of October 24, 1828.

Annual Cattle Show and Exhibition of Household Manufactures, held by the Maryland Agricultural Society at Carroll's Point, Reports of the Committee appointed to reward the premiums—Sheep, to the Farmers of Virginia, by Richard K Mead —Recent Sales of Bakewell Sheep, Cattle, &c. in the Philadelphia market—Cotton Crop in Mississippi—Culture of the Grape, &c. in Pennsylvania—Letters to William Price on the Scuppernon and other Grapes —Table of Canals finished, and in progress in the United States, with remarks—An affecting case of Suicide—Old Maids—Table of Marriages at various ages—Maxims—Fall Races, Broad Rock Va.; Washington Jockey Club; Norfolk Jockey Club; Elkton —Line to a Robin—Patent Carriage Wheel —Indian Tradition—Families of Great Men —Recipes, To avoid Freezing; To avoid Catching Cold—Editorial, The Late Cattle Show; Remarks by a French Traveller, on the Cattle Show; Canton Races—Advertisements—Prices Current.

Of the 7th November.

Answers to some of the Queries relating to Agriculture, by Calvin Jones, of North Carolina—On the Salivation of Domestic Animals — Fattening Swine — Agricultural habits and papers of Gen Washington—McCormack's Plough, with a cut—Large Corn—On the cultivation of Forest and Ornamental Trees—On the Native Grape, by Professor Gimbrede—A Profitable Tree—American Patent, An Improved Method of constructing Breakfast, and Dining Tables —Method of making Vinegar —Female Education, continued; Evils of a Rapid and irregular Progress in Education-- Poetry, Reputation; Lines on Revisiting a School—Courses de Chevaux, concluded—Kouli Knab—Remarks of an Amateur and a Judge—Report on a Process of Seasoning Timber, invented by J S Langton—Horses in France—Cedar, a safeguard from Lightning—Buffalo Hunt—A Good Example—Formidable number of Rats in Paris—Editorial, Late Cattle Show, Ploughs and Ploughing Matches—Gen. Van Rensselaer —Prices Current.

THE CORNUCOPIÆ.

"Blending the useful with the sweet."

BALLAD.

From the Spanish—Upwards of two centuries old.

Blow light, thou balmy air,
 My lady's couch above,
Blow lightly there, ye winds, and spare
 The slumber of my love,
Let no rude blast be found
 To mar her gentle sleep;
But all around, a dreamy sound,
 And drowsy murmur creep.

O fly! thou balmy air,
 And by her couch remain;
Go blend thee with her breath, and bear
 Its balm to me again,
But lightly go, and gently blow—
 Blow softly as my strain.

Blow gently, do not break
 The stillness of her sleep;
I would not make my love awake,
 Nor raise those lids to weep.
Ye winds, that borne in happier hour,
 May wanton as ye will,
If round the bower ye have the power,
 To creep and murmur still,
O lightly go, and gently blow,
 And let her slumber still.

From the Atlantic Souvenir.

FORGET ME NOT.—Imitated from the German.

Where flows the fountain silently,
 It blooms a lovely flower,
Blue as the beauty of the sky,
And speaks like kind fidelity,
 Through fortune's sun and shower—
  "Forget me not."

'Tis like thy starry eyes, more bright
 Than evening's proudest star,
Like painting's own halo light
It seems to smile upon thy sight,
 And says to thee from far—
  "Forget me not."

When by the lonely fount we meet,
 And weep so soon to part,
That flower springs up beneath our feet,
And sighs, as if it will'd to greet
 A kindred broken heart—
  "Forget me not."

Each dew drop on its morning leaves
 Is eloquent as tears,
That whisper when young passion grieves
For one beloved afar, and weaves—
 His dream of hopes and fears—
  "Forget me not."
F. G. HALLECK.

A volume of Sacred Music has recently been published in London, the music by Bishop, Cramer, Crotch, Shield, Calicot, Wesley, &c.—among the writers of the poetry are Mrs. Opie, Mrs. J. Baillie, Rev. H. Milmae, J. Montgomery, R. Southey. Much of the poetry is original; the annexed specimen is from the pen of Mrs. Opie.

There seems a voice in every gale
 A tongue in every opening flower,
Which tells, O Lord! the wond'rous tale
 Of thy indulgence, love and power.

The birds that rise on quivering wing
 Appear to hymn their Maker's praise,
And all the mingling sounds of spring
 To thee a general pæan raise.

And shall my voice Great God, alone
 Be mute, 'midst nature's loud acclaim?
No, let my heart with answering tone
 Breathe forth in praise thy holy name,

And nature's debt is small to mine,
 Thou had'st her being bounded be,
But—matchless proof of love divine—
 Thou gav'st immortal life to me.

The Saviour left his heavenly throne,
 A ransom for my soul to give;
Man's suffering state he made his own,
 And deigned to die that I might live.

But thanks and praise for love so great,
 No mortal tongue can e'er express;
Then let me, bowed before thy feet,
 In silence love thee, Lord, and bless

From the Massachusetts Journal.

The Shipwrecked Wanderer.

The following story is strictly true; and it is published in hopes some light may be thrown upon the fate of the boy, frequently alluded to in it. the writer can imagine no injury the facts can do any one, and has hoped they may do some good to the interesting individual concerned.

In the autumn of 1827, a gentleman in Norridgewock, Maine, was drawn to the Court-House in that place, by the report that an Irish woman had been taken up as a vagabond; and was about to be committed to jail. When he entered, the supposed culprit was bathing her forehead in some cold water, which had been brought her, and frequently clasped her temples, as if she were in pain. Though her dress was coarse, and very much soiled, and her appearance wretched and way-worn, it was plain enough, at a single glance, that she was no vagabond. The answers she gave to the questions directed to her, were wandering and incoherent; but though her intellect was evidently in ruins, the broken fragments betrayed that it had been rich and highly cultivated. Her face had no great pretensions to beauty, and its expression indicated imminent mental suffering; but her figure was graceful, and her motions had the staid, yet easy majesty, characteristic of a well educated English woman. There was an air of modesty and dignity about her, that, even in her forlorn condition, would have protected her from the insult of the most thoughtless; and as it was evident that the poor wanderer laboured, at least, under occasional delirium, the gentleman after consulting his wife on the subject, offered her the shelter of his own house. Her lady-like deportment, her refined conversation, and extreme wretchedness, completely ga[illegible] heart of her hostess; and here she h[illegible]ven weeks, while her new friends were trying in what they could render her the greatest assistance. Her mind was often wandering, sometimes absolutely frantic; but during her intervals of reason, she is described as an uncommonly fascinating and elegant being. Her walk was remarkably classic and graceful, she managed a horse finely, and sang French songs with much taste and feeling. The account she gave of herself, in her collected moments, is singularly romantic; yet it has an air of truth about it.

She said she was the daughter of the wealthy Dr. Bowring, of London, and had two brothers—one named William Augustus Bowring, who resides in London, and the other, whose christian name I have forgotten, residing in Bolton not far from London. She married Mr. Bradlee, a lawyer, without property; but, as she says, very acceptable to her family, on account of his worth and abilities. This Mr. Bradlee was a liberal in politics and religion; and having been rather too active to be well pleasing to the British government, he grew disgusted with the state of things there, and resolved upon making a purchase in some part of America, where it would be agreeable to establish himself, and a family, consisting of a wife, a son and two little daughters. For this purpose, he visited the United States at the time Lafayette was making his famous tour through the country. Following the dictates of doating parental love, he brought his son with him; his wife and daughter remained at his residence in Bolton, awaiting the result of his travels. Several anecdotes she told, proved the correctness of this part of her story; among the rest, she said her husband wrote, at the close of one of his letters to her, "Lafayette has lost his trunk and cane, and the Americans will rake the Mississippi to find them." Her husband's letters indicated, that he was pleased with the country, and intended to reside here. In one of them he mentioned, that he regretted having his son George with him, as the variety of new objects he saw, and the attention he received, were likely to prove injurious to his character and manners; and on that account, he had placed him under the care of James Townsend of New-Haven.—In subsequent letters, he spoke very highly of Mr. Townsend, and seemed to have great confidence in him.

Mr. Bradlee took a fever and died. I am not sure that his widow told where he died; I believe it was in New Haven. The news soon reached London; and William Augustus Bowring went immediately to Bolton to inform his bereaved sister. From her own account it is probable the tidings rendered her delirious; for she says she does not remember much that happened to her, till she found herself in a travelling carriage with her brother on her way from Edinburgh, and was told that the physicians had ordered her to travel for her health. When her mind became comparatively calm, her favourite object was to bring her daughters to this country, and educate the whole family here, as she supposed her deceased husband had intended and wished. Previous to carrying this design into effect, she visited a relation in Ireland, lord Ag[illegible]; and agreeable to his advice sailed from Belfast, Ireland, in a vessel, which I think was called the Rob Roy. An old and faithful nursery maid who had long lived in the family, accompanied her to take care of the little girls. She died on the passage, and was thrown into the sea.

Mrs. Bradlee and the children suffered very much from sea-sickness; but no alarming accident happened to them till they were near the coast of Canada, when in a very thick fog the vessel struck on a sand bar; and the captain announced that she must inevitably sink. Then came all the horrible details of a shipwreck. The shrieks and groans, and rushing overboard of those who were delirious in their agony. Mrs. Bradlee, with a mother's instinct found her way to the cabin of her little ones, and taking one on each shoulder, attempted to get into the boat, in which some of the passengers were trying to save themselves. The side of the vessel was wet and slippery, and her brain was dizzy. By some false step she lost her balance, and the children slipped from her embrace. One fell into the water between the vessel and the boat; but she kept hold of the other's little robe with a convulsive grasp. Oh God! in the confusion of the moment the gown had merely been thrown over the child—and when the frantic mother would have clasped the little one to her heart, she found it but an empty robe! There is no eloquence in language to heighten the pathos of that heart-rending scene of desolation and despair.

Boats and dumb bells, were sent out from Quebec to pick up such passengers as might have escaped the wreck, and Mrs. Bradlee's next recollection is of standing on the sea coast alone in her misery. Several came up and spoke kindly to her. One woman, in particular, addressing her in French, begged her to go home with her. Mrs. Bradlee answered in French, and after some persuasion, consented to go home with her, exclaiming, "but let me be alone! let me be alone."

How long she had been wandering about when she first attracted the attention of Norridgewock, is uncertain. From her complaint of suffering from the heat, as she passed through the woods, it must have been several months. She said all she recollected was that she frequently waked up and found herself bathing her head by the side of some stream. Probably the bewildered creature had wandered back and forth without knowing where she was going, and when the water cooled the raging fire in her brain she thought she had just waked. Many who saw her, and heard her talk, were convinced she was no imposter. The deadly paleness and sudden frenzy, which all allusions to water occasioned; the burst of tears when the young children of the family attempted to caress her; the piercing shriek she uttered when one of the children appeared in a little blue gown, which she said was very much like the one she had clasped to her heart, when she clasped her infant—all proved that the distressing tale was true. Casual remarks and accidental associations, which no imposter can counterfeit, were in good keeping with her story. She described La Grange, which she said she had twice visited; a circumstance very likely to be true, considering her husband's politics; she showed she was no American, by asking whether the "penny post" had got in; she never boasted of her former wealth, but her habits and taste were all those of one used to the elegancies and luxuries of refined life.

During which time all this was happening, the wretched mother was with great difficulty restrained from her wanderings. New Haven and her boy were the only ideas that kept constant possession of her shattered mind, and at times she was like a chained wild creature straining to be off. Once she made her escape and was overtaken a few hours after, and persuaded to return. During this short absence, her hostess observed a small bunch under the carpet near her bed side; and on removing it found it to be the little blue robe she had grasped at the time of the shipwreck. It was very dirty, and retained offensive marks of the child's sea sickness. When the wanderer was brought back, her joy was great at finding the robe she thought she had lost. She was very averse to having it washed and the proposal seemed to distress her exceedingly: after a few days she observed, "it is just as the little creature last wore it—if it must be washed for decency's sake, I wish it might be done without my knowledge."

No one knows what has become of this interesting wanderer. Perhaps, when she arrived at New Haven, and found her pursuit hopeless, the little light in her mind was extinguished forever! If her story be an imposition, it certainly does not seem like it.—There are five or six New Havens in the United States. If James Townsend resides in any one of them, we trust he will lose no time in making these circumstances known to Wm. Augustus Bowring, London, provided there is such a person to be found.

"I CAN QUIT WHEN I CHOOSE."

These few words have perhaps done more mischief in the world than can be conceived. Youths just entering the threshhold of life with the bright anticipation of their friends, allured by the syren pleasure, with the sparkling cup in their hand, although sensible of the dark abyss yawning at their feet, too often stifle the disagreeable monition of conscience and friends, with this sophistical and false consolation, "I can quit when I choose." Alas! link by link is the chain forging, which soon is to bind such unfortunate youths, and bid defiance to the noblest resolutions. Too true was the assertion of lord Bacon, that all the crimes on the earth do not destroy so many of the human race, nor alienate so much property, as drunkenness. It expels reason, drowns the memory—is the beggar's companion, and the true and only cause of the vast increase of crimes in the world. There is certainly no character which appears so despicable as that of a drunkard: he displays every little spot in his soul in its utmost deformity. When once the youth becomes a devotee at the shrine of Bacchus, and fond of his libations, it is time for him to think. Let him not lull his conscience with the delusive idea of quitting when he chooses, but take a noble stand, and from that moment cease indulging in his cup, and shun those cements of morality and reputation with which our city unhappily abounds. Drunkenness that fell destroyer of mind and morals, has elicited the exhortation of the preacher—the pen of the moralist—the warning of the physician—the pleadings of the wife and children with tears in their eyes—yawning of the grave,—but all will not do. It has reached an awful and alarming height—it daily increases. It is known to require an extraordinary and noble firmness of the heart to resist its blandishment and allurements. Is it then the temptation you are so easily to withstand, and the habit you are to "quit when you choose?"—Ah no—my dear young friends, harken to my advice; when the seductive goblet is offered to your lips, think not you will once more sip the liquid poison because "you can quit when you choose," but consider that cup may probably be the one that will establish that which you will never be able thereafter to conquer, and dash the proffered cup with indignation to the ground.

Saturday Evening Post.

GREAT INDIAN WALK.

Some interesting reminiscences of the early history of Pennsylvania have lately been published in the interior of this state. It is related that Thomas Penn, who came over in 1732, contracted with Teedyusecuing and some others, whom the Indians said had a right to sell for a certain sum, the Indian title to the land to be taken off by a parallel of latitude from any point, as far as the best of three men could walk in a day, between sunrise and sunset, from a certain chestnut tree at or near Bristol, in a north west direction. Great care was used to select the most capable for such a walk. The choice fell on James Yeates, a native of Bucks, a tall slim man, of much agility and speed of foot. Second, Solomon Jennings, a yankee, a remarkably stout and strong man. Third, Edward Marshall, a native of Bucks, a noted hunter, chain carrier, &c. a large heavy set and strong boned man. The day was appointed and the champions notified. The people collected at what they thought the first 20 miles on Durham road to see them pass. First came Yeates, stepping as light as a feather, accompanied by T. Penn and attendants on horse back. After him, but out of sight came Jennings, with a strong steady step, and not far behind Edward Marshall, apparently careless, and swinging a hatchet in his hand, and eating a biscuit—bets ran in favour of Yeates.

Marshall took biscuits to support his stomach and carried a hatchet to swing in his hands alternately, that the action of his arms should balance that of his legs—as he was fully determined to beat the others or die in the attempt. He said he first saw Yeates in descending Durham creek, and gained on him. There he saw Yeates sitting on a log very tired—presently he fell off, and gave up the walk. Marshall kept on and before he reached the Lehigh, overtook and passed Jennings—waded the river at Bethlehem hurried on faster and faster by where Nazareth stands, to the Wind Gap. That was as far as the path had been marked for them to walk on, and there was waiting the collection of people to see if any of the three would reach it by sunset. He only halted for the Surveyor to give him a pocket compass, and started again. Three Indian runners were sent after him to see if he walked it fair, and how far he went. He then passed to right of Pocono mountain the Indians finding it difficult to keep him in sight, till he reached Still Water—and he would have gone a few miles further but for the water. There he marked a tree, witnessed by three Indians. The distance he walked between sun and sun, not being on a straight line, and about 30 miles of it through the woods, was estimated to be from 119 to 120 miles. He thus won the great prize—which was five pounds in money, and five hundred acres of land any where in the purchase.

It is added that James Yates, who led the way for the first thirty miles or more, was quite blind when taken out of Durham Creek, and lived but three days afterwards. Solomon Jennings did not hold out but a few years. Edward Marshall lived and died on Marshall's Island, opposite Tinicum township, in the Delaware, aged about ninety years. He was a great hunter, and fortunately made a more productive walk than he did for Thomas Penn; for he found a rich silver mine, that rendered him and his family connexions affluent, yet he carried the secret where it was, out of the world with him.

A GOOD HAND.

In the endless varieties of hand writing to be met with in this scribbling, scrawling world there seems to be some difference of opinion or of taste, as to what constitutes a good hand. When a fair lady sends you a fair note and requests the pleasure of your company to tea on a given evening, that is doubtless a fair hand. When a man writes you most laconically, informing you that unless you pay that note he holds against you in twenty-four hours, he will immediately thereafter send you to jail, that may be called a plain hand. When a gentleman sends you an exceedingly polite note, only demanding the satisfaction to blow out your brains, that is denounced an honourable hand. When a lady writes a billetdoux with a quill plucked from the wing of Cupid, and with such fine and delicate strokes as to be invisible except to the eyes of love, that is without doubt a lovely hand. The Lord's Prayer written in the compass of a half dime, is a very fine hand. A hand, which is very frequently placed at the bottom of a note, "for value received," however coarse and vile it may appear, is a very promising hand. A hand, which after writing a long, lean sop[illegible]rific article, requests an editor to favour the public with the sublime squeezings of his empty noddle, is, to say the lest a very im*pudent* hand. The gentleman, again, who writes to this some humble servant, of the public on matters of any kind relating to a newspaper, and makes a point of forgetting the postage, by the unanimous opinion of the whole corps editorial writes a most rascally hand.

Then besides these, there is the close hand and the sprawling hand, the round hand and the sharp hand, the easy hand and the cramped hand, the heavy hand and the light hand, the running hand and the halting hand, the straight hand and the crooked hand, the ascending hand and the descending hand, the copy hand and the hand which no man can copy, the business hand and the hand which has no business; then there is the counting house hand, the legal and the clerical hand and twenty other different kinds of hand all of which may be good, bad, or indifferent, as it happens. But when we receive a letter, post paid, and written thus—(though it be quail tracks and pot hoods:)—"Enclosed are TWO DOLLARS, for which you will be good enough to forward your paper to

PETER PAY THE-CASH DOWN."

This we consider positively to be a good hand.—Berkshire American.

LAW CASES.

One day last week we had law cases wholesale—no less than a round half dozen at a Justice's session. The matter was this: Jack and Gill had taken a pint of whiskey; Gill swore at Jack, and Jack assaulted Gill; or, to speak in military style, Jack with a detachment of his fists, drove in the van guard of Gill's face. Whereat Gill got a warrant for Jack, and brought him up for assault and battery; and Jack got a warrant for Gill, and had him up for swearing. (Our army swore terribly in Flanders!) And they had one another up like fellows of vengeance. Then besides Jack and Gill, the principals, there were accessaries who had little or no principle; and they brought one another up in like manner. Thus the case was bandied back and forth like a shuttlecock; and the matter went on swimmingly, each one getting his case, until they had spent something like ten dollars a piece, all of which went into the pockets of justices, lawyers and sheriffs; and the parties discovered at last, that, besides being sworn at, assaulted, and battered, and making themselves ridiculous by a legal exposure of their folly, they were each ten dollars the poorer for the causes they had gained.

"What a great matter" sixpence worth of liquid "fire kindleth!" Keep sober, gentle reader—or if you are not gentle, by all means keep sober—for of all business, the [illegible] is that you will find going to law the most unprofitable. We beg the lawyers' pardon.

ITEMS OF NEWS.

Home Industry.—Of all the specimens of domestic fabrics which we have examined, incomparably the finest were exhibited at our office this morning by Mr. Curtis, a farmer from Blooming Grove, Orange county. These manufactures were produced by most ingenious skilful, and industrious artists, Honey bees. The hive is about a square, with panes of glass on four sides, exhibiting the full comb, which is as pure as honey itself. Mr. Curtis has thirty of these boxes, each containing about twenty pounds of honey, made from the white clover. We were inclined to believe that the hand of man had something to do in this affair, [illegible] fastenings upon the window sashes [illegible] cells were pointed out by a friend. [illegible] often seen the [illegible] little [illegible] work. It is gratifying to learn, that the bees are preserved by their humane proprietor till they die of old age, and thus share the common lot of us all.—N Y. Statesman.

Beat it, who can.—Miss Nancy [illegible], a daughter of Mr. George Wilson, of Columbia township, Bradford co. [illegible] day six runs [130 knots] of woollen [illegible] milking 7 cows.—Penn. Northern [illegible]

[There is not a girl in Broadway that can not beat Miss Wilson in the [illegible] "spinning;" but as to milking [illegible] cows" we "give it up."]—Nock.

Cure for the Croup.

Dr. Godman has recommended the following simple and certain remedy for this common and fatal disease among children. He says, "whenever they are threatened with an attack of cynanche trachealis [illegible] direct a plaster covered with [illegible] snuff, varying in size according to the age of the patient, to be applied directly over the top of the thorax, and retained until all the symptoms disappear. The [illegible] found to be always effectual when [illegible] the first and second stages of the [illegible] The plaster is made by greasing [illegible] linen, and covering it with the [illegible]

To make Indelible Ink.

Indelible ink, for marking on linen &c. is made by dissolving one drachm of lunar caustic and half an ounce of gum arabic in half a pint of pure rain water. Previous to using it the cloth to be marked must be wet with a preparatory liquid made by dissolving one drachm of salt of tartar in half a gill of rain water, and thoroughly dried and ironed.—American Adv.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1828. NO. 35.

VILLAGE HERALD.

(TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for [illegible] and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise the advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

All communications addressed to the editor must come POST PAID.

COURSE OF EXCHANGE,

Cohen's Office, Baltimore, Nov. 13, 1828.

BANKS	pr. ct. dis.	BANKS	pr. ct. dis.
U. States Bank	par	Farmers bank and branches	1
Do Branches	par	Wilmington and Brandywine	½
MASSACHUSETTS		Commercial bank	1
Boston banks	1	Branch of do. at Milford	2
Other Mass. notes	2	Bank of Smyrna	1
RHODE-ISLAND		MARYLAND
Providence banks	2	Frederick city bank	½
Other R.Island notes	3	Havre-de-Grace	par
CONNECTICUT		Farmers bank at Annapolis	½
Middletown bank	1	Branches at Frederick & Easton	do
Phœnix bank at Hartford	1	Hagerstown	do
Bridgeport bank	1	Westminster	do
Eagle bank of New Haven	no sale	Elkton	susp.
Hartford bank	1	DISTRICT OF COL.
NEW-YORK		Bk of Washington	½
N Y city banks (except Lombard)	par	Bk of the Metrop.	do
Albany	½	Patriotic bank	do
Other N York notes	1	Central bank	do
NEW-JERSEY		Bk of Columbia	nom
Jersey bank	no sale	Union bk Georgetown	½
Bank in Newark	1	Farmers & Mechanics bank	do
Bank of N Brunswick	1	Bk of Alexandria	do
Trenton Ins. Co	1	Bk of Potomac	do
Farmers bank at Mount Holly	1	Farmers bk of Alexandria	do
Cumberland bk	1	Union bk of Alex'a	do
State bk Camden	1	Mechanics bk of Alexandria	do
At Elizabethtown	1	VIRGINIA
At N Brunswick	1	Richmond & branches	½
At Patterson	1	Bk of the Valley	do
At Trenton	no sale	Br at Leesburg	do
At Morristown	1	Br at Charleston	[illegible]
Sussex bank	1	Br at Romney	do
PENNSYLVANIA		N W bank of Va at Wheeling	3
Philadelphia banks	par	N. CAROLINA
Easton	½	State bk at Raleigh and branches	4
Germantown	do	Cape Fear	4
Montgomery county	do	Newbern	4
Chester "	do	S. CAROLINA
Delaware "	do	State banks generally	2
Lancaster bank	do	GEORGIA
Farmers bk of Lan'r	½	State bank	2
Harrisburg	1	Planters	2
Northampton	4	Augusta	[illegible]
Farmers bank of Bucks co	1	Darien	5
York bank	1	Augusta br Co	no sale
Chambersburg	1	KENTUCKY
Farmers bank at Reading	1	Bank of Kentucky & branches	no sale
Gettysburg	do	OHIO
Carlisle bk	1	Specie banks	3
Swatara at Harrisb'g	1	LOUISIANA
Pittsburg	2	Banks at N Orleans	3
Greensburg	3
Brownsville	4
DELAWARE
Bank of Delaware	½

NOTICE.

ALL Persons indebted for Officers' Fees for 1827, payable in the present year, and those indebted for County Levy for the present year, are requested to make immediate payment for the same, as longer indulgence cannot possibly be given. My deputies have orders to close the collection of said fees and county levy without delay. Those neglecting the above notice may expect to be dealt with as the law directs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN,
Oct 28 Sheriff & Collector S. C.

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; round, half and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking, patent and common Lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants, fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and Sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners Lines, clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets,
Baltimore. 10th mo. 11th.

THE NEW-YORK MEDICAL ACADEMY.

The happy effects of the Botanical System of Practice, more especially of late employ in the cure of diseases, are such as entitle it to a high rank among modern improvements. The opinion long entertained in its favour, by many of the judicious, a thorough experience has now demonstrated to be well founded: and with the number and variety of its salutary achievements, its reputation is daily increasing.

It must be evident to every discerning mind, that the present prevailing practice of medicine, which rejects this botanical aid, is at variance with our nature and with our happiness. Mercury, the Lancet, and the Knife, are chiefly relied upon, by physicians and surgeons of the present day, for the removal of almost all the diseases incident to the human body, notwithstanding the effects of these deliterous agents, are evidently fatal to multitudes. Deeply impressed with these facts and with a view of reforming the science and practice of medicine, an individual of this city in the year 1827, procured a lot of ground and erected a handsome and convenient edifice, for an Institution denominated the United States Infirmary, expressly for employing a reformed system of practice in the treatment of diseases; the remedial resources being chiefly derived from the productions of our own country.—The course of treatment adopted by this Institution was principally the result of near forty years experience of a distinguished medical reformer, which course we are happy to state, has been crowned with signal success, and proved to a demonstration, that without mercury, that boasted champion of the MATERIA MEDICA, or other poisonous drugs, diseases generally may be cured by those more safe and salutary means, which the God of nature has so liberally scattered around us.

Animated by the past success, and with the hope of benefiting future generations, an urgent and wide desire has been felt, that measures commensurate with the importance of the object should be taken, to promulgate this valuable system of practice, and thereby improve and reform the noble and important science of medicine.

After a fleeting for years upon the most prudent and successful method of effecting so desirable an object, it has been deemed expedient to establish a MEDICAL SCHOOL, which competent teachers, where students may receive board and instruction until they are fully qualified to practice in the various branches of the healing arts upon the reformed system. We are now happy to announce, that a building for such an Institution has been erected, and (by Divine permission) will be opened in Nov. next, for the reception of Students.

The building is large and commodious, situated in Eldridge Street, between Grand and Broom, and adjoining the present U. S. Infirmary. It is in a healthy and pleasant part of the city, and has been completed at great expense.

The following branches will be taught:—

1. Anatomy.
2. Surgery.
3. Theory and Practice of Physic.
4. Midwifery, and Diseases of Women and Children.
5. Materia Medica and Practical Botany.
6. Chemistry and Pharmacy.

The benefits to be derived by an attendance at this institution, will, we trust, be duly appreciated by those who wish to acquire a correct knowledge of the healing art.—Here the student will be taught all the modern practice which is deemed necessary, in addition to the Botanical; and in consequence of his residing in the Institution, and pursuing a systematical course of studies, combining each of these departments, he may acquire a knowledge of both in less than one half the time, and with less than half the expense, that is required at other Medical Institutions.

There being an infirmary connected with the Academy, the students will have the benefit of Clinical practice, by which the experimental part of medicine will be acquired with the Theory.

Another advantage held out to the student is, [illegible] those who conform to the rules and regulations of the school, and there finish their education, will have employment, with a generous compensation, secured them by the institution, to disseminate the practice of medicine in different sections of the country.

There will be no specified time to complete a course of study; but whenever the student is qualified to pass an examination he will receive a Diploma, and the Diploma will have a decided advantage over every other, as it will enable the possessor to practice in every State in the Union without molestation.

REQUISITIONS.

The qualifications for admission into the School will be:—

1. A certification of a good moral character.—2. A good English Education.

TERMS.

The price of qualifying a person for practice will be $250, one half payable in advance, board (being an extra charge) will be $2 50 per week. Some provision is made for young men in indigent circumstances.

All communications addressed to the Superintendent of the United States Infirmary, on this Circular, (Post Paid) will receive attention.

W. BEACH.
U S Infirmary, Oct. 1, 1828.—28p

FOR SALE, and on a moderate Credit.

A good second-hand Ogle GIG. For further information apply at the office of the Village Herald. Sept. 2, 1828.

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. HALL,)

Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk-Maker,

No. 127 Market Street. (near the new City Hotel.) BALTIMORE.

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public, that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old established stand for many years occupied by Messrs. William & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a

Large and General Assortment of

Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks, Valeices, Saddlebags, Collars, Military Equipments, &c.

of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail, on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this or any other city.

August 19th, 1828. 1*

CAMBRIDGE HOTEL.

Sign of the Steam-Boat & Stages.

THE Subscriber continues to keep this handsome establishment, a few doors above his old stand, in a very central part of the town, where he is prepared at all times for the reception of travellers, and others, who may please give him a call. His house is well furnished; the rooms private and comfortable; his bar supplied with a choice selection of the best Liquors, his stable stored with good provender, and his prices regulated by the times. By strict attention to his business, he flatters himself with a continuation of those customers who have heretofore so liberally patronized him, to whom he gratefully acknowledges himself indebted.

The public's obt. servant.

WM. C. RIDGAWAY.

N.B. His Hack runs to the Cambridge wharf to meet the Steam Boat Maryland, on her arrival from Baltimore every Tuesday & Friday evening. Also for the conveyance of passengers from his house to the boat on her departure every Wednesday and Saturday morning, free of charge. He has, for the accommodation of persons who are going on to Baltimore, rented a private stable with a fine grazing lot, well enclosed, for the purpose of taking at livery horses at a low price, which shall be regulated by the price of grain, hay, &c. he is prepared at all times with fine horses and carriages, for the conveyance of Travellers to any part of the Peninsula.

W. C. R.

Cambridge, June 2, 1828.

THE SOMERSET HOTEL FOR SALE.

This large Establishment IN PRINCESS-ANNE, MD.

Now occupied by Col. G. Dashiell is for Sale.

It is commodious in every respect, and in good repair. There is no house on the Eastern Shore better patronized than this. Persons inclined to purchase will apply to

J. C. WILSON, Sen.

Letters post paid will be attended to.
[illegible] wm

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers.

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers
500 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 dozen Butter Prints

200 gross of Lamp Wicks, assorted sizes; Spiggots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels kegs and hydrants; sawing [illegible] Weavers Slays or Reeds, woolen, cassinet, [illegible] and hand Shuttles, cotton and wool Cards; fancy and common Bellows; Fishing Tackle; lamp and candle Wick; corn Brooms and Whisks; market and close Baskets, long and short Brush Handles; Lemon Squeezers Rolling Pins, Potatoe Mashers; Mullers; towel Rollers; wash & cake Boards, shovels, tubs clothes Pins; [illegible] Sifters; box and cake Blacking; butter Bowls; Trays, Spoons and Paddles; Trenchers, crabing and cabbage Netts.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.
Baltimore, 10th mo 11th.

Marshal's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for Maryland District, and to me directed, at the suit of the United States against George Brown and William Wil[illegible], I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit, one house and lot No. 19, in Princess Anne, as the property of George Brown, and I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder for cash, the above mentioned property, on the 25th day of November, (inst.) between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. at the court-house door in Princess Anne.

HUMPHREY HUMPHREYS,
Dep. Marshal Som. county.
Nov 4 mw2

SPLENDID VIEWS OF AMERICAN SCENERY.

On FRIDAY, the 10th of OCTOBER, 1828, will be published by T. K. GREENBANK, No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia, a volume of splendid views of American Scenery as follows—

1—A view of Beck's Shot Tower, on the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia, and adjacent scenery;
2—A view of the Light House in Long Island Sound, with the adjacent scenery;
3—A view of York on Lake Ontario, with the fortifications;
4—Characteristic Scenery on the Hudson River;
5—View of New London, Connecticut, with the adjacent scenery;
6—View of Lemon Hill, near Philadelphia, the seat of Henry Pratt, Esq.
7—The tomb of Washington, at Mount Vernon.
8—View at the Great Bend of the Susquehanna.
9—View of the Upper Falls of Solomon's Creek, Luzerne county, Pa.
10—View of the Lower Falls of Solomon's Creek.
11—View of the Cattskill Mountains, from the Hudson.
12—View of Fort Niagara, on Lake Ontario, from the Light House on the British side.

These Views are executed in the best style of Philadelphia engraving, from drawings made upon spot. Each plate will be accompanied by a full and accurate description thereof, so as to make it perfectly intelligible to every person.

The work will be printed and issued to subscribers in the first style, on superior paper, and with a handsomely printed cover, and delivered to subscribers at the very low price of One Dollar per copy. Flexible covers will be used for country subscribers, so that they can be safely sent by mail.

Any gentleman, postmasters and others who will interest themselves to procure ten subscribers and remit $10 to the Editor, shall receive twelve copies. From the very flattering patronage already received (1200 subscribers having put down their names) this volume will probably be succeeded by another, as soon as other plates can be engraved. All orders from the country will be promptly attended to.

Address, T. K. GREENBANK,
No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia.
Sept. 16 mm

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC.

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state" and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to.

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the distracted nerves, after the manner of an anodyne, consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease [illegible] use. It promotes expectoration, which is [illegible] and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. [illegible] the fever, recuperates digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given with safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER.
Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne, Md.

MARYLAND:

Dorchester County Orphans Court, October 14th, 1828.

ON application of William Price, Administrator of James Hughes, late of Dorchester County, deceased, it is ordered that he give the notice required by law, for creditors to exhibit their claims against the said deceased's estate, and that the same be published once in each week for the space of three successive weeks in the Cambridge Chronicle and Village Herald—papers selected by him.

In testimony that the foregoing is truly copied from the minutes of the proceedings of [SEAL] Dorchester county Orphans Court, I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of my office affixed, this 14th day of October, in the year of our Lord, 1828. WM. W. ECCLESTON,
Register of Wills for Dorchester county.

In obedience to the law and the order of the honourable Orphans court of Dorchester county,

This is to give Notice,

That the subscriber, of Dorchester county, hath obtained from the Orphans Court of said county, in Maryland, letters of administration on the personal estate of JAMES HUGHES, late of said county, deceased.—All persons having claims against the said deceased, are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof, to the subscriber, on or before the 25th of April next, they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of the said estate. Given under my hand this 14th day of October, A. D. 1828.

WILLIAM PRICE, Adm'r. of
Oct 21 James Hughes, dec'd.

Twenty-Five Cents Reward.

RANAWAY from the subscriber about the end of last September, an indented apprentice to the Tailoring business, named JOSHUA H. SMITH. All persons are cautioned against harbouring or trusting him, at their peril; and any person who will apprehend and deliver him to me, shall have the above reward, but no charges paid.

DAVID VANCE.
Salisbury, Oct. 11, 1828 wm

Dissolution of Partnership.

The PARTNERSHIP of Wm. & Geo. Riall is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will in future be conducted by Riall & Hopkins. It is expected that all persons indebted to the late firm will come forward and make payment to Riall & Hopkins, otherwise their accounts will be placed in the hands of Thomas Jones for collection

Sept 19, 1828. mm

Contents of the American Farmer

Of October 24, 1828.

Annual Cattle Show and Exhibition of Household Manufactures, held by the Maryland Agricultural Society at Carroll's Point, Reports of the Committee appointed to reward the premiums—Sheep, to the Farmers of Virginia, by Richard K. Mead—Recent Sales of Bakewell Sheep, Cattle, &c. in the Philadelphia market—Cotton Crop in Mississippi—Culture of the Grape, &c. in Pennsylvania—Letters to William Price on the Scuppernon and other Grapes—Table of Canals finished, and in progress in the United States, with remarks—An affecting case of Suicide—Old Maids—Table of Marriages at various ages—Maxims—Fall Races, Broad Rock, Va.; Washington Jockey Club; Norfolk Jockey Club; Elkton—Line to a Robin—Patent Carriage Wheel—Indian Tradition—Families of Great Men—Recipes, To avoid Freezing; To avoid Catching Cold—Editorial, The Late Cattle Show; Remarks by a French Traveller, on the Cattle Show, Canton Races—Advertisements—Prices Current

Of the 7th November.

Answers to some of the Queries relating to Agriculture, by Calvin Jones, of North Carolina—On the Salvation of Domestic Animals—Fattening Swine—Agricultural habits and papers of Gen. Washington—McCormick's Plough, with a cut—Large Corn—On the cultivation of Forest and Ornamental Trees—On the Native Grape, by Professor Gimbrede—A Profitable Tree—American Patent, An Improved Method of constructing Breakfast, and Dining Tables—Method of making Vinegar—Female Education, continued; Evils of a Rapid and Irregular Progress in Education—Poetry, Reputation, Lines on Revisiting a School—Courses de Chevaux, concluded—Kouli Kouli—Remarks of an Amateur and Judge—Report on a Process of Seasoning Timber, invented by J. S. Langton—Horses in France—Cedar, a safeguard from Lightning—Buffalo Hunt—A Good Example—Formidable number of Rats in Paris—Editorial, Late Cattle Show, Ploughs and Ploughing Matches—Gen. Van Ransselaer—Prices Current

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks,

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
CA SA's before supersedeas,
Do. do after supersedeas,
WARRANTS.

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, NOV. 25, 1828.

Jackson and Liberty.

Electoral Election News.

Proclaim the glad tidings o'er Land & o'er Sea. JACKSON has triumph'd—the PEOPLE are Free.

Ohio.

From the Baltimore American.

The State Journal of the 13th instant, printed at Columbus, contains returns from all the counties in Ohio. In 41 counties the returns are complete, and in the remainder, the majorities have been ascertained. From these it appears that there were given

For the Jackson electoral ticket 54,200 votes.
For the Adams do do 50,307

Maj. for the Jackson ticket 3,893

So that the Jackson Electors are chosen by the majority just stated. In reference to the returns, the State Journal says—

It is possible that, when the votes shall be fully counted out by the proper officers—a business in which they are now engaged, and which will probably require until Saturday to get through with—some errors may be discovered in the above, though not sufficient in amount to change the result.

Kentucky.

The National Intelligencer published a letter from Lexington, under date of 8th inst. which says—

"There is no longer any doubt about the result of the Election in this State. The majority in favour of Jackson is decisive, even large. The August majorities in the Administration counties have been diminished, while those in the Jackson counties have been increased."

New-York.

The actual result of the Presidential Election in New-York is at length ascertained. The Albany Argus of Saturday last says:

St. Lawrence having been heard from at last, gives about 200 for the Administration elector, which secures that district for Mr Adams. The electoral vote of this state, therefore stands as follows:

	Jackson
Queens and Suffolk	1
Kings, &c.	1
New York	3
Westchester and Putnam	1
Dutchess	1
Orange	1
Ulster and Sullivan	1
Green and Delaware	1
Schenectady and Schoharie	1
Chenango and Broome	1
Otsego	1
Herkimer	1
Cayuga	1
Onondaga	1
Tompkins and Tioga	1
Steuben, Allegany, &c.	1
	18
Chosen by the electors	2 20

	Adams.
Albany	1
Columbia	1
Rensellaer	1
Saratoga	1
Montgomery	1
Washington	1
Oneida	1
Ontario, Seneca, &c.	2
Monroe and Livingston	1
Madison, Cortland	1
Genesee, Orleans	1
Erie, Niagara, &c.	1
Clinton, Franklin, &c.	1
Jefferson, St. Lawrence, &c.	2
	16

Pennsylvania.

From the Harrisburg Chronicle, Extra.

Harrisburg, Pa. Nov. 12, 1828.

We have this morning heard of the result of our Electoral Election. The number of votes taken from the official return in the Secretary of the Commonwealth's office is thus:

Jackson ticket 100,581 votes
Adams ticket 50,678

Jackson majority 49,903

Cambria county not included—reported Jackson majority 210, making the Jackson majority 50,113.

Since putting the above in type we have received information, that upon counting out the Official returns there appeared

For Jackson 101,652 Adams 50,848
Jackson's majority, 50,804.

New-Hampshire.

In 180 towns, the Adams Ticket has 20,883 votes—the J. Ticket, 18,950—37 small towns to be heard from. The Concord Register of the 8th, announces the success of the Administration ticket by about 3,500 majority.

Maine.

The complete returns from Oxford District, in the Eastern Argus, give for the Administration ticket 2870, for the Jackson, 2110. Majority for the Administration 260. York District gives for the Administration 2351, for Jackson 1181, Lincoln District, Administration, 518, Jackson, 443. The returns from Kennebec, Somerset, and Penobscot districts, though incomplete, are sufficient to show that they have given great majorities for the Administration ticket.

Delaware.

The Legislature assembled at Dover on Monday 17th—all the members, 30, being present—In the Senate, an objection was made to the choice of Electors, upon the ground that the Legislature had met contrary to the provisions of the constitution which declares that "the General Assembly shall meet on the first Tuesday in Jan. unless sooner convened by the Governor"—and there being no call by the Governor, the Legislature had improperly assembled. The objection, however, was over ruled. In the H. of R., also a bill "was offered to provide for the election of Electors of President and Vice President of the U. States, by the People, which the Speaker declared to be out of order." In the afternoon the two Houses convened in the Senate Chamber, to elect their Electors—when James Canby, John Adams and David Hazzard were elected—each of them had 19 votes; the Jackson candidates had each 11 votes.—Rich. Enq.

Virginia.

Returns in our last, excluding the poll from Washington and Wythe counties, which were only in part;

		Jackson ticket.	Adams ticket.
		21,977	10,517
Washington	(closed)	589	16
Wythe	do	382	20
Tazewell	do	261	3
Grayson	do	289	73
Russell	do	228	5
Lee	do	275	34
		24,021	10,667
		10,667

Present maj. for J. 13,357

Only 8 counties more to be heard from.

In the District of Wythe, Washington, Tazewell, Grayson, Montgomery, Giles, Russell and Lee, the vote was 2474 for Jackson, 197 for Adams—majority for J. 2277—more than 12 to 1!

Connecticut.

The returns are not complete. The Adams ticket has received, as far as has been ascertained, 13,845 votes; the Jackson ticket 4,228.

☞We have received partial returns from several other states, but think it unnecessary to trouble our readers with them, as we shall soon be able to give more complete returns. Enough, however, is known to satisfy all that the People's candidate is elected by an overwhelming majority.

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Jonathan Russel writing, from Stockholm, to Mr. Clay at London, in reference to the communication of Mr. John Quincy Adams, as a candidate for the Presidency of the United States, used this confident and prophetic language:

"Now as an American, as a republican, as a New-Englander, I solemnly enter my protest against his election. He is entirely unqualified for the station, and like his father, he will be sure to ruin any party, that shall attempt to support him."—Jonathan Russel's letter to Mr. Clay, dated Stockholm, 15th October, 1815.

How well must Mr. Russel have known Mr. Adams, to foretell, with so much truth, certainty and confidence, the ruin of any party that should attempt to support him for the Presidency! At the distance of thirteen years after the writing of the above prophetic sentence, how ruined indeed, overwhelmed and completely put down is the Adams party in the United States.

What must be the feelings of John Q. Adams when he sees the recorded votes of thousands of intelligent freemen rewarding Gen. Andrew Jackson, as a pure, firm, undaunted and unbending Patriot, and punishing himself as a low, deceptive, intriguing, corrupt political apostate—

"If thou art he—But oh! how fallen!"

ARISTIDES.

Nov. 25.

[COMMUNICATED.]

A Sharp between two Flats.

The Necromancer, so self styled, on Sunday last was seen walking with slow pace, between a couple of very reverend gentlemen, who had just left the house of the Most High, doubtless holding out a crumb of comfort to them—not on the subject of future rewards and punishments, but as we suppose, on politics. The circumstance deeply impressed us with the story of the fools who went with an oyster to take counsel of a lawyer, which resulted in the lawyer's eating the oyster and giving his clients each a shell. Provided the Necromancer can get a good office from old Ebony he cares not a fig for their reverences; satisfied now that he has made the dupes answer his purpose.

Sic tempora mutantur.

Nov. 19.

From the American Farmer.

BREAD STUFFS.

Baltimore, Nov. 21, 1828.

There has been for some weeks an extraordinary fluctuation in the price of breadstuff, occasioned by the unsteadiness of the market abroad, the uncertainty of the extent to which the powers of Europe might be drawn into the vortex of war, in no small degree by the spirit of speculation at home.

To give our individual opinion how long the present prices will remain, and whether, if they are changed, it will be for the better or the worse, would be to assume a responsibility that we need not incur; we shall be careful always to give the exact prices, and so much news from abroad as may appear to have a bearing on the value of the articles quoted: and having done that, we leave our intelligent readers to judge for themselves. We should be sorry to misguide them, as we might do, by our own speculations, and we can enlighten them only by giving them facts on which they may always rely.

Too many of our friends, we are sorry to learn, had sold their crops, before the rise in grain took place. This is especially the case on the Eastern Shore, because, as we suppose, the transportation of market is done entirely by others, in boats which lie at almost every man's door—whereas, the farmer, removed from tide waters, must occupy his teams in putting in his grain crops, and can only send them with his grain, or more generally with his flour, to market, after all his seeding is done.

To get late to market is not always, as now, to get to the best market. The best general rule, is to sell as soon as you can conveniently prepare for it; for although sometimes it may happen that by delay you will get a higher price, yet the reverse of that is as frequently true, and by selling as soon as you can get ready, you make sure of some important advantages. First, you avoid waste of crop, which may occur in a thousand ways, by mice, birds, fowls, "light-fingered gentry," &c. and the danger of entire destruction by fire, storm, &c.; and next and most important, you pay your debts, stop interest, and keep a good name and a quiet pillow. Let the farmer, then, who takes time by the forelock, pushes his work and gets early to market, take comfort in the reflection that he has done his part, and leave the rest to chance. If his neighbour, who lags behind him, sometimes gets a better price, it is but the luck which chance often throws in the way of the slothful; lending some foundation to the proverb—"a fool for luck."

☞On the political aspect of the latest news from Europe, we may adopt the observations of the New York Evening Post. For the items that are connected immediately with the value of bread stuffs and other agricultural products, the reader is referred to the letter taken from the New York Statesman.

(From the N. Y. Evening Post, of Nov. 17.)

EUROPEAN NEWS.

We have looked over the papers, brought by the Sylvanus, Jenkins, on Saturday, more closely than our occupations then allowed us to do. We do not find that they contain any thing new from the seat of war, except the report that the Russians had raised a siege and were retreating, a report which has not yet received the confirmation of official accounts.

A Turkish Bulletin is given, dated at Shumla on the 2d of September, relating, to an action which took place on the 31st of August. Seven thousand horse under Alisch Pacha attacked a little camp at Jennibazar, four leagues from Shumla. The Russians were defeated, with the loss of 200 killed and twenty prisoners, and were obliged to seek shelter in the neighbouring woods. The Turks set fire to 100 provision wagons, and carried off a number of cavalry-horses, and 200 oxen, which were distributed among the troops.

The small port of Bourges on the Black Sea, which was captured by the Russians was kept by them only two hours. The country people assembled from all parts assailed them furiously, drove in their out posts, and they embarked and aabndoned the place.—The accounts received by way of Constantinople, which are as late as the 12th of September, gave a sad picture of the state of the Russian Army. The Turks represent the army of the enemy as diminishing daily by the diseases of the climate, want of food and the impetuous sorties of the Turkish garrisons.

MONUMENT TO PERRY.

The Legislature of Rhode Island, at its recent session, appointed Messrs. Hazard, J. L. Tillinghast, and Bull, a committee to erect a monument over the grave of Oliver H. Perry, and to draw on the treasury for $200 for that purpose. The sum will be increased if desired by the committee.

WELSH AMERICANS.

A tribe of Americans, about the 40th degree of North latitude, and the 45th West longitude, are said to possess many curious manuscripts about an island named Brydon, from which their ancestors long since came. Their language resembles the Welsh, and their religion is a sort of mixed Christianity and Druidism. They know the use of letters and are fond of music and poetry. They still call themselves Brydones. This statement rests on the evidence of Mr. Owen Williams, of Baltimore, who visited their settlement in 1817. He believes them descendants of some wandering Britons, expelled from home about the time of the Saxons, and carried by wind and current to the great continent of the West, into the heart of which they have been driven back by the encroachments of modern settlers. We fear that there are scarcely sufficient grounds for plucking the laurel of discovery from the brow of Columbus, to twine it round some runaway forefathers of our own.

London Weekly Review.

The Summit of Mount Ætna

AT SUNRISE.

Extract of a letter from an officer on board the United States ship Delaware, now in the Mediterranean, dated July 20, 1828.

"A few days after obtaining pratique at Syracuse, three officers and myself received the commodore's permission to visit Mount Ætna, about fifty miles distant.—We left Syracuse in a packet boat of the country for Catania, and reached that town on the second day. Catania, situated at the base of the mountain, is one of the most beautiful cities I have ever seen. It has been destroyed three times by eruptions, and each time rebuilt with additional splendour. In the evening we went to an opera; the house is well constructed and much resembles the Philadelphia theatre in Chestnut street, but much larger.

On the succeeding morning we left Catania for the Mount, with 9 mules including our guide's and sumpter mules, with provisions and beds for the night. In passing thro' the fertile region, which extends about ten miles, we saw many beautiful villages and a country exceedingly productive; the soil decomposed pumice and lava. It is said to produce two and in many places three crops annually. Cherries, apricots, almonds, figs, oranges, lemons, nectarines, melons, peaches, and almost every other fruit, are produced in the greatest abundance. Grapes are the chief product. It is said that ninety thousand pipes of wine are made from the vineyards of the mountain, which is eighty miles in circumference. At about ten o'clock we came to a small town, (Nicholas,) where we rested for 2 hours; then after crossing a barren plain of 2 miles, came to the region called from its trees. woody. It is uninhabited and extends 9 miles.—The trees are generally oak, large at the base, but present the appearance of topped trees being confined to a certain upward growth by the cold.

At the termination of this region we stopped to dine at the mouth of the grotto formed by lava. Here we put on warmer clothing, so as to meet the sudden change we were to encounter, and entered the upper or barren region. Scarcely a vestige of vegetation is found here. The road became very rough and the ascension difficult. A violent hail storm overtook us before we reached the English house, which we entered cold and fatigued. We felt so uncomfortable from the sudden change of temperature (from 80 deg. to winter weather,) that we could not rest. At 2 o'clock A. M. we took a cup of coffee and re-commenced our ascent of the cone on foot, it began too steep for our mules. We were armed with a long staff to assist in crossing the crevices. In consequence of the fumes of sulphur which escaped from the cracks, and the rarefaction of the atmosphere, we became cold and unable to walk above 15 or 20 steps without resting; the oppression of the breast and difficulty of breathing were excessive. We toiled on however, until we reached the highest point of the cone, looking immediately into the crater, and stood on this immense elevation, waiting for the rising of the sun. In a few minutes it began to show itself, and soon appeared resplendent and glorious; the view indeed was awfully sublime; to attempt a description would be useless. The whole island of Sicily—the island of Malta, 80 miles distant—mount Stromboli in eruption—Scylla and Charybdis—all lay before us, and, with our guide, we were ready to exclaim, that we saw the whole world. The crater was throwing out fire and smoke, which at times nearly suffocated us. We returned to Catania, of which, as well as a visit to Messina, I will give you some particulars in my next."

Baltimore Prices Current.

Nov. 21, 1828

FLOUR—white wheat family, $10½ a 11; superfine Howard-st. 8.00 a 9.00; city mills 8.50; Susquehanna, 8.00 a 8.50; WHEAT, best red 1.75 a 1.90; best white 1.55 a 2.05—CORN, old, .60 a .62; new 55 a 60

Bible Society.

THE several Agents of the Somerset Bible Society are informed that they will receive Bibles and Testaments to supply the destitute in their neighbourhoods upon application to the agent, Mr. William Done—and those who have collected any funds to aid in purchasing the books, will pay them to the same gentleman.

Nov 4 mj?

Marshal's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Vend. Exponas issued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for Maryland District, and to me directed, at the suit of the United States against Robert J. H. King, garnishee of John E. Morris, administrator of Wm H. Winder, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit, one tract of Land called Partner's Chance, and one tract called Kings Purchase, containing 707½ acres, more or less, and I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, the above mentioned property, on Tuesday the 16th day of December next, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. at the court-house door in Princess-Anne.

HUMPHREY HUMPHREYS,
Dep. Marshal Som. county.

Nov 25 mw?

Dissolution of Partnership.

The PARTNERSHIP heretofore existing between Wm. Gunby & John Noble, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will in future be continued under the firm of William & John Gunby, who respectfully solicit a share of public patronage.

☞All persons indebted to the late firm will please come forward and make immediate payment, as it is absolutely necessary that the accounts of that concern should be settled without delay

Nov 25 6q

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of two writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Esther Broughton, administratrix of Josiah Broughton against Charles Jones, I shall proceed to sell at public auction, at the court-house door in Princess-Anne, in Somerset county, Maryland, on Tuesday the 16th day of December next, between the hours of eleven and twelve o'clock A. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, all the lands mentioned in the said writs of Venditioni Exponas, as the lands purchased of Thomas Jones, containing three hundred and seventy-five acres, more or less, being the same lands which the said Charles Jones purchased of the said, Thomas Jones and for the conveyance of which, the said Jones executed a bond of conveyance to the said Charles, dated the eleventh day of November, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and seventeen, being part of a tract of land called "Bridges Lot," lying and being situated on Menokin river between Jones's Creek and a tract of land belonging to Littleton I. Dennis, situated on the west side of the public road leading from Princess-Anne to Long's Mills formerly Waggerman's Mills—which said land I shall proceed to sell on the day and at the place aforesaid to satisfy the debt, damages and costs in the said writs specified.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

Nov 25 mm

PUBLIC SALE.

WILL BE SOLD AT PUBLIC SALE,

On WEDNESDAY the 25th of next December, on the premises, at Goose Creek, where John Laws now lives—all my property now in the possession of said Laws, viz. the crop of CORN and FODDER, one pair of MULES, three head of HORSES, two yoke of OXEN, two COWS and YEARLINGS, 20 head of SHEEP, be the same more or less, 50 head of HOGS, be the same more or less, one Timber Cart, Wain Carts, Farming Utensils, and other articles too tedious to enumerate. The terms of sale to be made known on the day above mentioned.

JOHN NOBLE.

Nov 25 qq

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Pinchus.

For terms apply to

JAMES POLK.

June 3, 1828. wk

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Trading Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES.

This farm is within four miles of Princess-Anne; it formerly belonged to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is latterly known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL.

August 5. j6

From the New-York Statesman.

On Black Dyeing as applied to Woollen Cloth and Hats.

The dyeing of black has deteriorated so much within the last forty years in England, the colours would be considered as unwearable, were not the cloths as evanescent in their fabric as the colours are fugitive. The [illegible] miserable colours given to the blacks of the present day has been mainly the result of the prevailing passion for cheap goods. To meet and indulge that ridiculous unprofitable passion, the manufacturer has been compelled gradually to make his goods in a most flimsy manner, and the dyer to make his colour at as slow a rate as possible. So much has the dyeing of black been lowered in the West of England, that a piece of 20 yards of broad cloth, which forty years since was charged thirty shillings, is now done for six shillings and eight pence, and the dyer makes nearly the same profit now as he did then.

Before the year 1790, all the black cloths dyed in England, excepting the coarsest kinds, were coloured blue in the woad vat previous to their receiving the black dye; and a considerable portion of nut galls was used with logwood, &c. in finishing the colour. All the black cloths brought from England, have a white and a blue rose near the end. The white rose was designed to show that the cloth was white previously to being dyed blue; for, as cloths dyed other colours, if found defective, were usually dyed black to cover their imperfections, and repeated colourings were found to injure the texture of the goods, the dealers would give the same price for cloths without the white rose. The blue rose was designed to show that it had received the blue dye, and the colour of the rose was considered a criterion of the depth of the blue given.—The white and blue roses are still preserved: but the blue is never put on, except by dipping a corner of the cloth in the blue vat, or by tying a rose on that part. Nutgalls, which were found to give permanency to the colours, have also been exploded as too expensive; and the blacks now given to the cloths, are dyed with only logwood, fustic, and sumach. The latter being the only material in the composition that has any tendency to impart the least degree of permanency to the colour, and that is necessarily used in such small portions, to preserve the bloom of the now fashionable colours, as to have but little effect in checking the fugitive dye of the logwood.

The French and the Germans have always made much better black, and given to their colour a far greater degree of permanency than the English. I am aware that this opinion will be considered as high treason by English agents, through whose influence most flimsy goods, and the most miserable colours, have become fashionable in this country, and the public taste in this particular been materially vitiated. To prove the correctness of this opinion, I need only request any citizen, who has an opportunity of doing so, to compare an English black that has been worn three months with a French black that has been worn the same time.

The colour put on hats is even more fugitive than that put on the cloth; and it is time that our dyers, both of woollens and hats, should pursue some mode of giving more body and permanency to their colours. The primary object of this essay is, to show them how this can be effected, without any additional expense to the operator. I am aware that it would be worse than useless to attempt to bring our dyers back to the expensive but highly permanent process of giving a woad-blue to their goods before colouring them black, for the public taste has become so highly vitiated by the passion for cheap goods, that firmness of fabric, and permanency of colour, and every quality that gives to them an intrinsic value, are now never taken into consideration.

Giving a blue ground is out of the question, and as the nut-galls, the next most permanent mode, must also be resigned as too costly, I have to direct the attention of dyers to a material growing abundantly in our country, which answers even a better purpose than nut-galls, and will cost no more than the process now pursued.

All persons living in the interior of the country know that the bark of the swamp maple will make good black ink, though they may not be aware that four pounds of it, dried and ground, are equal to one pound of the best galls. The black obtained from this bark is equally as permanent as that of galls, and as the bark gives a larger portion of extraneous precipitate, it will clean better, and make a much [illegible] colour. Those dyers who formerly used galls will know what quantity of bark to use to a given quantity of logwood; but I would suggest to more moderate dyers to leave out one pound of logwood for every pound of bark used by them. A few of our wollen dyers, have at my suggestion, used the maple bark for three or four years, and their colours are much esteemed by dealers and consumers.—If the colours prove too blue, they may be brought to any hue by the use of sumach or fustic bark.

W. P.

The Yarn Stockings.—When Doctor Franklin was received at the French Court as American Minister, he felt some degree of conscience in complying with the regulations as to dress. "He hoped," he said to the minister, "that as he was a very old man, and represented a plain republican people, they would indulge his desire to appear at court in his usual dress. Independent of the season of the year, [said he] the change from warm yarn stockings to fine silk, somewhat dangerous." The minister made him a bow, but fashion was too sacred a thing to meddle with, but he would do himself the honour to mention it to his majesty.

The king smiled and returned word that Dr. Franklin was welcome to appear at court in any dress he pleased. In spite of that respect for strangers for which the French are so remarkable, the courtiers could not help staring at first at Dr. Franklin's [illegible] dress, and especially his yarn stockings." But it soon appeared he had been introduced upon this theatre to demonstrate that great [illegible] true beauty, "needs not the aid of [illegible]" The court were so dazzled with the [illegible] of his mind, that they never looked at his stockings. And while many other ministers who figured in all the gaudy fashions of the day are now forgotten, the name of Franklin is still mentioned in Paris with all the ardour of the most affectionate enthusiasm.—[Phil. pa.

Russian Marriage Ceremony.

From Dr. Granville's work on Russia.—Just published.

"Ivan Ivanovitch and Prascovia Constaxtinovna Ivanoff humbly request the favour of your attendance to the marriage ceremony of their daughter Anna Ivanowna with Nicholai Demetrivich Borissow, and to the dinner table, this November 13th day, in the year 1827, at two o'clock in the afternoon."

On the embossed border of the card, delicately edged with rose colour, the emblematic figure of Hymen was represented on the one side standing under a palm tree, between the sleeping dogs of fidelity, and inviting from the other side the figures of the bride and bridegroom. I learned that the parties were wealthy Russian hemp commission agents, and most excellent people; and as such an invitation promised to afford me an opportunity of witnessing the church marriage ceremony, of which I had read so many dissimilar accounts, I gladly accepted it.

At two the friends of the parties assembled from all quarters in the winter church of the Annunciation, in the Vassileiostrow, where a great concourse of people had already been collected round the choristers or chapters, who, in the most delightful manner imaginable, and in the fuga style, were singing hymns, mixing with skilful combination the sopranos and bass voices.

The officiating priest, decked in his rich church vestments, accompanied by the deacon advanced from the sanctuary towards the door of entrance into the church, and there received the pair about to be made happy, to whom he delivered a lighted taper, making at the same time, the sign of the cross thrice on their foreheads, and conducted them to the upper part of the nave. Incense was scattered before them, while maids, splendidly attired, walked between the paranymphy, or bridegroom and bride. The Greek church requires not the presence of either of the parents of the bride on such an occasion. Is it to spare them the pain of voluntarily surrendering their child to one who is a stranger to her blood? I stood by the side of the table on which were deposited the rings, and before which the priest halted at the conclusion of a litany, wherein the choristers assisted, and from which he pronounced, in a loud and impressive voice, the following prayer, his face being turned towards the sanctuary, and the bride and bridegroom placed immediately behind him, holding their lighted tapers—

"O Eternal God,—thou who didst collect together the scattered atoms by wonderous union, and didst join them by an indissoluble tie, who didst bless Isaac and Rebecca, and made them heirs of thy promise; give thy blessings unto these thy servants, and guide them in every good work: For thou art the merciful God, the lover of mankind, and to thee we offer up our praise now and forever, even unto ages of ages."

The priest next turning round to the couple, blessed them, and taking the rings from the table, gave one to each, beginning with the man, and proclaimed aloud that they stood betrothed, "now and forever, even unto ages of ages," which declaration he repeated thrice to them, while they mutually exchanged the rings an equal number of times. The rings were now again surrendered to the priest, who crossed the forehead of the couple with them, and put them on the fore-finger of the right hand of each; and turning to the sanctuary, read another impressive part of the service, in which an allusion is made to all the circumstances in the Holy Testament, where a ring is mentioned as the pledge of union, honour and power; and prayed the Lord "to bless the espousals of thy servants, Anna Ivanowna and Nicholai Demetrivich, and confirm them in the holy union; for thou in the beginning didst create them male and female, and appoint the woman for help to the man, and for the succession of mankind. Go thou, O Lord our God, who hast set forth thy truth upon thine inheritance, and thy promise upon thy servants our fathers, whom thou hast chosen from generation to generation, upon this servant, and this thine handmaid, and establish the espousals made between them and fidelity and unity, in truth and love, and let thine angel go before them to guide them all the days of their life."

The priest now taking hold of the hands of both parties, led them forward, and caused them to stand on a silken carpet, which lay spread before them. The congregation usually watch this movement with intense curiosity, for it is argued that the party which steps first on the rich brocade will have the mastery over the other through life. In the present case our bride secured possession of this prospective privilege with modest forwardness. Two silver Imperial crowns were next produced by a layman, which the priest took, and first blessing the bridegroom, placed one of them on his head, while the other, destined for the bride was merely held over her head by a friend lest its admirable structure, raised by Charles, the most fashionable perruquier of the capital, employed on this occasion, should be disturbed. That famed artist had successfully blended the spotless flower, emblematic of innocence, with the rich tresses of the bride, which were further embellished by a splendid tiara of large diamonds. Her white satin robe, from the hands of Mademoiselle Louise, gracefully pencilling the contours of her bust, was gathered around her waist by a zone, studded with precious stones, which fastened to her side a bouquet of white flowers.

The common cup being now brought to the priest, he blessed it, and gave it to the bridegroom, who took a sip from its contents thrice, and transferred it to her who was to be his mate, for a repetition of the same ceremony. After a short pause, and some prayers from the responser, in which the choristers joined with musical notes, the priest took the bride and bridegroom by the hand, their friends holding their crowns, and walked with them round the desk thrice, having both their right hands fast in his, from West to East saying—

"Exult, O Isaiah! for a virgin has conceived and brought forth a son, Emmanuel, God and man; the East is his name, Him do we magnify, and call the Virgin [illegible]"

Then taking off the bridegroom's crown he said—

"Be thou magnified, O bridegroom, as Abraham! Be thou blessed as Isaac, and multiplied as Jacob, walking in peace, and performing the commandment of God in righteousness."

In removing the bride's crown, he exclaimed—

"And be thou magnified, O bride, as Sarah! Be thou joyful as Rebecca, and multiplied as Rachel; delighting in thine own husband and observing the bounds of the law, according to the good pleasure of God."

The ceremony now drew, to its conclusion, the tapers were extinguished, and taken from the bride and bridegroom, who walking towards the holy screen, were dismissed by the priest, received the congratulations of the company, and saluted each other.

CHANGE OF THE DAY.

We have in this Metropolis (Washington.) persons whose opinions of public men and things, vary with every political breeze.—That such should be the case in a city where so many are nourished on treasury pap, and the right of suffrage does not exist, is not to be wondered at; but the extent to which it is carried, is at times most ludicrous. Three years ago there were many in office, spoke with the utmost division of Gen. Jackson and his pretensions — they would not rest in the same city, nor breathe same air, much less remain in office under his control and direction. As the coming of the virtuous old hero is brightening into certainty, these same folks (when they meet a known friend to the cause of Jackson and Reform) will give a most touching and impressive grasp of the hand and whisper in the softest strain—"we've got them—we shall win the day!!!" There are others again, who have been known to be busy in slandering him and circulating the basest calumnies against his reputation, that now "take no part in politics," hoping "that if he is elected it will be for the good of the common country," &c. Some there are whose judgment induces them to believe that Gen. Jackson will be chosen, that are kept in a perpetual agitation and alarm by the bulletins issued from the venal presses of this city, for the purpose of inspiriting their friends with hope. They know not what to do, and present the picture of the Bats in the Fable that were alternately birds and beasts as the chance of victory seemed to determine.—There is another class again, which works sub umbra—men that have been active in preparing spurious documents, like the fabricators of false coin, by the midnight taper, who will meet you with the most lugubrious face, and tell of the "coolness and heardlessness of politics," defy scrutiny into their conduct, and such stuff, as if the meanness of their motives was not known to the friends of the old hero.—These are the men who will be the first to doff their hats, press themselves upon his notice, and pray to be received into the sunshine of presidential favour; they ought therefore to understand in time, that all their machinations, supposed to be secret, are pretty well understood.

U. S. Tel.

TRUSTEE'S SALE.

In Chancery in Somerset County Court.

JOHN P. GALE
vs.
George Twilley and Maria his wife, administrators of William Twilley, Samuel James Twilley and Anne Maria Twilley, children and heirs at law of William Twilley.

BY virtue of a decree of Somerset county court in this cause, the undersigned will offer at PUBLIC SALE, to the highest and best bidder, in the town of Quantico, in Somerset county, Maryland, at the house of John S. Hill, esq. on FRIDAY the 26th day of December, 1828, certain Lands and Real Estate, whereof the said William Twilley died siezed, being certain lands situated at Quantico, which the said William purchased of John P. Gale, the complainant, called and known by the name of Wrington, containing 90 acres, more or less; also 12 acres called Wrington: also 15 acres, lying chiefly in Quantico branch, which formerly belonged to a certain Elizabeth McGimmis, together with the mills generally known as Quantico Mills.

The terms of sale will be a credit of 12 months for the one half of the purchase money, and eighteen months for the residue, the purchaser or purchasers giving bond or bonds with approved security, bearing interest from the day of sale. Upon the ratification of the sale by the court, and the payment of the purchase money to the Trustee, the Trustee is directed by the said decree to execute to the purchaser or purchasers, his, her or their heirs, a Deed for the property to him, her or them sold, conveying the title of the complainant and defendants in the premises. The sale will commence at one o'clock P. M.

Notice is hereby given

To the creditors of the said WILLIAM TWILLEY, late of the said county deceased, that they must bring in their claims against the said William, with the vouchers thereof, and lodge the same with the Clerk of Somerset county court within six months from the day of sale.

GEORGE TWILLEY, Trustee

Quantico, Nov 24, 1828. 6t

SHERIFF'S SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed two at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'rs of Thomas Byrd against Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and one other at the suit Hannah Hearn, exx. of Wm. Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by Benjamin Dishoroon to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by L. D. Collins; also a house and lot occupied by Amelia Nicholson; also one other occupied by William S. Dishoroon; also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esquire's Mills, it being the office of the said Elijah; also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which said land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson & Levi Cathell, of a certain Ab[illegible] Phillips; also a clock and case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the [illegible] of James L. Waller, Esq in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 22d of November next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the above writs.

JOSHUA [illegible], Shff.

Oc 23 [illegible]

☞The above sale is postponed to Saturday the 6th of next December, at the hour and place above mentioned.

Nov 25 [illegible]

BILL IN EQUITY.

In Somerset County Court at MAY TERM, 1828.

William Collins, [illegible] of Stephen Coll[illegible]
vs.
Daniel Dykes, [illegible] of Stephen Dykes.

Notice.

IS hereby given, that in pursuance of a decree of Somerset county court in the above cause, I will sell on TUESDAY the 2[illegible] NOVEMBER, [illegible] to the highest and best bidder, on the premises, [illegible] of Stephen Dykes deceased, for the payment of his debts. The terms of sale are a credit of 12 months from the day of sale—the purchaser or purchasers to give bond or bonds to the trustee, for the payment thereof, with security to be by him approved, bearing interest from the day of sale. Upon the payment of the purchase money with interest, and not before, I will in pursuance of the said decree execute a deed or deeds to the purchaser or purchasers conveying all the right and title of the said Stephen Dykes, to the said real estate.

I hereby notify the Creditors of the said

STEPHEN DYKES,

To file with the Clerk of Somerset county court their claims against his estate, with the vouchers thereof within six months from the day of sale above said.

DANIEL DYKES, Tr.

Nov [illegible] 1828

For Rent.

For the ensuing year [illegible] in the town of [illegible] at present occupied by Edward [illegible] Blake. For terms apply to,

MARCELLUS JONES

Sept. 9, 1828.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks,

PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms,
At the Office of the Village Herald.

The Ladies' Literary Port Folio.

PHILADELPHIA.

THE Editor will be assisted in the Department of Reviews, Miscellany and Poetry, by "W. G. C." and in the Ladies Department by Mrs. Harriet Muzzy.

With the 5th number will appear a copperplate Engraving comprising in a single group, portraits of Shakspeare, Byron, Scott and Campbell, which will be followed by portraits of American Authors in a similar style. These engravings, executed expressly for this work will alone be worth the amount of subscription.

The Ladies Department will be constantly enriched with choice selections from the writings of Mrs. Hemans, Miss Edgeworth, Miss L. E. Landon, and other foreign writers, and also from the best productions of Mrs. Sedgwick, Mrs. Sigourney, Miss Winchester, Mrs. Dumont, Mrs. Eliza Murden, and others of our own country women whose talents have shed a lustre upon their sex and country, in order that every lady who receives the Port Folio, may be certain of possessing in an elegant volume, specimens of the best productions of the most eminent writers of her sex. It is also designed to impart a superior interest, and value to the work, by the addition of portraits of such of the above writers as can be procured.

We shall also receive the [illegible] correspondence of N. P. Willis, Esq. ("Roy,") Robert [illegible] Smith and W[illegible] Esqrs. [illegible] others of successful [illegible] Dana [illegible] the editor of the Album with the [illegible] of his former [illegible] but excellent writers, who have [illegible] the pages of all of our best literary journals.

The Editor who has had much experience in conducting a literary paper, hopes to concentrate in his new work, the powerful talents of many of the most distinguished writers in this country, whom he considers it an honour to be associated with, and a pride to have enlisted in his cause. The arrangement of the sheet may be [illegible] from the following

SYNOPSIS.

Literary and Scientific.—Notices, Reviews or Criticisms, of all new books and publications, especially such as issue from the American Press. Motto—Freedom of opinion, expressed with frankness and impartiality.

The Ladies' Department.—As illustrated by the following sentiments from the London Literary Gazette. "Where [illegible] most pure, [illegible] of children, the most precious [illegible] life and [illegible] to woman's [illegible] to by the [illegible] world."

Essays.—On such [illegible] subjects as may tend to strengthen the understanding and enrich the mind.

Tales.—The [illegible] of genius, portraying the [illegible] of real life, or fiction; [illegible] lessons of warning [illegible] with the classic and simple beauties of literature. We flatter ourselves that our work in this department will not be exceeded by any other.

Poetry.—"Which," says a genuine poet, "has no alliance with our best affections; which lifts the mind into a purer element and [illegible] more profound exalted and generous emotions."

Miscellanies.—The Drama, with criticisms; The Toilet, and its ornaments of taste and fashion; with such intelligence, Amusing Sketches, Anecdotes, and effusions of wit and humour [illegible] will impart variety, and furnish out an agreeable Miscellany.

Embellishments.—Though superior copperplate engravings, expressly for this work of interesting subjects, picturesque scenery, or portraits of distinguished individuals, shall occasionally appear, with pieces of popular music, &c. it is nevertheless determined to make the success of the work dependant on its moral and literary excellence alone.

Conclusion.—In short, no pains or expense shall be spared [illegible] in calling forth and rewarding native talent; in [illegible] it faithfully [illegible] to virtuous and worthy purposes, as well as in the superior elegance of the work [illegible] to render it an acceptable present to a pure mind, as well as an acquisition to American Literature. When it fails in either particular, the proprietors pledge themselves to relinquish its publication.

Terms—The Ladies Literary Port Folio is published every other week at $2 per Annum in advance. The great expense attending this publication renders it necessary in all cases [illegible] the amount of subscription.

[illegible]

[illegible] Library, the Athenæum, Arcade Reading Room, and the Art [illegible] Repository, Stationers [illegible] No. [illegible] Chestnut Street, and at the Merchants Coffee House.

Address, post paid,

THOMAS C. CLARKE, Philadelphia.

☞Subscriptions to the Ladies' Port Folio will be thankfully received at the office of the Village Herald, where the first number may be seen.

E. T. J. WOODWARD.

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street.

BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Candy, Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, [illegible] Herrings [illegible] together with every other article in his line.

Also,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware

And a general assortment of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms

May 13, 1828. wm

THE CORNUCOPIÆ.

"Blending the useful with the sweet."

POETRY.

The world is full of poetry—the air
Is living with its spirit, and the waves
Dance to the music of its melodies,
And sparkle in its brightness. Earth is rife
With marvels; and the beauty and the wealth
That close the universe with crystal bar
Are eloquent with voices, in a proclaim
The unseen glories of immensity,
In harmonies too perfect and too high
For aught but beings of celestial mould,
And speak to man in one eternal hymn,
Unfading beauty, and unyielding power.
PRACTICAL.

GOD.

When Night, with wings of starry gloom,
O'ershadows all the earth and skies,
Like some dark, beauteous bird, whose plume
Is sparkling with unnumbered eyes—
That sacred gloom those fires divine,
So grand, so countless, Lord! are Thine.

When youthful Spring around us breathes,
Thy Spirit warms her fragrant sight,
And every flower the Summer wreathes
Is born beneath that kindling eye.
Where'er we turn, thy glories shine,
And all things fair and bright are Thine!

STANZAS.

The sun, the moon, the stars of night
That haunt the dizzy sky,
Shall leave their mode of minstrel-light,
And all their worlds shall die.

There is a melancholy doom,
That hovers round the heart,
And bids each maze of vermil bloom,
In winter weeds—depart.

It plucks the husband from the wife,
The children from the sire,
The lover from rel-stilling,
The poet from the lyre.

But there are realms beyond our view,
Of earth, and air and main,
Where roses and their hubor dew,
And love, and truth, and pain,
Shall still be sought, and valued, and blest,
By renovating powers
Where all that's beautiful shall rest,
In heaven's eternal bowers.

FROM THE BACHELOR'S JOURNAL.

The Strange Combat.

It was during the last war of this country with Great Britain, that circumstances led me to be a passenger on board of one of our large merchantmen, in which I had embarked what little property I possessed. Our sea were, at that time, covered with small privateers belonging to both belligerents, who did more mischief to the commerce of both nations, than the several public armed vessels of either. They almost invariably eluded the pursuit of the large frigates and ships of the line, by hauling on the wind, when they discovered an enemy; and their schooner-rigs, and being built expressly for sailing, would give them a distinct advantage over their square sailed enemies, in beating to windward. Again, their lighter draught of water, when near the shore, would frequently enable them to run so close in, that they could not be attacked unless in boats, and every one who has ever read the account of that attack upon the privateer Neufchatel, by the boats of the Endymion (I believe,) which engagement happened near Nantucket will easily see what little force it requires to beat off boats or sink them, previous to boarding—Be these things as they may, I return to my story. We had been sailing for two days with a good breeze, though now and then we s agged heavily along thro' a fog, almost as dense as the wakes which bore us.

We were not far from our port, and our captain was willing to crowd sail night and day, as the risk of capture was superior to that of shipwreck or disaster from a cripling of our spars. Our ship was kept smartly, heavily laden, and not a swift sailer. Her captain was a man of shrewd judgment, of inflexibility of purpose, and rather inclined to obstinacy. He was of a slight figure, gentlemanly to his equals, decided and prompt to those under him in his orders and in execution of their following. His keen dark eyes and naval officer [illegible] kind of courage, which one would call daring, if they had watched his countenance on particular occasions. Yet, at other times, he seemed rather the careful mariner who would reef for safety, when safety did not appear really requisite. He was one of that kind of men who seemed to be inclined to lend the purposes of others to his own, while they were kept in ignorance of his views. I have seen him fix his eagle eye upon a sailor, and require of him to look him steadily in the face for five minutes, and then address him without a comment or a reason for so doing, but I would bet my life almost that he had one.

After skimming through the mist for two days, (of which I have spoken) I happened to be on the deck with Captain —— I was in conversation with him, as to the probability of reaching our port free from the enemy's cruisers. He replied with his usual brevity, "the fog and carrying sail alone will save us; I am a made man if we escape, if not I am ruined." He said this in the same tone of voice that he would have a common order, he looked up and said sternly, "there is a fog eater." At this moment, the sun seemed to dash upon our deck, and the fog rose, from the sea, like the hoisting of a curtain at the theatre—a smart breeze took us back, and before an order was given, we saw directly under our lee, a little black looking sharp built, tall rigged, port bearing schooner, whose decks were crowded with men. "I know her," ejaculated our Captain; the next thing, there came a ball, dashing across our bows in imitation of a distracted porpoise. Our captain took the helm from a sailor; and gave orders to lay to. Another shot came within a few feet of the captain's breast, and passed through the main sail, which he seemed to regard as little as he would the flapping wing of a sea gull. But his countenance grew terrific—he had not a gun on board. The privateer braced sharp on the wind, and at the second tack came within musket shot, a boat came on board and was ordered under the pilgrim's lee, in the style of an admiral in the British Navy. In the mean time, the wind had freshened, and the captain gave orders to have every sail in readiness for instant setting. The boat left us, and we bore down, apparently for the purpose of fulfilling the order which had been given us. To secure and mark my papers was but the work of a moment, for an anticipation of capture had placed me on my guard in this particular.

When I returned on deck, we were almost within hail of the stranger under a flowing sail; which, in order to bring us to a proper hull under the lee of the privateer, would seemingly require to be immediately taken in. The captain was still at the helm, and he was intent apparently upon coming as near the stern of the opposite vessel as was possible, though at times he seemed to grasp the whole of the little privateer at a glance; his brow seemed to be swollen—he heeded nothing around him. At this moment he gave the word "square away," which brought our bows on the centre of the vessel of our enemy, full; said its captain, at the same moment, the flash of a gun and its ball were both seen and heard from the port holes of our antagonist—it raked us fore and aft, cutting every thing before it; another moment, the bow of our heavy vessel struck the quarter of the privateer with a tremendous crash; another moment she pass ed over her, and nothing was to be seen of our capture but a few floating barrels, some spars and human beings who had escaped for a few moments the gaining deep. Never shall I forget the cry which came from the vessel as our sun passed over it; it was addressed to nothing human; it was of such shrill distress, that a mariner's imagination alone could grasp its depth and tone. Our vessel was immediately laid to, and our boat was out to pick up such as survived. Our captain gave the helm to the mate, and went to the boats to ascertain our own damage, which was found not to be excessively severe; though our bowsprit, figure head and cut water were carried away and a leak was sprung, but yet not such a one as would be of serious inconvenience. Among those who were so strangely precipitated into the caverns of the sea, one alone was found alive, who had risen to its surface. It was the captain; he was the commander of the privateer, of six guns and fifty men, in the British employ. When taken up, he was insensible, and remained so for a long period; after a while, when he found himself in a strange vessel, all seemed to be as a dream to him.

On a recovery from his trance, and when the facts flowed like a dark flood upon his memory, he seemed to recollect the consequences of his adventure with our clumsy merchantman. He stated that he was leaning upon the taffrel, when our vessel struck his privateer, and that when he ordered that gun to be fired, as we came suspiciously near, it was his first intimation of our commander. Still, he declared it to have been a dastardly act, that previous to our understanding whether he was a friend or foe, and when from the hull of our platform he was enabled to obey his order, he might have present of there was no treachery intended him; for us, without moving, without even a hint of resistance, to bear directly upon his smaller craft, and by the weight of our ship, and not by the bravery of our sailors, to sink as fine a crew as ever manned a privateer's deck; to send, not in open contest, but by assassin and sniper like guile, to the mercy of the deep and of God, so many unprepared souls, was an act unworthy of a mortal. He even regretted that he was left alone to mourn over them. He insisted that their ghosts would come in numbers in sleep, and he prayed that the thunder of eternal vengeance might rest the head of its infernal projector. He described the terrific shrieks of those who went down with him—the swirls in the ripples of the drowning—the cruise that laid upon his favourite vessel's side, even below her water mark—and yelled out anathemas upon its heartless author.

Our captain had been standing a little distance from the birth of his foe, but now walked up, and placed his been dark eye upon him, and asked, "Do you not know me?" He replied, "I must have seen you before. I know not where." There was one of those pauses like lulls in a gale at sea. "Your privateer was stationed at Gibraltar, by the name of —— in February 1812 was it not?" A groan succeeded, from the shaking auditor. "I know you and your vessel then—you spoke wrongfully of my sister—Henry struck you, and you stabbed him with your dirk—he recovered and he challenged you—you fought and killed him—I was on the battle ground—you afterwards and there, exultingly repeated your charge when he was a corpse—I then challenged you, and you sneaked off to your ship, and did not meet me—I knew your vessel, for its form was graven on my brain—I have rewarded your treachery, and when we reach our port, and you cease to be my guest, I will give you an opportunity of righting yourself from this charge, viz: you were an American, fostered by our family, have turned traitor to your country, assessed a female who rejected your suit, are a murderer of her brother, a villian whose only absence from meanness is a passing show of courage. The first thing you have to do, sir, when we land, is to meet me in what is termed an honorable way, and that we shall be free from the interference of our sons. This cabin is yours, and the steward will do your biddings until then."

We sailed on heavily without falling in with another vessel for some days—The moon came up one night in remarkable splendour, and as I was leaning over the bulwarks, I saw the captain of the privateer coming from the gangway, and as the moonbeam fell on his countenance, I observed it was particularly wild and sad. I endeavoured to engage him in conversation—in reply to some questions, he observed; "I have been a black hearted villian." Sharks were playing around us, as if revelling in the food of the lower ray. I passed from him to our captain, who seemed lost in deep and bitter contemplation—the very sound of my voice seemed to startle him—before I had uttered a sentence, we heard a splash in the water, and saw distinctly our former foe on the sea—he raised his hand, as if bidding us farewell, when a shark of uncommon size turned on his back, and with one sweep of his enormous jaws, divided in two distinct parts, the unhappy sufferer. A tinge of red on the waters, as our ship glided past, was all that was seen of the last commander, and thus perished the sole survivor of one of those pests of the ocean called privateers.—In a few days we reached our port, but since our arrival, and even to the present hour, I cannot forget the going down of the privateer, over which our vessel bounced as if but a floating piece of timber was in its path. That deep shriek will visit me in dreams, and scare sleep from the "still watches of the night."

ICHABOD.

The Jewish Talmud.

This is a collection of traditions which have been orally preserved, though the Jews believe them to be of divine origin. It comprises the body of the Hebrew law, and consists of expositions of the duties imposed on the nation, in Scripture, or by the authority of the Rabbis, the polity, doctrines and ceremonies of the Jews in their public worship and domestic intercourse with each other. There are two Talmuds; that of Jerusalem, and the Babylonian. The former is least esteemed. The Jews venerate the latter so highly, that they compare it to wine, while the Old Testament is likened to water. Israel tells us that of the twelve hours of which the day is composed, God employs nine to study the Talmud, and only three to read the written law. Our fair readers will not entertain the most exalted opinion of the Talmud, when they are told that, according to one of its orders, a man may claim a divorce from his wife if she suffers her husband's soup to be burnt! Hence it may be inferred that among the Jews, a thorough knowledge of kitchen affairs was esteemed a necessary item in female education. Another of its regulations we cannot but notice as salutary: Where there is an estate, it says, the sons inherit and the daughters must be maintained; but if there is not enough for all, the daughters shall be maintained, and the sons must get a living as they can.

Some of the Rabbinical stories in the Talmud are exceedingly ludicrous. Take, for instance the following: "A Rabbin once was in a desert a flock of geese, so fat that their feathers fell off, and the rivers flowed in fat. Then said I to them, Shall we have a part of you in the other world, when the Messiah shall come? And one of them lifted up a wing, & another a leg, to signify these parts should we have. We should other times have had all parts of these geese; but we Israelites shall be called to an account touching these fat geese, because their sufferings are owing to us. It is our iniquities that have delayed the coming of the Messiah, and these geese suffer greatly by reason of their excessive fat, which daily and daily increases, and will increase till the Messiah comes."

The birds that are occasionally mentioned, go a little beyond even the Rock of the Arabian Nights. One of them spreading his wings, blots out the sun. An egg from another fell out of the nest, and the white thereof broke, and glued together about three hundred cedar trees and overflowed a village. A feathery monster stands up to the lower joint of the leg in a river, and some mariners imagining the water to be shallow, are hastening to bathe, when a voice exclaims, "stop not in there, seven years ago a carpenter dropped there his axe, and it hath not yet reached the bottom."

There is a queer tale about Abraham, the patriarch, who is represented as another Othello for jealousy. He built a city, an enchanted city, for his wives. The walls were of iron and so high and so dark that the sun could not be seen from the inside. He gave the women a bowl of pearls and precious stones, to shed light through their prison—This was the manner in which Noah received his light, during his passage in the ark. Abraham went into Egypt, and the custom house officers exacted duties upon a great chest which he had with him. He declared there not to open the lid, but consented to pay the excise upon clothes. His ready acquiescence induced them to think it might be gold. He agrees to pay for gold, and they think then that it must be silk. Abraham was willing to pay for silk, or even for pearls. They then insisted upon opening the chest, when lo! it was Sarah herself! The jealous husband to conceal her beauty, had locked her up in a box, and lugged her with him along at the back of a camel.

(Boston Statesman.

ANECDOTE OF CURRAN.

One morning, at an inn in the south part of Ireland, a gentleman, travelling upon uncomfortable business, came running down a flight of stairs a few minutes before the appearance of the stage coach, in which he had taken a seat for Dublin. Seeing an ugly little fellow leaning against the door post, with a dirty face and shabby clothes, he hailed him to brush his coat. The operation proceeded rather slowly, the impatient traveller cursed the lazy rascal, for an idle, good for nothing dog, and threatened him with corporeal punishment on the spot, if he did not make haste and do his job well before the arrival of the coach. Terror seemed to produce its effect; the fellow brushed the coat and then the trousers with great diligence, and was rewarded with a six-pence which he received with a low bow. The gentleman went into the inn and paid his bill just as the vehicle had reached the door. Upon getting inside, guess his astonishment to find his friend, the quondam waiter, seated snugly in one corner, with all the look of a person well used to comfort. After two or three hurried glances, to be sure that his eyes did not deceive him, he commenced a confused apology for his blunder, condemning his own rashness and stupidity, but he was specially interrupted by the other exclaiming—"Oh, never mind, make no apologies—these are hard times, and it is well to earn a trifle in an honest way! I am much obliged for your handsome fee for so small—pray my name is John Philpot Curran, pray what is yours?" The other was thunderstruck, by the idea of such an introduction to the most celebrated man of his day, but the irresistible wit and drollery of Curran soon put some his confusion, and the traveller never rejoiced less at the termination of a long journey than when he beheld the distant spires of Dublin glittering in the light of a setting sun. This deserves to be recorded among the many comical adventures into which Curran was led by his total inattention to personal appearance.

A FLAME.

Rudious wrote a letter to his love,
And fill'd it full of fond and warm desire;
He hoped to raise a flame—and so he did,
The lady put his nonsense to the fire.

Hurry and cunning are the two apprentices of despatch and skill, but neither of them ever learn their master's trade.

Peaks of Mountains

And Elevations in N. and S. America in round numbers.

In North America.	Feet
White Mountains, N. H	6000
Green Mountain Peak, Vt.	4000
Wachusett, Mass.	3000
Catskill, N. Y.	3000
Otter Peak, Va.	4000
Mt. St. Elias, N. W. Coast	18000
Cordillera, Mexico	17000
In S. America, in the Repub. of Col.
City of Mexico	7000
Chimborazo	20000
Cotopaxi	18000
Colopaxi	17000
City of Quito	9500
Bogota the Capital	8000

Large Rivers of S. America.

Rivers.	Length	Course	From where discharged	Inhabited Country
Oranoco	1600	E.	Venezuela	Atlantic
Paquibo	800	N.	Guiana	do
Amazon	4000	E	Brazil	do
La Plata	2000	S.E.	Buenos Ayres	do

Note There are a few large rivers running into Hudson's Bay, not particularized in the following table. The length of the St. Lawrence is given as below from Lake Ontario to the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Large Rivers of N. America.

Rivers.	Length.		Course.	Inhabited Country.
St. Lawrence.	2000	E.		Canada
Connecticut	400	S.		Maine U. States
Hudson	300	S.		New York
Delaware	300	S.		New York
Potomac	400	E.		Pennsylvania
Ohio	1000	E.		Virginia
James	400	E.		Virginia
Savannah	400	E.		S. Carolina
Alabama	400	E.		Georgia
Mobile	400	E.		Alabama
Mississippi	3000	S.		Louisiana
Missouri	3000	E.		Louisiana
Arkansas	1000	E.		Louisiana
Red River	1000	E.		Louisiana
Colorado	1000	S.W.		Mexico
Colorado	1000	S.W.		Mexico
Missouri	1000	E.		U. S. Territory
Colorado	1000	S.W.		Mexico
Colorado	1000	S.W.		California
do	1000	S.E.		do
Missouri	1000	E.		U. S. Territory
Columbia	1000	E.		Pacific
do	1000	S.		do
Mississippi	3000	S.		Mississippi
Mississippi	3000	S.		Mississippi
Mississippi	3000	S.		Mississippi

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, DEC. 2, 1828.

Jackson and Liberty.

Electoral Election News.

The following is the probable vote which each of the Candidates for the Presidency will receive in the Electoral Colleges of the different States in the Union:

States.	Jackson.	Adams.
Pennsylvania	28
Virginia	24
Ohio	16
Kentucky	14
New-York	20	16
Maryland	5	6
Indiana	5
Maine	1	8
Massachusetts		15
New-Hampshire		8
Vermont		7
Connecticut.		8
Rhode-Island		4
New-Jersey		8
Delaware		3
Tennessee	11
North-Carolina	15
South-Carolina	11
Georgia	9
Alabama	5
Mississippi	3
Missouri	3
Illinois	3
Louisiana	5
	178	83
	83
Jackson's majority	95

Thus, it appears, that Adams has not received as many votes at this election as were given him four years ago, and that Jackson's present majority exceeds the entire support of Adams by 12 electoral votes! What a lesson for Usurpers! What a reflection on the hireling editors who told their readers that Adams was the People's candidate—that he was gaining ground ever since he took the Presidential chair—and predicted his election for another term of four years as certain! We recollect a statement made—not by a Tell-Lie, but—by the "Somerset Iris, or Messenger of the Truth," which gave CERTAIN for Adams only 175, doubtful 93, and the rest for Jackson.—This statement, we believe, was hatched by the self styled 'Necromancer,' who boasted that he "spoke in the boldness of truth," and published to the world, under the sacred name of 'TRUTH'—Yes, under the holy name of the DEITY itself was it ushered forth, and hailed with crazy joy by the deluded partisans of its author. Some will have to pay dearly for their credulity; for, believing all the relations of the minions of power, they wagered large sums of money, which the late news will teach them to count as lost—Others, forsaking their calling, made shipwreck of that which good men esteem as more precious than 'filthy lucre.' Their case is truly piteous! May the past and the present teach them all for the future.

In the Boston Courier, an Administration print, we find the following:

"The present administration has very foolishly, and to the injury of its own popularity, patronized foreigners in preference to native citizens. Foreign convicts and renegadoes have been employed as editors, and rioted on 'Treasury pap' for their sycophancy. If the administration are driven from office they may thank themselves for it. They have insulted every American editor by their patronage of a profligate press in Philadelphia, which has done more to injure their own cause, than all the Jackson papers in the Union."

How honest these Adams printers are becoming all on a sudden, to expose the Administration for employing foreign renegadoes! Why did n't they tell it long ago that Binns, Gales, &c. were rioting on 'Treasury pap?' Binns will hardly thank the Courier for the compliment paid him in the above extract, after furnishing the Harris forgery, coffin handbills, &c.—And those who were taught to believe that the Jackson printers libelled the Administration about the "Treasury pap," may now see who were the liars.

Walsh's National Gazette, a paper friendly to the general administration, thus rebukes Gales & Seaton, the editors of the National Intelligencer, in commenting on some of their remarks—

"It is very ingenious and loyal to [illegible] Mr Adams & his original supporters. No panegyric has made Gen. Jackson President—but unlimited abuse, acrimonious slander, of which those who were originally the adversaries of Mr. Adams, have been most prodigal."

Expiring Spasms.

The N. York Commercial Advertiser, anxious to save the Coalition from the defeat that awaits them, has come forward with the following proposition:

"It has been supposed that the votes between Mr. Adams and Mr. Jackson, would be so nearly balanced, that were the vote of either Virginia or Georgia to be cast upon a third candidate, it would again carry the election into the House of Representatives—a result infinitely preferable to the certainty of having the reins of the government placed in the hands of so dangerous and incompetent a man as Jackson. With this view it has been suggested whether Virginia might not be prevailed on to cast the vote of that state upon one of her own exalted sons—CHIEF JUSTICE MARSHALL, with the understanding that the re-election of Mr. Adams being now out of the question, his friends in a body should join Virginia, in this last effort to save the country from disgrace, if not the republic from ruin."

Such a suggestion is as infamous as it is absurd—It is a proposition to the Electors of Virginia to violate their own solemn pledge, and to defeat the expressed will of the People. There is not a man among them who will not scout the suggestion with contempt and indignation! Mene, mene is written on the walls of the Palace! Nothing can save them—no ticket, no contrivance, no management, no intrigue can avert their downfall.

[illegible] Baltimore Marylander has come forward with a proposition, almost as ridiculous and profligate, as that of its colleague in N. York. Going upon the supposition that the Adams party will have a majority of four in the next Senate of the U. S.; this desperate paper says, that "To that body all the nominations of General Jackson must be sent, and we trust the friends of the Administration there will have the moral courage to reject every man who may be named for office, that is known to have taken an active part in elevating General Jackson." He contends, that as the Jackson party affirmed from Mr. Clay and others voting for Mr. Adams, "these circumstances were to be taken as conclusive proofs of the existence of a corrupt bargain between Mr. Adams, & those who support him," so it is "but just and proper that we should mete out to these Simon Pures—these exclusive patriots, the measure of their own prescription. They have, no doubt, been contending for the cause of Gen. Jackson, merely because it is the cause of the people, and not because they wished office: and as they have succeeded, it is but just, that their conduct should like Cæsar's wife, be placed beyond suspicion."

The Washington Nat. Journal heartily concurs in the policy chalked out by the Marylander—and especially calls upon the Senators to set their faces against Mr. Van Buren, and Cambreleng and others, whom public rumor has charged with corrupt intrigues, to promote the election of General Jackson."

A most happy scheme, indeed, to surround Gen. J. with his enemies! If he is not to avail himself of the services of his friends, in whom he reposes his confidence, he must select his secretaries and foreign ministers, from the camp of his enemies. And why should he be debarred from the services of his friends? Can the flimsy sophism impose upon any one? What analogy is there between the cases? Here are one set of men, who voted for Mr. Adams against the votes or wishes of their people—some of them enemies of Mr. Adams, and none of them his friends—several of them overpersuaded by one man; and respecting that man, as has been proved by the declarations of his own friends, it was ascertained that he could not be made Secretary of State, unless Mr. A. was made President. On the other hand, here is another set of men, who went with the wishes of their people—who preferred General Jackson to Mr. Adams for public reasons—and who supported him publicly and openly, without pledges, without any understanding, and on general considerations.—But, it is idle to reason on such a subject—as it is idle to suppose that the Senate of the U. S. will act upon such illiberal, selfish, and party purposes.—R. Enq.

"TEN VOTES in Maryland CERTAIN for ADAMS."

This confident assertion of the Adams presses and the Adams leaders, day after day, re-echoed by the two Nationals at Washington, induced many of the deluded followers of the Administration to wager their money largely. We have no commiseration for the leaders, who lost their money on this, but for the poor men, who were deceived by them, and who have lost their hard earnings, we feel sincerely. They must however, blame the Adams leaders and the Adams presses, whose continued song was "Adams' Election is certain"—"Ten votes in Maryland certain"—"25 in New York secure for Adams"—Ohio and Kentucky as sure for Adams as Massachusetts!"

Bitter and deep were the curses, which the Adams party anticipated we would have showered upon us after the election, and did they pronounce all our statements lies. Out of their own mouths, they stand condemned.—Balt. Rep.

New-York.

The delegation from this state in Congress stands thus;

For Jackson 19 Adams 15

The state legislature is composed as follows—In the House, Jackson 81, Adams 33; Anti-Masonic 13. The Senate stands 22 for Jackson, 7 for Adams, and 3 anti-masonic.

New-York, Nov. 24.

Louisiana Election.—By the ship Kentucky from New Orleans, the Editors of the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser have received papers of that city to the 8th instant, inclusive. The Mercantile Advertiser of the latest date gives the returns of the Election for the President, from the following parishes—

	Jackson 747	Adams 665
Orleans,
St. Bernard	56	89
St. John Baptist	67	131
Jefferson	24	63
Assumption	140	140
Ascension	106	106
St. Charles	37	54
St. Jacques	76	153
Iberville	190	66
West Baton Rouge	72	62
Point Coupee	93	68
East Baton Rouge	247	149
St. Tamany	187	45
	2042	1791

The above parishes are the same as those from which the first accounts were received last summer, after the election of Governor, &c. and which put the friends of Adams into such extacies. There cannot now be a doubt of Jackson's obtaining the vote of Louisiana by a large majority.—Del. Gaz.

The exact majority in favour of the Jackson Electoral Ticket in OHIO is 4,201. The whole vote for the Jackson ticket is 67,597, and that for Adams 63,396.

In 15 counties in GEORGIA the votes are about 8100 for the Troup ticket; 5400 for the Clark ticket, and 597 for the Adams men. Both the former are favourable to Jackson.

In 44 counties in N. CAROLINA, the vote stands for the Jackson ticket 23,559, and for the Adams ticket 9,225. Twenty counties remain to be heard from.

In all the counties in VIRGINIA except 5, the vote stands for Jackson 24,637, and for Adams 10,922. Present maj. 13,715.

In six of the Congressional districts in KENTUCKY, the majority for the Jackson electoral ticket has been ascertained to be about 5,029 votes; and it is estimated in the Frankfort Argus that the majority in the state will be 8,000.—Ib.

From the N. Y. Enquirer of last week.

Next Congress.

In a few days the next session of Congress will commence at Washington. Altho' they are the same men who were turned that body at the last session, yet it will be admitted that they meet under entirely new views—new circumstances—and new feelings and excitements. The events which have taken place in this country, during the last six months are unparalleled in our annals. Many of those individuals who performed a striking part during the last session, now travel back to Washington, under the pressure of a disastrous defeat preceding their entrance, or hanging upon their rear. Is it not probable that much bitterness of feeling will be evinced by these members?—And that an opportunity will be sedulously sought to vent their wrath by thwarting every public measure in their power? How can John Sergeant look around the hall of the House of Representatives, and bless himself inwardly that he is a wiser, better, and more patriotic than his fellow legislators? With what grace can Tristram Burgess rise in the ardour of his eloquence and trumpet forth a thousand and one new generalities about the American system?—Wright, Sloane, and Whipple, who performed the worst work of a bad party—what will they do? Shrunk to their proper dimensions, they may occasionally mar the harmony of the House, by the escape of a little chagrin. It cannot amount to much, however. So far as the friends of Jackson are concerned, they meet in Washington under the happiest auspices. Relieved from the absorbing difficulty of the Presidential question, they will have every inducement to despatch business on proper principles, and to pass no new law, or repeal any old one, on any other than its own intrinsic merits. In this manner will the wisdom of legislation be placed beyond the influence of extraneous questions, so as to ensure a course of conduct alike worthy of the representative body and honourable to the country.

The following languages are spoken in America 11,647,000 speak English; 10,584,000 Spanish; 7,593,000 Indian; 3,740,000 Portuguese; 1,242,000 French, 216,000 Dutch, Danish and Swedish.

From the U. S. Telegraph.

The Nashville Republican is before us, containing a letter from the Hermitage in answer to an address by Messrs. Hall & Fitzgerald, on the subject of Colonel Leslie Combs' late visit to that place. We present our readers with the following extract from Gen. Jackson's letter:

"Col. Combs then proceeded to remark, that he was politically opposed to me; but in his canvass, and in all his public speeches before the people, he had studiously avoided introducing my name improperly or indecorously into them; and that if I should be elected, he would, with great pleasure, support my administration. I replied—Colonel, I have risked much, that every man might possess freedom of speech, of thought and opinion; and where they conducted themselves, in the exercise of those rights, as gentlemen always should do, it never had been, and never would be, cause of the least heart-burning: But, when slander was resorted to, the country ransacked for secret tales and these promulgated to injure the feelings and character of any one, those capable of such conduct, ought to be contemned by all high-minded, honest, and honorable men."

New-York Electoral Law.—We perceive that Mr. James has offered a resolution in the Legislature of New-York, to suspend the rules of the two Houses so far as to allow a bill to be introduced to change the present mode of choosing Electors of President and Vice-President. The object of Mr. James is to submit, by law, again to the people of New-York the question, whether they will continue the District system, or return to the General Ticket system. The people of New-York changed their mode of electing from the General to the District system, in the hope that their example would be followed by the other States, and that thus an uniform system, throughout the States, would be adopted. As their example, however, has not been followed, but several of the States have, on the contrary changed from the district to the general ticket, we presume New York will resume the general ticket.

Baltimore Republican.

The New York Statesman of the 24th ult. says—A letter from Mr. Poinsett, our Minister at Mexico, received by the last packet, states that he was about to return to the United States.

[From the Albany Argus.]

The Club Law Revived.

Mr. S. C. McConnell, a respectable citizen of Geneva, and the editor of the Geneva Phalanx, having published a statement in relation to R. S. Rose, of Seneca county, an Adams anti-masonic candidate for congress—and a busy and meddling agent of the administration—entered the office of the editor on the 29th ult. and after interrogating him in a very abrupt manner as to the authorship of the article, assaulted him suddenly and violently with a large stick, which he had with him for the purpose. Defenceless and unprepared, and not anticipating such violence, the editor was struck down to the floor by repeated blows, before the persons who were near, and who themselves seemed to be appalled by the furiousness of the attack, could interfere in his behalf. He was severely wounded, so as to require immediate medical assistance.

The article, which was written by a correspondent, stated facts which the editor says he can establish in a court of justice, and which Mr. Rose, not being able to deny or refute, has resorted to personal attack and to the law of the club.

This is the order and decency party! The friends of the Coalition! None of your vulgar "tow-shirts" and "common people."

"Order and Decency!"

We learn from the Lexington Gazette, an attempt was made on the 24th ult to assassinate Major Barry, the late Jackson candidate for Governor of Kentucky. A pistol was fired into the room in which he was with his family, and passed a few inches above the head of a gentleman who was standing near the window in conversation with Mrs. B. and had been mistaken for Major Barry. Four panes of glass were broken, but no injury was sustained by any individual. This daring attempt was unquestionably made by a political opponent, and the villian remains undiscovered. From his ability, eloquence, and elevated standing, together with his known republican principles, Major Barry is alike feared and hated by the 'good society' party, and one of their miscreants hoped to dispose of him by assassination. The attempt was made on the day preceding a public dinner given him by the citizens of Cynthiana.—Hartford Times.

The Price of Grain.

The Baltimore Farmer of last [illegible] marks, the price of grain is at a [illegible] will so remain, to be affected [illegible] bly by the next news from England wheat is at about $1 48; best white ing 60 pounds would bring $1 55.

Maple Sugar.

The New York Daily Advertiser [illegible] wards of 300 barrels of Maple Sugar been received by the Canal, which sold at five cents a pound. Last [illegible] understand a parcel of about 70 barrels received. It is supposed the manufacture of this article will increase, and that it will be one of considerable importance supplies of sugar from New Orleans already increased to such an amount they are rapidly taking the place of sugar, and it is supposed by many persons, that in a very few years supplies from New Orleans and elsewhere be sufficient for the consumption, no foreign sugar will be required.

Mr. E. Forrest, of the theatre [illegible] hundred dollars, to the author of the [illegible] gedy, in five acts, the hero, [illegible] character, of which shall be an aboriginal of this country; and in addition to the sum, he will insure one-half the [illegible] the third night, and lend his own [illegible] gratuitously.

We have long known Mr. F. [illegible] see the American character placed [illegible] vourable light upon the stage; and [illegible] the liberality of the offer, will induce unusual exertion among the dramatic [illegible] ters.—Philadelphia U. S. Gaz.

Singular Fact.

The Georgia Messenger, in noticing the recent murder of a Mr. Early in Tennessee, by Isaac B. Desha, says, it is supposed that [illegible] ly was the son of Governor Early, of Georgia, the same who about two years ago murdered an individual in that state, made his escape, and the fact of his [illegible] is the first that has since been heard of [illegible]. It is singular that both Desha and [illegible] should have been the sons of men filling the highest office in their respective States; that both should have committed murder; that both should have eluded justice; that, meeting afterwards in a distant comparatively unsettled country, one should fall by the hands of the other. It is a [illegible] fulfilment of that passage of the Bible which declares, that "whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." There is something, too, like retribution in one murderer's becoming the victim of another. It is "even-handed justice, returning the poisoned chalice" to the lips of one who had self administered it to his fellow-being.

Lynchburg Virginian.

William H. Crawford has been elected Judge of the Superior Court, for the Northern District of Georgia, without opposition.

An exotic, called the air plant, has been brought to perfection in Europe. It is suspended from the ceiling, and derives its nourishment entirely from the atmosphere.

Wine is raised in Columbia county, Georgia, which has been taken for Madeira. Even good judges of the beverage were mistaken as to the place of its nativity.

French Steam Vessels of War.—Two steam vessels, of 600 tons each, have been built at Rouen; they are to mount heavy cannonades, and are expected to be very effective.

The fellow who stole the horse from Mr. Smith, of Tarrytown, N. Y. changed him for another in New Jersey, and went to [illegible] a reward from Mr. S. for telling him where his horse could be found, has been convicted at West Chester, N. Y. and sentenced to [illegible] years imprisonment.

A very naive piece of advice was given the other day by a Virginia paper, to temperance societies. "Gentlemen," said the editor, "you may get up societies, pass resolutions, institute branches, and still can't succeed. Go and cultivate the vine, and that will make the nation as temperate as the French people are. Native wine," said he, "would promote public morality."

The Mayor of Washington is quite in a rejoicing mood. So he says. At what? Because the Adams ticket was beaten in Pennsylvania by no more than fifty thousand majority. This reminds us of the sailor who fell from the mast head and broke his [illegible] "Thank God," said Jack, "it was not [illegible] neck." The Mayor is your true philosopher.

Noah.

ANECDOTE.

A person called upon a comb maker who was then at work, to let him know he was drawn for the militia; "I don't care," answered the comb maker, "I am too young for service." "Too young and about thirty! What do you mean?" "No matter for that," rejoined the comb maker, "I can swear that I am now cutting my teeth."

From the Albany Argus.

Mr. Adams and the Federalists.

The extraordinary disclosures of Mr. Adams, relative to the designs of the leading Federalists, have not excited as much of the public attention as they will do hereafter.—The minds of men have been engrossed by the immediate questions connected with a most important election. In the midst of a great struggle, they have not suffered themselves to reflect much upon a grave charge against a numerous body of our fellow citizens,—a charge which under the sanction of the present President of this country, must become a part of our national history. But after this contest shall have passed by, and as soon as the certainty of the result shall render the events of the election less exciting, this charge will become a topic, highly engrossing in itself, and extremely interesting from the nature of the disclosures to which it can scarcely fail to lead. It is daily becoming so; and we are mistaken if it does not call out much acrimony between the author of the charge and the parties implicated, and as much hostility between Mr. Adams and the federalists, for the future, as there has been courtship on the one hand and zealous support on the other, for the past.

In this matter, the federalists occupy a singular position. It is certainly not an enviable one. They stand charged, so far as their leading friends are in the question, of treasonable designs against their country—of an intention to subvert the union, and to effect that object by calling in the aid of a foreign, and at that time a hostile and a belligerent, power. And under this charge, they have yielded a most active and partisan support to the author of it! Can they blame the world for a belief of this charge, when they have thus certified to the integrity of its author? Can they persuade an intelligent community that they have advocated and electioneered for the elevation of the author of a false and unjust accusation, greatly affecting their own political reputation? It is impossible. If the charge is credited—if it becomes a matter of history—none have contributed so much to that result as themselves. We speak of the great mass of the federal party, in their recent warm and even violent support of Mr. Adams. We know that there are honourable exceptions. We know that there are a few, who, disclaiming the charge, and disdaining to contribute to the elevation of a man whose political career and probable course they could not approve, have yielded a willing and sincere support to the republican candidate. But, we repeat, the mass of that party be the support of Mr. Adams after he had distinctly arraigned them before the public as traitors, have contributed to spread a belief of the allegation: a belief that will not be much diminished by a show of sensitiveness and hostility after it is ascertained that Mr. A. cannot be re-elected.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

(An Adams paper.)

Mr. Adams' charges against the Federal party.

We believe it is a fact sufficiently known, to authorize our mentioning it, that some of the gentlemen whose situation was such at the period alluded to by Mr. Adams, in his late publication, as to designate them as among the persons included in his charges of treasonable intentions, have determined to call on him, for some more specific statement of the charges—of the individuals implicated—and of the evidence in support of them. They will not demand such evidence as would be required in a court of law, to prove the charges, for he admits, that he was in possession of no such proof, but such evidence as will be sufficient to command belief, in the mind of any fair and honourable man. That he is bound by his regard for his own reputation, to produce such proof, we believe is the universal sentiment of his friends, as well as opponents, and they will be glad to learn that he will give the opportunity of answering a formal demand for it.

The Boston Courier, also an Adams paper, in noticing the remarks of the Daily Advertiser, touching Mr. Adams's late charge against the federal party, observes—"We had before heard that the movement there alluded to was in contemplation, but were not sufficiently informed of the shape which was likely to take to authorize a public notice of it. If any thing is to be done we hope it will be done quickly and in a manner that shall make the Presidency feel, it an iceberg or a mountain of adamant can be supposed to be endowed with sensations — we can perceive no reason why the chief magistrate of the nation should be allowed to libel the most respectable of his fellow-citizens with impunity, when an obscure editor cannot tell the truth of a villain without danger of the state prison."

From the N. York Evening Post.

We meet daily in the eastern papers which [illegible] hitherto supported the cause of Mr. Adams expressions of the bitterest contempt for his political morals. We should have been better satisfied had these opinions been made public at an earlier period. The proof, and that of the amplest nature, that Mr. Adams when he abandoned the federal party calumniated it most grossly to the leaders of the party he espoused, has been long, very long, before the public, although it is but lately that Mr. Adams has admitted its truth. The expression of indignation has been suppressed until the sun of this unfortunate man's destiny is set. Men's eyes do not "scowl on Richard" until it is certain that he can no longer wear the diadem. Now it is that in his retirement from power, at the moment [illegible] he most needs the sympathy of faithful friends and unflinching partizans, there is none so poor to do him reverence.'

The Boston Evening Gazette, another administration paper, speaking of the same [illegible] says, "his recent developements will [illegible] to his political friends and private acquaintances in the northern states, have created such an animosity towards him, that he will return home without having a right to expect the slightest outward testimony of gratitude for his talents, cordiality for the dignity of his friendship, or sympathy for his political fall—

"[illegible] that which should accompany old age [illegible] honor, love, obedience, troops of friends, [illegible] must not look to have."

Prosecution on account of Mr. Adams' disclosure.—A criminal prosecution of a singular nature has been instituted at Boston against Theodore Lyman, Jr. Esq. for a publication which appeared in the Jackson Republican, and of which he was the author. On the 29th of October, the letter of Mr. Jefferson to Governor Giles and Mr. Adams' statement, which appeared in the National Intelligencer, were published in the Jackson Republican, accompanied by some remarks, in which Mr. Daniel Webster was said to be one of the persons to whom the President referred in charging upon the federal party and their leaders a plot to dissolve the union, and a traitorous correspondence with a foreign government. Mr. Webster, it seems, took offence at being classed among the leaders of the federal party, at the period of which Mr. Adams spoke, and caused a complaint against General Lyman, for a false, malicious and infamous libel, to be laid before the grand jury of the Supreme Court, now sitting in Boston. An indictment has been found, and a trial is to be had, which it is intimated may bring out all that Governor Giles and President Adams may have to tell on this interesting subject. The Jackson Republican, speaking of this subject, holds the following language—

"It is not probable that this interesting prosecution will be brought to an immediate close. Among other testimony which it may be important for the defendant to obtain, is that of Governor Giles and President Adams. The latter now to a certainty will cease to be officially detained in Washington after the 3d of March next, and in all probability will soon after become again a citizen of this state, and be subject to the jurisdiction of our courts."

If the prosecution should be sustained, Mr. Adams ought, in conscience, to pay the fine and costs of prosecution. The Jackson Republican has been conducted from its outset with the greatest mildness and decorum; and if it has said nothing worse of Mr Webster than that he was calumniated by Mr. Adams, we do not see any very strong grounds for censure. A more interesting trial than this will be, if the whole merits of the question are fully and fairly discussed, has not often been heard in a court of law.

N. Y. E. Post.

From the N. Y. Evening Post.

Interesting Letter.

The following letter has been placed in our hands with liberty to publish it.

ELKTON, (Md.) 17th Nov. 1828.

"Dear Sir—Your favour of the 11th reached me to-day, and I am sorry to say astonished our friends in this quarter. We have been most shamefully imposed upon in Maryland, and that too by one of our friends in Albany and New York. This infamous deception has cost me $200. On Sunday last we received the information by express, that Mr. Adams would certainly receive from 23 to 25 votes in New York. Had it not been Sunday we should have fired our cannon. On Sunday night we received from the same quarter corroborating intelligence. We went into an election next morning in high glee, and contrary to our expectations, we carried this electoral district by a majority of 29 votes! But unfortunately our friends here have lost about one thousand dollars, and I am myself touched to the tune of $200, for I was fool enough to rely on the statements of the Albany Central Committee and the New York American of Saturday last, and bet $100 that Jackson would not get a majority of your votes, and another $100 that Adams would. As I have lost my money through [illegible] which I cannot but consider a gross and premeditated deception, I am determined to spend twice the amount in endeavouring to expose it, if not to unmask all the parties concerned in this very extraordinary transaction. You will oblige me by giving me the names and standing of the Albany Central Committee, and the name of the persons concerned in sending off the express from your place. You will also do me the favour to inform me as to the character and standing of the editor of the New York American. I am told that his paper of Saturday last was made up expressly for the purpose of reaching our State before our election should begin on Monday. In that paper he puts down the following districts, four as certain for Mr Adams and two as probable:

Schenectady and Schoharie	1
Oswego, Jefferson, St. Lawrence	2
Otsego	1
Tompkins and Tioga	1
Onondaga	1
	6

"By the latest accounts, confirmed too by your letter, I see that the whole of these districts have gone against us, and some of these by immense majorities. I wish to know whether I can prove the fact that information had been received in your city respecting the result of any of these districts previous to the publication of the American on Saturday? I am, &c.

British Premiers.

From the London Weekly Review.

After the various changes we have had in the British ministry during the last eighteen months, it may be interesting to our readers to see the comparative duration of the administration of the late and present reign; we therefore subjoin a list of the various Premiers during these periods, from which it will be seen that the average duration of a ministry is 9 or 10 years.

	Appointed.
Duke of Newcastle	6th April, 1754
Earl of Bute	29th May, 1762
George Grenville (father of the present lord Grenville)	16th April, 1763
Marquis of Rockingham	12th July, 1765
Duke of Grafton	2d Aug. 1766
Lord North (afterwards Earl of Guildford)	28th Jan. 1770
Marquis of Rockingham, re-appointed	30th March, 1782
Earl of Shelburne	13th July, 1782
Duke of Portland	5th April, 1783
William Pitt	27th Dec. 1783
Henry Addington (now Viscount Sidmouth)	17th March, 1801
Wm. Pitt, re-appointed	12th May, 1804
Lord Grenville	8th Jan. 1806
Duke of Portland, re-ap.	30th March, 1807
Spencer Perceval	23d June, 1810
Earl of Liverpool	8th June, 1812
George Canning	11th April, 1827
Viscount Goderich	10th Aug. 1827
Duke of Wellington	25th Jan. 1828

Maryland Chemical Works.

This is said to be a very flourishing establishment. Various preparations for the use of Dyers and Bleachers are manufactured there. Several of their manufactured articles were presented for examination to the Franklin Institute of Philadelphia. They were much approved.—N. Y. Enq.

On the door of a certain parish church, not 100 miles from Wycombe, was recently affixed the following—'Notice—The churchwardens will hold their quarterly meetings once in six weeks, instead of half yearly, as formerly.'

Baltimore Prices Current.

Nov. 28, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $8 a 9; superfine Howard-st. 7.00 a 7.25; city mills 6.50; Susquehanna, 6 75 a 7.00; WHEAT, best red 1.40 a 1.50; best white 1.50 a 1.60—CORN, old, .45 a .50; new 40 a 45

TRUSTEE'S SALE.

In Chancery in Somerset County Court.

BENJAMIN PARSONS

vs

Elijah Parsons, administrator of William Miller, Eliza Miller, Harriet Miller, Juliana Miller, Peggy Miller, and Nancy Miller, children and heirs at law of William Miller.

BY virtue of a decree of Somerset county court, in the above cause, the undersigned will offer at PUBLIC SALE, to the highest and best bidder, in the town of Salisbury, Maryland, at the auction room of James L. Waller, esq. on SATURDAY the 27th of DECEMBER, instant, all the right, title, interest and estate, both law and in equity, of which William Miller, late of said county, deceased, died seized and possessed, in and to a House and Lot, together with the buildings and improvements, and all other the appurtenances thereto belonging, situated at Shad Point, in said county, on the south side of Wicomico river, being part of a tract of land called Cherry Hall, and the same lot on which the said William Miller resided at the time of his death; also a lot of ground, in the said county, which the said William purchased of capt. Peter Dashiell, by deed bearing date 3 of September, 1814, being part of a tract of land called Prospect Hill, also a lot of ground, in the said county, which the said William Miller purchased of the said Peter Dashiell by deed bearing date the 26th of August, 1815, being part of a tract of land called Cherry Hall.

The terms of sale will be a credit of twelve months for the purchaser or purchasers giving bond or bonds to the trustee, with approved security, bearing interest from the day of sale. Upon the ratification of the sale by the court, and the payment of the whole of the purchase money to the trustee, the trustee is directed by the said decree, to execute to the purchaser or purchasers, his, her or their heirs, a deed for the property, to him, her or them sold, conveying the title of the complainant and defendants in the premises. The sale will commence at 11 o'clock P. M.

Notice is hereby given,

To the creditors of the said WILLIAM MILLER, that they must bring in their claims against the said William, with the vouchers thereof, and lodge the same with the clerk of Somerset county court, within [illegible] of sale.

WILLIAM W. HANDY, Trustee.

Princess Anne, Dec. 2, 1828. [illegible]

PUBLIC SALE.

WILL BE SOLD AT PUBLIC SALE.

On WEDNESDAY the 24th of next December, on the premises, at Goose Creek, where John Lews now lives—all my property now in the possession of said Lews, viz: the crop of CORN and FODDER, one pair of [illegible], three head of HORSES, two yoke of OXEN, two COWS and YEARLINGS, 30 head of SHEEP, be the same more or less, 50 head of HOGS, be the same more or less, one Timber Cart, Wain Carts, Farming Utensils, and other articles too tedious to enumerate. The terms of sale to be made known on the day above mentioned.

JOHN NOBLE.

Nov 25 99

Late Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of two writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Esther Broughton, administratrix of Josiah Broughton against Charles Jones, I shall proceed to sell at public auction, at the court-house door in Princess Anne, in Somerset county, Maryland, on Tuesday the 16th day of December next, between the hours of eleven and twelve o'clock A. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, all the lands mentioned in the said writs of Venditioni Exponas, as the lands purchased of Thomas Jones, containing three hundred and seventy five acres, more or less, being the same lands which the said Charles Jones purchased of the said Thomas Jones and for the conveyance of which, the said Jones executed a bond of conveyance to the said Charles, dated the eleventh day of November, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and seventeen, being part of a tract of land called "Bedgeal Lot, lying and being situated on Menokin river [illegible] Jones's Creek and a tract of land belonging to Littleton L. Dennis, situated on the west side of the public road leading from Princess Anne to Long's Mills formerly Waggerman's Mills—which said land I shall proceed to sell on the day and at the place aforesaid to satisfy the debt, damages and costs in the said writs specified.

ROBT. STEWART, late Shff.

Nov 25 mm

FOR RENT,

FOR the ensuing year or for a term of years, the FARM on Little-Monie, now occupied by Mitchell Phebus.

For terms apply to JAMES POLK.

June 5, 1828 wk

Dissolution of Partnership.

The PARTNERSHIP heretofore existing between Wm. Gunby & John Noble, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will in future be continued under the firm of William & John Gunby, who respectfully solicit a share of public patronage.

All persons indebted to the late firm will please come forward and make immediate payment, as it is absolutely necessary that the accounts of that concern should be settled without delay.

Nov 25 94

TRUSTEE's SALE.

In Chancery in Somerset County Court.

JOHN P. GALE

vs.

George Twilley and Maria his wife, administrators of William Twilley, Samuel James Twilley and Anne Maria Twilley, children and heirs at law of William Twilley.

BY virtue of a decree of Somerset county court in this cause, the undersigned will offer at PUBLIC SALE, to the highest and best bidder, in the town of Quantico, in Somerset county, Maryland, at the house of John S. Hill, esq. on FRIDAY the 26th day of December, 1828, certain Lands and Real Estate, whereof the said William Twilley died seized, being certain lands situated at Quantico, which the said William purchased of John P. Gale, the complainant, called and known by the name of Wrington, containing 20 acres, more or less; also 12 acres called Wrington; also 15 acres, lying chiefly in Quantico branch, which formerly belonged to a certain Elizabeth McGinnis, together with the mills generally known as Quantico Mills.

The terms of sale will be a credit of 12 months for the one half of the purchase money, and eighteen months for the residue, the purchaser or purchasers giving bond or bonds with approved security, bearing interest from the day of sale. Upon the ratification of the sale by the court, and the payment of the purchase money to the Trustee, the Trustee is directed by the said decree to execute to the purchaser or purchasers, his, her or their heirs, a Deed for the property to him, her or them sold, conveying the title of the complainant and defendants in the premises. The sale will commence at one o'clock P. M.

Notice is hereby given

To the creditors of the said WILLIAM TWILLEY, late of the said county deceased, that they must bring in their claims against the said William, with the vouchers thereof, and lodge the same with the Clerk of Somerset county court within six months from the day of sale.

GEORGE TWILLEY, Trustee.

Quantico, Nov 24, 1828. 6ti

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed two at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'rs. of Thomas Byrd against Elijah C. Johnson, [illegible] at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and one other at the suit Hannah Hitton, Ex'x. of Wm. Heat against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit, all the right interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several Houses and Lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by [illegible] to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by L. D. Coker, also a house and lot occupied by Amelia Nicholson; also one other occupied by William S. Disharoon; also a house at Jesse's Bayly, Esquire's Mills, it being the office of the said Elijah; also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which said land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson & Levi C. [illegible], of a certain Absalom Phipps; also a clock and case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Waller, Esq. in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 22d of November next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

JOSIAH A. BRATTAN, Shff.

Oct 28 tde

The above sale is postponed to Saturday the 6th of next December, at the hour and place above mentioned.

Nov 25 w'm

For Rent.

For the ensuing year, a House and Lot in the village of White-Haven, at present occupied by Edward U. Blake. For terms apply to

MARCELLUS JONES.

Sept. 9, 1828.

Bible Society.

THE several Agents of the Somerset Bible Society are informed that they will receive Bibles and Testaments to supply the destitute in their neighbourhoods upon application to the agent, Mr. William Done—and those who have collected any funds to aid in purchasing the books, will pay them to the same gentleman.

Nov 4 mj?

Marshal's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Vend. Exponas issued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for Maryland District, and to me directed, at the suit of the United States against Robert J. H. King, garnishee of John B. Morris administrator of Wm. H. Wadler, I have seized and taken in execution the following property to wit: one tract of land called Partner's Chance, and one tract called Kings Purchase, containing 797½ acres, more or less, and I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, the above mentioned property, on Tuesday the 16th day of December next, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. at the court house door in Princess Anne.

HUMPHREY HUMPHREYS,

Dep. Marshal Som. county.

Nov 25 mw?

The Ladies' Literary Port Folio.

PHILADELPHIA.

THE Editor will be assisted in the Department of Reviews, Miscellany and Poetry, by "W. G. C." and in the Ladies Department by Mrs Harriet Muzzy.

With the 5th number will appear a copperplate Engraving comprising in a single group, portraits of Shakspeare, Byron, Scott and Campbell, which will be followed by portraits of American Authors in a similar style. Those engravings, executed expressly for this work will alone be worth the amount of subscription.

The Ladies Department will be constantly enriched with choice selections from the writings of Mrs. Hemans, Miss Edgeworth, Miss L. E. Landon, and other foreign writers, and also from the best productions of Mrs. Sedgwick, Mrs. Sigourney, Miss Winchester, Mrs. Dumont, Mrs. Eliza Morden, and others of our own country women whose talents have shed a lustre upon their sex and country, in order that every lady who receives the Port Folio, may be certain of possessing in an elegant volume, specimens of the best productions of the most eminent writers of her sex. It is also designed to impart a superior interest, and value to the work, by the addition of portraits of such of the above writers as can be procured.

We shall also receive the original correspondence of N. P. Willis Esq. (" Roy,") Richard Penn Smith, and W. Gaylord, Esqrs. both authors of successful prize tales; Daniel Bryan Esq. ("Clarence," and the exclusive aid of Mr. T. C. Clarke, (formerly the editor of the Album) with the ablest of his former coadjutors and several anonymous but excellent writers, who have enriched the pages of all of our best literary journals.

The Editor who has had much experience in conducting a literary paper, hopes to concentrate in his new work, the powerful talents of many of the most distinguished writers in this country, whom he considers it an honour to be associated with, and a pride to have enlisted in his cause. The arrangement of the sheet may be understood from the following

SYNOPSIS.

Literary and Scientific.—Notices, Reviews or Criticisms, of all new books and publications, especially such as issue from the American Press. Motto—Freedom of opinion, expressed with frankness and impartiality.

The Ladies' Department.—Is illustrated by the following sentiments from the London Literary Gazette: "Where [illegible] most improved and female character most pure, there is most happiness and [illegible] of social manners. The [illegible] children, the most precious years of [illegible] opening [illegible] are confided to woman's superintendence. She therefore may be presumed to lay the foundation of all the virtue and all the wisdom that enriches the world."

Essays.—On such moral and useful subjects as may tend to [illegible] the understanding and enrich the [illegible]

Tales.—The emanations of genius, [illegible] ing the affecting incidents of real life, fiction, blending useful lessons of warm or instruction with the chaste and simple beauties of literature. We flatter ourselves that our work in this department will not be exceeded by any other.

Poetry.—"Such," says a [illegible] poet, "has no alliance with our best affections; which lifts the mind into a purer element and breathes into it more profound and [illegible] generous emotions."

Miscellaneous.—The Drama, with criticisms; The Toilet, and its [illegible] of taste and fashion: with such intelligence, Amusing Sketches, Anecdotes, and effusions of wit and humour as will [illegible] and furnish out an agreeable Miscellany.

Embellishments.—Though [illegible] copperplate engravings, expressly [illegible] of interesting subjects, pictures [illegible] or portraits of distinguished [illegible] occasionally appear, with [illegible] music, &c. it is nevertheless [illegible] make the success of the work [illegible] on its moral and literary excellence.

Conclusion.—In short, no pains or expense shall be spared, (in calling forth and [illegible] ing native talents, in making it faithfully subservient to virtuous and worthy purposes, as well as in the superior elegance of the work itself,) to render it an acceptable present to a pure mind, as well as an acquisition to American Literature. When it fails in either particular, the proprietors pledge themselves to relinquish its publication.

Terms. The Ladies Literary Port Folio is published every other week at $2 per Annum, (in advance.) The great expense attending this publication renders it necessary in all cases, to accompany orders with the amount of subscription.

Any individual procuring fifteen subscribers shall be entitled to $5, and so in proportion for a less or larger number.

Subscriptions received at the Philadelphia Library, the Athenaeum, Arcade Reading Room, and the Artist Repository, (Simpson's) No 66 Chesnut Street, and at the Merchant's Coffee House.

Address (post paid.)

THOMAS C. CLARKE, Philadelphia.

Subscriptions to the Ladies' Port Folio will be thankfully received at the office of the Village Herald, where the first number may be seen.

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street,

BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

Also,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c

And a general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. wm

THE CORNUCOPIÆ.

"Blending the useful with the sweet."

GUIDO, A TALE.

Sketches from History, and other Poems; by Ianthe.

This is the title of a neat and beautiful volume of poetry, of 200 pages, which made its appearance last week, published by Messrs. G. & C. Carvell, 108 Broadway, and we have perused its pages with an uncommon degree of pleasure and admiration. The signature of Ianthe has too often adorned the columns of the Evening Post to allow us to look with indifference on any thing that falls from her gifted pen. Ianthe is the signature adopted by the late Miss Manley, now Mrs. Embury, of this city; and we are proud that New York can boast of a kindred genius to that of a Mrs. Sigourney of Connecticut, and a Mrs. Hale of Massachusetts, or that which inspires the muse of a Mrs. Hemans, a Mrs. C. B. Wilson, or a Miss Landon, on the other side of the Atlantic.—As a specimen of the poetry before us, we offer the following, as one of those of a religious cast. In our next we shall give one of a somewhat different character.

[N. Y. Post.

CHRIST IN THE TEMPEST.

St. Matthew, viii. 24—27.

Midnight was on the mighty deep,
And darkness filled the boundless sky,
While mid the raging wind was heard
The sea-bird's mournful cry:
For tempst clouds were must'ring wrath
Across the seamen's traceless path.

It came at length—one fearful gust
Rent from the mast the shivering sail,
And drove the helpless bark along,
The plaything of the gale;
While fearfully the lightning's glare
Fell on the pale brows gathered there.

But there was one o'er whose bright face
Unmarked the livid lightning flashed,
And on whose stirless, prostrate form,
Unfelt the sea-spray dashed:
For, 'mid the tempest fierce and wild,
He slumbered like a wearied child.

Oh! who could look upon that face,
And feel the sting of coward fear?
Though hell's fierce demons raged around,
Yet heaven itself was here:
For who that glorious brow could see,
Nor own a present Deity?

With hurried fear they press around
The lowly Saviour's humble bed,
As if his very touch had power
To shield their souls from dread,
While, cradled on the raging deep,
He lay in calm and tranquil sleep.

Vainly they struggled with their fears,
But wilder still the tempest woke,
Till from their full and o'er fraught hearts
The voice of terror broke,
"Behold! we sink beneath the wave—
"We perish, Lord! but thou canst save."

Slowly he rose—and mild rebuke
Shone in his soft and heaven lit eye—
"Oh ye of little faith!" he cried,
"Is not your master nigh?
"Is not your hope of succour just?
"Why know ye not in whom ye trust?"

He turned away, and conscious power
Dilated his majestic form,
As o'er the boiling sea he bent,
The ruler of the storm,
Earth to its centre felt the thrill,
As low he murmured—"Peace, Be still!"

Hark to the burst of meeting waves,
The roaring of the angry sea!
A moment more, and all is hushed
In deep tranquility!
While not a breeze is near to break
The mirrored surface of the lake,

Then on the stricken hearts of all,
Fell anxious doubt and holy awe,
As timidly they gazed on him
Whose will was nature's law,
"What man is this," they cry, "whose word
"E'en by the raging sea is heard?"

SELECTED.

THINGS THAT I HATE.

I hate upon a frosty day,
To be without a fire;
I hate to see a stupid play.
And I abhor a liar.

I hate, whene'er I have a cent,
To have the suffering shun me;
I hate, when all my money 's spent,
To have a fellow dun me.

I hate the self-conceited beau,
Whose face adores the glass;
I hate the girl that stoops so low,
As to admire the ass.

I hate a knave, I hate a fool,
I hate a simple noddy;
I hate a man who goes by rule,
I hate—'most every body.

THINGS WHICH I LOVE.

I love upon a frosty day
To have a rousing fire;
I love to see a witty play,
I love to kick a liar.

I love the man whose liberal hand
Relieves another's wo;
I love when cash I can command
To do exactly so.

I love to quiz the silly beau,
Whose face adores the glass;
I love the girl who says him no,
And can despise the ass.

I love my children and my wife,
Sometimes a glass of toddy;
I love to live a quiet life,
I love— most ev'ry body. S.

Those who bequeath unto themselves a pompous funeral, are at just so much expense to inform the world, of something that had much better been concealed, n... [illegible]

From the Literary Chronicle.

The Contrast.

There are few sweeter pictures in life, than the union of two lovers; there are few more distressing than their separation. I was witness to a scene of the former description some years ago in the capacity of brideman; and, not long after, to one of the latter, in the quality of mourner. There was a contrast between these situations so powerfully impressive, that although I had no immediate interest either in the bridal or the burial, I seldom pass an hour in solitude without an involuntary recurrence to what passed at them, I seem but this moment to have quitted the altar—I almost feel the fresh earth of the grave giving way under my feet.

Henry Morel was the dearest friend I had ever known. An attachment had subsisted between him and a very lovely girl since they had been children; when he became of age he married her, and I was at the wedding. This ceremony, under almost any circumstances, is a delightful one to behold; but when beauty, elegance and wealth shed their combined lustre over the scene, it is not to be paralleled on earth. The bridegroom was in the full vigor and pride of youth; of a noble countenance and a manly form; his manners were usually serious, but, on the present occasion, his eye lighted with animation, and there was a tenderness in his voice and gesture when he addressed the fair creature who had just committed herself to his arms, that shewed how dearly he loved her. His bride, without being the most beautiful, was certainly the most interesting woman it has been my chance to meet with. She was now doubly so; her cheek was flushed, her lip trembled, there was a contension between joy and modesty and hope and fear in her looks; but it was not difficult to collect that in her breast happiness was predominant. The bridal assembly were all life and gayety; the marriage feast was an uninterrupted scene of mirth and festivity. Joy was triumphant for his hour.

About a fortnight after, I received a pressing letter from my friend to go down to his seat in the country, where he was at present with his young bride. The letter was filled with descriptions of his felicity, and with praises of his dear Eveline; her beauty, her amiability, her accomplishments; she was all that was good and fair and gracious; he was happier (to use his own expression) than the happiest man on earth, and he besought me "to come down and witness his beatitude." It was impossible to resist an invitation which promised so much pleasure.

Upon my arrival at the manor-house, I was shewn into a library, where the chaplain received me. "If you wish to see Mr. Morel he is in that apartment," said the clergyman, pointing to an open door. I entered, and found myself in a darkened bed-chamber. Oh! one moment told me all! There was a marble figure stretched upon the bed; a heavy and overpowering smell of herbs and flowers filled the room; every thing was clothed in deadly white. My friend sat by the bed side, with his hands locked, and his eyes fixed upon the statue I approached, but he took no notice of me. 'Poor Eveline!' said I, bending over her, "thou wert a short-lived flower!" A smile seemed to gather on the lips of the girl as I said these words, a smile between regret and resignation. She was in her wedding-dress, in which as I afterwards learned, she had desired to be buried. There was no other covering, and as I brought to my recollection her appearance on the day of her marriage, she seemed in nothing altered but that she was now still and pale. "God of heaven! if she only slept!" said I, touching the lily hand that lay motionless beside her. A chill shot up through my arm and froze the very blood next my heart. My involuntary exclamation roused Henry from his torpor; he gazed at me for some time, then pointing to the body, as if to inform me of what was already too plain, 'Eveline is dead,' said he, "she is dead." I made no remark; consolation was premature; indeed I was unable to afford it, for my heart was flowing through my eyes. He rose, came up close to me, and leaning on my shoulder, asked, in a tone of familiar but revolting jocularity, "if I was come to congratulate him? Then, without waiting for an answer, he continued in the same strain of bitter irony, "There, there is my felicity! there is my beatitude! have I not reason to be happy? beauty and grace and goodness in my possession! am I not an enviable man?" He laughed wildly. "Ay," continued he, addressing the insensible figure, "there you lie in your wedding garments! with your crystal cheek and your smiling lip, fresh from the marriage ball! Look at her slender ancles, and her little feet, just as if she had lain down after the dance, and her arms so white and long! and her fair bosom, with the curls playing about her snowy neck! Eveline, dear Eveline, have you indeed forsaken me?—O God! O God! that this could be all a dream!—No, no—it is no dream—no dream." Here he became again insensible, and relapsed into his former attitude, his eyes fixed on the bed, and his hands clenched in inexpressible [illegible] young widower rushed into the room, tore open the lid, and threw himself on the body. We could scarcely oblige him to let the operation proceed, whilst he incessantly exclaimed that we were burying his Eveline alive; as she lay in her bridal attire in the coffin, his bewildered imagination conceived she was still living. To force cold drag him from the apartment, though every blow of the hammer on the lid of the coffin seemed to strike upon his breast. When the body was carried out, he sprung to the door, and was scarcely withheld by his domestics and myself from useless opposition to the bearers.—His Eveline was at length separated from him forever; and his grief, from being outrageous, subsided at length into melancholy and total silence. She was buried in the church-yard next his demesne, and he was seldom to be found far distant from her grave. His pleasure was, to lean on one shoulder of the slab which bears her name, and ruminate on the long grass which waves to and fro over the turf that covers her remains. A premature decay carried him off at the end of the year, and he now lies beside her in the same grave.

On the Conversation of Authors.

The conversation of authors is not so good as might be expected; but, such as it is, (and with rare exceptions,) it is better than any other. The proof of which is, that when you are used to it you cannot put up with any other. That of mixed company becomes utterly intolerable—you cannot sit out a common tea and card party, at least, if they pretend to talk at all. You are obliged in despair to cut all your old acquaintance who are not au fait on the prevailing and most smartly contended topics, who are not imbued with the high gusto of criticism and vertu. You cannot bear to hear a friend whom you have not seen for many years, tell at how much a yard he sells his laces and tapes, when he means to move into his next house, when he heard last from his relations in the country, whether trade is alive or dead, or whether Mr. Such-a-one gets to look old.—This sort of neighbourly gossip will not go down after the high-raised tone of literary conversation. The last may be very absurd, very unsatisfactory, and full of turbulence and heart-burning, but it has a zest in it which more ordinary topics of news or family affairs do not supply. Neither will the conversation of what we understand by gentlemen and men of fashion, do after that of men of letters. It is flat, insipid, stale and unprofitable, in the comparison. They talk about much the same things, pictures, poetry, politics, plays; but they do it worse, and at a sort of vapid second hand. They in fact, talk out of newspapers and magazines, what we write there. They do not feel the same interest in the subjects they affect to handle with an air of fashionable condescension; nor have they the same knowledge of them, if they were ever so much in earnest in displaying it. If it were not for the wine and the desert, no author in his senses would accept an invitation to a well-dressed dinner party, except out of pure good-nature and unwillingness to disoblige by his refusal. Persons in high life talk almost entirely by rote. There are certain established modes of address, and certain answers to them expected as a matter of course, as a point of etiquette. The studied forms of politeness do not give the greatest possible scope to an exuberance of wit or fancy. The fear of giving offence destroys sincerity and without sincerity there can be no true enjoyment of society, nor unfettered exertion of intellectual activity. Those who have been accustomed to live with the great, are hardly considered as conversable persons in literary society. They are not to be talked with, any more than puppets or echoes. They have no opinions but what will please; and you naturally turn away, as a waste of time and words, from attending to a person who just before assented to what you said, and whom you find, the moment after, from something that unexpectedly or perhaps by design drops from him, to be of a totally different way of thinking. This bush fighting is not regarded as fair play among scientific men. As fashionable conversation is a sacrifice to politeness, so the conversation of low life is nothing but rudeness. They contradict you without giving a reason, or if they do, it is a very bad one—swear, talk loud, repeat the same thing fifty times over, get to calling names, and from words proceed to blows.—You cannot make companions of servants, or persons in an inferior station in life. You may talk to them on matters of business, and what they have to do for you, (as lords talk to bruisers on subjects of fancy, or country squires to their grooms on horse-racing,) but out of that narrow sphere, to any general topic you cannot lead them, the conversation soon flags, and you go back to the old question, or are obliged to break up the sitting for want of ideas in common. The conversation of authors is better than that of most professions. It is better than that of lawyers, who talk of nothing but double entendres—than that of physicians, who talk of the approaching deaths of the College, or some rich widow—than that of divines, who talk of the last place they dined at—than that of University-men, who make stale puns, repeat the refuse of the London newspapers, and affect an ignorance of Greek and mathematics—it is better than that of players, who talk of nothing but the Green-room, and rehearse the scholar, the wit, or the fine gentleman, like a part on the stage—or than that of ladies, who, whatever you talk of, think of nothing, and expect you to think of nothing, but themselves. It is not easy to keep up a conversation with women in company: it is thought a piece of rudeness to differ from them: it is not quite fair to ask them a reason for what they say. You are afraid of pressing too hard upon them: but where you cannot differ openly and unreservedly, you cannot heartily agree. It is not so in France. There the women talk of things in general, and reason better than the men of this country. They are mistresses of the intellectual foils. They are adepts in all the topics. They know what is to be said for and against all sorts of questions, and are lively and full of mischief into the bargain.—They are very subtile. They put you to your trumps* immediately. Your logic is more in requisition even than your gallantry. You must argue as well as bow yourself into the good graces of these modern Amazons.—What a situation for an Englishman to be placed in! New Monthly Magazine.

* The topics of metaphysical argument having got into female society in France, is a proof how much they must have been discussed there generally, and how unfounded the charge is which we bring against them of excessive thoughtlessness and frivolity.—The French, (taking all together,) are a more sensible, reflecting, and better informed people than the English.

Al Koran.

The nature of the Turkish creed is as little known to the people generally, as the Turkish character. Some of its points are curious enough.

The Turks insist upon the unity of God. They believe that the Saviour was the son of the Virgin Mary, and was conceived by the "Ruhah," which is the breath or spirit of God. They believe that he was a great prophet—that he had the power of performing miracles—that he foretold the coming of Mahomet, who is also no more than a prophet. They believe that Christ shall come to judge the world—that he shall reign forty years in Damascus, during which time Anti-Christ shall arise, after whose destruction Christ shall ascend into Heaven, and then the day of judgment shall be held. They believe that the Gospel was sent to Jesus as the Law was to Moses, and the Psalms to David.

They believe all the Prophets of the Old Testament—they believe in Paradise, in Hell, but not in Purgatory. Instead of this they have a place called "Araf," to be inhabited by those who have led an insignificant life, in which the good and evil are about equally balanced. The Paradise of Mahomet is sensual—lovely gardens, fair fruits, fresh fountains, flowing rivers of milk and wine, the song of the Houris—every thing is addressed to the senses. So is it also with their Hell—the wicked are to drink scalding water, and to eat the bitter fruit of the Zacon: Still, for awhile they have hope; if their faith be proof against torment, after all their sins are washed away in the waters of Sotzaboul, they are admitted into Paradise. But to those who have no faith, the fires of Hell are eternal. The Turkish belief in fatalism is well known; it is this, in connexion with the reward of Paradise to those who die in battle, which makes the Ottoman soldier a formidable foe.—N. Y. Courier.

STANZAS.

Oh, bright is the dawning of love's early morning,
And bright is the noontide of friendship's glow,
The cold scenes of life with their lustre adorning,
Like moon beams disporting on banks of snow;
But love's young light is quickly flying,
And friendship's warmth too soon is fled—
Yet memory weaves them a chaplet undying,
And makes them immortal when hope is dead!

Then why should we sorrow at thought of the morrow?
Its joys and its griefs will as soon be flown,
Or why from the future one saddened tho't borrow,
While each moment hath sorrow enough of its own?
Too soon 'twill come, too long 'twill linger—
Tho' its changeful tale may ne'er be told,
Yet traced on the heart by memory's finger,
'Twill live till that heart in death hath grown cold!

MERCY.

The mercy of God is a fountain open to all. It branches out into many streams: there is a fullness in it to meet all our wants; there is mercy to pardon our sins; mercy to subdue our iniquities, and heal our backslidings, to bear with our infirmities, to restore us to dignity, to meet us at the grave to support and comfort us while passing through that dark valley, and to conduct us safe into the presence of God; where the effects of that mercy will [illegible]

From the Boston Statesman.

MASONRY.—We have before us, Col. Knapp's "Genius of Masonry, or a Defence of the Order." This able and interesting production thus beautifully concludes:—

"Masonry teaches us to practice charity, to protect chastity, to respect the ties of blood and friendship, and to adopt the principles and to reverence the sacraments of religion. Its commands are, in the still small voice of reason, fearlessly to face the proud in defence of the humble; kindly assist the feeble; guide the blind; feed the hungry; clothe the naked; raise up the trodden down; be a father to the orphan; guard the altar; protect the government; encourage wisdom; love man; adore God; implore his mercy and hope for happiness and immortality. These are the commands of Masonry. Thus far we can speak; but, for those who are dissatisfied and wish to know more without passing through the guarded gates of knowledge, our address to them must be the same that was made of old to the prophet Esdras; "Number me the things that are not yet come; gather me together the drops that are scattered abroad; make me the flowers green again that are withered; open me the places that are closed, and bring me forth the winds, that in them are shut up; show me the image of a voice, and then I will declare the thing thou labourest to know."

Excellent Custom.—The following custom is said to prevail at Munich; every child found begging in the streets is arrested and carried to a charitable establishment. The moment he enters the hospital, and before he is cleansed, and gets the new clothes intended for him, his portrait is painted in his ragged dress, and precisely as he was found begging. When his education is finished in the hospital, this portrait, is given to him, and he promises by an oath, to keep it all his life, in order that he may be reminded of the abject condition from which he may have been rescued, of the obligation he owes to the institution which saved him from misery and gave him the means by which he was enabled to avoid it in future.

The weight of the diamonds found by the government agents in the district of Tejuco in Brazil, from 1772 to 1818, was 1,298,0.. carats; and the quantity received from farming out the mines to a company, after the government had ceased to work them on its own account, was 1,700,000 carats, being together equal in value to about 67,000,000 sterling. The largest of the Brazilian diamonds hitherto obtained weighs 1324 carats. It was found in the year 1771, near the river Abite, by a poor negro slave, who was liberated, and had a pension of nearly 50l. per annum settled upon him for life.—Lit. Ch.

PROVERBS.

A fool's tongue is long enough to cut his throat.

A hand saw is a good thing, but not to shave with.

A good servant makes a good master.

A handful of common sense is worth a pound of learning.

A fool knows more in his own house than a wise man in another's.

A liar should have a good memory.

A bad workman, quarrels with his tools.

A white glove often conceals a dirty hand.

A wild goose, never laid a tame egg.

Better bend than break.

The remedy for injuries is not to remember them.

Be a friend to yourself and others will.

Be not a baker if your head be of butter.

Beware of enemies reconciled, and meat twice boiled.

Beware of a silent dog, and still water.

Children and Fools speak the truth.

Call me cousin, but cousin me not.

Diseases are the interest of pleasure.

Every thing has an end, and a pudding ...

Every man wishes the canal to go by his own door.

Faint praise is disparagement.

Go in the country to hear the news of town.

Ask thy purse what thou shouldst buy.

War is Death's feast.

War makes thieves, and peace ... them.

The greater the man, the greater crime.

The subject's love is the king's ...

Youth and white paper, soon take impression.

When honour becomes mercenary, ... will become honourable.

Worth in base minds, begets envy; in great souls, emulation.

Vows made in storms, are forgotten in calms.

The noblest remedy of injuries is ...

The timid and weak, are the most vengeful and implacable.

The Church is out of temper, when charity is cold and zeal hot.

The sting of reproach is the truth of ...

The chamber of sickness, is the ... of Devotion.

Many that are wits, in jest, are ... earnest.

He that swells in prosperity, will ... adversity.

Disputation leaves truth in the middle, the parties at both ends.

Drunkenness is voluntary ...

Education begins a gentleman—conversation and good manners complete him.

Envy shoots at others, and wounds itself.

Experience is the mother of science.

A goose quill is more dangerous than a lion's claw.

Better go to Heaven, in rags, than ... in embroidery.

[illegible]

L D Haack

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., TUESDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1828. NO. 38.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance: or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞ Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞ Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞ Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞ All communications addressed to the editor must come POST PAID.

COURSE OF EXCHANGE.

Cohen's Office, Baltimore, Nov. 27, 1828.

BANKS	pr. ct. dis.	BANKS	pr. ct. dis.
U. States Bank	par	Farmers bank and
Do Branches	par	branches	½
MASSACHUSETTS		Wilmington and
Boston banks	1	Brandywine	½
Other Mass notes	2	Commercial bank	1
RHODE ISLAND		Branch of do at
Providence banks	2	Milford	½
Other R. Island notes	3	Bank of Smyrna	1
CONNECTICUT		MARYLAND
Middletown bank	1	Frederick c'y bank	½
Phœnix bank at		Havre de Grace	par
Hartford	1	Farmers bank at
Bridgeport bank	1	Annapolis	½
Eagle bank of New		Branches at Frederick & Easton	do
Haven	no sale
Hartford bank	1	Hagerstown	do
NEW-YORK		Westminster	do
N. Y city banks (except Lombard)	par	Elkton	susp.
		DISTRICT OF COL.
Albany	½	Bk of Washington	½
Other N York notes	1	Bk of the Metrop.	do
NEW-JERSEY		Patriotic bank	do
Jersey bank	no sale	Central bank	do
Bank in Newark	1	Bk of Columbia	nom
Bank of N Brunswick	1	Union bk Georgetown	½
		Farmers & Mechanics bank	do
Trenton Ins. Co	1
Farmers bank at		Bk of Alexandria	do
Mount Holly	1	Bk of Potomac	do
Cumberland bk	1	Farmers bk of Alexandria	do
State bk Camden	1
At Elizabethtown	1	Union bk of Alex'a	do
At N Brunswick	1	Mechanics bk of Alexandria	do
At Patterson	1
At Trenton	no sale	VIRGINIA
At Morristown	1	Richmond & branches	½
Sussex bank	1	Bk of the Valley	do
PENNSYLVANIA		Br at Leesburg	do
Philadelphia banks	par	Br at Charlestown	do
Easton	½	Br at Romney	do
Germantown	do	N W bank of Va
Montgomery county	do	at Wheeling	3
Chester	do	N. CAROLINA
Delaware	do	State bk at Raleigh
Lancaster bank	do	and branches	4
Farmers bk of Lanc'r	½	Cape Fear	4
Harrisburg	1	Newbern	4
Northampton	3	S. CAROLINA
Farmers bank of		State banks generally	2
Bucks c'y	1	GEORGIA
York bank	2	State bank	2
Chambersburg	2	Planters	2
Farmers bank at		Augusta	2
Reading	2	Darien	5
Gettysburg	do	Augusta br Co.	no sale
Carlisle bk	[illegible]	KENTUCKY
Swatara at Harrisburg	[illegible]	Bank of Kentucky &
Pittsburg	2	branches	no sale
Greensburg	3	OHIO
Brownsville	4	Specie banks	3
DELAWARE		LOUISIANA
Bank of Delaware	½	Banks at N. Orleans	3

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

Square and oval butter Prints, Weavers' Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers, Lemon Squeezers; wash and Cake Boards, Cane for reed making; pound, bed, and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; Foot and Shoe Blacking; patent and common Taps. Lamp Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross, Cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers, Spigots and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants, fishing Lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; Clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and Sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; Sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers' and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Curriers' Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART.

No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets.

Baltimore, 12th. mo 9th

FARM FOR SALE.

THE Subscriber offers for sale that valuable FARM, on Tettone Branch, containing between SIX and SEVEN HUNDRED ACRES

This farm is within four miles of Princess Anne, is formerly belonging to Richard H. Handy, Esq. and is better known as the "Pershouse Farm." It is well timbered and will be divided to suit purchasers. For terms, which will be liberal, apply to

THOMAS K. CARROLL

August 5. tf

The Ladies' Literary Port Folio.

PHILADELPHIA.

THE Editor will be assisted in the Department of Reviews, Miscellany and Poetry, by "W. G. C." and in the Ladies Department by Mrs. Harriet Muzzy.

With the 5th number will appear a copperplate Engraving, comprising in a single group, portraits of Shakspeare, Byron, Scott and Campbell, which will be followed by portraits of American Authors in a similar style. Those engravings, executed expressly for this work will alone be worth the amount of subscription.

The Ladies Department will be constantly enriched with choice selections from the writings of Mrs Hemans, Miss Edgeworth, Miss L. E. Landon, and other foreign writers, and also from the best productions of Mrs. Sedgwick, Mrs. Sigourney, Miss Winchester, Mrs. Dumont, Mrs. Eliza Murden, and others of our own country women whose talents have shed a lustre upon their sex and country, in order that every lady who receives the Port Folio, may be certain of possessing in an elegant volume, specimens of the best productions of the most eminent writers of her sex. It is also designed to impart a superior interest, and value to the work, by the addition of portraits of such of the above writers as can be procured.

We shall also receive the original correspondence of N. P. Willis Esq. ("Roy,") Richard Penn Smith, and W. Gaylord Esqrs both authors of successful prize tales; Daniel Bryan Esqr; "Clarence," and the exclusive aid of Mr. T. C Clarke, (formerly the editor of the Album) with the ablest of his former coadjutors and several anonymous but excellent writers, who have enriched the pages of all our best literary journals.

The Editor who has had much experience in conducting a literary paper, hopes to concentrate in his new work, the powerful talents of many of the most distinguished writers in this country, whom he considers it an honour to be associated with, and a pride to have enlisted in his cause. The arrangement of the sheet may be understood from the following

SYNOPSIS.

Literary and Scientific.—Notices. Reviews or Criticisms, of all new books and publications, especially such as issue from the American press. Motto—Freedom of opinion, expressed with frankness and impartiality.

The Ladies Department.—is illustrated by the following sentiments from the London Literary Gazette: "Where female sense is most improved and female character most pure, there is most happiness and propriety of social manners. The early years of children, the most precious years of life and opening season are confined to woman's superintendence. She therefore may be presumed to lay the foundation of all the virtues and all the wisdom that enriches the world."

Essays.—On such moral and useful subjects as may tend to strengthen the understanding and enrich the mind.

Tales.—The emanations of genius, portraying the affecting incidents of real life, or fiction, including useful lessons of warning or instruction with the chaste and simple beauties of literature. We flatter ourselves that our work in this department will not be exceeded by any other.

Poetry.—"Such, says a genuine poet, has has no alliance with our best affections, which lifts the mind into a purer element and breathes into it more profound exalted and generous emotions."

Miscellaneous.—The Drama, with criticisms; The Toilet, and its ornaments of taste and fashion, with such intelligence, Amusing Sketches, Anecdotes, and effusions of wit and humour as will impart variety, and furnish out an agreeable Miscellany.

Embellishments.—Though superior copperplate engravings, especially for this work of interesting subjects, picturesque scenery, or portraits of distinguished individuals, shall occasionally appear, with pieces of popular music, &c. it is nevertheless determined to make the success of the work dependent on its moral and literary excellence alone.

Conclusion.—In short, no pains or expense shall be spared, in calling forth and rewarding native talents, in making it faithfully subservient to virtuous and worthy purposes, as well as in the superior elegance of the work as to render it an acceptable present to a pure mind, as well as an acquisition to American Literature. When it fails in either particular, the proprietors pledge themselves to relinquish its publication.

Terms.—The Ladies Literary Port Folio is published every other week at $2 per Annum, (in advance.) The great expense attending this publication renders it necessary in all cases, to accompany orders with the amount of subscription.

Any individual procuring fifteen subscribers shall be entitled to $5, and so in proportion for a less or larger number.

☞ Subscriptions received at the Philadelphia Library, the Athenaeum, Arcade Reading Room, and the Artist Repository. Simpson's, No 66 Chestnut Street, and at the Merchant's Coffee House.

Address (post paid.)

THOMAS C. CLARKE, Philadelphia

☞ Subscriptions to the Ladies' Port Folio will be thankfully received at the office of the Village Herald, where the first number may be seen.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks,

PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms,

At the Office of the Village Herald.

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas; and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully to be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. which in perfection. In consequence of a [illegible] combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes disturbed nerves, after the manner of an anodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly [illegible] use. It promotes expectoration, which is constantly called for, and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this [illegible] removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is [illegible] to the taste, and is found particularly useful in [illegible] nervous and [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

JOHNSTON & SUDLER.

Nov. 20, 1827 Princess Anne, Md.

SPLENDID VIEWS

OF

AMERICAN SCENERY.

On FRIDAY, the 10th of OCTOBER, 1828, will be published by T. R. GREENBANK, No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia, a volume of splendid views of American Scenery as follows—

1—A view of Beck's Shot Tower, on the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia, and adjacent scenery,
2—A view of the Light House on Long Island and Sound, with the adjacent scenery.
3—A view of York on Lake Ontario, with the fortifications,
4—Characteristic Scenery on the Hudson River;
5—View of New London, Connecticut, with the adjacent scenery,
6—View of Lemon Hill, near Philadelphia, the seat of Henry Pratt, Esq.
7—The tomb of Washington, at Mount Vernon.
8—View at the Great Bend of the Susquehanna.
9—View of the Upper Falls of Solomon's Creek, Luzerne county, Pa.
10—View of the Lower Falls of Solomon's Creek.
11—View of the Cattskill Mountains, from the Hudson.
12—View of Fort Niagara, on Lake Ontario, from the Light House on the British side.

These Views are executed in the best style of Philadelphia engraving, from drawings made upon spot. Each plate will be accompanied by a full and accurate description thereof, so as to make it perfectly intelligible to every person.

The work will be printed and issued to subscribers in the first style, on superior paper, and with a handsomely printed cover, and delivered to subscribers at the very low price of One Dollar per copy. Flexible covers will be used for country subscribers, so that they can be safely sent by mail.

☞ Any gentleman, postmasters and others who will interest themselves to procure ten subscribers and remit $10 to the Editor, shall receive twelve copies. From the very flattering patronage already received (1200 subscribers having put down their names) this volume will probably be succeeded by another, as soon as other plates can be engraved. All orders from the country will be promptly attended to.

Address, T. R. GREENBANK.

No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia.

Sept 16 mm

THE NEW-YORK MEDICAL ACADEMY.

The happy effects of the Botanical System of Practice, more especially of late employ in the cure of diseases, are such as entitle it to a high rank among modern improvements. The opinion long entertained in its favour, by many of the judicious, a thorough experience has now demonstrated to be well founded; and with the number and variety of its salutary achievements, its reputation is daily increasing.

It must be evident to every discerning mind, that the present prevailing practice of medicine, which rejects this botanical aid, is at variance with our nature and with our happiness Mercury, the Lancet, and the Knife, are chiefly relied upon, by physicians and surgeons of the present day, for the removal of almost all the diseases incident to the human body, notwithstanding the effects of these deliterous agents, are evidently fatal to multitudes. Deeply impressed with these facts and with a view of reforming the science and parctice of medicine, an individual of this city in the year 1827, procured a lot of ground and erected a handsome and convenient edifice, for an Institution denominated the United States Infirmary, expressly for employing a reformed system of practice in the treatment of diseases; the remedial resources being chiefly derived from the productions of our own country.—The course of treatment adopted by this Institution was principally the result of near forty years experience of a distinguished medical reformer, which course we are happy to state, has been crowned with signal success, and proved to a demonstration, that without mercury, that boasted champion of the MATERIA MEDICA, or other poisonous drugs, diseases generally may be cured by those more safe and salutary means which the God of nature has so liberally scattered around us.

Animated by the past success and with the hope of benefiting future generations, [illegible] that [illegible] the importance of the object should be taken to promulgate this valuable system of practice, and thereby improve and reform the [illegible] [illegible]

After reflecting for years upon the most pleasant and successful method of effecting so desirable an object, it has been deemed expedient to establish a MEDICAL SCHOOL, with competent teachers, where students may receive board and instruction until they are fully qualified to practice in the various branches of the healing art [illegible] to announce, that a building for such an Institution has been erected [illegible] for the reception of Students.

The Infirmary is large and commodious [illegible] the present U. S. Infirmary [illegible] part of the city [illegible] has been completed at a great expense.

The following branches will be taught—

1. Botany.
2. Surgery.
3. Theory and Practice of Physic.
4. Midwifery and Diseases of Women and Children.
5. Materia Medica and Practical Botany.
6. Chemistry and Pharmacy.

The benefits to be derived by an attendance at this institution, will, we trust, be amply apparent to all those who wish to acquire a correct knowledge of the healing art—Here the student will be taught all the medicine practice which is deemed necessary, in addition to the Botanical system in consequence of his residing at the Institution, and pursuing a systematic course of studies, [illegible] he may acquire a knowledge of both in less than one half the time, and with less than half the expense that is required at other Medical Institutions.

There being an infirmary connected with the Academy the students will have the benefit of clinical instruction, by which the experimental part of medicine will be acquired with the Theory.

Another advantage held out to the students is, that all those who conform to the rules and regulations of the school, and therefore finish their education, will have employment, with a generous compensation secured to them by the Institution, to disseminate the practice of medicine [illegible] their country.

There will be no specified time to complete a course of study, but whenever the student is qualified to pass an examination he will receive a Diploma [illegible] will have a decided advantage over every other, as it will enable the possessor to practice in every State in the Union without molestation.

REQUISITIONS.

The qualifications for admission into the School will be—

1. A certificate of a good moral character—2. A good English Education.

TERMS.

The [illegible] be [illegible] $2 50 per week [illegible] for young men in indigent circumstances.

All communications [illegible] Superintendent of the [illegible] Infirmary, on this Greenwich Post Paid will receive attention. W. BEACH.

U. S. Infirmary, Oct. 1, 1828—[illegible]

FOR SALE, and on a moderate Credit.

A good second hand Ogle GIG. For further information apply at the office of the Village Herald. Sept. 2, 1828.

EDUCATION.

MR. & MRS. HELLEN

Have determined to open a School,

For the Instruction of Youth of both sexes,

IN THIS TOWN,

To commence with the ensuing year.

In this school the ordinary branches of English education, such as Reading, Writing & Cyphering, together with Grammar and Geography, Surveying and Navigation, will be taught with diligence and care.

The direction of the female department, and smaller boys, will devolve on Mrs. Hellen, whilst the larger males, and students of the higher branches, will be instructed by Mr. Hellen.

Order and discipline will be observed in connexion with a due regard to respectful courtesy and decorous deportment throughout the school.

TERMS.

For the common course of English learning—one dollar per month. Pupils of the mathematical department will be subject to the usual additional charge. A proportion of firewood as customary.

Princess-Anne, Dec. 9.

Mr. & Mrs. H. will exhibit such testimonials as, they trust, will prove satisfactory.—Those who have given assurances of their patronage, will be waited upon for their signatures.

IN CHANCERY,

In Worcester County Court,

NOV TERM, 1828.

Zadock Long

vs

John C. Wilson and Levin Townsend, Admr. of Daniel Maddox

[illegible]

All that tract [illegible] called [illegible] [illegible] Also,

All that [illegible] called [illegible] Powell, esq. [illegible] day of January, 1822. Also,

All those tracts or parcels [illegible] Castle Hill [illegible] known or called [illegible] to the said Daniel Maddox [illegible] James Guthrie by [illegible] date the 22d day of February, 1822. Also,

All that [illegible] ground [illegible] Pocomoke river, supposed to contain 10 acres of land more or less, which was conveyed to the said Daniel Maddox by a certain Ambrose White, by deed bearing date the 15th day of February 1822. Also,

All those lots or parcels of ground lying and being situated in Snow Hill town, which the said Daniel Maddox, acquired by the following conveyances, to wit: all those lots or parcels of ground conveyed to the said Daniel Maddox by a certain Isaac Harris by deed bearing date the 12th day of September 1817, all those lots or parcels of grounds conveyed to the said Daniel Maddox by a certain John G. W. Waters, by deed bearing date the 1st day of January 1820, except that part of the said parcels of ground sold by the said Daniel Maddox, to a certain John S. Martin; all those lots or parcels of ground conveyed to the said Daniel Maddox by a certain George Hay [illegible] by deed bearing date the 9th day of [illegible] 1819, all those lots or parcels of ground conveyed to the said Daniel Maddox; [illegible] Visiters of the Levy Court of Worcester County by deed bearing date the 2[illegible] of July, 1811, all those lots or parcels of ground conveyed to the said Daniel Maddox by a certain Mary Corbin, John Corbin and [illegible] his wife by deed bearing date the 5th day of November 1816, together with the lots and houses adjoining thereto and all other of the real estate whereof the said Daniel Maddox died seized situated in Worcester County.

THE TERMS OF SALE.

Each purchaser will be required to execute a bond for the amount of his purchase with a surety or sureties to be approved by the Trustee, and interest will accrue upon the amount from the day of sale until payment. A credit of twelve months will be given to each purchaser.

Notice is hereby given

To each of the creditors of the said DANIEL MADDOX to exhibit their claims with proper vouchers in the office of the Clerk of Worcester County Court within six months from the said day of January next.

LEVIN TOWNSEND, Trustee.

Dec. 9, 1828 tf

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATIS

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, DEC. 16, 1828.

N. York Politics.

It appears by the N. York papers that a resolution has been introduced into the Legislature of that state, proposing an alteration of the existing electoral law from a choice by districts to a general ticket. This gives us much pleasure, particularly so, since we see that the journals of both political parties are decidedly in favour of choosing their electors by general ticket. They are of opinion that the district system universally adopted would best express the wishes of the people, and come nearest to voting directly for president and vice-president. "But, [says the Utica Intelligencer, an Adams paper,] as there is no hope that choosing by districts will be fixed upon in all the states, it becomes New-York to maintain her rights and adopt a plan which will secure the greatest possible influence." The Keesville Herald, also an Adams paper, says, as the project seems to be approved by the two great parties at Albany, we hope it will be carried into effect, that this great state may not again be divided against itself, as in the recent struggle—"A degredation, adds the Poughkeepsie Telegraph, "which we feel confident the people of this state will never be willing to have repeated."

Electoral Law in Md.

The result of the late Presidential Election, in this state, has confirmed us in the opinion, that the district system of choosing electors, especially while only partially in vogue, is subject to serious objections. The state is entitled to eleven electors—more than enough to neutralize one third of the influence of Pennsylvania, or almost equal to half the vote of Virginia. Yet the recent election demonstrates that Maryland, in the Presidential scale, is equal to only one-twenty-eighth of the weight of the former, or a twenty fourth of the latter—having given 6 of her votes for Mr. Adams, and 5 for Gen. Jackson, which reduced her influence to an eleventh of the strength allotted her. Again—The states, Mississippi, Missouri, and Illinois, having 3 electors each, and which appoint their electors by general ticket, taken together, possess, or ought possess, less weight than the single state of Maryland—but in consequence of our mode of choosing electors we are equal to only a third of one of these! and Maryland presents the humiliating spectacle of giving a solitary vote in the choice of President! All will see that this is owing to the district system—Maryland is divided against herself. If all the states in the Union were similarly situated the objection would disappear; but 18 of the 24 states appoint their electors by general ticket, and New-York, ever tenacious of her rights and influence, is on the eve of joining these.—Hence we incline to think that a proposition for a change of the law, in this state, to a general ticket, would meet the decided approbation of our citizens. We should prefer this next to electing the President and Vice President directly by the people, without the risk of an electoral college. An expression of public opinion, on this subject, through the medium of the press, would probably tend to bring it before our state Legislature at their next session.

Army Matters.

By an order from the Adjutant General's Office, dated 27th Nov. we find that Gen. SCOTT has been suspended from his command as Major General commanding the Western Department of the Army, and that Brigadier Gen. ATKINSON will immediately assume said command.

From another order we learn that Major Worth, the commander of the corps of Cadets at West Point, having requested to be relieved on the 1st of next January from the duties assigned him at the Military Academy, is relieved accordingly; and Capt. E. H. Hitchcock, who was for some time the assistant of Major Worth, is appointed his successor.

The Sabbath.

We incline to think that the custom of working in morning [daily] newspaper offices upon the Sabbath, which has for a long time prevailed in most of our cities, is likely to come to a termination. At least, we believe the time is at hand when great exertions will be made to do away this needless encroachment on the day set apart for rest: and if those who labour in morning offices will throw in their aid, a reformation may be soon brought about. The editors of the Baltimore American, in their paper of the 1st inst state, that they have endeavoured for some time past, so to arrange their affairs that as little labour as possible might be performed on Sunday; but the attempt has proved, as might be readily supposed, futile and unsatisfactory; and they have therefore come to the conclusion that it is only by an entire and conscientious suspension of the ordinary business of that office on the Sabbath, that they can be just, either to themselves, or those in their employ. Doubtless, those in their employ will cheerfully join the editors in this conclusion, and accede to the determination henceforth to "keep holy the Sabbath day." May many follow their example.

WILLIAM B. GILES, Esq. on Saturday the 6th inst. was re-elected Governor of Virginia, by the Legislature, for the ensuing 12 months, which will terminate the period for which he is constitutionally eligible.

WM. KING, of Maine, has been appointed, by the executive of that state, to a seat in the U. S. Senate, in room of Judge Parish, resigned.

New Shot Tower.

We are informed by the Baltimore American, that "the circular brick Tower erected by the Phoenix Company for making Shot, at the corner of Front and Pitt streets, has reached the intended elevation, being two hundred and thirty-four feet, three inches high from the pavement. Its diameter at the bottom is forty feet, and at the top, twenty.—The stone foundation wall is ten feet thick at the bottom, and six at the top. The brick work, which commences at the surface, is five feet and a half thick, of which thickness it continues for the height of nearly fifty feet, when it diminishes four inches in every story, being twenty inches thick at the top of the parapet; three feet in height, which crowns the summit. This huge structure, which is an excellent piece of brick-work, was commenced on the 2nd of June, and finished on the 25th of November, and was built without scaffolding. The parapet at the top is white, and somewhat resembles in its appearance a mural crown; and as the tower is well proportioned, the whole edifice is an ornamental feature in the prospect of the city."

Emmet's Monument.

Preparations are making in the city of New York, to erect an appropriate monument to the memory of this distinguished Patriot and Civilian. We understand that the plan adopted is of "an antique oblisk, thirty feet high, in a single piece of the finest white marble, bearing a sculptured profile of Emmet on one face, with a suitable inscription." The site is in St. Paul's cemetry, close to Broadway and within a few yards of the Monument of Montgomery. A printed circular has been issued by a committee, soliciting the exertions of those to whom it is addressed in favour of this laudable undertaking, to which we wish abundant success.—Journal Com.

Emigration.

The tide of Emigration West, chiefly to the Wabash tract, is immense. It is computed, in a letter we have seen from Indiana, that an accession of 50,000 must have been made to the population of that region this fall, or within the last four months.

[N. Y. Journal Com.

[From the Hartford Mirror.]

Perhaps it is due to some of our readers, to whom we have "held up" the idea, of Mr. Adams' re-election, that we confess we have been too sanguine. If such a confession will answer gentlemen—take it; we shall be glad to get off so.—Any thing but labouring in a good cause, for no "pay" but defeat and recrimination.

A GROAN FROM THE 67-Decent IRIS:

"Concocted in their best style."

"The Editor of the Village Herald seems very much disposed to maintain a contest with us; 'tis useless Corporal Johnny! we have no notion of engaging with a scavenger for the paltry consideration of gaining a dirty victory."—Iris of Dec. 9.

Whewh! what a thing it is to be beaten more than two to one! The malice exhibited in the above paragraph must be quite uncomfortable to one who labours under the mortification of defeat; and the reflection of having thus ignorantly exposed it must be still more humiliating. Why the fellow 's as mad as a March hare!—Only listen to him: He says he has no notion of gaining a dirty victory—because he cannot achieve a decent, honourable one, we suppose. No, indeed! blood cannot be extracted from a cabbage head, nor can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. As to his assertion, that we seem very much disposed to maintain a contest with the Sewer, every reader of our paper will know how to estimate it—beside, the character of the Iris is known.

P. S. Rumor says a certain stripling has undertaken the conducting of the Sewer—He 'd better tarry at Jericho!——. Hope an itch for bandying epithets may not get so far the better of his magnanimity as to suffer a reply to the above.

Congress.

TARIFF.—The decisive vote of yesterday against considering a proposition from Mr. Weems, on the Tariff, seems to leave no doubt of a present disposition not to agitate the question, at all at the present session. The Auction question, however, seems seriously to impend. A petition for duties and restraints upon auctions of foreign goods was yesterday presented by Mr. Johnson, from the citizens of New-York, having ten thousand signatures attached to it.

Nat. Intel. of Dec. 10.

Julia Brace.

The Hartford (Connecticut) Times, contains an account of this young lady, who is an inmate of the Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, in that place. Julia Brace was born deaf, dumb and blind, being but the second instance ever recorded, of so great a misfortune. Of a temper docile, she began early to display a degree of sagacity not always to be found in those who are endowed with the senses. Her parents being poor she was removed to the Asylum, where she is treated with great tenderness. Although cut off as it would seem from every source of information, she is very industrious and constantly employed. She makes beautiful counterpanes, and in threading her needle, seems chiefly guided by an application of the tongue. In the summer of 1826 we saw this young lady—she was engaged at work upon a pair of prunella Shoes, and specimens were exhibited, that would have done credit to the most skilful and experienced workmen. It cannot be supposed that she has any idea of the computation of time, yet she manifests a sacred observance of the Sabbath; on that day she lays aside her work and appears engrossed with the most serious reflection. Many little anecdotes are related in the Times, which show the incredible extent of her intelligence, and appear to settle the long contested point, that ideas are innate.

Blind Staggers.

The following article comes from a respectable source, and is entitled to consideration, particularly where the distemper it designs to remedy, prevails.

[N. Y. Evening Post.

"This disease appears to be a compression upon the brain, caused by a collection of wind and matter in the forehead. The writer witnessed a cure effected in the following manner: A hole was bored with a nail gimlet through the skull, on the curl of hair central between the eyes. In various instances he has heard of its being attended with uniform success. This remedy was discovered by an attempt to kill, and thus relieved a horse from the distress of this disease. His skull was fractured by the stroke of an axe. The morning following the horse was found feeding apparently well. The remedy may be applied by any person, as the horse very soon becomes helpless after the attack, and immediately relief is afforded by letting out the matter &c.

"Those who are too timid to try the above remedy, may resort to one less severe, and as the writer has understood from a credible source, equally successful. Make a vertical incision in the skin between the eyes; separate it from the skull, so as to make a sufficient cavity to contain a gill of salt. A cure very soon will be effected.

A Friend to a Valuable Animal."

FOR THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Plagiarism.

Don't be alarm'd, Mr. Editor; I mean no harm to an honest soul, sir, I assure you.—Just dropp'd in' to say that I have lately seen some original poetry—yes, original poetry. Well, originality is, sometimes, a recommendation. Is n't it? Say a piece of poetry appears thus—"FOR THE SOMERSET IRIS,—On Hope," and is modestly signed with a single initial, 'H' This excites curiosity—it sets people to wondering who 's the author, and withal the paper grows vastly respectable: Another piece follows—"FOR THE SOMERSET IRIS,—On Waste,' and this is signed 'A.' Why tis exquisite, supereminently exquisite, said one as he closed the paper. "That 's your sort," cried another before he had even read it, "there 's nothing can touch our paper.'——"At lying!' added a shrewd wag, who at the same time curiously shrugged up his shoulders and gave some odd winks, which doubtless had a meaning. At lying! thought I, and a certain old adage unceremoniously obtruded itself on my mind: I now grew suspicious, and trudged home to overhaul an old drawer which contains a variety of selections of choice pieces of poetry, some of which, tho' 20 times remodled and republished, occasionally meet my eye in a new garb, with "FOR THE"——something stuck at the top. Well, I was going to examine the contents of this drawer, but a late American Farmer arrested my attention, and in it (from the London Forget-me-not) some verses entitled 'Lights and Shades,' by Mrs. Hemans. These verses were for all the world, or as some folks would say, verbatim et literatim, like those which appeared in the Iris, of the 2nd inst. I now cast my eye upon the Baltimore Patriot, and discovered an Impromptu on Waste, by Edward Knight, Esq. precisely like the piece on the same subject in the Iris. Tut, tut, thinks I, that a person in Somerset county should, not only think, but write, to a letter, like the poets beyond the Atlantic, is miraculous—but then I'm told the day of miracles is gone by. Can you, Mr. Editor, unravel the mystery? Hope the pieces, in the Iris, were n't stolen, or any thing.

P. PRY, JR.

Dec. 10, 1828.

A letter from Alachera, Florida to the editor of the Augustine Herald, mentions the discovery of one of the "greatest mineral springs that ever was seen—not excepting the Saratoga Springs in the State of New York."

Philadelphia, Dec. 8.

The United States Sloop of War Vandalia, has we understand, received her sailing orders, and will drop down from New Castle, on Wednesday next. She is expected to relieve the Sloop of War Boston, at Brazil. This vessel, which will immediately be recognized as the one launched at the Navy Yard, at Philadelphia during the last fall, it is confidently expected, will exceed in sailing, any vessel of war built by our Government. Her strength and capacity are equal to her swiftness in sailing.—Poulson.

A letter from Washington, published in the New York Commercial Advertiser, states that Mr. Adams has made arrangements to reside the better part of each year at Washington. The Marylander of Saturday, in allusion to the circumstance, says that it is "believed to be his determination to write two works, which all will acknowledge will be of immense value to the literature of our country—the one, the Life of his late venerable and patriotic father—the other the History of his own times."

Baltimore American of Dec. 8.

CHANCES OF MARRIAGE.

The following table, constructed by Dr. Granville, from an examination of eight hundred and seventy six cases in lying in hospitals, &c. is the first ever submitted to females, to exhibit their chances of marriage at various ages.

Years of age		Years of age.		Years of age.
3 at 13		85 at 22		7 at 31
11 at 14		59 at 23		5 at 32
16 at 15		53 at 24		7 at 33
43 at 16		36 at 25		5 at 34
45 at 17		24 at 26		2 at 35
97 at 18		28 at 27		0 at 36
115 at 19		22 at 28		2 at 37
118 at 20		17 at 29		0 at 38
86 at 21		9 at 30		1 at 39

[American Farmer.

Foreign News.

From the N. Y. E. Post of Dec 9

LATE FROM ENGLAND.

London papers to the 1st Nov have been received at N. York. They contain the important intelligence of the FALL OF VARNA. The news having [illegible] the Russians under the walls of the fortress, were sprung on the 4th of Oct by which two breaches were made in the north bastion; on the 7th, the sharpshooters penetrated into the Bastion without firing a shot, killed and dispersed the soldiers by whom it was defended, and meeting no resistance were imprudently led to enter the town. The besiegers endeavoured to support them by making false attacks on various parts of the town, but notwithstanding this, the party that entered Varna, were obliged to retreat before the enemy. They brought with them many Christian women and children, and spiked 10 cannon in the north bastion. The Russian loss was estimated at 80 killed and 300 wounded, and that of the Turks at 600 On the 9th, Jussuff Pacha opened a negotiations with the besiegers and on the 11th capitulated. The garrison it appears amounted to but 6000 men.

LATEST FROM ENGLAND.

The American Farmer of last Friday says, "The Proprietor of the Baltimore Exchange Reading Rooms has received by the packet of the 2nd November at New York, information from Liverpool of a GREAT ADVANCE IN THE PRICE OF BREAD STUFFS. Wheat was as high as it had been at any time since harvest. It was supposed that bonded wheat would be admitted free of duty in a short time."

GREAT BRITAIN.—Meeting in Kent.

Pursuant to previous notice a great meeting was held on Penendon Heath on the 14th of October. It was called by the Anti-Catholic party, to adopt such measures as might be best calculated to support the established Protestant Faith. But the leaders of all parties and their followers were present. The number present was estimated at 30,000. The meeting was truly tumultuous.

The Dublin Evening Mail says, "There is an end of the Popish question in England for a long year. The triumphant assertion of constitutional principles resulting from the meeting at Penendon Heath will excite a corresponding expression from every county in England, and the King's Ministers will be made to feel that the Protestants of the empire are not to be trifled with."

LIVERPOOL.—The Liverpool papers in speaking of our commerce with that port, observes.—"Such is the falling off in American shipping at this port during the last quarter that scarcely 60 are reported, of the 160 in the corresponding quarter of the last year."

The "last quarter" alluded to is the first quarter under the new Tariff law, which if it remains unchanged, and we think it will remain so, will quarterly reduce our commercial relations with Great Britain, and the Consulate at Liverpool for which some important candidates intended to offer under the new administration, will literally be not worth contending for. The same papers state that nearly all the New York Packet ships have of late been seized in consequence of smuggling tobacco, by inferior officers and seamen, and the information of such exciseable articles being on board has been generally received from New-York—N. E. Enq.

FRANCE.—The Journal du Commerce, of Oct 17 publishes a statement of the revenue of France for the first 9 months of this year, which presents an amount of 548,191,000 francs, equal to about 22,000,000*l.* sterling. This amount exceeds that of the preceding year for the same period by 21,536,000 francs, or 861,344*l.* sterling. Of all the different branches of the revenue which have exceeded the returns of the preceding year, that of the Customs appears to have undergone the most material amelioration, presenting a surplus of 11,215,000 francs.

PARIS, Oct. 19.

Nothing is spoken of in the higher circles, but the disappearance and deplorable end of the Marquis de Falaiseau, Inspector General of the king's household. The police and the officers of justice are engaged in the investigation of this affair, which is said to be accompanied by horrible circumstances, and in which persons of some rank in the world are reported to be implicated. His family, it is said, has received a note, in which the victim announced, that being under the dagger, and having only a few moments at command before dying, he made use of them to give information concerning his melancholy fate. An event hitherto covered with a gloomy and mysterious veil, gives rise to innumerable conjectures. [W]hat is positively known is, that M. de Falaiseau has disappeared, and that no person is known which could have induced him to abscond or to conceal himself.

Mexico.

Notwithstanding the contiguity of Mexico to the United States, very little seems to be known by the mass of the people concerning it; many actually confounding it with Moscow, from the similarity of the sound of the two names, although the one is a religious nation and the other in Russia.—The present Republic of Mexico is composed of the provinces of the ancient Viceroyalty of New Spain, of Yucatan, of the Commandancies of the eastern and western internal provinces, and of Coahuila. The capital of Mexico is situated in an elevated valley of near 8000 feet above the level of the sea, and was formerly surrounded by a salt lake, (Tezcuco) but at an incredible expenditure of time and money, they have succeeded in draining it, leaving a marsh—varying from two to five miles in width. But a perpetual spring like temperature reigns, owing to its elevation, and is free from what would be the noxious exhalations of the marsh if situated in the same latitude on the coast; but throughout the valley of Mexico, the air is particularly salubrious, the inhabitants attaining to as great longevity as any in the world. The population of the city is similar to that of New York, being about 160,000 souls, of whom 12,000 are clergy, or attached to religious houses. The road from Vera Cruz is extremely rough and precipitous, in many places almost impassible—but to Acapulco, the nearest sea port on the Pacific, the route is one of gentle declivity. The distance from Vera Cruz is 207, and Acapulco 198 miles. According to Humboldt, the city was founded in 1325, on an island in the lake of Tezcuco. At the time Cortez conquered it, three fourths of the city was destroyed, both victor and vanquished uniting in the work of destruction; it is from its ruins the present Spanish city has arisen, one of the grandest and most splendid in the whole continent of America. The streets of the modern city are all laid out at right angles, and in the centre is a large square, where formerly stood the great Mexican temple, upon the ruins of which the present cathedral is built, the foundation being laid of Mexican idols. On the east side is the place built by Cortez, 700 feet long, terminating at the corner of the square leading to the market. The streets are well paved and have flagged walks of flat stones. The public edifices and churches are vast and splendid, and the private dwellings have a magnificent appearance, being usually three stories high with flat roofs, and the windows ornamented with iron Balconies. There are not less than 105 cupolas, domes or spires in the limits of the city. It would be needless for me to enter into a minute detail, especially since there is exhibiting in this city, such a splendid panoramic painting which ought not to remain unvisited by any one who would wish to know any thing of that interesting portion of our continent, and here he can form as good an idea of the actual appearance of Mexico and the surrounding country, as he could were he to view the city itself from the steeple of the cathedral. But, to continue, ignorance with all its attendant debasing concomitants, is the character of the mass of the population. The religion is that of the church of Rome. But in the remote residences of the Indians heathenism is not entirely abolished, although the severe penalties upon detection and the residence of the missionaries, might warrant a supposition to the contrary. The country possesses such vast resources, together with the salubrity of the climate, that, if it were ruled by people endowed with the intelligence and enterprize of the English Americans, (to use the term in contradiction to Spanish Americans,) it would without doubt be one of the greatest and consequently one of the most respected nations in the world. But alas! from its present abjectness of mind, owing to the want of education, merely, it is only to be feared for its prosperity than hoped.

Mex. [illegible]

Extracts from the President's Message.

[Th]e United States of America, and the [peop]le, of every State of which they are [comp]osed, are each of them Sovereign pow[ers.] The legislative authority of the whole [is ex]ercised by Congress under authority [gran]ted them in the common Consitution.—[The] legislative power of each State is exer[cised] by assemblies deriving their authority [from] the Constitution of the State. Each is [sove]reign within its own province. The dis[trib]ution of power between them presuppos[es th]at these authorities will move in harmo[ny] with each other. The members of the [Stat]e and General Governments are all un[der] oath to support both, and allegiance is [due] to the one and to the other. The case [of] conflict between these two powers had [not] been supposed; nor has any provision [been] made for it in our institutions; as a vir[tuou]s Nation of ancient times existed more [than] five centuries without a law for the pun[ishm]ent of parricide.

[T]he reports from the Secretary of War, [and] from the various subordinate offices of [the] resort of that Department, present an [expo]sition of the public administration of [affai]rs connected with them, through the [cour]se of the current year. The present state [of th]e army, and the distribution of the force [of w]hich it is composed, will be seen from [the] Reports of the Major General. Several [alter]ations in the disposal of the troops have [been] found expedient in the course of the [year,] and the discipline of the army, though [not] entirely free from exception has been [gene]rally good.

[T]he attention of Congress is particularly [invit]ed to that part of the Report of the Sec[retar]y of War which concerns the existing [syst]em of our relations with the Indian [tribe]s. At the establishment of the Federal [Gov]ernment, under the present Constitution [of t]he U. States, the principle was adopted [of c]onsidering them as foreign and indepen[dent] powers; and also as proprietors of [land]s. They were, moreover, considered as [sava]ges, whom it was our policy and our du[ty t]o use our influence in converting to [Chri]stianity, and in bringing within the pale [of c]ivilization.

[A]s independent Powers, we negotiated [with] them by treaties; as proprietors, we [purc]hased of them all the lands which we [coul]d prevail upon them to sell; as brethren [of] the human race rude and ignorant, we [end]eavoured to bring them to the knowledge [of r]eligion and of letters. The ultimate de[sign] was to incorporate in our own institu[tion]s that portion of them which could be [conv]erted to the state of civilization. In the [prac]tice of European States, before our Re[volu]tion, they had been considered as chil[dren] to be governed; as tenants at discre[tion], to be dispossessed as occasion might [requ]ire; as hunters, to be indemnified by [trif]ling concessions for removal from the [grou]nds upon which their game was extir[pate]d. In changing the system, it would [seem] as if a full contemplation of the con[sequ]ence of the change had not been taken. [We] have been far more successful in the [acqu]isition of their lands than imparting to [the]m the principles, or inspiring them with [the] spirit of civilization. But in appropriat[ing] to ourselves their hunting grounds, we [hav]e brought upon ourselves the obligation [of p]roviding them with subsistance; and [whe]n we have had the rare good fortune of [teac]hing them the arts of civilization, and [the] doctrines of Christianity, we have unex[pec]tedly found them forming, in the midst [of] ourselves, communities claiming to be in[dep]endent of ours, and rivals of sovereignty [wit]hin the territories of the members of our [Un]ion. This state of things requires that a [re]medy should be provided.

The Report from the Engineer Depart[me]nt presents a comprehensive view of the [pro]gress which has been made in the great [sy]stems promotive of the public interest, [co]mmenced and organized under the author[ity] of Congress, and the effects of which [ha]ve already contributed to the security, as [the]y will hereafter largely contribute to the [ho]nour and dignity of the nation.

The first of these great systems is that of [for]tifications, commenced immediately after [the] close of our late war, under the salutary [ex]perience which the events of that war had [im]pressed on our countrymen of its necessi[ty.] Introduced under the auspices of my im[me]diate predecessor, it has been continued [wi]th the persevering and liberal encourage[me]nt of the Legislature; and combined [wi]th corresponding exertions for the gradual [inc]rease and improvement of the Navy, pre[pa]res for our extensive country a condition [of] defence adapted to any critical emergen[cy] which the varying course of events may [br]ing forth. Our advances in these concert[ed] systems, have for the last ten years been [ste]ady and progressive; and in a few years [mo]re will be so completed as to leave no [ca]use for apprehension that our sea coast [wi]ll ever again offer a theatre of hostile in[va]sion.

The next of these cardinal measures of [po]licy, is the preliminary to great and last[ing] works of public improvement, in the sur[ve]y of roads, examination for the course of [ca]nals, and labours for the removal of ob[st]ructions of rivers and harbors, first com[m]enced by the Act of Congress of 30th A[pr]il, 1824.

The report exhibits in one table the funds [a]ppropriated at the last and preceding Ses[sio]ns of Congress, for all these fortifications, [su]rveys and works of public improvement; [th]e manner in which these funds have been [ap]plied, the amount expended upon the sev[er]al works under construction, and the fur[th]er sums which may be necessary to com[ple]te them. In a second, the works project[ed] by the Board of Engineers, which have [no]t been commenced, and the estimate of [th]eir cost.

In a third, the report of the annual Board [of] Visitors at the military Academy at West [Po]int. For thirteen fortifications erected on [va]rious points of our Atlantic coast from [Rh]ode Island to Louisiana, the aggregate ex[pe]nditure of the year has fallen a little short [of] one million of dollars.

For the preparation of five additional re[po]rts of reconnoissance and surveys since [th]e last Session of Congress, for the civil [co]nstructions upon thirty seven different [pu]blic works commenced, eight others for [w]hich specific appropriations have been [m]ade by Acts of Congress, and twenty one [i]ncipient surveys under the authority giv[en] by the Acts of 30th April, 1824, about [on]e million more of dollars have been drawn [fr]om the Treasury

To these two millions of dollars are to be added the appropriation of 250,000 dollars, to commence the erection of a Breakwater near the mouth of the Delaware river; the subscriptions to the Delaware and Chesapeak, the Louisville and Portland the Dismal Swamp, and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canals; the large donations of lands to the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Alabama, for objects of improvements within those States, and the sums appropriated for Light Houses, Buoys, and Piers, on the coast, and a full view will be taken of the munificence of the Nation in the application of its resources to the improvement of its own condition.

Of these great national undertakings, the Academy at West Point is among the most important in itself, and the most comprehensive in its consequences. In that institution, a part of the Revenue of the Nation is applied to defray the expenses of educating a competent portion of her youth, chiefly to the knowledge and duties of a military life. It is the living armory of the Nation. While the outer works of improvement enumerated in the reports now presented to the attention of Congress, are destined to ameliorate the face of nature; to multiply the facilities of communication between the different parts of the Union; to assist the labours, increase the comforts, and enhance the enjoyments of individuals—the instruction acquired at West Point enlargens the dominion and expands the capacities of the mind. Its beneficial results are already experienced in the composition of the army, and their influence is felt in the intellectual progress of society. The institution is susceptible still of great improvement from benefactions proposed by several successive Boards of Visiters, to whose earnest and repeated recommendations I cheerfully add my own.

With the usual annual reports from the Secretary of the Navy and board of Commissioners, will be exhibited to the view of Congress the execution of the laws relating to that Department of the public service.—The repression of piracy in the West Indian, and in the Grecian Seas, has been effectually maintained with scarcely any exception. During the war between the Governments of Buenos Ayres and of Brazil, frequent collisions between belligerent acts of power and the rights of neutral commerce occurred. Licentious blockades, irregularly enlisted or impressed seamen, and the property of honest commerce seized with violence, and even plundered under legal pretences, are disorders never separable from the conflict of wars upon the ocean. With a portion of them, the correspondence of our commanders on the Eastern aspect of the South American Coast, and among the Islands of Greece, discovered how far we have been involved. In these, the honour of our country and the rights of our citizens have been asserted and vindicated. The appearance of new squadrons in the Mediterranean, and the blockade of the Dardanelles, indicate the danger of other obstacles to the freedom of commerce, and the necessity of keeping our Naval force in those Seas.—To the suggestions, repeated in the report of the Secretary of the Navy, and tending to the permanent improvement of the institution, I invite the favourable consideration of Congress

A resolution of the House of Representatives, requesting that one of our small public vessels should be sent to the Pacific Ocean and South Sea, to examine the coasts, islands, harbors, shoals, and reefs in those seas, and to ascertain their true situation and description, has been put in a train of execution. The vessel is nearly ready to depart; the successful accomplishment of the expedition may be greatly facilitated by suitable Legislative provisions; and particularly by an appropriation to defray its necessary expense. The addition of a second, and, perhaps, a third vessel, with a slight aggravation of the cost, would contribute much to the safety of the citizens embarked on this undertaking, the results of which may be of the deepest interest to our country.

With the report of the Secretary of the Navy, will be submitted, in conformity to the Act of Congress of third March, 1827, for the gradual improvement of the Navy of the United States, statements of the expenditures under that act, and of the measures taken for carrying the same into effect. Every section of that statue contains a distinct provision, looking to the great object of the whole, the gradual improvement of the Navy. Under its salutary sanction, stores of ship-timber have been procured, and are in process of seasoning and preservation for the future uses of the Navy. Arrangements have been made for the preservation of the live oak timber growing on the lands of the United States, and for its reproduction, to supply at future and distant days, the waste of that most valuable material for ship building, by the great consumption of it yearly for the commercial as well as for the military marine of our country. The construction of the two Dry Docks at Charlestown and at Norfolk, is making satisfactory progress towards a durable establishment. The examinations and inquiries to ascertain the practicability and expediency of a Marine Railway at Pensacola, though not yet accomplished, have been postponed, but to be more effectually made. The Navy Yards of the United States have been examined and plans for their improvement, and the preservation of the public property therein, at Portsmouth, Charlestown, Philadelphia, Washington and Gosport, and to which two others are to be added, have been prepared, and received my sanction; and no other public duties has been performed with a more intimate conviction of its importance to the future welfare and security of the Union.

With the report from the Postmaster General, is exhibited a comparative view of the gradual increase of that establishment, from five to five years, since 1792, till this time, in the number of Post Offices, which has grown from less than two hundred to nearly eight thousand; in the revenue, yielded by them, which from sixty-seven thousand dollars, has swollen to upwards of a million and a half, and in the number of miles of Post Roads, which, from five thousand six hundred and forty two, have multiplied to one hundred and fourteen thousand five hundred and thirty-six. While, in the same period of time, the population of the Union has about thrice doubled, the rate of increase of these offices is nearly forty, and of the revenue, and of travelled miles, from twenty to twenty five for one. The increase of revenue, within the last five years, has been nearly equal to the whole revenue of the Department in 1812.

The expenditures of the Department during the year which ended on the first of July last, have exceeded the receipts by a sum of about twenty-five thousand dollars. The excess has been occasioned by the increase of mail conveyances, and facilities, to the extent of near eight hundred thousand miles. It has been supplied by collections from the Postmasters, of the arrearages of preceding years. While the correct principle seems to be, that the income, levied by the Department should defray all its expenses, it has never been the policy of this Government to raise from this establishment any revenue to be applied to any other purposes. The suggestion of the Postmaster General, that the insurance of the safe transmission of moneys by the mail might be assumed by the Department, for a moderate and competent remuneration, will deserve the consideration of Congress.

A report from the Commissioners of the Public Buildings in this City exhibits the expenditures upon them in the course of the current year. It will be seen that the humane and benevolent intentions of Congress in providing, by the Act of 20th May, 1826, for the erection of a Penitentiary in this District have been accomplished. The authority of further legislation is now required for the removal to this tenement of the offenders against the laws, sentenced to atone by personal confinement for their crimes, and to provide a code for their employment and government while thus confined.

The commissioners appointed conformably to the act 2nd March, 1827, to provide for the adjustment of claims of persons entitled to indemnification under the first Article of the Treaty of Ghent, and for the distribution among such claimants of the sum paid by the Government of Great Britain under the Convention of 13th November 1826, closed their labours on the 30th of August last, by awarding the claimants the sum of one million one hundred and ninety seven thousand four hundred and twenty-two dollars and eighteen cents; leaving a balance of seven thousand five hundred and thirty-seven dollars and eighty two cents, which was distributed rateably amongst all the claimants to whom awards had been made, according to the directions of the act.

The exhibits appended to the report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, present the actual condition of that common property of the Union. The amount paid into the Treasury from the proceeds of lands, during the year 1827, and the first half of 1828, falls little short of two millions of dollars. The propriety of further extending the time for the extinguishment of the debt due to the United States by the purchasers of the public lands, limited, by the act of 21st March last, to the fourth of July next, will claim the consideration of Congress, to whose vigilance and careful attention, the regulation, disposal, and preservation, of this great national inheritance, has by the people of the United States been entrusted. Among the important subjects to which the attention of the present Congress has already been invited, and which may occupy their further and deliberate discussion, will be the provision to be made for taking the fifth census or enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States. The Constitution of the United States requires that this enumeration should be made within every term of ten years, and the date from which the last enumeration commenced was the first Monday of August of the year 1820.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, 2 at the suit of George Maddox and Elizabeth Pyrl, Ex'rs. of Thomas Pyrl vs. Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Pats as against Elijah C. Johnson, and one other at the suit of Hannah Hearn, Ex'x of Wm. Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right, interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by L. D. Collier; also a house and Lot occupied by Amelia Nicholson; also one other occupied by Wm. S. Disharoon; also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esquire's Mill, it being the office of the said Elijah; also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which said land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson, of Levi Cathell, of a certain Absalom Phipps, also a clock and case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Waller, Esq. in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 22nd of Nov. next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Oct 28 lde

☞The above sale is postponed to Saturday the 6th of next December, at the hour and place above mentioned.

Nov 25 w2m

☞ The above sale is further postponed to Tuesday the 30th instant—hour and place of sale as aforesaid.

Dec 9 ww

For Rent,

For the ensuing year, a House and Lot in the village of White Haven, at present occupied by Edward U. Blake For terms apply to

MARCELLUS JONES

Sept. 9, 1828.

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form, and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE

ALSO,

A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks,

FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do after supersedeas,
C. I. SA's before supersedeas,
Do. do after supersedeas.
WARRANTS.

Baltimore Prices Current.

Dec. 12, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $8 a 9; superfine Howard-st. 7.00 a 7.25; city mills 6.50; Susquehanna, 6.75 a 7.00; WHEAT, best red 1.50 a 1.60; best white 1.60 a 1.75—CORN, old, .46 a .47; new 43 a 45

TRUSTEE's SALE.

In Chancery in Somerset County Court.

BENJAMIN PARSONS

vs.

Elijah Parsons, administrator of William Miller, Eliza Miller, Harriot Miller, Juliana Miller, Peggy Miller, and Nicey Miller, children and heirs at law of William Miller.

BY virtue of a decree of Somerset county court, in the above cause, the undersigned will offer at PUBLIC SALE, to the highest and best bidder, in the town of Salisbury, Maryland, at the auction room of James L. Waller, esq. on SATURDAY the 27th of DECEMBER, instant, all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of which William Miller, late of said county, deceased, died seized and possessed, in and to a House and Lot, together with the buildings and improvements, and all other the appurtenances thereto belonging, situated at Shad Point, in said county, on the south side of Wicomico river, being part of a tract of land called Cherry Hill, and the same lot on which the said William Miller resided at the time of his death; also a lot of ground, in the said county, which the said William purchased of capt. Peter Dashiell, by deed bearing date 3d of September, 1814, being part of a tract of land called Prospect Hill; also a lot of ground, in the said county, which the said William Miller purchased of the said Peter Dashiell, by deed bearing date the 30th of August, 1815, being part of a tract of land call Cherry Hill.

The terms of sale will be thirty dollars cash, and a credit of twelve months for the residue, the purchaser or purchasers giving bond or bonds to the trustee, with approved security, bearing interest from the day of sale. Upon the ratification of the sale by the court, and the payment of the whole of the purchase money to the trustee, the trustee is directed by the said decree, to execute to the purchaser or purchasers, his, her or their heirs, a deed for the property, to him, her or them sold, conveying the title of the complainant and defendants in the premises. The sale will commence at 11 o'clock A. M.

Notice is hereby given,

To the creditors of the said WILLIAM MILLER, that they must bring in their claims against the said William, with the vouchers thereof, and lodge the same with the clerk of Somerset county court, within six months from the day of sale.

WILLIAM W. HANDY, Trustee

Princess-Anne, Dec. 2, 1828 wll

Marshal's Sale.

BY virtue of a writ of Vend Exponas issued out of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for Maryland District, and to me directed, at the suit of the United States against Robert J. H. King, garnishee of John B. Marris, administrator of Wm. H. Winder, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit, one tract of Land called Partner's Chance, and one tract called Kings Purchase, containing 707½ acres, more or less, and I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, the above mentioned property, on Tuesday the 16th day of December next, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. at the court house door in Princess Anne.

HUMPHREY HUMPHREYS,
Dep. Marshal Som. county.

Nov 25 mw?

Late Sheriff's Sale.

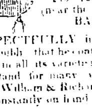
BY virtue of two writs of Venditioni Exponas issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed at the suit of Esther Broughton, administratrix of Josiah Broughton against Charles Jones, I shall proceed to sell at public auction, at the court house door in Princess Anne, in Somerset county, Maryland, on Tuesday the 16th day of December next, between the hours of eleven o'clock A. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash, all the lands mentioned in the said writs of Venditioni Exponas, the lands purchased of Thomas Jones, containing three hundred and seventy five acres, more or less, being the same lands which the said Charles Jones purchased of the said Thomas Jones and for the conveyance of which, the said Jones executed a bond of conveyance to the said Charles, dated the seventh day of November, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and seventeen, being part of a tract of land called "Bridges Lot, lying and being situated on Mew kin river between Jones's Creek and a tract of land belonging to Littleton I. Dennis, situated on the west side of the public road leading from Princess Anne to Long's Mills more formerly Waggerman's mills—which said land I shall proceed to sell on the day and at the place aforesaid to satisfy the debt, damages and costs in the said writs specified.

ROBT. STEWART, Late Shff.

Nov 25 mm

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. Hall.)



Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk-Maker,

No. 127 Market Street, (near the new City Hotel,) BALTIMORE.

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old established stand for many years occupied by Messrs. William & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a

Large and General Assortment of

Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks, Veleices, Saddle-bags, Collars, Military Equipments, &c.

of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this or any other city.

August 19th, 1828. 1y

FOR SALE,

My half of the Schooner Fair American

Apply to WM. T. G. POLK.

Dec. 9 mm

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers,

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 dozen Butter Prints

200 groce of Lamp Wicks, assorted sizes; Spickets and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels kegs and hydrants; sweeping, shoe, scrubbing, dusting, white-wash, weavers and other Brushes; scale bed & sacking Cords; plough Lines; course and fine Twine, Weavers Slays or Reeds; woolen, cassinet, cotton and hand Shuttles; cotton and wool Cards; fancy and common Bellows; Fishing Tackle; lamp and candle Wick; corn Brooms and Whisks; market and close Baskets, long and short Brush Handles; Lemon Squeezers Rolling Pins, Potatoe Mashers; Mulders; towel Rollers; wash & cake Boards; shovels, tubs clothes Pins: humming and common Tops; Sifters; box and cake Blacking; butter Bowls; Trays, Spoons and Paddles; Trenchers; crabing and cabbage Netts.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.

Baltimore, 12th mo 9th

Dissolution of Partnership.

The PARTNERSHIP hertofore existing between Wm. Gunby & John Noble, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will in future be continued under the firm of William & John Gunby, who respectfully solicit a share of public patronage.

☞All persons indebted to the late firm will please come forward and make immediate payment, as it is absolutely necessary that the accounts of that concern should be settled without delay.

Nov 25 tf

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street.
BALTIMORE.

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. wm

Bible Society.

THE several Agents of the Somerset Bible Society are informed that they will receive Bibles and Testaments to supply the destitute in their neighbourhoods upon application to the agent, Mr. William Done—and those who have collected any funds to aid in purchasing the books, will pay them to the same gentleman.

Nov 4 mj?

TRUSTEE's SALE.

In Chancery in Somerset County Court.

JOHN P. GALE

vs.

George Twilley and Maria his wife, administrators of William Twilley, Samuel Jones Twilley and Anne Maria Twilley, children and heirs at law of William Twilley.

BY virtue of a decree of [illegible] court in this cause [illegible] fer at PUBLIC [illegible] best bidder in the [illegible] erset county, Maryland [illegible] John S. Hill, [illegible] of December, [illegible] Estate, whereof the [illegible] died seized, being [illegible] Quantico, which the [illegible] John P. Gale, the [illegible] known by the name of [illegible] 90 acres, more or less, [illegible] Wrington; also [illegible] Quantico branch, [illegible] to a certain Elizabeth [illegible] with the mills [illegible] Mills.

The terms of sale [illegible] months for the one half of the purchase money, and eighteen months for [illegible] the purchaser or purchasers giving bonds with approved security, [illegible] terest from the day of sale. Upon ratification of the sale by the court, and payment of the purchase money to the Trustee, the Trustee is directed by the said decree to execute to the purchaser or purchasers, his, her or their heirs, a Deed for the property to him, her or them sold, conveying the title of the complainant and defendants in the premises. The sale will commence at [illegible] o'clock P. M.

Notice is hereby given

To the creditors of the said WILLIAM TWILLEY, late of the said county deceased, that they must bring in their claims against the said William, with the vouchers thereof, and lodge the same with the Clerk of Somerset county court within six months from the day of sale.

GEORGE TWILLEY, Trustee.

Quantico, Nov 24, 1828. fft

P. S. The widow's dower will be reserved.

THE CORNUCOPIÆ.

"Blending the useful with the sweet."

The author of the following lines, which were presented to us in the hand-writing of a lady, is unknown to us. As we have no recollection of ever seeing them in print—a destination of which they certainly appear worthy—we give them a place in the Herald.

HOME.

Oh! where shall the soul find relief from its foes
A shelter of safety, a home of repose?
Can earth's highest summit, or deepest hid vale,
Give refuge where sorrow nor sin can assail?
No, no, there's no home, there's no home, on earth
The soul has no home.

Shall it leave the low earth & soar to the sky,
And seek for a home in the mansions on high?
In the bright realms of bliss will a dwelling be given,
And the soul find a home in the glory of Heaven?
Yes, yes, there's a home, there's a home, in high Heaven
The soul has a home.

Oh! how holy & sweet its rest shall be there,
Free forever from sin, from sorrow and care,
And the loud hallelujahs of angels shall rise,
To welcome the soul to its home in the skies;
Home, home, sweet, sweet home, there's no place like home,
There's no place like home.

And that which makes home most delightful of all,
Is the presence of Jesus, the friend of my soul;
The bliss of retirement, when Jesus is nigh,
Exceeds all the delights pomp and riches can buy;
Home, home, sweet, sweet home, there's no place like home,
There's no place like home.

In sickness and sorrow to him I'll repair,
And on his kind bosom recline all my care;
A friend ever present, in Jesus, I'll find,
Whose aid all sufficient can give to my mind
Home, home, sweet, sweet home, there's no place like home,
There's no place like home.

In life he'll be with me, its tempests to calm,
In death he'll attend me, its terrors disarm,
Conduct me thro Jordan, & cause me to rise
To my home of eternity enthron'd in the skies
Home, home, sweet, sweet home, there's no place like home.
There's no place like home.

FROM THE N. Y. MIRROR.

THE IMPASSIONED WAVE.

'Tis sweet upon th' impassion'd wave
To hear the voice of music stealing,
And while the dark winds wildly rave,
To catch the genuine soul of feeling;

While all around the ether clear,
Its dim majestic beam is shedding,
And rosy tints of heavenly hue,
Are thro' the midnight darkness spreading

So is it when the thrill of love,
Through every burning pulse is flowing;
And like the foliage of the grove,
A holy light on all bestowing!

O! never from this fever'd heart
Shall dreams on wings of gold be flying;
But e'en when life itself shall part,
I'll think on thee, sweet maid, tho' dying!

'Twas thus, upon the mountain's height,
Young Dermod sung his plaint of sorrow,
Regardless of the evening light,
That ushers in the gay to morrow!

For love had on his cheek bereft
That smile—that glow—of joyous gladness,
And sympathy's cold sting had left
Nought there but pale & gloomy sadness!

[COMMUNICATED.]

Mr. Editor.

The following is extracted from one of the most exquisite pieces of composition that adorned the age of Louis the Fourteenth—a composition that admirably conceals under the veil of the beautiful, the elegant and often the sublime, the instructive and the moral. Such is the character of the following extract. He represents his hero as asleep when this useful and impressive lesson was given, to him, which he relates in the following figurative style:

[Translation from the French.]

Suddenly I thought I saw Venus streaming through the clouds in her flying chariot conducted by two doves. She had that radiant beauty, that lively youthfulness, those tender graces, which appeared in her when she sprang from the foaming ocean and by which she dazzled the eyes of Jupiter. She descended, with a rapid evolution, to my side; placing her hand on my shoulder, with a gracious smile and calling my name pronounced these words: Young man, you are about to enter my imperial dominions; you will arrive ere long in that happy isle, where smiles and wanton pleasures spring from my very foot-steps. There, you will burn incense on my altars; there, you will plunge yourself into a river of delights. Open your heart to the most delightful hopes, and beware how you resist the most powerful of all other goddesses who wishes to make you happy:

At the same time, I saw the infant Cupid, whose little fluttering wings hovered around his mother. Although his countenance was marked with the fondness, the graces and the sprightliness of his infancy, he had something indescribable in his piercing eyes which made me tremble. He smiled as he regarded me: that smile was malicious, scornful, and cruel. He took from his golden quiver, the sharpest of his arrows, he bent his bow and was about to pierce me; when Minerva suddenly made her appearance to protect me with her shield. The countenance of that goddess had not the luxurious beauty and love-sick languor that I had remarked in the countenance and attitude of Venus. There was on the contrary, a simple, unaffected and modest beauty: her whole mien was dignified, vigorous, noble,—full of force and majesty. The arrow of Cupid, not being able to pierce the shield, fell to the earth. Cupid indignant sighed bitterly at this, ashamed to see himself thus foiled. Far away from here, cried Minerva, far away, thou rash infant! You will never prevail except over lascivious spirits that prefer thy indelicate pleasures to wisdom, virtue and glory.

At these words Cupid irritated flew away, and Venus re-ascending, towards Olympus, for a long time I saw her chariot with her two doves in a cloud of golden azure—then she disappeared. Then turning my eyes to the earth I beheld Minerva no more.

FENELON.

SELECTED FOR THE V. HERALD.

Love in Woman.

It is a common thing to laugh at all love stories, and to treat the tales of romantic passion as mere fictions of poets and novelists, that never existed in real life. My observations on human nature have convinced me of the contrary, and have satisfied me, that however the surface of the character may be chilled and frozen by the cares of the world, and the pleasures of society, still there is a warm current of affection running through the depths of the coldest heart, that prevents its being utterly congealed. Indeed I am a true believer in the blind deity, and go to the full extent of his doctrines.—Shall I confess it?—I believe in broken hearts, and the possibility of dying of disappointed love! I do not, however, consider it a malady often fatal to my own sex; but I firmly believe that it withers down many a lovely woman into an early grave.

Man is the creature of interest and ambition. His nature leads him forth into the struggle of the world. Love is but the embellishment of his early life, or a song piped in the intervals of the acts. He seeks for fame, for fortune, for space in the world's thought, and dominion over his fellow men. But a woman's whole life is a history of the affections. The heart is her world; it is there her ambition strives for empire; it is there her avarice seeks for hidden treasures. She sends forth her sympathies on adventure; she embarks her whole soul in the traffic of affection; and if shipwrecked, her case is hopeless—for it is a bankruptcy of the heart.

To a man the disappointment of love may occasion some bitter pangs; it wounds some feelings of tenderness—it blasts some prospects of felicity; but he is an active being—he can dissipate his thoughts in the whirl of varied occupation or plunge into the tide of pleasure; or, if the scene of disappointment be too full of painful associations, he can shift his abode at will, and taking as it were, the wings of the morning, he can fly to the uttermost parts of the earth, and be at rest.

But woman's is comparatively a fixed, a secluded, and a meditative life. She is more the companion of her own thoughts and feelings; and if they are turned to ministers of sorrow, where shall she look for consolation? Her lot is to be wooed and won; and if unhappy in her love, her heart is like some fortress that has been captured, and sacked, and abandoned and left desolate.

How many bright eyes grow dim—how many soft cheeks grow pale—how many lovely forms fade away into the tomb, and none can tell the cause that blighted their loveliness. As the dove will clasp its wings to its side, and conceal the arrow that is preying on its vitals, so it is the nature of woman, to hide from the world the pangs of wounded affection. The love of a delicate female is always shy and silent: even when fortunate, she scarcely breathes it to herself; but when otherwise, she buries it in the recesses of her bosom, and there lets it cower and brood among the ruins of her peace. With her the desire of the heart has failed. The great charm of existence is at an end. She neglects all the cheerful exercises that gladden the spirits, quicken the pulse, and send the tide of life in healthful currents through the veins. Her rest is broken—the sweet refreshment of sleep is poisoned by melancholy dreams—"dry sorrow drinks her blood," until her enfeebled frame sinks under the last external assailment. Look for her, after a little while, and you find friendship weeping over her untimely grave, and wondering that one, who but lately glowed with all the radiance of health and beauty, should now be brought down to "darkness and the worm." You will be told of some wintry chill, some slight indisposition, that laid her low—but no one knows the mental malady that previously sapped her strength, and made her so easy a prey to the spoiler.

She is like some tender tree, the pride and beauty of the grove: graceful in its form, bright in its foliage, but with the worm preying at its core. We find it suddenly withering, when it should be most fresh and luxuriant. We see it drooping its branches to the earth, and shedding leaf by leaf; until wasted and perished away, it falls even in the stillness of the forest; and as we muse over the beautiful ruin, we strive in vain to recollect the blast or thunderbolt that could have smitten it with decay.

I have seen many instances of women running to waste and self neglect, and disappearing gradually from the earth, almost as if they had been exhaled to Heaven; and have repeatedly fancied, that I could trace their deaths through the various declensions of consumption, cold, debility, languor, melancholy, until I reach the first symptom of disappointed love.

Progress of Error.

"Avoid the progress of error."

Great crimes generally spring from small beginnings, as well as great trees and great cities. The heart grows hard and wicked by degrees, and probably the worst man that ever lived can recollect a time when he shuddered, and hesitated at the idea of committing a small offence. The truth should be often impressed on the young—say to them "avoid the appearance of evil," for every time you deliberately do a wrong thing, you pour a dose of poison into the heart, which will tend to destroy conscience, and break down the principles of virtue, you ought to cherish.

The traveller who put up at the old sign of gen. Wayne, in Alesbury, some fifteen or 18 years ago, I promise you, did not leave that house without shaking hands with, and praising somewhat, Montgomery Rosco, the inn keeper's son, as fine a little boy as ever blessed a parent with the full blossoming of of early promises. He was so obedient to his parents, so attentive and respectful to strangers, so kind and invariably polite to every one, and with all, he learned so smart at school, that every one loved and admired him.

Few youth ever left home with finer prospects and with better character than did Montgomery, when at the age of 15, he was sent to Philadelphia, and put under the care of a business doing merchant, that he might get such insight into the business as would justify his father in setting him up in a store in Alesbury, for this was the destiny he had marked out for his favourite child. His history is directly in point in establishing what I said at the beginning; and though few may have passed through as singular a complication of circumstances in their way, I am fully satisfied that his, in all its main and general features, is the history of thousands.

I said he was apprenticed to a merchant; it was Mr. Markley; his master esteemed him highly and placed in him unlimited confidence. For a little while he remembered the kind admonitions of his faithful father of selecting company—was conscientious in the discharge of every duty—and tried as well as he was able to avoid the appearance of evil. One day, however, he went to a neighbouring store a moment to see a young gentleman and returned a borrowed book. His friend, very politely, drew a glass of wine from one of the casks, and pressed him to drink—he did so and departed.

The next day the same person stepped to see him—he happened to be alone—and the strong desire not to be behind hand with his new neighbour, overcame the scruples of conscience; and he treated him in return to a glass of wine. In the hurry of the moment, he did not stop the liquor properly. His master came in—saw the neglect, and enquired—"Montgomery, have you been at the wine cask?" It was an awful moment to him, he dare not pause to think—he yielded to another temptation, and answered, trembling, "no, sir, I have not."—The old gentleman looked at him most searchingly—then turned and stopped the liquor tight himself.

The next morning the same young gentleman stepped into the store and asked Mr. M. to sell him a cask of such wine as Montgomery had given him the evening before. Mr. M. looked at Montgomery again, as if to tell the truth next time. The exposure was too humiliating for the high spirited youth to bear. He saw his friend and entreated him to tell Mr. M. that he drew the wine himself. His friend laughed and told him he would for an oyster supper. The bargain was struck—he acquitted Montgomery in Mr. Markley's eyes; but the poor boy was destitute of money. He had already taken some long steps aside. He took another and resorted to his master's drawer for money to meet the expense of the supper he had promised.

While they sat in the cellar to which they had repaired, a gaming board was produced; and he was asked to play for a small sum.—The thought struck him that here was a chance to win the money he had taken from his master, and return it. He played and lost. He played again and again, still he lost.

His error was now of an alarming character. He became desperate—he took the further sums from the counter, which were necessary to pay what he borrowed and lost. It was missed—he saw himself liable to be discovered and ruined, and resolved at a single effort to retrieve his character, by procuring the sum deficient, and depositing it somewhere where it might seem to have been overlooked.

He rose, late at night—entered the store, took two hundred dollars and went to a gambling house, where he was confident he could very easily win the money.—He lost it every cent. The morning came—Mr. M. happened not to examine the drawer which had contained the money himself; and at ten o'clock told Montgomery to carry it to the old bank. Mr. Markley had a large deposite in another bank, and the infatuated youth drew a check on that bank, for the $200; signed his master's name to it, presented it; and was detected. He confessed the whole affair when it was too late; he had intended to deposite the money he thus attempted to draw in lieu of the money lost, and depended on chance to conceal the crime yet a little longer.

Poor fellow, I saw him once afterwards, and with a tear in his eye, and grasping my hand he said—"I am going to the state prison, for a six penny glass of wine"—alluding to the first error he committed and which had led to all the rest.

Statistics of Turkey.

The appellation of "TURK" was first adopted in the middle ages, as a general title of honour to all nations composing the two branches of Tarter and Mogul. The word "Tur," as an adjective, signifies "sublime & pre-eminent"—as a substantive, it means "a governor."

The Divan—This State Council meets twice a week in the Emperor's palace, on Sundays and Thursdays. The Grand Vizier is the presiding officer; the six Viziers of the bench, the Testerdar or high Treasurer, the Reis Effendi, the Commissioners of the Exchequer, and the military leaders (the Agas,) compose the Divan. The Sultan does not enter the room, but from an adjoining chamber he hears all that passes.

On great occasions a general council is convened; all the leading persons of the empire are summoned—the clergy, the military and other officers, and even the old and most experienced soldiers attend. Such a Divan is called "Ajak Divani."

The Grand Vizier.—This officer receives his appointment from the Sultan. He has the care of the whole empire; he manages the revenue, administers justice (both in civil and criminal affairs,) and commands the armies. Upon his appointment, the Sultan puts into his hands the seal of the empire, which is the badge of his office, and which he always wears on his breast. His income amounts to six hundred thousand dollars a year, exclusive of presents and other perquisites.

The Viziers of the Bench are styled Bashaws of three horse tails—three horse tails being carried before them when they march.

Begler-Beg.—A Begler-Beg is a Viceroy with several provinces under his command.

Puchas.—A Pacha (Bashaw) is a Governor under a Begler-beg; a Sangiac is a Deputy Governor.

The Reis Effendi is the lord Chancellor and Secretary of State, the name signifies "chief of the writers."

The Testerdar is the High Treasurer. The Public Treasury is never touched, even by the Sultan, except in cases of the utmost emergency.—The Sultan has his private Treasury, which he uses at will. Some idea may be formed of the enormous wealth in the Public Treasury, which has been accumulating under forty Sultans, from a statement of Prince CANTEMER. He says, that in his time, thirteen millions and a half of rix dollars were annually returned to the two Treasuries.

The Mufti is the Chief Ecclesiastic. His name signifies "an expounder of the law"—he is consulted on all emergencies. Should he commit treason, he is punished in a curious manner: he is put into a mortar, in one of the Seven Towers, and there the law expounder is pounded to death. Such a punishment has not been inflicted since the reign of Amurath IV.

Musselman.—This term is a corruption of "Moslemim," which signifies "persons professing the doctrine of Mahomet."

The horse tails.—Three horse-tails surmounted by a golden ball, form the military ensign of the Ottomans. Its origin was as follows: One of their generals was at a loss how to rally his men, their standard having been lost in a fierce conflict. He cut off a horse's tail, and elevated it on the point of a spear. His troops renewed the fight and came off conquerors.

The Sublime Porte.—Constantinople is styled "The Sublime Porte—the Porte of justice, majesty and felicity." There have been various disputes about the origin of this appellation. Payne, an eminent geographer of the last century, says that it is derived from the magnificent gate built by Mahomet II. at the principal entrance of the Seraglio.

Constantinople.—It is wonderful how little is generally known with regard to this magnificent city. Its situation is the most delightful in the world.—What a harbour affording room for a thousand ships—with the Bosphorus on its east, the natural current of the wealth of Asia is through the Bosphorus, and with Marmora on its south and west; the productions of Arabia, Egypt and Europe, are at the command of its commerce. In the hands of a commercial nation, it would soon become the centre of the commercial world. It is encompassed by walls which have twenty-two gates—six towards the land, six along the port, and ten on the Marmora; these have stairs and landing places.

Constantinople, like Rome, is an "urbs septicolis." Its seven hills rise from the shore in the form of an amphitheatre; gardens, cypress groves, palaces and mosques rise one above the other, and present a view worthy of all admiration. The castle of the Seven Towers is used as an honorable prison. A square tower stands in the sea, memorable as the prison of Belisarius. Near this, are a great many cannon, level with the water, and guarding the entrance of the port and the Seraglio."

The Seraglio.—This word signifies "a palace." It is a collection of palaces, a mile and a half in compass enclosed by a strong wall on which are several watch-towers where a guard is kept by night and day. The principal gate is of marble, and is called The Rote. The gardens are very extensive, the buildings are of white stone, crowned with guilded turrets, and shining in surpassing splendor.

St. Sophia—The Church of St. Sophia, (Divine Wisdom) was built by Justinian, in the 6th century. The dome is 118 feet in diameter, resting on arches, supported by immense marble pillars, and the staircase and pavement are also marble. Here is the tomb of the Emperor Constantine.

The Exchanges are splendid buildings and the richest and rarest productions of the east are daily sold in them, in large quantities. Add to these numerous mosques, the thirty churches of the Greeks, and those of the Armenians, the many private palaces, public buildings, and you have some idea of the opulence and splendor of the Great Ottoman Empire.

N. Y. Courier.

Perhaps it is not generally known that the reason why the shoemakers do not work on Mondays originated in the following tradition: While Oliver Cromwell lay encamped at Perth, he received the intelligence of the death, by self-destruction, of John Monday, one of his most zealous and active partisans, who lived at a village which now bears his name, a little to the north of Damhead. Out of respect to the memory of honest John, the lord Protector issued a proclamation through Perth, wherein he offered a reward to the person who should compose the best lines on the death of Monday. Among the claims for the promised reward was a worthy son of St. Crispin, belonging to the "Fair City," who verbatim, repeated the following lines:

"Blessed be the Sabbath day,
And cursed be worldly pelf;
Tuesday will begin the week,
Since Monday's hanged himself."

Cromwell was so well pleased with this jeu d'esprit of the Souter's that the reward was not only awarded him; but he also ordered that the shoemakers should have henceforth the Monday of each week as a holyday.

[Perth Courier.

A country doctor, of homely breeding, courted a brisk girl, the daughter of a farmer, and was persuaded by her father to marry him, he having a pretty good estate. Accordingly, the day was appointed. But shortly after, spying a mare on which the old man used to ride, and which for her easy gait was much esteemed, he, the doctor, desired to have her given in to complete his matrimonial bargain, but, being refused, he flung away in a huff, and told the father he would keep his daughter. The girl was delighted with this rupture; but soon after the doctor repented of his folly, and came again to see her, when she was at home alone. She pretended to have no knowledge of him. "Why it is strange," said he "that you should so soon forget me. I am your own admirer the doctor."

"I cry you mercy," replied she, "I don't remember me of such a person; you are the gentleman who came wooing my father's gray mare. Your mistress is grazing in the orchard, and you may make your address to her if you please."

It is scarcely necessary to add, that this repartee so dashed him that he never had the face to speak to her afterwards.

Contents of the American Farmer

Of December 5, 1828.

On the Culture, Gathering and Drying of the Indigo plant, and the Manufacture of Indigo, by the Marquis de Pougens—On the Feeding of Horses, from London—Eye, of Agri.—Winter Food for Cows—Extraordinary Fly in the Cherokee County—Kitchen Garden for December—To Promote the Germination of certain Seeds—Mexican Squashes—Pomegranates in Accomack County, Virginia—Comparative Cost and Advantages of Free and Slave labour—Cure for the Blind Staggers—Report of the Lehigh Canal Company of Pennsylvania—Lodge Lights and Sha[illegible] the A[illegible] George's Church—Duke of St. Albans—grand day of Falconry—Trade of the Susquehanna; Economy; Editorial; President—Election Returns—News from South America and Europe—Prices at Liverpool—Prices Current of Produce at Baltimore.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., TUESDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1828. NO. 39.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞All communications addressed to the editor must come POST PAID.

COURSE OF EXCHANGE,

Cohen's Office, Baltimore, Nov 27, 1828.

BANKS	pr. ct. dis.	BANKS	pr. ct. dis.
U. States Bank	par	Farmers bank and branches	1
Do Branches	par	Wilmington and Brandywine	½
MASSACHUSETTS		Commercial bank	1
Boston banks	1	Branch of do. at Milford	2
Other Mass notes	2	Bank of Smyrna	1
RHODE ISLAND		MARYLAND
Providence banks	2	Frederick city bank	½
Other R. Island notes	3	Havre de Grace	par
CONNECTICUT		Farmers bank at Annapolis	½
Middletown bank	1	Branches at Frederick & Easton	do
Phenix bank at Hartford	1	Hagerstown	do
Bridgeport bank	1	Westminster	do
Eagle bank of New Haven	no sale	Elkton	susp
Hartford bank	1	DISTRICT OF COL.
NEW-YORK		Bk of Washington	½
N Y city banks (except Lombard)	par	Bk of the Metrop.	do
Albany	½	Patriotic bank	do
Other N York notes	1	Central bank	do
NEW-JERSEY		Bk of Columbia	nom
Jersey bank	no sale	Union bk Georgetown	[illegible]
Bank in Newark	1	Farmers & Mechanics bank	do
Bank of N Brunswick	1	Bk of Alexandria	do
Trenton Ins. Co	1	Bk of Potomac	do
Farmers bank of Mount Holly	1	Farmers bk of Alexandria	do
Cumberland bk	1	[illegible] Bk of Alex'a	do
State bk Camden	[illegible]	[illegible] bk of Alexandria	do
At Elizabethtown	[illegible]	VIRGINIA
At N Brunswick	[illegible]	[illegible] & branches	½
At Patterson	1	Bk of the Valley	do
At Trenton	no sale	Br at Leesburg	do
At Morristown	1	Br at Charlestown	do
Sussex bank	1	[illegible]	[illegible]
PENNSYLVANIA		[illegible]	[illegible]
Philadelphia banks	par	[illegible]	[illegible]
Easton	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Germantown	[illegible]	N. CAROLINA
Montgomery county	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Chester	do	Cape Fear	1
Delaware	do	Newbern	[illegible]
Lancaster bank	do	S. CAROLINA
Farmers bk of Lancaster	[illegible]	State banks generally	2
Harrisburg	[illegible]	GEORGIA
Northampton	[illegible]	State bank	2
Farmers bank of Bucks county	1	Planters	2
York bank	[illegible]	Augusta	2
Chambersburg	[illegible]	Darien	5
Farmers bank at Reading	[illegible]	[illegible]	no sale
Gettysburg	do	KENTUCKY
Carlisle bk	[illegible]	Bank of Kentucky	[illegible]
Swatara at Harrisburg	[illegible]	branches	[illegible]
Pittsburg	2	[illegible]	[illegible]
Greensburg	3	LOUISIANA
Brownsville	4	Bank of New Orleans	[illegible]
DELAWARE
Bank of Delaware	[illegible]

CANDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS.

Square and oval butter Prints; Weavers Slays or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lime or lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; Cane for reed making; pound, ball and quarter butter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and shoe Blacking; patent and common Tape; lamp Wicks, assorted, by the doz. or gross; cotton, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; Spiggots and Faussetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing lines and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays, clothes and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and sugar Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; sweeping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers and dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and Gardeners Lines; clothes Lines and Bed Cord.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets.

Baltimore, 12th mo. 9th

INSOLVENT BLANKS.

JUST printed and for sale at the Village Herald office, a quantity of INSOLVENT BLANKS, of an approved form; and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.
ALSO,
A Supply of Magistrates' Blanks,
FIERI FACIAS, before supersedeas,
Do. do. after supersedeas,
CA. SA's before supersedeas.
Do. do. after supersedeas,
WARRANTS.

EDUCATION.

MR. & MRS. HELLEN

Have determined to open a School,

For the Instruction of Youth of both sexes,

IN THIS TOWN.

To commence with the ensuing year.

In this school the ordinary branches of English education, such as Reading, Writing & Cyphering, together with Grammar and Geography, Surveying and Navigation, will be taught with diligence and care.

The direction of the female department, and smaller boys, will devolve on Mrs. Hellen, whilst the larger males, and students of the higher branches, will be instructed by Mr. Hellen.

Order and discipline will be observed in connexion with a due regard to respectful courtesy and decorous deportment throughout the school.

TERMS

For the common course of English learning—one dollar per month. Pupils of the mathematical department will be subject to the usual additional charge. A proportion of firewood as customary.

Princess-Anne, Dec. 9.

Mr. & Mrs. H. will exhibit such testimonials as, they trust, will prove satisfactory.—Those who have given assurances of their patronage, will be waited upon for their signatures.

IN CHANCERY,

In Worcester County Court,

NOV. TERM, 1828.

Zadock Long
vs.
John C. Maddux, and Levin Townsend, Admr. of Daniel Maddux.

IN obedience to the decree passed in the above cause during the late term of the said Court, the subscriber will offer at public sale to the highest bidder at the Court House door in Snow-Hill on Friday the second day of January next, between the hours of 11 o'clock, A. M. and 4 o'clock, P. M. the following real estate lying and being situated in Worcester County, whereof Daniel Maddux; late of the said County, died seized; to wit.

All that tract or part of a tract of land called Duers Conclusion or by whatever other name or names known or called, containing 150 acres more or less being all the land by whatever name or names known or called, which was conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux, by a certain Joshua Duer, by deed bearing date the 18th day of June 1819. Also.

All that tract or part of a tract of Land, called Branshaw's Purchase or by whatever other name or names known or called containing one hundred and forty-five acres more or less being all the land by whatever other name or names known or called, which was conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux, by James Powell, esq. late sheriff of Worcester county, by deed bearing date the [illegible] day of January, 1822. Also.

All those lots or parcels of land called [illegible] Hill Convenience and [illegible] containing eighty three acres more or less, being all the lands by whatever name or names known or called which was conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux by a certain James Gutter by deed bearing date the 22d day of February 1820. Also,

All that lot of ground lying on the west side of Pocomoke river, supposed to contain 10 acres of land more or less, which was conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux by a certain Ambrose White, by deed bearing date the 15th day of February 1822. Also,

All these lots or parcels of ground lying and being situate in Snow Hill town, which the said Daniel Maddux, acquired by the following conveyances, to wit: all those lots or parcels of ground conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux by a certain Isaac Hartsley deed bearing date the 12th day of September 1817; all those lots or parcels of grounds conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux by a certain John G. W. Waters, by deed bearing date the 1st day of January 1825, except that part of the said parcels of ground sold by the said Daniel Maddux, to a certain Dr. John S. Martin; all those lots or parcels of ground conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux, by a certain George Hayward, by deed bearing date the 9th day of April 1819; all those lots or parcels of ground conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux; by the Justices of the Levy Court of Worcester County by deed bearing date the 26th day of July, 1814, all those lots or parcels of ground conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux; by a certain Mary Corbin, John Corbin and Mary his wife by deed bearing date the 5th day of November 1816, together with the lots and houses adjoining thereto and all other of the real estate whereof the said Daniel Maddux died seized situated in Worcester County.

THE TERMS OF SALE.

Each purchaser will be required to execute a bond for the amount of his purchase with a surety of sureties to be approved by the Trustee and interest will accrue upon the amount from the day of sale until payment. A credit of twelve months will be allowed to each purchaser.

Notice is hereby given

To each of the creditors of the said DANIEL MADDUX to exhibit their claims with proper vouchers in the office of the Clerk of Worcester County Court within six months from the said 2d day of January next.

LEVIN TOWNSEND, Trustee.
Dec. 9, 1828. mil

THE NEW-YORK

MEDICAL ACADEMY.

The happy effects of the Botanical System of Practice, more especially of late employed in the cure of diseases, are such as entitle it to a high rank among modern improvements. The opinion long entertained in its favour, by many of the judicious, a thorough experience has now demonstrated to be well founded; and with the number and variety of its salutary achievements, its reputation is daily increasing.

It must be evident to every discerning mind, that the present prevailing practice of medicine, which rejects this botanical aid, is at variance with our nature and with our happiness Mercury, the Lancet, and the Knife, are chiefly relied upon, by physicians and surgeons of the present day, for the removal of almost all the diseases incident to the human body, notwithstanding the effects of these deliterous agents, are evidently fatal to multitudes. Deeply impressed with these facts and with a view of reforming the science and practice of medicine, an individual of this city in the year 1827, procured a lot of ground and erected a handsome and convenient edifice, for an Institution denominated the United States Infirmary, expressly for employing a reformed system of practice in the treatment of diseases; the remedial resources being chiefly derived from the productions of our own country.—The course of treatment adopted by this Institution was principally the result of near forty years experience of a distinguished medical reformer, which course we are happy to state, has been crowned with signal success, and proved to a demonstration, that without mercury, that boasted champion of the MATERIA MEDICA, or other poisonous drugs, diseases generally may be cured by those more safe and salutary means, which the God of nature has so liberally scattered around us.

Animated by the past success, and with the hope of benefiting future generations, an irrepressible desire has been felt, that measures commensurate with the importance of the object should be taken, to promulgate this valuable system of practice, and thereby improve and reform the noble and important science of medicine.

After reflecting for years upon the most prudent and successful method of effecting so desirable an object, it has been deemed expedient to establish a MEDICAL SCHOOL, which competent teachers, where students may receive lectures and instruction until they are fully qualified to practice in the various branches of the healing arts upon the reformed system. We are now happy to announce, that a building for such an Institution has been erected, and (by Divine permission) will be opened in Nov. next, for the reception of Students.

The building is large and commodious, situated in Eldridge Street, between Grand and Broome, and adjoining the present U. S. Infirmary. It is in a healthy and pleasant part of the city, and has been completed at a great expense.

The following branches will be taught:—

1. Anatomy.
2. Surgery.
3. Theory and Practice of Physic.
4. Midwifery, and Diseases of Women and Children.
5. Materia Medica and Vegetable Botany.
6. Chemistry and Pharmacy.

The benefits to be derived by an attendance at this institution, will, we trust, be duly appreciated by those who wish to acquire a correct knowledge of the healing art.—Here the student will be taught all the modern practice which is deemed necessary, in addition to the Botanic, and in consequence of his residing in the Institution, and observing a systematic course of studies, comprising each of these departments, he may acquire a knowledge of them in less than one half the time, and with less than half the expense, that is required at other Medical Institutions.

There being an infirmary connected with the Academy, the Professors will have the benefit of clinical practice, by which the experimental part of medicine will be acquired with less study.

An elegant stage [illegible] of the student [illegible] that all the [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] their [illegible] will be [illegible] with a generous [illegible] the institution, [illegible] the practice of medicine in different sections of the country.

There will be no specified time to complete a course of study; but whenever the student is qualified to pass an examination he will receive a Diploma, and this Diploma will have a decided advantage over every other, as it will enable the possessor to practice in every State in the Union without molestation.

REQUISITIONS.

The qualifications for admission into the School will be:—

1. A certification of a good moral character.—2. A good English Education.

TERMS.

The price of qualifying a person for practice will be $250, one half payable in advance; board (being an extra charge) will be $2 50 per week. Some provision is made for young men in indigent circumstances.

All communications addressed to the Superintendent of the U. S. States Infirmary, on this Circular, (Post Paid) will receive attention.

W. BEACH.

U. S. Infirmary, Oct 1, 1828.—28t

JOB PRINTING

Neatly executed at the office of the Village Herald.

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S. MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. which in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, at a the manner of an anodyne; consequently the irritation of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

A bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its other stages, and will be accompanied with the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER,
Nov. 20, 1827. Princess Anne, Md

SPLENDID VIEWS

OF

AMERICAN SCENERY.

On FRIDAY, the 10th of OCTOBER, 18[illegible] will be published by T. K. GREENBANK, No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia, a set [illegible] splendid views of American Scenery as follows:—

1—A View of Beck's Shot Tower, on the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia, and adjacent Scenery;

2—A view of the Light House in Long Island Sound, with the adjacent scenery;

3—A view of York on Lake Ontario, with C[illegible] Fortifications;

4—[illegible] Scenery on the Hudson River;

5—[illegible] New London, Connecticut, with [illegible];

6—[illegible] near Philadelphia [illegible];

7—[illegible] Washington at Mount Vernon;

8—A View of the Great Pond of the Susquehanna;

9—View of the Upper Falls of Sa[illegible] Creek, Luzerne county, Pa.

10—View of the Lower Falls of Salmon Creek.

11—View of the Cattskill Mountains, from the Hudson.

12—View of Fort Niagara, on Lake Ontario from the Light House in the British side.

These Views are executed in the best style of Philadelphia engraving, from drawings made upon the spot. Each plate will be accompanied by a full and accurate description thereof, so as to render it perfectly intelligible to every person.

The work will be printed and issued to subscribers in the first style, on superior paper, and with a handsomely printed cover, and delivered to subscribers at the low price of One Dollar per copy. [illegible] be used for country [illegible] can be safely sent by [illegible].

☞Any gentleman postmasters and others who will interest themselves to procure subscribers, [illegible] will be entitled to [illegible] From the very [illegible] ing patronage already received from subscribers having [illegible] their [illegible] this volume will probably be succeeded by another, as soon as other plates can be engraved. All orders from the country will be promptly attended to.

Address, T. R. GREENBANK.
No. 64 Spruce st. [illegible]

The Ladies' Literary Port Folio.

PHILADELPHIA.

THE Editor will be assisted in the Department of Reviews, Miscellany and Poetry, by "W. G. C." and in the Ladies Department by Mrs. Harriet Muzzy.

With the 5th number will appear a copperplate Engraving comprising in a single group, portraits of Shakspeare, Byron, Scott and Campbell, which will be followed by portraits of American Authors in a similar style. These engravings, executed expressly for this work will alone be worth the amount of subscription.

The Ladies Department will be constantly enriched with choice selections from the writings of Mrs. Hemans, Miss Edgeworth, Miss L. E. Landon, and other foreign writers, and also from the best productions of Mrs. Sedgwick, Mrs. Sigourney, Miss Winchester, Mrs. Dumont, Mrs. Eliza Murden, and others of our own country women whose talents have shed a lustre upon their sex and country, in order that every lady who receives the Port Folio, may be certain of possessing in an elegant volume, specimens of the best productions of the most eminent writers of her sex. It is also designed to impart a superior interest, and value to the work, by the addition of portraits of such of the above writers as can be procured.

We shall also receive the original correspondence of N. P. Willis Esq. (Rev.) Richard Penn Smith, and W. [illegible] Esqrs. both authors of successful [illegible] Daniel Bryan Esqr; [illegible] and the assistance of Mr. T. C. Clarke, formerly the editor of the Album, with [illegible] of his correspondents and several anonymous but excellent writers, which have enriched the pages of most of our best literary journals.

The Editor who has had much experience in conducting literary papers, hopes to concentrate in his new work, the powerful talents of many of the most distinguished writers in this country, whom he considers an honour to be associated with, and is proud to have enlisted in his cause. The arrangement of the sheet may be understood from the following

SKETCH.

Literary Intelligence—[illegible] Reviews of [illegible] publications [illegible] in the A[illegible] [illegible] of opinion, [illegible] and impartiality.

The Ladies' Department—is illustrated by the following sentiments from the London Literary Gazette: "Where female sense is most improved and female character most pure, there is most happiness and propriety of social manners. The early years of children, the most precious years of life and [illegible] are confided to woman's superintendence. She therefore may be presumed to lay the foundation of all the virtue and all the wisdom that enriches the world."

Essays.—On such moral and useful subjects as may tend to strengthen the understanding and enrich the mind.

Tales.—The emanations of genius, portraying the affecting incidents of real life, or fiction; blending useful lessons of warning or instruction with the chaste and simple beauties of literature. We flatter ourselves that our work in this department will not be exceeded by any other.

Poetry.—"Such," says a genuine poet, "as has no alliance with our best affections; which lifts the soul into a purer element and breathes into it a more profound exalted and [illegible]."

Miscellany.—The Drama, with criticisms, [illegible] and its ornaments of taste and fashion, [illegible] intelligence, Amusing Sketches, Anecdotes, and effusions of wit and humour, will impart variety, and [illegible] Miscellany.

[illegible] Though superior copperplate engravings, expressly for this work [illegible] subjects and [illegible] superior scenery, [illegible] portraits of distinguished individuals, shall [illegible] occasionally appear, with pieces of popular music, &c. it is nevertheless determined to [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] work dependant [illegible] its moral [illegible] excellence alone.

Conclusion.—[illegible] no pains or expense [illegible] [illegible] in rendering it faithfully [illegible] worthy purposes, [illegible] elegance of the [illegible] an acceptable present to a pure mind, as well as an acquisition [illegible] American Literature. When it fails in either particular, the proprietors pledge themselves to relinquish its publication.

Terms.—The Ladies Literary Port Folio is published every other week at $2 per annum, [illegible] The great expense attending [illegible] renders it necessary [illegible] accompany orders with the [illegible] of subscription.

[illegible] procuring fifteen subscribers shall [illegible] to $5, and so in proportion for a less or larger number.

[illegible] Subscriptions received at the Philadelphia Library, the Athenaeum, Arcade [illegible], and the Artist Repository, [illegible] No. 66 Chestnut Street, and at [illegible] Coffee House.

Address (post paid)

THOMAS C. CLARKE, Philadelphia.

☞Subscriptions to the Ladies' Port Folio will be thankfully received at the office of the Village Herald, where the first number may be seen.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks,

PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms.

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATIS

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, DEC. 23. 1828.

☞The Orphans Court of Somerset county will sit on the 6th of next January.

THE AUCTION SYSTEM.

The National Intelligencer of last Tuesday says—"Another petition against the Auction System was presented yesterday, in the House of Representatives from the city of New York, having attached to it 7,660 signatures—making 17,690 petitioners from that city alone, for the intervention of Congress to regulate and restrain auctions of foreign goods."

Savannah, Dec. 8.

Green Peas were selling in market yesterday at $1 per peck.

Foreign News.

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

By the arrival of the packet ship Alexandria, the editors of the Philadelphia Aurora have received London papers of the 6th and Liverpool of the 8th November. They contain little political intelligence of importance. Details of the operations which led to the fall of Varna are given, and accounts of some skirmishes before Schumla, and of some operations in Little Wallachia on the 4th of October, which are the same that appeared in the Patriot on Friday, 12th inst.

The Prussian State Gazette of the 30th ult. brings down the news from Varna to the 15th ult. The following is an extract:—

"Early in the morning of the 12th October, a Te Deum was chanted in the camp of Count Worenzow, and in the presence of the Emperor, in celebration of the fall of Varna. The finest weather favoured this solemnity, at which all the diplomatists and officers were present. On the same morning the Captain Pacha marched out of the citadel together with the troops in favour of whom a capitulation had been agreed to.— On the 13th, His Majesty the emperor attended divine service in the Greek metropolitan church of Varna. On the evening of the 14th, his Majesty had it in contemplation to embark for Odessa, and thence to continue uninterruptedly his journey to St Petersburg. The corps diplomatique was to embark for Odessa at the same time. Omer Varione retreated immediately after the surrender of Varna and had taken up a position on the opposite bank of the Kamtshik. He was closely pursued by Prince Eugene of Wurtemburg. The Grand Vizier had already advanced as far as the Kamtshik to support Omer Vrione, but in consequence of recent events had also made a retrograde movement. LONDON, 6th Oct

SEMLINE, Oct. 23.—Accounts from Seres, of the 10th October, say that a division of Russian ships of war has appeared before Salonichai to blockade that port.

We are informed the greatest preparations are making in the Crimea for a secret expedition. It is not unlikely that the Grand Seignior will very soon have serious business in the neighbourhood of Constantinople. It is also stated that the blockade of the Dardanelles renders the Turks uneasy, who, whatever may be said on the subject, are by no means satisfied with the changes introduced into the empire.

Journal des Debates.

GENOA, Oct. 16.

It is reported that a Tripolitan armed schooner, with 12 guns and 79 men, has been captured by a Neapolitan frigate, off Otranto, and that three other Tripolitan cruizers had entered that gulf, and steered towards Abania.

GENOA, Oct 23.—It is reported that two schooner-rigged Tripolitan cruizers, have captured six vessels under the Neapolitan flag, off the Roman coast, and near civita Vecchia. A vessel arrived at Malta from Tripoli in the West, which she left 28th ult. had on board the crews of four Neapolitan captured vessels, and reported that three other prizes were going into Tripoli when she sailed. Eight cruizers were out from Tripoli.

GREECE.—The Moniteur, of Sunday last, contains a despatch from Lieut. General, the Marquez de Maison, commanding in chief the French forces in the Morea, addressed to the Minister of War, and announcing the surrender of the fortresses of Messenia (Coron, Modon, Navarino,) and of Patras, and the castle of the Morea, which had been left by Ibrahim Pacha in the occupation of 5,500 Turkish and Egyptian troops, who were to be immediately embarked for Egypt, with their arms and baggage. The Governor of Navarino, on being summoned by Admiral de Rigny, to give up the possession of that place to the French, made answer, "The port is not at war with the French or the English; no act of hostility will be committed." Hassan Pacha, who commanded in Moden, declared to the Marquis de Maison "that he could not surrender the fortress, but that, if he was taken prisoner in spite of himself, he hoped as good terms would be given to him as the garrison of Navarino," which was promised him. Both places were then occupied by French troops, the French & British squadrons supporting and participating in the arrangements for the attack. The Governor of Coron having ascertained the fate of those two fortresses, by an officer, whom he was permitted to send for that purpose, and seeing dispositons made for an attack, both by land and sea, which must have resulted in the destruction of that place, with the garrison, then opened the gates, and quietly yielded possession. Hadji Abdulla, Pacha of Patras, finding that place surrounded by a bold and successful movement of the brigade of troops and artillery sent against it, immediately capitulated. The colours of the allied powers were hoisted in the several forts, and the Marquis de Maison states his intention to deliver up Coron to the Greek government as soon as it shall send regular troops to occupy it.

LONDON, Nov. 8

Letters from St. Petersburg say that the new levy for the Russian army will raise it to upwards of 600,000 men, including those of the military colonies. Of this large force it is said it will be in the power of the emperor to march 400-000 against the Turks in the approaching campaign, without weakening the armies which it would be necessary to leave as a check upon Austria and Sweden.

From the Courier Francais October 27.

RUSSIAN WINTER CAMPAIGN.

Turkey in Europe has a population of 2,500,000 Mussulmen, and in Asia 11,000,000. The Turks in Europe follow no other trade but that of arms, those in Asia have a few agriculturalists among them, but no merchants or manufactories. The civilized nations of Europe cannot furnish in peace more 10,000 soldiers for every million of inhabitants; in war, when they double this proportion, they make great efforts, which cannot last. France, with 32,000,000 of inhabitants could not support an army of 600,000 men for three years, and provide for the wants of agriculture and commerce. Turkey, on the contrary with 13,000,000 of people, could support such an army without suffering. She is calculated for war. To try a winter campaign is to expose the Russians to multiplied disaster. The extraordinary levies in Russia cannot complete till spring, with experienced soldiers the skeletons of their regiments. A campaign in winter is above all murderous for an invading army. An enemy who acts on the defensive, and fights for his home, will obtain resources that the invaders cannot find.

The capture of Varna will hardly change the nature of the Black Sea, which is scarcely navigable even in the winter. To pretend, therefore, that the fleet can not only supply the army, with provisions, but follow and support its movements along the coast, is to be ignorant of the climate and the seasons, and is to fall into absurdity. The capture of Varna, if followed by that of Silistria, would at most only insure winter quarters.

Popular Votes at the recent Election.

Many may be curious to know the number of popular votes, taken in the several states, for the two presidential candidates, and the proportion which has been given to each. The following table comprises the official returns from fifteen States:

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

States.	Jackson.	Adams.	Total.
Maine	13927	20773	34700
Massachusetts	6019	29836	35855
Connecticut	4486	13543	17829
Vermont	8543	24364	32747
New Hampshire	20692	24076	44998
Rhode Island	695	2548	3243
New York	140763	135413	276176
New Jersey	21929	23758	45687
Pennsylvania	101652	50848	152500
Delaware	4348	4769	9118
Maryland	24565	25527	50092
Virginia	26752	12101	38853
North Carolina	37858	13918	51776
Kentucky	39071	31167	70238
Ohio	67597	63396	130993
	518933	475887	994820
	475887
Jackson's maj.	43046

The following are estimates of Jackson majorities from the states, from which we have not full returns:—

	Jackson.	Adams.
Georgia	20,000
South Carolina	20,000
Alabama	10,000
Louisiana	500
Illinois	3,000
Missouri	5,000
Mississippi	5,000
Indiana	5,000
Tennessee	16,000
	84,500
Former majority	43,046
Jackson's maj. in 24 states	127,546

What a defeat to the Coalition.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 18.

New Indian War.—The following letter, communicating information of the hostile intentions of a part of the Pawnee nation of Indians, was received last mail, from a citizen of Fayette, Howard county, dated Nov. 10. 1828:

"I have just received a letter from J. Dougherty, U. States I. Agent, dated "Cantonment Leavenworth, 4th November," informing that the Grand Pawnees and Pawnee Loups consisting of 1500 warriors, had gone en masse on a war excursion against the whites; and that their attention would be directed principally to the Santa Fe road, to intercept our traders—and should they fail in this, to fall on the frontier settlements or Arkansas and Red River, having declared their determination to scalp all white men with whom they meet."

The Pawnees inhabit the plains of the Arkansas and are divided into three bands. They are a strong, athletic race of men, but destitute of true courage. When united, they can bring into the field several thousand warriors.

The celebrated Miss Frances Wright has been in this city for some days. She has delivered several lectures to crowded audiences.

Emigration.—For the last two months the various avenues to this state have been filled with emigrants, principally from Virginia and Kentucky. A traveller while journeying from Louisville to St. Louis, counted not less than two hundred wagons, destined for Missouri. The accession to the population of the state is computed at several thousand.

Medical Doubts.

At a meeting of the London Medical Society, on the 6th of October, one of the subjects discussed, was an enquiry whether there was any foundation for supposing that surprise, desire, or any emotion of the mind of a mother, could have any influence or effect on her child in utero. Mr. Simmons said the subject had been a great deal before the public of late, through the medium of the newspapers. Should it be ascertained that children could be born with their father's name, for instance, distinctly written in their eyes, or on their foreheads, this might produce a very serious result as to a number of the second born. (laughter.) Mr Walt reconsidered the notion to be wholly without foundation; first, because of there being no nervous communication between the mother and the child; secondly, because many women were frightened, and had desires of different sorts, whose children were born without any other marks; and, thirdly, because marks were found upon the features at all periods of gestation, and where no particular emotions of the mind could be distinctly traced to have occurred in the mother.

Several members spoke on this subject, and many cases of marked children were brought forward, some of them ludicrous enough. A woman for instance on the day before her delivery of a 9 months' child, was frightened by a sailor mendicant raising the stump of his right arm before her, the arm having been amputated, and the child was born without his right arm! A goose ran cackling at another woman, a month before her confinement, and the child, though the mother denied having been frightened, was web-fingered! Another child had the figure of a mouse on its face, and whenever a cat entered the room, that part of the image on the face which was considered to be the mouse's tail, curled up! (great laughter.)— The conclusion, was that the fact of children being born with these marks is indisputable, but that the cause which produces them is unknown.—Phil. Nat Gaz.

From the New York Daily Advertiser.

Dyspepsia.

The prevalent, and in many cases terrible disease, arising from a deranged state of the liver, is chiefly produced by an inordinate acrimony of the stomach, and until this be subdued, the progress of emaciation goes on with a steady pace bidding defiance to all the nostrums and palliatives so plentifully prescribed. Having been a severe sufferer, I feel it a duty to others in my case, to communicate a simple safe, and effectual remedy for the morbid and acid state of stomach alluded to. It is nothing more than a strong tea of wood soot, drunk freely, cold, at the pleasure of the patient. Let the experiment be fully made; and if others experience the same happy result as myself I hear testimony may be given to the public through the channel of your paper, and prove an extensive benefit to the community. HEALTH.

The Meadville, Pennsylvania, paper, in mentioning a floating boat called the Ann Eliza, remarks, all the materials of which this boat was built were growing on the bank of French creek on the 27th ult. On the 28th she was launched, and pioted to this place before sunset, by her expert builders, Messrs. Mattocks and Tone. Her cargo consisted, among other things, of 300 reams of crown medium and royal patent straw paper with patent book and pasteboards; and left this place early on the 30th ult. for Pittsburg with 25 passengers on board.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAIL ROAD.

The Baltimore Patriot of the 16th instant says, "The great work progresses with a rapidity beyond our most sanguine expectations. A few weeks ago its site near the city presented obstacles that were deemed almost too formidable for removal by the means at hand; but now they are either surmounted, or in a fair way of speedily being so. The cutting down of hills and filling up of valleys required, seemed, upon looking at the site before the commencement, a work of years; but it has been already almost accomplished. There are three very interesting features in the work within the distance of a pleasant walk from the city: the first is an excavation through a considerable hill the earth from which is carried in cars on a temporary rail way to a valley required to be filled up; the second is a tunnel to be cut under the Washington turnpike; and the third is what is called the deep cut—an excavation through a hill, it is believed from appearance about seventy feet deep. There are several half mile sections already finished and we believe waiting for the rails; and the hope expressed in the last annual report of the Directors, that the Rail Road would be in operation as far as Ellicott's Mills by the 4th of July next, will probably be realized. In the excavations through the hills, we observe that immense beds of mineral paints —principally Spanish Brown, of a rich quality, have been opened. This must be very valuable, and we should suppose would contribute considerably towards the expense of excavation.

IN CHANCERY

In Somerset County Court; November Term, 1828.

Elijah Parsons and John Parsons
vs.
Joseph Barkley, administrator of Francis W James, John C. Tack and Louisa his wife.

THE bill filed in this cause in substance states that Francis W. James, late of Somerset county in the state of Maryland, died indebted to the complainants; That letters of administration on his personal estate were by the Orphans court of said county, in due form of law committed to a certain Joseph Barkley; That the personal estate of the said Francis is not sufficient to pay his just debts; That the said Francis only made and executed his last will and testament in which he devised all his real estate to his widow Louisia James; that the said Louisa hath since intermarried with a certain John C. Tack who resides in the state of Pennsylvania, and that the process of this court cannot be served on him. The object of the said bill is to obtain a decree for the sale of the real estate whereof the said Francis died seized, lying and being situated in the said county, for the payment of his debts, and it appearing to this court that the said John C. Tack, one of the defendants in this cause, does not reside within the jurisdiction of this court: It is therefore ordered this twenty fourth day of November, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, that the said John C. Tack be and appear in this court in person or by solicitor on or before the third Monday of May next, and show cause why a decree should not be passed as prayed by this bill, otherwise the bill as to him may be taken pro confesso, and a decree passed accordingly, as prayed by the said bill, provided a copy of this order be published in some newspaper printed in the city of Philadelphia, in the state of Pennsylvania, for three successive weeks at least four months before the said third Monday of May next.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.

True copy;
TEST, GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Dec 23, 1828. mill

☞The Philad'a. Mercury will please insert the above adv. 1aw13 successive weeks, and send a copy of each publication, with his bill for collection, to this office.

In Somerset County Court, November Term, 1828.

Isaac M. Adams, trustee for the sale of the real estate of Isaac C. Mitchell
vs
George Jones, surviving executor of Charles Jones, Levin D. Jones, Eleanor Jones, Hiram Jones, John H Jones, Alfred Jones and Charles Jones, children and heirs at law and devisees of Charles Jones.

THE object of the bill filed in this cause is to obtain a decree for the resale of the lands of Isaac C. Mitchell for the balance of the purchase money due; the bill states that a decree was passed on the 23d of July, 1821, for the sale of the lands of the said Mitchell; that the complainant in this bill was appointed trustee and sold the said lands to Charles Jones, deceased, who gave bond with a certain Henry White for the purchase money; that the said Charles Jones has departed this life leaving a large balance of the purchase money still due to the complainant, and that the estate of the said Charles Jones is absorbed by judgments against him in his life-time and is insufficient to pay his debts; The court being satisfied that Eleanor Jones and Hiram Jones, two of the defendants in this cause do not reside in the state of Maryland, and that the process of this court cannot be served on them; it is therefore this twenty-second day of November, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, by this court ordered and directed that notice of the bill filed in this cause be given to the said absent defendants by inserting a copy of this order in one of the newspapers printed in the city of New York, and in one published in Somerset county, once a week for three successive weeks at least four months before the third Monday of May next, warning them to appear in this court in person or by solicitor, on the said third Monday of May next, to shew cause why a decree should not be passed as prayed by the bill.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.

True copy;
TEST GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Dec 23, 1828. wll

☞The N. York Enquirer will please insert the above adv. 1aw13 successive weeks, and send a copy of each publication, with his bill for collection, to this office.

NEW GOODS!

THE Subscriber begs leave to inform his friends and the public generally, that he has just received and

IS NOW OPENING A

Winter Supply of Goods,

Comprising a large & general assortment of

Dry Goods and Groceries,
Hardware and Cutlery,
China, Glass and Queensware,
Hats, Caps and Shoes,
Stationary and Miscellaneous
Drugs and Medicines;

All of which he offers for sale on the most liberal terms for CASH or Country Produce. Persons wishing to purchase will find it to their advantage to call on

JOHN W. DONE, Agent for Dec 23-ll WM. DONE.

IN CHANCERY

In Somerset County Court; November Term, 1828.

William Jones, administrator of Thomas Jones,
vs.
George Jones, surviving executor of Charles Jones, Levin D. Jones, Hiram Jones, Eleanor Jones, John H. Jones, Henry Jones, Charles Jones, and Alfred Jones, children, devisees and heirs at law of Charles Jones.

THE bill filed in this cause in substance states that Charles Jones, the testator of George Jones of Robt. one of the defendants and the father of the other defendants in this cause on or about the eleventh day of November, eighteen hundred and seventeen, purchased of Thomas Jones, the complainant's intestate a part of a tract of land called 'Bridges Lot,' containing three hundred and seventy acres, more or less, situated on Menokin river and Jones creek, near Princess-Anne, for which he the said Charles contracted to pay the said Thomas a large sum of money, to wit: seven thousand dollars.— That the said Thomas hath died intestate and that letters of administration upon his personal estate have been granted by the Orphans court of said county to the complainant—That the said Charles hath also departed this life without having paid the said Thomas in his life-time or the said William since the death of the said Thomas, the balance of the purchase money due for the said lands; That the personal estate of the said Charles is insufficient to pay his debts, being absorbed by judgments and other debts of preference; The object of the bill is to obtain a decree for the sale of the said land for the payment of the balance of the purchase money, inasmuch as the personal estate is insufficient, and it appearing to this court that Eleanor Jones & Hiram Jones, 2 of the defendants in this cause do not reside in the state of Maryland, & that the process of this court cannot be served upon them; it is therefore ordered this twenty-fifth day of November, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and twenty-eight; that the said Eleanor and Hiram be and appear in this court in person or by solicitor on or before the third Monday of May next, to show cause why a decree should not be passed as prayed by the bill, otherwise the bill as to each of them may be taken pro confesso and a decree pass accordingly, provided a copy of this order be published in some newspaper printed in the city of New-York, and in Somerset county aforesaid, once a week for three successive weeks at least four months before the said third Monday of May next.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.

True copy;
TEST, GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Dec 23, 1828 wll

☞The N. York Enquirer will please insert the above adv. 1aw13 successive weeks and send a copy of each publication, with his bill for collection, to this office.

NOTICE.

BY virtue of an order of Somerset county Court, passed at November Term, 1828— the undersigned commissioners will offer at PUBLIC SALE, to the highest and best bidder, at Forktown, in Somerset county, on WEDNESDAY the 14th day of JANUARY, 1829, all the Real Estate of Kirk Gunby, deceased, to wit: all that tract of land called 'Cut-Close,' and 'Addition to Cut-Close,' situated in Somerset county near Morris's Mills on Divining Creek, containing 158½ acres, more or less; Also parts of several tracts of land situated near the same place, to wit: part of 'Mitchell's Purchase,' part of 'Winter-Quarter,' and part of a tract not named, but which is described in a plat in the Clerk's office of Somerset county, returned by the commissioners to divide or value the real estate of Kirk Gunby, by black drawn lines beginning at letter B, containing 147 acres, the whole of which lands containing 306½ acres; Also one other tract of land called 'Stanford's Finding,' and 'Thomas's Conclusion,' situated in Somerset and Worcester counties on the county road leading from Princess-Anne to Salisbury, containing 229½ acres, more or less; and other tract called 'Pollitt's Discovery, lying in Worcester county, about one and a half miles from Forktown, containing 158½ acres, more or less; one other tract called 'Strife,' and part of 'Fooks' Cost,' situated in Worcester county, on the Eastern Branch of Toney Tank Creek, containing 55 acres, more or less; One lot of ground in Forktown in Somerset county, containing 5-16ths of an acre, more or less. For a more particular description of these several parcels of land recourse may be had to the plats and returns made by the commissioners as aforesaid.— Sale will commence at 10 o clock A. M.

The purchaser or purchasers will be required to give bond or bonds to the respective representatives of Kirk Gunby, dec'd. with approved security, payable twelve months after the day of sale and conditioned for the payment of their respective proportions of the net amount of sales bearing interest from day of sale.

WM. H. LANKFORD,
ANTHONY B. BENNETT,
WILLIAM MEZICK,
THOMAS MORRIS,
Dec. 23, 1828. Commissioners.

The Ten Lost Jewish Tribes.

The following paragraph lately appeared in a German paper under the head of "Leipsic"—

After having seen some years past merchants from Tiflis, Persia, and Armenia among the visiters at our fair, we have had, for the first time two traders from Bucharia, with shawls, which are there manufactured of the finest wool of the goats of Thibet and Cashmere, by the Jewish families, which form a third part of the population. In Bucharia, (formerly the capital of Sogdiana,) the Jews have been very numerous ever since the Babylonian captivity, and are there as remarkable for their industry and manufactures, as they are in England for their money transactions. It was not till last year that the Russian Government succeeded in extending its diplomatic mission far into Bucharia. The above traders exchanged their shawls for coarse and fine wollen cloths of such colours as are most esteemed in the East."

The existence in Bucharia of so large a body of Jews was unknown, it is said, to any of our Geographers—and the question has arisen, Whence have they proceeded, and how have they come to establish themselves in a region so remote from their original country? The Editor of the Caledonian Mercury thinks that this question can only be answered by supposing that these persons are the descendants of the long-lost Ten Tribes, concerning the fate of which, theologians, historians, and antiquarians have been alike puzzled. The Editor remarks.— However wild this hypothesis may at first appear, there are not wanting circumstances to render it far from being improbable. In the 17th chapter of the Second Book of Kings, it is said, "In the ninth year of Hoshea the King of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Helah and in Habor, by the river Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes;" and in the subsequent verses, as well as in the writings of the Prophets, it is said, that the Lord then "put away Israel out of his sight, and carried them away into the land of Assyria, unto this day." In the Apocrypha, II. Esdras, xiii. it is said that the Ten Tribes were carried beyond the river (Euphrates) and so they were brought into another land, when they took counsel together that they would leave the multitude of the heathen, and go forth into a further country where never mankind dwelt; that they entered in at the narrow passage of the Euphrates when the springs of the flood were stayed, and "went through the country a great journey, even a year and a half;" and it is added, that "there they will remain, until the latter time, when they will come again." The country beyond Bucharia was unknown to the ancients; and it is, we believe, generally admitted, that the river Gozan mentioned in the Book of Kings, is the same as the Ganges, which has its rise in the very countries in which the Jews reside of whom the Leipsic account speaks. The distance which these two merchants must have travelled, cannot, therefore, be less than three thousand miles; and there can be little doubt that the Jews whom they represent as a third part of the population of that country, are descendants of the Ten Tribes of Israel, settled by the river Gozan. The great plain of Central Asia, forming the principal sides, viz. Little Bucharia, Great Mongalia, and Mantchouse, contains an area of 150,000 square miles, and a population of 20,000,000. This vast country is very little known. The great traits of its formation, compose, for the most part all that we are certain of. It is an immense plain of an excessive elevation, interspersed with barren rocks and vast deserts, of sand and almost moving sand. It is supported on all sides by mountains of granite, whose elevated summits determine the different climates of the great continent of Asia, and form the division of its waters.— From its exterior flow all the great rivers of that part of the world. In the interior are a number of rivers, having little declivity, or currents, which are lost in the sands, or permanently stagnated waters. In the southern part are countries, populous, rich and civilized, Little Bucharie, Great and Little Thibet. The people of the north are shepherds and wanderers. Their habitations are tents and towns and camps, which are removed according to the wants of pasturage. The Bucharians enjoy the right of trading to all parts of Asia, and the Thibetans cultivate the earth to advantage. The ancients had only a confused idea of Central Asia. "The inhabitants of the country," says a writer from a great authority, "are in a high state of civilization, possessing all the useful manufactures, and lofty houses built of stone. The Chinese reckon (but this is probably an exageration) that Thibet alone contains 33,000,000 of persons. The merchants of Cashmere, on their way to Yarkand in Little Bucharia, pass through Little Thibet. The country is scarcely known to European Geographers." The immense plain of Central Asia is hemmed in and almost inaccessible by mountain ranges of the great est elevation, which surround it on all sides, except China; and when the watchful jealousy of the Government of the Celestial Empire is considered, it will scarcely be wondered at that the vast region in question is so little known.

Such is the country which these newly discovered Jews are said to inhabit in such numbers. The following facts may perhaps serve to throw some additional light on this interesting subject.

In the year 1822 a Mr. Sargon, who if we mistake not was one of the agents to the London Society, communicated to England some interesting accounts of a number of persons residing at Bombay, Canamore, and their vicinity, who are evidently the descendants of Jews, calling themselves Beni Israel, and bearing almost uniformly, Jewish names, but with Persian terminations. This gentleman feeling very desirous of obtaining all possible knowledge of their condition, undertook a mission for this purpose to Canamore; and the result of his enquiries was, a conviction that they were not Jews of the one tribe and a half, being of a different race to the white and black Jews at Cochin, and consequently they were a remnant of the long lost Ten Tribes. This gentleman also concluded, from the information he obtained respecting the Beni-Israel, that they existed in great numbers in the countries between Cochin and Bombay, the north of Persia, among the borders of Tartary, and in Cashmere; the very countries in which, according to the paragraph in the German paper they exist in such numbers. So far, then, these accounts confirm each other, and there is every probability that the Beni-Israel, residence on the west of the Indian peninsula had originally proceeded from Bucharia. It will therefore be interesting to know something of their moral and religious character. The following particulars are collected from Mr. Sargon's accounts. 1. In address and manners they resemble the natives, so as not to be distinguished from them except by attentive observation and enquiry. 2. They have Hebrew names of the same kind, and with the same local termination as the Sepoys in the 9th regiment Bombay Native Infantry. 3. Some of them read Hebrew, and they have a faint tradition of the cause of their original exodus from Egypt. 4 Their common language is the Hindoo. 5. They keep idols and worship, and use idolatrous ceremonies intermixed with Hebrews. 6. They circumcise their own children. 7 They observe the Kippor, or great expiation-day of the Hebrews, but not the Sabbath or any feast or fast days. 8. They call themselves Gorah Jehudi, or White Jews; and they term the Black Jews Colah Jehudah.— 9. They speak of the Arabian Jews as their brethren, but do not acknowledge the European Jews as such, because they are of a fairer complexion than themselves. 10 They use on all occasions, and under the most trival circumstance, the usual Jewish prayer: "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord." 11. They have no cohen, priest, levite, or kasi, among them, under those terms; but they have a kaise, [reader] who performs prayers and conducts their religious ceremonies; and they appear to have elders and chiefs in each community, who determine in their religious concerns. 12. They expect the Messiah, and that they will one day return to Jerusalem. They think that the time of his appearance will soon arrive, at which they much rejoice, believing that at Jerusalem they will see their God, worship him only, and be despised no more.

Apparent renewal of Life.

Many of our readers will no doubt recollect the interest excited some time ago, by subjecting the body of Johnson the Murderer, to the action of Galvanic excitement;—a fluid in many respects resembling Electricity, and by some Philosophers supposed to resemble, or indeed to be the same, as the Vital or Nervous fluid. Supposing the following experiments will be generally interesting we venture to extract them from the last number of "The American Journal of the Medical Sciences," published at Philadelphia.—R. Eng.

Of the numerous experiments which have been instituted to verify the Analogy between Galvanism and the nervous action, those of Wilshold are not the least interesting. He beheaded a cat, and after the pulsation and muscular action had completely ceased, he removed the spinal marrow, and filled the spine with an amalgam of Quicksilver Zinc, and Silver. Immediately the throbbing of the arteries recommenced, and the muscular actions were renewed, which could not be distinguished from those produced by the influence of the spinal marrow; the animal made many leaps, &c.

He filled with the same amalgam the scull and spine of another cat which did not give any sign of life; the animal became during twenty minutes in such a state of distension, that it raised its head, opened its eyes, looked steadily, attempted to walk, and endeavoured to rise after falling down frequently. During all this time, the circulation and pulsation were very active, and continued for a quarter of an hour after the chest and belly were opened. The Secretion of the Gastric juice was considerably more abundant than formerly, and animal heat was perfectly re-established.

Attempts have also been made with partial success, to imitate the process of digestion in dead animals, by the action of Galvanism.

Truly, if the correctness of these experiments be confirmed by further observations, we need scarcely despair of the final attainment of the Promethean Art. [Nat. Adv.

TEAS.—The consumption of tea is increasing every year, and calls the more for a reduction of duty, to encourage our own shipping, to prevent the commerce of China from going out of our hands to foreigners, and to remove all temptation to smuggle.— In 1823, the importation into Britain was 24,000,000 pounds—in 1826, 20,000,000—in 1827, 39,746,147.

A company has been formed in Florida for opening a water communication between St. John's river and Indiana river. This will open the whole line of coast from Charleston to the southern extremity of Florida.

Progress of Society.

Two centuries ago sugar was only to be found at the apothecaries, and sold by the ounce; but in the years of the ancient regime, France alone consumed 50,000,000 pounds of it. In the days of Henry IV. coffee was absolutely unknown in France, and now there is not one of our porters who does not take his cup of coffee.

[Say's Political Economy.

A census of the city of St. Louis, in Missouri, has been lately taken by the Sheriff, and the population is found to be—free white males, 2170; free white females, 1289; slaves and coloured persons, 1242; total, 5000.

DIED, in the City of Lancaster Pennsylvania, on Friday morning, the 21st ult, Philipine Lest, in the 85th year of her age. The deceased had —

13 Children,
97 Grand Children,
122 Great Grand Children,
4 Great Great Grand Children,

236

The Jackson Wreath, or National Souvenir.

"Glory, Gratitude and Patriotism."

IN preparation, a splendid National Tribute, in commemoration of the greatest victory achieved by the people through the Hero of New Orleans.

CONTENTS.

1st. It will contain a portrait of Andrew Jackson, President elect of the U. States, engraved in a superior style, on copper, and intended to present a faithful and a truthful likeness of this illustrious individual to the American people.

2d. A splendid title page containing the U. S. Coat of Arms.

3d. The life of Andrew Jackson, is written by Robert Walsh, jr. esq. presenting a true character of the soldier and patriot, who has been recommended to the people of the United States, by his stern integrity, long experience and transcendant services to his country.

4th. A copperplate engraving of the Battle of New Orleans, and Jackson's discharge being seen, Jackson on the ground, with the "Star Spangled Banner" floating over the field of battle.

5th. A copperplate engraving of the Farmer of Tennessee; scene, which cultivated farm, with a distant view of Gen Jackson's residence, the Hermitage. These engravings will be copied, with some alterations, from the paintings lately sent to Philadelphia and New York, covering a space of 60 feet by 15, and splendidly illuminated on the nights of the election, in front of the Jackson head quarters.

6th. Some further particulars of the life of the Hero, compiled from the collection of facts made by the Jackson republican committee of Pennsylvania and other sources.

7th. A view of the U. States Capitol at Washington, elegantly engraved on copper.

8th A new piece of Music, entitled Jackson's Grand March, and Quick Step, composed expressly for this occasion, by one of the first professors of music in the United States.

9th Cover embellishments. In addition to which the work will be studded with minor though appropriate embellishments.

10th There will also be annexed, a correct general Map of the United States handsomely engraved.

CONDITIONS.

The work will be ready for delivery between the 8th of January and the 4th of March, early enough to be distributed throughout the United States before the latter date.

It will be delivered in the city in fancy bindings at TWO DOLLARS per copy. The copies will be forwarded in flexible covers by mail to any part of the U. States.

☞All orders out of the city must be accompanied with the amount of subscription, or a satisfactory reference in this city.

 No letter will be taken from the Post Office unless the postage is paid. A copy of the work, will be forwarded to such Editors as publish the prospectus, and a discount of 25 per cent. will be made to any person forwarding an order for ten or more copies. Subscriptions should be forwarded immediately as they will be attended to in the order in which they are received.

Address JACOB MAAS.
Franklin Engraving Office, Philadelphia
Arch St.

Subscription papers left at Holdman's Chestnut street, Ryckman's Fourth & Gaskill street, at Gen. Snyder's Jackson house, North 4th, Liberties, at the offices of the American Sentinel, the Philadelphia Gazette, and the Mercury, at the Merchants' Coffee House, &c.

Dec wwm

☞Those persons who may feel disposed to obtain copies of the above work, by subscribing thereto, or at the office of the Village Herald will please hand in their names to the editor at their earliest convenience, as he will forward on such as he may receive at an early period.

Baltimore Prices Current.

Dec. 19, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $9 a 10; superfine Howard-st. 8.00 a 8.50; city mills 7.75 a 8.00 Susquehanna, 8.00; WHEAT, best red 1.65 a 1.75; best white 1.75 a 1.85— CORN, old, .48 a .50; new 46 a 47

TRUSTEE's SALE.

In Chancery in Somerset County Court.

BENJAMIN PARSONS
vs.
Elijah Parsons, administrator of William Miller, Eliza Miller, Harriot Miller, Juliana Miller, Peggy Miller, and Nicey Miller, children and heirs at law of William Miller.

BY virtue of a decree of Somerset county court, in the above cause, the undersigned will offer at PUBLIC SALE, to the highest and best bidder, in the town of Salisbury, Maryland, at the auction room of James L Waller, esq. on SATURDAY the 27th of DECEMBER, instant, all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of which William Miller, late of said county, deceased, died seized and possessed, in and to a House and Lot, together with the buildings and improvements, and all other the appurtenances thereto belonging, situated at Shad Point, in said county, on the south side of Wicomico river, being part of a tract of land called Cherry Hill, and the same lot on which the said William Miller resided at the time of his death; also a lot of ground, in the said county, which the said William purchased of capt. Peter Dashiell, by deed bearing date 3d of September, 1814, being part of a tract of land called Prospect Hill; also a lot of ground, in the said county, which the said William Miller purchased of the said Peter Dashiell, by deed bearing date the 30th of August, 1815, being part of a tract of land called Cherry Hill.

The terms of sale will be thirty dollars cash, and a credit of twelve months for the residue, the purchaser or purchasers giving bond or bonds to the trustee, with approved security, bearing interest from the day of sale. Upon the ratification of the sale by the court, and the payment of the whole of the purchase money to the trustee, the trustee is directed by the said decree, to execute to the purchaser or purchasers his, her or their heirs, a deed for the property so sold, conveying the title of the deceased, conveying the right of the complainant and defendants in the premises. The sale will commence at 11 o'clock A. M.

Notice is hereby given,

To the creditors of the said WILLIAM MILLER, that they must bring in their claims against the said William, with the vouchers thereof, and lodge the same with the clerk of Somerset county court, within six months from the day of sale.

WILLIAM W HANDY, Truste
Princess-Anne, Dec. 2, 1828 wil

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. HALL)

Saddle, Harness,
AND
Trunk-Maker,

No. 127 Market Street,
(near the new City Hotel,)
BALTIMORE.

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old stand formerly occupied by Messrs. W. & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a

Large and General Assortment of Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks, Valeeses, Saddlebags, Collars, Military Equipments, &c.

of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail, on as reasonable terms as can be afforded at this or any other city.

August 19th, 1828. tf

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. W. Barclay, esq. a justice of the peace, and to me directed, 2 at the suit of George Maddox and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'rs. of Thomas Byrd vs. Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and one other at the suit of Hannah Hearn, Ex'x of Wm. Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right, interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by Benjamin Dashiell to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said E. Johnson, at present occupied by L. D. Collier; also a house and lot occupied by Amelia Nicholson; also one other occupied by Wm. S. Dickinson; also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esquire's Mills, at being the office of the said Elijah; also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which said land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson and Levin Collier, of a certain Absalom Phipps, also a clock and case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Waller, esq. in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 22d of Nov. next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P. M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.

Oct 28 st

☞The above sale is postponed to Saturday the 6th of next December, at the hour and place above mentioned.

Nov 25

☞The above sale is further postponed to Tuesday the instant—hour and place of sale as aforesaid.

Dec 9

For Rent,

For the ensuing year a House and Lot in the village of White Haven, at present occupied by Edward C. Blake. For terms apply to

MARCELLUS JONES

Sept. 9. 1828.

FOR SALE,

My half of the Schooner Fair American.

Apply to WM T. G. POLK.
Dec 9 mm

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers,

50,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 dozen Butter Prints

200 gross of Lamp Wicks, assorted sizes; Spickets and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels, kegs and hydrants; sweeping, shoe, scrubbing, dusting, white-wash, weavers and other Brushes; scale bed & sacking Cords; plough Lines, coarse and fine; Twine, Weavers Slays or Reeds; woolen, cotton and hand Shuttles; cotton and wool Cards; fancy and common Bellows; Fishing Tackle; Lamp and candle Wicks; corn Brooms and Whisks; market and close Baskets, long and short Brush Handles; Lemon Squeezers; Rolling Pins, Potatoe Mashers; Mullers; towel Rollers; wash & cake Boards; shovels, tubs clothes Pins; Funning and common Tops; Sifters; box and cake Blacking; butter Bowls; Trays, Spoons and Ladles; Trenchers; crabing and cabbage Nets.

The above articles are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUCHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.

Baltimore, 12th mo 9th

Dissolution of Partnership.

THE PARTNERSHIP heretofore existing between Wm. Gunby & John Noble, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will in future be conducted under the firm of Wm & John Gunby, who respectfully solicit a share of public patronage.

All persons indebted to the late firm will please come forward and make immediate payment, as it is absolutely necessary that the concern of the old firm be settled without delay.

Nov 25 99

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street,
BALTIMORE.

Informs his friends and the public, that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wines, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Fish, Salt, together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware,

Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828. tm

Bible Society.

THE several Agents of the Somerset Bible Society are informed that they will receive Bibles and Testaments to supply the destitute in their neighbourhoods upon application to the agent, Mr. William ... and those who have collected any money and in purchasing the books, will pay them to the same gentleman.

Nov 4 mp

TRUSTEE's SALE

In Chancery in Somerset County Court.

JOHN P. GALE
vs
George Twilley and Nancy his wife, administrators of William Twilley, Samuel James Twilley and others, children and heirs at law of William Twilley.

BY virtue of a decree of Somerset county court in this cause, the undersigned will offer at PUBLIC SALE, to the highest and best bidder, in the town of Quantico, in Somerset county, Maryland, at the house of John S. Hall, esq. on FRIDAY the 26th day of December, 1828, certain Lands and Real Estate, whereof the said William Twilley died seized, being certain lands situated at Quantico, which the said William purchased of John P. Gale the complainant, called and known by the name of Wrington, containing 60 acres, more or less, also 12 acres called Wrington; also 15 acres, lying chiefly in Quantico branch, which formerly belonged to a certain Elizabeth M. Grannis, together with the mills generally known as Quantico mills.

The terms of sale will be a credit of 12 months for one half of the purchase money, and eighteen months for the residue, the purchaser or purchasers giving bond or bonds with approved security, bearing interest from the day of sale. Upon the ratification of the sale by the court, and the payment of the purchase money to the Trustee, the Trustee is authorized by the said decree to execute to the purchaser or purchasers, his, her or their heirs a Deed for the property so sold, conveying the title of the deceased. Sale will commence at one o'clock P. M.

Notice is hereby given,

To the creditors of the said WILLIAM TWILLEY, late of the said county to exhibit their claims against the said William, with the vouchers thereof, and to lodge the same with the Clerk of Somerset county within six months from the day of sale.

GEORGE TWILLEY, Trustee.

November 24, 1828 dll

P. S. The widow's dower will be reserved.

THE CORNUCOPIÆ.

"Blending the useful with the sweet."

PENCILLED PASSAGES.

[From the Episcopal Watchman.]

Every body that has read Blair's 'Grave' with a pencil in his hand, has marked those beautiful lines—

———"visits
Like those of angels, short and far between;"

and perhaps most readers of English poetry have observed in Campbell's 'Pleasures of Hope,' the same sentiment a little differently expressed:

"Like angel-visits, few and far between."

The original is with John Norris; 1657—1711; as follows:

"How fading are the joys we dote upon,
Like apparitions seen and gone;
But those which soonest take their flight,
Are the most exquisite and strong,
Like angels' visits, short and bright,
Mortality's too weak to bear them long."

And again, in an elegy on his niece,

"No wonder such a noble mind
Her way again to heaven so soon could find;
Angels, as 'tis but seldom they appear,
So neither do they make long stay,
They do but visit, and away.
'Tis pain for them to endure our too gross sphere,
We could not hope for a reprieve,
She must die soon that made such haste to live."

But Henry Vaughan, "Silurist," as he loved to be called, given to be "singular and humoursome," according to old Anthony Wood, but withal an accomplised writer, author of "Olor Iscanus" and "Silex Scintillans," was wicked enough (1614—1695) to steal this thought from him. Ecce testimonium!

"Still young and fine! but what is still in view
We slight as old and soiled, though fresh and new
How bright wert thou, when Shem's admiring eye
Thy burning, flaming arch did first descry;
When Zerah, Nahor, Haram, Abram, Lot,
The youthful world's gray fathers, in one knot,
Did, with intentive looks, watch every hour
For thy new light, and trembled at each shower."

A noble subject for the pencil, and worthy of Claude Lorraine's best moments!

An anonymous collection of 'Spiritual Songs,' the twelfth edition of which bears date in 1725, contains the following 'Lament for the loss of first Love,' which will remind the reader of that sweet hymn of Cowper, the touching transcript of his own darkened spirit.

"O for a closer walk with God!"

O that my soul was now as fair
As it has sometimes been,
Devoid of that distracting care
Without, and guilt within.

There was a time when I could tread
No circle but of love;
That joyous morning now is fled,
How heavily I move!

Unhappy soul, that thou should'st force
Thy Saviour to depart,
When He was pleas-ed with so course
A lodging in thy heart!

How sweetly I enjoyed my God!
With how divine a frame!
I thought, on every plant I trod
I read my Saviour's name!

O might those days return again
How welcome they should be!
Shall my petition be in vain
Since grace is ever free?

Lord of my soul, return, return
To chase away this night:
Let not thine anger ever burn;
God once was my delight

I am far from intimating, in regard to any of these instances, the charge of plagiarism. Some of them are certainly, as the newspaper phrase is, "remarkable coincidences."

CRAYON.

LINES

On a young Lady's taking a Voyage.

Ye winds, be hush'd—forbear to roar,
Ye waves, nor proudly lash the shore;
Be hush'd, ye storms, in silence sleep,
Nor rage destructive o'er the deep.
Aspasia sails—and at her side
The Beauties on the ocean ride.

Rise, Neptune, from thy coral bed,
And lift on high thy peaceful head;
Calm with thy nod the raging main,
Or bid the billows rage in vain,
Aspasia sails—and at her side
The Graces on the ocean ride.

Attendants of the watery god,
Ye Tritons, leave your green abode;
Ye Nereids, with your flowing hair,
Arise, and make the nymph your care.
Aspasia sails—and at her side
The Muses on the ocean ride.

Thou seaborn Venus, from thine isle,
Propitious on the voyage smile;
Already, anxious for the fair,
Thy winged son prefers his prayer.
Aspasia sails—and at her side
The Loves upon the ocean ride

Let ALL attend, and bid the breeze
Blow softly—bid the swelling seas
Swell gently—for such worth before
The ocean's bosom never bore.
Aspasia sails—and at her side
The Virtues on the ocean ride.

The priest of a village told a man who lost his wife the day before, that he must have Patience, and received this reply—"Why, sir, I have been trying her but she wont consent."

The Volunteer.

"But hark! thro' the fast flashing lightnings of war,
"What steed to the desert flies frantic and far!"

In the pale twilight of a still summer's evening it was sweet to rove along the mossy banks, and among the green willows at the Redland cottage, where the broad rivulet that, flowing by it, and widening as it shot away into the lowlands, became a little lake, and lay before the eye an unbroken mirror of the purest chrystal. In the simple beauty of its situation, Redland Cottage had no rival near—in the practic of every domestic virtue, in the possession of all the qualities that adorn the female character, and shed around it a mild, yet glowing lustre, the widowed mistress was as unrivaled as was the beauty of her home; and though she has long since been buried in the cold grave, whenever my mind would wander to some bright picture in the visions of the past, it flies to the days I spent beneath her roof, even at that period of peril to my country, in which the war of the revolution penetrated even to the peaceful hamlet of my nativity and, called my father from his home and family, to combat against the common enemy.

But even with my brief residence at Redland there are some sad recollections twined. It was on just such an evening as I have mentioned, that as I was walking in the little grove before the house with that venerable lady, the sound of horses came down along the waters, and as we walked forward, two mounted troopers rode up and requested quarters, in terms so courteous and condescending as seemed to convince that they were gentlemen as well as soldiers. I was young and a soldier being to me a curiosity, I gazed on them both with a sensation of awe, and admiration. I fancy I see their features and habits yet; the largest wore a plain blue dress with yellow facings, and a small military hat which with a dark pair of whiskers, and a keen black eye gave him a martial appearance. But the other stranger seemed a youth of about 17, of a most delicate figure, wrapped in a large and fine blue cloak; a beautiful skin, and glossy auburn hair that curled in rich profusion around his neck, a voice of the most melodious sweetness, and withal a grace of manner and expression peculiarly engaging. We judged that they were officers, and that pretty youth was not inferior, for his elder companion paid him a deference not due to an equal, and as they sat and talked together in a parlor, I stood near them, and looked at them, and listened; and then I thought, oh, friendship! that thou wast lovely; for I never had seen two beings more attached than were those soldiers to each other.

The mild clear evening was wearing away fast, and it was nine o'clock by the time that our stranger guests had finished a light repast and taken their seats at a little window from which they looked over the still waters awhile in silence, save now and then a deep sigh was given and responded; but they were from soldiers who had left their homes, and whom the morning sun might find summoned to battle, and a bloody bier.

"Sing for me Henry," said the elder soldier, reaching a flageolet that lay on the table near him, and touching a few soft notes, "sing for me for my heart is heavy, and I feel as though I should dream frightful things to night." He forced a laugh as he finished, and then placed the instrument again to his lips, and breathed in it a few melancholy chords; but his companion immediately struck upon a lively air, and he followed it:

"The Soldier to the war has gone,
At freedom's and his country's call,
His father's sword he girded on,
And vanished from his father's hall.
Coldly, at eve, the moon beam shone,
While she, his loved one, wandered there,
And breathed along her harp the tone
That bless'd the faithful volunteer.

Then sad she sung, "perchance some brand
May reach that heart that beats for me,
And who shall then with trembling hand,
Bathe his cold brow, and close his eye—
Or who bend o'er his bleeding breast,
Kiss his pale cheek, his spirit cheer,
And sooth the noble soul to rest,
Of Henrietta's Volunteer."

The young soldier paused—the last accents of his voice fell on the ear like the dying notes of an Æolian harp, sweet, but all trembling and sorrowful; his complaint seemed to catch the spirit of the song, however, and continued it in a clear and spirited voice.

The wildered girl thus breath'd her lay,
As dimly set the evening star,
And ere its echoes died away,
Follow'd her soldier to the war—
Resolved in battle storm to ride,
'Mid flashing fire and gleaming spear,
A guardian angel by the side
Of her loved faithful volunteer.

The last note had scarcely died away before a shrill sound, like the distant scream of some mid-night bird, broke in upon the reigning silence, and rapid as thunder in the rear of lightning, the peal of fire arms succeeded. The Soldiers started, and for a moment stood trembling in a locked embrace, but it was only for a moment, and the elder soldier sprang through the door, and, mounting his white charger, disappeared along the road towards the village. The youth watched him as he withdrew, and when he was out of sight bent his ears to the window, and listened in an agony of suspense.

The firing now seemed coming nearer and nearer, and before thirty minutes had elapsed, we could distinguish the flash of pistols:—"Our band is attacked! is defeated!—my horse! my horse!" cried the young soldier, and gliding out, was mounted and away in an instant. In ten minutes the steed which had belonged to the elder soldier came prancing back without a rider, and shortly after, the firing and shooting died away; the battle was ended, and the foe driven off.

But we were yet to witness a heart rending spectacle. Our guests returned. The brow of the elder was pale, his eye dim and garments soiled—he threw himself on a sofa, and leaned his head upon his hand in silence. But the youth appeared excessively agitated, and looking at his little delicate hands, he said shudderingly, "look there is no blood on them—"but, but, but I did shoot the man that fought with you—I shot him and he fell," and there he kneeled by the side of his companion, and took his hand—'You are sick,' said he, "oh! I hope you are not sick,—"oh! I hope you are not hurt: you said you was not." The soldier dropped his head upon his arm, and said feebly, "I am dying Henrietta!" "Henrietta!" exclaimed the attendants, as the young unknown started at the word "dying," and throwing off the cloak in which she had been enveloped, revealed a beautiful female form in a snow white riding dress—and then she screamed, as she beheld a stream of blood already running on the floor, from the side of her wounded lover.

Every assistance possible was rendered to the dying man, by those who attended him—the while his sickening eye was fondly fixed on Henrietta. At length he said to her in a low voice, "Henrietta? I learned yesterday that your brother Edward commanded the enemy; I did not tell you of it, because I never anticipated this, and it would have been painful news to you. She clasped her hands upon her breast but in a moment seemed to forget all but him on whom death was already placing his cold signet.

Poor girl! she was not thus to be permitted even the trifling relief of such forgetfulness, for at this very moment a soldier bro't into the room a wounded officer!—It was Edward Lushing! who had been left by his flying comrades on the field; and Henrietta recognized not only her brother, but the man against whom her arm had been lifted in the hour of death that had just gone by.

But it is cruel to prolong a tale like this. The two soldiers died of their wounds, and in a few months after the broken hearted girl joined them in the still valley of death. Their graves are under the willow trees, a few hundred yards from the place where once stood the delightful Redland Cottage.

The Happy Match.

"Now," said Henry Hemphill to his young wife, when they went to housekeeping, "it's my business to bring money into the house —and your's to see that none goes foolishly out." This was the agreement with which they set forward in the world. He chose her, first because he loved her, and in the second place, because he knew she was sensible, economical and industrious—just the reasons which influence a sensible man in his choice now. And he thought it best that each should have a distinct sphere of action. Their interests were one and indivisible; consequently each had the same motives to act well the allotted part. His business called for his whole attention; he wished, therefore, to pursue it undistracted by other cares; for himself he looked for happiness only at home; there he expected a supply for all his wants, and he was of course not disposed to spend any thing abroad, in pursuit of what he thought every reasonable man ought to look for in the bosom of his own family.—Her duties being all domestic, she was able to compass them the better by turning her whole attention to him. Her husband's business doing habits; his temperance and correct life, had all the power of example: increasing her esteem, and doubling her anxiety to deserve his.

They had married without waiting to get rich. They neither distrusted Providence nor each other. With a little besides health and a disposition to improve it, they nevertheless had that strong confidence of final success which prudent resolutions inspire in those who feel that they have perseverance enough to adhere to them. Thus they began the world.

To attach a man to his home, it is necessary that home should have attractions. Henry Hemphill's had. There he sought repose after the toil and weariness of the day, and there he found it. When perplexed, and low-spirited, he retired thither and amid the soothing influence of its quiet and peaceful shades, he forgot the heartlessness of the world, and all the wrongs of men. When things went ill with him he found always a solace in the sunshine of affection, that in the domestic circle beamed upon him, and dispelled every cloud from his brow. However others treated him—there all was kindness, and confidence, and affection; if others deceived him, and hypocrisy, with its shameless face, smiled on him to delude and injure him, there all was sincerity of the heart which makes amends for suffering and wins the troubled spirit from misanthropy.

Nothing so directly tends to make a good wife, a good housekeeper, a good domestic economist, as that kindness on the part of the husband which speaks the language of approbation, and that careful and well directed industry which thrives, and gives strong promises that her care and prudence will have a profitable issue. And Mary Hemphill had this token and his assurance.

Henry devoted himself to business with steady purpose and untiring zeal; he obtained credit by his plain and honest dealing; custom by his faithful punctuality and constant care; friends by his obliging deportment and accomodating disposition. He gained the reputation of being the best workman in the village; none were ever deceived who trusted to his word. He always drove his business a little before hand, for he said, "things go badly when the cart gets before the horse." I noticed once a little incident which illustrated his character: a thrifty old farmer was accosted in the road at the end of the village by a youngster who was making a great dash in business, and who wanted to borrow a few hundred dollars.—The witty old man was perfectly ignorant of where it could be had, and sidled off from him as soon as he could. He rode directly down to Hemphill's, and told him he had a few hundred dollars to loan, and whished he would take it; the payments should be easy—just as would suit. Indeed replied Henry, you have come to a bad market; I have a little cash to spare myself, and have been looking round these two weeks for a good opportunity of putting it out.

While Henry was prospering in his business; all went like clock work at home; the family expenditures were carfully made; not a farthing was wasted; not a scrap lost; the furniture was all neat and useful, rather than ornamental; the table, plain and frugal, but wholesome, and well spread; little went either to the seamstress or the tailor; no extravagance in dress; no costly company keeping; no useless waste of time in ceaseless visiting; and yet the whole neighbour hood praised Mary Hemphill, and loved her; she was kind without ostentation or sacrifice, sociable without dissipation. And while few people lived more comfortably, none lived more economically.

The results of such management can never disappoint the expectations to which it looks. Even the angry frown of misfortune is almost put at defiance. Advantage ground is soon gained, which the storm seldom reaches. And the full reward comes in its proper time to crown the meed of life thus spent.

The music of Henry's tools was in full play on the morning that I left the village for a distant residence. It was not yet sunrise. And as the coach bore me rapidly past the cool and quiet residence of the village, I saw the door was open, and the breakfast smoking on the table. Mary in her neat morning dress and white apron, blooming in health and loveliness, was busy about her household affairs; and a stranger who chanced to be my fellow passenger to the city, observed it, and said "there's a thriving family; my word for it." And he spoke well.—There are certain signs always perceptible about those who are working things right, that cannot be mistaken by the most casual observer.

On my return to Alesbury, many years afterwards, I noticed a beautiful country residence on the banks of the river, surrounded by all the elegance of wealth and taste.—Richly cultivated fields stretched themselves out on every side as far as the eye could reach; flocks and herds were scattered in every direction. It was a splendid scene—the sun was just setting behind the western hills—and while a group of neatly dressed children sported on the adjacent school house green, the mellow notes of the flute mingled with their noisy mirth. "There," said an old friend, "lives Henry Hemphill; that is his farm—those are his cattle; here is his school-house, and these his own and some orphan children of his adoption, which he educates at his own expense—having made a noble fortune by his industry and prudence, he spends his large income in deeds of charity; and he and Mary mutually gives each other the credit of doing all this.

My heart expanded then—it expands still, when I think of them—and I pen their simple history in the hope, that as it is entirely imitable, some who read it will attempt to imitate it—[Emporium.

The Green Ass.

A certain widow, though pretty much advanced in life, had a mind to marry again.—As her fortune was very large, she thought herself entitled to a young husband; and accordingly fixed her eyes upon a handsome youth who had nothing but his personal recommendations to depend upon. She plainly perceived that there would be no difficulty on his part; but she dreaded the censure and ridicule of her neighbours. In this perplexity, she communicated her wishes and alarms to a maiden sister, who lived in the house, and possessed an uncommon share of shrewdness and address for all such occasions.—"Sister," says the amorous widow, "what think you of Leander! He is surely the picture of my late husband. Alas! I should never have yielded my heart but this irresistible resemblance. What shall I do? for I am in a dreadful consternation about what my neighbours may say of me, being well acquainted with their malice and cruelty. The purest love is not sheltered from their ill-natured ridicule. Were it not for that, this dear young man should—but"—"How absurd is all this, my dear sister!" replied the other. "Follow your own inclinations, and don't tell me of such foolish fears. You will be sung, hooted, hallooed after, and chalked up, for eight days; on the ninth they will think no more of you than one thinks of a friend one has quitted for three months.—That ass which you see yonder shall, if you please, impose silence on the whole parish about you the morning after your nuptials." "That ass?" "Yes, that ass. Marry [...] and leave the rest to me and my ass." The widow was easily persuaded; and the marriage was concluded on the credit of the [...] Dreadful outcry in the parish, rough [...] before their doors; not a soft thing could [be] heard from the mouth of either party for [the] noise of the kettles and frying pans. In [the] mean time the sister had painted the ass green as a parrot; and out rushed the phenomenon, with a triumphant bray, into the midst of the crowd. In an instant every [...] tle and pan was mute; and every soul [...] parish crowded round so strange a prodigy. "A green ass! Good heavens, who could have believed it! Well, wonders will never cease. How surprising is Nature in all her operations!" "I dreamed," cried an old man, "of this very ass a week ago. I am sure it betokens something bad to our town." A number of white mice appeared in the same manner just before the plague happened in my youth." Such observations and acclamations as these took place of the clamor about the new-married couple. The green ass lasted its eight days; and [...] there was no more curiosity about the green ass than there had been about the new-married couple the moment the ass appeared.

Evenness of Temper.

Madame Neckler relates the following anecdote of M. Abauzit, a philosopher of Geneva:—It is said of him that he had never been out of temper, some persons, by [...] of his female servant, were determined to put him to this proof. The woman in question stated that she had been his servant for thirty years, and she protested that during [that] time she had never seen him in a passion. They promised her a sum of money if she would endeavour to make him angry. She consented, and knowing that he was particularly fond of having his bed well made, she on the day appointed, neglected to make it. M. Abauzit observed it, and the next morning made the observation to her. She answered that she had forgotten it; she said nothing more, but on the same evening she again neglected to make the bed; the same observation was made on the morrow by the philosopher, and she again made some excuse, in a cooler manner than before. On the third day he said to her, "you have not yet made my bed; you have apparently come to some resolution on the subject [...] probably found that it fatigued you [...] ter all it is of no great consequence [...] gin to accustom myself to it [...] threw herself at his feet, and avowed [...] him

New Almanac.

A man in Washington has [...] rious Almanac, which may be [...] the face of one quarter of a dollar [...] perpetual, showing the days of the [...] any month in the year within the [...] ten thousand years, without an [...] This almanac is arranged on the [...] ever-pointed pencil case, and on [...] pencil case will be arranged the [...] the moon for one thousand years [...] shows the Dominical letter for every [...] conjunction; apposition, and quarters of the moon for one thousand years [...] stamping the seal of a letter with [...] of this pencil case, will be [...] sion showing the day and hour [...] letter was sealed.

Historical Fact.

Mr. J. Taggart was elected a [...] the county of Columbia to the [...] eral Assembly of the State of [...] peared and made the necessary [...] took his seat. In a few days he [...] ancholy which soon progressed [...] In his insane ravings he [...] was not thirty years of age when [...] oath of office and his seat; and [...] conscience upbraided him with the [...] sion of perjury, in taking an oath [...] the constitution, and at the same [...] taking a seat in violation of its [...] From this insanity he never [...] survived its commencement [...] months.—[Col. Gaz.

Village Herald.

TRUTH WITHOUT RESERVE—JUSTICE WITHOUT PARTIALITY.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED EVERY TUESDAY MORNING, BY JOHN S. ZIEBER, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

VOL. II. PRINCESS-ANNE, MD., TUESDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1828. NO. 30.

VILLAGE HERALD.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

Two Dollars a year, if paid in advance; or $2 50 if paid within six months; or $3 if not paid within six months.

☞ Subscriptions paid within 30 days after delivering the first number, (of the year subscribed for,) will be considered in advance.

No subscription will be taken for less than one year.

No paper will be discontinued (unless at the editor's discretion,) until all arrearages are paid off; and a failure to notify a discontinuance, previous to the expiration of the term subscribed for, will be invariably considered as a new engagement.

☞ Papers sent by mail will be subject to postage, to be paid by the subscribers.

ADVERTISEMENTS, not exceeding a square, will be inserted three times for $1, and 25 cents for every subsequent insertion: those exceeding a square in the same proportion.

☞ Persons advertising must limit the time of insertion, otherwise their advertisements will be continued and charged accordingly.

☞ All communications addressed to the editor must come POST PAID.

COURSE OF EXCHANGE,

Cohen's Office, Baltimore, Nov 27, 1828.

BANKS	pr. ct. dis
[U.] States Bank	par
Do Branches	par
MASSACHUSETTS
[B]oston banks	1
[Ot]her Mass. notes	2
RHODE-ISLAND
[Pr]ovidence banks	2
[Ot]her R.Island notes	3
CONNECTICUT
[M]iddletown bank	1
[Ph]oenix bank at Hartford	1
[Br]idgeport bank	1
[Ea]gle bank of New Haven	no sale
[H]artford bank	1
NEW-YORK
[N] Y city banks (except Lombard)	par
[Al]bany	½
[Ot]her N York notes	1
NEW-JERSEY
[...]bank	no sale
[...] Newark	1
[...] N Brunswick	1
Trenton Ins. Co	1
Farmers bank at Mount Holly	1
Cumberland bk	1
State bk Camden	1
[...]t Elizabethtown	1
[...]t N Brunswick	1
[...]t Patterson	1
[...]t Trenton	no sale
[...]t Morristown	1
[Es]sex bank	1
PENNSYLVANIA
Philadelphia banks	par
[Ea]ston
Germantown	do
Montgomery county	do
[Ch]ester "	do
Delaware "	do
Lancaster bank	do
Farmers bk of Lan'r	½
Harrisburg	½
Northampton	½
Farmers bank of Bucks c'y	1
[...]k bank	½
Chambersburg	½
Farmers bank at Reading	½
[...]sburg	do
Carlisle bk
[...]at Harrisb'g	2
[...]sburg	2
[...]sburg	3
[...]nsville	4
DELAWARE
[B]k of Delaware	½

BANKS	pr. ct. dis.
Farmers bank and branches	1
Wilmington and Brandywine	½
Commercial bank	1
Branch of do. at Milford	2
Bank of Smyrna	1
MARYLAND
Frederick c'y bank	½
Havre-de Grace	par
Farmers bank at Annapolis	½
Branches at Frederick & Easton	do
Hagerstown	do
Westminster	do
Elkton	susp.
DISTRICT OF COL.
Bk of Washington	½
Bk of the Metrop.	do
Patriotic bank	do
Central bank	do
Bk of Columbia	nom
Union bk Georget'n	½
Farmers & Mechanics bank	do
Bk of Alexandria	do
Bk of Potomac	do
Farmers bk of Alexandria	do
Union bk of Alex'a	do
Mechanics bk of Alexandria	do
VIRGINIA
Richmond & bran's	½
Bk of the Valley	do
Br at Leesburg	do
Br at Charlestown	do
Br at Romney	do
N W bank of Vir at Wheeling	3
N CAROLINA
State bk at Raleigh and branches	4
Cape Fear	4
Newbern	4
S. CAROLINA
State banks generally	2
GEORGIA
State bank	2
Planters	2
Augusta	2
Darien	5
Augusta Ir Co	no sale
KENTUCKY
Bank of Kentucky & branches	no sale
OHIO
Specie banks	5
LOUISIANA
Banks at N Orleans	3

[CA]NDLE WICKS, & LAMP WICKS,

[S]quare and oval butter Prints; Weavers [...]s or Reeds; Shifters and Strainers; lemon Squeezers; wash and cake Boards; [...] for reed making; pound, half and quarter Prints; Twine and Cord; boot and [...] Blacking; patent and common Taps; [...] Wicks, assorted, by the dozen or gross; [...]n, wool and horse Cards; towel Rollers; [...]gots and Fausetts, suitable for hogs[heads], barrels, kegs and hydrants; fishing [...] and Rods; butter Bowls and Trays; [...]es and market Baskets; Nests Tubs and [...] Boxes; Potatoe and turnip Mashers; [...]ping, shoe, horse, scrubbing, Weavers [...]dusting Brushes Carpenters, Joiners and [...]ners Lines; clothes Lines and Bed [...]

[T]he above articles are offered for sale on [...] terms by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
[No] 1-2 Baltimore between South and Calvert streets.

[Balti]more, 12th mo. 9th

[IN]SOLVENT BLANKS.

[JU]ST printed and for sale at the Village [Herald] office, a quantity of INSOLVENT [...] of an approved form, and a supply of blank

BILLS OF SALE.
ALSO,
[A s]upply of Magistrates' Blanks,
[...] FACIAS, before supersedeas,
do. after supersedeas,
[...] SA's before supersedeas,
do. after supersedeas,
[W]ARRANTS.

EDUCATION.

MR. & MRS. HELLEN

Have determined to open a School,

For the Instruction of Youth of both sexes,

IN THIS TOWN,

To commence with the ensuing year.

In this school the ordinary branches of English education, such as Reading, Writing & Cyphering, together with Grammar and Geography, Surveying and Navigation, will be taught with diligence and care.

The direction of the female department, and smaller boys, will devolve on Mrs. Hellen, whilst the larger males, and students of the higher branches, will be instructed by Mr. Hellen.

Order and discipline will be observed in connexion with a due regard to respectful courtesy and decorous deportment throughout the school.

TERMS.

For the common course of English learning—one dollar per month. Pupils of the mathematical department will be subject to the usual additional charge. A proportion of firewood as customary.

Princess-Anne, Dec. 9.

Mr. & Mrs. H. will exhibit such testimonials as, they trust, will prove satisfactory.—Those who have given assurances of their patronage, will be waited upon for their signatures.

IN CHANCERY,

In Worcester County Court,

NOV. TERM, 1828.

Zadock Long
vs.
John C. Maddux, and Levin Townsend, Admr. of Daniel Maddux.

IN obedience to the decree passed in the above cause during the late term of the said Court, the subscriber will offer at public sale to the highest bidder at the Court House door in Snow-Hill on Friday the second day of January next, between the hours of 11 o'clock, A. M. and 4 o'clock, P. M. the following real estate lying and being situated in Worcester County, whereof Daniel Maddux; late of the said County, died seized; to wit.

All that tract or part of a tract of land called Duer's Conclusion or by whatever other name or names known or called, containing 150 acres more or less being all the land by whatever name or names known or called, which was conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux, by a certain Joshua Duer, by deed bearing date the 18th day of June 1819. Also,

All that tract or part of a tract of Land, called Bradshaw's Purchase or by whatever other name or names known or called containing one hundred and forty-five acres more or less being all the land by whatever other name or names known or called, which was conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux, by James Powell, esq. then sheriff of Worcester county, by deed, bearing date the 22d day of January, 1822. Also,

All those tracts or parcels of land called Castle Hill Conveniency and Lock, together containing eighty-three acres more or less, being all the lands by whatever name or names known or called which was conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux by a certain James Guthrie by deed bearing date the 22d day of February, 1820. Also,

All that lot of ground, lying on the west side of Pocomoke river, supposed to contain 10 acres of land more or less, which was conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux by a certain Ambrose White, by deed bearing date the 15th day of February 1822. Also,

All those lots or parcels of ground lying and being situated in Snow-Hill town, which the said Daniel Maddux, acquired by the following conveyances, to wit: all those lots or parcels of ground conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux by a certain Isaac Harris by deed bearing date the 12th day of September 1817; all those lots or parcels of grounds conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux by a certain John G. W. Waters, by deed bearing date the 1st day of January 1825, except that part of the said parcels of ground sold by the said Daniel Maddux, to a certain Dr. John S. Martin; all those lots or parcels of ground conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux, by a certain George Hayward; by deed bearing date the 9th day of April 1819; all those lots or parcels of ground conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux; by the Justices of the Levy Court of Worcester County by deed bearing date the 26th day of July, 1814, all those lots or parcels of ground conveyed to the said Daniel Maddux; by a certain Mary Corbin, John Corbin and Mary his wife by deed bearing date the 5th day of November 1816, together with the lots and houses adjoining thereto and all other of the real estate whereof the said Daniel Maddux died seized situated in Worcester County.

THE TERMS OF SALE.

Each purchaser will be required to execute a bond for the amount of his purchase with a surety or sureties to be approved by the Trustee and interest will accrue upon the amount from the day of sale until payment. A credit of twelve months will be allowed to each purchaser.

Notice is hereby given

To each of the creditors of the said DANIEL MADDUX to exhibit their claims with proper vouchers in the office of the Clerk of Worcester County Court within six months from the said 2d day of January next.

LEVIN TOWNSEND, Trustee.

Dec. 9, 1828. m8

THE NEW-YORK MEDICAL ACADEMY.

The happy effects of the Botanical System of Practice, more especially of late employ in the cure of diseases, are such as entitle it to a high rank among modern improvements. The opinion long entertained in its favour, by many of the judicious, a thorough experience has now demonstrated to be well founded: and with the number and variety of its salutary achievements, its reputation is daily increasing.

It must be evident to every discerning mind, that the present prevailing practice of medicine, which rejects this botanical aid, is at variance with our nature and with our happiness Mercury, the Lancet, and the Knife, are chiefly relied upon, by physicians and surgeons of the present day, for the removal of almost all the diseases incident to the human body, notwithstanding the effects of these deliterous agents, are evidently fatal to multitudes. Deeply impressed with these facts and with a view of reforming the science and practice of medicine, an individual of this city in the year 1827, procured a lot of ground and erected a handsome and convenient edifice, for an Institution denominated the United States Infirmary, expressly for employing a reformed system of practice in the treatment of diseases; the remedial resources being chiefly derived from the productions of our own country.—The course of treatment adopted by this Institution was principally the result of near forty years experience of a distinguished medical reform: which course we are happy to state, has been crowned with signal success, and proved to a demonstration, that without mercury, that boasted champion of the MATERIA MEDICA, or other poisonous drugs, diseases generally may be cured by those more safe and salutary means, which the God of nature has so liberally scattered around us.

Animated by the past success, and with the hope of benefiting future generations, an irrepressible desire has been felt, that measures commensurate with the importance of the object should be taken, to promulgate this valuable system of practice, and thereby improve and reform the noble and important science of medicine.

After reflecting for years upon the most prudent and successful method of effecting so desirable an object, it has been deemed expedient to establish a MEDICAL SCHOOL, which competent teachers, where students may receive board and instruction until they are fully qualified to practice in the various branches of the healing arts upon the reformed system. We are now happy to announce, that a building for such an Institution has been erected, and (by Divine permission) will be opened in Nov. next, for the reception of Students.

The building is large and commodious, situated in Eldridge Street, between Grand and Broom, and adjoining the present U. S Infirmary. It is in a healthy and pleasant part of the city, and has been completed at a great expense.

The following branches will be taught:—

1. Anatomy.
2. Surgery.
3. Theory and Practice of Physic.
4. Midwifery, and Diseases of Women and Children.
5. Materia Medica and Practical Botany.
6. Chemistry and Pharmacy.

The benefits to be derived by an attendance at this institution, will, we trust, be duly appreciated by those who wish to acquire a correct knowledge of the healing art.—Here the student will be taught all the modern practice which is deemed necessary, in addition to the Botanical; and in consequence of his residing in the Institution, and pursuing a systematical course of studies, combining each of these departments, he may acquire a knowledge of both in less than one half the time, and with less than half the expense, that is required at other Medical Institutions.

There being an infirmary connected with the Academy, the students will have the benefit of Clinical practice, by which the experimental part of medicine will be acquired with the Theory.

Another advantage held out to the student is, that all those who conform to the rules and regulations of the school, and there finish their education, will have employment, with a generous compensation, secured them by the institution, to disseminate the practice of medicine in different sections of the country.

There will be no specified time to complete a course of study; but whenever the student is qualified to pass an examination he will receive a Diploma, and this Diploma will have a decided advantage over every other, as it will enable the possessor to practice in every State in the Union without molestation.

REQUISITIONS.

The qualifications for admission into the School will be:—

1. A certification of a good moral character.—2. A good English Education.

TERMS.

The price of qualifying a person for practice will be $250, one half payable in advance, board (being an extra charge) will be $2 50 per week. Some provision is made for young men in indigent circumstances.

All communications addressed to the Superintendent of the United States Infirmary, on this Circular, (Post Paid) will receive attention. W. BEACH.

U. S. Infirmary. Oct. 1, 1828.—28j

JOB PRINTING

Neatly executed at the office of the Village Herald.

CONSUMPTIONS, COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

BUTLER'S VEGETABLE INDIAN SPECIFIC,

For the Cure of Colds, Coughs, Consumptions, Spitting Blood, Asthmas, and all Disorders of the Breast and Lungs.

The Vegetable Indian Specific, has stood the test of experience, and proved itself the most valuable remedy ever discovered for the cure of coughs, colds, asthmas, and all diseases of the breast and lungs, leading to consumption.

Among the numerous testimonials in the possession of the proprietor, is the following:—

CERTIFICATE.

10th May, 1827.

I, Samuel Moore, do hereby certify that for upwards of a year, I was severely afflicted with a pain in my breast, accompanied with a very bad cough, and shortness of breath, and every indication (in the opinion of a physician) of approaching consumption. After passing through a course of medicine, and finding no relief, I was induced to make trial of Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, and the use of one and a half bottles, completely restored me to health, and I have remained so ever since, being upwards of a year.

(Signed) S.MOORE.

The celebrated Dr. Cullen has taught us that "our first attention should be employed in watching the approach of disease and preventing its proceeding to an incurable state—and in persons of a consumptive habit, especially those born of consumptive parents, the symptoms of an approaching consumption at the consumptive period of life ought carefully be attended to."

The Specific is obtained by extraction from herbs, roots, flowers, plants, &c. when in perfection. In consequence of a happy combination of the most valuable herbs, &c. it becomes a balsam of superior value. It heals the injured parts, opens the pores and composes the disturbed nerves, after the manner of an annodyne; consequently the obstruction of the chest and the lungs which constitute the disease, particularly need its use. It promotes expectoration, which is so constantly called for; and whilst it cleanses and heals, it also gives strength to the tender lungs. In this manner it removes the hectic fever, improves digestion, gives strength to the nerves, repairs the appetite and improves the spirits. This Specific may always be given in safety—it is mild, pleasant to the taste, and is found particularly useful in hypochondrical, nervous and hysterical diseases.

Each bill of directions contains a detailed account of this disease in all its different stages, and will be accompanied with the the signature of proprietor, in red ink. It is offered for sale by

JOHNSTON & SUDLER,

Nov. 20, 1827. Princess-Anne, Md.

SPLENDID VIEWS OF AMERICAN SCENERY.

On FRIDAY, the 10th of OCTOBER, 1828, will be published by T. K. GREENBANK, No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia, a volume of splendid views of American Scenery as follows—

1—A view of Beck's Shot Tower, on the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia, and adjacent scenery;
2—A view of the Light House in Long Island Sound, with the adjacent scenery;
3—A view of York on Lake Ontario, with the fortifications;
4—Characteristic Scenery on the Hudson River;
5—View of New London, Connecticut, with the adjacent scenery;
6—View of Lemon Hill, near Philadelphia, the seat of Henry Pratt, Esq.
7—The tomb of Washington, at Mount Vernon.
8—View at the Great Bend of the Susquehanna.
9—View of the Upper Falls of Solomon's Creek, Luzerne county, Pa.
10—View of the Lower Falls of Solomon's Creek.
11—View of the Cattskill Mountains, from the Hudson.
12—View of Fort Niagara, on Lake Ontario, from the Light House on the British side.

These Views are executed in the best style of Philadelphia engraving, from drawings made upon spot. Each plate will be accompanied by a full and accurate description thereof, so as to make it perfectly intelligible to every person.

The work will be printed and issued to subscribers in the first style, on superior paper, and with a handsomely printed cover, and delivered to subscribers at the very low price of One Dollar per copy Flexible covers will be used for country subscribers, so that they can be safely sent by mail.

☞ Any gentleman, postmasters and others who will interest themselves to procure ten subscribers and remit $10 to the Editor, shall receive twelve copies. From the very flattering patronage already received (1200 subscribers having put down their names) this volume will probably be succeeded by another, as soon as other plates can be engraved. All orders from the country will be promptly attended to.

Address. T. R. GREENBANK,
No. 64 Spruce street, Philadelphia.

Sept. 10 mm

The Ladies' Literary Port Folio.

PHILADELPHIA.

THE Editor will be assisted in the Department of Reviews, Miscellany and Poetry, by "W. G. C." and in the Ladies Department by Mrs. Harriet Muzzy.

With the 5th number will appear a copperplate Engraving comprising in a single group, portraits of Shakspeare, Byron, Scott and Campbell, which will be followed by portraits of American Authors in a similar style. Those engravings, executed expressly for this work will alone be worth the amount of subscription.

The Ladies Department will be constantly enriched with choice selections from the writings of Mrs. Hemans, Miss Edgeworth, Miss L. E. Landon, and other foreign writers, and also from the best productions of Mrs. Sedgwick, Mrs. Sigourney, Miss Winchester, Mrs. Dumont, Mrs. Eliza Murden, and others of our own country women whose talents have shed a lustre upon their sex and country, in order that every lady who receives the Port Folio, may be certain of possessing in an elegant volume, specimens of the best productions of the most eminent writers of her sex. It is also designed to impart a superior interest, and value to the work, by the addition of portraits of such of the above writers as can be procured.

We shall also receive the original correspondence of N. P. Willis Esq. ("Roy,") Richard Penn Smith, and W. Gaylord, Esqrs. both authors of successful prize tales; Daniel Bryan Esqr.; "Clarence," and the exclusive aid of Mr. T. C Clarke, (formerly the editor of the Album) with the ablest of his former coadjutors and several anonymous but excellent writers, who have enrichened the pages of all of our best literary journals.

The Editor who has had much experience in conducting a literary paper, hopes to concentrate in his new work, the powerful talents of many of the most distinguished writers in this country, whom he considers it an honour to be associated with, and a pride to have enlisted in his cause. The arrangement of the sheet may be understood from the following

SYNOPSIS.

Literary and Scientific.—Notices, Reviews or Criticisms, of all new books and publications, especially such as issue from the American Press. Motto—Freedom of opinion, expressed with frankness and impartiality.

The Ladies Department.—Is illustrated by the following sentiments from the London Literary Gazette: "Where female sense is most improved and female character most pure, there is most happiness and propriety of social manners. The early years of children, the most precious years of life and opening season are confined to woman's superintendence. She therefore may be presumed to lay the foundation of all the virtue and all the wisdom that enriches the world."

Essays.—On such moral and useful subjects as may tend to strengthen the understanding and enrich the mind.

Tales.—The emanations of genius, portraying the affecting incidents of real life, or fiction; blending useful lessons of warning or instruction with the chaste and simple beauties of literature. We flatter ourselves that our work in this department will not be exceeded by any other.

Poetry.—"Such," says a genuine poet, "as has no alliance with our best affections; which lifts the mind into a purer element and breathes into it more profound exalted and generous emotions."

Miscellaneous.—The Drama, with criticisms; The Toilet, and its ornaments of taste and fashion; with such intelligence, Amusing Sketches, Anecdotes, and effusions of wit and humour as will impart variety, and furnish out an agreeable Miscellany.

Embellishments.—Though superior copperplate engravings, expressly for this work of interesting subjects, picturesque scenery, or portraits of distinguished individuals, shall occasionally appear, with pieces of popular music, &c. it is nevertheless determined to make the success of the work dependant on its moral and literary excellence alone.

Conclusion.—In short, no pains or expense shall be spared, in calling forth and rewarding native talents; in making it faithfully subservient to virtuous and worthy purposes, as well as in the superior elegance of the work itself,) to render it an acceptable present to a pure mind, as well as an acquisition to American Literature. When it fails in either particular, the proprietors pledge themselves to relinquish its publication.

Terms.—The Ladies Literary Port Folio is published every other week at $2 per Annum, (in advance.) The great expense attending this publication renders it necessary in all cases, to accompany orders with the amount of subscription.

Any individual procuring fifteen subscribers shall be entitled to $5, and so in proportion for a less or larger number.

☞ Subscriptions received at the Philadelphia Library, the Athenaeum, Arcade Reading Room, and the Artist Repository, (Simpson's) No 66 Chestnut Street, and at the Merchant's Coffee House.

Address (post paid.)

THOMAS C. CLARKE, Philadelphia.

☞ Subscriptions to the Ladies' Port Folio will be thankfully received at the office of the Village Herald, where the first number may be seen.

JOB PRINTING,

SUCH AS

Handbills, Cards, Blanks,

PAMPHLETS, &c.

Thankfully received and neatly printed, on moderate terms,

At the Office of the Village Herald.

PRO PATRIA LIBERTATIS

THE VILLAGE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY, DEC. 30, 1828.

☞The Orphans Court of Somerset county will sit on the 6th of next January.

Popular Votes at the recent Election.

States.	Jackson.	Adams.	Total
Maine	13927	20773	34700
Massachusetts	6019	29836	35855
Connecticut	4486	13518	17820
Vermont	8353	24364	32717
New Hampshire	20692	24076	44768
Rhode Island	695	2548	3243
New York	140763	135413	276176
New Jersey	21929	23758	45687
Pennsylvania	101652	50848	152500
Delaware	4344	4769	9114
Maryland	24565	25527	50092
Virginia	26752	12101	38853
North Carolina	37856	13917	51775
Georgia	19362	642	20004
Kentucky	39071	31167	70338
Ohio	67597	63396	130993
Indiana	22637	17032	39669
Illinois	9560	4659	14219
Louisiana	4521	3995	8516
Missouri	8272	3400	11672
	582885	505635	1088520
	505635
Jackson's maj.	77250

It will be observed, says the B. Republican, that in the above statement, the votes of South Carolina, Alabama, Tennessee and Mississippi, are omitted. We have not, as yet, received the official returns from the 3 latter states, and we have no mode of ascertaining the popular vote of South Carolina, as the election in that state was by the legislature. Delaware also elected by her legislature, but the relative strength of parties in that state was ascertained by the Congressional election.

The Legislature of this state convened in Annapolis on yesterday. We shall present the first proceedings of that body, if possible, in our next paper.

The Next Cabinet.

Any "speculations" as to the constituent members of Gen. Jackson's cabinet by a Nasheille paper, we consider premature, ill-judging and indelicate. For, notwithstanding they may be accompanied with a stout denial of the slightest knowledge, direct or indirect, of Gen. Jackson's intentions; yet, their very locality may give them an undue importance, and be the means, perhaps, of exciting expectations never to be realized. The "suggestions" which may occasionally be "thrown out by statesmen and politicians in our private circles," are worth about as much as the profound speculations of newspaper Editors; that is,—nothing at all. Neither Editor nor politician can possibly know any thing about the matter; and, of course, little value should be attached to their speculations.—Nashville Republican.

The following jeu d' esprit is copied from the Norwich (Chenango) Journal.

What an accomodating, liberal set of fellows, we editors are. We not only attend to our own business, but are ready on all occasions, to attend to that of every body else. All affairs of state, as a matter of course, come under our immediate direction, and are settled without ceremony—thus saving those whose offices seem to require attention to such matters all trouble. Indeed, we have sometimes thought, that it was a mere matter of courtesy, that we suffered such petty things as presidents, governors, legislators and judges to exist at all. They are certainly useless lumber in the public workshop, and cost the people a heavy amount for storage. They should be thrown out among the saw dust and shavings, as articles out of date. It will require but a moment's reflection, to satisfy all of us on this point. For instance—is our flag insulted, some worthy editor immediately informs the people what punishment must be inflicted upon the pugnacious power. In short, they direct every thing, from the regulating of commerce and the protection of manufactures, to hanging a murderer, judging a thief, or digging a potato. And what is very singular, all this immense labour, for which the people so liberally pay their constitutional agents, the independent "fraternity" perform for nothing. A rare instance of this liberal praiseworthy interference in that which does not concern them, has recently occurred. The people elected Andrew Jackson President, supposing he would perform the duties pertaining to the station; but alas, how wofully have they been deceived. One portion of our fraternity have already dispatched his first business. They have appointed his whole cabinet, without even waiting for the "advice and consent of the senate." They have appointed Mr. [illegible] of Louisiana, secretary of state, Mr. M'Lean secretary of the Treasury, Gov. Woodbury, secretary of the navy—the war department they have not yet filled. They have made Mr. Ingham, of Pennsylvania, post master general, and Mr. Chev[illegible] they have located in the home department; and, without even asking leave of the state of New-York, they have ABDUCTED (as the anti-masonics say) our worthy governor elect, Mr. Van Buren, and shipped him off to England.

If our brethren continue thus industrious in the performance of the old general's duties, we cannot see that there will be any necessity for his leaving the Hermitage. He can stay at home, pocket his $25,000 a year, and enjoy his favourite repast of fried babies for breakfast, and Indian's heads, done into turtle soup for dinner. He must be very thankful for their kindness.

We perceive, also, that the New York Statesman has saved our governor and legislature the necessity of appointing all state officers. If the worthy editors would only pass the canal bills, charter the banks, and construct a few rail roads, all of which they might perform without going out of their offices, then might the governor sleep away the winter in peace, unmolested by those troublesome musquetoes called office-seekers; and our legislators eat in quiet out of their own dish, at home, instead of feeding from the public crib at Albany.

The Post Office.

There is no branch of the government which is more immediately felt in its operation upon the interests and convenience of the people than the General Post Office.—Consequently there can be none in the prosperity of which the nation feels a more general and intimate concern. Under the administration of the able officer now at its head, the increase in the extent of the public accommodation afforded by the Department, has been so great as almost to equal the whole of its previous range, whether as to number of Post Offices or of miles embraced in the multitudinous post roads which intersect the Union. The report of the Post-master General, which was appended to the President's Message, at the commencement of the present session, renders this fact apparent.

When the present Postmaster General assumed the administration of the Post Office, the number of post offices was 4,498. On the 1st of July last, they had increased to 7,551. The miles of post-roads at the former period, were 82,763. They have now multiplied to 114,536. The increase in the revenue since the 1st of July, 1823 is $483,790; the aggregate of revenue being, at the former period, $1,114,344; and at the latter, $1,598,134. In 1792, the total number of post offices was 195; the amount of revenue was $67,444; and the miles embraced in the post-roads were but 5,642.

On the 1st of July, 1823, the total number of miles which the mail was transported, was 10,100,240 annually; of which it was conveyed by stages 4,489 744 miles, and on horseback 5,542,496 miles. Since that period 1,949,850 miles have been added to the stage transportation, and 1,658,949, to the transportation by horses, making an aggregate, 798,960 miles have been added during the last year.

The number of persons employed by the Department, including Post-masters, Assistant Post-masters, Clerks, Contractors, and persons engaged in transporting the Mail, is about 26,156. The horses employed are about 17,584, and of carriages about 2,879.

The receipts of the last year were $1,598,134 43; and the expenditures were $1,623,333 46;—leaving an excess of expenditure over the receipts of $25,199 03. There is yet a surplus of revenue in the Department since July 1st, 1823, of $187,302 52.

It thus appears that there is a considerable balance of money remaining in the Department, as it is not the understood or presumed policy of government to make the Post Office a source of revenue, will be applicable to a further extension of the public accommodation.

It is recommended by the Post Master General to introduce the system of insuring the transmission of moneys of small amount, for a small commission. This plan is acted upon in Great Britain, and is found of great convenience to those who desire to remit fractional sums of money.—Nat. Jour.

A test of Genius.—The Berkshire American says, "poets cannot dream," and as "Night's black agents o'er our senses came," only when we are beset by a disordered stomach or a troubled mind, if folks would eat light suppers and keep clear consciences,

"Life would be all poetry!"

Ambiguity of speech sometimes leads to very sad mistakes. A militia captian received a billet from a lady of fashion, requesting "the pleasure of his company to tea" on a certain evening. Now a query arose how to understand the word company; and the captain being a man of real military views, very naturally came to the conclusion that it means neither more nor less than the Company of Militia which he had the honour to command. Accordingly what was the astonishment of his hostess and her friends to behold not only the captain, but his whole company, from the highest subaltern to the most ragged private, armed and eqipped in their usual style, punctual to the hour of invitation, dry as dust and hungry as dogs!—Never was such consternation in the drawing room before. The old ladies lifted up their hands in astonishment; the young ladies squalled as if they had seen a spider or a snake; the dandies exclaimed, "they'd ought to be shot, odd rot'em!"—the master of the house bit his lips with vexation; and the hostess, as in duty bound, went into the hystericks. In which situation we leave them to the sympathy of the reader.

Berkshire Amer.

We have received no foreign news worthy of [illegible] since our last publication.

Dreadful Catastrophe.

Cambridge, Dec. 27.

We have just understood that the store of Mr. Charles Smith, jr. in the vicinity of New-Market, [in Dorchester county,] with its contents, was consumed by fire on Thursday night last. We regret to add that the particulars are of the most painful nature—that the scene was truly heartrending, and that the occurrence has terminated the existence of 2 of our citizens, and dreadfully lacerated the body of a third—so much so, that his recovery is despaired of. What aggravates the event, is its origin—the firing of crackers—one falling into a keg of powder, caused an explosion so powerful and instantaneous that the tenement was literally torn from its foundation, and Messrs. Charles Smith, sen. and William Thomas were killed and Mr. Chaffinch injured as stated above. There were, we believe, but four persons in the store at the time. Mr. C. S. jr. the owner of the store, alone escaped unhurt.—Chronicle.

Be on your Guard.

Easton, Dec. 27.

A genteel looking man, calling himself William Harris, came to this town on Friday, the 13th inst. and called at the store-room of Mr. John Crandall, and purchased goods to the amount of 189 dollars, for which he gave as collateral security a note purporting to have been drawn by Philip S. Yates of Dorchester county, at 90 days, for $280. Mr Crandall knowing Mr. Yates' character to be that of a correct and punctual man, let Harris have the goods he wanted—they were accordingly put on board the Steam Boat in the morning. On showing the note to a friend after the contract had been made and the goods delivered, some suspicion arose respecting the genuineness of Mr. Yates' signature. Mr. Crandall immediately despatched his brother to Mr. Yates' house to know the fact. Mr Yates was fortunately at home and declared that he had never given such a note; nor did he know any thing of the person who had presented it.

Mr. Crandall was fortunate enough to recover his goods as they were not taken from on board the boat when she arrived at Cambridge, nor was the gentleman to be found, having either got alarmed or forgotton he had made the purchase.

We notice these circumstance that others may be on their guard, as Mr. Harris, if that is his name, may probably again try his hand at a similar speculation. Mr. Crandall will give a reward of twenty dollars for his apprehension, in order that he may have the pleasure of treating him as the law directs. Harris had on a dark over coat with pockets outside, blue dress coat, dark vest, pantaloons same colour as overcoat, and wore shoes, is about 5 feet 8 inches high, stout and well made, with dark hair and rather dark complexion.—Gazette.

Casualty.

Chestertown, Md. Dec 19.

A lad, the son of Mr. Philip Rasin, of this county, hung himself in his father's garret, on the 12th instant. This is another fatal instance of undue curiosity. He did not intend to commit suicide, but simply to try an experiment. For some purpose a trace rope had been suspended from one of the beams: the lower end was untwisted several inches up and connected at the bottom by a knot, leaving an opening, thro' which, by mounting upon a piggin, he thrust his head—the piggin immediately rolled from under him and he was instantly precipitated into eternity. Telegraph.

From the Baltimore American, Dec. 22.

DIED, on the 15th inst. Mrs. Margaret Mitchell, aged 65, after a lingering illness which she bore with Christian fortitude.—Comment is unnecessary; her friends and acquaintance knew her worth.

Improvement of Candles.

By John Murray, F. L. S.

I steep the cotton wick in lime water in which I have dissolved a considerable quantity of nitrate of potasse (salt petre,) by this means I secure a purer flame and more superior light—a more perfect combustion is ensured—snuffing is rendered nearly as superfluous as in wax candles, and they do not "run." The wicks must be thoroughly dry before the tallow is put to them.—Brewster's Journal, Oct. 1828.

From the Boston Bulletin.

FINN's BENEFIT.—In relation to this subject we find the following Fin-ished lines in the Daily Advertiser of this morning.

Dear Public, you and I of late,
Have dealt so much in fun,
I'll crack you now a monstrous great
Quadruplicated pun!

Like a grate full of coals I glow,
A great full house to see,
And if I am not grateful too,
A great fool I must be.

Baltimore Prices Current.

Dec. 26, 1828.

FLOUR—white wheat family, $9 50 a 10; superfine Howard st. 8.00 a 8.50; city mills 7.75 a 8.00. Susquehanna, 9.00; WHEAT, best red 1.55 a 1.65; best white 1.65 a 1.75—CORN, [illegible] 48 a 49 [illegible] 44 a 45, OATS 23 a 28. BEANS, 75 a 1.25

Twentieth Congress—2d Session.

MODE OF CHOOSING THE PRESIDENT, &c.

House of Representatives, Dec[illegible]

The House went into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, Mr. McKean of Pa. in the Chair, and took up the following resolutions;

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, two thirds of both Houses concurring, That the following amendments to the Constitution of the United States be proposed to the Legislature of the several States, when ratified by three fourths thereof, shall be a part of the said Constitution.

I. After the third day of March, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine, no person, who shall have been elected President of the United States, shall be again eligible to that office.

II. The election for President and Vice-President, by Electors appointed by the several States, shall be held in the third year of the Presidential term. If on counting the votes, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, no person has a majority of the whol number of Electors appointed, that fact shall be published by the President of the Senate, and a second election for President shall be held in the fourth year of the Presidential term, as follows:—The voters in each State qualified, to vote in elections of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature, shall assemble, in the month of November, on such days, and at such places, as the said Legislature shall appoint, and vote for one of the persons having the two highest numbers of the votes given by the Electors of President, and still living; the officers conducting the election shall meet in each State, on such day, and at such place, as the Legislature thereof shall appoint, ascertain the number of votes given therein for each person, and certify who has the greater number, which certificate they shall sign and transmit sealed up, to the Seat of Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate, who shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes of the States shall then be ascertained, each State having one vote, which shall be counted for the person having the greater number of votes given therein; and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. Should no person have a majority of the States, then, from the persons last voted for, having the two highest numbers of States, the House of Representatives shall, as heretofore, choose immediately, by ballot, the President, the representation from each State having one vote.

III. After the third day of March, one thousand eight hundred and twenty nine, no Senator or Representative shall during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any office or employment under the authority of the United States.

IV. When the house of Representatives shall choose a President, no person who shall have been a member of that House at the time of making the choice, shall, during the continuance in office of the President so chosen, be appointed to any office or employment under the authority of the United States.

Washington, Dec. 19.

In the Senate, yesterday, several petitions were presented—one by Mr. Smith, of Maryland, from sundry citizens of Baltimore, and one by Mr. Barnard, from sundry citizens of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the Auction System. Several bills received their second reading, and were referred, and several were ordered to be engrossed.—The two bills authorizing the sale of lead mines, and salt springs in the State of Missouri, were ordered to be engrossed. The Senate, after spending about half an hour in the consideration of Executive business, ordered two or three bills to a second reading, and then adjourned.

Nothing of importance was transacted in the House yesterday. Several petitions were presented, and referred to the several Committees. A memorial was presented by Mr. Barney, from Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, and others, praying that Congress might regulate and restrain sales by auction. A communication was presented by the Speaker from the Secretary at War, on the subject of a road proposed to be laid out in the State of Maine. Mr. McDuffie, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill, making appropriations for the support of Government for the first quarter of the year, one thousand eight hundred and twenty nine.—U. S. Tel.

December 20.

In the House, yesterday, Mr. Muhlenburg, the new member from Ohio, in place of Mr. Creighton, appeared and took his seat. Many petitions and memorials were presented, among which were one by Mr. Cambreleng, signed by 3 or 4,000 merchants and artisans of the City of New-York, and another by the Speaker from a large portion of the respectable merchants and manufacturers of [illegible]mond, Va., praying for the imposition of a duty of ten per cent, on Auction Sales. The Speaker laid before the House a letter from Mr. John S. Coster of South Carolina, respecting a bust of the late Major General William Moultrie of that State; which also [illegible] an eloquent eulogium by Col. Drayton, on the character of that illustrious patriot, was referred to the committee on the Library. Mr. Moore, (of Kentucky,) presented a petition from the citizens of Mercer county, Kentucky, praying for relief to the heirs of the unfortunate G. Alexander, who, it will be in the recollection of our readers, recently perished in attempting to save the [illegible] Mr. Wright, of Ohio, introduced a resolution on the subject of the printing of Congress, which was opposed by Mr. Wickliffe. The latter gentleman subsequently brought forward, before a Committee of the Whole House, the claims of three persons for indemnification for horses lost in the expedition on the Wabash river, in 1820. The House adopted the resolution, and adjourned till Monday.

December [illegible]

In the Senate, yesterday, several petitions were presented and resolutions offered. Mr. Smith, of Md. introduced a joint resolution providing for the adjournment of the two Houses, from Wednesday next to M[illegible] Mr Barton presented resolutions of the State of Missouri, instructing their Senators and Representatives to use their exertions to obtain the passage of the bill to graduate the price of the public lands, and [illegible] complimentary to Messrs. Benton and [illegible] ewell for their able support of the measure. The bill for the relief of Mrs. Decatur, after a short discussion, laid over until [illegible] day. Several bills were read the second time and referred, and several were passed.

Considerable business was transacted in the House yesterday, in the presentation of petitions and the introduction of bills, mostly on private or local matters. The resolution proposed on private or local matters. The resolution proposed on Friday, by Mr. Wright, of Ohio, concerning the public printing, was, after two divisions by Yeas and Nays, adopted, and referred to the select Committee on the stereotyping of the laws. A long discussion subsequently took place on the bill to establish the Territory of Huron; but the House adjourned without coming to any decision upon the question.

Territory of Huron.

The boundaries of the territory of [illegible] are thus defined in the bill establishing a territorial government, now before the House of Representatives:—"Bounded southwardly by the States of Illinois and Missouri, and by a line running due W[illegible] from the North West corner of the State of Missouri river; westwardly by western bank of the Missouri river, and the White E[illegible] river; northwardly by the northern boundary of the United States; and eastwardly by a line running from the North East corner of the State of Illinois down the middle of Lake Michigan, to the Northern extremity of said lake, and thence due north, to the northern boundary of the United States."

From our Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec 19.

The Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives this morning had the Anti auction memorials under consideration. The subject was discussed [illegible] the constitutional power, &c. but no sufficient indication of opinion has been given to [illegible] the course which the Committee or a majority of them will take. On Monday they [illegible] again, when the Anti auction agents and [illegible] mittees from New York and Philadelphia [illegible] invited to appear before them.

The question of wholly repealing the present tonnage duties on our own shipping (and of course on such foreign shipping as by treaty are put on the same footing with our own,) has been brought before the committee, and it is probable that a bill to that effect will be reported by them. The amount of revenue derived from that source does not average more than 150,000 dollars annually, and the repeal though of [illegible] small burden, may make some little compensation to the shipping interest for the additional charges with which last year's [illegible] burdened our navigation. On the West India trade where the voyages are short and frequent, the tax must be considerable, and the relief therefore will be acceptable.

The bill for reducing the duties on Tea reported last session by the same committee will be acted upon, and I am inclined to believe will pass. It certainly will become law if it gets through the House of Representatives, as the Senate but a year [illegible] passed a bill little different in detail but the same in principle, and they are of course prepared to act promptly on the subject. I mention this, because I understand from [illegible] of my commercial friends that there is [illegible] impression in our cities that this subject will be suffered to lie over another year.

I understand that a long list of new diplomatic nominations, changes and promotions has been sent by the President to the Senate, but that none have been ratified or acted upon by that body.—N. Y. E. Post.

FROM COLOMBIA.—Advices from Carthagena to the 20th ult. state that Gen. Santander had been sentenced to suffer death by a Court Martial. The sentence had been passed by Bolivar to a Council of Ministers for approval. A private letter says [illegible] Santander will escape[illegible] such [illegible] tranquility of the country [illegible] A treaty of peace ha[illegible] been [illegible] tween Peru and Bolivia.

COMMUNICATIONS, &c.

[COMMUNICATED.]

How trifling Ladies are!

Why do we hear so many complaints from the young and dashing beaux of our county of the low and trifling subjects discussed by the ladies fair in their general conversation? This we deem by no means an unimportant question; at least, it is one to find a satisfactory answer for which has caused us much hitherto ineffectual cogitation. Were we to form our judgment solely from the self-important, knowing manner in which the complainants speak of this female failing, we should immediately conclude that those of the fairer sex who deal in "trifles light as air," do so because their mental capacities will not justify them in attempting to discuss aught of greater importance. But we are very unwilling to adopt such a conclusion, as it is diametrically opposed to our own observation. We pretend not to be very critical judges in matters of mind, but certainly within the circle of our female acquaintance, and its periphery is not large, there are several whose conversation, in our opinion, manifests more extensive research, greater profundity of thought, more elegance and fluency of diction than we have yet met with among our friends of the nobler sex. How shall we be able to reconcile the above complaint with our own experience? The task is difficult of performance, but let us not shrink from undertaking, for "in great attempts 'tis glorious e'en to fail." We plead a justification of the Ladies,

That the law of their system has early imprest
The importance of fitting themselves to each guest;
And, of course, that full oft when they trifle and play,
'Tis to gratify triflers who strut in their way.

We will here hazard the assertion that if the pretty, polite, obsequious, bowing beaux who boast so much "of man's mental ascendency over the fair," will only condescend for a few minutes to think, (if they know the meaning of the term,) that in nine cases out of ten, conversations with which Ladies have entertained them, have grown out of some observation which was introduced by themselves. Is it not ungenerous then in them to complain! Does it not argue a great want of gratitude in them to censure their female friends for not more than tolerably entertaining them with reflections on subjects which they have started? Let our young gentlemen be careful to introduce some more important and entertaining topics than they generally do, and we will undertake to say that, provided the topic be one on which ladies ought to possess information, they will have no occasion hereafter to complain of dullness in female conversation. But, until they do so, we must agree with the author quoted above when he says—

As well might the child of its mother complain,
Of wanting true wisdom or soundness of brain,
Because that at times while it hangs on her breast
She with "lulla-by baby" beguiles it to rest,
As then weakness of mind that induces the strain
When wisdom to blockheads is prattled in vain.

We have said that our own experience contradicts the charge of which we have been treating: How, we may be asked, do we account for this? We have not the vanity to account for it in any other manner, than by supposing that the Ladies do not deem us of sufficient importance to call for an accommodation of their conversation to our intellectual circumstances.

OBSERVATOR.

[SELECTED]

For the New Year.

So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

The right use of reason teaches us the propriety of reviewing the actions of each day, that we may improve and regulate our conduct on the next: and as we are brought to the close of the year, we ought to review the past, bring our actions to the bar of reason, to be tried by conscience and the laws of Him who has given us this faculty and the means of life.

Moses in the above psalm, from an affecting view of the shortness of time, prays that we may be taught to "number our days," to consider the shortness and uncertainty of life, to review the manner in which we have employed our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom in future. "Wisdom crieth aloud to the sons of men," to remember her counsels, to reflect on the present, to review the past, and to resolve for the future. And what time is more suitable than the close of the year to attend to her voice, to commence with the new year, a reformation of our lives?

The merchant is admonished by wisdom to number his days as well as his books; has he kept his accounts so that they will meet the approbation of his own conscience, and the inspection of the great judge of all? Has he endeavoured to promote the good of his fellow creatures by the exercise of benevolence, as much as to gratify his own desires?

To the machanic, and labouring man, wisdom calls in like manner to examine his past life: Has he employed his time and ingenuity with faithfulness and industry to the good of himself and the community? Has he been just in all his dealings, frugal and temperate in his life?

Wisdom calls to the farmer, also, to number his days; to remember the winter of old age, when he must be gathered "to the house appointed for all living," where he can neither sow nor plant, but must reap the fruits of his labours.

[illegible] village, [illegible] of people are not [illegible] generally fond of long sermons, I shall conclude with the following piece of Moral History.

A certain eastern prince, who had lived to a good old age, and was blessed with a prosperous and peaceful reign, kept a regular account of his transactions every day, and found upon a review of the whole but five happy days! viz: the day he was married, the day his son was born, the day he ascended the throne, the day after he obtained a certain victory, and the day he forgave a great enemy. Now, from this I think the voice of wisdom is directed to the bachelor; if he is not too old, like this prince, he may enjoy all these, and many more happy days: first let him marry a wife, then he will enjoy a little kingdom to govern, "ruling his own house well;" a victory he may obtain over his passions and propensities; to which may be added, as a Christian duty, the "forgivness of his enemies."

CONSTABLE's SALE.

BY virtue of two writs of Fieri Facias, issued by John H. Bell, one of the justices of the peace for Somerset county, and to me directed at the suit of James Stewart against Henry I. Riggin, I shall expose to public sale on the 20th of next January, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock P. M. at the court-house door, in Princess-Anne, all the right, title, and interest of the said Henry I. Riggin, in and to a negro man named Isaac, which I have taken in execution, as the property of said Riggin.

JOSEPH RICHARDS, Constable.
Dec. 29, 1828. mil

The Jackson Wreath, or National Souvenir.

"Glory, Gratitude and Patriotism."

IN preparation, a splendid National Tribute, in commemoration of the great civil victory achieved by the people through the Hero of New Orleans.

CONTENTS.

1st. It will contain a portrait of Andrew Jackson, President elect of the U. States, engraved in a superior style, on copper, and intended to present a faithful and beautiful likeness of this illustrious individual to the American people.

2d. A splendid title page containing the U. S. Coat of Arms.

3d. The life of Andrew Jackson, as written by Robert Walsh, jr. esq. presenting a true character of the soldier and patriot, who has been recommended to the people of the United States, by his stern integrity, long experience and transcendant services to his country.

4th. A copperplate engraving of the Battle of New Orleans; a noble charger bearing Gen. Jackson in the foreground, with the "Star Spangled Banner" floating over the field of battle.

5th. A copperplate engraving of the Farmer of Tennessee; scene, a rich cultivated farm, with a distant view of Gen Jackson's residence, the Hermitage. These engravings will be copied, with some alterations, from the paintings dispayed in Philadelphia and New York, covering a space of 60 feet by 15, and splendidly illuminated on the nights of the election, in front of the Jackson head quarters.

6th. Some farther particulars of the life of the Hero, compiled from the collection of facts made by the Jackson republican committee of Pennsylvania and other sources.

7th. A view of the U. States Capital at Washington, elegantly engraved on copper.

8th A new piece of Music, entitled 'Jackson's Grand March, and Quick Step,' composed expressly for this occasion, by one of the first professors of music in the United States.

9th Cover embellishments: In addition to which the work will be studded with minor though appropriate embellishments.

10th There will also be annexed, a correct general Map of the United States handsomely engraved.

CONDITIONS.

The work will be ready for delivery between the 8th of January and the 4th of March, early enough to be distributed thro'-out the United States before the latter date.

It will be delivered in the city in fancy bindings at TWO DOLLARS per copy; and copies will be forwarded in flexible covers by mail to any part of the U. States.

☞All orders out of the city must be accompanied with the amount of subscription, or a satisfactory reference in this city.

 No letter will be taken from the Post Office unless the postage is paid. A copy of the work, will be forwarded to such Editors as publish the prospectus, and a discount of 25 per cent, will be made to any person forwarding an order for ten or more copies. Subscriptions should be forwarded immediately, as they will be attended to in the order in which they are received.

Adress JACOB MAAS.
Franklin Engraving Office, Philadelphia Arcade.

Subscription papers left at Holahan's Chestnut street, Ryckman's Fourth & Gaskill street, at Gen. Snyder's Jackson house, Northern Liberties, at the offices of the American Sentinel, the Philadelphia Gazette, the Philadelphia Mercury, at the Merchants' Coffee House, &c.

Dec 23 wwm

☞Those persons who may feel disposed to obtain a copy of the above work, by subscribing therefor at the office of the Village Herald, will please hand in their names to the editor at their earliest convenience, as he wishes to forward on such as he may receive at an early period.

Bible Society.

THE several Agents of the Somerset Bible Society are informed that they will receive Bibles and Testaments to supply the destitute in their neighbourhoods upon application to the agent, Mr. William Done—and those who have collected any funds to aid in purchasing the books, will pay them to the same gentleman.

Nov 4 mjl

NEW GOODS!

THE Subscriber begs leave to inform his friends and the public generally, that he has just received and IS NOW OPENING A

Winter Supply of Goods,

Comprising a large & general assortment of

Dry Goods and Groceries,
Hardware and Cutlery,
China, Glass and Queensware,
Hats, Caps and Shoes,
Stationary and Miscellaneous
Drugs and Medicines;

All of which he offers for sale on the most liberal terms for CASH or Country Produce. Persons wishing to purchase will find it to their advantage to call on

JOHN W. DONE, Agent for Dec 23-ff WM. DONE.

IN CHANCERY

In Somerset County Court; November Term, 1828.

William Jones, administrator of Thomas Jones.
vs.
George Jones, surviving executor of Charles Jones, Levin D. Jones, Hiram Jones, Eleanor Jones, John H. Jones, Henry Jones, Charles Jones, and Alfred Jones, children, devisees and heirs at law of Charles Jones.

THE bill filed in this cause in substance states that Charles Jones, the testator of George Jones of Robt. one of the defendants and the father of the other defendants in this cause on or about the eleventh day of November, eighteen hundred and seventeen, purchased of Thomas Jones, the complainant's intestate a part of a tract of land called 'Bridges Lot,' containing three hundred and seventy acres, more or less, situated on Menokin river and Jones creek, near Princess-Anne, for which he the said Charles contracted to pay the said Thomas a large sum of money, to wit: seven thousand dollars—That the said Thomas hath died intestate and that letters of administration upon his personal estate have been granted by the Orphans court of said county to the complainant—That the said Charles hath also departed this life without having paid the said Thomas in his life-time or the said William since the death of the said Thomas, the balance of the purchase money due for the said lands; That the personal estate of the said Charles is insufficient to pay his debts, being absorbed by judgments and other debts of preference; The object of the bill is to obtain a decree for the sale of the said land for the payment of the balance of the purchase money, inasmuch as the personal estate is insufficient, and it appearing to this court that Eleanor Jones & Hiram Jones, 2 of the defendants in this cause do not reside in the state of Maryland, & that the process of this court cannot be served upon them; it is therefore ordered this twenty-fifth day of November, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and twenty-eight; that the said Eleanor and Hiram be and appear in this court in person or by solicitor on or before the third Monday of May next, to show cause why a decree should not be passed as prayed by the bill, otherwise the bill as to each of them may be taken pro confesso and a decree pass accordingly, provided a copy of this order be published in some newspaper printed in the city of New York, and in Somerset county aforesaid, once a week for three successive weeks at least four months before the said third Monday of May next.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.

True copy;
TEST, GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Dec 23, 1828 wil

☞The N. York Enquirer will please insert the above adv. 1aw 3 successive weeks and send a copy of each publication, with his bill for collection, to this office.

NOTICE.

BY virtue of an order of Somerset county Court, passed at November Term, 1828—the undersigned commissioners will offer at PUBLIC SALE, to the highest and best bidder, at Forktown, in Somerset county, on WEDNESDAY the 14th day of JANUARY, 1829, all the Real Estate of Kirk Gunby, deceased, to wit: all that tract of land called 'Cut Close,' and 'Addition to Cut Close,' situated in Somerset county near Morris's Mills on Dividing Creek, containing 158½ acres, more or less; Also parts of several tracts of land situated near the same place, to wit: part of 'Mitchell's Purchase,' part of 'Winter-Quarter,' and part of a tract not named, but which is described in a plat in the Clerk's office of Somerset county, returned by the commissioners to divide or value the real estate of Kirk Gunby, by black drawn lines beginning at letter B, containing 147 acres, the whole of which lands containing 306¼ acres; Also one other tract of land called 'Stanford's Finding,' and 'Thomas's Conclusion,' situated in Somerset and Worcester counties on the county road leading from Princess-Anne to Salisbury, containing 229½ acres, more or less; one other tract called 'Pollitt's Discovery,' lying in Worcester county, about one and a half miles from Forktown, containing 138½ acres, more or less; one other tract called 'Strife,' and part of 'Fooks' Cost,' situated in Worcester county, on the Eastern Branch of Toney Tank Creek, containing 55 acres, more or less; One lot of ground in Forktown in Somerset county, containing 5-16ths of an acre, more or less. For a more particular description of these several parcels of land recourse may be had to the plats and returns made by the commissioners as aforesaid.—Sale will commence at 10 o'clock A. M.

The purchaser or purchasers will be required to give bond or bonds to the respective representatives of Kirk Gunby, dec'd. with approved security, payable twelve months after the day of sale and conditioned for the payment of their respective proportions of the net amount of sales bearing interest from day of sale.

WM. H. LANKFORD.
ANTHONY P. BENNETT.
WILLIAM METK[illegible].
THOMAS MORRIS.
Commissioners.

Dec. 23, 1828.

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of a writ of Fieri Facias issued out of Somerset county court and to me directed, at the suit of William Bromwell, against the goods and chattels of Nicholas Jones I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: A lot of store goods, consisting of dry goods and groceries, 2 beds and furniture, 1 bureau, 2 chests, 4 tables, 3 pair of scales and weights, 13 chairs, 1 clock, 1 cow, 1 yearling, 10 head of hogs, more or less, 2 hoes, a lot of crockery-ware, 2 looking glasses, 2 pair of steelyards, a lot of kitchen furniture and a lot of pork, all of which property I shall proceed to sell to the highest and best bidder, for cash, at the house of said Jones, on Wednesday the 14th day of January next.

JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Dec. 30, 1828. jpl

IN CHANCERY

In Somerset County Court; November Term, 1828.

Elijah Parsons and Jehu Parsons
vs.
Joseph Barkley, administrator of Francis W. James, John C. Tack and Louisa his wife.

THE bill filed in this cause in substance states that Francis W. James, late of Somerset county in the state of Maryland, died indebted to the complainants; That letters of administration on his personal estate were by the Orphans court of said county, in due form of law committed to a certain Joseph Barkley; That the personal estate of the said Francis is not sufficient to pay his just debts; That the said Francis duly made and executed his last will and testament in which he devised all his real estate to his widow Louisia James; that the said Louisia hath since intermarried with a certain John C. Tack who resides in the state of Pennsylvania, and that the process of this court cannot be served on him. The object of the said bill is to obtain a decree for the sale of the real estate whereof the said Francis died seized, lying and being situated in the said county, for the payment of his debts, and it appearing to this court that the said John C. Tack, one of the defendants in this cause, does not reside within the jurisdiction of this court: It is therefore ordered this twenty-fourth day of November, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, that the said John C. Tack be and appear in this court in person or by solicitor on or before the third Monday of May next, and show cause why a decree should not be passed as prayed by this bill, otherwise the bill as to him may be taken pro confesso, and a decree passed accordingly, as prayed by the said bill, provided a copy of this order be published in some newspaper printed in the city of Philadelphia, in the state of Pennsylvania, for three successive weeks at least four months before the said third Monday of May next.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.

True copy;
TEST, GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Dec 23, 1828. naff?

☞The Philad'a. Mercury will please insert the above adv. 1aw 3 successive weeks, and send a copy of each publication, with his bill for collection, to this office.

In Somerset County Court, November Term, 1828.

Isaac M. Adams, trustee for the sale of the real estate of Isaac C. Mitchell
vs.
George Jones, surviving executor of Charles Jones, Levin D. Jones, Eleanor Jones, Hiram Jones, John H Jones, Alfred Jones and Charles Jones, children and heirs at law and devisees of Charles Jones.

THE object of the bill filed in this cause is to obtain a decree for the resale of the lands of Isaac C. Mitchell for the balance of the purchase money due; the bill states that a decree was passed on the 23d of July, 1821, for the sale of the lands of the said Mitchell; that the complainant in this bill was appointed trustee and sold the said lands to Charles Jones, deceased, who gave bond with a certain Henry White for the purchase money; that the said Charles Jones has departed this life leaving a large balance of the purchase money still due to the complainant, and that the estate of the said Charles Jones is absorbed by judgments against him in his life-time and is insufficient to pay his debts; The court being satisfied that Eleanor Jones and Hiram Jones, two of the defendants in this cause do not reside in the state of Maryland, and that the process of this court cannot be served on them; it is therefore this twenty-second day of November, eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, by this court ordered and directed that notice of the bill filed in this cause be given to the said absent defendants by inserting a copy of this order in one of the newspapers printed in the city of New-York, and in one published in Somerset county, once a week for three successive weeks at least four months before the third Monday of May next, warning them to appear in this court in person or by solicitor, on the said Monday of May next, to shew cause why a decree should not be passed as prayed by the bill.

ARA SPENCE,
WILLIAM TINGLE.

True copy;
TEST, GEO. HANDY, Clk.
Dec 23, 1828. wil

☞The N. York Enquirer will please insert the above adv. 1aw 3 successive weeks, and send a copy of each publication, with his bill for collection, to this office.

Dissolution of Partnership.

The PARTNERSHIP heretofore existing between Wm. Gunby & John Noble, is this day dissolved by mutual consent. The business will in future be continued under the firm of William & John Gunby, who respectfully solicit a share of public patronage.

☞All persons indebted to the late firm will please come forward and make immediate payment, as it is absolutely necessary that the accounts of that concern should be settled without delay.

Nov 25 ea

Nest Boxes and Barrel Covers,

30,000 Cane, suitable for Reed makers
300 Nests Sugar Boxes
200 Barrel Covers
100 dozen Butter Prints

200 groce of Lamp Wicks, assorted sizes; Spickets and Fausetts, suitable for hogsheads, barrels kegs and hydrants; sweeping, shoe, scrubbing, dusting, white-wash, weavers and other Brushes; scale bed & sacking Cords; plough Lines; coarse and fine Twine, Weavers Slays or Reeds; woolen, cassinet, cotton and hand Shuttles; cotton and wool Cards; fancy and common Bellows; Fishing Tackle; lamp and candle Wick; corn Brooms and Whisks; market and close Baskets, long and short Brush Handles; Lemon Squeezers Rolling Pins, Potatoe Mashers; Mulders; towel Rollers; wash & cake Boards; shovels, tubs clothes Pins; humming and common Tops; Sifters; box and cake Blacking; butter Bowls; Trays, Spoons and Paddles; Trenchers; crabing and cabbage Netts.

The above artitls are offered for sale on reasonable terms, by

VALERIUS DUKEHART,
No. 101 1-2 Baltimore, between South and Calvert Streets.
Baltimore, 12th mo 9th

SHERIFF's SALE.

BY virtue of sundry writs of Fieri Facias issued by James L. Waller, a justice of the peace, and to me directed, 2 at the suit of George Maddux and Elizabeth Byrd, Ex'rs. of Thomas Byrd vs. Elijah C. Johnson, 1 other at the suit of Tilghman & Parsons against Elijah C. Johnson, and one other at the suit of Hannah Hearn, Ex'x of Wm. Hearn, against Elijah C. Johnson, I have seized and taken in execution the following property, to wit: all the right, interest and estate of the said Johnson, in and to several houses and lots in the town of Salisbury and Somerset county, which were devised by Benjamin Disharoon to his daughter Sarah, the wife of the said Elijah, and at present occupied by L. D. Collier; also a house and lot occupied by Amelia Nicholson; also one other occupied by Wm. S. Disharoon; also a house at Josiah Bayly, Esquire's Mills, it being the office of the said Elijah; also a small piece of land lying near the said Bayly's mill pond, which said land was purchased by the said Elijah C. Johnson and Levi Cathell, of a certain Absalom Phipps; also a clock and case, which said property I shall proceed to sell at the auction room of James L. Waller, Esq. in the town of Salisbury, on Saturday the 22nd of Nov. next, between the hours of 12 and 2 o'clock P M. to the highest and best bidder for cash to satisfy the aforesaid writs.

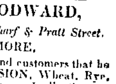
JOSHUA BRATTAN, Shff.
Oct 28 lde

☞The above sale is postponed to Saturday the 6th of next December, at the hour and place above mentioned.

Nov 25 w2m

☞The above sale is further postponed to Tuesday the 30th instant—hour and place of sale as aforesaid.

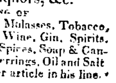
Dec 9 ww



For Rent,

For the ensuing year, a House and Lot in the village of White-Haven, at present occupied by Edward U. Blake. For terms apply to,

MARCELLUS JONES.
Sept. 9, 1828.



FOR SALE,

My half of the Schooner Fair American.

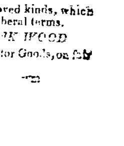
Apply to WM T G POLK.
Dec. 9 mm

JESSE HUNT,

(Successor to W. & R. HALL,)



Saddle, Harness, AND Trunk-Maker,

No. 127 Market Street, (near the new City Hotel,) BALTIMORE,

RESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public, that he continues the Saddling business in all its varieties, at the old established stand for many years occupied by Messrs. William & Richard Hall, where he keeps constantly on hand a

Large and General Assortment of

Saddles, Bridles, Harness, Trunks; Velcices, Saddlebags, Collars, Military Equipments, &c.

of warranted materials and workmanship, which he will sell at wholesale or retail, on as reasonable terms as can be afforded in this or any other city.

August 19th, 1828.

E. T. J. WOODWARD,

Corner of Dugan's Wharf & Pratt Street, BALTIMORE,

Informs his friends and customers that he will sell on COMMISSION, Wheat, Rye, Corn, and Oats, Tobacco, and all other articles of Country Produce, and will make liberal advances on the same.

He has on hand a large supply of

Groceries, Liquors, &c.

CONSISTING OF

Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco, Family Flour, Brandy, Wine, Gin, Spirits, Whiskey and Cordials, Spices, Soap & Candles, Shad, Mackerel, Herrings, Oil and Salt together with every other article in his line.

ALSO,

Glass Ware, Queen's Ware, Stone and Earthen Ware, &c.

And a general assortment

Of Garden Seeds of approved kinds, which he will sell on the most liberal terms.

DRY PINE OR OAK WOOD

Will be taken in exchange for Goods, on fair terms.

May 13, 1828 [illegible]

THE CORNUCOPIÆ.

"Blending the useful with the sweet."

[From the New York Gazette.]

The following song was composed for the St. Andrew's Society of this city, and was sung at their festival on last St. Andrew's day. It is the work of John Graham, the blind poet. Though deprived of the light of Heaven, that unfortunate son of genius is often cheered by visitations of the poetic muse; and his simple but touching strains have for many years enlivened the annual meeting of his countrymen. Unadorned by the higher graces of art, his songs are yet characterized by a purity of conception, and a delicacy of feeling, which must recommend them to every man's bosom, and cannot fail to exact both respect for the author's genius and compassion for his misfortunes. The assistance, giving enthusiasm also which pervades his lyric compositions, especially when sung in the praises of his native land, is not only right interesting in itself, but is in fine contrast with the darkness of the poet's own fortune. His modest and amiable character is displayed conspicuous in his poetic effusions, united with a dignity of thought, and a sensibility to the beauties of nature, in the luxury of which he is not permitted to participate, through the medium of external vision, which would do honour to names of high renown and loftier pretension.

SONG—THE THISTLE.

AIR—Jockie to the Fair.

CHORUS.

Green, green grows auld Scotia's thistle o';
Sweet, sweet blaws her soft sounding whistle o';
Love, beauty and innocence nestle o',
Blithe in her green tartan plaid.

Around the full bowl let us chant the sweet song,
And drain the bright glass to the bonny blue bonnet,
And swear that a tyrant or slave ne'er shall own it,
While Scotland can wield the broad blade.
Green, green, &c.

Her mountains we'll sing, where the pibroch is swelling
Where freedom and valour have chosen their dwelling,
And many a century is silently telling
Where Scotia's heroes are laid.
Green, green, &c.

O sing her deep glens, and the burn sweetly flowing,
And valley's adorn'd with the bonny white goean,
Where nature, delighted, is gracefully showing,
That there all her charms are displayed.
Green, green, &c.

From scenes so endearing, tho' fortune may tear us,
Fond hope and remembrance can still bring them near us,
All hallowed with glorious deeds of the heroes
Who wielded auld Caledon's blade.
Green, green, &c.

Then here's to auld Scotland, no tyrant could chain yet;
And here's to her bonnet, that ne'er wore a stain yet;
And here's to her brave, who have hearts they wou'd drain yet;
To guard the blue bonnet and plaid.
Green, green, &c.

—:o:—

FROM THE WINTER'S WREATH.

WINTER FLOWERS.

For Winter's Wreath whence call the flowers?
The sterile fields ready
"Nor array, nor bloom, nor leaf is ours.—
Beneath a cheerless sky,
Our treasures of summer stars
Lie spell bound under icy bars!"

For Winter's Wreath whence call the flowers?
A cheek of ray clear,
Chased from the lone dism-rolled bowers,
By reels of Christmas snow,
Peeps from the casement, and replies,
"Here, wanderer,—gather hence the prize!"

Within a small, sequestered ring
The genial bloom is found,
And flowers lovelier than spring
On gay Arcadian ground;
The hope, the tear, the smile, the kiss,
Inwoven, of domestic bliss.

Nor summer field nor forest glade,
Nor green savanna, bears
A blossom with such hues array'd,
A fragrance sweet as theirs,
Who, loving and beloved, form
A Winter's Wreath, without its storm.

MRS. GILBERT.

THE CONVICT.

From Ollier's Literary Miscellany, a London periodical.

Robert Wilson was a market gardener—Early in life he married a deserving young woman whom he loved with entire tenderness, and by whom he had several children. No man on earth could be fonder of his little offspring than Wilson; and they, on the other hand, almost worshipped their father, taking delight in nothing so much as in doing what he wished. Wilson was not very wise, nor was he at all learned; but his heart, which as I have said was all of tenderness, told him with unerring instinct that his children would be governed more perfectly and with more wholesome effect under the dominion of love than under that of fear, and his was indeed a happy family, where affection, pleasure, obedience and faith, (faith in each other) went hand in hand. Wilson was well situated for passing his life comfortably and rationally, his garden being just far enough out of London, to render inconvenient his mixing in the squalid profligacies of town (had he been so inclined;) and yet he was not so entirely in the country as to burden him into the robust callousness and ignorant vices of village life. He could just see enough of the "stir of the great Babel," to set rest him in it, and to keep his faculties alive and awake to the value of his own quiet, and to the undisturbed caresses of his dear wife and children, which always appeared more and more precious after he had been hearing, in his weekly visits to town, some instance of mercenary hypocrisy and false heartedness.

I lodged two years in the house, and have often seen him on a summer's evening sitting in an open part of his garden surrounded by his family, in unconscious enjoyment of the still and rich sunset. I was his guest the last time I saw him, poor fellow, in his placid happiness. We drank tea in the open air, and amused ourselves afterwards, I recollect, with reading the preceding day's paper which Wilson used to hire for the evening. We sat out of doors later than usual owing to the deliciousness of the night, which, instead of deepening into darkness, kept up a mellow golden radiance sweeter than the searching daylight; for before the colours of the sun had entirely faded in the west, the moon came up over the eastern horizon, and the effect was divine. My poor host, however, did not seem so happy as usual. He had been thoughtful the whole evening, and now became pensive; and nothing roused him even into momentary cheer, except the playfulness of his eldest daughter, a merry little girl of about four or five years of age.—I was sad to see him with his dejected face, and romp with the child who in a short time began to perceive the alteration in her father's manner, and to reflect in her smooth face the uneasiness of his face. But their pastime was of short continuance. It was melancholy pretence. There was nothing hearty in it, except the dance of the child's forehead locks teased to and fro in the clear moon-shine.

I soon found out the cause of this depression. He was beginning to be pinched under an ugly coalition—an increasing family, decreasing business, and times taxed to the uttermost. The good-folks bring about the great squeeze did not spend so much money as formerly in decking their flowers and rare exotics, and this was an important source of Wilson's revenue. He bore up, however, with sad patience, for a long time; till longer thinned and stretched the round faces of his children, and his wife's endearments, instead of coming with hope and encouragement, seemed like tokens of love growing more and more spiritual and devoted under despair; they were embraces hallowed and made sublime by famine. All this was more than the poor man could bear. The falling voices of his unconscious children were like madness bringing sounds in his ears; and one night, losing in the tumult of his thoughts all distinction between right and wrong, he rushed forth and committed a robbery.

I shall never forget, as long as I live, the hour when he was apprehended by the officers of justice.

A knock was heard at the outer gate, and on Mrs. Wilson's going to open it, two men rushed by her into the house, and seized her pale and trembling husband; who, altho' he expected and dreaded such an event, was so staggered by it as to lose for a few moments his consciousness of all about him. The first thing he saw on coming to himself, was his wife stretched at his feet in a fearful swoon; and, as he was hurried off, he turned his eye towards her with a heart-broken expression, calling out in a tone half raving and half imploring, "look there, look there!"

It would be vain to attempt a description of the wretched hours passed by him and his wife in the interval which elapsed between this period and the time of his trial. The madness of his utter despair, perhaps, was less intolerable than the sickening agitation produced in her mind by the air-built hopes she dared to entertain in weary succession, and which were only born to be soon struck on back into nothing. This is indeed a ghastly and withering conflict. The poor woman, after enduring it for three weeks, could not be easily recognised by her old acquaintances. There were no traces left of the happy, bustling wife. She moved silently among her children; her face was emaciated and hertic; and her eyes were red with the constant swell of tears. It was a mighty change.

The day of trial at length came on—Wilson was found guilty, and sentence of death was passed on him. The laws in their justice had enforced the taxation, the hard pressure of which had so mainly assisted to drive him into the crime. But the world is inexplicable.

His wife did not survive this news many hours. She died in the night without a struggle. It was of no use to let the condemned man know this. I knew he could never ask to see her again; for their meetings in the prison had already been tormenting beyond endurance.

I visited him in his cell two days before the time appointed for his execution. He was silent for many minutes after I entered, and I did not attempt to rouse him. At length, with a voice quivering under an effort to be composed, he said—"Although, Mr. Saville, I do not request (I was going to say I did not wish, but God knows how false that would be) to behold my wife again in this bitter, bitter world; because such a dreary meeting would drive her mad, yet I think it would do me good if I could see my child, my eldest girl, my little Betsey. I know not why it is, but I have an idea that her soft prattle, ignorant as she is of my fate, would take something away from this dismal suffering I am to undergo on Wednesday. Therefore bring her, will you, this afternoon; and frame some postponing excuse for my poor wife.—Those, dear sir, are melancholy troubles, but I know you are very good."

In the afternoon, accordingly, I took the child, who asked me several times on the road why her father did not come. As we walked along the gloomy passages to his cell, she clung close to me, and did not say a word. It was very different, poor thing, to the open and gay garden about which she was used to run.

The door of her father's miserable dungeon was soon opened, and the child rushed into his arms. "I do not like you to live in this dark place, father," she cried; "come home with me and Mr. Saville, and see mother who is in bed."

"I cannot come just now, my child," he answered; "you must stay a little with me, and throw your arms round my neck and learn your face on mine."

The child did as she was bidden and the poor man, straining her to him, sobbed bitterly and convulsively. After a few minutes, he looked with yearning eyes in her face, saying, "Come, my dear, sing your poor father that pretty song which you know you used to sing to him when he was tired on an evening. I am not well now. Look at me, my child, and sing."

How sad it was to hear the child's voice warbling in that dolorous place! I could scarcely hear it; but it seemed to have a contrary effect on the father. His eyes were lighted up, and a smile appeared on his countenance. The song was of love, and woody retirement, and domestic repose, and the baffled frowns of fortune. While the child was singing, I left the cell to make some arrangements with the gaoler, who was walking close to the door. I had not, however, been thus engaged for five minutes, before I heard something fall heavily, accompanied by a violent scream, and rushing into the cell, I saw the unhappy convict lying on the floor, and his little girl hinging round his neck. The gaoler and I lifted him up, and alarmed at the hue of his face, called in the medical attendant of the prison, who soon told us the poor man was dead.

The account given by the child was—that after she had done singing her father started, then looked sharply in her face, and with a strange and short laugh fell from his chair. I suppose she had sung him into a temporary forgetfulness of his situation; that she conjured into his mind with her innocent voice, a blessed dream of past days and enjoyments, and that the spell ceasing when her melody ceased, the truth of things had beat upon his heart with too stunning a contrast, and it had burst. M. L. C.

THE RINGLET—A Love Story.

A cheerful fire blazed on the hearth, in the neat little parlor of Mr. Percy, one cold evening in November, and Helen, with a choice party of young friends, formed an agreeable little circle around it. Helen Percy was not what the world would call handsome, that is, she did not possess regular features—had neither black nor blue eyes—tresses waving gracefully over her shoulders—nor a skin quite as white as the new fallen snow,—but then there was beauty in her face, and a beauty that was richly worth all these—it consisted of expression. The feelings of a good and benevolent heart, added by the graces of a pure and well cultivated mind, cast a lustre over a face that could boast of no other accomplishment, and sure none other was necessary to render it interesting. But Helen's most powerful charm was in her conversation, often sprightly, and always sensible and pleasing, it rendered her ever a most engaging companion.

It was generally known among her acquaintances, that she was betrothed to a young navy officer, who was then, and had been for nearly two years, absent in the United States' service, and who was now daily expected home. Helen was anxious for his arrival, not for the gratification of her own affectionate feelings alone, but the tale of scandal had gone forth, and she wished its course at once arrested. An amiable and worthy young man was in the habit of visiting at the house of Mr. Percy; he knew of Helen's engagement, and his visits to the family were prompted by friendship alone; but others thought differently—persons were surprised that, in the absence of Clarence Lee, she would sanction the addresses of another—it was dishonourable thus to trifle with his feelings—in short, she was in their eyes a most heartless coquette. Helen knew these whispers were around her, but she knew also she was wronged, she despised the petty artifices of those who could construct every seemingly feeling into a slighted love—and she [illegible] it should not be the means of depriving [illegible] friend of a heart so valuable as that of the [illegible] owner of it still.

I remarked that a small group were assembled round the fireside of Mr. Percy's house, and on this occasion a stranger was seated among them, who had entered with the company, and yet appeared to be unknown to all: a profusion of light hair fell over his forehead and cheeks, which were also shaded by large mustaches, and he wore a pair of green spectacles over his eyes.

The little party were gay and lively as usual, but there was a sudden stillness in the room, when the stranger, holding in his hand a ringlet of dark brown hair, trembling, asked a lady next to him if that was not a pretty tress.

"It certainly is," was the reply, "and favorite memento, I presume?"

"It was taken, madam, from the bosom of an officer, a friend of mine, who fell overboard one of the United States' vessels during a late cruise; his body was happily recovered but"———

"May I enquire his name?" interrupted Helen, in breathless haste, and unconsciously rising from her chair.

"His name was Clarence Lee."

"And lost over"———the words died upon her lips, and she sunk back insensible into her seat. The stranger started from his chair, threw off his spectacles, mustaches, and light hair, and in an instant the metamorphosed Clarence Lee was leaning over her chair, and endeavouring to recall her to animation, by repeatedly pronouncing her name in his own natural voice. Helen at length recovered, cast round a bewildered glance, and scarcely imagined she was in existence, when she beheld her lover by her side.

"Am I not dreaming?" said she, reviving.

"I should hope not," said Clarence, seizing her hand, and eagerly pressing it to his bosom, "I have put thy faith to a sad trial, Helen, but wilt thou not forgive me when I tell thee I was cruely deceived by others,—they told me thou wert false to me, Helen, but this pledge of thy affection, (again displaying the ringlet,) proves their words false, not thee, and that I meet the same fond, faithful heart I left two years ago."

It is needless to remark, that the stratagem was readily forgiven, and that Helen, soon after at the altar of Hymen, gave herself as a pledge of her love and faith to Clarence Lee.

LUMBER A LEGAL TENDER.

The New York Morning Courier, states that lumber is considered a legal tender in the west, quotes the following notice from the Buffalo Emporium: "To all such subscribers who expect to pay for their paper in lumber, would oblige us by delivering it immediately. We hope this notice will not only be read, but attended to." We furnish a better proof of the same fact, though not on our own authority. A Savannah craftsman subscribed to a work published by a Philadelphia bookseller, the terms being three dollars in boards. He was so dilatory about payment as country subscribers usually are, and was consequently called on by an agent. Expressing his business to pay, he took the collector down river side, and pointing to a high raft, "this was to pay in boards," said he, "so take the best you can find." The agent summoned him before the nearest magistrate, who, after examining the conditions of publication, decided with characteristic wisdom, that whatever the word boards might mean in Philadelphia, it signified plank every where else, and accordingly gave judgment for the defendant.—Phil. Chron.

The worth of every thing is determined by the demand for it. In the deserts of Arabia, a pitcher of cold water is of more value than a mountain of gold.

A COUNTING-HOUSE CALENDAR,

For the Year of our Lord

1829,

Being the First after Bissextile, or Leap Year, and the Fifty-Third of the Independence of the United States.

MOON'S PHASES.

	D.	H.	M.
JANUARY.
New Moon	5	10	45 M.
First Quarter	12	2	11 M.
Full Moon	19	7	10 E.
Last Quarter	28	0	14 M.
FEBRUARY.
New Moon	3	9	24 E.
First Quarter	10	2	18 E.
Full Moon	18	2	8 E.
Last Quarter	26	5	13 E.
MARCH.
New Moon	5	7	39 M.
First Quarter	12	4	42 M.
Full Moon	20	8	44 M.
Last Quarter	28	2	12 M.
APRIL.
New Moon	3	5	14 E.
First Quarter	10	9	0 E.
Full Moon	19	1	15 M.
Last Quarter	26	9	48 M.
MAY.
New Moon	3	3	50 M.
First Quarter	10	2	29 E.
Full Moon	18	2	41 E.
Last Quarter	25	3	12 E.
JUNE.
New Moon	1	0	42 E.
First Quarter	9	8	16 M.
Full Moon	17	1	8 M.
Last Quarter	25	7	50 E.
New Moon	30	11	38 E.
JULY.
First Quarter	9	1	21 M.
Full Moon	16	9	55 M.
Last Quarter	23	1	7 M.
New Moon	30	6	32 E.
AUGUST.
First Quarter	7	5	6 E.
Full Moon	14	5	19 E.
Last Quarter	21	8	28 M.
New Moon	29	3	48 M.
SEPTEMBER.
First Quarter	6	6	53 M.
Full Moon	13	1	23 M.
Last Quarter	19	6	59 E.
New Moon	27	8	56 E.
OCTOBER.
First Quarter	5	6	42 E.
Full Moon	12	10	22 M.
Last Quarter	19	2	23 M.
New Moon	27	2	37 E.
NOVEMBER.
First Quarter	4	4	44 M.
Full Moon	10	6	39 E.
Last Quarter	18	3	44 M.
New Moon	26	7	25 M.
DECEMBER.
First Quarter	3	1	26 E.
Full Moon	10	8	31 M.
Last Quarter	18	0	57 M.
New Moon	25	10	29 E.

	Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
JANUARY.					1	2	3
	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
	11	12	13	14	15	16	17
	18	19	20	21	22	23	24
	25	26	27	28	29	30	31
FEBRUARY.
	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
	8	9	10	11	12	13	14
	15	16	17	18	19	20	21
	22	23	24	25	26	27	28
MARCH.
	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
	8	9	10	11	12	13	14
	15	16	17	18	19	20	21
	22	23	24	25	26	27	28
	29	30	31
APRIL.
				1	2	3	4
	5	6	7	8	9	10	11
	12	13	14	15	16	17	18
	19	20	21	22	23	24	25
	26	27	28	29	30
MAY.
						1	2
	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
	10	11	12	13	14	15	16
	17	18	19	20	21	22	23
	24	25	26	27	28	29	30
	31
JUNE.
		1	2	3	4	5	6
	7	8	9	10	11	12	13
	14	15	16	17	18	19	20
	21	22	23	24	25	26	27
	28	29	30
JULY.
				1	2	3	4
	5	6	7	8	9	10	11
	12	13	14	15	16	17	18
	19	20	21	22	23	24	25
	26	27	28	29	30	31
AUGUST.
							1
	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
	9	10	11	12	13	14	15
	16	17	18	19	20	21	22
	23	24	25	26	27	28	29
	30	31
SEPTEMBER.
				1	2	3	4
	6	7	8	9	10	11	12
	13	14	15	16	17	18	19
	20	21	22	23	24	25	26
	27	28	29	30
OCTOBER.
					1	2	3
	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
	11	12	13	14	15	16	17
	18	19	20	21	22	23	24
	25	26	27	28	29	30	31
NOVEMBER.
	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
	8	9	10	11	12	13	14
	15	16	17	18	19	20	21
	22	23	24	25	26	27	28
	29	30
DECEMBER.
				1	2	3	4
	6	7	8	9	10	11	12
	13	14	15	16	17	18	19
	20	21	22	23	24	25	26
	27	28	29	30	31

THE SUN'S Rising and Setting for every Sunday.

	RISES AT		SETS AT
	7h	21m	4h	29m
	7	17	4	41
	7	14	4	48
	7	6	4	54
	7	0	5	0
	6	52	5	8
	6	44	5	16
	6	35	5	24
	6	26	5	34
	6	17	5	43
	6	8	5	52
	5	59	6	1
	5	50	6	10
	5	41	6	19
	5	32	6	28
	5	21	6	37
	5	15	6	45
	5	8	6	52
	5	0	7	0
	4	51	7	8
	4	48	7	12
	4	43	7	17
	4	39	7	21
	4	43	7	17
	4	46	7	14
	4	52	7	8
	4	58	7	2
	5	5	6	55
	5	13	6	47
	5	21	6	39
	5	29	6	31
	5	38	6	22
	5	46	6	14
	5	55	6	5
	6	4	5	56
	6	17	5	45
	6	31	5	35
	6	44	5	26
	6	49	5	18
	6	56	5	11
	7	3	4	57
	7	9	4	51
	7	15	4	45
	7	19	4	41
	7	22	4	38
	7	23	4	37
	7	23	4	37